Her voice cut through it, with a moan in it like the voice of a dying animal. "Have pity on me, pastor. I'm dying, sure. You've always been so good to me. You'll not chase me away—you won't?"

"Come in," he said hoarsely, breathing quickly as he closed the door.

They stood in the corridor now and he could see her face. A shiver ran through him. How different she looked! Her face stared up at him sadly, no longer pretty, no longer young even—ill, worn out. There was no astonishment in her eyes now; their glance was hopeless, dead, their clear blue faded.

He stretched out his hand as if in repulsion. The commotion in his blood ceased suddenly.

"Pastor," she began, with a dry catching at her breath after every sentence. "I've had a bad time. Didn't my brother tell you?"

"No, I have heard nothing. What has happened?"

She did not answer, but stood looking down with brows heavily drawn. Then she cried out suddenly, with a sound that was low but full of torture. Her whole figure shook, she caught at the hem of his coat and pressed it to her mouth. Writhing as in pain she spoke:

"I can't tell you! I can't! I—" she could get no further; her eyes were raised in a silent imploring. What would he say?

He said not a word, he avoided her glance and fastened his eyes on the bare wall opposite.

His silence seemed to give her confidence. "Oh, pastor, you're so kind—you've been so good to me always. I wrote to Barthel—he wouldn't answer. When they let me out o' the hospital I came here—home—I hadn't but just money for the ticket—a man from beyond here let me ride on his cart—I thought—when he sees me—brother Barthel—he'll feel sorry for me. I got here this evening—late. I'm ashamed to be seen by day—I'm so torn! I got no clothes—Barthel was there alone. But then she came in—" she raised her hand in a gesture, "then 'twas all up. They turned me out—

"And now—and now," she glanced about in an attitude of despair, "what'll I do now? I'm weak yet, an' I have no money—they'll all laugh at me, oh, yes, they'll laugh at me. But you're so kind, pastor—so good—you're a holy man."

She clung to his coat, sobbing convulsively, and watching his face eagerly, greedily, between her tears.

He had listened to her without a movement of any kind; his arms hung dead at his side, his lips were firm set. But within his soul anger, impotent anger, raged madly, drawing the muscles of his throat together and sending shivers of cold through all his frame. He felt no touch of pity for this broken woman; he thought only of the fresh young girl with the wide astonished eyes. Was it for this that he had let her go? Was it for this that he had renounced? He felt that he had been robbed. The miserable wretch! The light-minded wanton! Thundering words of anger and punishment pressed to his lips; it cost a terrific effort to hold them back. His hands clenched to fists, to fists that threatened, but in old habit he folded them as if to pray. No anger now!

And with the folding of his fingers the strength of righteousness was there again. Without turning his eyes from the wall, he spoke: "What do you want of me?"

She could not understand his tone—was there any pity in it? She stood listening.

MURINE EYE REMEDY CO., Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—We have a little fellow four months old who was troubled for three months after birth with sore eyes. A large amount of pus came from them, accompanied with severe inflammation. Our family Doctor, also an Eye Specialist, attended him without relief.

I saw your MURINE EYE REMEDY advertised in one of our Electric Cars, and utterly discouraged, I resolved to try it, and do you know, in three days' time all worry was over. In one week the Sore Eyes were a thing of the past.

This is an unasked for testimonial, but I know you will accept it as it is sent with much gratitude toward MURINE EYE REMEDY.

Yours truly,
Arthur Snow.

LOW RATES
TO ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC
EXPOSITION

FOR ROUND TRIP TICKETS
FROM

San Francisco	$32.50
Sacramento	32.50
Lathrop	32.50
Stockton	32.50
Tracy	32.50
Suisun	32.50
Davis	32.50
Napa	32.75
Santa Rosa	33.60
Calistoga	33.95

Greatly reduced rates from other points in California. Tickets sold daily May 25 to September 30, and cover two months' trip going and coming via the famous

SHASTA ROUTE
OF THE
SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Stopovers going and coming. Many other routes at slightly higher rates for you to select from.

Write or call on our nearest agent for full details of service, etc., or address

FLOOD BUILDING FOR INFORMATION

DIVIDEND NOTICE

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, Market and Sansome streets, Branches, 624 Van Ness avenue and 3039 16th street. For the half year ending June 30, 1909, a dividend has been declared on deposits in the savings department of this bank at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum, free of all taxes, payable on and after Thursday, July 1, 1909. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from July 1, 1909. E. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager. 26-4

He that is holy, let him be holy still. And, behold, I come quickly, and My reward is with Me.

His hands came together over the book; with a groan he beat in his temples. He sank deeper and fell from the chair to

He prayed long.

Suddenly there was a loud cry, a rough human cry, outside.

The people near him questioned in awestruck tones.

The moonbeams bore and catch and pull. Now they are

Thou hast never known Me.

With a wild sharp cry Pastor Eisner sank to the ground un-

LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST

DIAMONDS AND GEMS

BALDWIN JEWELRY CO.

1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

Packing, Moving and Storage of Household Goods at Reduced Rates

BEKINS VAN AND STORAGE CO.
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

PHONE MARKET 13

Ninety-Fourth Half-Yearly Report

OF THE

SAN FRANCISCO SAVINGS UNION

Member of the Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco

TEMPORARILY LOCATED AT

Northwest Corner California and Montgomery Streets

Pending the erection of its new building at junction of Market and O'Farrell Streets with Grant Avenue

Conducts a Savings Bank Business Exclusively

Money deposited on or before July 10th will receive interest from July 1st.

SWORN STATEMENT

OF THE

CONDITION AND VALUE OF ITS ASSETS AND LIABILITIES

JUNE 30, 1909

ASSETS

Loans secured by first lien on real estate wholly within the State of California	$13,205,095.73
Loans secured by pledge and hypothecation of approved bonds and stocks	806,293.78
Bonds of the municipalities and school districts of the State of California, railroad bonds and bonds and stocks of local corporations, the value of which is	9,124,593.00
Bank Premises	700,000.00
Other Real Estate in the State of California	666,327.64
Furniture and Fixtures	500.00
Cash in Vault and in Bank	1,432,006.37
Total Assets	$25,934,816.52

LIABILITIES

Due depositors	$23,698,195.30
Capital paid up	1,000,000.00
Reserve and contingent funds	1,222,804.61
General tax account, balance undisbursed	13,816.61
Total Liabilities	$25,934,816.52

San Francisco, June 30, 1909.

(Signed) LOVELL WHITE,
President.

(Signed) R. M. WELCH,
Cashier.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO—ss.

We do solemnly swear that we have (and each of us has) a personal knowledge of the matters contained in the foregoing report, and that every allegation, statement, matter and thing therein contained is true, to the best of our knowledge and belief.

(Signed) LOVELL WHITE,
(Signed) R. M. WELCH.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 30th day of June, 1909.

(Seal) (Signed) FRANK L. OWEN,
Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco,
State of California.

STATEMENT

Of the Condition and Value of the Assets and Liabilities

OF

THE HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY

(A CORPORATION)

Member of the Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco

DATED JUNE 30, 1909

ASSETS

1—Bonds of the United States ($7,935,000.00), of the District of Columbia, guaranteed by the United States Government ($475,000.00), of the State of California ($250,000.00), of the City and County of San Francisco ($1,227,700.00), and County and Municipal Bonds of the State of California ($403,000.00) the actual value of which is		$12,133,098.15
2—Cash in United States Gold and Silver Coin and Checks		2,551,448.43
3—Miscellaneous Bonds, the actual value of which is		6,401,007.44

They are "San Francisco and North Pacific Railway Company 5 per cent Bonds" ($469,000.00), "San Francisco and San Joaquin Valley Railway Company 5 per cent Bonds" ($108,000.00), "Southern Pacific Branch Railway Company of California 6 per cent Bonds" ($266,000.00), "Northern California Railway Company 5 per cent Bonds" ($83,000.00), "Northern Railway Company of California 5 per cent Bonds" ($29,000.00), "Los Angeles Pacific Railroad Company of California Refunding 5 per cent Bonds" ($400,000.00), "Los Angeles Railway Company of California 5 per cent Bonds" ($334,000.00), "Market-Street Cable Company 6 per cent Bonds" ($858,000.00), "Market-Street Railway Company first consolidated Mortgage 5 per cent Bonds" ($753,000.00), "Powell-Street Railway Company 6 per cent Bonds" ($185,000.00), "The Omnibus Cable Company 6 per cent Bonds" ($167,000.00), "Sutter-Street Railway Company 5 per cent Bonds" ($150,000.00), "Ferries and Cliff House Railway Company 6 per cent Bonds" ($6,000.00), "The Merchants' Exchange 7 per cent Bonds" ($1,500,000.00), "San Francisco Gas and Electric Company 4½ per cent Bonds" ($484,000.00).

4—Promissory Notes and the debts thereby secured, the actual value of which is		32,341,072.31

The condition of said Promissory Notes and debts is as follows: They are all existing contracts, owned by said Corporation, and are payable to it at its office, which is situated at the corner of Market, McAllister and Jones Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and the payment thereof is secured by First Mortgages on Real Estate within this State. Said Promissory Notes are kept and held by said Corporation at its said office, which is its principal place of business, and said Notes and debts are there situated.

5—Promissory Notes and the debts thereby secured, the actual value of which is		48,298.67

The condition of said Promissory Notes and debts is as follows: They are all existing contracts, owned by said Corporation, and are payable to it at its office, which is situated as aforesaid, and the payment thereof is secured by pledge and hypothecation of Bonds of Railroad and Quasi-Public Corporations and other securities.

6—(a) Real Estate situated in the City and County of San Francisco ($166,973.18), and in the Counties of Santa Clara ($21,141.65), Alameda ($255.53), and San Mateo ($2,251.57), in this State, the actual value of which is		195,621.93
(b) The land and building in which said Corporation keeps its said office, the actual value of which is		999,141.37

The condition of said Real Estate is that it belongs to said Corporation, and part of it is productive.

7—Contingent Fund—Interest due and uncollected on Promissory Notes	$138,767.97
Interest accrued but not yet payable on United States and other Bonds	116,965.60	255,733.57
Total Assets		$54,925,421.87

LIABILITIES

1—Said Corporation owes Deposits amounting to and the actual value of which is		$51,223,764.48
2—Accrued Interest—Interest due and uncollected on Promissory Notes	$138,767.97
Interest accrued but not yet payable on United States and other Bonds	116,965.60	255,733.57
4—Reserve Fund, Actual Value		3,445,923.82
Total Liabilities		$54,925,421.87

THE HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY,
By JAMES R. KELLY, President.

THE HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY,
By R. M. TOBIN, Secretary.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO—ss.

JAMES R. KELLY and R. M. TOBIN, being each duly sworn, each for himself, says: That said JAMES R. KELLY is President, and that said R. M. TOBIN is Secretary of THE HIBERNIA SAVINGS AND LOAN SOCIETY, the Corporation above mentioned, and that the foregoing statement is true.

JAMES R. KELLY, President.
R. M. TOBIN, Secretary.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 2d day of July, 1909.
CHARLES T. STANLEY,
Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Auto Notes

A large number of auto parties went to Pacific Grove on Friday and Saturday evenings, remaining over the Fourth. From San Francisco were Mr. and Mrs. John N. Pomeroy in their Cadillac machine, with Mrs. Barrington, Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Gannon, Halley Pomeroy and Geraldine Gannon; E. L. Huneckson, who had with him, in his Peerless car, H. H. Heneckson, A. B. Moon and A. E. Axe; W. G. Tebbitts and family, who drove down in a "Stevens"; and Dr. Edward Tapham and his brother. From Oakland were W. B. Stewart in his Mitchell machine, Mrs. Stewart, Miss Gene Hawley and George G. Hawley, accompanying him.

C. F. Fisher, of the California Saw Works, has just completed an unusual trip through the logging camps and shingle mills of California and Oregon in his little Buick "White Streak" and considers that he has accomplished a feat that will not be duplicated soon. The entire distance for the trip, which consumed just six weeks, was slightly over 4200 miles, or an average of 100 miles per day. "When the character of the roads over which we traveled, is taken into consideration," said Mr. Fisher in speaking of his trip, "it really and unmistakably is worthy of comment. We traversed the entire lumber districts of California and Oregon and it would be hard for one to imagine such awful roads even in this rough and wild mountainous region. One puncture, resulting from the picking up of a nail, furnished the only cause for one moment's delay on our entire trip."

All records for the climb to the Tassajara Springs were broken when Louis Fenton of Salinas, Cal., drove his Studebaker E-M-F "30" into the Springs in 3 hours and 30 minutes and out in 3 hours and 23 minutes. The previous record held was 3 hours and 50 minutes for the in trip and 3 hours and 25 minutes coming out. The grade is one of the most difficult in the State and while the roads are in the best of condition, as they are at the present time, according to Fenton and members of his party, the climb is no easy task. Fenton was accompanied on his record run by James Besse, Robert Fenton and Harry Berthorff.

The road from Ukiah to Baker's Springs, one of the most popular resorts in that part of the State, is exceedingly steep and rough at this time, according to county treasurer George A. Johnson. The so-called road has not been worked this year and comprises a series of chuck-holes, bumps, grades and sandy stretches combined with considerable dust. The road to Potter Valley is in fairly good shape, but there trouble begins, and many times during the run autoists are compelled to take to the creek bed to vary the monotony.

The new Studebaker building in Chicago is seven stories in height. Automobile men who have visited the place agree that it is the largest automobile depot in the United States. The salesrooms on the ground floor are especially adapted to the most advantageous display of automobiles. The concern has incorporated every known devise which tends to the convenience of those connected with the branch and its patrons.

Motorists who contemplate touring from here to Stockton will be obliged to go many miles out of their way on account of the damage that has been done to large portions of the country in that vicinity by the floods. A. M. Barnett of Stockton who drove up to the latter town a few days ago in a new Model "C" Studebaker in a letter to Studebaker Bros. says: "Leaving Oakland we went by way of San Leandro, Haywards, Dublin, Livermore, Tracy and Banta. To all of these points we found the roads in excellent condition. We not only found the roads such that we could make splendid time over them but they were so well posted with signs that we always knew exactly in what direction and to which point we were headed. On leaving Banta we were compelled to go to Grayson in order to cross the San Joaquin river which was exceedingly high. From that point we went to Stockton by way of Modesto. In all we traveled 170 miles without the slightest engine or tire trouble. Our new car was royally welcomedd in Stockton."

Tourists who are planning to drive their machines from this city to Red Bluff are advised to go by way of Winters and Madison. Gorham K. King of Red Bluff who recently drove his Studebaker from that city to Del Monte and back, says that it is not necessary to go by way of Woodland and that the route he recommends is shorter than the Woodland route by many miles. The entire distance from San Francisco to Red Bluff, says King, is 184 miles.

Ninety miles of automobile roads in the best of condition will be open in and around Sacramento by the beginning of fall, says Halsey W. Smith, the Studebaker agent at the Capital City. All of these roads are at the present time closed on account of the grading that is under way. The upper and lower Stockton roads are barred to speeders, as is also the road between Mills and Placerville. Smith also says there is a movement on foot in Sacramento having for its object the establishment of a road from the Capital to Riverside in the vicinity of Sacramento. The road to the latter point at the present time is not particularly attractive to automobilists.

A Domestic Eye Remedy

Compounded by Experienced Physicians. Conforms to Pure Food and Drugs Law. Wins Friends Wherever Used. Ask Druggists for Murine Eye Remedy. Try Murine in Your Eyes. You Will Like Murine. Try it in Baby's Eyes. It Soothes.

COMPETENT AUTHORITY

always advises the selection of a STUDEBAKER automobile out of the many cars that are on the market. In the busy whirl of modern affairs the thoroughly reliable motor car is becoming more and more an exceedingly important factor. The reliability of the STUDEBAKER accounts for the fact that so many are owned by prominent men of affairs. Their judgment is a splendid and convincing criterion by which you may be benefitially guided.

Fremont at Mission — Studebaker — Phone Douglas 3000

Chalmers-Detroit "30"

The beginning and the end car.

In the beginning the initial price is slightly higher, in the end the upkeep and after expense is much less.

"Anybody can cut prices but it takes brain to make a better article."
(Elbert Hubbard.)

Buying a good car is only one step in the right direction.

BUT

Buying a good car from the most reliable dealers on the Pacific Coast is your absolute assurance of satisfaction.

The Pioneer Automobile Company is the largest concern west of Chicago giving its undivided attention to the sale of automobiles. Ten years in business assures our stability and perpetuates our guarantees. Our business motto is "Right or Made Right."

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

901 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

Oakland San Francisco Fresno

ASK FOR BLACK AND WHITE SCOTCH WHISKEY

IT IS THE BEST NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

Summer Resort Arrivals

Hotel Del Coronado: San Francisco, P. Ehrenfeldt, D. Young, Charles L. Fox, James H. Fannin, E. H. Adams, Charles Beach, F. A. Long, Mrs. W. D. K. Gibson and son, Grace S. Gibson, Miss Nora Evans, Mrs. C. H. Mann, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Benedict, Wm. Thompson, Mrs. E. M. Cockrill, Miss A. M. Josselyn, George Dyean, Miss Bessie Lay, Herman Shainwald, John Weiland, E. Weiland, Mr. and Mrs. John Gallwey, H. M. Meyers, W. R. Knight, W. H. Knight, W. P. Knight, George W. Harrison, C. H. Rhodes, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Gibbs.

Byron Hot Springs: San Francisco, Alfred Shephard, T. Soloman, J. S. Swan and wife, Mr. and Mrs. J. Biller, Mr. and Mrs. Jos. L. Eppinger, Mrs. Jane Harvey, Mrs. Wm. Cunningham, Dan. Rygel, Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin Wood, Mrs. W. S. Wood, Mrs. C. F. Welty and child, Sylvan A. Blum, Max H. Edlin, W. H. Miller, Jos. Magner, Mrs. J. Abraham, Dr. F. Lengfeld, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. I. Butler, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Keenan, Mr. and Mrs. H. Hayward, Mrs. V. B. Harrington, Miss Agnes G. Thomas, A. J. Welch, B. A. Ivancovich, H. Warner, J. W. R. Sayers, J. C. Hugh, Mrs. E. Simon, Miss Blanche Simon, R. R. Parks, Mr. and Mrs. Rube Cohen, Miss Arline J. Cohen, C. M. Tilton, P. R. Lynch, Mrs. J. Boyle, Master John Boyle, Frederick S. Samuels, Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Mahoney, Miss N. F. Sullivan, Miss A. Ormond, Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Freeman, G. M. Freeman Jr., Wm. Maris and wife, Rev. R. C. Kane, O. P., C. Cavestri, Jas. D. Mayer, J. Bletso, Chas. Folsullo and wife, Stacia Blanchard, A. C. Stoddard, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Campbell, A. S. Smith, Herman Eppinger, A. C. Hartnack, Mr. and Mrs. A. Abrams, E. A. Bradley, W. B. McGerry, A. Goodman, G. Spieir, Capt. and Mrs. J. R. Pamie, Mrs. G. Kitt, Dr. and Mrs. L. D. Mead, G. Flamm, Miss C. Flamm, M. J. O'Reilly, C. B. Sessions, C. P. Sessions, Miss E. Lou Fetscher, Mrs. Eva McGoughey, Miss Crothers, Miss Fonte, Loring Pickering, E. H. Charlton, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Cantrell, R. C. Knight and family, R. Sideman, S. Nussenbaum, Karl Kleingara, J. M. Lane and wife, M. Telk, G. Bellerano, Mrs. Nagler, Mrs. J. Davis, Capt. Wm. Smith, M. Rose, Robert H. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. B. Cornelius; Oakland, Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Schultze, Mr. and Mrs. B. Jeffry, Saul Magner and wife, Irving Jonas and A. Friedlander.

Wilson's Inn: San Francisco, Mrs. Jno. Stork, Miss Clara M. Stork, Fred. Mutschall, Miss M. A. Bernero, Miss L. G. Bernero; Burlingame, Mrs. P. Bontecon Goss, Master Pierre B. Goss, Belton Rhodes; Piedmont, Brodburn Hawkins.

Aetna Springs: San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. M. Plum, Miss Loraine Plum, C. Mortimer Plum, Paul Fagan, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. La Boyteaux, Mr. and Mrs. R. I. Bentley, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin M. Eddy, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Davis, Kenneth M. Davis, Mrs. John D. McKee, Master Donald McKee, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Ellery, Miss Ethel Ellery, John W. Ellery, Chas. H. Crocker, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Payot, Mr. and Mrs. E. B. King, Mr. and Mrs. A. D. King, Miss Geraldine King, Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Farquharson, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph W. Hart, Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Magee, Geo. Bird, Miss E. Alma Duffy, Miss Anna G. Duffy, Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Richmond, Mr. and Mrs. Fred H. Colburn, Mrs. Frank L. Richmond, Mrs. F. H. Colburn, Mr. and Mrs. A. Gartenlaub, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Cooper, Miss Dorothy Cooper, Mrs. Chas. S. Levy, Miss Lucille Levy, Mr. and Mrs. Bush Finnell, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Smith, Alan W. Maginis, Robt. Schord, Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Crim, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Fleming and son, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Eib, Fred Dewar, Mr. and Mrs. Selwyn Eddy, Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Richardson and child, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Hannam, Mr. and Mrs. D H. Green, Mr. and Mrs. S. N. Wood, Carl H. Schmidt and family; Arcadia, Miss Ruth Sadler, C. M. Sadler, Mrs. Gregory, Mr. and Mrs. Redman, H. G. Miller; Burlingame, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Tobin.

Del Monte: San Francisco, Charles Fox, Mr. and Mrs. Alper, Mr. and Mrs. H. Nathan, Mr. and Mrs. J. Adler, E. A. Scharlach, G. J. Scharlach, Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Houpt, Miss Agnes Kilday, E. C. Hull, Mrs. E. M. Hagler, G. W. Whitaker, Stanley Whitaker, H. J. Small, Miss Barbara Small, Miss Josephine Blanch, Lambert Coblentz, Garrett M. Goldberg, Mr. and Mrs. John J. Barrett, Gertrude Barrett and Irene Barrett, Mr. and Mrs. E. Ploeger, Mr. and Mrs. M. Nagan, Campbell McGregor, Bliss Herman, Frederick Birdsall, Miss Harriet H. Rix, Miss Edna Hickok, E. A. Meyes, L. Weissberg, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Schlesinger, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Fulford, Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Fisher, J. W. Chapman, H. Curiel, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. P. Osgood, Miss Duncombe, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Pollard, Miss P. McPhee, Mrs. Henry Bateman Rogers, Bruce Fair,

CALIFORNIA BUILDING, ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION
Detail of Decorative Work

Walter Burckhalter, Delma Berg, Miss Alice Bean, Miss Grace Kidwell, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Patrick and children, Mrs. J. C. Patrick, Mrs. S. J. Costello, Mrs. J. P. Costello, Master A. J. Costello, Miss V. Costello, Miss Dahle, A. M. Cartwright, C. Toohey, Miss Blanche Silberberg, Miss Hedwig Silberberg, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Androvette, Miss Grace E. Androvette, Mr. and Mrs. P. McG. McBean, C. A. Henshaw, J. Washauer, H. Washauer, D. Washauer Jr., T. H. Williams, Mrs. B. V. Hutchinson Sr. Brig. Gen. Marion P. Maus, U. S. A., Dr. and Mrs. S. Rutherford Levy, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Sullivan, F. F. Bell, Miss L. Hales, George A. Johnson, William Cruickshank, J. L. Samuels, Mrs. H. W. Hyman, A. Satler, Miss M. E. Satler and maid, Mrs. Marcus S. Koshland, maid and chauffeur, Miss Margaret H. Koshland, Daniel E. Koshland, Robert S. Koshland and Walter Haas.

HOTEL BON AIR, ESCALLE STATION, ROSS VALLEY

HISTORICAL TITBITS

O, Cromwell was a witty man, of him you must have heard,—
He won the field of Waterloo on January third.
And it was there that he remarked with great aesthetic beauty:
"Please fight, my men! Though war is Hell, let each man do his duty."

Then, there's that chap called Shakespeare you hear so much about.
Did he write what he wrote himself? I tried to find this out.
I looked this matter up with care, and found without a question
That Shakespeare has been dead six years. He'd chronic indigestion.

Paul Jones, the poet-laureate, will never be forgot.
His works will live as long as Time—this is not common rot:
"Above the Polar Circle where the Flying Fishes play,
And the dawn comes up all yellow out of China 'cross the way."

Then Kipling dashed off "Hamlet" with one hand behind his back.
George Sands invented gunpowder, Swift put him on the rack.
Joan of Arc, that burly smith, whose muscles were like nails,
Wrote "Frenzied Finance" in a week—such courage never fails.

From these Historic bits, my dears, whatever be your bent,
You see the primal thing to be is just intelligent.
Be accurate and careful, and do not go astray,
And you may gain a lot of gold, or write a book some day.

IN VAIN

"It is useless to urge me, Gerald," the maiden said. "It is impossible. I shall never marry."

"There is some other man, perhaps," he suggested, with bitterness.

"No. I have a higher regard for you than I have for any other man."

"Why do you tell me that?"

"To save your face, if you insist upon knowing," proudly answered the high-spirited girl.

Yet, as she spoke, she saw it was too late.

His countenance had fallen.

"When I accepted Tom he said that he was in the seventh heaven."

"I believe that's right. He has been engaged six times before."

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 22931, Dept. No. 10.

CATHERINE FRANCIS BERTRAND, Plaintiff,

vs.

BENJAMIN A. BERTRAND, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City of and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Benjamin A. Bertrand, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion of said plaintiff; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 11th day of May, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk

(Seal) By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ORNBAUN, FRASER & LYNCH, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
727 Pacific Building, San Francisco, Cal. 6-19-10

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17318, Dept. No. 4.

KATE E. BOYANTON, sometimes known as KATE E. BOYNTON, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Kate E. Boyanton, sometimes known as Kate E. Boynton, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Eddy Street distant One hundred and twenty (120) feet easterly from the easterly line of Scott Street; running thence easterly along said northerly line of Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet and to the westerly line of Farren Avenue; thence at right angles northerly and along said westerly line of Farren Avenue Seventy-five (75) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet; and thence at right angles southerly Seventy-five (75) feet to the place of beginning. Being a portion of Block No. 431, Western Addition.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that the title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 29th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17438, Dept. No. 12.

GEORGE J. MARTIN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of George J. Martin, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue distant thereon one hundred (100) feet northerly from the northerly line of C Street, running thence northerly along said westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue, twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angle westerly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angle southerly, twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angle easterly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue and the point of commencement. Being a part of Outside Land Block No. 379.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that his title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 30th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
German Savings & Loan Society (a Corporation)	530 California Street, San Francisco, Cal.
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17244.

HANNAH EMERY, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Hannah Emery, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Van Ness Avenue, distant eighty (80) feet northerly from the northwesterly corner of Van Ness Avenue, and Turk Street, running thence northerly and along the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches; thence at right angles southerly and parallel with Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles easterly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches to the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue and place of beginning; being a portion of Block Seventy-nine (79) Western Addition;

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: NONE.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Esq., Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market St., San Francisco. 7-10-10.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of MARTHA ESTELLE RAMSAY, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned administrator with the will annexed, of the estate of MARTHA ESTELLE RAMSAY, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice to the said administrator with the will annexed at its office and place of business, No. 464 California Street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

MERCANTILE TRUST COMPANY OF SAN FRANCISCO,
Administrator with the will annexed of the Estate of Martha Estelle Ramsay, Deceased.
By R. M. SIMS, Trust Officer.
Dated, San Francisco, California, June 12th, 1909. 6-12-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATE AT PRIVATE SALE SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 6670, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of JOHN DEMARTINI, Deceased.

FLORA DEMARTINI, as Administratrix of the estate of John Demartini, deceased, having presented to this Court her verified petition for sale of all the real and personal property of which said decedent died seized and possessed, as far as known to your petitioner, which property is situated in the County of Tulare, State of California, and which is fully described in the petition of said administratrix, to which reference is made;

And it appearing therefrom that it is necessary to sell the whole thereof in order to pay the debts against the estate and costs of administration;

It is ordered that said petition be filed, and all persons interested in the estate of said John Demartini, deceased are directed to appear before the Court on the 20th day of July, 1909, at 10 o'clock a. m. of said last named date, at the courtroom of said Court, Grant Building, Southeast corner of Seventh and Market Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause why an order should not be granted to said administratrix to sell at private sale all of said real estate and the personal property belonging to the estate of said John Demartini, deceased, as prayed for in said petition; and it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published four (4) successive weeks in the "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco.

Done in open Court this 10th day of June, 1909.
THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed June 11, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk, by H. G. Benedict, Deputy Clerk.

J. A. STEPHENS, Attorney for Flora Demartini, Administratrix,
630 Chronicle Building, San Francisco, Cal. 6-19-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Department No. 10, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of BRIDGET GRANT, Deceased.

John A. McGee, the Executor of the Last Will and Testament of BRIDGET GRANT, deceased, having filed his petition herein, duly verified, praying for an order authorizing and directing the executor herein to convey to T. A. McCaffrey the real property described in said petition for the purposes and on the grounds therein set forth.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before said Superior Court on Thursday, the 22nd day of July, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10, Probate, of said Superior Court, Grant Building, southeast corner Seventh and Market Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause why the said petition of said executor should not be granted and why said executor should not convey to said T. A. McCaffrey the real property described in the said petition.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.
Dated, June 16th, 1909. 6-19-5

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No.17271.

WELLS, RUSSELL & COMPANY, (a Corporation), Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest, in or Lien Upon, the Real Property herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Wells, Russell & Company, (a Corporation), plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows

First Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northwesterly line of Natoma Street, formerly Everett Street, distant two hundred (200) feet southwesterly from the intersection of the southwesterly line of Third Street with said line of Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches; thence at a right angle northwesterly eighty (80) feet; thence northeasterly parallel with Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches and thence at a right angle southeasterly eighty (80) feet to the place of beginning; being a portion of the 100 vara Lot No. 34.

Second Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Fourteenth Avenue, distant one hundred and fifty (150) feet westerly from the northwesterly corner of Fourteenth Avenue and P Street; thence westerly along said line of Fourteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet; thence at a right angle northerly two hundred (200) feet to Thirteenth Avenue; thence at a right angle easterly along the south line of Thirteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet, and thence at a right angle southerly two hundred (200) feet to the place of beginning; being a part of the O'Neill and Haley Tract, as per map on file in the Recorder's Office of said City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that its title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover its costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June A, D, 1909. By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attorneys for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MORTGAGED

In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California—No. 23,856, Dept. 9.

In the Matter of the Estate of SUSAN BLANC, Deceased.

Ida E. Connor, as the administratrix of the estate of SUSAN BLANC, deceased, having this day filed herein her duly verified petition praying for an order authorizing her to mortgage the real property hereinafter described, belonging to the estate of said decedent,

It is hereby ordered and directed that all persons interested in the estate of said SUSAN BLANC, deceased, be and they are hereby directed to appear before said Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, Department Number 9 thereof, on Friday, the 23rd day of July, 1909, at 10:00 o'clock a. m. of said day, at the Courtroom of said Department, in the Grant Building, southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, the same being the time and place hereby fixed for hearing the said petition, then and there to show cause, if any they have, why the following described real estate situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows, to wit:

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Jackson Street, distant thereon Seventy-two (72) feet Easterly from the corner formed by the intersection of said line of Jackson Street with the Easterly line of Drumm Street; running thence Easterly along said line of Jackson Street Fifty (50) feet; thence at right angles Northerly Forty (40) feet; thence at right angles Westerly and parallel with Jackson Street Fifty (50) feet; and thence at right angles Southerly and parallel with Drumm Street Fifty (50) feet, and to the place of beginning, or such part thereof as to the Court may seem meet, should not be mortgaged for the sum of Five Thousand Dollars ($5000.00) or such lesser sum as to the Court may seem just, as prayed for in petition on file, reference to which is hereby made for further particulars.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four (4) successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.
Dated, June 17th, 1909.

GARRET W. McENERNEY, Attorney for Administratrix,
Flood Building, San Francisco, Cal. 6-26-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 22419, Dept. No. 10.

HILDA M. WILSON, Plaintiff,
vs.
FRANK J. WILSON, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Frank J. Wilson, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion of plaintiff; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 14th day of April, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
(Seal) By W. R. CASTAGNETTO, Deputy Clerk.

A. MORGENTHAL, Attorney for Plaintiff,
1530 Grove Street, San Francisco, Cal. 5-22-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco State of California—No. 16627.

ROBERT HECTOR, Jr., Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Robert Hector, Jr., plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest, or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to wit:

Lot number 210 as laid down, delineated and designated on a certain map on file in the office of the recorder of the said City and County of San Francisco, known as "Holiday Map A." Said map was filed in the office of the recorder of the City and County of San Francisco on the 1st day of May 1863.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit, that it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute, that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description, and that plaintiff recover costs herein, and have such other and further relief as may seem meet and proper in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 4th day of June, 1909.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The following persons are said to claim an interest in or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names.	Addresses.
Abraham C. Freeman	3034 Washington St., San Francisco, Cal.
Ellita Gamboni Mazzitelli..	San Francisco, Cal..
Frank Shay, Administrator of the estate of William Hale, Deceased,	640 Fairmont avenue, Oakland, California.

Dated, this 4th day of June, 1909.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in San Francisco Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation, on the 19th day of June, 1909.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
45 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. 6-19-10

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Mackenzie Gordon

TENOR

TEACHER OF SINGING { in all its branches, from the rudiments of tone formation to the highest finish and Completion of Public Singing.

Oratorio, Opera and Concert

By appointment only Phone Franklin 3594

Studio: 1350 FRANKLIN ST.

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

Phone Kearny 3657 Res. Phone West 1784

Dr. A. H. Wright

12 to 4 CHRONICLE BUILDING

60 YEARS' EXPERIENCE

PATENTS

TRADE MARKS DESIGNS COPYRIGHTS &C.

Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain our opinion free whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. HANDBOOK on Patents sent free. Oldest agency for securing patents.

Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice, without charge, in the Scientific American.

A handsomely illustrated weekly. Largest circulation of any scientific journal. Terms, $3 a year; four months, $1. Sold by all newsdealers.

MUNN & Co. 361 Broadway, New York

Branch Office, 625 F St., Washington, D. C.

PATRICK & CO.

RUBBER STAMPS

STENCILS, SEALS, SIGNS & ETC.

126 BUSH ST. SAN FRANCISCO

WHAT HE MEANT

Before Millard Fillmore was elected to the vice-presidency of the United States he was head of the law firm of Fillmore, Hall & Havens, of Buffalo. It was one of the leading law firms of the State. He was the defendant's attorney in a certain action in Buffalo. At the opening of the trial of the case the plaintiff's attorney stated to the jury that he would have to depend entirely upon the justice of his client's case, as the defendant had sought and obtained the aid and counsel of one of the ablest firms of lawyers in Western New York, and he might say he had opposed to him the right bower of the legal profession.

"What does he mean by that?" said Mr. Fillmore.

Mr. Havens replied, "He means you."

"Yes, I know," replied Mr. Fillmore, "but what does he mean by that particular expression?"

"Did you never play euchre?" said Havens.

"No," said Mr. Fillmore.

"Well," said Havens, "in the game of euchre the right bower is the biggest knave in the pack."

DIVORCE

A lawyer making a specialty of divorce cases was recently consulted by a woman desirous of bringing action against her husband for separation.

The lady related a harrowing story of her ill-treatment at the hands of her better half. Indeed, the lawyer was so impressed by her recital of woes that for a moment he was startled out of his usual professional composure. "Madam!" he exclaimed, "from what you say, I gather that this man is a perfect brute!"

Whereupon the applicant for divorce rose with dignity and said:

"Sir, I shall consult another lawyer. I came here to get your advice as to a divorce, not to hear my husband abused!"

AN INCIDENT OF THE ROAD

An automobilist who was touring through the country saw, walking ahead of him, a man followed by a dog. As the machine drew near them the dog started suddenly to cross the road; he was hit by the car and killed immediately. The motorist stopped his machine and approached the owner. "I'm very sorry, my man, that this has happened," he said. "Will five dollars fix it?"

"Oh, yes," said the man; "five dollars will fix it, I guess."

Pocketing the money as the car disappeared in the distance, he looked down at the dead animal.

"I wonder whose dog it was?" he said.

A DEFINITION

Gladys—Mamma, what is a "cursory glance?"

Mamma—It is the kind of look that your father gives when he wants to swear but doesn't dare.

Jonathan Edwards began reading Latin at 6; at 10 he wrote a thesis on the immortality of the soul; at 13 he entered Yale, and at 17 was a graduate.

FREE PIANO INSURANCE

If You Die Before Completing Your Payments, We Give Your Heirs a Clean Bill of Sale for the Piano. Should you be taken sick and thereby unable to earn salary, we will suspend payments on Piano during such time; and if the instrument is destroyed by fire, we will replace it with another of similar value and make. Investigate Our Prices and Instruments.

PETER BACIGALUPI & SONS,

Phonographs and Pianos,

941 Market Street San Francisco

The German Savings and Loan Society

(Member of the Associated Savings Bank of S. F.)

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,504,498.68
Deposits June 30, 1908	$36,793,234.04
Total Assets	$39,435,681.38

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

RICHMOND DISTRICT BRANCH, 432 Clement Street, between 5th and 6th Avenues. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. W. C. Heyer, Manager.

H. L. Davis W. D. Fennimore J. W. Davis

California Optical Co.

Makers of Good Glasses

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store at 181 Post Street, near Grant Avenue.

HENRY P. TRICOU

NOTARY PUBLIC

508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711

Residence 852 Grove St. Phone Park 1870

"I need the money myself, but I'll lend some to you if you'll promise not to keep it long."

"Don't worry, old chap. I'll spend it today!"

Man eats to please himself and dresses to please his wife; woman dresses to delight herself and eats just because the stuff would spoil if it were to stay in the refrigerator another day.

Clara—Charlie Spooner made desperate love to me last night.

Maud—He always was unselfish.

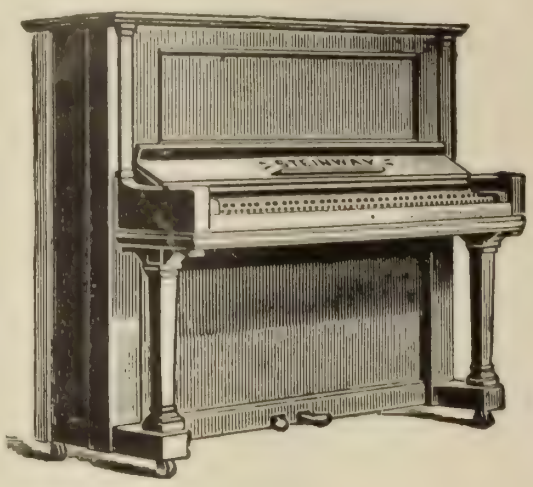
SCIENTIFIC OPTICIAN

MAYERLE'S GERMAN EYE WATER

By Mail 65c

Mayerle's German Eyewater

Highly Recommended for



Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN

Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes, relieves the strain, and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Graduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 960 Market street, opposite Hale's. Phone Franklin 3279.

The $575 Steinway Piano

No one who appreciates the finer shades of difference in things pertaining to music and art can ever, with justice to himself, fail to consider the purchase of a Steinway.

The Steinway Piano is distinctly a work of art. It is as famous in the capitals of Europe as in the musical centers of America. It is the piano favored as no other has ever been, even in an approximate degree, by royalty and the world's greatest artists.

If you can afford to pay several hundred dollars for a piano, you can afford a Steinway. Its durability makes it in reality the least expensive of pianos.

In fact all other piano values sink into insignificance in comparison with this—a Steinway for $575. A genuine Steinway in upright form—literally and in fact a "turned" grand—a piano that possesses the magnificent tonal qualities of the Steinway grands and yet can be had at a price within the reach of all.

We want you to come and see this instrument. You'll be surprised at its superiority over all other similarly priced instruments.

Steinway and Other Pianos

Sherman Clay & Co.

Victor Talking Machines

KEARNY AND SUTTER STS., SAN FRANCISCO

CLAY AND 14th, OAKLAND

Vol. XVII. No. 881. SAN FRANCISCO, JULY 17, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

CALIFORNIA STATE

RICHMOND COAL

IMPORTED SOLELY BY

James and Alex'r Brown

Owners of the Pelaw Main and Richmond Collieries; also Richmond Vale Colliery, Newcastle, N. S. W., Australia

Represented by Wm. Smellie

IF your dealer cannot supply you with genuine Richmond Coal, kindly communicate with us, or Pacific Coast Coal Co., Merchants' Exchange Building. Please note that all other advertisements claiming to sell you Richmond Coal are not authorized by us. They haven't got the goods.

JAMES AND ALEX'R BROWN
334 RUSS BUILDING, MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Sole Wholesale Distributors

PACIFIC COAST COAL CO.

Beale Street Bunkers San Francisco

SUMMER RESORTS

THE VENDOME SAN JOSE

Is the ideal objective point for the motorist. The accommodations are complete and the ride from either side of the bay is delightful. This hotel is unsurpassed in the West for the beauty of its environment and for those qualities which contribute to ease and comfort. H. W. LAKE, Manager.

PARAISO SPRINGS

MONTEREY CO., CAL.

The most accessible of all resorts; a delightful terminal for an automobile trip. Take 8 a. m. train from Third and Townsend; you arrive at spring 1 p. m. for lunch. Natural hot soda and sulphur plunge and tub baths, 104 to 116 degrees, for rheumatism, malaria and all stomach troubles. Iron and arsenic waters. Altitude 1400 feet. The conditions and surroundings at Paraiso insure one that restful comfort so earnestly desired but so rarely found. H. H. McGOWAN, Proprietor.

Hotel and Grounds

HOTEL DEL MONTE

Invites you to come and

PLAY GOLF

on the finest 18-hole golf course in the West.
Within five minutes walk of the Hotel.

H. R. WARNER, Manager

THE PENINSULA

The leading suburban hotel of Central California. A garden spot with a uniformity of climate that appeals to everyone.

Indoor comfort and outdoor attractions. The excellence of our table, service and general accommodations wins the praise of all who register with us. Special rates in the bachelors' quarters.

JAS. H. DOOLITTLE, Manager SAN MATEO, CAL.

BYRON HOT SPRINGS

One of the world's most curative springs, 2½ hours from San Francisco; one of California's best hotels and a delightful place for rest and recreation. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, James Flood Building, any S. P. Agent, or Peck-Judah, 789 Market St., San Francisco, or 553 S. Spring St., Los Angeles, or address manager, Byron Hot Springs, California.

SANTA CRUZ

Welcomes automobilists and excursionists and those seeking recreation for their summer vacations. Band concerts, dancing, bathing and boating every afternoon and evening.

CASINO

Now Open for the Season

PACIFIC GROVE HOTEL

PACIFIC GROVE, CAL.

A homelike and comfortable hotel—owned and operated by the Pacific Improvement Company which owns and operates Hotel Del Monte. Guests here are given the privileges of the splendid Del Monte golf links, bath house and the hotel grounds. Rates $2.50 per day. American plan. Discounts by the week or month. Write for reservations. GEORGE H. CORDY, Manager.

SUMMER RESORTS

HOTEL RAFAEL

SAN RAFAEL

Our Guests Always Return

Buy your tickets snd check your baggage direct to San Rafael

Under the Management of
MR. J. H. HOLMES
Formerly of the Hotel Green, Pasadena

Forty-five minutes from San Francisco

Escalle Station

Via Sausalito
Northwestern Pacific R. R.
Postoffice Larkspur

Reservations can be made with Mrs. Manlove, Cadillac Hotel, San Francisco

HOTEL BON AIR

NAPA SODA SPRINGS HOTEL

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

California's famous mountain spa, only 50 miles from San Francisco. The nearest watering place and summer resort to the city. 1,000 feet elevation, overlooking 25 miles of beautiful Napa Valley. For terms address Manager Napa Soda Springs Hotel, Napa County, Cal.

SODA BAY SPRINGS

LAKE COUNTY, CAL.

Situated on the picturesque shores of Clear Lake. Opened May 1st. Finest of boating, bathing, hunting and fishing. Unsurpassed accommodations. New launch accommodating 40 people, for use of guests and excursions. Terms $2.50 per day; $12.00 per week; special rates to families. Route—Take Tiburon Ferry from city to Pieta, thence stage or auto direct to Springs. Round trip, good for 6 months, $9.00. Further information address THOS. F. CHATFIELD, Prop., Soda Bay Springs, Lake Co., Cal., via Kelseyville P. O.; or Peck-Judah, 789 Market St., S. F. Send for booklet.

HILLSIDE INN—BELVEDERE

Beautifully situated, 30 minutes from San Francisco via Tiburon ferry; with good boat service assured. For particulars address MRS. M. J. WARREN, Belvedere.

LAKE TAHOE

Lakeside Park Company—18th Season

HOTEL, COTTAGES, CAMPING and HOUSEKEEPING

Open to guests June 1st; best lake fishing in June. For circular and terms address ARTHUR MARION HILL, Proprietor, Stateline, P. O., Lake Tahoe, Cal.

ANGWIN'S

The Howell Mountain Hotel, situated on east side of Napa Valley; elevation 1750 feet. Fine large swimming tank. Railroad Station St. Helena. Telephone 73 St. Helena. For particulars address EDWIN ANGWIN, Proprietor, Napa County, Cal., or Peck-Judah, 789 Market Street, San Francisco.

SPEND THE WEEK END AT

ÆTNA SPRINGS

Leave San Francisco at 3:45 p. m., Friday or Saturday via Sausalito. Railroad round trip, $7, including enjoyable ride in our fine automobiles from St. Helena to Aetna Springs and return.

Illustrated Booklet mailed free on application.

Aetna Springs Co., Aetna Springs, Napa Co., Cal.

HOTEL BELVEDERE

BELVEDERE, MARIN COUNTY, CAL.

Under new management. Good boat service assured May 1st. On the beautiful Island of Belvedere, only 30 minutes' ferry ride from San Francisco via Tiburon. Boating, fishing and bathing unrivalled. Will be pleased to quote you rates on application. Special week-end rates. Phone Main 221. A. M. KINYON, Proprietor.

Calaveras Big Trees Grove Hotel

Situated in the world famous Calaveras Grove of Big Trees. Everything for the comfort and convenience of guests. Table the best. Finest trout streams in the State. For further particulars address JOB WHITESIDE, Big Trees, Calaveras County, Cal.

WILSON'S INN

A delightful home in the mountains; elevation 1900 feet; 12 miles from Napa; pure air and water; fruit, milk, cream and vegetables; phone, gas; $8 to $12 per week. Folders at Peck's, 789 Market St. Address Atlas, Cal.

PINE LODGE

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

In the mountains by the sea. Surroundings perfect for rest and recreation. Trout stream, boating, bathing. Home garden of berries and vegetables. New hotel and cottages, modern conveniences. Two miles from Santa Cruz. Rates $9.00 per week and upwards. For particulars address PINE LODGE, Santa Cruz, Cal.

FALLEN LEAF LODGE

LAKE TAHOE, CAL.

New home-like resort at the head of Fallen Leaf Lake; five miles south of Lake Tahoe. Centrally situated in the grandest part of the Lake Tahoe Scenic Wonderland. Rates $14.00 per week and upward. HARRY WHITCOMB, Manager, Fallen Leaf, Lake Tahoe, Cal.

GILROY HOT SPRINGS

Only four hours from San Francisco; delightful stage ride over the best kept mountain road in California. Unsurpassed table, health-giving waters, telephone, postoffice. Rates $12 to $17.50 a week; baths free. Trains leave Third and Townsend streets at 9 a. m. Direct stage connection. See Peck-Judah, 789 Market street.

W. J. McDONALD, Proprietor.

SUMMER RESORTS

TAKE TAMALPAIS TRIP

and breathe good air.

Half a mile high in two hours' time. No other trip like it.

Via Sausalito Ferry, Foot of Market Street

Boca Hotel and Annex

TRUCKEE RIVER

Address CHAS. GARRISON, BOCA, CAL.

CAMP MEEKER

Own Summer Home in Mountains of Sonoma County

Equable climate. Lots $15 up. Cottages built $85 up. Depot, stores, restaurant, hotel, phone, postoffice, express, churches and sawmill; 1800 lots sold; 600 cottages built. Sausalito ferry. M. C. MEEKER, Camp Meeker, Sonoma County.

SWEETWATER SPRINGS

HEALDSBURG

Rates $2 per day, $8 to $10 per week. Send for booklet. J. P. ECKLUND.

SUTHERLAND'S

One of Nature's Most Charming Spots for a Summer Outing. Write for rates. Guerneville, Sonoma Co., Cal.

ALDER GLEN SPRINGS

In the mountains above Cloverdale. Magnesia, soda, iron, sulphur and arsenic springs. Finest fishing and hunting. Bathing in the Russian River. Large new dancing pavilion this year. For accommodations address J. A. SERRES, Cloverdale P. O.

If you can't decide where to go—see

PECK-JUDAH CO.

789 MARKET ST., SAN FRANCISCO

They know—Send for "Summer Trips," just out.

ROSS McMAHON AWNING AND TENT CO.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

Tents, Awnings, Hammocks, Bags and Covers

Phone Kearny 2030 403 BATTERY STREET

WITTER SPRINGS HOTEL

The Automobile Headquarters of Lake County.

The most delightful place to rest and get well. Every comfort; large, airy rooms, with hot and cold water; private baths.

Witter Springs Water Works Wonders

For people afflicted with Stomach, Liver or Kidney Trouble. Absolutely cures Eczema.

Address Peck-Judah Information Bureaus, or reservations can be made at City Office, Westbank Building, 830 Market Street

That Auto Trip Should Include Santa Cruz

If you haven't got an auto take the short line through the mountains. Ask the S. P. man. Fun, fun, fun, awaits you at Santa Cruz. Bring the family.

Address Box N, Chamber of Commerce, for literature and let them obtain your accommodations, also.

ROSE HILL HOTEL AND COTTAGES

CAMP MEEKER

Beautifully located in the redwoods of Sonoma's Coast Mountains. Fine climate; no winds or fog; pure water and home cooking. Rates $7.00 to $10.00 per week. Address Rose Hill Hotel, Camp Meeker.

CAMP MEEKER LIVERY and FEED STABLE

Good rigs and saddle horses at all times. Reasonable rates. F. H. HAHN, Camp Meeker, Cal.

YOSEMITE

SENTINEL HOTEL Open the Year Round; Steam Heated; Electric Lighted.

CAMP YOSEMITE Electric Lighted; Opened May 1st; the Largest Hotel-Camp on the Coast.

Under One Management. For Rates, Reservations or other information, address J. B. COOK, Proprietor, Yosemite, Cal.

BEACH HILL INN

SANTA CRUZ

Popular family hotel overlooking the beach. Elegant and artistic furnishings. All outside rooms. Extensive grounds. Send for booklet.
MISS A. PORTER, Santa Cruz.

OAK GROVE RESORT

New ideal spot for your summer vacation. Rates, $7 per week. Special rates to families. Bus will meet all trains at Verano Station. German cooking.
H. KOERNER, El Verano P. O., Sonoma County, Cal.

CAMERAS Kodaks, Developing, Printing, Supplies, Etc.

"Don't take a vacation unless you take pictures as you go along"

462-464 THIRTEENTH STREET, Between Broadway and Washington

SMITH BROS. STATIONERS OAKLAND

Leading Hotels and Resorts

FAIRMONT HOTEL

Maintaining the worlds standard of Hotel excellence established in the old Palace Hotel by the present management.

PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

HOTEL VICTORIA

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Manager

N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton

CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL

Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine. Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.

American and European Plan.

THE FORUM CAFE

O A K L A N D

Now under the management of

MR. GUSTAV MANN

HOTEL COLONIAL

STOCKTON ST. ABOVE SUTTER

SAN FRANCISCO

American and European Plan — Breakfast, 50c; Luncheon, 50c; Dinner, $1.00

HOTEL HARCOURT

Formerly the Nordhoff.

SUTTER AND LARKIN STREETS

AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN

An Elegantly Furnished Modern Home. Phone Franklin 2100

HOTEL NORMANDIE

SUTTER AND GOUGH STREETS

A comfortable, high order, uptown hotel, now under the management of

THOS. H. SHEDDEN, Formerly Manager of St. Dunstan's.

HOTEL BELMONT

730 EDDY STREET
Below Van Ness Ave.

Best equipped house in the city. All outside rooms. Rates $1.00 per day up. CHAS. R. SMITH, Manager. Phone Franklin 4200.

LAGUNA BEACH

35 miles south of Los Angeles; 8 miles west of Irvine, which is on the El Camino Real

A delightful, cosy, secluded place on the Pacific Ocean. Fine bathing, good hotel and cottages. No grade; oiled roads. Address Manager Laguna Beach Hotel, Laguna Beach, Cal.

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS

U N I O N S Q U A R E

Its location and appointments suggest it, and its services establish it, as the ideal place for formal or informal entertainment.

Under the management of JAMES WOODS

HOTEL ARGONAUT

Society of California Pioneers Building

FOURTH STREET NEAR MARKET — San Francisco — CENTRE OF THE CITY

Catering to Family and Commercial Trade

400 Rooms $1.00 per day and up Dining room seats 500 guests

Special 50c Luncheon from 11:30 to 2 p. m.

Weekly and monthly rates on application. Free bus meets all trains and steamers.

Telephone Douglas 3393 EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager

Emile Fonteille, Formerly with the Pup — Victor Laborie, John Dubourdieu, Formerly with Poodle Dog

MAISON DORÉE

HOTEL AND RESTAURANT

151-157 ELLIS ST., ABOVE POWELL

Phone Douglas 1040. Connecting all Apartments.

Best Merchants Lunch in the City

Lunch with Wine, 75 cents. Dinner with Wine, $1.25

Giant Birds at Cawston Ostrich Farm, South Pasadena, on Pacific Electric Railway.

THE ANGELUS

LOS ANGELES

One of California's Best Hotels

Centrally located; street cars direct to hotel.

Rates $1.50 per Day Up

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

Leading Hotels and Resorts

NEVER HOT NEVER COLD ALWAYS DELIGHTFUL

HOTEL VIRGINIA
LONG BEACH, CAL.

American Plan Open the Year Round Moderate Rates

Long Beach is noted the World Over for having the Longest Beach in the World. Surf bathing is now the popular sport of the day. The service at The Virginia is superior nowheres. Cuisine unexcelled. Concert Every Evening in Grand Ballroom by the Famous Virginia Orchestra. Write for beautiful booklet. CARL STANLEY, Mgr.

LONG BEACH SANITARIUM
LONG BEACH, CALIF.

Battle Creek Sanitarium Methods

A splendidly equipped QUIET, REFINED and MODERN medical and surgical Institution BY-THE-SEA, where the sick, run down or work-tired may go and know that they will receive the very best of care and attention at reasonable rates. Gentlemen and Lady Physicians. Graduate nurses only. Climate exceptionally fine. Cool in summer, warm and dry in winter. Descriptive Booklet mailed FREE. W. RAY SIMPSON, Manager.

Long Distance Phones in Every Room

YE ALPINE TAVERN

Beautiful Mountain Resort on Mt. Love

Just a mile above the sea. American plan $3.00 per day, $15 per week. Choice of rooms in hotel or cottages. Spend a vacation 5,000 feet above the sea, among great pines and oaks. For information, D. A. Munger, General Agent, Pacific Electric R. R., Los Angeles, or office.

HOTEL ALEXANDRIA
LOS ANGELES

IN SAFETY, SERVICE
AND SANITATION

HAS TAKEN ITS PLACE
AMONG THE BEST HOTELS

A. C. BILICKE, President
S. J. WHITMORE, Vice-Pres. and Gen. Mgr. JOS. REICHL, Asst. Mgr.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO
CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. Power boats from the Hotel meet passengers from the North on the arrival of the Pacific Coast S. S. Co. steamers. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, 334 S. Spring St., Los Angeles.

HOTEL WASHINGTON

J. M. LUX, MANAGER

SEATTLE, WASH.

A magnificent modern structure involving over One Million and a Half Dollars. Conducted on Most liberal ideas of Experience. Its appointments and service cannot be excelled in the United States. The management cordially invites your patronage.

HOTEL WASHINGTON ANNEX

SEATTLE, WASH.

Best Rooms Best Service
Strictly First-Class

J. H. DAVIS - - - - - Proprietor

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, July 17, 1909. No. 881.

IN MUIR WOODS, THE TRACT GIVEN BY WILLIAM KENT TO THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA

In this forest, which skirts the base of Mt. Tamalpais, and is in part along the line of the Mt. Tamalpais Railway, are redwoods 300 feet in height and 18 feet in diameter.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION—One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.
Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.
The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.
For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.
Los Angeles office, 427 South Main Street.
Seattle office, 804 Third Avenue.
We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

An Automobile Scandal

The Kings County (N. Y.) Grand Jury made a presentment last week on what is described as "a public scandal" in which this passage occurred:

It is common rumor that city automobiles may be seen Sundays and holidays and at all hours of the night filled with both males and females, and palpably not engaged in public work.

Would it be impertinent to inquire whether there are geographical considerations by which public scandals are differentiated in this country? We should like to make the inquiry because though we have been inclined to censure certain gay and festive public servants of this community who have a passion for joy-riding at the expense of the taxpayers, no grand jury has ever deemed it worth while to take cognizance of the matter. Indeed our grand juries are most indulgent bodies. With their amiable acquiescence automobiles have been purchased for officials who never ride in them on public business, and who use them exclusively for joy-riding. San Francisco is the only city in the United States with an executive devil-wagon. Mayor Taylor is the only American executive with a chauffeur paid out of the public purse. San Francisco is one of the most generous of cities, so generous that it is a wonder Mayor Taylor has never asked for a valet or a trained nurse. Surely he knows there is nothing he needs that he can't have. The people of this city love to indulge the whims of their servants. As for example, witness the gratification of District Attorney Langdon's passion for an automobile. Mr. Langdon doesn't even have to ride to court as the practice of law is one of the least of his accomplishments, but he rides to church in the municipal auto and everywhere else that his fatal fancy dictates. Perhaps it would be lese-majesty for a grand jury to inquire into these matters.

The Rhymster Horde

"It is not rhyming and versing that maketh a poet" said Sir Philip Sidney more than three hundred years ago, but to this day there are many well-meaning persons who believe to the contrary, and as a consequence volumes of poetry continue to increase to the advantage of paper manufacturers and printers but of no one else. We feel somewhat alarmed at the increasing influx of volumes christened Poems and as guiltless of kinship with the Muse as the hostler's wife with royalty, and we wonder how it happened that so many persons who have sufficient education to enable them to write prose fairly well were never enlightened with respect to the difficulties and exactions of poetry. Paddling in rhyme and dabbling in sentiment are innumerable men and women who confound the wish to be a poet with the gift of poetry, and whose most deadly virtue is the courage of their dullness, which they vindicate much to the amusement of their enemies by venturing boldly between book-covers. There is something pathetic in their unconsciousness. Why were they never warned at school against exposing themselves to the scorn of the cognoscenti? Apparently it was never explained to them that poetry is something more than rhyme. Every day tawdry rhymes and trashy blank verse are offered to us for admiration and applause, and excite our pity because we realize that behind much flimsy there lurks many a palpitating heart, many a feverish hope. Occasionally we see a germ of good in the attempt to please, a love of nature, a glow of feeling, but nothing that bids fair to open a new niche in the House of the Immortals with the Seers and Singers of the children of men. On all these poeticules we wish to serve notice that we have no bellows to inflate aspiring conceit, no disposition to delude and encourage plodding mediocrity. We heartily wish they would let us alone.

The Auditorium Project

San Francisco is to be congratulated on the capture of the National Educational Association's Convention for 1910. And the delegates who went from here to the Denver Convention and pressed the claims of this city for the honor of being chosen as the next meeting place are deserving of hearty thanks. This convention is a large and important one, attended by tens of thousands of people from all over the United States, and, to look upon the matter from a purely commercial view, its presence here means a financial gain. But before entertaining these educators next year we should provide an auditorium for them. A movement is on foot now toward the erection of a building for the accommodation of conventions, and it should receive hearty public support. It is proposed, through the selling of stock in the venture to the public, to raise some $500,000, and with that sum erect an auditorium that will seat 14,000 people and that will be adapted, also, to great musical festivals and expositions of different sorts. With such a building there is no reason why San Francisco should not become a favorite convention city. We have a summer climate that is most attractive to Easterners; the city and State present scenic and historical features that have great drawing power. The main thing we lack—that we have lacked for many years—is proper accommodation for large bodies of visitors. Already this is known as one of the best hotel cities in the United States. With an adequate auditorium as an added inducement we should be in a position to bid for the largest gatherings. It need not be pointed out that the coming hither of hundreds of thousands of people every year would be of great commercial benefit. It is therefore to the interest of people in all lines of business to help the auditorium project.

An Academic Indictment

The college professors and magazine writers who of late have been giving it as their opinion—or, rather, as an established fact—that women are immoral, immodest, treacherous and untruthful, and that they have not advanced in purity since the time of Eve, believe no doubt that they are unfortunate in that they were born of women. Of course they make a mental reservation in favor of their own mothers, wives and sisters; but there is no logic in that—there is no reason to suppose that the women they were born of, or are related to, are any better than the average of their sex. So these mysoginists make rather unwholesome spectacles of themselves. It is rather curious to observe that they deal in generalities rather than in concrete instances—that having attacked woman mainly from the standpoint of purity, they fail to back up their assertions with proofs of the preponderance of her shortcomings. They fail to contrast the large number of palaces and hovels of vice maintained for men's pleasures with the small number of similar resorts for women. They do not draw pictures of men in groups regaling one another with obscene stories and cite instances of women at the same diversion. The average woman as a matter of fact has a natural antipathy to all that is vicious and impure and does not readily overcome that feeling. It has been said that when man goes to hell he is willing to take the slow freight, while a woman is satisfied with nothing less than an express train. In other words, vice is natural to man; to woman it is a condition which drives her into excesses through the horror it arouses in her. The half-baked professors who are attacking the opposite sex have probably drawn their conclusions from theorems written by men as ignorant of the real conditions of life as they themselves are. They should get out and mix with the world. It may be that they have had unhappy individual experiences with women; but if so they have no more right to form sweeping opinions from such episodes than women have to observe them and then judge the generality of men accordingly.

The Iconoclasts

A writer in the July Current Literature tells us that "a new school of religious and ethical iconoclasm is growing up in our day," one that is "of world wide scope, including some of the most fascinating writers of modern times." The leaders of this school are Professor William James, Maurice Maeterlinck, George Bernard Shaw and H. G. Wells. We are told that these distinguished literary men agree that the Christian virtues are in a large measure outgrown; that they feel there is something beyond Christianity. Like Nietzsche they are preaching the doctrine of self-expression and are teaching that love and self-sacrifice are not virtues; that chastity is not always to be commended; that hate, dissatisfaction and discontent are the sacred fires that must be kept burning. As the world is full of people, mostly culturines, that relish this sort of mental pabulum the compounders of it are doing a thriving business. Their books are devoured, their smart sayings are repeated ecstatically by enraptured maidens and memorized by clubwomen, and their publishers are keeping them under forced draught. It is somewhat singular that these men, who are doing nothing more than resuscitating forgotten modes of thought and rehashing the speculations and observations of the philosophers of a bygone generation, should be taken seriously not only by the sweet girl graduate, but also by many of our college professors of whom it is presumed that they are more or less familiar with the literature of pessimism and agnosticism. We have not read all that has been said by the pseudo-philosophers of the modern iconoclastic school, but we have read enough to feel justified in concluding that in the domain of morals and religion nothing new is being said under the sun. Even what is called "Modernism" is not new. It was bait to young minds that went shadow-hunting in the seventies of the last century. As to the iconoclasts they are doing nothing more than drawing together the floating remains of the old metaphysical systems of Germany and, combining these with the system of Schopenhauer and the generalizations of modern science, they are giving us in melodious epigrams and pungent paradoxes nothing more than a philosophy of egoism. Unlike the dry-as-dust German metaphysicians they write with a certain dash and flippancy, producing work that is attractive to the culturines who desire to add an easy acquaintance with philosophy to their minor attainments. Our up-to-date purveyors of philosophic persiflage, though they lack originality, clothe agnosticism in a semi-scientific and semi-poetic drapery, but aside from giving coherency to sceptical restlessness they are adding nothing to the sum of human wisdom. They profess to have solved some of the problems, which, it has been said, man is bound to tackle in order that his failure may teach him to keep within the bounds of his proper knowledge, but they are following in ways that have been beaten hard by the steps of former travelers. What is now called iconoclasm was formerly called scepticism. Long before Maeterlinck or Shaw came into the world Count Giacomo Leopardi was teaching his disciples that the glories of science and art, of patriotism and love, of heroic action and passion, were illusive; that they have no substantive worth; that they leave no permanent good. What with Pascal was the glory of man, with Leopardi was shame. About the time that Leopardi came into the world Arthur Schopenhauer began to preach the philosophy of pessimism which is not vastly different from Neitzsche's philosophy or the philosophy of Shaw. What the pundits of our period call Self-expression, Schopenhauer called Will, which, he said, was the innermost essence, the kernel of every individual thing. If the philosophy of the pets of our culturine cult has any novelty, it is the novelty of nomenclature. Dissatisfaction and discontent, say they, are the sacred fires that must be kept burning. Hearken to Schopenhauer: "No satisfaction is enduring; it is only the starting-period of a new striving." But even Schopenhauer was not original. His "starting point for a new striving" was identical with the "thirst" which the Buddhist teaches is the doom of Karma lying on all sentient beings. The essence of the philosophy of our iconoclasts is that we are dominated by illusions. Our ideals, they tell us, are all wrong; what we conceive to be virtue is in reality something else. Schopenhauer's disciple Hartmann was precisely of the same opinion and much that was said by Hartmann and Schopenhauer and Leopardi was said centuries before their birth, and doubtless will be said centuries hence by philosophers as eager as Shaw and Maeterlinck to follow into inaccessible regions subjects that lie on the farther side of the line that divides our knowledge from our ignorance.

The Hub.
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

THE FINEST COLLECTION OF HIGH GRADE MEN'S CLOTHES, BEYOND QUESTION OF DOUBT, IS CONGREGATED IN THIS SHOP. OUR CLOTHES ARE DIFFERENT; WE FIT YOU DIFFERENTLY; MAKE YOU LOOK DIFFERENT; WE SELL THEM SO DIFFERENT; YOU FEEL CORRECTLY DRESSED BY US, BEING JUST CLOTHIERS.

We've Done Some "Price-Chiseling"

The Hub
Chas Keilus & Co.
San Francisco.

With Our Present Summer Stock—Interested?

You can't wean any trade away from this exclusive men's shop. Our business was not erected on quicksands. They know our class of goods and methods; they have explicit confidence in our prices; they know they get the right kind of clothes. We represent the classiest bunch of clothes talent, including "Brokaw Bros." and other "best makers." We go down the line and try our utmost to present to our patrons "the best clothes made."

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

Waiting

Waiting, waiting. 'Tis so far
To the day that is to come:
One by one the days that are
All to tell their countless sum;
Each to dawn and each to die—
What so far as by-and-by?

Waiting, waiting. 'Tis not ours
This today that flies so fast:
Let them go the shadowy hours
Floating, floated into Past.
Our day wears tomorrow's sky—
What so near as by-and-by?

—Augusta Webster.

Perspective Impressions

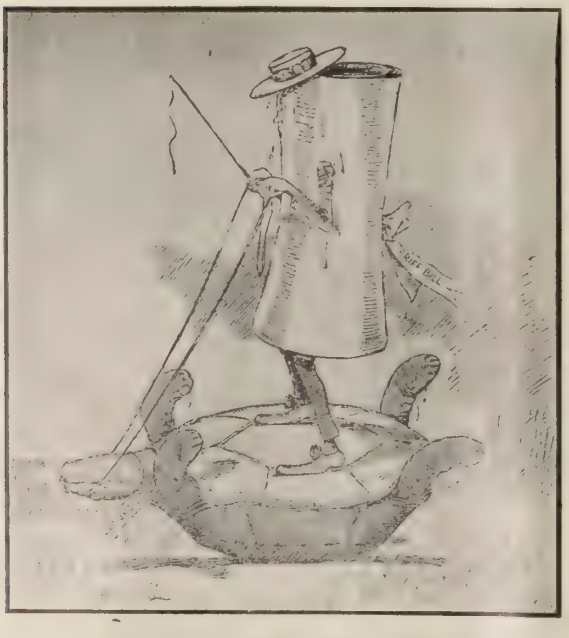
If President Taft carries out his intention of visiting the Yosemite he will find scenery to match his size.

The Good Government League appears to have lost its voice. Has Isidore Jacobs a cold?

Another Moro chief has been assimilated in the Philippines; but he is now too dead to realize the benefit of the operation.

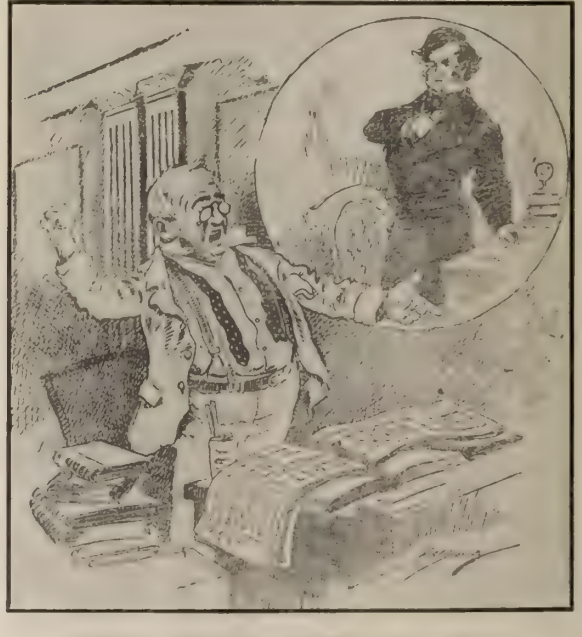
The stork is to visit the Countess de Sagan at the end of the month. Castellane exhibits no other emotion than cynical surprise.

A London correspondent writes of gowns which come very high. The impression has been that extreme decolletage was the rule there.



The Italian strikers who have been fined for inciting riot at McCloud are probably grieved to find that liberty in America has well defined limitations.

Francis J. Heney has gone to Alaska after big game. We are not informed as to the kind of ammunition that he has taken along, but it is to be presumed that he has a belt full of immunity contracts.



When last heard from that gallant champion of the pee-pul, the Hon. Theodore Bell, was engaged in the business of informing on tax-dodgers in Napa County. Another exemplification of the easiness of the transition from reformer to informer.

"Bear" and "Beaver" are the names of the new Harriman steamers that are to ply between San Francisco and Portland. Considering who owns them, a sense of humor should have suggested "Bear" and "Bull."

It took six years' delay after he committed homicide to get Alexander Garnett started on his fifteen year term at San Quentin, and meanwhile the prisoner made $500 selling cigars to his fellow inmates at the county jail. His only grievance was that he was not allowed to operate a slot machine.

CONGRESS HAS PASSED THE TARIFF BILL
—Idaho Daily Statesman.

SENATE FASHIONS—ANCIENT AND MODERN —Washington Star.

The Craze for Foreign Art

Methods Employed by Astue Dealers in Selling European Copies and Pot-Boilers to Local Culturines to the Exclusion of Meritorious Works by San Francisco Painters.

By Robert McTavish

San Francisco, which should, because of its environment, its cosmopolitanism, its freedom from convention, be one of the art centers of the United States, is losing ground in this respect, and is farther behind artistically than it was ten years ago. And this does not arise through the fault of our painters, who have steadily developed, but because of the lack of encouragement given them. The true art lover, the one who knows whether or not a picture is good, will buy with little or no regard for the name in the corner; but the parvenu and the culturine must have the European label, which hides a multitude of defects in coloring, composition and drawing. As a consequence, the commonplace is elevated above originality; poor copies of good European pictures bring more money than do good works by our local painters.

There are those among our dealers in so-called art who have not been slow to take advantage of this condition; in fact, they may be said to have created it through their eternal boosting of second-rate pictures with the names of foreign artists on them—for the foreign name always appeals. There is an authenticated instance of a local painter who did a nude which he gave to a saloonkeeper in lieu of his bar bill. An Australian art dealer gave him $100 for a duplicate on the condition that he should sign an Italian-sounding name to it. The artist would have signed anything for $100, so the bargain was made. The Australian took the picture home with him, advertised it as a painting by a great Italian artist, and made much money by charging people a shilling a head to see it.

San Francisco may not have art dealers of this class, but there are clever merchants here who do much toward cultivating a taste for the tawdry in art and who are most persuasive when discoursing as to the merits of pictures, and as a consequence they wax rich and prosperous while our artists are driven to Los Angeles and other towns in search of appreciation. With studios in summer resorts, artists attract the attention of tourists who know good pictures. Travelers buy paintings of California scenes that would be rejected with scorn by our local new rich in favor of a copy done by some Parisian art student for a few francs.

I have been told of an art dealer who goes to Paris every year and on his return brings back a carload of paintings and near-art objects which, having bought them for a song, he sells through the medium of an art-culture patter that is amusing in the extreme.

Imagine a culturine in his store, fully convinced that she must have pictures and furnishings, but totally undecided, through her ignorance of such objects, as to just what she wants. Bless you, the dealer will supply whatever she lacks in art knowledge. He is full of it. All the way home from Paris he studied the list of what he bought, and by the time the culturine arrives he is primed and ready.

"Madame," he will gravely assure her, pointing to a brilliant and shiny painting of a kitchen interior, "that was looked upon in Paris as one of the very greatest paintings of the year. In the salong? No, it was not. You see, there is so much jealousy in Paris now that very few good works get into the salong. The best artists do not try to exhibit there, for fear they will be classed among the third-raters who exhibit only through their influence. But to return to this kitchen scene, by D'Aublauts. Look at the faithfulness of it; observe the curve in the handle of that skillet, how the bristles on the scrubbing brush stand out; the lop-sided appearance of the broom, which, you will observe is an old one. It is a wonderful example of jawnray painting."

And what culturine could resist "jawnray"? She would buy rather than expose her ignorance.

The dealer is equally eloquent over a third-rate copy of a Corot, a Millet, a Titian or a Rembrandt, gabbling at great length of atmosphere, distance, composition and perspective, all of which terms being as Greek to the culturine of the type to which he caters, are accepted by her as evidences of marvelous knowledge.

He shows equal facility in selling objets d'art, with which his store is cluttered. A replica of a stone bench from the Vatican, on which Pope Gregory sat, is provocative of torrents of words. Its beautiful lines are pointed out most feelingly—lines that cramp the back and weary the bones. But what a magnificent hall seat it would make—and just like the one Pope Gregory sat in! "You see, our country is so young," he tells her, "that we can't produce anything like that here. If I may say it, we are lacking in the culture that comes from long association with art. And those who are displaying culture in their selection of things for their home should be encouraged. You could not have a more inspiring thing in your home than that beautiful bench. Why, just see—"

And again he launches into eloquence over the beautiful back-breaking formation of the bench.

All these things are cheap—dirt-cheap—in Europe. So are replicas of the Venus de Milo, the Hermes of Praxiteles, works by Robbia, Michelangelo, Caniez, Donatello and others. Yet they are sold here at exorbitant prices.

It is well to buy as good paintings as one can afford. But it is not well to pass by the good works of local artists for mediocre, pot-boiling stuff from abroad. Little of it shown here has any originality either in treatment or theme. There is a dreary succession of sheep standing outside a shed, of peasant women in kitchens, of horses at work—all treated in a commonplace manner, brilliantly colored, shiny with paint, offensive to the eye of one who knows pictures.

And while these paintings go into our homes, local artists are turning out good work, for which they can find little sale. It is not through lack of merit. San Francisco and its surroundings are inspiring to artists. We are responsible for Jules Pages, now one of the foremost teachers in Paris. Ernest Peixotto, whose illustrations are eagerly sought in the East, is a San Franciscan; one of Harry Best's paintings was given an honored place in the White House, and his exhibition at the Cosmos Club in Washington attracted great attention; Keith's works are valued more highly in the East than they are in San Francisco. Thad Welch's wonderful paintings of hills and grazing cattle find readier market among travelers through San Francisco than they do among the people who live here. Martinez, Cadenasso, Piazzoni, Gamble, Arthur Best, Charles Rolo Peters, Evelyn McCormack, Greenbaum, Arthur Mathews, Mrs. Eda Smitten, and a host of others fail of proper recognition at home while European kitchen scenes are bought under the mystic spell of the dealer who has more eloquence than knowledge, more appreciation of the weaknesses of the culturine than of the true value of a painting.

It is about time San Franciscans gave up the idea that good objects of art can be got only from abroad. They would do well to visit a local studio once in a while; but they should take a stimulant along for fear the artist might faint through surprise at being patronized by his neighbors.

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 56 Kearny street.

The Other Lover

By Grazia Deledda (From the Italian)

Jorgj Preda had been waiting more than a quarter of an hour for his little sweetheart, Nania, the road- keeper's daughter. Nania and Jorgj had known each other twenty days. Every day Nania came to the brook beside which Jorgj was waiting while pretending to watch the sheep that lay in the cork-tree grove.

As soon as Nania appeared on the lonely white road, Jorgj would descend from his post of observation, and go into the shade, under the bank, where Nania, on her head a tall water-jug resembling an Etruscan vessel, would join him, full of love and alarm.

Assuredly, if her father were to discover this love-making with Jorgj he would break her ribs; but old Gavinu, at that hour, was always taking a nap.

The two young people would talk for five or six minutes, devouring each other with their eyes, but without touching even their finger tips; then Nania would thoughtfully pursue her way, and Jorgj would go into the woods, sighing anxiously.

He was, undoubtedly, proud and happy to have a sweetheart of his very own there, far from the village, in complete solitude, but his happiness was by no means complete.

First of all, there was that terror of old Gavinu, who had no idea of marrying Nania to a boy like Jorgj, and then—oh, many things! And yet, despite all these and other difficulties, Jorgj would have been content if he might have had just one kiss from Nania, but that was the worst of it; that was what made him sigh so deeply. The girl had no intention of kissing him, and he dared not so much as touch the hem of her gown. Today, however, Jorgj had determined to embrace her and say: "If sweethearts may not kiss each other who may?"

But it was this very day that Nania did not come.

Jorgj Preda was from Bitti, and about nineteen years old. He, and an old shepherd, kept the sheep of a wealthy farmer, and the fields where these sheep grazed were near the house of the keeper of the Bitti highroad.

Jorgj might have been called a handsome youth—he fancied himself a mature man—tall and muscular, though slender, with jet black hair and a perfect profile; one of those profiles reminiscent of the best Greek school of sculpture, and to be found today only in the vicinity of Bitti and Orume. His skin, however, was hardened by exposure to sun and cold, while the soft lines of his beautiful mouth and his thin lips over the gleaming white teeth, did not lessen the severity of his black eyes.

Still Nania did not come. A thousand ugly thoughts agitated the young shepherd's restless mind, and he became more and more doleful as the shadows lengthened on the fresh turf of the bank.

Nania did not come, Nania would not come. Jorgj's eyes, which had at first sparkled at the thought of the kiss she should give, whether she wished or no, grew angry and almost tearful. Something must have happened. Perhaps Nania was ill; perhaps old Gavinu had suspected something, and would not let her come again for water. Jorgj was preparing to leave his post and go to the house on some pretext, when he heard the galoping of two horses, and saw two fine looking gentlemen on horseback, enveloped in a cloud of dust.

Accustomed to seeing people pass on the road, he paid no great attention, but descended from the bank and went away. Half way to his destination he suddenly halted. The sight of the tall water-jug that he knew so well made his heart beat violently, but only for a moment. It was not Nania on whose head it stood; it was not Nania who was coming down the desolate white road, with a yellow handkerchief over her shoulders and gleaming in the sun. It was her little sister Arrosa.

"Why are you coming for water today?" Jorgj called to her, almost angrily.

Instead of answering, Arrosa, a most annoying child, as soon as she recognized him, began to sing loudly.

Jorgj paid no attention to this, and repeated his question less roughly, as he advanced toward the child.

Arrosa, fearing that he might slap her, then smiled and replied:

"Because Nania is busy."

"And what is she doing?"

"She is working, because the superintendent and the engineer are coming. Did you not see them pass?"

"Oh, were they those two gentlemen? Do they come often?"

"That depends! Sometimes often, and sometimes not. What business is it of yours?"

Jorgj thought that he would accompany the child to the brook to find out about those gentlemen, who began to trouble him and arouse his jealousy, since it was because of them that he would not see Nania that afternoon. As they approached the bank he pointed out the sheep to Arrosa, and said:

"Would you like a little white lamb, a lamb as white as the teeth of a dog?"

Arrosa thought he was teasing, and to revenge herself was about to make a saucy rejoinder. Jorgj, however, repeated his offer so seriously that he finally succeeded in learning many particulars.

The manager was a Nuorese, and the engineer, the one with the blond beard, a foreigner. The latter Arrosa had known for a long time. Every time he came he brought money to Nania, who gave part of it to her father, and hid part of it in a bag, under the mattress; he never gave any to her, Arrosa, and she did not like him.

"What is his name?" asked Jorgj, with a wry face.

"Signor Guglielmo."

"Do they sleep at the house?"

"Yes."

Jorgj suddenly turned his back to the child, and went away with a sullen expression.

"Jorgj," cried Arrosa after him, "remember the lamb, the little white lamb—"

He did not answer, and soon disappeared among the trees. A terrible jealousy tormented him. He went back to the sheep, but in such an ill humor that he quarreled with the other shepherd, and they almost came to blows.

As it grew dark, he approached the road keeper's house, but had not the courage to enter. For a long time he wandered around it like a soul in torment, but only at nightfall could he pluck up courage to draw nearer.

A slender thread of smoke still rose from the chimney on that cool April night; the door was closed, the windows were closed, and a great silence prevailed everywhere. From the guest room on the ground floor, the light of the lamp cast a luminous square on the road.

Jorgj Preda drew nearer, and saw through the window the blond-bearded man, the one Arrosa had said was the engineer, standing in his shirt sleeves.

He was apparently preparing for bed. He was tall and spare, with small eyes of a color that could not be distinguished. Curious little lines radiating from them gave his whole face a pleasant expression. He was a fine looking man, indeed, and might be elderly, but it was hard to judge his age.

(Continued on Page 32.)

We have moved into our new store at
222 Stockton St., facing Union Square

ROBERTSON'S
BOOKSELLER
ENGRAVER AND STATIONER

The Spectator

Frenzied Finance in Napa

The supposition is widespread in this country that for ways that are subtle and tricks that are ingenious in the art of propagating the coin of realm, the Wall street financier is peculiar and in a class by himself. Hard to eradicate is the impression that all financial genius gravitates to Gotham and that nowhere outside the temples of Mammon that dot the skyline of the metropolis is there to be found a very high degree of proficiency in the game of high and frenzied finance. The fact is, however, that in this country where the national conception of successful work is something that makes direct cash returns, financial genius is indigenous to the soil and is to be found in its efflorescence in the most unsophisticated rural villages as well as in the great and opulent industrial centers. The other day I learned of some exploits in high finance in the peaceful and prosperous Napa Valley, which might excite the envy of a Morgan or a Harriman. The news of these exploits came by the way of the Supreme Court which reversed the judgment in the case of Simpson Finnell against the James H. Goodman & Co. Bank.

Easy Banking Methods

The history of this case is one of absorbing interest. In 1889 George E. Goodman became the president of the James H. Goodman & Co. Bank, and he held that position for fourteen years. During that period John Finnell had dealings with the bank through Goodman and with Goodman in his private capacity. When the bank was organized Finnell owed Goodman a considerable sum of money on promissory notes, and he also, with Goodman's permission got into the bank's debt in the sum of $78,000. Whenever interest on the private debt accumulated to a considerable sum Goodman collected the money by a very simple process. He permitted Finnell to draw an over-draft on the bank. The over-draft payable to Goodman, the latter would cash at the bank which was under his management. In time these overdrafts upon which Goodman withdrew funds from the bank aggregated $300,000, and meanwhile Finnell's debt to the bank increased steadily until it reached the handsome sum of $447,000. All the while the capital of the bank was only $300,000, so that Finnell was permitted by Goodman to owe the bank a sum equal to one and one-half times its subscribed capital stock. How about that for high finance?

The Settlement

At length Banker Goodman called a halt. He demanded a settlement, and with marvelous ease was this achieved by the ready-witted Finnell. He organized a company known as the Finnell Land Company, transferred to it about 16,000 acres of land standing in his name, and with the stock of this corporation and some personal property he wiped out his debts both to Goodman and the bank. Goodman received four-thirteenths of the stock in Finnell's land company and the bank received nine-thirteenths. This transaction was negotiated by the astute Goodman. Of course the stock wasn't equal to the total amount of the debts, but the discrepancy was easily made unapparent, the bank writing off to Profit and Loss over $150,000, that is over one-half its capital stock. Thus was the series of transactions closed for the time being.

The Basis of the Suit

Perhaps nothing more ever would have been heard of these matters had not Goodman lost control of the bank through the sale of his stock in 1903. Promptly thereafter the new officers of the bank and the Bank Commissioners demanded from Goodman the repayment of $267,000 and interest which, according to their view of the matter, he had unlawfully diverted from the institution by means of the over-drafts which he had permitted Finnell to draw in his favor. After some controversy Goodman turned over to the bank $307,000. This would have ended the matter had not the Finnell family again appeared on the scene. Simpson Finnell, one of the sons of John Finnell, bought from Goodman the four-thirteenths of the stock of the Finnell Land Company which came into the banker's possession at the time of the settlement with John Finnell. Simpson Finnell bought the stock for $20,000. At the same time he obtained from Goodman an assignment of any claim the latter might have to the stock which the bank had received at the time of the settlement. On the strength of this assignment the suit, which has just been decided, was brought against the bank. The basis of this suit was the claim that as Goodman had repaid to the bank a part of the debt on account of which the bank had received the stock in the land company, he was entitled to recover a proportionate part of the stock. Ordinarily one might regard this claim as preposterous, but it appears to have been conceived in the spirit which was responsible for all the preceding transactions. This spirit evidently appealed to Judge Gesford of Napa, for he gave judgment in favor of Finnell, holding that 2717 shares of the land stock should be paid back to Goodman or his assignee. The absurdity of this decision is not apparent at first blush. To appreciate it one must be informed that Finnell obtained the assignment from Goodman by agreeing to pay him $10 a share for the stock which the bank held, and that he had paid $20,000 for the stock in Goodman's possession. So Finnell, if Gesford's decision had been sustained, would, for about $47,000, have obtained the stock that was accepted by Goodman at the time of the settlement with himself and the bank in cancellation of debts aggregating $800,000.

The Decision

The Supreme Court held, however, that the plaintiff, Simpson Finnell, was entitled to no stock at all. The court said that he stood in the shoes of his assignor, Goodman, and that the mere fact that the bank had compelled repayment from Goodman, "its unfaithful president," did not entitle the latter to recover any stock whatever for the bank had received the stock in settlement of the entire debt of Finnell, at the time recognizing that it had incurred a large loss, and that the stock was of a

J. C. WILSON
BROKER
Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

TAXICABS
(Genuine RENAULT Cars)
PACIFIC TAXIMETER CAB COMPANY
Solicits your patronage of its equipment of imported Renault Taxicabs and will show its appreciation by prompt and reliable service. * * * * *
TELEPHONE
FRANKLIN 4848
Private Exchange connecting all Departments
MAIN STATION AND GENERAL OFFICES, 1355-1363 BUSH STREET
FAY C. BEAL, General Manager.

value insufficient to satisfy Finnell's debt. Apart from the wrongful withdrawals by Goodman, Finnell owed the bank approximately $180,000, and the bank was entitled to retain all of the property it had received from Finnell in order to reimburse it for the entire debt paid by the delivery of that property. At the very least and even if Goodman were supposed to have any rights at all, he would be required to pay the balance of a debt which Finnell owed the bank in 1900 before he could recover any of the property which the bank had received in settlement of that debt. The opinion was written by Justice Shaw and was concurred in by all of the other Justices participating in the decision—Angellotti, Sloss, Henshaw and Melvin. Attorney Charles Wheeler conducted the case for the plaintiff, and it was Garrett McEnerney that won the suit for the bank.

Cynic (savagely)—They say the fashionable mother of today recognizes her baby only by looking at the nurse!

Fashionable Mother (unmoved)—How extraordinarily clever when one changes nurses so often! I always tell ours by the baby carriage.

The Political Situation

With that greatest of all political boons, the Direct Primary, in full force and effect we appear, singularly enough, to be as far removed from the millennium as ever. The signs of the times hold no promise of an early fulfillment of the prognostications made in the spring of the year by perfervid prophets of our parochial press. The perplexities incident to a municipal campaign seem to be quite as irritating as ever. Nay, the situation brought about by the Direct Primary is one of bewildering confusion. Instead of the justly execrated boss vanishing from our midst as though by divine decree, he has increased and multiplied, and the voice of the dear people is growing fainter every minute. As the chaos deepens candidates for mayor, enthusiastic job chasers, bob up on all sides, while men of merit, qualified to take hold of things and run the government as it should be run, are fleeing to the woods. But let us not despair, for perhaps there is some good in a direct primary; perhaps it will eliminate automatically most of the impossible job-chasers in town.

Practical Reformers

Those aggressive prophets of public righteousness who nominated Byron Mauzy for mayor have grown somewhat apathetic since the birth of the new political organization of which Charles M. Plum is chairman. When they started on their great mission of civic salvation they were as noisy as a Fourth of July celebration, and they were holding meetings every few hours to devise new ways and means of eradicating that accursed product of democracy, the wicked boss, and making the world better and less comfortable. After nominating McMurray's man for public administrator and one of their own number for mayor they paused to catch their breath, and they show no signs of taking a fresh start on the moral track. But the leaders of this faction are to be reckoned with. Though they are reformers they are not unskilled in practical politics. Organized ostensibly for the purpose of banishing bossism they soon gave promise of perfecting an air-tight political machine, and each of the leaders started out for political pap with both hands and a long reach. One of them a church deacon and an officer of the Y. M. C. A. is reported to have demanded from a candidate for treasurer assurance that he (the deacon) would be permitted to name the attorney who handles the inheritance tax.

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA
Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets
A General Banking Business Transacted
CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

Why Sullivan's Case is Hopeless

Though he has received very little encouragement from the labor unions the Hon. Frank J. Sullivan is still intent on winning the Labor Party nomination for mayor. Discussing the millionaire's candidacy the other day a prominent laborite said that while Sullivan had many friends and supporters in the unions there was overwhelming opposition to him, grounded in prejudice against his brother-in-law James D. Phelan. "They know he is no longer friendly with Phelan," said the laborite, "but they have not forgotten his untiring and successful efforts in Phelan's behalf in the years agone. Sullivan is a good fellow and a man of ability, but a man can't get rid of the taint of Phelanism over night."

HENRY H. ROGERS JR.

He is now the manager of the vast estate left by his father, the Standard Oil Magnate.

"Yes, sir, some dogs are remarkably intelligent. Now I have one that begins to howl every time my wife opens the piano."

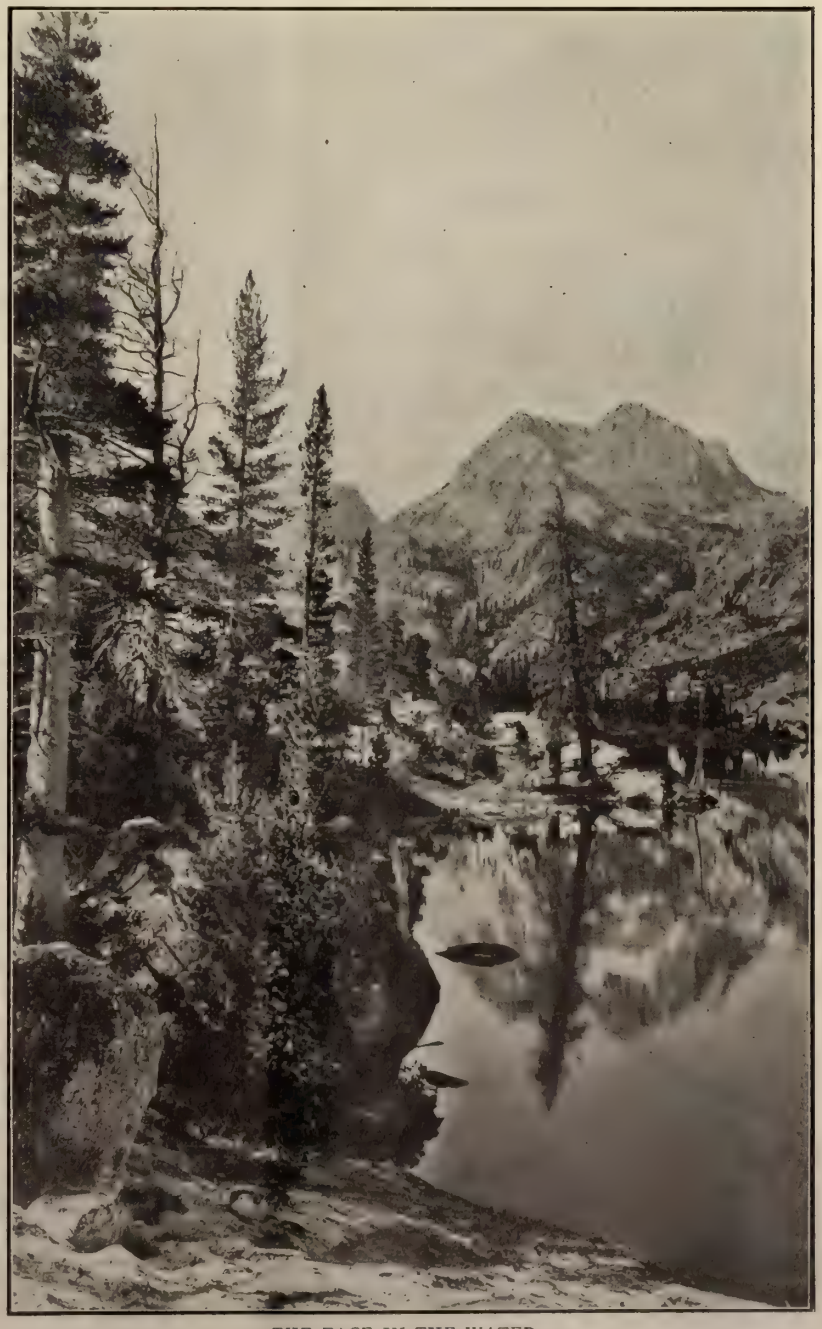
Barnes as Taft

Since President Taft has announced his intention of visiting San Francisco during the Portola Festival, the members of the Press Club have been discussing a plan for giving him a reception. The President is a great friend of the newspaper men, concrete evidence of this

HIGH GRADE
INVESTMENT SECURITIES
List on Request
SUTRO & COMPANY
412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO
Established 1858.

being his appointment of Walter Clark, a Washington correspondent, to the governorship of Alaska. In other ways he has shown his fondness for journalists, and for this reason the Press Club feels rather confident that he will grace its rooms with his presence. But if he is too busy or not inclined to appear, it will make no difference—the reception will be held anyway. This, of course, is a dead secret, and to make it public would spoil the plan, which is nothing less than a substitute for the President. Who? Why, who indeed but Captain Billy Barnes? This rotund attorney will be put into the hands of a clever make-up man, who will transform him into a duplicate of the President. Nothing will be necessary but a mustache and arrangement of the hair; the benevolent smile is already there.

The Word-Coiner



To be a newspaper reporter, one must have imagination; and having that, what is more natural than that this quality of mind should find its outlet in the invention of new words? While the language is not enriched thereby the world in general is given the opportunity to laugh over the resultant linguistic absurdities. The latest pearl that comes from the swift-moving reportorial typewriter is the word "affinitization," used by a Chronicle writer in describing the putative relations between the late Henry A. Butters and his secretary. I know only one that can beat it, and that was launched upon an unsuspecting public by a police court attorney. He was arguing in a wife-beating case, and in eloquent terms he referred to "the fair defendant, who for ten years has lived with this man in a state of marriagedom."

Farley Quits Strike-Breaking

That James Farley, the strike-breaker, has retired from the business in which he won national fame, is a fact entirely overlooked by the local daily papers, although the source from which I get my information regarding him is open to them. The truth of the matter is, I imagine, that the dailies want to use his name as a bugaboo when another big strike comes along, as they did during the trouble at McCloud. With great shouting and invective the dailies told during the McCloud strike that Farley was on the scene in the interests of the employers, and that he headed a band of armed and bloodthirsty thugs. The fact of the matter is that during this strike Farley was in the East; and moreover, he has not taken part in a strike since he assisted the United Railroads here two years ago; and what is still more, Farley never was employed by any other than street railway companies in his dangerous occupation. Starting in the business by accident, he soon proved himself a valuable man to the railway companies, not only because of the strikes he helped quell, but through his mediatory efforts. In more than one instance he has pointed out to the employers that they were wrong, and has secured higher wages for the men. As a result he at one time enjoyed a salary of $35,000 a year, but of late years he has been under contract to two big holding companies. He says that it has not been a profitable business because of the great expense attached to it, he having at times as many as 3,000 men in his employ. He intends to devote his time in the future almost entirely to handling his stable of fast trotting horses, which he maintains at Plattsburg, New York. He may again take up the hotel business, in which he was formerly engaged for some time.

Farley's Personality

Instead of being the ogre that the daily papers describe Farley, as I have learned through personal acquaintance, is a genial, kindhearted man. He is 35 years old, and ever since early boyhood has made his own way. He is a stocky, sinewy, determined fellow with whom it is very unsafe to trifle. Yet despite the part that he has taken in quelling street car strikes, Farley has thousands of friends among the conductors and motormen, who have found through experience that he was more anxious to help than to harm them. But Farley is through with strike-breaking now. He will even destroy his invaluable card index for which he could get $150,000. Although his contract with some of the street car companies does not expire for several months, he will not be called upon to help quell strikes, the services he has arranged for during the remainder of his time with the companies that employ him being purely advisory.

THE FACE IN THE WATER

This phenomenon is produced by a curious combination of rocks and the reflection of foliage in Lake Barney, Mono County.

Our Daniel

Judge Lawlor has been taken to task and somewhat severely censured for sitting in judgment on his own case. Charge with having prostituted himself and the court over which he presides with much solemnity, if not with impressive dignity, to the sinister purposes of his friends and social cronies of the graft prosecution, he availed himself of the privilege with which the law vests him, not only defending himself in his own propria persona, but holding the scales and balancing them to a nicety with all the patience and gravity which are said to be essential to justice. It must be admitted by all fair-minded men that Judge Lawlor exhibited absolute confidence in the wisdom and integrity of the man on the bench. He waived a jury trial, he boldly and fearlessly played the part of the lawyer who has a fool for a client, and with superb subtlety and not the slightest display of acrimony he administered the law as it is written in the statutes without permitting his affections to blind his judgment. Judge Lawlor vindicated himself without turning a hair or violating any principle of which he in his abundant wisdom is cognizant. An old-fashioned expounder of the principles of justice, by the name of Granville, observed some centuries ago that "we cannot expect an equitable award where the judge is made a party," but Judge Lawlor has demonstrated the fallacy of the observation.

The Implication Impertinent

The lawyers who suffered defeat at the unique bar of justice presided over by the Hon. William P. Lawlor complained that the situation that confronted them was most embarrassing since to argue the question at issue would have been tantamount to holding that Judge Lawlor had perjured himself. This is quite true. Judge Lawlor had filed an affidavit in which he swore that he was unprejudiced against Patrick Calhoun and that he was free from the vindictive influence behind the graft prosecution. The issue having been joined, if counsel had argued that the evidence showed that Judge Lawlor was hopelessly entangled with the graft conspirators, their argument would have carried the implication that Judge Lawlor had sworn falsely in his affidavit. But this whole matter involved metaphysical subtleties which apparently escaped the learned attorneys. By declining to argue the matter on the ground that it would be absurd to expect Judge Lawlor to pronounce himself guilty of perjury they assumed that Judge Lawlor is not a just judge, a most uncomplimentary assumption. For if Judge Lawlor cannot be depended upon to administer the law without fear or favor in his own case then he is not fit to occupy the bench. So in whatever light you view the matter the attorneys were guilty of a grave offense against the dignity of the court that is pungent with the Lawlor personality.

Neglected Opportunity

The attorneys in my opinion are deserving of censure. They were unjust to Judge Lawlor and they were unfaithful to their client. That they did not exhaust the potentialities of the situation is evident. They did not even ask Judge Lawlor to take the stand for cross-examination, which it was their privilege to do. On the witness stand Judge Lawlor's memory might have been refreshed. They might have reminded him of episodes conclusive of a greater degree of intimacy between himself and Fremont Older than he was conscious of when making his affidavit. They had introduced testimony with reference to meetings at the Fairmont. Now the object of those meetings in all probability was to warm the mind and enliven the imagination in conversation gay and brilliant; but on cross-examination perhaps they might have reminded the judge of visits to the Older car on the beach on occasions when the fear of dynamite explosions was dispelled by the gaiety of congenial companions. There is no telling what a cross-examination might develop. And of course a cross-examination does not always prove advantageous to those by whom it is conducted. Perhaps if they had tackled Judge Lawlor on cross-examination he would have sworn that he had found Older's friendships more erratic than enduring, in proof whereof he might have related that once in the halcyon long ago the noble editor intimated in the columns of the Bulletin that a certain judge, now regarded as faithful and true, was acting as a doormat for the Examiner. But it occurs to me that these speculations are unprofitable. The only point that I care to make is that Judge Lawlor in sitting in judgment on himself acted in accordance with law. That he brought about a ludicrous situation pregnant with inspiration for comic opera writers I will admit, but for that he is deserving of some credit. The science of law is far from perfect. Time discovers its defects, and they are remedied, and thus is progress made. Judges of the Jeffreys type in England were not wholly bad since by their misconduct defects in the law were made glaring and intolerable. For a similar reason a Lawlor should not be unequivocably censured. Millioniare Heinze's kept judges in Montana caused the people of that State to demand a change of venue bill similar to the one which was so vigorously opposed by the Call and Bulletin a few months ago. Judge Lawlor has made clear to the people of this State why a change of venue bill is a good thing. When we get one it should be called the Lawlor bill to immortalize the judge that tried Calhoun.

Wife—May I kindle the fire with the first act of that old play of yours?

Author—Better try the second. There's more fire in it.

The Rampageous Editor

In canicular rage induced by the multiplying phenomena of popular revolt against the mischievous machinations of his masters of the Graft Prosecution, the editor of the Boughton Bulletin is foaming at the mouth more copiously than ever, snapping viciously the while at the weekly press under the misapprehension that Town Talk and its contemporaries are entirely responsible for the

J. M. Jacobi & Co.
S. W. Cor. Montgomery & Sutter Sts
Individuality is always found in the best tailored garments
OUR SPRING AND SUMMER CLOTHING MERITS YOUR ATTENTION.

Santa Fe
NEW TRAIN
Via the Santa Fe to Chicago via Kansas City
EAST
Leave San Francisco daily 7:15 a. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m. This is in addition to our two other trains leaving San Francisco and Oakland 8:00 and 10:00 p. m. Also New Train to Fresno. Leaving San Francisco 4:00 p. m.; Leave Oakland 4:05 p. m. This in addition to our THREE other trains leaving San Francisco daily at 7:15 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m.
For detail information phone or call on Jas. B. Duffy, 673 Market Street, San Francisco
T. Love, Market Street Ferry Depot, San Francisco
J. J. Warner, 1112 Broadway, Oakland

present enlightened state of public sentiment. As the tribute of the boughten journal's hostility is not to be despised I am not inclined to discourage the febrile railings of its preposterous editor, but far be it from me to lay the flattering unction to my soul that the dear people have heeded my small voice in the wilderness and come to repentance. Town Talk wants no more prestige than it has earned. When the editor of the Boughten Bulletin in his inspired paroxysms, his bosom heaving with wrath, his eyes which are always alert to the main chance, dripping with tears, falls a-cursing like a very drab over the loss of circulation, I am not unmoved by the spectacle, but my hand I raise in protest only when, however unintentionally, he magnifies my importance as a moulder of public opinion. As a matter of fact the forming of public opinion is a thing that concerns me only in the abstract. It would not please me to feel myself vibrating in sympathy with what men approve or blame, with what they excuse or accuse. Public opinion is so seldom correctly informed, so susceptible to uncultivated emotions and so fickle and variable that I should hate to be held responsible for it. Mine the pleasure to watch the passing show and comment on its most stirring features.

The Penalty of Over-Zealousness

As the editor of the Boughten Bulletin is not a man of large mental grasp it is not improbable that he is sincere in asserting that the weekly press exercised the tremendous influence which was necessary to shock the people out of the lamentable misconceptions that held them in rapt devotion at the shrines of false gods. But the truth of the matter is obvious enough to men of ordinary powers of discernment. The truth is that the men who have been doing the devil's drudgery in saints' livery revealed themselves to the gullible public by performances more damning, more eloquent, more persuasive than all the pages of comments, censures and strictures that have been evoked by their iniquities. Let us see how little the weekly papers have had to do with sharpening the perceptions of the swinish multitude and making clear the true character of the Graft Prosecution. From the very beginning of the great moral crusade the Boughten Bulletin has acted as its official organ, a circumstance in itself that could not have failed to excite suspicion. In a city cursed with newspapers conducted exclusively for the advancement of self-interest, the Bulletin stands pre-eminent in shamelessness and licentiousness. The rascalities of the Bulletin have been notorious ever since the slatternly sheet came under its present management. By the very men who have been preaching morality, inveighing against graft and scattering scurrility in this city for two years the Bulletin was made the scarlet harlot of journalism long before Rudolph Spreckels had his first belated touch of patriotism. Now a moral crusade that takes for its symbol the black flag of a journalistic freebooter can hardly be expected to exhale an odor of sanctity. But the Bulletin by its vociferous protestations of purity of purpose might have deluded the general had its editor not colored its columns with the spleen of his masters. Too eager to earn his hire he carried the newspaper campaign beyond the bounds of reason and afflicted the whole community with nausea by the disgusting methods with which he sought to compel the acquiescence of public opinion in all that was done in furtherance of the designs of his employers. The Boughten Bulletin has done more to mould public opinion than all the weekly papers combined. Even Professor Boke admitted as much one day in the office of Town Talk.

Some Object Lessons

Of course the weekly papers have had some influence on public opinion, but that influence has been largely due to developments by which their utterances have been vindicated. At first much that appeared in the weekly papers was regarded as incredible, but now it is clear

LIQUEUR

PÈRES CHARTREUX

GREEN AND YELLOW

GREEN AND YELLOW

The original and genuine Chartreuse has always been and still is made by the Carthusian Monks (Pères Chartreux), who, since their expulsion from France, have been located at Tarragona, Spain; and, although the old labels and insignia originated by the Monks have been adjudged by the Federal Courts of this country to be still the exclusive property of the Monks, their world-renowned product is nowadays known as "Liqueur Pères Chartreux."

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafes,
Batjer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for United States.

Gallagher-Marsh Business College

1256 Market St. (Below Larkin) San Francisco

THIS IN THE BUSINESS COLLEGE recommended and patronized by the experts. For instance: Mr. Clement Bennett, the Official Reporter of the United States Courts, and Mr. Earnest A. Girvin, ex-official reporter of the Supreme Court, sent their boys here. Mr. Frank Shay of the Southern Pacific Law Office, who was one of the old time court reporters, also sent his boy here.

THIS IS THE BUSINESS COLLEGE that graduated Walter Trefts, Judge Shortall's court reporter; Roy Gallagher, Judge Graham's court reporter, and Frank Hart, who was Judge Hebbard's court reporter, and other expert stenographers too numerous to mention.

THIS IS THE BUSINESS COLLEGE from which was graduated Ruth Ohlson, 14 years old, the fastest shorthand writer in the world of her age, and who is employed now at the highest salary paid to any person her age in the U. S. by any commercial concern for stenographic or clerical services.

There is not a stenographer in this city able to write 125 words per minute for three consecutive minutes and type the same at 50 words per minute, earning less than $75 per month. If you expect such a position, attend a school capable of placing you in that class. Parents should not trifle with the future career of their children by sending them to some inferior school, but should follow the advice of the experts and have them attend Gallagher-Marsh Business College, the most practical business college on the Pacific Coast.

THIS IS THE BUSINESS COLLEGE patronized by the thinking classes—by those persons who pay attention to genuine recommendations from the experts. Send for catalogue and read what the experts say about this business college before going elsewhere.

You owe it as a duty to your children who contemplate taking a business course to pay at least one visit to this school, witness the advanced class, consisting of students from 15 to 17 years of age, write over 150 words per minute and read the same back correctly, and see for yourselves why all the experts of San Francisco and vicinity recommend this school.

that they were never guilty of the slightest exaggeration. When the weekly papers said that it was the intention of the graft prosecutors to give Ruef immunity they were not believed. When they said that the car strike was the result of a conspiracy that had for its object the embarrassment of Patrick Calhoun it was thought they were guilty of slander. Their intimations with reference to the conspiracy against Biggy were not given credence. From the beginning they were charged with poisoning the public mind, but they kept on telling the truth in utter indifference to the frenzied denunciations of the kept organs of the Prosecution. They were not stirred to resentment because they realized that the hostility which they excited was constantly supplying expert testimony of their efficacy and compelling recognition of their power. Not until the weekly papers opened the joints in the graft prosecutors' harness had the daily papers ever acknowledged that hebdomadal journalism was a force to be reckoned with in San Francisco. Greatly has the prestige of this weekly been improved by the vociferous enemies it has made, but the members of Town Talk's staff do not take too much credit to themselves. They realize that they owe much to the Boughten Bulletin and the senile Call and to the blunders and enormities of the heady patriots who have been revising the moral code downward. The public has been given object lessons which we had no hand in devising. For example the memorable midnight meeting was pulled off without our connivance; we conducted none of the great court fiascos which have marked the progress of the moral crusade; we inspired none of Heney's ebullitions, none of Lawlor's rulings; we had no hand in the hounding of Biggy to a watery grave; we were not responsible for the spy system or the stamp act; for the requiting of services rendered by witnesses, or the jobbery in connection with the criminal cases growing out of the wrecking of the California Safe Deposit and Trust Company. In short the weekly press cannot claim the credit of having been instrumental in inducing any of the salient performances that opened the eye of that dull old beast, the heavy-witted public.

He Perplexes the Scientists

That the Boughten Bulletin has done much toward revolting the sentiment of this community is evidenced in a measure by the current attitude of the public toward that longest-leased journal. The editor of the Boughten Bulletin has been made vertiginous by the rapid loss of circulation, and of late psychopathologists have been graveled by his strange antics. His case is not to be diagnosed in the light of science. There was a time when his life was a conglomeration of kid gloves, white ties and opera hats, irrigated with champagne, punctuated with laughter and seasoned with Jimmy Phelan's generous, if sinister attentions. In those days psychopathologists, informed as to the history of his case, had no difficulty in explaining or expounding him. There was at least something of continuity and consistency in his aberrations and especially in his social aspirations and professional proclivities. But now he is a mystery beyond solution. He wanders in his sober, serious day dreams as does the hashish eater in the intoxication induced by the juices of cannabis indica. In his waked senses his conceptions more than match the fancies of his slumbers. In his "wizard chamber of dissolving views" he is beset with hallucinations incoherent and chaotic. Hence the perplexity of the psychopathologists.

The Realization That Shocks

One day recently this incomprehensible breeder of vagaries printed a patchwork of delusive figures to prove that the boughten and decrepit journal, which so vividly reflects his personality, had made twenty-nine thousand dollars in four months. This, notwithstanding the Call's recent exposure of the Bulletin's flagrant misrepresentations with reference to the volume of ad-

A MINT JULEP
OF HUNTER
BALTIMORE
RYE
IS A DRAUGHT OF COOL REFRESHMENT
THE DAINTIEST SIP THAT PASSES LIP

HENRY CAMPE & CO., INC.,
Distributors for California and Nevada
San Francisco, Cal.

3
THREE GREAT LINES
Michigan Buggy Company
O. Armleder Company
Moon Motor Car Company

The three most Complete Lines of Vehicles and Automobiles built in America. We can deliver at once at Factory Prices. Carload Freight added.

Kiel & Evans Company
FRANKLIN & FOURTH STS. OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA

vertising patronage. But this time the Bulletin did not wait to be called a liar by a rival. It preferred to scoop its contemporaries with the disclosure of its prevarication. In a long, wheezy editorial it whined about the misfortunes by which it has been overtaken and complained bitterly of the prosperity of its successful rivals, designating among them the Post-Globe, which is now outselling the Crothers-Older sheet on the streets at the ratio of five to one. Speaking of himself this ever-gushing fountain of delight, this unfailing and perpetual blatherskite, said that the only ease he is able to find is in his conscience. He neglected to add that that is the easiest thing on his person. Evidently the editor of the

BEETHOVEN

This weird creation is expressive of the "modernist" tendencies in German sculpture. The idyllic faces on the chair are said to be symbolic of symphonies; the vulture, of the maladies from which the composer suffered.

Bulletin has arrived at that serious time of life when he realizes that he is not in the eyes of his acquaintances the man he hoped to be but the man he actually is. There is no realization more disquieting unless it be that which is experienced by the editor of a newspaper that is drifting to the junk-heap. The plight of this editor is almost pathetic. What would happen to him if the men behind the new civic welfare movement should round up a dozen of the leading advertisers whom I might suggest and point out to them the advisability of letting Spreckels and Phelan put up all the money required to support an intolerable scold, is a matter upon which I am reluctant to speculate. Perhaps these bankers are inclined to let the Bulletin die a natural death. Perhaps the Hellmans who are constantly assaulted by Older at the behest of his masters feel toward him as Dr. Johnson felt toward a noted London libeller. When Dr. Johnson heard that the libeller had been publicly kicked in the streets of Dublin he said he was surprised to hear of his rising so rapidly in the world; that he had never thought it worth while to kick him.

"This newspaper says that music attracts mice. I have never seen one in the drawing-room when I was playing the piano."

"That's not a good reason for doubting the truth of the article."

The Vanity of Life

Local society people who were acquainted with Mrs. Robert Graves of New York, and who were so fortunate as to be allowed to have a glimpse of the art treasures she was collecting, will be saddened to learn of her recent death in most pathetic circumstances. Her first husband was Henry B. Plant, the great railroad builder, and when he died, leaving her $8,000,000, she set out to achieve her greatest ambition—the proper housing of the art treasures left her by her father. The plan widened in its scope until she has made vast additions to her collection. In the meantime she met Robert Graves and married him; and the two, who loved each other deeply, worked toward the fulfillment of her plans. Together they supervised the erection of a beautiful house at 7 West Fifty-first street, New York. When it had been finished the great halls and galleries were hung with priceless paintings, with Oriental tapestries of rare beauty and splendor. But the dream was not realized. The completed house but suggested changes in its construction and additions to the collection already made. The transformation was entered into with as much zest as had been shown in the originial construction. But in the midst of the work Mrs. Graves fell ill. She was taken to the sanitariums and to the country, but with little effect. At last she demanded to be taken back to the house that held her treasures, declaring that only there could she be happy. Finally they took her home, just as the work she had planned was about completed. She took to her bed, but, undiscouraged, declared that when the house was ready for her inspection, she would be able to rally the strength to go over it. At last the day arrived when the finishing touch had been put on, and joyfully her husband told her that at last the castle was ready for the inspection of its princess. But before she could gather strength to leave her bed a sinking spell came, and she died that day—the day that her life ambition was realized.

The Love Between Tenors

With my confrere, the Playgoer, I witnessed the performance of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "'I Pagliacci" at the Princess Theatre on Friday night of last week—and witnessed something also which demonstrates the jealousy of the artistic temperament. In the first opera Colombini was the star, singing and acting the part of the faithless lover with fine skill and fire. As the curtain went up for the next opera, Colombini stepped into an upper box to watch his fellow singers at work. Bari sang Canio, and he did it with such effect that he was forced to repeat one of his numbers. He held back quite a while, but the applause was so thunderous, the shouts of "Bis!" "Bis!" so insistent, that he responded, to receive another outburst of applause and a curtain call.

GIERSBERGER WINES

The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.

THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY

Phone Oakland 2510 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

Write to the Surbrug Company for samples and prices.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

When he appeared, bowing and smiling, my companion and I chanced to glance at Colombini. Was that fiery tenor applauding his fellow-singer? Hardly. He gave two or three perfunctory pats of his hands, then quietly slipped out of the box. "Jealousy," said the Playgoer. "Nothing of the kind," I retorted. "He is going back of the scenes to congratulate Bari. You don't know the warm emotional temperament of these Italian artists. Probably at this moment he is embracing the other singer in joy over his success." "Pooh," said the Playgoer. Ready to admit it when I am wrong, I will acknowledge that the Playgoer was right in his idea of the situation. Inquiry reveals the fact that the two tenors are sworn enemies, and that when they do speak to each other it is only in terms of contempt. Colombini did not leave the box to congratulate Bari. He probably went out to seek some of the other singers and tell them that the other sang vilely, and that San Francisco audiences have little discrimination.

A California Passion Play

San Francisco is to have a passion play of the Oberammergau variety—one that requires twelve hours for its presentation. It was written by Father Josephat of the local Franciscan fathers, who has worked for three years at his task, and the incidental music has been composed by Father Huesges of Red Bluff. While it is identical with the Oberammergau play so far as the main theme is concerned, it is entirely original in text. The cast has been selected, rehearsals are in progress, and the play will be produced in the auditorium of the Dominican church in October. There will be several hundred people in the company. The principals have been most carefully selected, not only their histrionic ability being taken into consideration but their moral fitness to depict the Savior and his followers, so that the play may be presented with the reverential spirit in which it was written. Four nights, with three hours at each performance, will be required to produce the piece in its entirety. Father Josephat has been considering an outdoor production of the play, and will probably arrange for one if the success he looks for is achieved. There was some thought of staging it at Del Monte for the initial production, but the idea was given up. However, the Greek Theatre at Berkeley may be used next year—or even this year. A natural amphitheatre in Marin county is also being considered.

COMING HOME

They have calmly chewed their cuds
  Through the burning summer day,
Now they turn into the lane
  In the twilight soft and gray.
We can hear their tinkling bells
  As the dusky path they roam,
And a sense of peace descends
  When the cows come home.

They have "chewed the rag" for months
  Through the torrid summer heat,
And our business has stood back
  While they made their job complete.
When we hear the engine bells
  As they journey in the gloam,
What a peace will fall on us
  When the Congress comes home!

City and County Bank Now on Market Street

This bank, although one of the comparatively new financial institutions of San Francisco, having been opened only seven years ago this month, has through careful and conservative management taken its place among the first banking houses of the city. Since it was founded it has occupied the corner of Sixth and Stevenson streets, with a branch office on Van Ness avenue since the fire. But on Monday morning it will open in its new and commodious quarters at Market and Fifth streets. There it will occupy handsome rooms fitted particularly for the business to be carried on. Among the features of the new bank will be the fire and burglar proof door to their coin vaults, which are equipped with every known device and invention that will make them secure. Plans have been drawn for a three story building to be erected on the old site at Sixth and Stevenson streets for which a tenant has been secured on a ten years' lease.

CITY AND COUNTY BANK

Will open MONDAY, JULY 19th, in its new and commodious quarters at the Corner of Market and Fifth Streets

A. J. LOWENBERG, President — A. TONN, Cashier
L. V. MERLE, Vice-President — JOS. L. GOLDSMITH, Asst. Cashier

DIRECTORS

MATTHEW NUNAN
A. TONN
M. AUERBACH
A. J. LOWENBERG
OTTO A. JUNGBLUT
C. A. MALM
L. V. MERLE

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

Stock: In the closing prices of stocks for the week we find a recessionary move in values, the result of the publication of the Government report of July 8th on corn, wheat, etc., which proves very favorable. The security market for several weeks past has been bought and worked up, especially in the grangers, in anticipation of a bullish report, hence it seems logical to believe that some of this bull account will be cleaned up before another change of importance is started on the up track. The probability is that we shall find some further moderate decline in the speculative issues in the coming ten days or so, and not unlikely a narrow midsummer market. We doubt if any unusual decline may be looked for in any possible setback, as the financial position of the country and Wall Street in particular was never stronger. The new tariff measure is getting nearer to the President's signature and the last discussion in the matter is ready to go on between the committees of both branches of Congress. As the market is momentarily likely to prove a trading affair, we believe that advantage might be taken to purchase leading issues on any weakness for fair profits.

Grain: This bull wave which has been carrying wheat prices higher day after day reached a sort of climax Saturday morning when July went up nearly 2½ cents. September sold within a scratch of 11¾ and December 109¾. This is the wheat which sold at 113¼ for July, 107¾ for September and 106⅜ for December four days ago because of a little accumulation of new wheat at Southwest markets over the holiday. The wet weather has retarded the marketing of the new crop and there has been increased demand for both new and old wheat from eastern millers and exporters. Stocks are reduced again heavily in the Northwest and here for the week, the receipts are abnormally small. The evidence indicates a lowering of the spring crop condition and between drought in some States and floods in others the winter crop is certainly not turning out well. If farmers just take a notion to sell sparingly, and interior millers who have been idle because of the high prices for weeks are forced to buy to replenish stocks of both wheat and flour, we can see how an unusual situation will develop. Would limit buying orders to soft spots if there are any.

Cotton: The mark of 12½ cents in cotton was passed with less ado and greater ease than was 11 cents, and sentiment is more rampantly bullish than at any previous time during the season, and predictions of 15 cents are now quite frequent. Prominent among the sensational features of the week is the enormous advance in prices of spot cotton. When actual cotton is sold at such advances there is less reason to question on the sensational rise in futures. In fact, with all the advance the cotton market has a sewed up appearance that is very discomfiting to the man with cotton to buy. And in this there is an anomaly; for stocks of cotton in Liverpool are in excess of last year, and larger stocks at ports and storage points throughout the world make the visible supply much in excess of last year, so that it would seem that cotton is easily available to those who would buy. But the cotton appearing in the statistics is so firmly held that it cannot be bought except on a basis which rises with advances on the leading exchanges. In previous seasons when such condition has obtained it has been possible to go to the farms and buy, taking up in that way the unsold holdings of the planter. This year the farm stocks were exhausted at the beginning of the planting season, and the absolute inability of industrious buyers to find cotton has destroyed the effectiveness of the argument that there is an invisible supply. This makes the position of the holder of the visible supply quite strong. The last Government report indicated a crop of about 12,000,000 bales and this was allowing a fair yield for Texas. Since this report was issued crops in the Central and Eastern belt have made but slight improvement and Texas which was relied upon to do so much has been in the grip of another drought and the excessive temperatures that have prevailed in the Lone Star State for the past ten days have brought her squarely in the limelight. Unless relief is forthcoming in a very short time—and there are no indications of such relief at this writing—we should expect 15 cent cotton before the middle of August and we would not venture to name the top for the summer of 1910—should this crop fall as low as 10,500,000, or 11,000,000 which at present is altogether probable.

E. B. COURVOISIER

The well known Art Dealer and Frame Maker announces to the public the opening of his new store at 431 Sutter street between Stockton and Powell.

HOTEL CUMBERLAND

Broadway at 54th Street

NEW YORK

Near 50th St. Subway Station and 53d St. Elevated

Ideal Location,
Near Theatres, Shops, and
Central Park.

New and Fireproof

Strictly First Class in Every Respect

Rates Reasonable
$2.50 with bath, and up.

All Hardwood Floors and
Oriental Rugs.

10 Minutes' Walk to 20 Theatres

Excellent Restaurant Prices Moderate

Send for Booklet

HARRY P. STIMSON,
formerly with Hotel Imperial

R. J. BINGHAM,
formerly with Hotel Woodward

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487

R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and New York

Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

A Shocked Ministerial Chaperone

Miss Florence Breckenridge last year introduced the continental custom here of having a chaperone of the masculine persuasion to add dignity to her theatre parties instead of the stereotyped dowager, and her uncle, Dr. Harry Tevis, usually acted for her in this capacity. It is the most natural thing in the world that her most intimate friend, Miss Gussie Foute, should follow in her wake in the perpetuation of this innovation, and the Rev. Edward Morgan has on a number of occasions consented to furnish the proper social ballast for jolly little affairs of this kind arranged by the hospitable Miss Foute. On last Friday night, however, the gallantry and courage of the handsome rector were put to the test when he heroically chaperoned a party of Miss Foute's friends to a performance of "The Merry Widow." At the critical point when his services might have been considered most necessary from a moral view-point he quietly and discreetly withdrew to the wings, leaving Miss Foute, Miss Innes Keeney and Miss Eliza McMullen to their fate and on the hands of the helpless young men of the party. The question that is now agitating society is whether or not the Rev. Morgan is disqualified for future details of this kind, or whether his temporary weakness was caused by a slight sprain of his "mental" osmagnum which caused his courage to ooze on that special occasion but from which he is expected to recover.

Photo, Genthe

MRS. LLOYD ACKERMAN

She was formerly Louise Sloss. Her marriage was a notable social event in Paris a week ago.

Another Interview With the Martins

Again we are informed by special despatch to the Examiner from New York that the Peter Martins intend to expatriate themselves and become permanent residents of Paris. The Examiner insists that these Peter Martins who have been twice interviewed, are our Peter Martins—the son and daughter-in-law of Mrs. Eleanor Martin—but as they have been quoted as saying that they lived abroad four years and had a child born to them during their absence, we cannot be certain that the Examiner correspondent knows what he is talking about. The Peter Martins have not lived abroad four years on a stretch and no child has been born to them since they left San Francisco. Furthermore there is not the faintest likelihood of the Peter Martins ever isolating themselves in the madding crowd of the gay French metropolis. Peter Martin hasn't any of the blood of Peter the Hermit in his veins, and experience has taught him that there is no solitude so profound as that which is experienced in a populous city where you can hold communion only with your wife and a waiter. The obstacles of the French language Peter Martin has found insurmountable. Besides he has no instinct for language that is foreign to the vocabulary of his youth. Even in the roystering days of Marchand's and the Pup, Peter was unintelligible in his soberest moments. Aside from the linguistic drawback there are other considerations that would be fatal to a temperamental inclination in Peter to the atmosphere of Paris.

MISS ALICE JONES

Daughter of ex-Senator John P. Jones of Nevada, whose engagement to Artist MacNonnies in Paris has been reported in the despatches.

Prepares For Conquest

Now that Mrs. George Pullman's new residence at Washington, D. C., is nearly completed, Mrs. Francis J. Carolan of San Francisco and Burlingame is preparing to go to the national capital and make a conquest of

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

Telephone Kearny 1387
JOHN R. SIEVERS
FLORIST AND DECORATOR
Our Nurseries Chesnut and Van Ness Ave.
Northwest Corner POWELL AND O'FARRELL STS. SAN FRANCISCO

society there, as she has done in San Francisco and its fashionable environs. Mrs. Carolan's breezy style and nimble wit should stir something among the staid dames and dull young matrons of Washington, who have traditions and social ideals up to which they try to live. The new Pullman residence will absorb some $300,000 of the money left by the famous sleeping-car builder. With a frontage of 68 feet, a depth of 110 feet, five stories, 45 rooms and 16 baths, and electric passenger and freight elevators, it will resemble somewhat a very swell hotel. It is to be of the French style throughout,

Photo, Genthe

MRS. FRANCIS CAROLAN

Who is said to be looking forward to social conquests in Washington.

with large double windows and balconies and a sloping roof. The drawing room on the second floor will extend across the entire front of the building. On the same floor will be a large reception hall, staircase hall, library, billiard room, kitchen, pantry, laundry and servants' hall. Such an expensive home will be no financial burden to Mrs. Pullman, whose fortune is enormous. Each daughter has $3,000,000 in her own right, with more coming at their mother's death. Francis J. Carolan has made a great success of handling his wife's business interests, and she is said to have given him in his own right a $200,000 bank account.

A Social Intruder

A box party the other day at the Orpheum was the cynosure of all eyes. Mrs. Foster and her daughter Lou were present, also the Calhouns and one or two others; but no one in the audience could place the other member of the party. He was gorgeous, too, with purple socks and necktie and with a large purple dahlia in his button hole and he applauded prodigiously. Every clever hit made on the stage found an echo in their box and cries of "marvelous," splendid" and loud roars of laughter greeted every act. It turned out, when the Fosters were approached by acquaintances in the audience as to who their strange friend was, that he was some casual passer-by who had procured a seat before they secured the rest of the box, and they are hoping that the outside world are not laboring under the delusion that he is to be introduced into the Holy of Holies under their guidance.

Vanderbilt Upsets Britishers

A London correspondent informs me that Alfred G. Vanderbilt is quite upsetting the equanimity of the Britishers by his mode of life and his fantastic extravagances. He has a magnificently appointed houseboat lying in the Thames off his fine place at Henley. The houseboat is not at all of the beautiful and simple variety that has been characteristic of life on the Thames. His servants wear watermen's uniforms and caps with scarlet bands on which are the letters "A. G. V." in gold. When Vanderbilt comes down from London for the week end they all line up and salute him, and he is sufficiently indulgent and condescending to acknowledge their obeisances by a stiff bow. He has erected a band-stand lighted by means of hundreds of tiny electric bulbs. In this a band hired at $400 a night played during the Regatta time. Three carloads of flowers were used in the decorations of the house during Henley week—this in spite of the fact that Vanderbilt's own large gardens were drawn on. Vanderbilt makes a specialty of geraniums, and when Prince Christian, King Edward's brother-in-law, called on the American millionaire he was loaded with choice varieties for his own gardens. Vanderbilt is regarded by the English with mingled curiosity and disapproval, his comic opera existence striking some as funny and others as shocking.

The Peixotto Divorce

Local interest is given to the Peixotto divorce in New York through the fact that the husband in the case is a cousin of the San Francisco members of that well known family—Edgar, the lawyer, Sydney, who has made the welfare of erring boys his especial study, Ernest, the famous illustrator, and Miss Jessica Peixotto, who is a deep student of, and skillful writer on, economic problems. A further local tinge is added by the fact that the co-respondent, Ethel Dorothy Patton, is said to be from this city. Florian Peixotto, from whom his wife, Louise, secured a divorce because of his attentions to Miss Patton, is, like his cousin Ernest, an illustrator.

Wedded in Paris

The wedding of Miss Azalea Keyes and Alfred H. Heilman took place at Passy, a suburb of Paris, last week. It is of especial interest to Californians as the bride is the granddaughter of the late Judge S. C. Hast-

THE BONNET SHOP
Importers of REAL PARISIAN MILLINERY
121 GEARY STREET
Our Specialty, Strictly High Class Tailored Hats at Popular Prices
NOBLE

J. Magnin & Co
INCORPORATED
Large Reductions on Summer Apparel
In Every Department
Garments which are specially adapted for Vacation and Outing Wear
GRANT AVENUE AND GEARY STREET

ings and niece of Mrs. John Darling, Alexander Keyes and Mrs. A. H. Loughborough of this city. Winfield Scott Keyes, the late mining man, was her father, and her mother was formerly Miss Flora Hastings from whom the bride inherited her vast fortune. The couple will reside abroad.

King's Heroism

The rescue by Frank King of Miss Helen Deane from the embarrassing predicament into which she was precipitated by a storm up in Lake County has caused some speculation as whether the episode, inspired as it was by gallantry and romantic solicitude, will fire the young lady's imagination, quicken her pulse and send the tide of life in swifter currents through her veins. Some of the mutual friends of the young people persuaded themselves not many moons ago that the relations existing between Miss Deane and Mr. King were slightly tinged with sentimentality, but subsequently he and another charming heiress appeared to be engaged in the warmths of a mutual affection thereby upsetting calculations and occasioning the kind of amiable tittle-tattle that adds zest to social intercourse. Mysterious are the ways of Cupid and to attempt to conjecture his designs is to essay the impossible. Who knows but that he arranged that little affair which gave the gallant King the opportunity to make his heroic dash in a steam launch on the storm-bound lake to the rescue of the maiden fair?

To Wed a Naval Man

The engagement is announced of Miss Katherine Metcalfe, second daughter of Captain John Metcalfe, to Dr. John Brooke Kaufmann, U. S. N., a member of a well known Virginia family. Miss Metcalfe is a daughter of Captain Metcalfe's first wife who was Miss Wooster. Since last winter she has been teaching at Miss Hamlin's seminary on Pacific avenue which she formerly attended as a pupil.

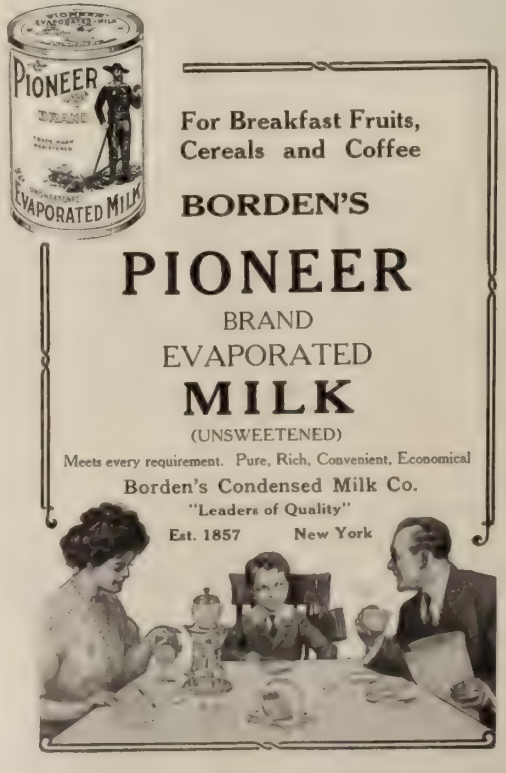
Miss Elsa Draper Engaged

An engagement of the week that arouses great social interest is that of Miss Elsa Draper, eldest daughter of Colonel and Mrs. T. Waln-Morgan Draper of San Rafael, to Midshipman James Laurence Kauffman of the U. S. S. Tennessee. Miss Draper is a tall and slender girl, pretty and attractive, and a general favorite with her young friends. She was one of the cleverest Tarantella dancers at the Kermess last winter. The Draper home, "Marinita Park," at San Rafael, has been the scene of much gaiety. The bride to be and her sister, Miss Dorothy Draper, give many bridge parties, luncheons and dinners. Miss Elsa Draper, in addition to possessing social accomplishments, is a clever milliner. Last winter she and her sister presided at the Fairmont over a sale of "Fleming" hats, which, her friends say, were all trimmed by the deft fingers of the midshipman's fiancee. Why she was too modest to acknowledge the credit everybody was at a loss to comprehend, since her skill at this art is great. Midshipman Kauffman is an Annapolis graduate, class of '08, and has been visiting this city on leave, but returned to his ship at Bremerton Navy Yard last week. The wedding will be a beautiful country affair at the home of the Drapers, and will take place some time this summer.

Brown-Hotz Wedding

The wedding of Miss Marjorie Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Brown, to Lieut. John George Hotz, U. S. A., took place on Monday afternoon at 3:30 at the home of the bride's parents on Green street. Only relatives and intimate friends were present. After a brief honeymoon trip the couple will be at home at Fort Baker, where Lieutenant Hotz is stationed.

Three Kauffmans to Wed



By a strange coincidence three young men by the name of Kauffman have become engaged during the week. The last engagement made public is that of Sylvan Kauffman of this city to Miss Newmark of Los Angeles. The Newmarks are among the wealthiest residents of the Southern city, where the father of the prospective bride is a coffee and spice merchant. The wedding will take place in the fall.

Burrough Takes Studio

Randall Burrough, the talented young artist who won for himself considerable fame by his Portola poster, is gathering unto himself still further laurels. He has opened a studio and I hear his cleverness with pencil and brush is liable to make him quite the hero of the socially elect. I understand that he is making a series of studies of Miss Enid Gregg, the eldest of the two attractive daughters of the Wellington Greggs. She is a singularly graceful girl and her poses for Randall Burrough are varied and in the costumes of different countries.

Engagement Gossip

Every where one goes there are engagements and rumors of engagements. "Yes," one pretty little debutante assured me, "just exactly one-half of the debutante band is engaged, so there will be announcement teas and luncheons right along until the fall." From another authority I learn that the first of the announcements will come in the form of a big tea at the Fairmont. It is scheduled for August and Colonel Kirkpatrick's attractive little daughter will be hostess. They add that Allen MacDonald is the lucky man. If so he is certainly most sincerely to be congratulated for not only is Miss Suzanne generally considered to be the daintiest of the debutantes, but she is one of the best loved girls the city can boast of.

FOR THE BABY
. BROOKS
HOMOEOPATHIC COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP
25 CENTS AT DRUGSTORES

Foster-Kuechler Wedding

A beautiful midsummer wedding took place at San Rafael on Thursday—that of Miss Mary Fyffe Foster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Foster, to Henry Norbury Kuechler. The ceremony was performed at noon in the pretty little Presbyterian chapel. Rev. Lynn White was the officiating clergyman. The bride was attended by her sister, Mrs. Laurence Draper, as matron of honor, and two other sisters, Miss Louisiana Foster and Miss Martha Foster as bridesmaids. Dr. Laurence

AT LONG BEACH SANITARIUM, LONG BEACH, CAL.

Draper was best man, while Arthur Foster Jr., Robert N. Foster, Dr. John Vandenburgh and Spencer Grant acted as ushers. The church was prettily decorated in white and yellow, which colors were matched by the gowns worn by the bride and bridesmaids. A throng of fashionable people attended. Following the wedding, a reception was held at the residence of the bride's parents in San Rafael.

Society Vaudeville Show

The smart set is deeply interested in the vaudeville show that is to take place at Menlo Park on September 11th under the auspices of the maids and matrons of Burlingame. It is not a charity affair, but purely social, and the attendance is to be by invitation. The program will include dancing and musical stunts, and skits embodying clever hits upon people prominent in society. Those who have the affair in charge are Mrs. Frederick McNear, Mrs. Augustus Taylor and Mrs. William H. Taylor Jr. William Barton, one of the cleverest amateur actors in the city, will take part, while Frank L. Mathieu, who has had professional experience, will be the stage manager. Others who will be on the program are Miss Mary Keeney, Miss Florence Hopkins, Miss Martha Calhoun, Miss Harriett Alexander, Miss Jean Gallois, Harold Bingham and George Wilcutt Jr.

Superfluous Hair Killed Over Night

Ladies! have you heard of Stoutt's valuable discovery. Don't waste time and money on fraudulent depilatories; they only make the hair grow stronger. Stoutt's is the only real, genuine hair destroyer known. It permanently destroys the hair roots over night. Test it free. Seeing is believing—a small surface cleared of hair clean, to prove it. Send stamped, addressed envelope. DR. W. A. STOUTT, 718 East 9th Street, Kansas City, Mo.

Guard for King Portola

When the counterfeit presentment of Gaspar de Portola, the first governor of California, rides along our streets during the festival days of next October, he will have as a guard one hundred and six young men, gorgeously uniformed and mounted on the snorting black chargers of tradition; for he will not be a provinical governor then, but a royal king, and as such will demand an escort that befits his high and mighty station. The guards have not yet been selected but the festival committee is considering the names of some of our most stalwart youths. It matters not how handsome and straight a candidate for the honor of riding with the King may be; he must also be able to sit a charger with ease and grace. If you see handsome young men cantering through secluded park roads of early mornings, mounted on coal-black steeds, and with a look of mingled anxiety and ambition on their faces, you may be sure that they are preparing to be in readiness in case the committee should call on them.

To Paint Mountain Scenes

Miss Julie E. Raymond of Brooklyn, N. Y., who has been spending several winters in Southern California sketching and painting at the coast and in the mountains, is to visit Deer Park Springs and Tahoe for August and September. Miss Raymond's Barn Studio at San Diego was the scene of charming little receptions. Her work has a very pleasing quality. She is especially good in her pictures of mountain scenery, the atmospheric effects being of unusual excellence.

The King Wins

King Edward became so absorbed in bridge at the little party given by the Whitelaw Reids in honor of the royal family that he kept the guests waiting two hours for supper, no one, no matter how hungry, daring to make a move toward the dining room until his majesty gave the signal. It is recorded that all through the meal the king was beaming, while the queen laughed outright several times, quite as an ordinary human being does. So it is to be presumed that during the protracted session Edward was successful in trimming his opponents, and passed the signal to her majesty. We of the outer circle are not privileged to know what a financial burden these winnings may have lifted from the royal shoulders. Suppose the queen was longing for a shirtwaist in a Regent Street shop, marked down from eleven pun, three and six to three pun seven and four; and suppose the king had refused to let her have the money; and suppose they had scrapped over the matter; and suppose the winnings paved the way for the shirtwaist and domestic tranquility. Wouldn't that be enough to make the king beam and the queen laugh outright? Of course, this is only supposing, and it may be presumption on my part to enter so intimately, even mentally, into the home life of the royal couple. But if kings and queens do not want people to speculate as to what they are tickled about, they should take the public into their confidence.

ASK FOR
BLACK AND WHITE
SCOTCH WHISKEY
IT IS THE BEST
NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

In the Social Spotlight

Mrs. C. W. Fore and daughters, Miss Fore and Miss Matalie Fore, have closed their Oakland home and have taken the Pulliam cottage, which is near to the home of Mrs. Gunn, widow of the late Dr. Neal Donald Gunn, in the west end of Pacific Grove. During the three months they are to be in the Grove, Mrs. James K. Moffatt will be a frequent guest of the Fores.

Mrs. W. P. Fuller gave a dinner party on Wednesday in the old rose room of the Cliff House.

Mrs. E. A. Bresse, Miss Lucile Bresse and Miss Metha MacMahan have taken a cottage for the season at Aetna Springs.

Mr. and Mrs. P. W. Cushing of Oakland were among recent guests at the Hotel Vendome, San Jose.

HOTEL VIRGINIA AND SURF BATHING AT LONG BEACH, CAL.

Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Connell with Mr. and Mrs. William Garland all of Los Angeles have been at the Fairmont for the past few days en route to Seattle and the fair. Mr. Garland is one of the biggest real estate operators in the south and with Mr. Connell is an important factor in the business affairs of his city.

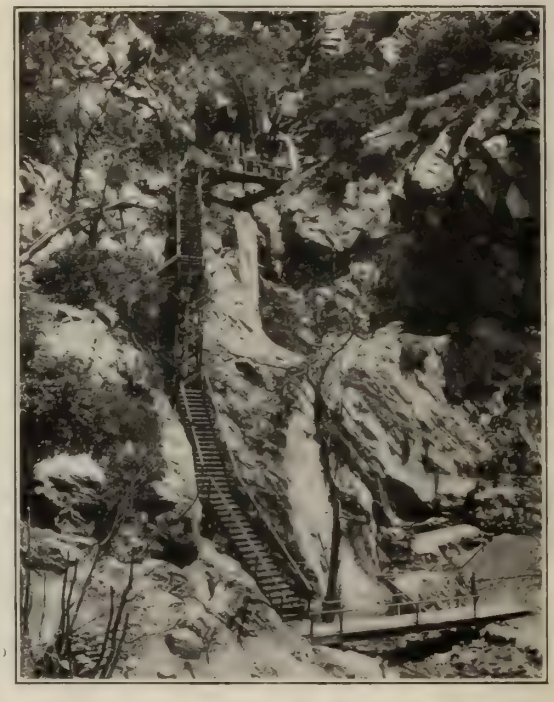
Miss Gussie Foute and Miss Crothers are the guests of Mrs. Loring Pickering and her son Loring at Byron Hot Springs. Much entertaining is taking place in honor of these two guests.

Miss Ellen O'Sullivan has recently returned from abroad, and is visiting her sister, Mrs. Oscar Sutro (Miss Mollie O'Sullivan), at her beautiful home in Piedmont.

On their recent motor trip through Lake County, Mrs. C. C. Clay, Miss Clay and Miss Harrold stopped over for the week-end at Aetna Springs.

Mrs. Chrystal Harrison has moved from the St. Xavier and taken attractive quarters at the Kellogg on Sacramento street.

Friends of Mr. and Mrs. Archibaldo Burns who spent some time at the Fairmont and who are now at Del Monte will be glad to learn that these visitors from our neighboring republic are contemplating a long visit in California before leaving for Europe. Mr. Burns is a resident of Chihauhua, Mexico, but his business interests in rich mines and vast cotton plantations are scattered over the entire country. Both Mr. and Mrs. Burns are well known socially in their own country and are making a host of friends wherever they go.



Mrs. Charles H. Shields who has been very ill at her home in this city is rapidly recovering and will leave for Southern California during the week.

Mrs. William Hinckley Taylor, formerly Miss Bessie Kittle, will soon leave for New York. After a brief visit there she will join Mr. and Mrs. William Tevis and sail for a lengthy tour abroad.

The Misses Lucy and Margaret Herrick of Oakland have returned from a tour abroad and are guests of their aunt, Mrs. Albert Miller, in Oakland.

Mrs. A. A. Moore, accompanied by her attractive youngest daughter, Miss Margaret, has gone abroad. They will be away all summer. During their absence A. A. Moore, Stanley Moore and Miss Ethel Moore will spend the summer at Mission San Jose.

Even in the short time since it has been opened, the Cliff House has grown to be a popular place for bridge whist parties,

SCENE IN RUBIO CANYON EN ROUTE TO MT. LOWE.
Pacific Electric Railway

many prominent people daily indulging there in their favorite pastime.

A jolly automobile party recently in Lake County was made up of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph S. Tobin, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Magee and Walter Hush

A. M. Weginer of Berlin, Germany, and O. G. Hesketh, from Washington, D. C., are recent arrivals at Pacific Grove Hotel.

A congenial and delightful party is enjoying the attractions on the McCloud. In the party are Col. Simpson, U. S. A., and his attractive daughter, Miss Peggy, Miss Innes Keeney, Lieut. Naylor, U. S. A., and Lieut. Bolles, U. S. A.

One of the most delightful teas of the season was given on Thursday by Mrs. Mansfield Lovell at the country home of the

DIABETES

It was not easy for us to believe that Diabetes is curable, but the first case we came in personall touch with was astonishingly convincing.

We were considering the purchases of Fulton's Compounds and were looking for cases to try them out on. One of our number knew Charles A. Newton, the Yardmaster of the S. P. R. R. Co. at Sacramento—a very worthy man. He also knew that Newton had Diabetes and was in a hospital in the Capitol City, and that his recovery seemed impossible when he last heard from him. A letter was written to Newton that Fulton claimed his Diabetes Compound cured Diabetes and that we wanted to know from OUR friends if this was so, and that if he (Newton) would take it that we would send him a supply of it. Newton replied to the effect that some four or five months before we wrote him he had heard about the compound, had taken it, that the sugar was nearly out and he was almost well. His complete recovery followed, and he told an S. P. Engineer who had Diabetes and he recovered.

We also saw Gen. Theo. Reichert of San Francisco go on this treatment and get a complete recovery after physicians had declared that the case was hopeless. Gen. Reichert is a 33rd degree Mason and is one of San Francisco's most widely and favorably known citizens.

We have seen hundreds recover since and there is no longer any question about Diabetes in people of middle age and over being curable.

For free literature, address John J. Fulton Co., 212 First St., San Francisco.

Fulton's Diabetes Compound can be had at druggists.

We desire all patients to write us who are not noting the usual improvement by the third week.

A SKIN OF BEAUTY IS A JOY FOREVER

DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S

ORIENTAL CREAM

OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER

Purifies as well as Beautifies the Skin. No other cosmetic will do it.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash and Skin Diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 60 years; no other has, and it is so harmless we taste it to be sure it is properly made. Accept no counterfeit of similar name. The distinguished Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut-on (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'Gouraud's Cream' as the least harmful of all the skin preparations."

For sale by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers.

GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL TOILET POWDER

For infants and adults. Exquisitely perfumed. Relieves Skin Irritation, cures Sunburn and renders an excellent complexion. Price 25 Cents, by Mail.

GOURAUD'S POUDRE SUBTILE

Removes Superfluous Hair. Price $1.00, by mail

FERD. T. HOPKINS, Prop'r, 37 Great Jones St., New York City.

Hathaway's in San Lorenzo in honor of Miss Lovell, a sister-in-law of the hostess.

Miss Ethel Clarke and Miss Evelyn Moore left this week for Monterey where they will visit Mrs. Erskine McNear at her attractive summer home.

Commander and Mrs. Alexander McCracken have taken a house on Scott street.

The engagement of Lieut. Thomas F. McNeill of the Coast Artillery Corps, U. S. A., now stationed at the Presidio, and Miss Martha Jackson of Cincinnati, Ohio, caused quite a flutter in society here. The wedding takes place this month in Seattle, where Miss Jackson is visiting with her mother.

Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Rolph with their children and Japanese maid have taken rooms at Hotel Ben Lomond for the summer.

Senator George C. Perkins will return to his home in Oakland in about two weeks. He will stop in Tonopah on a visit to his daughter, Mrs. Clive Baker, formerly Miss Pansy Perkins. Mrs. George Perkins is at present their guest. They will all return to Oakland with Senator Perkins.

Miss Lou Tillmann who has been the guest of her sister, Mrs. Briggs, in Victoria, B. C., for many months, will remain all summer.

Miss Pillans of England is spending the summer at Del Monte. She is an enthusiastic sportswomen, making a round of the eighteen-hole links, practicing golf strokes besides and bowling on the green daily. She is also a keen lawn tennis player and won the ladies' championship of the Casa Blanco lawn tennis club at Riverside in the spring, defeating Mrs. Harry Kearne, the holder.

Miss Helen Son and Miss Blanche Son were among the week-end visitors to the Hotel Vendome at San Jose.

Among the latest arrivals at the St. Francis are Lieutenant-Commander J. T. Ryan, Lieutenant C. C. Moore, Captain H. T. Meredith, Captain James T. Flint, R. Cuthbertson, E. Jackson, W. H. Bucher, Lieutenant B. W. Henderson, all of the United States Navy; Wm. Burchfield, U. S. M. C., J. O. Yost, U. S. A., S. E. Holliday, U. S. S. California, H. R. Warner, manager of the Hotel Del Monte, C. G. Edwards, Nai Teck, Bangkok, Siam, Dr. and Mrs. Hugh Baker of Pittsburg.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Calvin Ford, New York City, Mrs. J. Busse, Miss Clara A. Busse and Miss Gertrude Ryan of Chicago, Mr. and Mrs. N. Engell De Reeves, Baltimore, Md., Mrs. Vail Brainard, Lyndonville, Vt., Mrs. A. B. Lounsbury, New York, Bemjamin C. Hennebery and Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Weller of Pensacola, Fla., F. L. Garrison, Philadephia, Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Sperry and family, New York, are among the recent arrivals at the Fairmont.

The Chamber of Commerce, Merchants Exchange and Merchants Association have arranged for the joint entertainment of the House Naval Committee and members of the Ways and Means Committee who will arrive at the Hotel St. Francis about August 22nd, en route to Honolulu. The congressmen and their wives, forming a party of about fifty, will be entertained on a lavish scale during their two days' stay, and will then proceed to Hawaii, where they will be guests of the Honolulu commercial organizations.

Percy M. Stewart of Ivy Hall, Pockington, Yorkshire, England, engaged in several days' salmon fishing in Monterey Bay last week, having excellent sport. He has now gone for a second visit to the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, but probably will return to Del Monte before visiting the Grand Canyon of the Colorado in Arizona.

San Rafael Gossip

Mr. and Mrs. Frank McComas, nee Parrott, have taken a cottage in Mill Valley for the summer and are now comfortably settled. Mr. McComas' health has given his wife and friends great anxiety.

Miss Phyllis de Young was hostess on Tuesday evening at an old fashioned candy pull at "Meadowlands," San Rafael, the beautiful summer home of her parents.

Allan Kittle has returned from a tour abroad and is now at the Kittle home in Ross Valley. His mother, Mrs. J. G. Kittle, did not return with him but stopped in New York to visit friends. She will return later with Mr. and Mrs. Ben Dibblee.

Miss Pauline Coppee has returned to Ross Valley after a delightful visit to Mrs. Edward Schmiedell at Tahoe.

The George McNears of Petaluma will give a large house party this week from Saturday to Monday. Many of the younger members of society from Ross and San Rafael will be their guests.

Mrs. Nicholas Van Bergen motored to Mill Valley during the week with a party of friends. They attended a luncheon given by Mrs. George Marcus.

Mrs. Stuart Baldwin who is occupying the Rowe home in Ross Valley this summer, gave a tennis party during the week. Many of the guests entered a tournament for the prizes, two handsome cups. Luncheon was served al fresco. The guests in their beautiful summer frocks with the lawn and porches as a background, presented an artistic picture. Guests from Ross Valley, San Rafael and San Francisco attended.

Dr. Geo. K. Herzog, after an extensive course of studies in the European Medical centers, has returned and is now located in the Whitney Building, 133 Geary street. The Doctor is now making the diseases of women his specialty.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry St. Goar and their interesting young daughter, Miss Edna, who are occupying the Armsby place in Ross Valley, are doing a great deal of entertaining. Friday evening an enjoyable dance will be given at this hospitable home. Many house parties are being arranged by the young people in Ross for the occasion. A number of guests will remain over Sunday.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgr. Phone Market 500

Beginning Sunday Night, July 18th,
THIRD AND FINAL WEEK—EXTRA MATINEE WEDNESDAY
Regular Matinee Saturday. Last Time, Saturday Night July 24th, Henry W. Savage's New York Production of

THE MERRY WIDOW

Music by Franz Lehar.
Sunday Night, July 25th, the Comedy Drama Success, "Polly of the Circus."

AMERICAN THEATRE Market St., nr. Seventh Phone Market 381

Inauguration of the SUMMER STOCK SEASON
Commencing Sunday Matinee, July 18th,
OTIS SKINNER'S GREAT SUCCESS

THE DUEL

Herschel Mayall, Harriet Worthington, James Corrigan, Lillian Elliott, Gerold Harcourt and Charles Swickard.
Special Summer Prices: Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Matinees, 25c and 50c.
ALL RESERVED.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Cor. Sutter and Steiner Class "A" Building Phone West 1400

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.
Monday Evening and All Next Week, a Play of East and West

THE SILVER GIRL

By Edward Peple, Author of "The Prince Chap."
Prices: Evening, 25c to $1.00. Matinees Saturday and Sunday, 25c to 50c.

PRINCESS THEATRE PHONE WEST 663 Ellis Street, near Fillmore
Absolutely Class "A" Building
S. LOVERICH, MANAGER
Matinee, Saturday and Sunday

BEGINNING NEXT MONDAY NIGHT LAST WEEK OF INTERNATIONAL GRAND OPERA CO.

Monday Evening "TRAVIATA"
Tuesday Evening "AIDA"
Wednesday Matinee and Friday Evening "THE BARBER OF SEVILLE"
Wednesday Evening "IL TROVATORE"
Thursday Evening "FEDORA"
Saturday Matinee "CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA" and "I PAGLIACCI"
Saturday Evening "CARMEN"
Sunday Evening "L'AMICO FRITZ"
Prices $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, 50c.

NEW ORPHEUM O'Farrell Street, between Stockton and Powell Phone Douglas 70

The Safest and Most Magnificent Theatre in America
Week Beginning This Sunday Afternoon
MATINEE EVERY DAY
ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

LILY LENA, the Dainty English Singer of Dainty Story Songs; CHAS. DANA GIBSON'S ELECTRIFIED GIRL REVIEW; JULIUS TANNEN; 3 DONALS—3; CHARLOTTE PARRY and CO.; 3—LEIGHTONS—3; SELMA BRAATZ; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES; Last Week—Great Artistic Triumph HELENA FREDERICKS in the one act grand opera "THE PATRIOT."
Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE Oakland, Cal. Direction H. W. Bishop

Commencing Monday, July 19th, Every Evening,
Matinees Saturday and Sunday

THE SQUAW MAN

The BISHOP PLAYERS in the First Popular Price Production of William Faversham's and Dustin Farnum's Great Success.
Entire House, 25c and 50c. All Performances.

NEW CHUTES Fillmore, Eddy, Turk and Webster San Francisco's Favorite Playground

Every Afternoon and Every Night
THOUSANDS TURNED AWAY AT THE OPENING Wonderful Open Air Attractions

ROYAL BANDA ROMA

Led by the Gymnastic Sirignano
DESPERADO, the Man Who Flirts With Death
DEMON, in a Ride Through Fire
FLORENCE SPRAY, the Dainty Diver in the White Tights.
Elegantly Fitted Cafe and Grill and a Thousand Other Diversions.

EDUCATIONAL

Mills College

FOR YOUNG WOMEN

Only Woman's College on Pacific Coast. Offers same advantages as best Eastern institutions. Full Collegiate course. Degrees conferred. Third and fourth years of College Preparatory during 1909-10. Special opportunities in Domestic Science, Music and Art. Within reach of both Stanford and University of California. Earnest Christian influences; non-sectarian; all forms of healthful out-door amusements. Ideal location in beautiful Oakland hills. 1:10 from San Francisco. Fall term begins August 11, 1909. For catalogue and brochure of views address, President's Secretary, Mills College P. O., California.

Miss Harker's School

PALO ALTO, CALIFORNIA

Boarding and Day School for Girls. Certificate admits to College. Intermediate and Primary Departments. Special attention given to Music, Arts and Crafts. Send for catalogue. Eighth year begins August 16, 1909.

Miss West's School

2457 SCOTT STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Thirty-sixth year opens August 16, 1909. Accredited to University of California, Stanford, Wellesley, Vassar and Smith.

MISS HELEN A. O'CONNELL, PRINCIPAL

Miss Head's School

2538 CHANNING WAY, BERKELEY, CAL.

Boarding and day school for girls, accredited to the University of California, Stanford, Vassar, Smith and Wellesley; 22nd year begins August 9, 1909.

MARY E. WILSON, M. L., PRINCIPAL

St. Mary's College

BROADWAY AND 23d STREET, OAKLAND

Endowed with all rights and privileges of State University. Literary, scientific, civil, and mining engineering courses; complete business course. Studies resumed fall term, Wednesday, September 1st. Send for catalog to Registrar, Bro. Vellesian, President.

St. Matthew's Military School

BURLINGAME, CAL.

Rev. William A. Brewer, A. B., Rector.

Castilleja School

PALO ALTO, CALIFORNIA

Home and Day School for Girls. College preparatory and general courses. Intermediate and primary departments. Domestic Science, Music, Art, Out-of-Door Gymnasium. Pupils admitted to Stanford, University of California, Wellesley, and Smith, without examination. Illustrated Catalogue. Term opens August 30, 1909. Principal, MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B.

Lowan's Hill School

MILL VALLEY

A delightful home boarding school for girls. Preparatory for Colleges. Outdoor life. High school, intermediate and primary departments. Fall term begins August 9th.

MISS WOODMAN, Principal.

Irving Institute School for Girls

147 PRESIDIO AVENUE, SAN FRANCISCO

Residence, 3370 Washington Street

Opens August Second, 1909. Send for Catalogue.

MISS PINKHAM, Principal MISS AMY D. HARRISON, Associate

The Hamlin School

A Boarding and Day School for Girls

Opens Monday, August 9, 1909.

Accredited by the California Universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to high school graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma. Pupils charged from the week of entrance.

In place of the kindergarten, a French school has been opened, where the French language is taught by means of charts, pictures, games, songs and stories.

Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed, and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars, address MISS HAMLIN, 2230 Pacific Avenue, San Francisco.

The Raymond Coaching School

(TENTH YEAR)

2812 Clay Street San Francisco

W. H. V. RAYMOND, Principal — MISS C. L. RAYMOND, B. A., Associated Principal

Write for Detailed Information and Catalogue.

Manzanita Hall

PALO ALTO, CAL.

A home school for boys desiring a thorough preparation for college in a minimum of time. Location adjacent to Stanford University permits unusual advantages. Ample facilities for all athletic sports. Seventeenth year opens August 30. Send for illustrated catalogue.

W. A. SHEDD, Head Master.

Boone's University School for Boys

BERKELEY

Commences its twenty-eighth year, Tuesday, August 10th. Accredited to the University of California, Stanford, University of Michigan, Cornell and Pennsylvania.

Apply for Catalogue to

2029 Durant Ave. P. R. BOONE, Principal

Anderson Academy

IRVINGTON, CALIFORNIA

Excellently equipped, beautifully situated, offers greatest advantages to those wishing thorough preparation for college in least time possible. Splendid facilities for athletics, in which a master will coach. Next term begins August 10th. Send for catalogue.

WILLIAM WALKER ANDERSON, M. A., Principal.

The Chandler School For Girls

LOS ALTOS, CALIFORNIA

Beautiful grounds covering six acres in the foothills, three and one-half miles from Stanford University. Outdoor study and classwork. Address

MRS. MARY CHANDLER, Los Altos, California.

THE LYCEUM

2590 PINE STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Prepares for university, the law and medical colleges; seventeenth year; here you can save time and money; excellent teachers; special coaching for August examinations of the universities; we have prepared hundreds successfully; day and evening sessions.

FIRE PLACE "HOTEL VIRGINIA," LONG BEACH, CAL.

Stage

Dramatic Art in Grand Opera

How much dramatic art should a grand opera singer employ? "None," say some, who want their singing unadulterated, and care not if the performer stands like a wooden image throughout the most impassioned scenes, so long as the vocalization is as what it should be. "As much as possible," is the dictum of others, who do not mind if the singing is a trifle less good than it should be provided the acting that the role requires is acceptable. It was over this question that a companion and myself very nearly quarreled during a performance of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "I Pagliacci" at the Princess Theatre on a recent evening. In fact, we once or twice put ourselves in Gertrude Atherton's list of barbarians by making remarks anent the subject during the time the singing was going on. Both operas were provocative of such discussion. Colombini, who sings Turridi in the first mentioned piece, is a consummate actor, although his voice wants the true lyric tenor quality. But sometimes its defects are forgotten in his wonderful impersonation of the fickle lover, now venting scorn, now wrath, on the girl he has jilted. He gives a perfect simulation of disgust and annoyance at her persistence, and is transformed instantly into the pursuing gallant when Lola appears. Both in his merits and his faults, Colombini has a good counterpart in Duce-Merola, who plays Santuzza, the discarded maiden. Her voice is harsh, sometimes, at other times full and mellow; but always she is a tragedy queen, abandoning herself to unbridled grief or anger without an atom of overacting. The one in the cast who comes the nearest to combining both vocal and dramatic qualities is Di Giacomo, who as the wronged husband sings finely in a warm baritone, and does not offend by his acting—which is more than can be said of hosts of grand opera singers. There was an unbalanced cast in "I Pagliacci," that sublime little drama within a drama. Zara, who sang the clown, has not the depth or robustness of voice that the part requires—and he almost utterly fails in the interpretation of it. Did you ever see the great Salassa step in front of the curtain at the old Tivoli, and with infinite good humor "jolly" the audience while he sang the prologue? What grace and humor and badinage he put into that song! And what a clown he was all through the piece, save when tragic moments came, when he was totally adequate to the change. Zara, who has rather an agreeable voice with some good notes in it, sings the part with little comprehension and less spirit. The star of the cast was Bari, who not only is capable dramatically but has a remarkably pure and ringing tenor voice. He was received with the greatest of enthusiasm, and "Bis" was shouted at him from every part of the theatre until he was compelled to repeat his great song of sorrow at the end of the first scene. Mlle. Donner, who sang Nedda, revealed herself fitted rather for a musical comedy role than for a grand opera part, her voice being sweet and under good control, but entirely too small for the role.

—The Playgoer.

At the Orpheum

The Princess is not the only place in town where grand opera may be heard. It is served in tabloid form at the Orpheum this week, Miss Helena Frederick and others presenting "The Patriot," in which the father of his country is a prominent figure. Entrapped by tories who plan to kill him, Washington is saved by a girl at the sacrifice of her own life—a sacrifice wholly unnecessary except for the purpose of giving the piece the semblance of a plot. While the company is not remarkable in any way, the opera is put on acceptably, and some of its patriotic choruses arouse great applause. But that popular music stirs up greater enthusiasm than does classical in an Orpheum audience was demonstrated by the many encores that followed the singing of "O, You Kid," by Billy Clark, who warbles with delicious unction. He has a rival in another blackface comedian, one of the three Leightons, who goes through some rich absurdities, which are happily supplemented by his two team mates. One of the trio, who may best be described as the man with the idiot's face, is an extremely graceful and resourceful soft-shoe dancer, while the third one has a remarkably easy and nonchalant stage presence and manner. Altogether, the Leightons furnish about the best bit of diversion on this week's bill. Miss Charlotte Parry, who appears in "The Comstock Mystery," is announced as the most versatile actress on the American stage, and to witness her performance is heartily to concur in what the management says of her. There are fourteen parts in the play and of these Miss Parry portrays twelve, the other two being assumed by Reginald Parry as a detective and Frank Brink as a policeman. Appearing first as a senile servant who is questioned by the detective as to the circumstances of the Comstock murder, Miss Parry in quick succession represents eleven other people who are sent for and interviewed by the sleuth. Not only are her changes of make-up, dress and general appearance made with almost magical quickness, but in each part she acts with skill and discrimination. A word must be said too for Parry, who as the detective is Gillette-like in his thorough naturalness and ease of manner. In addition to all this, "The Comstock Mystery" has a good plot and striking situations. Jugglers and athletes help make up an excellent bill. Selma Braatz has been outdone by other jugglers in clever work, but not in the neatness with which she does numerous seemingly impossible tricks. As for her foil, who presumably is Mama Braatz—well, mama is some juggler herself, and handles soap bubbles filled with smoke with diverting facility and ease.

CHARLES SWICKARD

Of the American Theatre, under whose personal direction "The Duel" will be presented, beginning Sunday afternoon.

—The Playgoer.

Merry Widow's Last Week

"The Merry Widow" starts on her third and last week Sunday night at the Van Ness Theatre, and this engagement will probably go down in theatrical history as the record business for this city. It is a matter of much regret that this famous organization cannot remain longer, for there will be many disappointed theatregoers who will not have an opportunity to see this world-wide sensation. In "The Merry Widow," Franz Lehar, the composer, has found the missing link that has always crippled comic opera. He has woven romance, pathos and comedy together, blending them into a master plot and song. Through it all there runs a story as complete and fascinating as a Balzac novel. It sparkles with life and vivacity and there is unrestrained and not a little sensuous joy in every sentence. The bounding, rollicking abandon of it is delightful, the comedy laughable, and the romance holds the listener fascinated to the end. The company is incomparably the most pretentious and effective group of players ever heard in this city in light opera. Each member is conspicuous for individuality—in short, it is a splendidly balanced aggregation. The orchestra, under the direction of that master director, John McGhie, is thoroughly in keeping with Mr. Savage's well known ideas and high standards. You need not to be urged to attend the performance of "The Merry Widow," for all who can get in the theatre will be there this week. There will be an extra matinee Monday. The final performance will be given Saturday night, July 24th.

At the American

The American Theatre will open its summer stock season Sunday afternoon and continue until September, when the Shuberts will take possession of the house and offer Augustus Thomas' great play, "The Witching Hour." The first offering of the American stock company which is headed by Herschell Mayall and Miss Harriet Worthington, will be Otis Skinner's great success "The Duel." When "The Duel" was first presented in Paris the war between the church and State was at fever heat which accounts for the interest it excited despite the fact that it presented both sides of the discussion without championing either. "The Duel" is a romantic little story which weaves itself about the lives of three people, one a woman for whose possession there is a terrible conflict between two brothers. The brothers are religiously opposed, one of them being a doctor with absolutely no ecclesiastical affiliations while the other is a priest who took to the cloth much to the disgust of his atheist father and as a result brings about a family estrangement that means ostracism for the religious one, who, when he enters the church is forbidden by his parent to use the family name. For ten years he struggles on in his work without ever coming in contact with his favored brother, who is his sworn enemy. The woman in the case is the wife of a debauched duke who is under treatment at a sanitarium conducted by Dr. Morey, and seeing the physician daily a mutual admiration springs up. The Duchess is one of Abbe Daniel's communionists although he does not know it until she calls on him in fear of herself and her sinful passion for Dr. Morey. The priest falls in love with her and a battle ensues between the brothers for possession of her. The bishop, a dear friend of Abbe Daniel, brings about a solution of the controversy by deciding that the Duchess must marry the man she loves, the doctor. During the summer engagement of the American stock company capable support will be given Mr. Mayall and Miss Worthington by such players as Lillian Elliott, recently of the Ye Liberty stock company, Gerald Harcourt, W. L. Thorne, James Corrigan, and a host of other prominent players.

Alcazar Show Popular

"The Silver Girl" will be retained throughout the coming week at the Alcazar. All who have witnessed it pronounce it a rattling good play, and as a result there has been an increased attendance nightly since its first presentation. The Alcazar players are very happily cast in this story of East and West by Edward Peple. Louise Brownell, Bessie Barriscale, Claribel Becker, E. L. Bennison, A. Burt Wesner, Thurlow Bergen, Howard Hickman, William Garwood, Charles Trowbridge and Andrew Bennison are especially fitted to their roles. And the construction of the play is so clever as to keep four almost distinct stories running in such quick alternation that the audience is constantly interested in each and all of them. The main theme, Jefferson Hunter's estrangement from his foolish young wife, is involved with the story of the plot to steal "The Silver Girl" mine and the tale of Master Hunter's love affair with the dainty governess of his sister, to say nothing of the latter young lady's tender attachment to the clever attorney who saves the mine. "The Silver Girl" is a model for budding playwrights. "The Girl and the Judge," a Clyde Fitch comedy, will follow "The Silver Girl," with Mr. Bergen as The Judge and Miss Barriscale as The Girl.

Orpheum Offerings

The Orpheum program for next week is particularly rich in novelty. The newest girl ensemble, "The Electrified Girl Review," will be a chief attraction. With it comes Clara Nelson, the beautiful girl who has the endorsement of no less an authority than Charles Dana Gibson as being ideally fitted for the part of the Gibson widow in face, form, figure, carriage and expression. In addition to a sextette of handsome Gibson women, there will be a male Gibson type of a most pronounced order impersonated by Harry Turpin. The act is in three scenes, the first of which presents an artist's studio in which are posed in a large gilt frame many studies after the most popular of the Gibson drawings. The finale of the skit shows a yacht apparently running at full speed in the water with the entire company on board. The incidental songs and lyrics are the composition of Alfred Solman and Paul West. Lily Lena, "the dainty singer of dainty story songs," who will appear for the first time in this city, proved a great sensation in her line during the New York vaudeville season. All her songs are catchy and tuneful and she sings with charming expression and most amusing effect. Her costumes are beautiful and varied and she changes them at every exit. Julius Tannen, who since his last appearance here has scored heavily in several important and successful Broadway productions will be included in this program. He is a natural born monologuist, a brilliant wit and clever mimic. His imitations of De Wolf Hopper, David Warfield and Raymond Hitchcock are simply perfect. He does not, however, depend upon these for his success but rather on his original material which is really the most enjoyable part of his act. The Three Donals, brought direct from Europe exclusively for the theatres of the Orpheum Circuit are wonderful gymnasts who recently were the sensation of the Circus Busche in Vienna. They excel in feats of Herculean strength and among their remarkable achievements is "the human bridge" in which two of the Donals grasp the wrists of the third while he is lying on the floor and raise him to an upright position at arms length over their heads. Next week will be the last of Charlotte Parry, the marvelous Protean actress in "The Comstock Mystery," The velous Protean actress in "The Comstock Mystery," the and her company in the one act grand opera "The Patriot." A new series of Orpheum Motion Pictures will conclude the performance.

LILY LENA

The dainty English singer of dainty story songs.

"Squaw Man" at the Liberty

Next Monday evening the Bishop players at the Liberty playhouse will have the distinction of being the first to offer anywhere at popular prices, "The Squaw Man," Edwin Milton Royle's great play of Western life in which William Faversham was seen here originally and Dustin Farnum later. This piece has been spoken of as the closest approach to the true American play that has yet been given to the stage, and its strength and truth in the display of human emotion has been a subject of discussion to a greater extent than any other production made in several seasons. There is a charm about it that is positively entrancing, for the characters are gathered from many lands and from many parts of the country. Yet the whole is so artistically blended, and the story is one of such straightforward humanity that there can be detected in it not one false note or inconsistency. The story, which is that of an expatriated Englishman who becomes a "squaw man"—that is, marries an Indian woman—and finally comes into his own again is full of intense dramatic interest. Its scenes are vividly and sharply contrasted and many of its situations are unique, while its language is of that simplicity and directness which is always so effective upon the stage. The cast, headed by Sydney Ayres and Florence Oakley, will contain not a single weak spot and the scenic end of its presentation can be handled splendidly on the big revolving stage with which the theatre is equipped. "The Squaw Man" is to be seen for one week only, with the usual Saturday and Sunday matinees.

Last Week of Grand Opera

The sixth and last week of The International Grand Opera Company's season at the Princess Theatre will begin next Monday night. A splendid repertoire which includes all the greatest triumphs of the season will be presented. Monday evening "Traviata" will be sung with Norelli, Zara and Bari in the chief roles. Tuesday evening "Aida" will be presented with a most interesting cast. Madame Helene Therry will be heard for the first time here in the title role and Samoiloff will sing Rhamades. Arcangeli and Gravina will repeat former triumphs. Wednesday matinee and Friday evening "The Barber of Seville" will be sung for the first times this season with Norelli, Colombini, Arcangeli and Gravina. Wednesday evening "Il Trovatore" will be the program with Bertossi, Zara, Samoiloff and Oteri. Thursday evening "Fedora" will be presented with Therry, Colombini, Arcangeli and Gravina. Saturday matinee "Cavalleria Rusticana" and " 'I Pagliacci" will be given by special request with picked casts which will include Merola, De Giaccomo, Bari, Bertossi, Zara, Frasconi and Samoiloff. Saturday evening "Carmen" will be the attraction with Therry, Zara, and Colombini. Sunday evening the season will close with a splendid production of "L'Amico Fritz" of which Bertossi, Colombini and Arcangeli will be the principal features. "Rigoletto" will be given for the last time this Saturday night and this Sunday night will be devoted to "Giaconda."

Chutes Attractions

All of the splendid open air attractions that contributed to the success of the New Chutes' opening day will be offered patrons of the Fillmore street resort this coming week. Desperado will make his dare-devil leap from tower to chute; Florence Spray will do high and fancy diving; Demon will pedal the length of the chutes on his fiery bicycle and the Royal Banda Roma play extensive programs. The joy rides, the loops and the whirls will cut their various curves and the search lights trail the funmakers in their romps through the grounds. Sirignano, the spirited conductor of the Banda Roma out-Creatores Creatore in point of gymnastics. He leads with a spirit and dash and calls every muscle of his body into action. To watch him is an inspiration—an inspiration which is conveyed to his musicians who play with an animation that makes their music delightful. A valuable adjunct to the band is its soloist, Mme. Ermin Arnolds, who sings songs that satisfy. Desperado electrifies with his daring. The greater the rashness displayed by him in his leaps the better his audiences seem to like his work. In the act which he performs every afternoon and night he drops from a seventy-foot tower to a wooden chute three feet wide and twenty-five feet long. He strikes the surface of this with the flat of his body and the outstretched plams of his hands. The fall is made upon polished wood which serves to accelerate his descent and he is projected the length of the trough at terrific speed. Demon is another sensationalist who startles with the seeming madness of his purpose. He leads a bicycle to the top of the chutes, sets it on fire and rides it at break-neck speed into the water of the lake. Florence Spray is a particular favorite with the children. She dives from a seventy-foot elevation into four feet of water. Her costumes which she changes frequently are features of her exhibitions. A unique out-of-door entertainment which the New Chutes is offering is the motion picture exhibitions thrown upon a screen over the east end of the lake. Other forms of amusement are offered by entertainers located in the cafe and grill.

THE PERRY HOTEL Madison St. and Boren Ave. SEATTLE, WASH.

Every Modern Convenience—Absolutely Fire Proof
European Plan, The Highest Grade

Under new management, centrally located and commanding a view of the Olympics, Cascade Mountains, Mount Rainier and Puget Sound.

J. S. McTERNAN, Manager

The Other Lover

(Continued from Page 12.)

Jorgj was devouring him with his eyes, when he saw Nania enter. Then he trembled in his whole frame, and unconsciously recoiled, that the girl might not see him.

Nania was a slender and mournful-looking little thing. Her girlish face was always tragically serious, and the dark pallor of her delicate skin was heightened by the ashen hue of her blonde hair. It was magnificent, abundant, wavy hair, which weighed down her lily-like head. Her whole appearance was that of a child grown up too soon. Indeed, for two or three years, since the death of her mother, she had been the housekeeper.

She did everything, helped but little by Arrosa, and never wasted a minute of her time. Only for the last three weeks had she seemed neglectful of her domestic duties, and taken much time for her journeys to the brook.

From the road, Jorgj Preda, trembling and gloomy, fixed his flashing eyes on the window, still at heart filled with a gentle emotion at beholding the fragile girl who had bewitched him, and whom he would have defended even from the king himself.

Nania wore the costume of old Gavinu's native district, but the kerchief of the region in which she lived. Her bodice of well-worn brocade was laced in front with red cord, and her white sleeves were buttoned at the wrists. The skirt and apron were of simple, dark print, and there was no ornament save a little coral necklace around her slender throat. She was barefoot, bare-headed, and had brought a jug of water to the engineer's room.

Jorgj saw his sweethheart smile at the handsome gentleman, who fairly devoured her with his look and smile. Nania set the jug down in a corner, and then paused beside him. They talked, but from the place where he stood, Jorgj could hear nothing. Little wonder that he was overcome with spasms of rage and jealousy. Ah, there was no doubt, no doubt! Nania was false to him, Nania loved this clean, well-dressed, handsome gentleman!

The blood rushed to Jorgj's face, his temples throbbed. If he had had a gun, he would have fired through the window; he would have killed that fine gentleman who came to rob him of more than his life.

Suddenly he grew pale, and gave a second start, more vigorous than before. He thought he would go mad with rage

The engineer, after manv smiles and more words, had taken Nania's head between his hands, his long hands, white and delicate as those of a woman, and had covered it with kisses. Then he had embraced the girl, holding her to his bosom for a long time, and she both wept and smiled. Jorgj writhed with anguish. The engineer must have heard something, for suddenly he released Nania, and went to the window. Jorgj had self-possession enough to draw back near the wall, and was not seen, but the square of light disappeared, and he saw that the shutters of the window had been closed.

Then he was seized with infinite rage and yet great cowardliness; he was on the point of knocking at the door of the house and saying to old Gavinu:

"Look to what is happening, look to it!" But he did not do this. He decided to kill the engineer instead, and almost calmed by this idea, he went away.

At dawn, Jorgj Preda, posted behind a hedge, fifteen minutes' walk from the road-keeper's house, armed with a gun, awaited the passing of the engineer. His hedge commanded a long stretch of road, and he could see the bridge under which rippled a slender thread of water, half absorbed by the tall rushes and asphodels just beginning to bloom.

He thought again and again of the dream he had dreamed so many times; of the songs sung at the top of his voice that Nania might hear them from afar, accompanied by the murmur of the trees and the tinkling bells of the sheep that came every night to drink at that stream; for Jorgj respected the other brook as something sacred, since it supplied her house with water.

Still those for whom he was waiting did not come. Each minute seemed a century. Some one might pass and discover him, and in his fear, he even dreaded lest he might miss his aim.

Here they were at last! The sun was about to appear on the edge of the horizon when Jorgj perceived their horses, and heard the voice of his rival. Through the interwoven branches of his hiding place, with the eager, keen gaze of a falcon, he stared at the engineer more closely than he had done the night before, and a bitter smile contracted his thin, handsome lips, made pale and rough by the vigil of that long, infernal night.

On the point of assassinating a man, Jorgi Preda felt a violent desire to weep. The gentlemen drew near. In his mind's eye Jorgj saw Nania again, his little Nania whom he still adored like a saint, in the engineer's arms, and he raised his gun.

Coming within range, the engineer, not realizing the terrible danger, raised his head, took off his white hat, and held it on the pommel of his saddle for a moment; then a moment later he smiled, still chatting with his companion, and turned his face towards the hedge behind which stood Jorgj. He seemed to be looking at him. The sun rose, and its first yellow rays fell on the road and the two riders.

Jorgj did not fire. He had seen the engineer's eyes and smile, and a strange idea had suddenly flashed through his excited mind and stayed his hand.

STYLE and COMFORT

go hand-in-hand with every

STUDEBAKER

automobile. This explains why so many are owned by persons who are exceedingly discriminating and particular in their individual tastes.

"STUDEBAKER STAMINA"

is incorporated into every car which that concern puts out. It is founded upon more than sixty years of experience in vehicle construction. When an owner steps into his STUDEBAKER he is always sure of getting "there and back" no matter what the road conditions may be. That's what "Stamina" stands for—pretty good thing to have in your automobile.

Fremont at Mission

Studebaker

Phone Douglas 3000

The Anglo & London Paris National Bank

Of San Francisco

Successor of The London Paris National Bank of San Francisco, The Anglo-California Bank, Limited.

Northeast Cor. Pine and Sansome Sts., San Francisco

Sig. Greenebaum, Pres.; I. Steinhart, Chairman of Finance Committee; H. Fleishhacker, V.-Pres. and Man.; Alden Anderson, V.-Pres. and Sec.; Jos. Friedlander, V.-Pres.; R. Altschul, Cashier; C. F. Hunt, Asst., Cashier; A. Hochstein, Asst. Cashier; F. E. Beck, Asst. Cashier.

Capital $4,000,000.00

Surplus and Undivided Profits..... 1,500,000.00

We offer our customers every facility consistent with good banking and invite new accounts.

LOW RATES

TO

ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION

FOR ROUND TRIP TICKETS

FROM

San Francisco	$32.50
Sacramento	32.50
Lathrop	32.50
Stockton	32.50
Tracy	32.50
Suisun	32.50
Davis	32.50
Napa	32.75
Santa Rosa	33.60
Calistoga	33.95

Greatly reduced rates from other points in California. Tickets sold daily May 25 to September 30, and cover two months' trip going and coming via the famous

SHASTA ROUTE

OF THE

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Stopovers going and coming. Many other routes at slightly higher rates for you to select from.

Write or call on our nearest agent for full details of service, etc., or address

FLOOD BUILDING FOR INFORMATION

At two o'clock, leaning on his long staff, his shepherd's sceptre, standing as he had done the day before on the bank all covered with turf and daisies, he awaited Nania's arrival. That morning, when he went to Nuora with the fresh cheese and milk, Jorgj had changed all his clothes, and now, with his white shirt, his face pallid from the terrible emotion he had experienced, he seemed almost white. Suffering and insomnia had refined his features so much that hardly were they in the shade of the bank when Nania said to him:

"Why are you so handsome today?"

The little girl had a sad, sweet voice, rendered still more fascinating by her accent.

Jorgj, with gloomy eyes, at first did not answer, but stared at her fixedly almost as though he would read her soul.

"You are handsomer than I," he said in an angry voice. Then roughly taking her water jug from her, he set it on the ground saying:

"Today we must have a long talk, Nania."

She was frightened, and gazed at him in terror. With her large flowered kerchief spread over her shoulders like a mantle, Jorgj thought her so beautiful that suddenly his face softened, and he gazed at her ecstatically.

"Sit down," said he, forcing her to seat herself on a stone, "and let us talk."

"I cannot stay, I cannot stay," said she trembling. "Father—"

"Your father is far away, and no one will see us, and even if they do see us what harm is there? Are we not old friends?"

"Oh dear, dear, I cannot—"

In reality, Nania felt great pleasure at the idea of remaining seated near Jorgj, and although she was greatly frightened she did not move.

"What is the matter with you today?" she asked faintly, "what is the matter? Are you angry because I did not come yesterday? You know the superintendent and the engineer came and I had so much to do. There is no one else in the house."

She was silent, her eyes clouded with some sad thought, and Jorgj, seeing her grow still paler, doubtless at thought of the engineer, trembled, and drew further away.

He still stared at the girl's face, and his mind was filled with gloom. No, there could be no doubt, Nania was false to him!

"What is the matter, what is the matter?" she repeated.

"What is the matter?" cried Jorgj, waving his arms like a madman. "You know better than I what is the matter!"

"I know nothing! Are you mad?"

"Yes, I think I am going mad! Nania, listen, you are young, but you are worse than I. However, do not laugh at me, do not dare! You took me for a boy, but I am not! I am only a poor unfortunate; but you must not laugh at me, for I can make you pay dearly for your game. Nania, do you hear?"

Nania looked at him in surprise, and found no answer to his furious outburst..

"Why do you not answer?" cried Jorgj.

"Speak softly," said the girl, leaning towards him. "If my father heard you—"

"What do I care? Especially as I shall have nothing more to do with you!"

"But what is the matter, what have people told you?" she asked in despair.

"Nothing, people have told me nothing; I have seen with my own eyes; I saw last night. Oh, why did you leave the window open, my beauty? But this morning your fine gentleman came near being murdered! I did not kill him because a sudden wild idea came to me. I saw him smile, and it seemed to me that he resembled you, and I thought—see how mad I was!—I thought: 'Who knows, perhaps he is her father!' Now I realize that I was mad. Your father indeed! Your father is old Gavinu, may the devil take him, and you are—you are—" concluded Jorgj, swallowing a terrible insult, "you are the engineer's sweetheart!"

All the colors of the rainbow passed over Nania's pathetic little face. Her heart, her passionate heart seemed almost bursting through the worn brocade of the old bodice, and great tears shone in her eyes. She did not try to deny it, nor even to speak. With a great childish fear that Jorgj might do her some harm, she thought of fleeing, and started off so suddenly that the boy could hardly overtake her on the road.

"Nania," he cried, smiling in spite of himself, and seizing her by the arm, "I did not think you so wicked. Why do you run away? Are you afraid that I might kill you?"

She, too, could not keep from smiling. Her handkerchief had fallen from her head, and the sun shone on her golden hair.

Jorgj gave an exclamation of joy and surprise at sight of her smiling face and blue eyes, a greenish blue, exactly the color of the engineer's eyes.

"Nania, Nania, forgive me," said he, smiling through his tears. "Come, come and let us make peace. As true as there is a God, as true as there is our Lady of the Miracle, I shall not tell anyone. I shall not even ever say another word to you about it again, never! Come and take your water jug, come, come—"

He almost lifted her and led her back to the shade. Nania seemed dead, so pale and motionless was she, but when Jorgj said: "Who would believe it, who would have thought—your mother—" Nania started up, her face crimson, her eyes flashing with wrath and tears, and cried:

"My mother is dead! Respect her, for she was a saint. The engineer kissed and embraced me! Kill me, then, Jorgj Preda, kill me, but do not say anything against my mother!"

She fell to the ground in a paroxysm of grief. With these words she felt she was losing everything. She was losing the love of Jorgj, whom she adored with all the enthusiasm of her fifteen years, of her first love. She was losing her dreams and dearest hopes, her honor, perhaps even endangering her own and the engineer's lives, but what did that matter? Her mother, whose fault was unknown to all, and especially to Gavinu Faldedda, who still mourned her and adored her memory, would be saved by the sacrifice.

But Jorgj Preda had seen.

For some moments he stood motionless and silent, looking at the little girl seated on the grass, still weeping. Her childish, desperate sobs were lost in the silence, and in all the sleeping countryside Jorgj heard no other sound.

He was about to go away, feeling himself vile and unworthy before little Nania, but he could not move a step. Instead, he remembered all the promises they had exchanged, remembered the dreams of love he had dreamed at night, while the sheep were drinking under the bridge, down there amid the asphodels and oleanders; he thought that in three years he would be able to marry Nania, and he bent over her.

"Leave me," said she.

But Jorgj picked her up as though she were a feather, took her in his arms, and covered her face with kisses, until he had succeeded in calming her and making her smile.

TOWNSEND'S
CALIFORNIA GLACÈ FRUITS AND CANDIES
27 Years in Palace Hotel Building
All Orders Given Prompt Attention at
46 MARKET STREET
Phone Douglas 4814
Factory, 117 SAN JOSE AVE. Phone Mission 378
Also at News Stands of the Fairmont and St. Francis Hotels

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.
Eureka Stoves and Ranges
Kitchen Utensils
Hotel Kitchen Outfits a Specialty
"Alaska" and "Opal" Refrigerators
Mantels, Grates, Tiles
NOW LOCATED AT 557-563 MARKET ST., opp. Junction Sutter and Sansome Sts.
PHONE DOUGLAS 4640

Summer Resort Arrivals

Tavern of Tamalpais: San Francisco, Mrs. A. J. Fents, Geo. W. Steggens, Mrs. L. Steffens, Mrs. C. Mertens, John G. Barker and wife, Miss Barker, Miss Davis, Jeff Doolittle, W. H. Hundle, Miss J. W. Warren, C. Plummer, R. E. Robinson, C. E. Thompson and wife, Mrs. Alice McFarland, Mrs. V. P. Versalovich, Mrs. G. N. Kneass.

Hotel Del Monte: San Francisco, T. H. Williams, Mrs. B. V. Hutchinson and son, Wm. S. Hyman, Ida Hyman, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Old, Miss K. M. Field, H. E. Passow and chauffeur, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Parks, Captain and Mrs. A. W. Woodside, Mrs. Zona Lang, W. A. Lamont, Mr. and Mrs. A. Cohneeicle, Mrs. L. Friedman, Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Larzelere, Mrs. L. H. Miles, Miss Neva Honk, W. B. Bolcom, Charles H. Small, Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Martin, Mrs. H. D. Loveland, J. T. Jones, A. T. Brock, Mr. and Mrs. M. Abrahams, James Jenkins, George Liebenhauer, Mrs. F. McComas, Ivan B. Beer, Mrs. E. O. Hortop, Caroline Hortop, W. H. Dunphy, George Newman, Cam S. Falk, L. E. Hanchett, C. M. Corbet, Milton Davis, Cutler Paige, A. M. Rosenbaum, Edward B. Corbet, Mr. and Mrs. M. Abrams, Mr. and Mrs. S. Witkowski, Milton Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Herman C. Peters, H. M. Landsberger, Major Jno. P. Hains, U. S. A., L. S. Greenebaum, A. Meertief, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Kartoly, F. C. Mesker, Jno. R. Selby.

Hotel del Coronado: San Francisco, Mrs. Mary M. Roulean, Miss Blanche Roulean, Mrs. L. S. Claybaugh, P. Ehrenfeldt, D. Young, Charles L. Fox, James H. Fannin, Theo. Peters, Mr. and Mrs. Reardon T. Lyons.

Paraiso Hot Springs: Jos. Nolan, Dr. W. B. Coffey, Mrs. W. B. Coffey, Miss Laura Coffey, Miss Abbie Schrank, Mrs. L. O'Harra, Miss Genevieve Treadwell, Dr. and Mrs. E. V. Pieper. A. J. Zabala, J. F. Davies, H. H. Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Robb, A. L. Findley, George H. Sandy, Mrs. G. W. Gwin, Mrs. A. H. Vliet, Mr. and Mrs. S. Livingston, Mr. and Mrs. R. V. Bon, Miss Evelyn Bon, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Travers, Mrs. D. J. Daley, Miss E. Daley, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Seymour, Wm. Seymour Jr., Gertrude Thorton, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. McDougall, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Lyons, Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Whitely, H. E. Bostwick, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. A. Levensalen, C. E. Haskell, Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Bostwick, W. E. Fitzpatrick.

Pacific Grove Hotel: San Francisco, Mrs. W. F. Feader, Evelyn M. Feader, C. G. Bagnall, F. E. Baker, F. B. Gilger, H. Hollander, E. F. Miller, M. Griffin, B. A. Harris, J. E. Dodge, J. Elliot Jennings, F. P. Cox, W. A. Cory and wife, Mrs. A. J. Cartwright, Misses Cartwright, Chas. Small, C. S. McCord, D. L. Henneckson, A. B. Moore, A. E. Axe, M. Olsen, W. G. Jubge, F. H. Hopper, W. G. Tibbets and family, R. F. Taber, Edw. Topham, S. W. Barry, Mrs. St. Pierre, Miss R. Aird, John Hedly, R. D. McElroy and wife.

Vendome Hotel: San Francisco, A. Theisen, Miss Choywski, J. W. Hughedy and wife, John A. Kennedy, Henry C. Nahl, A. K. Whittem, W. B. Ragland, B. B. Wilcox, N. J. Mitchell, P. T. Clay, A. G. McCarthy, E. M. Malleson, C. J. Creamer and wife, Wm. Rowe, Geo. R. Webster, E. H. Louis and family, Geo. H. Hoolie, Chas. J. Hagherty and wife, Fred T. Moore and wife, H. H. Eyuemann, Mrs. H. S. Cooper, Mr. and Mrs. Holton, Miss Koch, Miss Velasco, Mr. and Mrs. Leider, Wm. O. Morgan, F. W. Benney, Dr. W. B. Coffey, Dr. L. Gardner, J. Newman, J. B. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Scott Jr., Mrs. H. T. Sullivan and children, Mrs. C. Ivancovich, R. M. Roye, Mrs. Max G. McNamee-Burke, Mrs. Chas. Marshall, Mrs. Mildred Burke, Edna L. B. Keyes, Miss S. Bankofsky, Sam Bankofsky, W. F. Slocumb, Chas. J. Pennell, J. S. Fairweather, Chas. E. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Queen, Mrs. J. B. Queen and child, Mrs. Albert Harris, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Smith, Max M. Dill and wife, Wm. Kolb and wife, Percy Bronson, W. B. Ragland, P. T. Clay, Mrs. Robert Sherwood.

Aetna Springs: San Francisco, Mrs. E. A. Bresse, Miss Lucile Bresse, Miss Metha MasMahan, Mrs. J. Downey Harvey, Mrs. Oscar Cooper, Miss Phelan and maid, Lionel Lindsay, Enrique Grau, Jas. D. Phelan, Mrs. Christine Blixt, Miss Aurora Hogrelius, Mrs. Horace Newell, Mrs. S. B. Bowens, Mr. and Mrs. Francis G. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Bush Finnell, Mrs. T. F. Bannan, Miss Myrtle Bannan, Miss Isabel Bannan, Mr. and Mrs. R. Tibbits, Miss N. Boylan, Miss J. Boylan, Miss Laura Sullivan, Miss Ella Sullivan, B. W. Randolph, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. S. Levy.

STREET SCENE IN JEYPORE, INDIA

Hotel Rafael: Mr. and Mrs. A. Greenebaum and daughters, Miss Barbara Kimble, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Somers, Mr. and Mrs. M. Washburn, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. L. Alexander, Charles Long, David Backman, Mr. and Mrs. Harry W. Pertt, Mr. and Mrs. Harry N. Stetson, E. J. Vogel, Wilbur Quick, Z. E. Abrahamson, W. L. Glascock and wife, Gustav F. Sture, H. W. Gray and family, Dr. Raymond Russ, Mr. and Mrs. Burt L. Davis, Edgar A. Waiss, Mrs. E. K. Kirk, M. S. Nickelsburg, Miss Adelaide Hewey, Miss Alice Gutheil, S. M. Heller.

BONNIEBRAE COTTAGE, ANDERSON ACADEMY, IRVINGTON, CAL.

Auto Notes

The Western Automobile Club, recently formed, promises to give a new impetus to automobiling in this city. The club has secured large and convenient quarters in the Jefferson Building, and has fitted them up with every convenience for members and guests. There will be a large garage at which repairs may be made while autoists are having their luncheon or dinner in the well-appointed grill, which will be a feature of the club. There will be reading rooms, baths, showers, a gymnasium, billiard and pool tables, and in fact everything that will be found in any first class social club. The membership is already large, and promises to increase.

Stanislaus County came through strong with the automobile business last week. To the prosperous town of Newman, the Pioneer Automobile Company sent three cars, Archie Stevenson taking a six-cylinder forty horsepower Thomas, Ben Levy, the jeweler, a Chalmers "30" and H. S. Stevens, a Chalmers "30."

Commenting on the Glidden tour, the start for which took place Monday morning amid a big demonstration, a well-known writer in an eastern automobile magazine says: "If light be needed a whole lighthouse full was shed by the pathfinding trip of the sturdy little Studebaker E-M-F '30' for the coming Glidden tour. In the first place, the American car has again demonstrated its ability to meet and overcome any difficulty that may be met. The American manufacturer has mastered the art of building a car that can go and keep on going over good or bad roads or no roads at all." The run is from Detroit to Denver.

The automobile race meet held on the Emeryville track, Oakland, on July 5th, under the auspices of the Reliance Athletic Club of that city, was one of the most successful of like events held on the coast this season, and attracted an attendance variously estimated at from 15,000 to 20,000. The feature of the meet was the performance of the two little Buick "White Streaks" which started in three events, including the free-for-all, the two winning both first and second places in all three events. The consistency with which these two little speed wonders reeled off mile after mile strengthened the confidence, and if possible, increased the admiration and popularity with the public which the little "White Streaks" have so long enjoyed.

The Modesto and Turlock district has been making good all the promises made when irrigation was first introduced there, and practically all the farmers in the district are buying automobiles.

H. B. Odell has joined the Pioneer Company and will be identified with the selling staff, and make his headquarters at the San Francisco office. Mr. Odell has but recently arrived from the east where he was prominently connected with the automobile industry.

The following telegram has been received by Calvin C. Eib of the Pioneer Automobile Company from E. P. Brinegar of the same firm, who is now in the east arranging for a fresh supply of cars:

New York, July 6, 1909.

Mr. Calvin C. Eib, care Pioneer Automobile Co.,
901 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco.

Demonstrating Hudson runabout going forward to you by express today. Greatest value ever offered; less than fifteen hundred dollars. Car powerful, fast, and material and workmanship excellent. Have ordered five hundred. We should sell one hundred before September 1st. Price nine hundred; astounding. —E. P. Brinegar.

This machine, unlike other cars formerly selling at a price under one thousand dollars, embodies many features which are usually found only in the structural end of cars costing from $2000 to $10,000, viz.: three speed selective type transmission, 1 beam front axle, water cooling system and large 32-inch wheels. It is estimated that the output from the Hudson factory for the year 1910 will be four thousand cars. The entire efforts of the builders will be concentrated in the production of one model of machine, the Hudson "20," at $900.

With his car, a Studebaker "30" of the Model "C" type, packed with camping, hunting and fishing paraphernalia, Frank Maskey, the popular candy man of this city, is now well on his way to Humboldt County where he will live "close to nature" for many weeks. Maskey is accompanied by his chauffeur, A. Monroe. The confectioner expects to bag some big game and come back to his home town with many trophies, and incidentally add to the fame of his car.

A Domestic Eye Remedy

Compounded by Experienced Physicians. Conforms to Pure Food and Drugs Law. Wins Friends Wherever Used. Ask Druggists for Murine Eye Remedy. Try Murine in Your Eyes. You Will Like Murine. Try it in Baby's Eyes. It Soothes.

DIVIDEND NOTICE

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, Market and Sansome streets, Branches, 624 Van Ness avenue and 3039 16th street. For the half year ending June 30, 1909, a dividend has been declared on deposits in the savings department of this bank at the rate of four (4) per cent per annum, free of all taxes, payable on and after Thursday, July 1, 1909. Dividends not called for are added to and bear the same rate of interest as the principal from July 1, 1909. E. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager. 26-4

Choose Your Oil As You Would Your Car

Imperfect lubrication causes more trouble, more expense, more breakdowns than anything else about your car. There'll be no carbon deposit to foul the cylinders and spark-plugs, no friction, no oil-troubles if you get

ZEROLENE

Auto-Lubricating Oil

You can count on perfect lubrication at all times, under all conditions, entire freedom from trouble with carbon deposits, and increased power from your engine.

Zerolene is made in one grade only, for all types of cylinders and bearings. Produced in only one place in the world. Put up in sealed cans with patent spout that cannot be refilled. Also in barrels for garage trade. Sold by dealers everywhere. Write for booklet, "21,000 Miles with Zerolene," Free.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(Incorporated)

Chalmers-Detroit "30"

The beginning and the end car.

In the beginning the initial price is slightly higher, in the end the upkeep and after expense is much less.

"Anybody can cut prices but it takes brain to make a better article."
(Elbert Hubbard.)

Buying a good car is only one step in the right direction.

BUT

Buying a good car from the most reliable dealers on the Pacific Coast is your absolute assurance of satisfaction.

The Pioneer Automobile Company is the largest concern west of Chicago giving its undivided attention to the sale of automobiles. Ten years in business assures our stability and perpetuates our guarantees. Our business motto is "Right or Made Right."

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

901 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

Oakland San Francisco Fresno

A Particular Store for Particular People

TRADE MARK Quality McLean's Service 1158-1168 SUTTER ST. SAN FRANCISCO

PHONE FRANKLIN 2810

BOSTON BROWN BREAD

Our sales of this article since we commenced its manufacture has increased each week until now it is one of the leading article in the department. Made in one size only.

10c each

L. D. McLEAN CO.

IMPORTERS AND GROCERS

1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

Letters

Will Appeal to Women

"Red Horse Hill" is a novel that will appeal especially to womankind, since it touches on the theme of divorce and remarriage, child labor and higher education for women; yet it must not be mistaken for a tract or a sociological discussion, for it is just a plain story that can be read solely for the interest in the plot and characters, and need not keep the sympathetic awake at night. Maris Brue was the usual spoiled child of a wealthy father who, after her mother's death, never subjected his little daughter to any of the humiliations of restraint or obedience. Her success in molding father and servants to her whims gave her a false idea of her abilities, and when she determined to marry the man of her choice notwithstanding his lack of education or breeding or anything else save animal beauty, certain that her love would supply all the rest, she, very naturally, though to the surprise of no one but herself, fell into a serious error. Martin, apparently, had not a single redeeming quality, and when Maris resorted to the sort of heroics which might have had some effect on a higher nature, he eloped with one of the servants, taking their only child, a little girl, with him. All this is preliminary to the first chapter, in which we find Maris the petted and indulged wife of one of a firm of mill owners, recently come south to assume active management of the property. Alden, New England by birth, is represented as the embodiment of conscience. He cannot tolerate the slightest deviation from truth and will not forgive deception of any kind. Maris had been stenographer to the firm in New York and he had not the remotest notion that she was otherwise than what she represented herself to be, a young and inexperienced girl. Though her home was in North Carolina and the mill at Red Horse Hill in the southern State, none the less, Maris had been mildly opposed to the removal, solely because she had an ill-defined fear that her past history might in some way come to her husband's knowledge, and the sequel proved her to be correct. It must not be assumed that she had parted lightly with her little daughter, but, on the contrary, she had never ceased to search for the recreant husband in the hope of recovering the child, until she had had forwarded to her proofs of his death in a railroad accident and burial in a pauper's grave, proofs which she did not seek to authenticate and which subsequently turned out to have been manufactured for her ensnarement, for Martin was discovered later, an inhabitant of the mill town; and the most forlorn little waif amongst the workers was the unrecognized daughter of the proprietor's wife, rescued after a frightful accident that stopped just this side of killing or maiming her for life. Then the rigid moralist, Dwight Alden, who can tolerate no deviation from the straight line of conduct, and who promptly repudiates Maris as soon as he discovers the concealed chapter of her life, yet is ready to enter into a compromise by which, his pride being saved, he will receive Maris and let her keep the child provided it is given out that she has merely adopted the little waif out of pity. Maris on the other hand, who married Martin in the face of all opposition, and who encouraged both Alden and another suitor when she had no reason to believe herself free, and remarried the instant she received tidings of his taking off, is now horrified at the mere idea of letting a legal document sever the sacramental tie, though Martin had long since married again. Alden's sister Ruth, an advanced teacher of sociologic and economic science in a New England college for girls, appears on the scene shortly after the Aldens establish themselves in South Carolina, intent on investigating the condition of the mill laborers, and close on her heels comes a young doctor to study the tuberculosis situation, and for a little while it looks as though Sidney McCall was about to desert her legitimate task of story telling to plunge into a disquisition on these two popular topics; but the young people proceed to fall in love with each other as sensibly as two such devotes to science can, and we are not invited to cross the threshold of either a hospital ward or an ill-conducted mill, though there is promise that at least at Red Horse conditions will be improved. Two things some novelist might enlighten us upon to our profit—how it happens that girls without the preliminary training and discipline of industry and application always make such a phenomenal success of their ventures into business life, even when they don't marry "the boss," and how these deserted and lost children, despite neglect and unfavorable environment, invariably learn at the first hint the lessons which careful parents find even their best efforts and constant iterations inadequate to impress upon the minds of those who have example and approval to strengthen wavering resolution. Little, Brown & Co. are the publishers of this as well as the other books of Sidney McCall.

A DAINTY TOILET ARTICLE

Every lady who desires to keep up her attractive appearance, while at the theatre, attending receptions, when shopping, while travelling and on all occasions should carry in her purse a booklet of Guraud's Oriental Beauty Leaves. This is a dainty little booklet of exquisitely perfumed powdered leaves which are easily removed and applied to the skin. It is invaluable when the face becomes moist and flushed and is far superior to a powder puff as it does not spill and soil the clothes. It removes dirt, soot and grease from the face, imparting a cool delicate bloom to the complexion. Sent anywhere on receipt of Five Cents in stamps or coin. F. T. Hopkins, 37 Great Jones street, New York.

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Yards and Planing Mills 6th and Channel Streets

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. Action No. 17750, Dept. No. 5.

EVA NATHAN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of EVA NATHAN, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Jones Street, distant thereon Southerly ninety (90) feet from the Southerly line of Pacific Street, running thence Southerly and along said line of Jones Street forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty seven (137) feet, six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet, six (6) inches to said line of Jones Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of fifty vara lot number Eight Hundred and Sixty-one (861) of the City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit: for judgment establishing and quieting said plaintiff's title to all said real property as the owner thereof in fee simple, and determining all adverse claims thereto, and ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, and for such other and further relief as may be just and proper in the premises, under and pursuant to the provisions of the Act of the Legislature of California entitled, "An Act to provide for the establishment and quieting of title to real property in case of loss and destruction of public records," approved June 16, 1906, and the Act of the said Legislature, amending the same, approved March 6, 1909.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 2nd day of July, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) By M. P. BRUTON, Deputy Clerk.
H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk, a newspaper, on the 17th day of July, A. D. 1909.

DEVOTO & RICHARDSON, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
Foxcroft Building, San Francisco.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 22931, Dept. No. 10.

CATHERINE FRANCIS BERTRAND, Plaintiff,

vs.

BENJAMIN A. BERTRAND, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City of and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Benjamin A. Bertrand, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion of said plaintiff; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 11th day of May, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk

(Seal) By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ORNBAUN, FRASER & LYNCH, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
727 Pacific Building, San Francisco, Cal. 6-19-10

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No.17271.

WELLS, RUSSELL & COMPANY, (a Corporation), Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest, in or Lien Upon, the Real Property herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Wells, Russell & Company, (a Corporation), plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows

First Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northwesterly line of Natoma Street, formerly Everett Street, distant two hundred (200) feet southwesterly from the intersection of the southwesterly line of Third Street with said line of Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches; thence at a right angle northwesterly eighty (80) feet; thence northeasterly parallel with Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches and thence at a right angle southeasterly eighty (80) feet to the place of beginning; being a portion of the 100 vara Lot No. 34.

Second Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Fourteenth Avenue, distant one hundred and fifty (150) feet westerly from the northwesterly corner of Fourteenth Avenue and P Street; thence westerly along said line of Fourteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet; thence at a right angle northerly two hundred (200) feet to Thirteenth Avenue; thence at a right angle easterly along the south line of Thirteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet, and thence at a right angle southerly two hundred (200) feet to the place of beginning; being a part of the O'Neill and Haley Tract, as per map on file in the Recorder's Office of said City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that its title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover its costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June A, D, 1909. By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attorneys for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL AND PERSONAL ESTATE AT PRIVATE SALE SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 6670, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of JOHN DEMARTINI, Deceased.

FLORA DEMARTINI, as Administratrix of the estate of John Demartini, deceased, having presented to this Court her verified petition for sale of all the real and personal property of which said decedent died seized and possessed, as far as known to your petitioner, which property is situated in the County of Tulare, State of California, and which is fully described in the petition of said administratrix, to which reference is made;

And it appearing therefrom that it is necessary to sell the whole thereof in order to pay the debts against the estate and costs of administration;

It is ordered that said petition be filed, and all persons interested in the estate of said John Demartini, deceased are directed to appear before the Court on the 20th day of July, 1909, at 10 o'clock a. m. of said last named date, at the courtroom of said Court, Grant Building, Southeast corner of Seventh and Market Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause why an order should not be granted to said administratrix to sell at private sale all of said real estate and the personal property belonging to the estate of said John Demartini, deceased, as prayed for in said petition; and it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published four (4) successive weeks in the "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco.

Done in open Court this 10th day of June, 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed June 11, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk, by H. G. Benedict, Deputy Clerk.

J. A. STEPHENS, Attorney for Flora Demartini, Administratrix,
630 Chronicle Building, San Francisco, Cal. 6-19-5

"My dear, I'm so sorry. I heard of that dreadful encounter you and your husband had with a horrid pole-cat."

"Oh, we didn't mind that in the least. It happened when we were out in our odormobile."

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17318, Dept. No. 4.

KATE E. BOYANTON, sometimes known as KATE E. BOYNTON, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Kate E. Boyanton, sometimes known as Kate E. Boynton, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Eddy Street distant One hundred and twenty (120) feet easterly from the easterly line of Scott Street; running thence easterly along said northerly line of Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet and to the westerly line of Farren Avenue; thence at right angles northerly and along said westerly line of Farren Avenue Seventy-five (75) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet; and thence at right angles southerly Seventy-five (75) feet to the place of beginning. Being a portion of Block No. 431, Western Addition.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that the title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 29th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

CERTIFICATE OF COPARTNERSHIP—No. 338.

Know All Men by These Presents:

That J. C. MONTGOMERY and MARY MAGUIRE do hereby certify and declare that they are partners doing business in the State of California, under the firm name and style of the St. Anthony Hotel Company, with principal place of business in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California; that the purposes for which the copartnership is formed are to provide for entertaining strangers and travelers for compensation, and to this end to acquire property by lease or otherwise to be rented, or to be used for the above purposes, but neither partner hereto shall or will acquire any property by lease or otherwise, for any of the purposes herein stated, without first obtaining from his copartner the consent to do so.

That the names in full of all the members of this copartnership and their places of residence are as follows, to-wit: J. C. Montgomery, 825 Howard Street, San Francisco, California, Mary Maguire, 825 Howard Street, San Francisco, California.

Witness our hands and seals this 12th day of July, 1909.

J. C. MONTGOMERY.
MARY MAGUIRE.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
City and County of San Francisco—ss.

On this 12th day of July, 1909, before me, I. L. Jacobi, a Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, residing therein, duly commissioned and sworn, personally appeared J. C. Montgomery and Mary Maguire, known to me to be the persons described in, whose names are subscribed to and who executed the within instrument, and they acknowledged to me that they executed the same.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal in said City and County of San Francisco, State of California, the day and year first hereinabove written.

(Seal) I. L. JACOBI,
Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Endorsed: Filed July 13, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys,
Oscar Luning Building, San Francisco, Cal. 7-17-5

LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST

DIAMONDS AND GEMS

BALDWIN JEWELRY CO.

1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Department No. 10, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of BRIDGET GRANT, Deceased.

John A. McGee, the Executor of the Last Will and Testament of BRIDGET GRANT, deceased, having filed his petition herein, duly verified, praying for an order authorizing and directing the executor herein to convey to T. A. McCaffrey the real property described in said petition for the purposes and on the grounds therein set forth.

It is therefore ordered by the said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before said Superior Court on Thursday, the 22nd day of July, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10, Probate, of said Superior Court, Grant Building, southeast corner Seventh and Market Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause why the said petition of said executor should not be granted and why said executor should not convey to said T. A. McCaffrey the real property described in the said petition.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Dated, June 16th, 1909. 6-19-5

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17438, Dept. No. 12.

GEORGE J. MARTIN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of George J. Martin, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue distant thereon one hundred (100) feet northerly from the northerly line of C Street, running thence northerly along said westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue, twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angle westerly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angle southerly, twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angle easterly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue and the point of commencement. Being a part of Outside Land Block No. 379.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that his title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 30th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
German Savings & Loan Society (a Corporation)	530 California Street, San Francisco, Cal.
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17244.

HANNAH EMERY, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Hannah Emery, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Van Ness Avenue, distant eighty (80) feet northerly from the northwesterly corner of Van Ness Avenue, and Turk Street, running thence northerly and along the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches; thence at right angles southerly and parallel with Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles easterly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches to the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue and place of beginning; being a portion of Block Seventy-nine (79) Western Addition;

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: NONE.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Esq., Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market St., San Francisco. 7-10-10.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MORTGAGED

In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California—No. 23,856, Dept. 9.

In the Matter of the Estate of SUSAN BLANC, Deceased.

Ida E. Connor, as the administratrix of the estate of SUSAN BLANC, deceased, having this day filed herein her duly verified petition praying for an order authorizing her to mortgage the real property hereinafter described, belonging to the estate of said decedent,

It is hereby ordered and directed that all persons interested in the estate of said SUSAN BLANC, deceased, be and they are hereby directed to appear before said Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, Department Number 9 thereof, on Friday, the 23rd day of July, 1909, at 10:00 o'clock a. m. of said day, at the Courtroom of said Department, in the Grant Building, southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, the same being the time and place hereby fixed for hearing the said petition, then and there to show cause, if any they have, why the following described real estate situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows, to wit:

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Jackson Street, distant thereon Seventy-two (72) feet Easterly from the corner formed by the intersection of said line of Jackson Street with the Easterly line of Drumm Street; running thence Easterly along said line of Jackson Street Fifty (50) feet; thence at right angles Northerly Forty (40) feet; thence at right angles Westerly and parallel with Jackson Street Fifty (50) feet; and thence at right angles Southerly and parallel with Drumm Street Fifty (50) feet, and to the place of beginning, or such part thereof as to the Court may seem meet, should not be mortgaged for the sum of Five Thousand Dollars ($5000.00) or such lesser sum as to the Court may seem just, as prayed for in petition on file, reference to which is hereby made for further particulars.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four (4) successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Dated, June 17th, 1909.

GARRET W. McENERNEY, Attorney for Administratrix,
Flood Building, San Francisco, Cal. 6-26-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 22419, Dept. No. 10.

HILDA M. WILSON, Plaintiff,

vs.

FRANK J. WILSON, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Frank J. Wilson, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion of plaintiff; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 14th day of April, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

(Seal) By W. R. CASTAGNETTO, Deputy Clerk.

A. MORGENTHAL, Attorney for Plaintiff,
1530 Grove Street, San Francisco, Cal. 5-22-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco State of California—No. 16627.

ROBERT HECTOR, Jr., Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Robert Hector, Jr., plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest, or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to wit:

Lot number 210 as laid down, delineated and designated on a certain map on file in the office of the recorder of the said City and County of San Francisco, known as "Holiday Map A." Said map was filed in the office of the recorder of the City and County of San Francisco on the 1st day of May 1863.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit, that it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute, that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description, and that plaintiff recover costs herein, and have such other and further relief as may seem meet and proper in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 4th day of June, 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The following persons are said to claim an interest in or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names.	Addresses.
Abraham C. Freeman	3034 Washington St., San Francisco, Cal.
Ellita Gamboni Mazzitelli	San Francisco, Cal.
Frank Shay, Administrator of the estate of William Hale, Deceased,	640 Fairmont avenue, Oakland, California.

Dated, this 4th day of June, 1909.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in San Francisco Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation, on the 19th day of June, 1909.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
45 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. 6-19-10

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Mackenzie Gordon

TENOR

TEACHER OF SINGING { in all its branches, from the rudiments of tone formation to the highest finish and Completion of Public Singing.

Oratorio, Opera and Concert

By appointment only Phone Franklin 3594

Studio: 1350 FRANKLIN ST.

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

Phone Kearny 3657 Res. Phone West 1784

Dr. A. H. Wright

12 to 4 CHRONICLE BUILDING

60 YEARS' EXPERIENCE

PATENTS

TRADE MARKS
DESIGNS
COPYRIGHTS &C.

Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain our opinion free whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. HANDBOOK on Patents sent free. Oldest agency for securing patents.

Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice, without charge, in the Scientific American.

A handsomely illustrated weekly. Largest circulation of any scientific journal. Terms, $3 a year; four months, $1. Sold by all newsdealers.

MUNN & Co. 361 Broadway, New York

Branch Office, 625 F St., Washington, D. C.

PATRICK & CO

RUBBER STAMPS

STENCILS, SEALS, SIGNS & ETC.

126 BUSH ST. SAN FRANCISCO

SO SIMPLE

When Wall Street first caught the fever for "industrial combinations" and began the reorganization of everything in sight, one of the votaries of high finance found himself in Chicago in extreme need of communicating with his New York office.

He had almost completed an arrangement for the consolidation of several Western enterprises, but in order to get the final authority he needed from New York, he must explain all he had done by wire to his partners.

There was no time to write. He had no cipher code. For a long time he tried to think out some way to send the information so that it would be plain to his partners and meaningless to any one else. His secret was a valuable one, and once sent over the wire might be sold out to his rivals in Wall Street for a large sum.

At last he decided to take the chances in plain English. Accordingly he wrote the message and gave it to his assistant to send.

Half an hour later, when the assistant came back, he asked him if he had sent it.

"Not just that way," said the clerk. "I rewrote it, the first word on a Postal blank, the second on a Western Union, and so on. I sent half by each company, neither half meant anything. Then I sent a second message by one line, saying, 'Read both messages together, alternating words.'"

The scheme was too simple for the high financier to have evolved, but it worked perfectly.

SIMPLE FACTS

"Children," said the teacher, instructing the class in composition, "you should not attempt any flights of fancy; simply be yourselves and write what is in you. Do not imitate any other person's writings or draw inspiration from outside sources."

As a result of this advice, Tommy Wise turned out the following composition: "We should not attempt any flights of fancy, but write what is in us. In me there is my stummick, lungs, hart, liver, two apples, one piece of pie, one stick of lemon candy and my dinner."

HE DID

It was a Free and Easy Labor League meeting, and there was considerable interruption.

"Order! Order!" cried the chairman.

"Mine's beer!" was the reply of one stalwart supporter.

THE REASON

The Way—And was it because Jimkins took the young lady out to lunch that all the trouble came about?

"Oh, no; it wasn't that. It was because his wife found it out."

"I hear that the Baron wants to get a divorce from his wealthy wife."

"Yes, he was only temporarily embarrassed when he married her."

The only value of education is to enable one to jump judiciously over the barriers which it places along every pleasant highway.

10-INCH DISK RECORDS 25c

While They Last

Piano purchasers insured against sickness, death and fire. It will pay you to investigate our easy terms on Pianos before buying.

PETER BACIGALUPI & SONS,

Phonographs and Pianos

941 Market St. Opposite Mason St.

Open Saturday Evenings.

MOVED

Gladding, McBean & Co.

CLAY PRODUCTS

Office

311-317 CROCKER BUILDING

Warehouse

147-151 MINNA STREET

Between New Montgomery and Third

San Francisco, Cal.

The German Savings and Loan Society

(Member of the Associated Savings Bank of S. F.)

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,504,498.68
Deposits June 30, 1908	$36,793,234.04
Total Assets	$39,435,681.38

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

RICHMOND DISTRICT BRANCH, 432 Clement Street, between 5th and 6th Avenues. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. W. C. Heyer, Manager.

H. L. Davis W. D. Fennimore J. W. Davis

California Optical Co.

Makers of Good Glasses

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store at 181 Post Street, near Grant Avenue.

HENRY P. TRICOU

NOTARY PUBLIC

508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711

Residence 852 Grove St. Phone Park 1870

When men are bored, they yawn. When women are bored, they sigh.

SCIENTIFIC OPTICIAN

MAYERLE'S GERMAN EYE WATER

By Mail 65c

Mayerle's German Eyewater

Highly Recommended for

Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN

Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes, relieves the strain, and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Graduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 960 Market street, opposite Hale's. Phone Franklin 3279.

The Taxi Company Announces the Opening of its Service

"Rapid---Convenient---Luxurious"

The Taxi Company Directors

J. K. Armsby — J. M. Hotchkiss
H. D. Connick — Anson Herrick
Roy M. Pike, President

OPERATING CHALMERS-DETROIT

30-horsepower cars, with open or closed tonneaus. In appearance and in riding they are everything that luxury can demand.

Our tariff is most reasonable, and provides service to all ordinary calls at less than horse-drawn vehicles.

The Company aims to give the best of service, and employs courteous chauffeurs.

When you want to go anywhere in San Francisco Take a Taxico.

Quick response to all telephone calls.

Market 600

Head Office, 911 Golden Gate Avenue, corner Octavia

Take a Taxico---Market 600

Vol. XVII. No. 882. SAN FRANCISCO, JULY 24, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

CALIFORNIA STATE

RICHMOND COAL

IMPORTED EXCLUSIVELY BY

J. J. MOORE & CO.

WE wish to inform the public that Stanford Richmond Coal is the only genuine Richmond on the market. Don't be deceived by dealers offering to sell you a coal claiming to be as good. If your dealer cannot supply you with Stanford Richmond communicate with us.

J. J. MOORE & CO.

Telephones Kearny 465 and Kearny 466

BUNKERS, CHINA BASIN, SAN FRANCISCO
BUNKERS, ADAMS WHARF, OAKLAND

225-233 PINE STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

SUMMER RESORTS

THE VENDOME SAN JOSE

Is the ideal objective point for the motorist. The accommodations are complete and the ride from either side of the bay is delightful. This hotel is unsurpassed in the West for the beauty of its environment and for those qualities which contribute to ease and comfort. H. W. LAKE, Manager.

PARAISO SPRINGS

MONTEREY CO., CAL.

The most accessible of all resorts; a delightful terminal for an automobile trip. Take 8 a. m. train from Third and Townsend; you arrive at spring 1 p. m. for lunch. Natural hot soda and sulphur plunge and tub baths, 104 to 116 degrees, for rheumatism, malaria and all stomach troubles. Iron and arsenic waters. Altitude 1400 feet. The conditions and surroundings at Paraiso insure one that restful comfort so earnestly desired but so rarely found. H. H. McGOWAN, Proprietor.

Hotel and Grounds

HOTEL DEL MONTE

Annual Golf Tournament

August 28th to September 4th, Inclusive. One of the great golf events of the year. Make your plans to be there. Entries should be made early

H. R. WARNER, Manager

THE PENINSULA

The leading suburban hotel of Central California. A garden spot with a uniformity of climate that appeals to everyone.

Indoor comfort and outdoor attractions. The excellence of our table, service and general accommodations wins the praise of all who register with us. Special rates in the bachelors' quarters.

JAS. H. DOOLITTLE, Manager SAN MATEO, CAL.

BYRON HOT SPRINGS

One of the world's most curative springs, 2½ hours from San Francisco; one of California's best hotels and a delightful place for rest and recreation. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, James Flood Building, any S. P. Agent, or Peck-Judah, 789 Market St., San Francisco, or 553 S. Spring St., Los Angeles, or address manager, Byron Hot Springs, California.

Forty-five minutes from San Francisco

Escalle Station

Via Sausalito
Northwestern Pacific R. R.
Postoffice Larkspur

Reservations can be made with Mrs. Manlove, Cadillac Hotel, San Francisco

HOTEL BON AIR

PACIFIC GROVE HOTEL

PACIFIC GROVE, CAL.

A homelike and comfortable hotel—owned and operated by the Pacific Improvement Company which owns and operates Hotel Del Monte. Guests here are given the privileges of the splendid Del Monte golf links, bath house and the hotel grounds. Rates $2.50 per day. American plan. Discounts by the week or month. Write for reservations. GEORGE H. CORDY, Manager.

SUMMER RESORTS

HOTEL RAFAEL

SAN RAFAEL

Our Guests Always Return

Buy your tickets snd check your baggage direct to San Rafael

Under the Management of
MR. J. H. HOLMES
Formerly of the Hotel Green, Pasadena

WITTER SPRINGS HOTEL

The Automobile Headquarters of Lake County.

The most delightful place to rest and get well. Every comfort; large, airy rooms, with hot and cold water; private baths.

Witter Springs Water Works Wonders

For people afflicted with Stomach, Liver or Kidney Trouble. Absolutely cures Eczema.

Address Peck-Judah Information Bureaus, or reservations can be made at City Office, Westbank Building, 830 Market Street

NAPA SODA SPRINGS HOTEL

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

California's famous mountain spa, only 50 miles from San Francisco. The nearest watering place and summer resort to the city. 1,000 feet elevation, overlooking 25 miles of beautiful Napa Valley. For terms address Manager Napa Soda Springs Hotel, Napa County, Cal.

LAKE TAHOE

Lakeside Park Company—18th Season

HOTEL, COTTAGES, CAMPING and HOUSEKEEPING

Open to guests June 1st; best lake fishing in June. For circular and terms address ARTHUR MARION HILL, Proprietor, Stateline, P. O., Lake Tahoe, Cal.

Boca Hotel and Annex

TRUCKEE RIVER

Address CHAS. GARRISON, BOCA, CAL.

CAMP MEEKER

Own Summer Home in Mountains of Sonoma County

Equable climate. Lots $15 up. Cottages built $85 up. Depot, stores, restaurant, hotel, phone, postoffice, express, churches and sawmill; 1800 lots sold; 600 cottages built. Sausalito ferry. M. C. MEEKER, Camp Meeker, Sonoma County.

SPEND THE WEEK END AT

ÆTNA SPRINGS

Leave San Francisco at 3:45 p. m., Friday or Saturday via Sausalito. Railroad round trip, $7, including enjoyable ride in our fine automobiles from St. Helena to Aetna Springs and return.

Illustrated Booklet mailed free on application.

Aetna Springs Co., Aetna Springs, Napa Co., Cal.

Calaveras Big Trees Grove Hotel

Situated in the world famous Calaveras Grove of Big Trees. Everything for the comfort and convenience of guests. Table the best. Finest trout streams in the State. For further particulars address JOB WHITESIDE, Big Trees, Calaveras County, Cal.

PINE LODGE

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

In the mountains by the sea. Surroundings perfect for rest and recreation. Trout stream, boating, bathing. Home garden of berries and vegetables. New hotel and cottages, modern conveniences. Two miles from Santa Cruz. Rates $9.00 per week and upwards. For particulars address PINE LODGE, Santa Cruz, Cal.

FALLEN LEAF LODGE

LAKE TAHOE, CAL.

New home-like resort at the head of Fallen Leaf Lake; five miles south of Lake Tahoe. Centrally situated in the grandest part of the Lake Tahoe Scenic Wonderland. Rates $14.00 per week and upward. HARRY WHITCOMB, Manager, Fallen Leaf, Lake Tahoe, Cal.

GILROY HOT SPRINGS

Only four hours from San Francisco; delightful stage ride over the best kept mountain road in California. Unsurpassed table, health-giving waters, telephone, postoffice. Rates $12 to $17.50 a week; baths free. Trains leave Third and Townsend streets at 9 a. m. Direct stage connection. See Peck-Judah, 789 Market street.

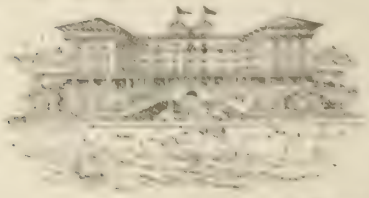
W. J. McDONALD, Proprietor.

ALDER GLEN SPRINGS

In the mountains above Cloverdale. Magnesia, soda, iron, sulphur and arsenic springs. Finest fishing and hunting. Bathing in the Russian River. Large new dancing pavilion this year. For accommodations address

J. A. SERRES, Cloverdale P. O.

YOSEMITE



SENTINEL HOTEL Open the Year Round; Steam Heated; Electric Lighted

CAMP YOSEMITE Electric Lighted; Opened May 1st; the Largest Hotel-Camp on the Coast.

Under One Management. For Rates, Reservations or other information, address J. B. COOK, Proprietor, Yosemite, Cal.

Leading Hotels and Resorts

NEVER HOT NEVER COLD ALWAYS DELIGHTFUL

HOTEL VIRGINIA
LONG BEACH, CAL.

American Plan Open the Year Round Moderate Rates

Long Beach is noted the World Over for having the Longest Beach in the World. Surf bathing is now the popular sport of the day. The cuisine in The Virginia is superior excellence. Concert Every Evening in Grand Ballroom by the Famous Virginia Orchestra. Write for beautiful booklet. CARL STANLEY, Mgr.

LONG BEACH SANITARIUM
LONG BEACH, CALIF.

Battle Creek Sanitarium Methods

A sanitarium equipped with ALL THAT IS MODERN in medical and surgical lines. ALL THE YEAR 'ROUND. Where the sick are made well and well ones kept so. Ideal climate, all outdoor sports. Gymnasium and Ladies' Parlors. Modern baths. Electric appliances for every form of disease. Cuisine unexcelled. Physicians in charge. Booklet FREE. W. KAY SIMPSON, Manager.

Long Distance Phones in Every Room

YE ALPINE TAVERN
Beautiful Mountain Resort on Mt. Lowe

Just a mile above the sea. American plan $3.00 per day, $15 per week. Choice of rooms in hotel or cottages. Spend a vacation 5,000 feet above the sea, among great pines and oaks. For information, D. A. Munger, General Agent, Pacific Electric R. R., Los Angeles, or office.

TAKE TAMALPAIS TRIP

and breathe good air.

Half a mile high in two hours' time. No other trip like it.

Via Sausalito Ferry. Foot of Market Street.

LAGUNA BEACH

55 miles south of Los Angeles, 8 miles west of Irvine, which is on the El Camino Real.

A delightful coast seaside place on the Pacific Ocean. Fine bathing, good hotel and cottages. No grades, level roads. Address Manager Laguna Beach Hotel, Laguna Beach, Cal.

ROSS McMAHON AWNING AND TENT CO.

TENTS AND BANNERS

Tents, Awnings, Hammocks, Bags and Covers

Phone Kearny 3060 405 BATTERY STREET

SUTHERLAND'S

Auto Top and Lighting Shop of L. Sutherland Co. Phone Kearny 1000

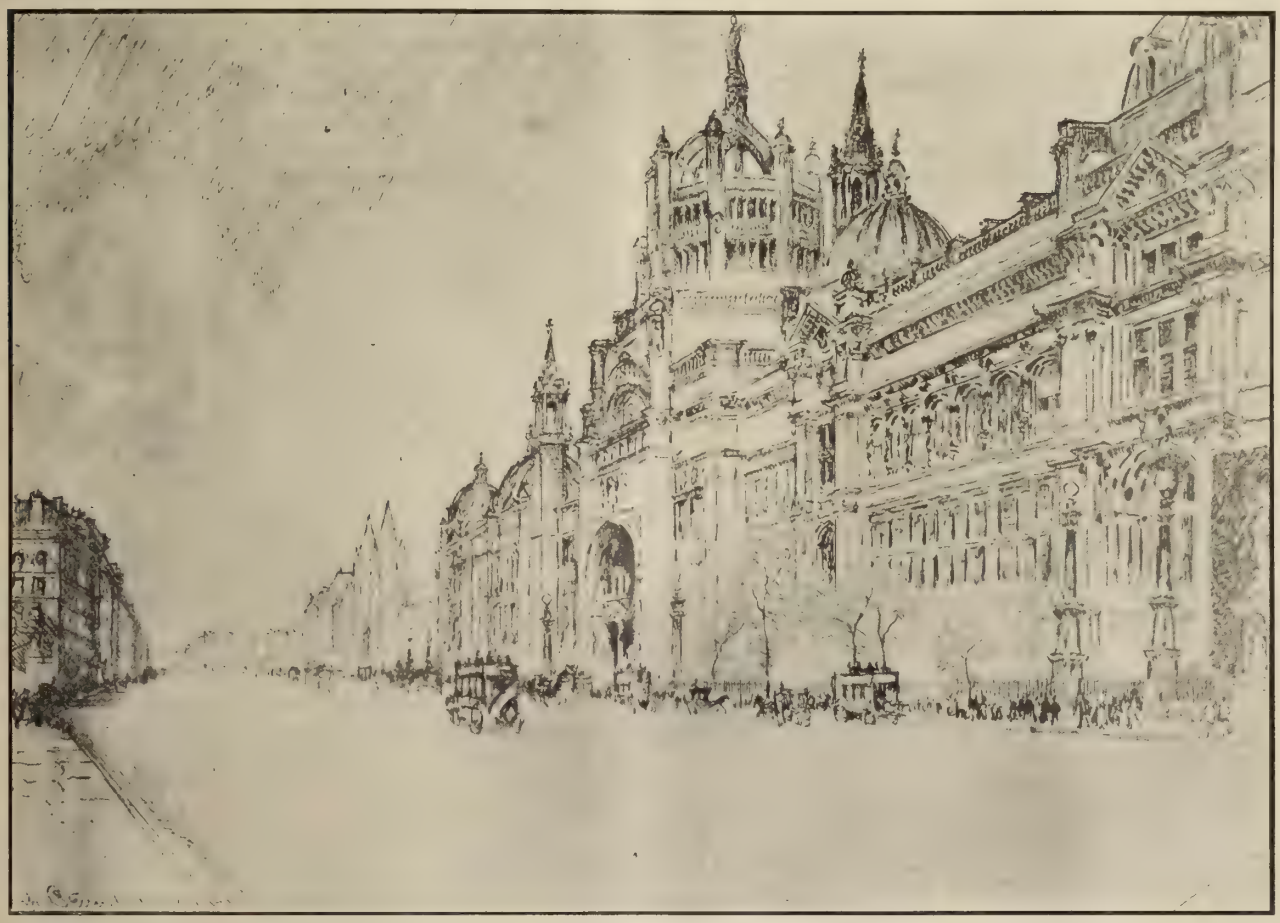
That Auto Trip Should Include Santa Cruz

If you haven't got an auto take the short line through the mountains. Ask the S. P. man. Fun, fun, fun, awaits you at Santa Cruz. Bring the family.

Southern Pacific Company, Sunset Route and its Coast Line Steamships.

CAMERAS Kodaks, Developing, Printing, Supplies, Etc.

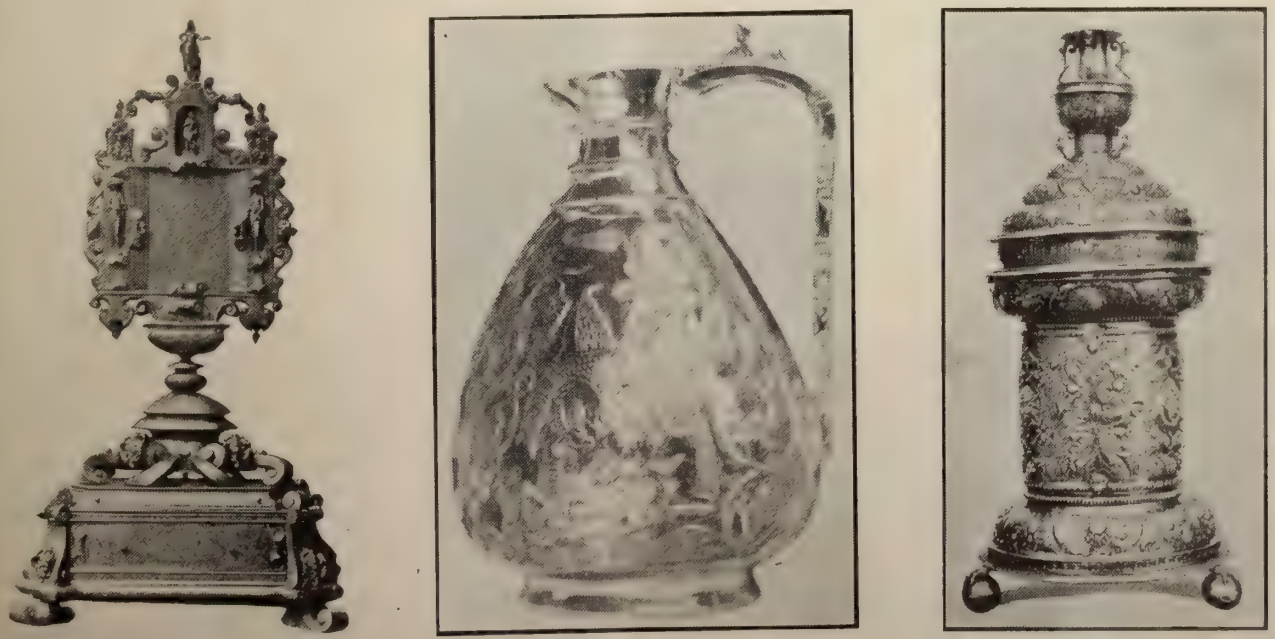
"Don't take a vacation unless you take pictures as you go along."



465-467 THIRTEENTH STREET, Between Broadway and Washington

SMITH BROS. STATIONERS OAKLAND

TOWN TALK



THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, July 24, 1909. No. 882.

THE BEAUTIFUL NEW BUILDING OF THE VICTORIA AND ALBERT MUSEUM, LONDON

Begun by Queen Victoria, finished by King Edward VII, and opened by him on June 26th. The building, which will house almost priceless treasures, is an extension of the Old South Kensington Museum, and cost about $5,000,000.

ART TREASURES IN THE VICTORIA AND ALBERT MUSEUM

From left to right they are a Standing Mirror made in Milan in 1550, and sold at the Soltykoff sale in 1861 for £1282; a Rock-crystal Ewer, of Byzantine workmanship, beautifully transparent, and valued at £450; and a ceremonial Salt Cellar of the Sixteenth Century, of solid silver, two feet high, and bought with the Mostyn Hall collection for £2100.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY

Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION—One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.

The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.

For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.

Los Angeles office, 427 South Main Street.

Seattle office, 804 Third Avenue.

We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

Men and Morals

In her essay on moral swindlers George Eliot tells us that there is a deep and melancholy irony in the shrunken meaning that popular or polite speech assigns to "morality" and "morals." It grieved her to find that there were men who, though they were rapacious, cruel and unjust, were regarded as moral because they were not given to drunkenness and sexual depravity, while others who were guided by the golden rule in all their relations with men were pronounced immoral on account of their fondness for women of easy virtue. We have been reminded of this degradation of words, which involve praise and blame, by the self-satisfied air of some of our municipal officials who appear to be laboring under the delusion that there is only one kind of venality in public office. There are men connected with the present municipal administration who regard themselves as vastly superior in the moral sense to the boodlers of the Schmitz regime, their reason for this agreeable conception being that they have not prostituted themselves for money. This is a psychological phenomenon worthy of attentive study. We find these men doing things that are conclusive of the very meanest kind of intellectual dishonesty, and yet apparently insensible of the unscrupulosity of their conduct. It would probably surprise them to learn that in the estimation of men of intelligence they are far more despicable than the illiterate and depraved rascals who were but recently doing the bidding of Abe Ruef.

Intellectual Dishonesty in Office

The supervisors are again discussing the advisability of resubmitting to the people the proposition to issue bonds for the reconstruction of the Geary street railroad. The proposition has been beaten three times, but the little band of patriots from whom the present dispensation derives inspiration, and who fondly expect to break into the street railroad business through devious political channels are not discouraged. They have unbounded confidence in the patience and stupidity of the dear people. Their plans are all very simple, perhaps they are amusing from a certain point of view; but meanwhile we are very much in need of greater transportation facilities. Unfortunately this is a matter that does not concern the official puppets of the sanhedrim that shapes our ends and inspires our follies. Unfortunately, too, they are not influenced by the judgment in such matters of the merchant and capitalistic class or of the small property owner who dominates our so-called improvement clubs. Responsive they only to the moods and passions of the plain people, by which is meant the multitudinous irresponsibles who would scorn to pay taxes. When the bond issue proposition was up for discussion the other day one typical and brilliant young statesman affirmed his intention of voting for its resubmission. It has been demonstrated he said "that a very large majority of the people really want the road." In this man we have a fine type of the honest supervisor who would scorn to be a grafter, but who appears to have no prejudice against intellectual dishonesty. This supervisor knows that the Geary street bond issue has never received a vote of the majority of the people. He knows that there is a vast difference between the majority of the people and the majority of those that voted on the bond issue proposition. However, he has no scruple against pretending to believe that a majority of the people have voted in favor of the bond issue. Among the other supervisors known to be prejudiced against graft is the Hon. Daniel C. Murphy, who uttered himself as follows: "I can only speak for myself. The question has been beaten three times, but every time the majority in favor has been greater. The last defeat has not made me alter my opinion, that the Geary street railroad would be a good thing for the city." As Mr. Murphy is the Hon. James D. Phelan's attorney he excites in us the spirit of skepticism when he says that he is exclusively the mouthpiece of himself, but there is no need at this time of questioning the accuracy of his statement. We are concerned only about the resubmission proposition which Mr. Murphy is in favor of because his opinion with reference to the desirability of having the Geary street railroad operated by the city is unalterable. Now Mr. Murphy knows that his opinion, even though it be uninspired, is of no great consequence. He knows that the Charter of this city, which he is sworn to uphold, provides that no bond issue shall be made unless the proposition be carried by two-thirds of the people voting thereon. The Charter does not say that supervisors shall be consulted about the desirability of bond issues; nor does it say that a majority vote shall be regarded as of some significance. The authors of the Charter, conspicuous among whom were the Hon. James D. Phelan and Mayor Taylor, contemned majority votes in matters involving the expenditure of vast sums of money. They adopted the principle by which the bond issue has been defeated because they knew that the people are easily deceived and because they were sensible of the importance of safeguarding the people against the deceptions of demagogues and the misrepresentations of unscrupulous leaders. The circumstance that these men are now inspiring the assault that is being made on the very principle which they urged upon the people, and which the people approved by a majority vote, is in itself deserving of reflection and comment. There is surely something of irony in the persistency with which the Charter thwarts and disappoints the Hon. James D. Phelan. No man has been balked by it so often as its fond parent; none has more frequently rendered its provisions negligible. Perhaps even in this matter of the bond issue he may succeed eventually despite the Charter, as he did when he began the construction of his political machine in defiance of the chapter on civil service. If he fail it will not be due to the infidelity of his obedient creatures in the honest and incorruptible Board of Supervisors, for they will never scruple against availing themselves of the passions and prejudices that were aroused in the last street railroad strike. It is to these passions and prejudices rather than to the intelligence of the people that appeal is made, and in the long run the Charter safeguard against blind caprice may be overcome by intellectual dishonesty.

The Blessing of Government Ownership

The advocates of the municipal street railroad project are still assuring us that the greatest of all blessings is government ownership, and to them it appears to be a matter of no consequence that experience does not afford them corroboration. There was a time when the street railroads of Glasgow were pointed to with exultation by the champions of municipal ownership, but Glasgow is no longer regarded as a fruitful source of instructive object lessons. Occasionally we hear that in France, where social democracy is rampant, the State conducts many important industries with great success and to the profit and pride of the people. Now the fact is that France abounds in material suitable to the arguments of the opponents of government ownership. In the first place the statesmen of France have made government ownership the backbone of a huge political machine; secondly, the service rendered by State owned utilities and the products of State owned factories are of the very worst quality. An amusing illustration of the blessing of State owned industries in France was recently given by a Paris newspaper which published the results of an analytic survey of the contents of a matchbox. The manufacture and sale of matches, it should be explained, is a State monopoly in France. The box of matches that was subjected to analysis cost 40 centimes, which is as near as may be to eight cents. It was found that 34 per cent of the contents of the box consisted of slivers, stumps and fragments of wood without a trace of sulphur or phosphorous. Of the remainder 26 per cent was tipped with sulphur but without a particle of phosphorous, and therefore impossible to light. This made 60 per cent of the whole. The remaining 40 per cent had both sulphur and phosphorous, and therefore had the distinct appearance of matches. But with things governmental appearances are often deceptive. It turned out that only 16 per cent of the things that looked like matches could be lighted. However, the Government makes lots of money out of matches, though the matches which will light are one hundred years behind the times.

Money Wasted on Churches

It has dawned on the perceptions of certain worthy clergyman of one of the two-and-seventy jarring sects that religious establishments like all other human contrivances sometimes die of inanition. Their attention has been called to the fact that the church though invariably triumphant in heaven, goes to the wall quite frequently on this sublunary sphere under the bludgeoning of his Satanic majesty. In other words, from lack of appreciation of the vivifying influences of religion, church corporations which have absorbed large sums of money, occasionally find it expedient to disband. Thus to suffer defeat in the cause of spiritual culture from the circumstance that men are indisposed to direct their thoughts to a futurity, not to say prone to immerse themselves exclusively in the vanities of the world, would be painful enough were the loss to be computed fully in terms of religion, but apparently what principally concerns the clergy is the pecuniary phase of the matter. They have ascertained that in the small State of Connecticut alone, the enormous sum of two million dollars has been thrown away on churches that have gone out of existence, and concluding that this was the result of bad business methods they have decided to introduce a business course in theological seminaries, hoping thus to prop the pulpit with commercial acumen. Now it occurs to us that in resolving upon this course the Congregational clergyman have utterly ignored one of the first principles of the science of business, the principle that demands the abatement of ruinous competition. It is clear enough that churches have been going to smash not because of a lack of administrative ability, but because the supply is greater than the demand, a circumstance not entirely due to the inability of ministers to excite religious zeal or to new conceptions of the designs of Providence. The fact is that the passion of hatred has inspired the founding of many a church dedicated to Him whose empire was founded on love. If the prosperous farmer who craves the office of deacon is disappointed in his ambition; if his favorite child fails to gain the class prize or if his wife thinks her contribution of edibles to the church supper has been slighted, there is abundant reason for withdrawal, and if there are family connections or warm friends enough to make a faction, there is a schism, a new organization formed, a minister sought out and a guerilla warfare carried on to attract each newcomer to one fold or the other. The natural result is that there are two starving preachers, two insignificant congregations, and constant appeal either to private charity or to the funds of the denomination. The same causes which led to the first disruption are liable to occur again in both branches, and, given a sufficient population, again and again, until the condition approximates that of Dr. E. E. Hale's mythical Candoodle-dummers, who, owing to the zeal of the missionary who started out to convert them, were divided and subdivided into as many sects as there were individuals in their clan, each bent on annihilating all the rest.

The Bishop and the Colleges

Bishop McFaul of the Roman Catholic Church has given the New York World an interview in which he unreservedly condemns the leading colleges of the country, Harvard, Princeton, Yale, Columbia, Pennsylvania, Syracuse and others, declaring that they are not only Godless, but that they teach atheism; that their whole tendency is toward immorality; that disrespect for women is engendered in them, and that their students place more value on social position than on learning. For these reasons he advises Catholics to keep their sons away from these institutions, and send them to Catholic schools, where they shall be taught such commandments as "Thou shalt not steal," "Thou shalt not commit adultery," "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." Leaving aside the question of how near the truth the Bishop is in his assertions (but

The Hub
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

THE SATISFACTION OF KNOWING THAT YOU'RE GETTING CLOTHES THAT ARE ABSOLUTELY CORRECT IS A SMART DRESSER'S SECRET. HE NEVER QUESTIONS PRICE; HE LOOKS ONLY FOR LATE STYLES. HIS CLOTHES ARE ALWAYS RIGHT. CLOTHES THAT ARE CORRECT DON'T NEED THE PRUNING KNIFE. WE HAVE CORRECT CLOTHES.

This Label Assists You to Dress

The Hub
Chas Keilus & Co.
San Francisco.

Commercially and Socially Correct.

Our advance suggestions for the approaching season are now here and ready for you to make selections. The fall garments contain the best American talent in designing, fashioning and in making. A cleverly attired gentleman demands recognition, and has confidence in himself for any occasion. He can always command an audience, because his clothes proclaim for him "class." He doesn't look like "a bargain sale man." He gets clothes when they're in style and not passe.

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

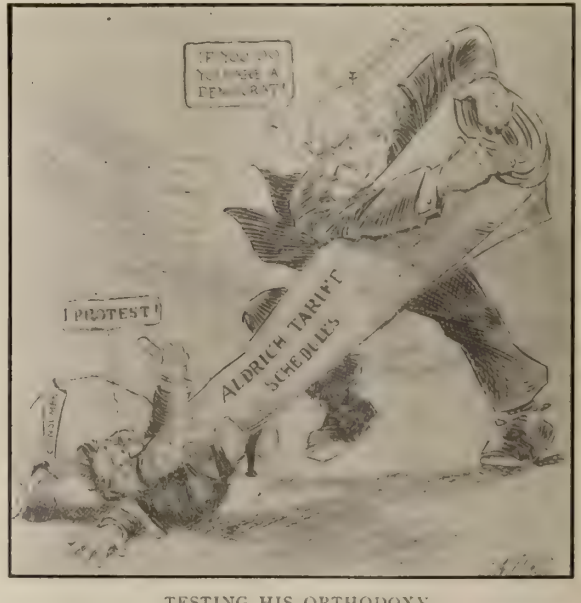
not for a moment denying that he has much to support them) it cannot be gainsaid that our universities have in a large measure ceased to be such in the true meaning of the term. The original purpose of the university was to keep alive philosophy, and it was supposed that to educate young men properly they should be taught how to develop their mental faculties. It was conceived to be the proper aim of a university to instil into the minds of students aspirations above those of the multitude and to qualify them to lead mankind to greater achievements in virtue, intellectual pursuits and social well-being. At present the main object of the average American university is to exploit the vagaries of pedantic professors, themselves fresh from the school-room and eager that all men should think along the narrow lines of pet hobbies. But all of our so-called universities are not engaged exclusively in the business of turning out superficial philosophers with heterodox theories of religion and morality. Some of them teach men to do those things that man does best when he most nearly resembles a machine and though they have abandoned the traditional ideals of a university it must be said to their credit that they are educating common minds for the common business of life. Take the Wisconsin University for example, the policy of which is to "teach anybody anything that he wants to learn." The boy who would learn to raise vegetables scientifically, how much and what to feed his cows; how to build a house or a barn, is given as much consideration as the one whose mind runs toward the humanities. Not having scholarship crammed down his throat, the young student at the University of Wisconsin takes his choice of the courses taught there, and his choice being practically unlimited he adopts some line of study that corresponds with his ability and his tendencies. Farmers go to the University of Wisconsin to learn how to raise crops scientifically. Women go there to learn how to cook. Mechanics go in order to improve themselves in their craft. In fact, it is a universal college, conducted by the State for all the people of the State. Results have been most gratifying. While fewer lawyers and doctors are sent out to practice on a helpless public, men and women are equipped for the real duties of life. Especially has the standard of life in the country been raised. Taught how to make a living with greater ease than did his forefathers the farmer's son leads a life of comparative leisure. He develops his stock, raises bountiful crops from a soil that under his father yielded poorly, lives in a modern house, has his automobile, and goes to the city now and then to enjoy urban delights, instead of, as under old conditions, deserting the farm for the town at the first opportunity. Instead of being made a half-baked professional man, he has been developed into an intelligent farmer. He is far better off—and so is the State at large. This is but one result of the work of this college. For thousands of people it has opened a new outlook on life. Its influence is most wholesome, and there is nothing in its teachings or the effect of its system that any but the most bigoted of religionists could cavil at. It provides the common intellectual necessities for people of common intelligence, instead of trying, as do so many of the institutions to which Bishop McFaul objects, to make scholars out of people who by instinct and heredity are incapacitated from scholarly achievement.

Petition

You placed me far and high and bade me stay
There in the dizzy ether, pure, serene—
Ah! but since then how fair the Summer's day,
How wild night's winds have been!

You crowned me, it is true, but such cold state
The stars may bear, which have no human need;
Such royalty might nobler souls elate,
But I—have love to feed.

I saw the sunlight clasp the radiant land,
And smelt the perfume from her myriad flowers.
You placed me far and could not understand
The grief of lonely hours.



Release me, and dethrone me! for my claim
To any honor is this—that I forego—
Ah! lest your very reverence cause me shame,
Love me, or let me go!

—The Passionist.

BLESSED ARE THE PEACE MAKERS

—Philadelphia Inquirer

TESTING HIS ORTHODOXY

Omaha Bee

The Discovery of the Bay

It Wasn't Made by Portola Say the Historians of the Georgraphical Society, But by Don Pedro Falges.

By Robert McTavish

Just now, when we are preparing to celebrate by a five days' October festival the memory of Don Gaspar de la Portola, the first governor of California, a book recently issued by the Geographical Society of the Pacific proves of especial and timely interest. It is comprehensively entitled "Transactions and Proceedings of the Geographical Society of the Pacific," its sub-title stating that it contains "The Discovery of San Francisco Bay, the Rediscovery of the Bay of Monterey, the Establishment of the Presidio and the Founding of the Mission of San Francisco." This is barely a hint of the rich historical treasures in the volume, of which George Davidson, the eminent local scientist, is the author. Much light is cast on both the sequence and facts of the events and episodes which led to the discovery of San Francisco Bay, past which so many mariners had sailed without discovering the narrow inlet that led to the beautiful landlocked stretch of water. During an interval of more than two hundred years many navigators—Drake, Cavendish, Morgan, Dampier, Ulloa, Cabrilla, Ferrelo, Vizcaino and others—had sailed up and down the coast, but never close enough to this port to glimpse the passage between the two headlands that formed the entrance to the harbor. Drake had sojourned at the bay that bears his name, near Pt. Reyes. Others had anchored in the stretch of water between the Farallones and the shore. There seems to have been a vague notion during most of the time that there was a large bay in this vicinity, but it was not discovered in its entirety until 1772. And—here's where the cold-blooded, iconoclastic historian sends a rankling shaft—Don Gaspar de la Portola, the first governor of California, never set his eyes upon the main portion of the bay which so many credit him with discovering, and what little of it he did see, he did not regard as of much importance. It was first sighted by an unnamed soldier who accompanied Portola on his first expedition North from San Diego. But the credit of the real discovery belongs to Captain Don Pedro Fages, who, coming up from Monterey on foot and at the head of a body of men three years later, walked around the harbor, came out into the oak groves which then covered the present site of Oakland, and climbing the hills in the vicinity of where the University of California now stands, gazed outward through the Golden Gate and upon the Pacific.

Up to 1767 Spain had made but desultory efforts to colonize California, although she was strong in Mexico. But in 1768 the King of Spain awoke to the fact that California was a valuable territory, and gave orders that it should be protected from the encroachments of the British and others who were cruising up and down the coast. At that time there were not four hundred civilized people on the Peninsula of Lower California as far north as San Diego.

It was at a meeting held at San Blas May 16, 1768, that it was decided to fit out an expedition for the occupation of Alta California. Two decrepit boats, the San Antonio and San Carlos—the latter being the first vessel, by the way, that ever sailed in through the Golden Gate—were manned and equipped for the voyage. Meanwhile Portola, who had been proclaimed governor, came overland from San Blas to San Diego, arriving there shortly after the boats had landed with their crews diminished by scurvy and hardships. Portola was accompanied on this journey by Father Fray Junipero Serra, the founder of Catholic missions in California.

There is not space here to give the details of Portola's expedition north from San Diego. Suffice it to say that in due time he arrived with his party at Carmel river, which had been discovered and named by General Sebastian Vizcaino in 1602. The party also went to Monterey, and made the two places headquarters for some time. They were greatly disappointed in the aspect of the bay, which accounts had led them to believe was a landlocked harbor—an indication that some explorer might have found San Francisco harbor, and that his vague story, passing from lip to lip, had grown into half legend.

After a stay of several weeks in the vicinity of Monterey, Portola decided to explore the coast to the northward. Accounts of the setting out from Monterey are vague, but the historian from whom we quote finds that on October 23, 1769, the explorers were encamped at Ano Nuevo creek. They crossed the present Whitehouse and Gazos creeks, and encamped a short distance east of Pigeon Point where there is a roadstead open to the south. There they found a large Indian rancheria inhabited by friendly natives. On October 24th, guided by two Indians, Portola and his men went to San Gregorio creek, where they camped. The journey was rough through there, and the diaries of the chroniclers of the party's movements tell of toilsome climbing along hillsides and through tangled underbrush, which made it difficult for their pack animals to make any speed. Professor Davidson, through painstaking examination of historical documents at his disposal, fixes other resting and camping places at Pilarcitos and Purissima creeks. It was from this place, according to the records of the party, that "To the northwest we saw a great point of land that reaches far out into the sea, and at the extremity much low land with many great rocks which appear as farallones that run to the westward." This point of land forms the roadstead of Halfmoon Bay. The bay is later described by the explorers as a good harbor.

On the 30th of October the vicinity of the present Montara fog signal was reached. On the following day a trail was cut and the journey made across the headland which is the termination of the mountain ridge that stretched from their camping place southeasterly through the Peninsula of San Francisco. From the summit of this ridge they could see Pt. Reyes, but intervening hills hid San Francisco Bay and the Golden Gate from view.

Descending this ridge Portola and his followers made an encampment of several days at San Pedro Cove. From there a sergeant named Ortega and three soldiers were sent on an expedition into the hills to see what they could find. Before they returned others went out after deer. On their return, both parties reported having seen what we now know was the southeast part of San Francisco Bay.

As a consequence of these reports, it was determined to explore this body of water. And right here the fatal mistake was made. Had Portola journed only thirteen miles to the north he would have found the Golden Gate. Instead he went to the southeast, and after several days of roaming around the upper end of the Santa Clara Valley and the present site of San Mateo, determined to return to Monterey.

Professor Davidson is satisfied, from the documents he has examined that it was Don Pedro Falges who first saw the Golden Gate, and fixes the date as March 27, 1772.

(Continued on Page 34.)

We have moved into our new store at
222 Stockton St., facing Union Square

ROBERTSON'S
BOOKSELLER
ENGRAVER AND STATIONER

Japanese Seizure Foiled

Hitherto Unrecorded Page of History in Which it is Told How Some Sixteen Years Ago the Mikado Tried to Take the Hawaiian Islands and Was Stopped by the Quick Wit and Courage of the United States Minister.

By Francis West

That the Japanese government attempted in 1893 to grab Hawaii and the other islands in the group and was prevented by John L. Stevens, American Minister at Honolulu, is the remarkable story told by Frank A. Hosmer, who was at that time president of the American college at Honolulu. The circumstances were never made public until a few days ago, and they make a story of absorbing interest, and one provocative of much speculation.

Japan's attempt to annex the islands occurred during the revolution which took place in the year mentioned, and which resulted in the deposition of Queen Liliuokalani, who was after temporarily restored to her throne by President Cleveland.

The revolution that preceded the queen's dethronement and was coincident with Japan's attempt to take the islands was brought about by the Louisiana Lottery Co. That organization wanted a foothold in the islands, and had promised in the event of being allowed to operate there to erect a magnificent palace which should be kept as open house for the natives. The lottery had the backing of Queen Lil, while the better element in Honolulu opposed it. The queen to gain her end did some ward politics that would have been a credit to Tammany. Prominent citizens had held many meetings at which the project was discussed, and at last the day arrived when the legislature was to vote on the matter. On this day the queen summoned several of the opposition to the palace for a conference. The queen prolonged the talk on one pretext after another; and just as her victims began to comprehend her object, the legislature passed the lottery bill. Following this the queen assembled her troops and made a fiery speech in which she denounced the republican form of government and advocated a return to a monarchy. At this the foreign residents got their armed forces together and after two or three days of disorder the Provisional government was formed with Stanford Dole as president. Resolutions were passed in favor of annexation to the United States.

Japan had long been preparing for just such a thing as this. She had 20,000 men in the islands—ex-soldiers who had come as laborers but who were ready to take up arms at a moment's notice. The arms came shortly after the revolution took place. The people of Hawaii awoke one morning to find two Japanese battleships in the harbor, the flagship, the Naniwa, commanded by the Togo who so successfully fought the Russians in 1904-5. Between the decks of the Naniwa were 20,000 rifles for the arming of the Japanese ex-soldiers who were in and around Honolulu awaiting the arrival of the battleships. The presence of the boats was a great surprise to the general populace, but not to Minister Stevens or to President Dole and other leaders of the provisional government. Through strict espionage that they had kept up, and through the boastfulness of the Japanese residents, who had repeatedly said that the Mikado intended to take Hawaii, the Anglo-Saxon residents of the islands had a pretty good idea of what was likely to happen.

Minister Stevens was prepared for the emergency. Without time to communicate with his government, he took affairs into his own hands and gained the islands for the United States at the risk of war with Japan. He did nothing less than haul down the Hawaiian flag and send up in its place the Stars and Stripes, at the same time reading a proclamation declaring a protectorate of the United States over the islands. It was a moment fraught with dramatic interest and portentous possibilities.

In the harbor, in sight of the place where the ceremonies were conducted, were the Japanese battleships, their commander ready to send arms ashore for the conquest of the islands. His dream was suddenly and rudely shattered when the American flag was unfurled to the breeze. News of the proclamation was not needed. He knew that if he fought it would be with the United States. He immediately abandoned his plans to take the islands in the name of the Mikado.

Togo was not a good loser; in fact, he took his defeat with very poor grace.

Following the hoisting of the flag President Dole and a delegation of which Hosmer was a member went out to extend to Togo the courtesies of the port in the name of the United States. They embarked in a tug that had the Stars and Stripes flying at the bow, and boarded the Naniwa. The docks were crowded with people watching the progress of the tug and speculating as to the reception the visitors would get. It was a very chilly one. The boarding and the presentation of the Hawaiians and the whites of the party was gone through with in accordance with all the rules of naval etiquette. Through an interpreter the various officials were presented to Togo and his officers. Togo did not offer to shake hands. Rather, he kept his arms folded, and surveyed the visitors with a sinister smile, replying as briefly and as frigidly as possible to the greetings extended to him.

Then came another test of the power and status of the United States in the eyes of the Mikado's representatives. The battleships remained in the harbor for some time after the protectorate had been declared. One day two Japanese convicts escaped from jail, and there was every reason to believe that they had been taken on board the Naniwa. It was rather a ticklish moment, but President Dole concluded that there was only one course that would inspire in Togo a wholesome respect for the United States. He dispatched to the Japanese commander a courteous but firm note in which he said that he had every reason to believe that the convicts had taken refuge on one or the other of the battleships, and demanded their surrender. With the note went two sheriffs who had orders to bring the men ashore. Togo told them he had no time to search his ships for escaped prisoners.

This added to the delicacy of the situation. President Dole concluded that silence, during which Togo might conjecture what the morrow might bring forth, would be the best policy. Events showed that he had measured the Japanese to a nicety. At dawn the next morning a tender shot out from the Naniwa, and running to a dock unceremoniously dumped out the two convicts. They were taken in hand by a policeman, and the tender went back to the ship. No explanation or note came from Togo. President Dole didn't care for any. He had won a signal triumph, and was completely satisfied.

"Some time later," says Mr. Hosmer, "the guns in the harbor fortifications boomed a farewell salute to Togo and his battleships, and these same guns sounded a knell to the Mikado's long cherished scheme to occupy Hawaii."

But having got rid of the Japanese, the people who had established the protectorate found that they had President Cleveland to deal with. He declared the American protectorate ended and ordered the reins of

J. C. WILSON

BROKER

Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

power given back to Queen Lil. But the queen spoiled the whole plan by her thirst for blood. In power again, she ordered a wholesale beheading, which was to include President Dole, Minister Stevens, Hosmer and others. In vain did Minister Willis, who had been sent to the islands by the president, try to dissuade her. At last he sent to Cleveland a report of the situation, and the dusky queen lost her own head, figuratively speaking.

Hosmer's story recalls an incident of some two decades ago, when great excitement was caused here by the news that the islands had been seized, to the accompaniment of much bloodshed, by a party of filibusters. The story was published in the old daily Alta Californian. Many of the citizens did not stop to read it to the end, but gathered in excited groups discussing the main points of the story. Those who read it through discovered at the end a short paragraph saying that what preceded it was but a recital of what might happen some day. Daniel O'Connell, the Bohemian poet, was the author of the hoax.

The Robbery

By S. Karaskevich (From the Polish)

Nastasia Semenovna fastened the door on the hook after the servant had left the house, and making the sign of the cross over the doors and the windows, she trimmed the little image-lamp in her bed-room which was overheated and overcrowded with furniture and other household things, and began to pray. She mentioned in her prayers her daughter, son-in-law and the three grandchildren, and began the prayer for the dead. This prayer lasted very long. The names were many, and after uttering each name she halted for a moment because with every new word the image of her loved one appeared clearly before her inner eye, only to disappear like a fine mist at the mention of another name. "Thy servant Agnia, the youths Zinowy and Stepan—"

Nastasia suddenly stopped: she had already heard a knocking at the window-shutter in the next room—possibly the servant had, as usual, forgotten to bolt the shutters. But this was no longer the innocent knocking of a shutter—with a terrible crash the window-frame fell to the floor. The old lady slowly rose from her knees, took the lighted lamp from the dresser and opened the door that led to the dining-room.

A sharp wind blew in her face and nearly extinguished the light of the little lamp which shook and flickered and began to smoke. In the dining-room the inside window frame lay on the floor; on the sill sat a man with one foot in the room, clutching the upper sash with one hand.

For a moment the thief and the mistress of the house stood and looked at each other fearfully.

"Well, why don't you come in or get out!" the old woman at last said angrily. "Don't you see that you are letting the cold in!"

The man threw his other leg over the window-sill, jumped into the room, and he was immediately followed by another thief, a small, thin, fair-haired young man, very boyish in appearance.

After they had closed the window and pushed aside the inside frame, they approached the old lady.

"Where is your money?"

"You will have to find it for yourself!" she replied, and putting down the lamp on the table she sat down in a large easy-chair, clearly giving them to understand that she threw off every responsibility for what might take place.

She had, hidden away in the lowest drawer of the bureau, among pieces of silk, spools of wool, worn-out stockings and other women's sundries, seventy-five rubles in new five ruble gold coins, which she had saved up for her funeral and for masses to be read for her soul. And now, sitting in the dimly-lighted room, she was thinking of her son-in-law, who was somewhat miserly and besides, did not think much of masses, requiems and prayers in general and considered them nothing but foolish prejudices. She could see through the half-open door the elder thief searching in her bed for the keys, while the fair youth held the lamp. At last the keys were discovered in some obscure nook of the bed and she soon saw how they opened the lower bureau-drawer and after rummaging in it for some time, pulled out the glittering yellow coins from the piece of lace in which she had tied them up so that her daughter would have no trouble in finding them when she was no longer alive.

After the thieves got out the table-linen and tied it into a bundle, they opened the little top drawers where she kept the silverware and letters, and Nastasia saw how they untied a light-blue ribbon from around a yellowed package of letters and the elder one began to read: "My wild flowers, laborers in Christ!"

"Just listen to him, why he knows how to read!" thought the old woman, and rising, approached the door to hear the dear words of her son Slavusha's letter.

"This letter was written by my lamented son," she exclaimed. "He was in the last class of the Theological Seminary—he would have been a minister of God had he lived. He alone of all my sons grew to man's estate, the others—eight of them, died in their infancy. But Slavusha was a sturdy boy and I thought he would surely be the joy of my old age, but the Lord willed otherwise—on crossing the ferry on his way home for the Easter holidays he caught a cold—just eighteen years the coming Good Friday."

The thief looked through the package containing Slavusha's letters and untied another package.

"Don't touch them, my dear!" protested the old woman, stretching out her hand toward the letters. "They are from my only daughter, Elena—she is a married woman; maybe she writes something concerning family affairs—and you are a total stranger."

The thief looked at the old woman, suddenly his morose face was lighted with a smile.

"Do you think, granny, that I would read all your letters? I was only looking into the envelopes, as there might be some little paper that we could use—a banknote for instance."

"Ah! Is that it!" Nastasia Semenovna at last understood. "Well, I assure you that there is no money hidden away among these letters," she said with an answering smile, "but if you do not mind the trouble—look. Only please do not throw them apart, but put them, one by one, back into the package from which you take them. You see, for thirty years I have gathered them; the first was written by my Elena when she was still a chit of a girl in short skirts, from the boarding-school in which we had placed her—and the last one I received only this week. My grandchild, Luba, has become engaged—they invite me to the wedding."

"Well, will you go?" asked the elder of the two housebreakers.

"No. What is the use? It is a long journey; they live far away in St. Petersburg, and; besides, why cause this trouble? My son-in-law is a very important person—a professor in the Chief Academy. They have many visitors—all sorts of scholars and generals; the young ladies, my grandchildren, have their guests; all sorts of students—girls and young men—you ought to

(Continued on Page 32.)

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA
Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets
A General Banking Business Transacted
CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

Perspective Impressions

Taft is demonstrating that he can stand about as pat as the reactionaries themselves.

A watchman in a Market street store has winged eight burglars in two years, and on Monday night killed one. Practice makes perfect.

Langdon says that he is going to get out of politics. If he would only realize it, he has been out ever since Heney stepped in.

Pursued by five hungry lions, a hunter with the Roosevelt party lives to tell the tale. But having no presidential past, he cannot tell it at $2 a word and $4 for the hard ones.

Heney says the Calhoun trial will go on despite the municipal campaign. He might truthfully have added that his campaign for the district attorneyship would go on not only despite the Calhoun trial but with its aid.

The latest excuse that the Good Government League gives for its hidden number campaign changes public opinion regarding the members of that organization. It is plain now that they are not knaves but merely fools.

Count Boni de Castellane is to marry another bank account. That it has the name Gould attached to it is merely a coincidence. It's not the name but the gain that Boni's after.

Congressman Hobson says he has confidence in Mr. Heney. He probably acquired it through the medium of his friend Mr. Phelan who wines and dines him whenever he comes to San Francisco.

A few months ago Adrian C. Honore, brother of Mrs. Potter Palmer, eloped with a circus man's wife, and the husband sued him for $50,000. He has been induced to compromise for $10,000, getting his wife back. Pretty good rent.

The Spectator

A Poet For Our Festival

We have a queen for the Portola festival, we have a Portola poster and we are to have Portola himself reincarnated for the occasion, but nothing has been done toward providing us with a Portola poet. I'm for Mayor Taylor for the job, and I now place him in nomination. Anybody that knows anything about the spirit of pageantry knows that its inseparable companion is the Muse of Song. We must have a poet to decorate the occasion with the graces of language, to embody in immortal song the evanescent traditions of the romantic period of our glorious State. As Homer immortalized Achilles in his tale of Troy Divine, so must the poet of our festival soaring in the high regions of his fancy with his garlands and his singing robes about him, perpetuate for ever the glorious achievements of the Spanish Don and his heroic companions. Surely there is inspiration for an epic in the traditions that cluster about the old Missions, and surely Mayor Taylor is qualified to revive recollections of the mummied past in deathless verse and celebrate the imperial present in words that breathe and burn. Is there to be found in our midst one more competent for the task than the minstrel boy of the automobile administration—the Hon. E. Robeson Taylor? Who loves more ardently to articulate musically and rhapsodically through the instrument of words? A puissant singer he, one that strews about with prodigal hand the facile largess of an inexhaustible Muse. Our reverend Mayor is a man of infinite versatility, something like John Buncle, with a prodigious hand at medicine, law and politics, but above all things a poet with melodious blood aflame, bubbling over with the temperament that loves to rove through the meanders of enchantment and repose by the waterfalls of Elysian gardens. As a statesman he has been denied the fragrant garland of success; not as a lawyer full of wise saws and modern instances, nor as a mender of bones and dispenser of physic has he compelled the trumpet of fame to exalt and glorify his name, but as a poet, a prince of song he has won applause of considerable volume and in all probability he has been admitted to that garden of singers "Where the dead sweet roses fade not of lips long breathless."

The Mute Inglorious Poet

When Ambassador Jusserand, himself a literary genius of high order, came to town some weeks ago, he was most agreeably astonished to find that the Mayor of this democratic metropolis was a poet. The circumstance was to him proof of the culture of the community. Still more agreeably astonished was he to learn that the poet's predecessor was a musician. "I have discovered an Athens on the western verge!" he exclaimed, and nobody disillusioned him with the information that at the end of his term the musician's fiddle box was full of gold dust and covered with cobwebs and that the poet's lyre has grown almost mute. It is greatly to our discredit that with a poet as Mayor we have indulged him rather in the practice of politics than in the singing of songs. It is to our discredit that we have encouraged a man of Mayor Taylor's spiritual nature, a man of his seraphic purposes, to partake of the passions and perturbations of this turbulent period. But the Portola festival is coming with the golden opportunity to make amends. As a mayor the poet has been a failure but as a poet the Mayor may do us proud—if we let him.

Pegasus on Wheels

Though to Mayor Taylor the commonest objects are pregnant with inspiration, but seldom of late has he poured out the melodious contents of his soul. Preoccupied with the cares and vexations of political office, his Muse has languished, his lyre, as I have said, grown almost mute. But the other day, vaulting on Pegasus with all the heat and intrepidity of youth, he reminded us of his poetic nature. A sporadic rapture seizing him

E. B. COURVOISIER

The well known Art Dealer and Frame Maker announces to the public the opening of his new store at 431 Sutter street between Stockton and Powell.

FOR THE BABY

BROOKS

HOMOEOPATHIC COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP

25 CENTS AT DRUGSTORES

he breathed forth a frugal note in cadence soft as summer rain and with something of his old time vigor. As the inspiration came from the upholstered depths of the taxpayers' automobile we should never again complain of the Mayor's appetite for luxuries. Motoring through the City Cemetery, which is soon to be converted into a public park, for him bright fancy spread her radiant wings, and on his return to his office he dashed off a poem, just as though he had said to himself in the language of Anacreon:

—I'll show what age can do;
Able still to warble too,
Able still to drink down sadness,
And display a graceful madness.

But it was only a sonnet that the Mayor contributed to literature as a result of his graveyard trip.

His Effusion

This is the Mayor's sonnet:

The wind blows keen from off the ocean's breast
Where springtime grasses, done with living, lie
Low on these graves, that list no human sigh
For those who there all unregarded rest—
Each nameless one the City's wayworn guest,
Who had, beneath Misfortune's sullen sky,
Stood, till his woes he could no more defy,
Then fell to death unheeded and unblest.

But scon the cypress roots will grip the bones
Of these lorn dead, and on their bodies feed,
To bid them live anew in branch and leaf;
And children here, in merry-making tones,
All things of happiness will gaily breed,
Nor know that under them roll seas of grief.

A pretty little sonnet this into which our poet-mayor has woven the gossamer of reverie and sentimental conjecture, but it contains little more than solemnity and the requisite fourteen decasyllabic lines curiously interwoven. It sounds no lofty note. It expresses no original idea. It is well rhymed, and that is about all to be said about it. But the sonnet is a somewhat cramped form of verse, and it affords but little scope for the expression of poetic feeling. Indeed, a sonnet is supposed to contain not more than one idea. Now the principal idea in the Mayor's sonnet is not an original idea—that of the dead living again in branch in leaf. The Mayor's sonnet is reminiscent of much graveyard poetry, and most strikingly of Bryant's Thanatopsis:

—The oak
Shall send his roots abroad and pierce thy mould.

According to poet Taylor it is the cypress that will send its roots into the graves of the City Cemetery, but for poetic purposes one tree is as good as another. I would not be understood, however, as censuring Poet Taylor for borrowing an idea from Bryant, not any more than I would be understood as censuring Bryant for borrowing some of his ideas from Robert Blair who said about all there is to be said on graves and cemeteries even before Gray wrote his elegy. The fact is that all poets are indebted more or less to those that went before. Even Homer's originality has been questioned and Virgil it is said owed much to Theocritus. The point I wish to make is that while the Mayor has much facility in sonneteering, a man of his prodigious girth of mind should give vent to his feelings in a form that affords greater scope. His being an epic genius the bridle should be taken off and it should be permitted to gallop at random. All he needs is a theme, and I have given it to him—the heroic adventures of the men that discovered the bay and put it on the map. Out with your trusty plectrum, Mayor Taylor, and flutter the strings!

Wigg—I hear his wife is a brunette; but I though he married a blonde.
Wagg—He did, but she dyed.

The McNab Float

Gavin McNab, who is blessed with a warm imagination as well as clear judgment, has designed a float for the Portola parade which has been pronounced by artists an exquisitely poetical conception. The float is to be illustrative of the growth of San Francisco, and a single, compact tableau will symbolize the evolution from a village to a metropolis. The metropolitan idea will be expressed—by Jimmy Phelan in the role of a civic center of righteousness. Mayor Taylor will figure as the Survival of the Unfittest, made up to represent a Sutter street horse car. Gazing down on this antique from an eminence resembling one of the Twin Peaks, the Spirit of the Past, fashioned in the likeness of Governor Portola, will repeat along the route of march these words: "The only landmark that I recognize!"

A Distinguished Californian

Though Justice Joseph McKenna of the Supreme Court of the United States, who is now on a visit here, has not been in California for nearly ten years, he keeps in close touch with affairs in this State and here he has some very warm friends. Justice McKenna is not a Californian by birth, but he came to this State with his parents before he reached his teens, and California was the cradle of his public career. He has a very ardent affection for this State, and whenever he is visited in Washington by people from California he makes them feel that the hospitality of the State has been transplanted and that it is flourishing in the District of Columbia. California ought to be proud of Justice McKenna, for it was as a representative of this State that he began the brilliant career which he is now rounding out in the most exalted of the Constitutional offices of this republic. The Federal Supreme Court is the grandest of all the departments of our government. It is the department which in the past, in the conflicts between the States and the Federation preserved the machinery of the government, and it is the department which in the future, in the conflict of classes, must enforce the ultimate object of government the protection of property and preservation of personal rights. No Californian ever had so distinguished a career as that of Justice McKenna. Starting in Solano County as a country lawyer, he learned the law "not as a trade but as the perfection of reason and the science of justice." Elected to Congress, he became a member of the Ways and Means Committee, of which William McKinley was chairman. They formed an attachment for each other which ripened into the highest and purest of friendships. It was by President Harrison, who was distinguished for the judgment which he exhibited in selecting judicial timber, that Justice McKenna was appointed to the federal bench, but when McKinley became President he urged his old friend to enter his cabinet, and appointed him Attorney-General,

HIGH GRADE
INVESTMENT SECURITIES
List on Request
SUTRO & COMPANY
412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO
Established 1858.

J.M. Jacobi & Co.
S.W. COR. MONTGOMERY & SUTTER STS
Individuality is always found in the best tailored garments
OUR SPRING AND SUMMER CLOTHING MERITS YOUR ATTENTION.

which position he held but a short time when the vacancy occurred in the Supreme Court which he was chosen to fill. Justice McKenna is a man of natural judicial qualities, with a strong sense of justice and inflexible moral courage. He is distinguished for courtesy, dignity and elegance of deportment. Scornful of the applause of the groundlings, his whole public career has been animated by the principle of Lord Mansfield's conduct as expressed

JOHN J. BARRETT Jr.

Like his father, the well known attorney, the youngster has a passion for the saddle and is often seen in Golden Gate Park on his favorite charger.

by that gentleman when he said, "I am not insensible to popularity, but I desire the popularity which follows, not that which is run after."

An "Imported" Picture

Robert McTavish's article in last week's Town Talk on the methods of some of our art dealers reminds me of an amusing story that I heard a year or so ago—a story which happens to be perfectly true, and which is in support of McTavish's statements regarding the sharp practices of some of our picture sellers. There wandered into an "art" store a man who had with him a magazine in which was a reproduction of a famous picture. The visitor said that he wanted the original of the painting, as there was a little romance connected with it. He and the girl he afterward married had their first meeting at a Paris exhibition in front of the picture in question, and for that reason he wanted it for their new home if it could be bought for a reasonable price. Realizing the difficulty that he would have in tracing its whereabouts, he appealed to the dealer, thinking that possibly the latter, through a European agent, might be able to locate and buy the painting. The dealer took one look at it, then enthusiastically proclaimed that he knew the exact whereabouts of the picture, as he had seen it during his last trip to Europe. Could he buy it? Well, most certainly he could. Could he have it by the time the customer's new house was completed, as a present for his wife? Without the least doubt in the world. He would send at once for it, have the price cabled, and if the figure was not too high, cable for it to be sent. He would turn Europe upside down rather than fail to get that painting. Hardly had the customer gone before the dealer seized his hat and hastened to an artist's studio in Montgomery street, buying on the way a copy of the magazine that contained the reproduction of the picture. At the studio he had a most satisfactory interview with the artist, who agreed to paint a copy of the picture. And he did, too, with such skill that when the customer called a few weeks later to receive his imported treasure, he was highly pleased with it. "It's a better picture than I thought it was," he said. The dealer charged him only a "reasonable" price—a few hundred dollars—for the painting, which, as he had to pay the artist and the framer several dollars each, was very considerate of him.

A Shrewd Illustrator

A similar episode, but with smaller financial reward, occurred here several years ago, with a well known newspaper illustrator as the bunko man. He had a friend who was a great admirer of Phil May, and who one day remarked that he would pay well if he could get hold of some of that artist's original pen and ink drawings. "Nothing easier," said the illustrator. "I have half a dozen that I got while in London. You may have them for $10 each." The bargain was quickly made, and the artist promised to bring the drawings the next time he chanced to pass the friend's place of business. Going to a library he got hold of a volume of Punch, and from that made pencil sketches of some of May's best pictures. Then between times in the newspaper art room he copied them in pen and ink. He put the mark of his thumb on one of them, and on delivery charged three dollars extra for that particular one, maintaining that the thumb mark of the famous Phil May easily added that much to the value of the picture.

Judge—You had hardly been liberated when you picked another pocket!

Prisoner—No harm meant, your honor, I wanted to pay a visit to my lawyer.

Funston Talks of Cuba

That gallant soldier, General Frederick Funston, who is now enjoying a vacation in this city, was asked the other day if he believed the Cubans were capable of self government. He replied that the only opinion he had formed with reference to the Cubans was that they had earned a good fair trial. He felt that it would be most sad were the Cubans to be deprived of their independence in view of the desperate struggle which they had made for it during a long period of years. The General was in reminiscent mood in the midst of a group of friends at the St. Francis, and the Cuban ques-

GIERSBERGER WINES
The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.
THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY
Phone Oakland 2510 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

TAXICABS
(Genuine RENAULT Cars)
PACIFIC TAXIMETER CAB COMPANY
Solicits your patronage of its equipment of imported Renault Taxicabs and will show its appreciation by prompt and reliable service. * * * * *
TELEPHONE
FRANKLIN 4848
Private Exchange connecting all Departments
MAIN STATION AND GENERAL OFFICES, 1355-1363 BUSH STREET
FAY C. BEAL, General Manager.

tion opened up what proved to be a topic of current interest to him, for he has just finished a serial history of the insurrection that led to the Spanish war. He wrote it at the request of the editors of Scribners. Funston, it will be remembered, was a hero in Cuba before he went to the Philippines. Animated by a passion for adventure he joined the insurgents in Cuba, and as an artillery officer he fought against the Spanish troops in the Three Years' War that was brought to a close by the blowing up of the Maine. And Funston, though his achievements during the Spanish war were of a considerable number, saw more fighting in Cuba than he has seen since.

The Volume of Blood

Discussing the Cuban insurrection General Funston astonished his hearers by telling them of the magnitude of the losses sustained therein. "The records show," said Funston, "that the Cubans lost more men during that insurrection than were lost by this country in the War of 1812, the Mexican War, the Spanish War and the Philippine Insurrection." To be exact the total number of Cubans who were either killed in action or died subsequently of wounds was 4,150, while our losses were as follows: War of 1812, 1,200; Mexican War, 1,800; Spanish War, 383; Philippine Insurrection, 961. That the Spaniards were kept pretty busy in Cuba is evident from the fact that 7,200 were killed and 18,000 died of diseases contracted in camps.

The Colored Man and the Canned Goods

General Funston related that he was recently visited at Fort Leavenworth by some of his companions in arms of the Cuban campaign, among them being Colonel Garcia who is now the Cuban Minister to this country. "We spent some pleasant hours together," he said, "talking of the dark days of the struggle for Cuban independence, and singularly enough, as we looked back over the sufferings that we endured much of our experience seemed to be extremely funny. For instance we recalled the night that Garcia's nigger servant risked his life to get some food for us. We were very hungry that night. Indeed it was very seldom that we were not hungry; but on this night the pangs of hunger were more excruciating than usual. We had a town in Eastern Cuba under siege and of course all the inhabitants had fled. Garcia's servant volunteered to go through the Spanish lines in quest of food. He was told he would be killed, but he insisted and was permitted to make the attempt. With a big sack he started off, crawling through the grass and making his way between the block-houses. He succeeded in getting into the dark and deserted town, and making his way into a grocery store he found that the shelves were full of canned goods. In the darkness he could not read the labels, so he just swept whatever he found into the sack and came sneaking back to camp. He got back without a single adventure, and warm was the greeting that he received from us, for we were mighty hungry. Garcia lost no time in opening a can, and as we had no forks or spoons he stuck in a finger to sample the stuff. The can contained paint. And so did all the cans—twenty-eight of them. We had enough paint to paint a town, and it was for that that Garcia's servant had risked his life."

What Tawney Said

With curious solicitude for the somewhat tarnished reputation of the Hon. Francis J. Heney, the Call has been throwing the translucent beams of its superior knowledge into the very marrow of the congressional inquiry touching the enormous fees pocketed by the professional patriot in recent years. According to the Call Congressman Tawney, who said things about Mr. Heney, has been misquoted. Tawney did not say, the Call tells us, that Heney received last year $23,000 for which he performed no service; what he did say was that in the year 1908 Heney "received $23,000 and performed no service for the government during that year"; also, "As a matter of fact Mr. Heney has not performed any active service for the last three years." The Call desires it to be understood that Congressman Tawney has not accused Mr. Heney of misappropriation of public funds; and no fair-minded person will assert that this accusation has been made explicitly, but that it has not been made implicitly no person of ordinary intelligence will go so far as to affirm. After a careful, and, let us hope, conscientious analysis of the matter, I have come to the conclusion that Congressman Tawney's words carry a most sinister implication. At any rate the deduction is imperative that our vociferous little patriot, who was telling us about two years ago that he expected as a reward for his self-sacrificing devotion to his country nothing more than the rearing of his sculptured counterfeit presentment by grateful citizens, was permitted to draw $23,000 out of the national treasury nearly two years after the termination of his services though he had previously drawn $46,000 for three years' work.

The Belated Fee

Though Mr. Tawney has not drawn a diagram of the matter there is hardly any room for misconception of the facts. Tawney says that Heney entered the employ of the Government in November, 1903, and that his active service continued for about three years, or until about November, 1906. Yet it was in 1908 that he received $23,000. Mr. Tawney says that Mr. Heney performed no services during that year. Neither as a matter of fact did he perform any services during the preceding year, for, according to Congressman Tawney, Mr. Heney's services ended about three years after his appointment, which was made in November, 1903. That this statement is not inaccurate everybody knows, for Heney was working for the Graft Prosecution in 1907. Now the Call and all the other kept organs of the Spreckels-Phelan cabal protest perfervidly against the intimation that the immaculate Roosevelt contributed to the support of the moral crusade in San Francisco with funds unlawfully extracted from the national treasury, but if the imputation is unfounded why was the Government so long about paying its just debts? And why are the accounts at Washington in such a tangle that nobody can find out the principle on which Heney was paid or the exact services which each sum paid to him was intended to requite? We all know that Mr. Roosevelt was deeply interested in our moral crusade. The

TO POLITICAL CANDIDATES

Make your campaign more effective by addressing voters directly with individually typewritten, personal letters. Let me help you to win.

L. A. IRELAND
Manager The Multographers
Kearny 4956 334 Phelan Building

Santa Fe

NEW TRAIN

Via the Santa Fe to Chicago via Kansas City

EAST

Leave San Francisco daily 7:15 a. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m. This is in addition to our two other trains leaving San Francisco and Oakland 8:00 and 10:00 p. m. Also New Train to Fresno. Leaving San Francisco 4:00 p. m.; Leave Oakland 4:05 p. m. This in addition to our THREE other trains leaving San Francisco daily at 7:15 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m.

For detail information phone or call on Jas. B. Duffy, 673 Market Street, San Francisco
T. Love, Market Street Ferry Depot, San Francisco
J. J. Warner, 1112 Broadway, Oakland

vociferous Heney and the blatant Older had promised to "get" Harriman for him, and anybody that has made but a desultory study of the Roosevelt character with the aid of the refulgent sidelights that have been thrown thereon in recent years, will conceive it to be credible that he guaranteed some of the sinews of a war which gave promise of gratifying his unbridled vindictiveness. Roosevelt and Heney are moralists of the same tribe. To promote whatever according to their conception is the greater good they will go the distance with the self-satisfying assurance that every step of the road is holy ground. However, it would be unjust to assert that the evidence is conclusive of their guilt in this matter of the alleged misappropriation of public funds. As a matter of fact the evidence is vague and uncertain; so much so as to justify the gravest suspicion, for the public records at Washington pertaining to almost everything else from postage stamps to battleships are clear, explicit and unequivocal. The ridiculous Call tells us that the records show that Heney earned in the government service all he got from the Government. It is by such transparent misrepresentation as this that the graft organs have sharpened the perceptive faculties of the erstwhile benighted. If the records vindicate Heney and Roosevelt why the investigation that has been held? And the investigation having been held why have not the graft organs published the facts that prove the groundlessness of the insinuations that have been made? If there is anything that the records do show it is that Heney is the greediest gouger that ever got a prehensile fist into Uncle Sam's golden vaults.

Mrs. Slowpay—Are you quite sure you have shown me everything?

Salesman—No madame, we have an old account on our books which I would be very glad to show you.

May Restore Machines

The cigar dealers of this city whose revenue has been seriously curtailed by the abolition of the slot machines are planning a new move—nothing less than submitting the restoration of the nickle-catchers to a popular vote at the coming election. The poolsellers resorted to a similar measure several years ago. The cigar men have with them the manufacturers of the machines and the hundreds of clerks who lost their positions through the devices being put out of business. I almost believe that an ordinance restoring the machines would be passed if submitted to a popular vote. The machine habit became very firmly fixed here. Every day I see men spending real money for smokes, the while looking with yearning, lonesome air at the counters where the machines used to be. They know well enough that they are saving money under present conditions; but the gambling spirit is so strong that they are willing to take a chance and pay for their fun.

Extravagant Smokers

Statistics show that San Franciscans spend several times as much per capita for tobacco as is spent by the inhabitants of most cities in this country. New York is the closest second, yet San Francisco has a good lead. To be sure, cigars and cigarettes are slightly higher priced here than they are in the East; yet the fact remains that San Franciscans are far more extravagant in their smoking than are the Easterners, especially in the matter of cigars. The five-center is more common there among fairly well to do men than it is here, and there the ten cent cigar occupies the place of the "bit" smoke here. When an Easterner buys cigars for himself and a friend, he says, if he wants to be liberal, "Take a good one—take a ten-center." Here under similar circumstances, it is understood that two for a quarter cigars are wanted. A man who would treat and ask his companion to have a five cent smoke would be looked upon as extremely tight with his money. Kipling, in his American notes, tells with wonder of seeing San Francisco laboring men smoking fairly good cigars.

Easymark—"It just occurs to me that I have not a cent of money with me!"

Parasite—"Oh, that does not matter. You are known here."

Easymark—"Yes, unfortunately!"

Unillustrated Dailies

The daily newspapers of San Francisco have thrown down the gage of battle to the striking photo-engravers, and for several days past have been publishing absolutely no pictures, even discarding illustrations in advertisements. This is a result of a meeting that the publishers held the other day when it was agreed that the engravers should be given a dose of their own medicine. The strikers had become so cocksure after being out for a few days that they added a demand for a two dollar a week raise to their former ultimatum. That was the straw that broke the camel's back, and now the engravers are considerably perturbed at finding themselves in a worse fix than ever. And as a consequence of it all the papers have been hardly recognizable during the past few days. Imagine the back page of the Examiner without portraits of Fra Elbertus, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Rev. Thomas B. Gregory and other exalted apostles of piffle! And the pages of all the papers certainly do look odd without pictures of pugilists, vaudevillians and other notables. For my part I think it is an improvement. I prefer news to a lot of muddy, smudged illustrations such as the daily papers run. And I have little doubt that when the publishers find how well they can get along without pictures they will determine not to return to them.

Singer Loses Nose

Arcangeli, the baritone at the Princess Theatre, lost his nose during the performance of the "L'Amico Fritz" on Saturday afternoon, and as a consequence some of the singers temporarily lost their heads. It was a beautiful false nose that Arcangeli wore—massive, luminous, protuberant, a very Cyrano of a proboscis. Unfortunately it was not securely fastened on. During an impassioned passage of song, which called for considerable facial contortion, off came the nose. Arcangeli made a grab and caught the truant member, and a laugh went up from the audience. The singer turned his back and attempted to fasten the counterfeit organ in place, but, when he turned and his auditors saw that he had failed

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

Write to the Surbrug Company for samples and prices.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

ASK FOR

BLACK AND WHITE

SCOTCH WHISKEY

IT IS THE BEST

NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

they burst into a shout of laughter. Bertossi, who was on the stage with him, attempted to sing, but after nearly choking with mirth, she turned to the audience and threw her hands into the air as a signal that the episode had been too much for her. Decorum restored, Bertossi finished her song and left the stage as Colombini came rushing dramatically on, and striding up to Arcangeli began to sing. Then the absence of the nose became apparent to him. A grin overspread his face, and in an instant the singers and the audience had joined in laughter that could not be suppressed for several minutes. Arcangeli, divining that a reappearance with the nose in place would mean more fun, wisely refrained from wearing it during the remainder of the performance.

Matinee Man's Woes

Nothing less beautiful than a rendition of "L'Amico Fritz" would tempt me to another matinee. I was not in the least abashed by being almost a lone man among

DON CARLOS OF BOURBON

Pretender to the Spanish throne, who died on Sunday. This photograph was taken about thirty years ago, and has been in the possession of a San Francisco family ever since.

hundreds of women, for I am fond of the sex; but some of their ways are trying. On one side of me a woman ate chocolates audibly, while on the other a musical enthusiast persisted in humming the opera from beginning to end. Gertrude Atherton was in the audience and remembering the blistering words that she wrote recently regarding people who disturb operatic performances by unseemly chatter, I attempted to wig-wag her a signal to come to my relief and tell these annoying mortals to shut up as she said she did under similar circumstances. But this was not the only penalty of attending a matinee. By the time the curtain went down my desire for a smoke amounted almost to an obsession, and I was anxious to gain the street. I do not think that the primpery that went on around me caused more than five minutes' delay, but it seemed half an hour. One woman had a friend hook her waist up behind; another brought forth a small mirror and took plenty of time in arranging her hair; a third borrowed the hand-glass to see that her hat was on straight. And there I sat suffering in the center of a row of seats, hankering for that smoke. The next time the man at the box office says that he has sold me an aisle seat I will demand a written guarantee.

A Dresden Experience

There are some who say that Mrs. Atherton exaggerated when she stated that even whispering would not be tolerated during an operatic performance abroad. But she is entirely right. A friend told me only yesterday of bringing down the wrath of the Germans on her head during a performance in Dresden. She had taken her opera glasses to the theatre with her in a heavy envelope, which she had sealed. While the overture was being played she attempted to remove the glasses from their covering, which caused quite an audible rustling of the envelope. Instantly from all sides came a "Sh-h-h-h" that sounded to her like the roar of an express train. She hardly dared to breathe during the remainder of the evening.

Spanish Pretender Dead

Don Carlos of Bourbon, who died at Varez in Lombardi last Sunday, had long ceased to be a thorn in the side of the reigning Spanish family, although for a long time he fought hard for the place on the throne that he claimed was his by right of birth. He was born at Laybach, Austria, March 30, 1848. His father was Don Juan, brother of Don Carlos, Charles VII, who claimed the Spanish throne under the special law of succession established by Philip V, and in whose behalf the Carlist uprisings of 1848, 1855 and 1860 were organized. Charles VII died in 1861, and his rights went to his brother, who was equally unsuccessful in gaining control of the Spanish sceptre. The mother of the Don Carlos who died on Sunday, was the Archduchess Maria Teresa of Austria. Don Carlos married Margaret de Bourbon. In 1868 Don Juan resigned his claim to the throne in favor of his son, who in 1873 entered Spain at the head of an army. There was a four years' war in which Don Carlos was defeated. He retired to France, and shortly afterward

HOTEL ARGONAUT
Society of California Pioneers Building
FOURTH STREET NEAR MARKET — San Francisco — CENTRE OF THE CITY
Catering to Family and Commercial Trade
400 Rooms $1.00 per day and up Dining room seats 500 guests
Special 50c Luncheon from 11:30 to 2 p. m.
Weekly and monthly rates on application. Free bus meets all trains and steamers.
Telephone Douglas 3393 EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager

THE FORUM CAFE
OAKLAND
Now under the management of
MR. GUSTAV MANN

HOTEL HARCOURT
Formerly the Nordhoff.
SUTTER AND LARKIN STREETS
AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN
An Elegantly Furnished Modern Home. Phone Franklin 2100

HOTEL NORMANDIE
SUTTER AND GOUGH STREETS
A comfortable, high order, uptown hotel, now under the management of THOS. H. SHEDDEN, Formerly Manager of St. Dunstan's.

Emile Fonteille, Formerly with the Pup — Victor Laborie, John Dubourdieu, Formerly with Poodle Dog
MAISON DORÉE HOTEL AND RESTAURANT
151-157 ELLIS ST., ABOVE POWELL
Phone Douglas 1040. Connecting all Apartments.
Best Merchants Lunch in the City
Lunch with Wine, 75 cents. Dinner with Wine, $1.25

the Republic of Spain was dissolved and the eldest son of Queen Isabella took the throne as Alfonso XII. Spain has had more or less internal dissension since that time as to the right to the throne, but Don Carlos made no further attempt to gain it. There has been some Carlist agitation of late years but it has amounted to little.

Mason Converted to Catholicism

A San Franciscan, very high in Masonry, tells me that the Marquis of Ripon, whom he met while abroad some years ago, and who died in London recently, was at the time he knew him one of the most enthusiatic members of the order that he ever associated with. Yet Ripon died a Catholic, having been converted after he had been Grand Master of the Free Masons of England. I have known of Catholics who had become Masons going back to the church on their deathbed, but for a Protestant to abandon the Masonic order to join the Catholic Church is a very rare occurrence. George Frederick Samuel Robinson, Marquis of Ripon, was one of England's most noted men. He was born on October 24, 1827, and was the son of the first Earl of Ripon, and Sarah, the only daughter of the Fourth Duke of Buckinghamshire. He was made a marquis in 1871. He was M. P. for many years, and was in succession Under Secretary of War, Under Secretary in the Indian Office, Secretary of State for War, Secretary of State for India, the Lord President of the Council, Governor-General of India, First Lord of the Admiralty and Secretary for the Colonies. He was made head of the Free Masons of England in 1871, and in 1874, having been converted to Catholicism, resigned his office in which he was succeeded by the Prince of Wales, now King Edward.

"Yes, my daughter, men are exactly the opposite to chickens—the older the men the more tender they are."

A Rural Inquest

The pompousness of small fry officials was strikingly demonstrated at the inquest of William Von Meyerinck, the bookkeeper for the Union State Bank, who killed himself at Larkspur. The inquest was held on Sunday, and four newspapermen, three from this city and one from San Rafael, were on hand. They were informed by Coroner Sawyer of San Rafael that they could not all attend, as the proceedings were not to be public. "I had an idea that all inquests were public," mildly ventured one of the reporters. "Well," replied the coroner, "it may be that they are in a way. In fact, one might say that they are semi-public. For that reason I will let one of you attend, and he can tell the others what goes on." Seemingly assenting, the reporters waited until a constable came along with jury material, and then slipped unobtrusively in with the official and his charges. Seeing that they had gained admittance, Sawyer hesitated. He was sure of his right to keep them out, but that the law empowered him to throw them out once they had gained admittance he was somewhat doubtful. So he let them remain. Then his troubles and the reporters' triumphs began. "Why, why," he sputtered, "there are only eight jurymen; we must have nine." A reporter consented to be the ninth. Then there was another difficulty. "There is no shorthand man here to take the inquisitions," lamented Sawyer. Suppressing a smile, a second reporter who wrote shorthand volunteered to be the inquisitioner. This was all right as far as it went, but soon the third difficulty arose. The note left by the dead man was offered in evidence, but as it was written in German Sawyer could not read it. "Is there anybody here who can interrupt this note?" inquired the harrassed coroner. A third reporter acted as court interpreter. So that of the four reporters who were admitted, Sawyer made use of three. The newspapermen met with anything but a cordial reception from the doctor who had been summoned after the shooting. He was asked to tell his side of the story, but refused unless paid for it. "I will not talk," he said, "unless each of you pays me my regular consulting fee of $2.50." And seeing no evidence of forthcoming fees, he strode away.

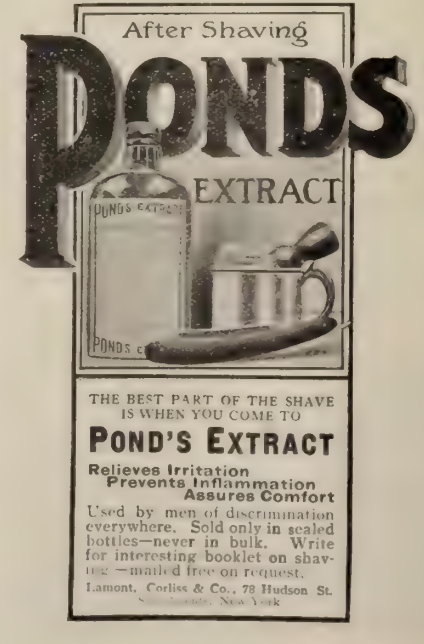
Johnson and His Dupes

The matrimonial adventures of Christian Johnson have landed him in the penitentiary, but the foolish women who were so ready to be duped are still at large and ready to become the prey of the next plausible schemer who will feed their vanity. As usual after every exposition of this kind the cry is raised "there ought to be a law," but the only law which would prove effective would be one empowering the fool killer to do summary execution. There is no occasion to pity the dupes of a wholesale matrimonial scoundrel, for the women whom he victimizes meet him more than half way. They are lured not by love but by lucre, and they care for nothing but the material gain they expect to enjoy. If it should so turn out that the man in the case really did possess wealth they would have no hesitation about accepting the profits of the transaction. The probabilities are that just as soon as they could induce him to place an appreciable fortune in their hands they would sue for divorce with liberal costs and alimony, and they should be just as ready to pocket the losses. No one need commiserate the misfortunes of the victims of any sort of green goods or gold brick swindle, for most of these transactions are so transparently fraudulent that only rogues and rascals can be attracted by them. They are ready enough to undertake to swindle others, and if, by any unforseen accident they should happen to find themselves on the winning side they would have no compunctions as to honesty. It is only a case of the biter bitten. Common sense ought to inform any one fit to be at large that men and women who resort to matrimonial agencies must be handicapped by insuperable obstacles or else bent on fraud. People who juggle with edged weapons should expect cut fingers.

The Anglo & London Paris National Bank

Of San Francisco

Successor of The London Paris National Bank of San Francisco, The Anglo-California Bank, Limited.



Northeast Cor. Pine and Sansome Sts., San Francisco

Sig. Greenebaum, Pres.; I. Steinhart, Chairman of Finance Committee; H. Fleishhacker, V.-Pres. and Man.; Alden Anderson, V.-Pres. and Sec.; Jos. Friedlander, V.-Pres.; R. Altschul, Cashier; C. F. Hunt, Asst., Cashier; A. Hochstein, Asst. Cashier; F. E. Beck, Asst. Cashier.

Capital $4,000,000.00

Surplus and Undivided Profits..... 1,500,000.00

We offer our customers every facility consistent with good banking and invite new accounts.

THE BEST PART OF THE SHAVE IS WHEN YOU COME TO

POND'S EXTRACT

Relieves Irritation
Prevents Inflammation
Assures Comfort

Used by men of discrimination everywhere. Sold only in sealed bottles—never in bulk. Write for interesting booklet on shaving—mailed free on request.

Lamont, Corliss & Co., 78 Hudson St. New York

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy

Stocks: The stock market continues to be influenced solely by the heavy buying in steel stocks to new high levels. Absorption of these securities was by the recent buyers who appeared to be willing to take all offerings without creating spectacular operations. Metal stocks generally were firm in sympathy with the steels, some buying in the specialties but shorts were a contributing factor in coppers. There was also some good buying in leading rails but not aggressive. It looks as if an accumulating interest was in progress in these securities. We think the market is in a waiting attitude on the crop situation. We feel like buying good stocks on small recessions for good profits.

Cotton: During the past week the cotton market experienced quite a setback, but as the market has advanced over two hundred points since June 20th, this action was not unexpected. This does not mean that the bulls have abandoned the fight, or that conditions have so far improved that a large crop such as will be needed next year is by any means assured, but as setbacks are a part of all bull campaigns, and as speculation is now upon a much larger scale than for several years past, these wide swings are to be looked for whenever the market becomes over bought, and we would therefore advise conservatism for the moment, buying only on good breaks and taking reasonable profits when they are available. The growing crop is now entering upon the most critical period and weather for the next two months will be the most important market factor. The recent rains reported in Texas proved to have been only scattered showers, and we are receiving daily reports of deterioration. Owing to the importance of the Texas yield and the large proportion it usually bears to the total cotton crop the situation in that State will continue to cause anxiety. Prompt relief from the heat and drought in Texas and favorable weather elsewhere would undoubtedly improve prospects, but the impression is gaining ground that the crop of the present season has made a poor start.

Wheat: The July option has been the center of attraction the past week, and the highest price on this option was scored Tuesday when July sold at 129. This was brought about through manipulation by the big LaSalle Street bull who had been quietly picking up this option when everyone was so anxious to sell it the first of the month on bright skies and talk of a big run of new wheat to this market. But as time went on and the new wheat did not make its appearance in large enough volume to offset an already urgent cash demand at all market centers, shorts became nervous and covered freely. There was heavy selling on the advance by the bull party and rumors were current that the largest shorts had made a private settlement. As the weather, which had been unfavorable for threshing and marketing of the new wheat, changed for the better, sentiment became bearish again and prices declined rapidly winding up the week at a net loss of almost 9 cents from the extreme top. The deferred futures September and December did not share in the fireworks and were steady, but inclined to drag towards the end of the week. The news has been rather conflicting, some reports from the threshers were good while others claimed only 4 to 8 bushels per acre. Crop prospects in the spring wheat country continue favorable. Cash demand is strong enough to take care of limited offerings, and stocks are showing a slight decrease at all primary points. The foreign news continues bullish especially from Argentine where the drought is as yet unbroken, and Liverpool prices show a net profit to the exporter of about 5 cent per bushel. A cargo of wheat was worked at Portland this week, which was sold at the highest price on record for this time of the year. As long as these conditions prevail prices will not go much lower.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO

CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. Power boats from the Hotel meet passengers from the North on the arrival of the Pacific Coast S. S. Co. steamers. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, 334 S. Spring St., Los Angeles.

HOTEL ALEXANDRIA

LOS ANGELES

IN SAFETY, SERVICE
AND SANITATION

HAS TAKEN ITS PLACE
AMONG THE BEST HOTELS

A. C. BILICKE, President
S. J. WHITMORE, Vice-Pres. and Gen. Mgr. JOS. REICHL, Asst. Mgr.

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487

R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to
Chicago and New York

Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

CITY OF PARIS

Facsimilie of Art Glass on the Dome

HOME AGAIN

UNION SQUARE

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

The Passion For Display

Mrs. Frank Carolan is to build a new home at Burlingame, one of mammoth proportions, something grand, gorgeous and peculiar. It is to be a castle without a moat, drawbridge or donjon tower, but with expensive filigree, and in the matter of cost it is to surpass anything west of Chicago, the sweet village of the plains whence the daughter of the house of Pullman hails. According to the veracious reporters of the daily press who are in close touch with our provincial aristocracy, Mrs. Carolan is animated by a very worthy ambition—that of owning the most imposing and costly home on the peninsula. In this the reporters are not incredible. Mrs. Carolan has a taste for editions de luxe and all the sort of thing, and therefore it is quite conceivable that to her the ideal home, sweet home, is one of dazzling splendor with lots of elbow room. But when the reporters tell us that the Crocker home at Burlingame was conceived in a spirit of rivalry, and that it was designed to surpass in pretentiousness the homes of Mr. Crocker's neighbors I know that they are indulging in flippancy and flubdub. It is evident they don't know the Crockers. The Crockers differ somewhat in taste and inclination from the ostentatious representatives of the Burlingame set. Mrs. Crocker is a woman of education. The higher aims of existence, not the vulgar, engross her attention.

MRS. JULIUS KRUTTSCHNITT, Jr.

She was formerly Miss Marie Pickering. She is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Pickering, at their home on Broadway. Mr. and Mrs. Kruttschnitt will remain a month, then leave for Durango, Mexico, their future home.

Social Heart-Burnings

There are going to be heart-burnings among society maidens before the details of the Portola Festival are arranged. There will be striving after the positions of maids of honor to Queen Vergilia. It is obvious that Her Majesty cannot have in her court all the pretty lasses of the town. It is likely that those who yearn and are not called will weep a little in the seclusion of their boudiors. So far it is not even known what are to be the qualifications for maids of honor. Will the chosen ones have to possess beauty, wealth, brains or lineage, or a combination of all four? Queen Vergilia

MISS BROOKE ROSE

Whose engagement to Frederick Hastings, the concert singer, is announced.

is the proud possessor of a long and distinguished genealogical tree. Will she insist on blue blood in her maids of honor? Will she insist on being surrounded by young ladies who are as tall and statuesque as herself, or will she accentuate her queenly dignity and stature by contrast with petite and vivacious maidens? Will her attendants be of the Spanish or dark-eyed beauties of the Spanish type, or blue-eyed blondes—or will she judiciously combine the two? Will she look for her own literary and conversational qualities in her

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

Go to Whigham's when you want that bab'y photograph taken maids of honor—or will the guinea stamp form the qualification? But after all it is not definitely known who will choose these attendants. The queen may make the selection, or the task may fall upon the committee. Whoever is chosen will take part in some brilliant court functions, with obeisance, homage, and best of all, dazzling robes of royalty.
Permanent Location 739 MARKET ST., Opp. Grant Ave.

A "Merry Widow" Player

Because of the fact that she has relatives and friends here and also by reason of her more than ordinary beauty, Miss Blanche Curtis of the "Merry Widow" company,

MISS BLANCHE CURTIS

The San Francisco girl who has won distinction with the "Merry Widow" Company.

has attracted a great deal of attention at the Van Ness Theatre. Miss Curtis is looked upon as one of the most promising members of the Savage collection of players, and has already taken some good parts. At present she is one of the girls who make the scene at Maxime's, in the last act, a whirl of fun; but she has understudied some of the leading parts in the play. In Oakland she sang the role of Olga, the wife of Nova Kovich, and was highly praised both for her acting and singing. Her friends here confidently expect to see her come back to San Francisco a star at some not distant day. With her beauty, her temperament, her talent and her determination to perfect herself in her chosen art, she is bound to triumph.

Dr. Geo. K. Herzog, after an extensive course of studies in the European Medical centers, has returned and is now located in the Whitney Building, 133 Geary street. The Doctor is now making the diseases of women his specialty.

A Rooseveltian Senora

A brother of that most fascinating of matrons, Mrs. Walter MacGavin, makes his home in Manila, where he married a charming senorita belonging to one of the oldest Spanish families in the islands. That was quite a while ago, and nine hopefuls have come to bless the hearthstone of the favored pair. The mother of the nine is fond of comparing herself with American women, and among them with Mrs. Walter MacGavin, always ending her observations with the remark: "Yes, you have a beautiful country and beautiful ways, and I am not an American of course, but I think that your President Roosevelt would smile more on me than on my dear sister-in-law." And the nine are proudly displayed in comparison with the only two of the Walter MacGavins. Mrs. Walter is devoted to her two, and sees no reason to lament the fact that there are no more. She was telling the other day of her sister-in-law's attitude. "And to think," she finished, in her inimitable way, "to think that the smile of the President would make up for nine children!"

They Wonder!

The friends of Miss Suzanne Kirkpatrick are wondering what effect the rumor of her engagement to Allen McDonald will have upon Bradley Wallace, who is at present in Paris with his mother. For a year or more he had been regarded as a suitor for Miss Kirkpatrick's hand. Young Wallace is an only son. His mother, who, before her marriage was Miss Annie Bradley, is very wealthy, as also is her mother. Both these fortunes are intended for Bradley Wallace. He will take the examinations for Harvard upon his return from Paris to New York. Allen McDonald is an architect and a man of exceptional talent.

To Marry Into Royalty

I heard a society dame boasting the other day that she once knew "Silent" Smith, afterward the stepfather of Miss Anita Stewart, who if she carries out her announced intention of marrying Prince Miguel of Braganza, will be the first American girl to wed into a European royal family. Smith at the time he visited here was eligible enough without any future possibilities of connection by marriage with royalty. Afterward he married the divorced wife of William Rhinelander Stewart, and died on board his yacht at Kioto, Japan, while on his wedding trip. Miss Anita Stewart is 24 years of age, and is possessed of a smaller fortune than usually tempts the European nobility, her stepfather having left her but $500,000. However, her mother has more than $3,000,000. Prince Miguel is a grandson of the Prince of Braganza, who was king of Portugal from 1828 to 1834, when he was deposed. He is the eldest son of Duke Miguel of Braganza, his mother being Princess Elizabeth of Thurn and Taxis. Ever since the grandfather was deposed the family have pretended to the throne of Portugal. In marrying a commoner Prince Miguel will have to surrender this claim, which, in view of the fact that it is a more or less visionary one, and that the throne of Portugal is not a very great prize, would not be much of a sacrifice. He is an officer in the Austrian army and is wealthy.

Engaged to Singer

An engagement which will come as a pleasant surprise to many friends is that of Miss Brooke Rose of this city and Frederick P. Hastings, the noted singer. Miss Rose is the daughter of Hon. A. H. Rose who was a

THE BONNET SHOP
Importers of REAL PARISIAN MILLINERY
121 GEARY STREET
Our Specialty, Strictly High Class Tailored Hats at Popular Prices
NOBLE

power in local politics in early days and was at one time among the millionaires of the State. His first wife, the mother of the prospective bride, was Miss Sarah Braxton Shaw, sister of Mrs. Selden S. Wright of this city, one of the most beautiful and attractive girls in early day society here. Miss Rose returned last Thursday from a three years' absence in Honolulu and Japan, which time was spent in travel and study. She is a petite and unusually attractive girl, with marked brunette coloring. She is a prominent member of the Colonial Dames Society and Albert Sidney Johnson Chapter, Daughters of the Confederacy. Miss Rose is at present a guest of relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Kirkham Wright, on Scott street. Miss Rose's fiance is the well known baritone who was lately in San Francisco with Nordica. This summer he was the leading baritone in a successful concert tour company which sang in all the principal Eastern and Southern cities. This concert marked the first tour and appearance in the United States of the Dresden Philharmonic Orchestra. In the fall Mr. Hastings will again join Nordica and tour Canada. The prospective groom is a member of a prominent Boston family. He is a graduate of the Boston Conservatory of Music, and later studied abroad. His grandfather, Thomas Hastings, was a composer of note, among his songs being the famous hymn "Rock of Ages." It is to be regretted that Miss Rose's marriage will necessitate her residence in New York. No date has been set for the wedding. Many teas and a round of entertaining is being planned for this charming California girl.

The Beer Vanishes.

A servant with a thirst for beer and a sense of humor brought great disappointment to a number of Ross Valley's elect the other night. Several of them had met at an informal party, and along toward midnight the hostess suggested that they have some beer, as the day had been extremely hot. So as it was the servant's night out, the host went to the cellar, and reaching into the barrel brought forth several bottles in their straw cases. He carried an armful of them upstairs, and as he appeared with his burden an anticipatory "Ah" went up from the guests, for the night was warm. With dexterity indicating much practice the host pried the cap from one of the bottles, and poured out—water. And that was what the others contained. The beer had been drunk, water substituted, then the bottles re-capped, put back in their straw wrappings, and stowed away in the bottom of the barrel. The servant left before breakfast the next morning. A similar happening is reported in another Ross Valley household, but in this case there were several servants, and as there was no means of finding which was the guilty one, or if they all shared in the transgression, none of them lost their positions, their employer not caring to adopt the Rooseveltian method.

A Costly Cat

Is an Angora cat worth $15 plus a handbag, a well-filled purse, a diamond ring and $20 worth of seats to "The Merry Widow"? That is what Mrs. Al Redding's long-haired cat cost her, and now she is guarding the animal with extra care because of its value. She had bargained for the Angora, and before going to the cattery or wherever pussy was kept, called at the Van Ness Theatre where she purchased ten tickets, intending to take a bevy of friends to the performance. Then she went to get her cat, which errand accomplished, she went home. It was on arriving there that she missed the bag and the contents mentioned. Up to the present time they have not been recovered. Mrs. Redding is satisfied that in the numerous transfers that she had to make in going after her newly acquired pet she unwittingly dropped the valuables.

Our Summer Charms

A day's stay in the St. Francis this summer will convince anyone that San Francisco's charms as a summer resort have at last become generally recognized. From the many groups of smart people that gather around the tea tables of the white and gold room in the afternoons and who assemble for suppers after the theatre, one is led to wonder whether society really has any exiles to mourn and whether it has not become necessary to remain in San Francisco all the time in order to enjoy the society of the nicest people from other places. Among other things that tend to establish this belief is the large number of distinguished foreign guests who have arrived on the latest steamers from the Orient. A captain of the Coldstream Guards, who was at the St. Francis a short time ago stated that California has received a lot of "jolly good advertising" through the enthusiastic patriotism and personal popularity of Californians who have the entree to society in London; and that a trip to this State is now considered quite the thing. So many glowing reports have been brought to the other side, declared this gentleman, that not only might we expect a large influx of aristocratic British tourists, but that it was probable that many wealthy Englishmen would purchase country places out here. In this connection it has been reported in the press that one of the richest peers of the United Kingdom is negotiating for vast land holdings in California.

Kirkpatrick Returns

John C. Kirkpatrick, general manager of the Palace Hotel Company who has been abroad for the past few months, arrived in San Francisco on Saturday. Colonel Kirkpatrick has been ransacking Europe for bric-a-brac and art gems for the new Palace Hotel which is to be reopened about November of this year. He expresses himself well pleased with the progress of the work on the Palace during his absence and declares that one must get away from San Francisco for a few months in order to appreciate the remarkable progress in rebuilding which is going on here all the time. At Grand Rapids, Mich., Colonel Kirkpatrick saw two solid train loads of forty cars each containing furniture for the new Palace, which was just about to be shipped. It is said that these will be the largest individual shipments ever made to any part of the country. Mrs. Kirkpatrick and her charming daughter, Miss Suzanne, who have been at their country home in Pleasanton during the absence of Mr. Kirkpatrick have come down to the city for a few days and are now at the Fairmont.

TOWNSEND'S
CALIFORNIA GLACÈ FRUITS AND CANDIES
27 Years in Palace Hotel Building
All Orders Given Prompt Attention at
46 MARKET STREET
Phone Douglas 4814
Factory, 117 SAN JOSE AVE. Phone Mission 378
Also at News Stands of the Fairmont and St. Francis Hotels

J. Magnin & Co.
Large Reductions on Summer Apparel
In Every Department
Garments which are specially adapted for Vacation and Outing Wear
GRANT AVENUE AND GEARY STREET

A Comic Opera Court

The least ceremonious court in Europe is that of Servia. In fact, according to the statements of a correspondent, it is more free and easy than most democracies, King Peter being shown less deference than is accorded our president, or even a congressman. It is not an uncommon sight there to see the king standing while he talks to a seated deputy who does not even remove his hat out of respect to his monarch. The deputy's argument is, "I pay his salary, and he'd better be good to me, or I'll start an agitation for another king." Tradesmen are not kept out of the royal enclosure in Servia as they are in England and other monarchies. The bootmaker goes to all the court balls, while the butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker hob and nob with the ruler of the land. The tailor has as many privileges in the palace as has any other subject. The balls are described as fearful and wonderful social affairs. There are two large rooms in the palace which are thrown together for dancing. The guests begin to arrive about 9 o'clock, in all sorts of costumes. Evening dress is almost unknown. One of the geeatest men in Servia was observed at a recent court ball wearing a silk negligee shirt. The women wear any old kind of gowns, some of them appearing in decidedly short dresses and with their hair hanging down their backs. The Servians have no liking for fresh air, consequently the room in which they dance is almost hermetically sealed. To add to the horrow of this, garlic is one of the favorite seasonings of Servia. You need little imagination in order to be able to shudder at the thought of participating in a court ball in Servia. Foreign diplomats who attend spend most of their time in an ante-room, darting out now and then to take a whirl with a garlic-saturated Servian damsel. The King stays heroically in the ball room. His daughter diplomatically manages to be away when such a function is given. Even worse than his dances are the King's public dinners. In the matter of food, neither quality nor cookery appeals to him. The meats are tough, the plates cold, and the viands lukewarm. The former King Alexander, whose brutal assassination made a place for Peter, was an epicure.

Quiet Wedding

The wedding of Katherine Metcalf and John Brook Kaufmann was quitely celebrated on Wednesday at Miss Hamlin's school on Pacific avenue. Only a very few of the bride's most intimate friends were bidden to the ceremony, and they were more than delighted to hear that her home for the present is to be right here in the city, as for some months at least they expect to board at Miss Hamlin's home on Laguna street. Mrs. Kaufmann is very bright and attractive, and like her sister, Miss Edith Metcalf, has hosts of friends who are delighted that her change of name for the present will not also mean a change of home. As her engagement followed a nine days' acquaintance and there was only a very busy four weeks' interval, all the entertaining that usually falls to the lot of an engaged girl is being planned on the return from the honeymoon, and luncheons and teas with Mrs. Kaufmann as the motif will break the monotony of the dull August days.

Sports at Del Monte

Great interest is being taken among the amateur golf and tennis players in the announcement of the dates for the month of sports at Hotel Del Monte. The golf tournament will open August 28th and close September 4th. This is, to use a sporting phrase, to be a "very classy" event. In addition to the usual competitions, which include handicap match play for the Del Monte Cup for men, and the Del Monte Cup for women, with trophies for winners and runners-up, mixed foursomes and consolation handicaps for men and women, there will be the first contest for the Del Monte championship in scratch match play and a team match between Northern and Southern California teams. Vincent Whitney who won the honors in golf last year will defend them this season. The members of the handicap committee for this year are Sumner P. Hunt, Los Angeles Country Club, Thomas P. Munnford, Annandale Golf Club, Pasadena, Percy W. Selby, Burlingame Country Club, W. F. Garby, Claremont Country Club, Arthur J. Owen, San Francisco Golf and Country Club. Miss May Sutton, the champion woman tennis player of the world, will also be there. This, by the way, may be Miss Sutton's last appearance in tournament as her plans in regard to tennis playing after marriage to Mr. Ham of Mexico are not yet settled. These annual tennis tournaments are played on the splendid "professional courts" of Del Monte and are under the auspices of the Pacific States Lawn Tennis Association. The tennis games begin September 5th and end September 15th. Another event which will attract many is the annual Dog Show, which is to be held August 20th and 21st, under the auspices of the Ladies' Kennel Association. As an additional attraction the Pacific Improvement Company announces that Pebble Beach Lodge—a unique resort and clubhouse which it is building at Pebble Beach on the seventeen mile drive—will be ready early in August. The opening of this will be an event of great importance and the company is planning a number of attractive features in this connection.

The King's New Favorite

Another American woman has been looked upon with favor by King Edward. The latest chosen one is Mrs. William B. Leeds of New York, who attracted the King's attention through owning a black pearl worth $70,000. The King first saw the pearl in a jeweler's collection at Biarritz, but could not afford to buy it. When he called again a few months later, he sent for the jeweler, saying that he would like to have another look at the pearl. He was informed that it had been bought by Mrs. Leeds, who is a very wealthy New York woman. It happened that she and the King were staying at the same hotel, so he sent her word as to his yearning for a sight of the dusky treasure. She sent her whole collection of pearls, a remarkably fine one. When the King returned them he also sent a message to the effect that Mrs. Leeds' little boy might have the privilege of playing with the King's dog. The animal was sent to the Leeds apartments, and he and the youngster had a great romp lasting all afternoon. Following this came an invitation from the King to visit London, at which Mrs. Leeds changed her plans, for a royal invitation

THE ANGELUS
LOS ANGELES
One of California's Best Hotels
Centrally located; street cars direct to hotel.
Rates $1.50 per Day Up

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
UNION SQUARE
Its location and appointments suggest it, and its services establish it, as the ideal place for formal or informal entertainment.
Under the management of JAMES WOODS amounts practically to a command. Which prompts me to wonder what would be the horrible result should such an invitation be ignored. A woman should be able to get fame out of the episode commensurate with the social ostracism that would be involved. But anyway it is said that Edward wishes that the Leeds fortune—and pearl—might be allied to a great title. If he could pull off such a match he ought in all justice to be given the pearl as a commission.

A Musical Center

The new quarters of the Californian Conservatory of Music will be dedicated on Monday, August 2, by a faculty concert and reception. This building, at 147 Presidio avenue, was formerly known as the Studio Building, and is admirably adapted for the uses to which it is to be put. There is a large hall capable of seating 400 persons, and this is decorated in Mission design, the walls of somber red being paneled in large rectangles. The building has been remodeled for the use of the McALLISTER HALL, KENTFIELD, MARIN COUNTY, CAL.

California Conservatory of Music, and has ample and convenient reception rooms and studios. There are manifold advantages offered to the student. The faculty consists of celebrities of world-wide fame and many well known local artists. There will be an orchestral department under the leadership of Herman Genss and Giulio Minetti, and choral classeses conducted by Dr. H. J. Stewart. There will be classes for piano, violin, violincello, vocal, harmony and composition and all orchestra instruments. The Conservatory will give a number of musicales in which the students will participate.

"City of Paris" Home Again

This old-time dry-goods firm has returned after an absence of three years to its former location, at Geary and Stockton streets, fronting Union Square. The building which it occupies is credited by experts with being arichetecturally the most elegant edifice in the city. When the City of Paris first opened on this corner, it was at a considerable distance west of the regularly acknowledged business district of San Francisco, as Stockton street then was but a sandy road lined on both sides with shacks. Today this is recognized as the center of the fine retail trade of the city. The first floor of this new store is fitted with crotch mahogany furnishings of a light hue, and is perfectly lighted by a well in the center and by prismatic windows. In the rear is a dark room that will contain all silks that are for evening wear. The second floor will contain made-up articles for women, both outer and underwear and millinery. The appointments here are of a delicate grey with a stripe of ivory white and are very beautiful. The highly ornamental Louis Quatorze windows are not only very artistic but give a perfect light. On the third floor can be found the mahogany furniture, Oriental rugs colored with pure vegetable dyes, and all kinds of house draperies. Orders for these are taken by Mr. W. H. Cusick, to whose taste in arranging and displaying the stock has been added that of Mr. Paul Verdier, the manager of the house. The dome is one of the great features of the store. Representing the Marie Antoinette period, with its carved pedestals of white marble and fluted pilasters, supporting three galleries, the whole surmounted by a noble illuminated galley of the period of the Caesars, and presenting the salient part of the great seal of the City of Paris, from which the house receives its name and motto, "Fluctuat nec Mergitur" ("Float But Never Sink") this dome is one of the handsomest in America. Unique in its original feature, the oval form with ornate but tasteful garniture in rich Etruscan gold, the ensemble is beautiful beyond description in daylight; at night, when lit by innumerable electric bulbs, it can be compared only to a fairy palace. Since its advent on Sacramento street the City of Paris has made the rounds of the shopping district. Now it is back in the best location in the city, with everything for sale that a woman could want. Its many friends cheerily congratulate it on being "Home Again."

In the Social Spotlight

Father McSweeney of Oakland is at Hotel Rafael for an extended stay. He is under the care of a professional nurse.

Mrs. S. A. Baldwin and two children, from Manilla, have joined the former's mother, Mrs. Judge, at Hotel Rafael.

It has been suggested by some prominent bridge players of Southern California that a Bridge Congress should be held at Del Monte during the Golf and Tennis Tournament in August and September. Many of the golf and tennis cracks are devotees of the modern card game, and play strongly.

Mr. and Mrs. Adolph S. Ochs, Miss Iphigine Ochs and Miss Bernham of New York are in San Francisco. Mr. Ochs is proprietor of the New York Times and of a Memphis journal.

State Librarian James L. Gillis, Mrs. Gillis and their daughters will be guests of Pacific Grove Hotel for some weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. John J. Barrett and children spent the week end at Del Monte and then a week at Tahoe Tavern.

Judge and Mrs. Thomas F. Graham and Miss Ethel Graham are enjoying their usual July visit to the wilds of Mendocino County.

Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Stuart Murray and family are at their country home at Black Point, Marin County.

Mr. and Mrs. Jules Clerfet have a cottage at Black Point which they are occupying this summer.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Comte Jr. and family are as usual giving delightful house parties at their charming summer home at Woodside.

Mrs. C. O. Berger, with her daughter, Minna, and her niece, Miss Alice MacFarlane, who arrived recently from Honolulu, are at the St. Francis. Miss Berger's engagement to George I. Brown of Honolulu was recently announced, and the wedding will probably take place soon after her return to the islands.

L. C. Teck, private secretary to his excellency, Phyra Phipat Kasa, Under State Secretary of Foreign Affairs of the Siamese Government, arrived at the St. Francis from Bangkok last week.

HOTEL VICTORIA
MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Manager
N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton
CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL
Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine.
Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.
American and European Plan.

FAIRMONT HOTEL
A notable example of good hotel keeping--- the result of forty years experience and study.
Rates from $2.50 per day upward, every room with bath.
PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

He accompanies Mr. C. G. Edwards, and the two gentlemen are looking over the local field with the idea of making San Francisco a port of import for rice.

Mirza and Madame Ali Kuli Khan registered at Pacific Grove Hotel for the day, on Friday of last week from Carmel-by-the-Sea where the American Embassador from Persia is established for the remainder of the season.

Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Philip and family are spending the summer at the Chandler school, Los Altos.

Mr. and Mrs. I. Van Dyck Johns of this city have returned from the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition.

Mr. and Mrs. Van Houten of New York are visiting her cousin, Capt. Smith at Sequoi National Park. At this same camp Lieut. and Mrs. Thurman Harrison Bane (nee Dichman) are also stationed

Mrs. Charles Stewart was hostess on Wednesday at an elaborate luncheon at the attractive cottage of her mother in Mill Valley. Twenty young girls from this city were guests.

Mrs. J. W. Edwards was the hostess at an elaborate luncheon during the week at her beautiful home in Belvedere. Among others present were Mrs. Alexander Rowan, Mrs. Joseph M. Masten, Mrs. Frank Winchester, Mrs. Peterson, Mrs. Farnsworth and Miss Laura Farnsworth.

Mrs. Dulce Bolado Ashe has returned from her ranch in Hollister and is looking for a house in Sausalito where she will spend the summer with her two young sons.

A delightful teat given last Friday was that of Mrs. Henry F. Allen when she made Mrs. Dodd, wife of Capt. Dodd of Mare Island, the guest of honor. The guests included prominent ladies from Ross Valley, San Rafael and this city.

Mrs. Starr Keeler of San Rafael will leave this week with her children for a visit to Santa Cruz. Mrs. Keeler was Miss Taft, a relative of the President.

Colonel R. Dirkins, U. S. A., Mrs. R. Dirkins, Mrs. H. W. Wight and Mrs. J. M. Kime of Mare Island, spent some days at Del Monte last week.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Low of London arrived at the St. Francis a few days ago in the course of a world tour.

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Painter and their daughters, Misses Janet and Pauline, who have been spending several weeks at Rowardenaw in the Santa Cruz mountains, have returned to their home in Alameda.

Miss Eliza McMullin is enjoying the season in the Yosemite with her grandmother, Mrs. John McMullin.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace Sisson sailed during the week for their home in the Hawaiian Islands. Mrs. Sisson was formerly Mabel Thayer, daughter of the clarence Thayers of San Rafael, and her wedding took place last week.

Miss Nannie Wright, who has been visiting in New York and Carollton, Miss., where she was the guest of relatives, will return during the week to her home in this city.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Young (nee Bender) after a visit to Mrs. Phoebe Hearst at Pleasanton, left last week for their future home in Boston. Mrs. Young expects to return to California next year on a visit.

Several prominent society ladies with their children will spend the month of August in Bolinas. Among them are Mrs. George D. Boyd, Mrs. Walter S. Hobart, Mrs. Alexander S. Lilly, Mrs. Edgar Neame. Later in the season Mrs. Neame and her two young daughters, the Misses Mary and Katherine, will go abroad where Mrs. Neame will place them in school just outside of London. Mrs. Neame was Miss Edith Forbes of San Rafael. The Neames will not return to California for two or three years.

Mrs. I. P. Parker, wife of Captain Parker, U. S. N., and her daughter, Miss Margaret, will arrive from Manila during this month. Mrs. Parker was formerly Miss Minnie McPherson, a member of a prominent Southern family here.

Mrs. George Borrowe, wife of the well known mining man, arrived during the week from the City of Mexico, and is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bosqui on Clay street. Mr. and Mrs. Bosqui recently purchased the home of the Marshall Hales and moved over from Sausalito to take up their permanent residence here.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Bachman, with Arthur Bachman Jr., and Frauline Meyer of San Francisco, are at Del Monte for a stay of two or three weeks.

Mrs. George P. Tallant and her two interesting children left on Wednesday for New York. They will sail immediately for Italy where they will join Mrs. Tallant's mother, Mrs. Luke Robinson, and spend the winter with her.

LAKE TAHOE NEAR TAHOE TAVERN

EDUCATIONAL

Mills College

FOR YOUNG WOMEN

Only Woman's College on Pacific Coast. Offers same advantages as best Eastern institutions. Full Collegiate course. Degrees conferred. Third and fourth years of College Preparatory during 1909-10. Special opportunities in Domestic Science, Music and Art. Within reach of both Stanford and University of California. Earnest Christian influences; non-sectarian; all forms of healthful out-door amusements. Ideal location in beautiful Oakland hills. 1:10 from San Francisco. Fall term begins August 11, 1909. For catalogue and brochure of views address, President's Secretary, Mills College P. O., California.

Miss Harker's School

PALO ALTO, CALIFORNIA

Boarding and Day School for Girls. Certificate admits to College. Intermediate and Primary Departments. Special attention given to Music, Arts and Crafts. Send for catalogue. Eighth year begins August 16, 1909.

Miss West's School

2457 SCOTT STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Thirty-sixth year opens August 16, 1909. Accredited to University of California, Stanford, Wellesley, Vassar and Smith.

MISS HELEN A. O'CONNELL, PRINCIPAL

Miss Head's School

2538 CHANNING WAY, BERKELEY, CAL.

Boarding and day school for girls, accredited to the University of California, Stanford, Vassar, Smith and Wellesley; 22nd year begins August 9, 1909.

MARY E. WILSON, M. L., PRINCIPAL

St. Mary's College

BROADWAY AND 23d STREET, OAKLAND

Endowed with all rights and privileges of State University. Literary, scientific, civil, and mining engineering courses; complete business course. Studies resumed fall term, Wednesday, September 1st. Send for catalog to Registrar, Bro. Vellesian, President.

St. Matthew's Military School

BURLINGAME, CAL.

Rev. William A. Brewer, A. B., Rector.

Castilleja School

PALO ALTO, CALIFORNIA

Home and Day School for Girls. College preparatory and general courses. Intermediate and primary departments. Domestic Science, Music, Art, Out-of-Door Gymnasium. Pupils admitted to Stanford, University of California, Wellesley, and Smith, without examination. Illustrated Catalogue. Term opens August 30, 1909. Principal, MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B.

Lowan's Hill School

MILL VALLEY

A delightful home boarding school for girls. Preparatory for Colleges. Outdoor life. High school, intermediate and primary departments. Fall term begins August 9th.

MISS WOODMAN, Principal.

Irving Institute School for Girls

147 PRESIDIO AVENUE, SAN FRANCISCO

Residence, 3370 Washington Street

Opens August Second, 1909. Send for Catalogue.

MISS PINKHAM, Principal MISS AMY D. HARRISON, Associate

The Hamlin School

A Boarding and Day School for Girls

Opens Monday, August 9, 1909.

Accredited by the California Universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to high school graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma. Pupils charged from the week of entrance.

In place of the kindergarten, a French school has been opened, where the French language is taught by means of charts, pictures, games, songs and stories.

Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed, and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars, address MISS HAMLIN, 2230 Pacific Avenue, San Francisco.

The Raymond Coaching School

(TENTH YEAR)

2812 Clay Street San Francisco

W. H. V. RAYMOND, Principal — MISS C. L. RAYMOND, B. A., Associated Principal

Write for Detailed Information and Catalogue.

Manzanita Hall

PALO ALTO, CAL.

A home school for boys desiring a thorough preparation for college in a minimum of time. Location adjacent to Stanford University permits unusual advantages. Ample facilities for all athletic sports. Seventeenth year opens August 30. Send for illustrated catalogue.

W. A. SHEDD, Head Master.

Boone's University School for Boys

BERKELEY

Commences its twenty-eighth year, Tuesday, August 10th. Accredited to the University of California, Stanford, University of Michigan, Cornell and Pennsylvania.

Apply for Catalogue to

2029 Durant Ave. P. R. BOONE, Principal

Anderson Academy

IRVINGTON, CALIFORNIA

Excellently equipped, beautifully situated, offers greatest advantages to those wishing thorough preparation for college in least time possible. Splendid facilities for athletics, in which a master will coach. Next term begins August 10th. Send for catalogue.

WILLIAM WALKER ANDERSON, M. A., Principal.

The Chandler School For Girls

LOS ALTOS, CALIFORNIA

Beautiful grounds covering six acres in the foothills, three and one-half miles from Stanford University. Outdoor study and classwork. Address

MRS. MARY CHANDLER, Los Altos, California.

THE LYCEUM

2590 PINE STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Prepares for university, the law and medical colleges; seventeenth year; here you can save time and money; excellent teachers, special coaching for August examinations of the universities; we have prepared hundreds successfully; day and evening sessions.

California Conservatory of Music

Is now located in its new magnificent building

147 PRESIDIO AVENUE

Between Jackson and Washington Streets

The Watson School

2518 ETNA STREET, BERKELEY, CAL.

Boarding and day school. Offers the best features of public and private school systems. Opens August 18th.

MRS. C. L. WATSON, Principal.

Stage

"The Duel" at the American

Religious controversy or belief is a more delicate theme to handle in a play than in a novel. The spoken word, especially if delivered by an actor of ability, is more realistic than the printed one—carries more conviction, and therefore gives the greater offense or arouses the more approbation. The antagonism that would be stirred in a devotee by seeing some of his cherished beliefs ridiculed or denounced in print is as nothing compared with the feeling that would be aroused by hearing the words spoken with all appearance of strong conviction by a flesh and blood player. Therefore the more credit to Henri Lavedan for the skillful manner in which he has opposed religious and atheistic forces in "The Duel," the play presented at the American Theatre this week. In this drama two brothers, one a priest and the other an infidel physician, struggle for the possession of a beautiful woman. The physician is trying to win her from her sick, degenerate husband, while the priest battles for her soul. Neither really wins, for the death of the husband leaves the wife free to marry the physician. So there is no particular moral lesson taught, except as one draws it from the counsel given by the churchmen in the play; and that is pretty well balanced by the contrary arguments set forth by the atheist, who defends his position and urges the right of free will with fierce eloquence. The scene where the two men dispute over the woman, each claiming a right to her, is one of terrible dramatic force, brilliant through the skill with which each man sets forth his claims; and satisfactory by the way to both believers and unbelievers, for each will contend that the champion of his convictions has the better of the argument. In her uncertainty as to whether she is a believer or an emotionalist, the woman in the play forms an interesting psychological study that may be duplicated in ordinary life should one take the pains to seek out such examples. Lavedan has saved us the trouble by presenting in concise form what his keen eye has been able to pick out of the ruck of every day affairs. The play does not settle the uncertainty as to the woman's state of mind, in which it is better than the majority of plays, the authors of which have not the courage to picture the indefiniteness of life or its emotions. As to the people who present the play at the American: In the passages which call for robust acting, Herschel Mayall as the priest gives a creditable performance—a very stirring one in fact. He is less effective in the subtler moments. Gerald Harcourt as the atheist mars good dramatic work to some extent by rapid enunciation, but on the whole is clever in the part. Excellent work is done by Harriet Worthington, the Duchess de Chailles, in the second act, where the doctor tries to persuade her to leave her husband. She has fire and temperament there, as well a repression which makes her struggle between love and duty an admirably sustained piece of work. Really the best balanced work is done by James Corrigan, who as the bishop gives a very faithful representation of the venerable churchman, and plays with delightful ease and naturalness.

—The Playgoer.

"Folly" at the Van Ness

Frederick Thompson's "Polly of the Circus," a play made by Margaret Mayo, tells a story of a young circus rider. She knows no world not covered by canvas, nor did her mother before her. The circus with which she travels comes to a little middle Western town, and there all the scenes of the play are placed. The play assumes to set forth a picture of life in a small town as well as with a circus, but in the former case it is unsuccessful. The small town folk are all caricatures, except the minister, whose interest in Polly, the circus rider, is the excuse for the play. When the play begins, the circus tents are pitched on the common adjoining the village church and parsonage. That causes a scandal in the burg, and the pillars of the church gather at the parsonage to protest to the minister against the sacrilege. While they are there the little circus rider is injured in a fall from her horse and is carried into the minister's home. A motely crew of clowns, riders, acrobats, and canvasmen flock to the parsonage, where they are well received by the minister, much to the disgust of the members of the church. The minister agrees to care for the girl until she is well enough to return to the circus, and he does care for her. He soon learns that the little rider is an ignorant creature, and he begins instructing her. He weeds out her wonderful growth of circus slang, and teaches her to read and write and makes her so well contented with her new home that when she recovers she does not return to her former little sawdust world. Eleven months pass by and the minister and the circus rider have come to love each other. They make the usual promises never to separate, but the tongue of scandal is wagging in the village, and the church deacons call upon the minister and demand that he send the girl away. He will not hear them, but they return and tell her that the minister's career will be ruined if she stays with him. She resolves to go away. The circus is again approaching the village, and the boss canvasman who helped rear the little rider comes and asks her to go back with him. She goes, and the minister does not see her until a month later, when the tents are again pitched near the church. Then he hunts her out, going even into the circus ring at the height of the performance. We do not know if she stays or goes until late at night, when the circus winds its way out of the village, leaving the rider and the minister standing on the commons gazing at the departing caravan. The play will be seen at the Van Ness Theatre for two weeks commencing Sunday evening, July 25th.

IDA S. LEON

As "Polly" in "Polly of the Circus" at the Van Ness Theatre commencing Sunday, July 25th.

Kleptomania Theme of Play

"The Girl and the Judge," one of Clyde Fitch's comedies, is announced as the Alcazar's offering throughout the coming week, commencing Monday evening. It has been selected because of the success it scored when last presented by Belasco & Mayer and because of the exceptional opportunities it affords every member of the Alcazar company to do effective acting. Bessie Barriscale is cast as The Girl and Thurlow Bergen as The Judge, and the other favorites will have well-fitting roles, among the characters being a female kleptomaniac, a garrulous boarding-house keeper, a funny clerk and several other impressive types. The action of the play takes places in a town in one of the Western states, and the time is the present. Mrs. Stanton, the kleptomaniac, has a drunken husband and a daughter, Winifred, and to the mother is awarded the custody of the girl by Probate Judge Chartris, a young and talented jurist. Taking a fancy to the girl, he persuades his mother to visit the Stantons in their humble apartments, and while she is there a valuable diamond pin is stolen from her by Mrs. Stanton, who secretly pawns it. She is suspected by her daughter, to whom she finally confesses, and when the girl hastens to the pawnshop to recover the jewel and restore it to Mrs. Chartris she finds that lady and her son there in quest of the pin, which they imagine has been stolen by one of the apartment house servants. But when the pawnbroker displays the valuable and explains how it came to be there, both Mrs. Chartris and the Judge realize the truth. Then a very effective scene takes place. To save the girl from shame, Mrs. Chartris disclaims ownership of the pin. But the girl is placed in rather unfavorable light before the Judge, whose affection she has begun to reciprocate, and some very interesting situations ensue ere the usual happy ending takes place. Cold type is inadequate to convey a comprehensive idea of the many clever touches by which the dramatist has built an intensely interesting play around a rather commonplace incident.

Stock Company Augmented

Commencing tomorrow afternoon the American Theatre Stock Company, which scored a substantial hit this week in "The Duel," will present Bret Harte's famous comedy drama, "Tennessee's Pardner." Herschel Mayall, always a favorite here with theatregoers, will play the part of Caleb Swan, while Miss Harriet Worthington will be cast in the title role, Tennessee Kent. The augmented cast which will appear in "Tennessee's Pardner" tomorrow includes many new faces, among them being Miss Pauline Lord, Nat Goodwin's new leading lady in his proposed vaudeville season; Miss Lillian Elliott, formerly of Ye Liberty stock company, Oakland; William A. Abrams and G. B. Baldwin. Miss Lord will be a member of the American stock company for a short season and expects to join Nat Goodwin after his return from Europe and play with him in a one-act version of "When We Were Twenty-One." The American Theatre has announced its fall attractions under the management of the Shuberts and the list looks formidable enough to attract some attention. "Going Some," which will be the opening number, is scheduled to take place late in August, is said to be one of the funniest farces ever written. It is likened to "The Blue Mouse" for ludicrous situations, so a highly amusing play is assured theatregoers. Following "Going Some" comes John Mason in Augustus Thomas' great play "The Witching Hour" with all of its original New York cast. Corinne, in "Mlle. Mischief," "Girls," and Charles Cherry in "The Bachelor," George Fawcett in "The Great John Ganton," Eddie Foy in a new musical comedy and Louise Gunning in "Marcelle" complete the list of fall offerings.

Chutes Attractions Doubled

So large were last Sunday's crowds at the Chutes that many patrons were unable to secure vantage points from which to watch the divers and fire riders and hear the music to the best possible advantage. Tomorrow afternoon and evening additional opportunity will be afforded because of the double bill. More than that, patrons will find extra seating accommodations in front of the band stand and enlarged galleries from which to enjoy the open air motion picture entertainment and watch the fun in the human roulette wheel pavilion. More tables have been placed in the refreshment places and new songs added to the repertoire of the entertainers.

The galaxy of the open-air attractions that have delighted thousands of patrons at the Fillmore street park during the past week will be repeated. Desperado will make his daring leap from tower to chute; Florence Spray will do high and fancy diving; Demon will wheel the length of the chutes on his fiery bicycle and the figuratively fiery Sirignano lead the Royal Banda Roma in two concert programs. Desperado in the act which he will perform Sunday afternoon and night will add ten feet to the leap made from tower to wooden trough. Florence Spray has become a great favorite with the ladies. She dives from a seventy-foot elevation into four feet of water and incidentally displays many attractive costumes. Demon is another sensationalist who startles with his break-neck ride down the chutes.

GRIFF

London's Favorite Juggling Jesting Johnnie and His Son George who will begin an engagement this Sunday matinee at the Orpheum.

Low Grand Opera

The International Grand Opera Company will come to [illegible] engagement opens at the Auditorium this Sunday night with a special bill consisting of the second act of "Aida," the third act of "Lucia," the second act of "Il Trovatore," the third act of "Martha" and the third act of "La Traviata." The program for the Saturday matinee will be "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "I Pagliacci" and that Saturday evening Managers Ogden and Miller's "A Million Dollars" will be given for the last time. Monday evening will initiate the opening of the regular season with an elaborate and powerful production of the famous Jewish success, "The Queen of the Earth," which will be retained for two weeks only, with an excellent cast. Octavia Broske, an eastern prima donna of whom report speaks most highly and who will appear for one of the principal parts in the "Queen of the Earth" at the Broadway Theatre, Los Angeles, will make her first appearance here and play the first role. Others in the cast will be Henry Dunbar, Wallace Erskine, Joseph Sullivan and Harry Hagaman. Jack Evans will be the musical director and Charles Sinclair the stage director. The following popular prices will prevail: Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c; Saturday and Sunday matinees, 25c and 50c.

Southern Drama

[illegible] are especially interesting ones in "The Queen Mab," which they present for the last times this Sunday afternoon and evening, the Bishop Players at the Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, will offer "At the Old Crossroads," a play of Southern life that has enjoyed eight years of popularity, an honor not [illegible] to many stock audiences on the Pacific Coast. Apparently the sunny South has afforded more than its share of material for writers of fiction the past few years, as the majority of the most popular novels and plays contain that Southern atmosphere which continually appeals to the general public. "At the Old Crossroads" with its scenes laid in the vicinity of Natchez, Miss., is one of those pleasing stories of the South in which strong dramatic situations are blended with bright comedy lines, and the characters are taken from real life in that interesting district. The story that it reveals is highly dramatic; the situations and climaxes thrilling in the extreme; but the whole is so happily blended with unctuous comedy scenes and incidents that it charms all. Florence Oakley and Sydney Ayres have the leading roles in "At the Old Crossroads" and their support will include all the favorites. The usual elaborate scenic production will be provided. "The Man on the Box," with George Friend in the leading comedy role, is announced to follow.

Orpheum Attractions

The Orpheum program for next week will be rich in attractive and novel acts. Sam Watson's Farmyard Circus which has been aptly described as a treat for children from six to sixty will be seen for the first time here. This quaint European novelty introduces a donkey, dogs, cats, roosters and a tiny pink pig in the routine of comedy. The results that have been achieved by the persistent and kindly training of these presumably brainless creatures are astounding. One of the drollest and most unique comedians that London has sent us, according to the New York estimate, is Griff. "the Juggling [illegible]" who assisted by his son George will be a feature of the coming bill. He came to this country unheralded but he made such a tremendous hit that a tour

VAN NESS THEATRE
POLLY OF THE CIRCUS

AMERICAN THEATRE
TENNESSEE'S PARDNER

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE
THE GIRL AND THE JUDGE

PRINCESS THEATRE
S. LOVERICH, MANAGER
THE BELLE OF NEW YORK

NEW ORPHEUM
ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE
AT THE OLD CROSSROADS

NEW CHUTES
DESPERADO
FLORENCE SPRAY
DEMON
ROYAL BANDA ROMA

LEVY'S CAFE
Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.
Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices over the entire Orpheum Circuit was immediately arranged for him. Griff juggles and talks his patter which is very funny. Walter Schrode and Lizzie Mulvey will appear in a clever comedy called "A Theatrical Agency" which is plentifully interspersed with witty dialogue and clever singing and dancing. It also affords Miss Mulvey an opportunity of wearing a number of stylish and handsome costumes. Herbert and Willing, famous minstrel comedians, will present their newest skit "Oh! Man." It is a combination of burnt cork witticisms and darkey songs deftly put together for laughing purposes only. Next week will be the last of Charles Dana Gibson's Electrified Girl Review, Julius Tannen, the Three Donals and of Lily Lena who has scored such a tremendous hit with her dainty story songs. The Orpheum Motion Pictures which will conclude the performance will be of special interest.

In the Limelight

Booth Tarkington's play "Cameo Kirby" will be played here by Dustin Farnum at the Van Ness Theatre next month. The young romantic actor is said to have achieved the greatest success of his career in this play.

Blanche Bates, who has not appeared here in over four years, is coming to the Van Ness Theatre with her latest triumph, "The Fighting Hope." Miss Bates was last seen here in "The Darling of the Gods" at the Grand Opera House.

AT LONG BEACH SANITARIUM, LONG BEACH, CAL.

Wagenhals and Kemper's big production of Eugene Walter's drama, "Paid in Full," will be the attraction to follow "Polly of the Circus" at the Van Ness Theatre.

Miss Lulu Glaser, who was one of the last Shubert stars to bring her road tour to a close the past season, is now busily engaged in superintending the erection of a $45,000 country home at Mt. Vernon, N. Y. The plans call for a 19-room house, an Italian garden and an outdoor theatre, the latter to be utilized for rehearsal purposes.

One of the largest drop curtains ever painted is now in the hands of the artists in the Vanderbilt Galleries, New York. It is intended for the Denver Auditorium, one of the most spacious playhouses in the country, which the Shuberts will book the coming season. The curtain is 33 feet high and 65 feet wide. Practically the entire space is given up to an allegorical painting.

Of the members of the "Paid in Full" company with which the Wagenhals & Kemper Company will open their New York season, William Riley Hatch, Florence Robinson and George Belden have played in the piece more than five hundred consecutive performances.

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 56 Kearny street.

BROMO-SELTZER

CURES

HEADACHES

10¢, 25¢, 50¢, & $1.00 Bottles.

Gallagher-Marsh Business College

1256 Market St. (Below Larkin) San Francisco

THIS IN THE BUSINESS COLLEGE recommended and patronized by the experts. For instance: Mr. Clement Bennett, the Official Reporter of the United States Courts, and Mr. Earnest A. Girvin, ex-official reporter of the Supreme Court, sent their boys here. Mr. Frank Shay of the Southern Pacific Law Office, who was one of the old time court reporters, also sent his boy here.

THIS IS THE BUSINESS COLLEGE that graduated Walter Treits, Judge Shortall's court reporter; Roy Gallagher, Judge Graham's court reporter, and Frank Hart, who was Judge Hebbard's court reporter, and other expert stenographers too numerous to mention.

THIS IS THE BUSINESS COLLEGE from which was graduated Ruth Ohlson, 14 years old, the fastest shorthand writer in the world of her age, and who is employed now at the highest salary paid to any person her age in the U. S. by any commercial concern for stenographic or clerical services.

There is not a stenographer in this city able to write 125 words per minute for three consecutive minutes and type the same at 50 words per minute, earning less than $75 per month. If you expect such a position, attend a school capable of placing you in that class. Parents should not trifle with the future career of their children by sending them to some inferior school, but should follow the advice of the experts and have them attend Gallagher-Marsh Business College, the most practical business college on the Pacific Coast.

THIS IS THE BUSINESS COLLEGE patronized by the thinking classes—by those persons who pay attention to genuine recommendations from the experts. Send for catalogue and read what the experts say about this business college before going elsewhere.

You owe it as a duty to your children who contemplate taking a business course to pay at least one visit to this school, witness the advanced class, consisting of students from 15 to 17 years of age, write over 150 words per minute and read the same back correctly, and see for yourselves why all the experts of San Francisco and vicinity recommend this school.

A DAINTY TOILET ARTICLE

Every lady who desires to keep up her attractive appearance, while at the theatre, attending receptions, when shopping, while travelling and on all occasions should carry in her purse a booklet of Gouraud's Oriental Beauty Leaves. This is a dainty little booklet of exquisitely perfumed powdered leaves which are easily removed and applied to the skin. It is invaluable when the face becomes moist and flushed and is far superior to a powder puff as it does not spill and soil the clothes. It removes dirt, soot and grease from the face, imparting a cool delicate bloom to the complexion. Sent anywhere on receipt of Five Cents in stamps or coin. F. T. Hopkins, 37 Great Jones street, New York.

The Robbery

(Continued from Page 11.)

hear them speak! I can hardly make out what it is about. And I myself feel lost among them. I would like sometimes to speak my thoughts about them, but I have not a soul in whom to confide. No, it would not do for me to go there! Luba tells me that she will come to spend her honeymoon here, so I had better stay where I am and prepare all kinds of pickles and preserves for her and see to it that she should find the garden full of the flowers she loves best—she is like myself, Luba is: loves flowers, birds, and the country."

The thief pulled the bureau-drawer a little too hard and the table-silver gave out a ring. The old lady started.

What I want to ask you, my dears," she said, "is not to touch this silver! It is not mine. A half dozen spoons and two salt-cellars which were sent to me as a wedding present from Moscow, you can have—they are mine. The rest belongs to my son-in-law—it was bought with his money. He married my Elena because he fell in love with her—she had nothing but her beauty. This estate also belongs to him—I am living here as a sort of housekeeper. Oh! She, poor girl, suffered enough in her youth on account of me, from her husband. But where should I go, when the Lord has taken all my sons and left me only one daughter? If I lived at my son's house—I would have been the mistress. As it is, I live—but life is hard when you must think always of not displeasing the master. He will be angry now with me for not taking better care of his property. And besides, what will you do with this silver? It is all marked with the initials of the owner and has, besides, a crown engraved on top of it; this mark is known for miles around and before you know it you will be caught—a mark on silver is not as easy to take out as on linen. It is not a thread which you can easily rip out."

"Granny is speaking sense," timidly remarked the fair-haired boy thief.

"Of course I speak sense, I am older than you—"

"Well, granny, let it be as you say," agreed the dark-haired thief.

For some minutes they were silent, avoiding each other's eyes. At last the fair-haired youth spoke, and there was in his voice the pleading note of a half-starved child, and the old lady's heart was filled with pity.

"Could you not give us something to eat, granny?"

"How is that! Why did you not tell me before that you were hungry? There is always something handy in the pantry. Just take the lamp and light the way."

After rummaging for a long time in the pantry they brought forth some cold ham, pickled herrings, a bottle of vodka and a large pasty. The table was soon set and the room took on a a festive appearance.

Nastasia Semenovna sat at one end of the table, resting her head on the palm of her hand and watched the fair-haired boy, who, with his dark companion, sat at the other end of the table, eating voraciously.

Now, looking at him closely, by the light of the lamp, she noticed for the first time how pale and emaciated he was with hunger and privation and how chilled through and through in his thin jacket and frayed trousers. The first glass of vodka intoxicated him and made him tremble; his slight frame, his body seemed to shrivel, and he giggled joyously and repeated:

"Oh, how good it feels! Oh, how nice!"

"Very well, Egor!" said the dark-haired one, encouragingly, "the vodka is driving the cold out of you. See how it makes you shiver like a frozen puppy. But you will do better to take another glass. Drink more! Store it in you—it will keep out the cold."

"Oh, how nice it feels, how splendid!" repeated Egor, and this joyous lisping recalled to the poor old mother her beautiful boy Slavusha and those unforgetable days when he, on his coming home for Christmas, used to warm himself in the modest rooms of the dwelling and repeat the very same words: "Oh, how nice it feels! Oh, how splendid!"

And tears began slowly to trickle down the wrinkled face, and through them it seemed to the mother that the young vagabond resembled her son very much: he was just as slight and slender, this one; had the same shock of fair curls on his head and just such gentle blue eyes.

"My dove! How will you go from here in such bitter cold?" she exclaimed when her uninvited guests had done eating and rose from the table.

"As he came, so he will go," replied the dark-haired one. "For the last three days we lived on frozen potatoes and managed to crawl here nevertheless. So now, after having had a good meal and a couple of glasses of vodka, we ought to manage to get away."

But Egor's feet refused to do duty as usual; he rose, swayed and sat down again.

"Come, come!" said the dark-haired one. "You cannot remain here much longer!" and he tried to help him to his feet.

"Well, you can say what you please, but I will not let him out intoxicated as he is, in this terrible cold: he is more liable to freeze to death in his cups than he would be when perfectly sober. Take the lamp and light the way, please!"

And she once more began to rummage in the wardrobes and presses until she pulled out a roomy cassock lined with a fine sheep-skin.

THE PERRY HOTEL Madison St. and Boren Ave. SEATTLE, WASH.

Every Modern Convenience—Absolutely Fire Proof
European Plan, The Highest Grade

Under new management, centrally located and commanding a view of the Olympics, Cascade Mountains, Mount Rainier and Puget Sound.

J. S. McTERNAN, Manager

HOTEL WASHINGTON

J. M. LUX, MANAGER

SEATTLE, WASH.

A magnificent modern structure involving over One Million and a Half Dollars. Conducted on Most liberal ideas of Experience. Its appointments and service cannot be excelled in the United States. The management cordially invites your patronage.

HOTEL WASHINGTON ANNEX

SEATTLE, WASH.

Best Rooms Best Service
Strictly First-Class

J. H. DAVIS - - - - - - Proprietor

LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST

DIAMONDS AND GEMS

BALDWIN JEWELRY CO.

1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

"This is the only thing left to me from my husband, the deacon, to remember him by; he used to wear it on his travels; the wool is very fine—from our own sheep."

"No doubt—a very fine piece of clothing. Only, granny, you ought to make me a present of it. Egor will feel like a fly in a bog in it."

But Nastasia Semenovna was obdurate.

"You must not be envious: I will find something for you too. You cannot go about in a cassock any more than he, your face would betray you in a moment—everyone would recognize that you are not the clergy. It will have to be made over for you as well as for him."

And Nastasia Semenovna was soon at work sewing and cutting her late husband's cassock. She also found an old great-coat of the professor's which fitted the older house-breaker after she had taken off the cape.

The night was already nearing its close. In the village the cocks were crowing for the second time, and one gave greeting to the dawn directly over the heads of the three.

The two house-breakers were startled by the unexpected sound.

"It is nothing—I keep them in the loft so that they should be warm: the chickens are already hatching. I want to have some early spring chicks by the time my Luba arrives—she loves to see them. Well, go in peace. It is late."

The house-breaker, warmly dressed, stood before the mistress of the house hesitatingly.

"Good-bye, granny, the Lord keep you!"

"Farewell! But I would like to tell you something, my dear, before you go," she said, catching Egor suddenly by his shoulder. "Throw it away, my dear, that trade of yours! You are still so young. It is a great pity! Go to Kiev to the Mikhailov Monastery, the Archimandrite was a friend of my husband's—a very good man. Ask him on your knees and in my name for shelter—he is kindness itself—and you will at least be saved from want and cold. They have daily service in the Monastery, and you will pray for the soul of my Slavusha—"

The old woman could not speak further and broke into tears, leaning on the shoulder of the young vagabond. He also cried—drunken tears—and vowed that he would go to the Monastery and pray for the salvation of his sinful soul.

"That will do, holy father!" broke in the dark-haired one. "Take the bundle and let us go; it is getting late."

"My dears, but what about the window? The outer frame is half out. It will be cold."

"Never mind, granny, we will fix that."

They crawled out through the window, carefully adjusted the frame from the outside and one of them knocked on the window-pane.

"God keep you in health and in happiness, granny!"

Everything grew quiet; grey dawn looked through the windows; Nastasia Semenovna sat in her arm-chair with her grey head on the table and cried bitterly for Slavusha, for the lost soul of the young thief, Egor, and because in the event of her death there would not be any money to pay for masses and requiems for her soul.

SHERMAN, CLAY & CO. IN OAKLAND

Sherman, Clay & Co. have just occupied their new store in Oakland, which easily ranks as the finest in that city. The building was erected at a cost of $75,000, and is three stories high, with a frontage of 50 feet on Clay street and 100 feet on Fourteenth street. The entire basement, ground, mezzanine and second floors are devoted entirely to the business of the firm, the basement being used for talking machines. The ground floor is occupied by a general display, sheet music department, telephone exchange and office, all fittings being of artisically designed mahogany. On the mezzanine floor are the small goods departments, and a number of demonstration rooms for playing music, while the second floor contains the piano salesrooms, with a special department for Steinways. The Oakland branch, it is understood, is carrying a stock valued at $150,000. Under the management of Frederick R. Sherman, it has built up a large business in the last few years, and has excellent prospects for future development.

MURINE EYE REMEDY CO., Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—We have a little tellow four months old who was troubled for three months after birth with sore eyes. A large amount of pus came from them, accompanied with severe inflammation. Our family Doctor, also an Eye Specialist, attended him without relief.

I saw your MURINE EYE REMEDY advertised in one of our Electric Cars, and utterly discouraged, I resolved to try it, and do you know, in three days' time all worry was over. In one week the Sore Eyes were a thing of the past.

This is an unasked for testimonial, but I know you will accept it as it is sent with much gratitude toward MURINE EYE REMEDY.

Yours truly,
Arthur Snow.

The Anglo & London Paris National Bank

Of San Francisco

Successor of The London Paris National Bank of San Francisco, The Anglo-California Bank, Limited.

Northeast Cor. Pine and Sansome Sts., San Francisco

Sig. Greenebaum, Pres.; I. Steinhart, Chairman of Finance Committee; H. Fleishhacker, V.-Pres. and Man.; Alden Anderson, V.-Pres. and Sec.; Jos. Friedlander, V.-Pres.; R. Altschul, Cashier; C. F. Hunt, Asst., Cashier; A. Hochstein, Asst. Cashier; F. E. Beck, Asst. Cashier.

Capital $4,000,000.00

Surplus and Undivided Profits..... 1,500,000.00

We offer our customers every facility consistent with good banking and invite new accounts.

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

Eureka Stoves and Ranges

Kitchen Utensils

Hotel Kitchen Outfits a Specialty

"Alaska" and "Opal" Refrigerators

Mantels, Grates, Tiles

NOW LOCATED AT 557-563 MARKET ST., opp. Junction Sutter and Sansome Sts.

PHONE DOUGLAS 4640

The Discovery of the Bay

(Continued from Page 9.)

Falges was at the head of a party that left the Mission San Carlos to go by land to Drake's Bay and establish a mission there. Circling the bay, the captain and his handful of soldiers came up on the east side, and after finding the bay in the search for which Portola had spent so much effort, went on northward and over the hills to Martinez, and before returning to Monterey wandered over the whole country in the immediate vicinity of Mt. Diablo.

The first vessel known to have entered the Golden Gate was the San Carlos, which had been sent out with the San Antonio to sound this harbor. The two boats arrived here on August 5, 1775. They hove to off the Golden Gate, and a small boat from the San Carlos was sent out on an exploring trip. When she did not return, the San Carlos followed her general direction, and at twilight sailed in through the Golden Gate, dropping anchor near the present Presidio. The next day she moved her anchorage to near where Sausalito now is. On the same day the other vessel entered, and the two spent some time here exploring, sounding and charting the bay. It was in the following year that a land expedition came and founded the Presidio and the Mission Dolores, which still stands.

What became of the San Carlos is not known. There were two ships of that name, and one of them was wrecked in this bay at about the point where Sansome street joins Telegraph Hill. It it is an even chance that the first boat that sailed into San Francisco Bay now lies under the pavements that have been built over what was the surface of the bay fifty years ago.

And right here is the point at which a suggestion may appropriately be made to the Portola Committee: Why would it not be a good idea to build a counterfeit of the San Carlos and have her in San Francisco Bay during Portola week, manned with a crew in the costumes worn by sailors of Spanish boats of two hundred years ago? More than that, would it not be a dramatic spectacle to have this boat sail through the Golden Gate and up the bay, escorted by the fighting ships that will be in the harbor at the time? The plan appeals strongly to the imagination; and is easy of accomplishment. With little labor some old vessel could be transformed into a very good copy of the San Carlos. There is no doubt that this could be made one of the attractive features of festival week.

To return to the book which forms the basis of this article, which necessarily gives but a bare outline. of what the volume contains. The work is a valuable historical document, embracing, as it does, material that is a digest of widely scattered material. The book is free to members of the Geographical Society of the Pacific, while non-members may secure it at one dollar a copy.

It may be added that Professor Davidson, who has had ample opportunity to ascertain the proper pronunciation of Portola's name, places the accent on the final syllable.

Summer Resort Arrivals

Hotel Rafael: Miss Harriet Gerber, C. H. Weaver, Daisy Mercereau, E. H. Wiel, J. Friedlander, Robert D. Cohn, H. H. Yard and family, C. G. Wharton and wife, C. P. Coburn, R. E. Fox, Mrs. W. T. Winchman, A. M. Loomis, W. E. Hopkins, Mrs. Thomas Breese, Mrs. F. W. McNear, Mrs. W. H. Taylor Jr., Mrs. C. O. Yordi and wife, J. J. Connor and wife, W. L. Weinner, A. M. Rosenstein, Walter Dreyfus, W. H. Wear and wife, David S. Bachmann.

Tavern of Tamalpais: San Francisco, Mr. H. B. Sperry and wife, Mr. D. L. Levey and wife, W. F. Stetler, Rufus Steel and wife, John Alpes and wife, John Boyes Alpes, Miss Rose Stoltz, Miss Minnie Stoltz, Catherine O'Neil, M. J. Wilson, Mrs. V. Burnham, Edward Kalisher, J. S. Dinkelspeil, M. M. Henry, Mrs. Wm. J. McCormick.

Hotel del Coronado: San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. H. T. O'Fallon, Mrs. Ernest S. Simpson, Miss Fernanda D. Pratt, Mrs. J. H. Wallace, Maria Roberts, L. Heyneman, W. M. Shaughnessy, Mrs. N. E. Whitley, Mrs. P. W. Clay, H. D. Loveland, L. M. Ringwalt, Lena Davis, Estelle Rosenstein, Minnie Rosenstein, Frank F. Miller, L. Bachman.

Del Monte: San Francisco, R. Davis, Mrs. Frank Alfred Gummer, Miss Frances Ann Gummer, J. L. Eastland and valet, G. Lewis and valet, Mr. and Mrs. James Lieb, Miss K. Mihan, W. J. Mihan, J. A. Mihan, T. I. Bergin and chauffeur, Mrs. J. Lineham, Miss V. Linehan, H. C. Stratton, Mrs. J. H. Marley, Miss Elsie Griffin of Des Moines, Ia.; A. M. Cheney, Miss E. Diegman, Ivan Beer, Mlle. K. Calimberle, Miss Ella King, H. H. Daley, Mrs. J. H. Pryor, Miss A. M. Pryor, Mrs. R. Greenbaum and maid, Mrs. C. W. Neal, Mrs. Thos. Cruse, H. V. Butterfield, Jay W. Adams, Amos Burn, C. M. Stratton, Mrs. J. J. Hylan and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Bachman, Arthur Bachman Jr., Fraulein Meyer, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. S. Girvan, Mrs. E. L. Girvan, Mr. and Mrs. E. Semmel, Mr. and Mrs. E. Ames, Mr. and Mrs. W. Grath, Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Hellman Jr., Warren Hellman, Frederick Hellman, Miss Carroll, C. G. Tripler, H. T. Meil.

A MOUNTAIN COTTAGE, MT. LOWE

Pacific Electric Railway.

Auto Notes

Making a round of the Studebaker houses of the west, Harry Lord, the Studebaker agent of Los Angeles, and J. Huge of the Studebaker factory at South Bend, arrived in this city the other day. The two drove up from Los Angeles in a Studebaker "forty" and report the roads in a generally good condition. From here they will go to Portland, thence Seattle. Both Lord and Huge say the market for automobiles has increased with bounds all over the country during the past seven months and declare that the industry will be taxed to the utmost continually from now on.

Among those who are taking advantage of the pleasant weather and the comfort of traveling in an automobile, for a vacation tour of the northern part of the State, are George E. Turman of Fruitvale and the other members of his family. They have gone in a new sixty horsepower Thomas to Shasta and expect to spend about two weeks in that delightful spot. On their return, after about a week's rest, it is the intention to make a run to Los Angeles. Mr. Turman has extensive timber interests and will use his car all through the winter, going back and forth between the different claims owned by him.

Hugo A. Taussig, who left here recently for a transcontinental tour has reached New York, and wired the Pioneer Automobile Company as follows: "Arrived New York City in our Thomas with our boots on. Mileage forty one sixty." The members of the Taussig party have from time to time sent reports of their progress across the country, and all have shown great enthusiasm. Their pleasure has been unmarred by troubles with the car, and it is expected they will extend their tour through Europe.

The "Elks' Studebaker," a handsomely decorated limousine, which was used by the heads of the antlered herd during the rousing festivities in the City of Angels last week, arrived in this city Monday afternoon and was immediately put into use by a number of the prominent Elks now visiting this city. The car, which is painted in white and purple, the official colors of the B. P. O. E., according to everyone who visited in Los Angeles last week, attracted a great deal of attention and was kept in use constantly.

Frank Johnson of San Rafael, who started in his Thomas Flyer for a leisurely trip to Seattle, and then east into Idaho, writes the Pioneer Automobile Company from "Camp E. R. Thomas"—as he terms it—near Dunsmiur, that he is having a fine time. Mr. Johnson has found a new way for disposing of luggage. When he left San Francisco, the car carried seven passengers and a full camp equipment, as the trip will be quite an extensive one; and it was nearly impossible to tell the color of the car because of the various articles attached to it, and depending from various points of vantage. Anything from a cooking stove to a frying pan, or a tent to a washboard could be descried in various places about the wagon. Mr. Johnson evidently decided that there would be more room for the passengers without so much luggage. He says: "Coming through the mountains I bought a two wheeled cart and put all the load in it and towed it behind the car. We will discard this when we get to better roads." This may be a solution of how to carry extra luggage, but if any of our readers are tempted to try it, we suggest that said luggage be confined to the dry and unbreakable.

F. W. Swanton, well known to all residents and visitors at Santa Cruz, made a hurried trip to this city during the early part of the week and purchased a large Thomas car. Mr. Swanton has long been an enthuiastic motorist, having owned several cars. This is his first Thomas, however, and in order to make certain he would have no difficulty in handling the car, Charles O'Day accompanied him to Santa Cruz. They started out the next morning after purchasing the machine, and made the run in good time. Mr. Swanton will use the car in his business, which necessitates many long trips, as well as constant riding about his home city.

The Pioneer Automobile Company reports the following sales within the last week: T. C. Van Ness, San Francisco, purchased a Chalmers-Detroit "40"; L. H. Wagner of Oakland, an Oldsmobile; A. D. Wilson, Visalia, Oldsmobile; F. W. Swanton of Santa Cruz, Thomas Flyer; G. E. Tuman, Oakland, Thomas Flyer; T. R. Mott, San Francisco, Chalmers-Detroit "30"; F. M. Logan, Oakland, a Chalmers-Detroit "30."

The San Antonio, Texas, Automobile Club is favoring the passage of an ordinance to require chauffeurs to pass a mental and physical examination before they receive driving licenses.

A peculiar precedent has been set by a Scottish court in relation to road laws. Two motors collided at the crossing of a main and a side road. The court held that the driver on the main road had the right-of-way and the drivers on the side roads must use precaution in crossing main roads.

Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Hellman, Jr., Warren Hellman and Frederick Hellman went to Del Monte by auto last week.

A Domestic Eye Remedy

Compounded by Experienced Physicians. Conforms to Pure Food and Drugs Law. Wins Friends Wherever Used. Ask Druggists for Murine Eye Remedy. Try Murine in Your Eyes. You Will Like Murine. Try it in Baby's Eyes. It Soothes.

STYLE and COMFORT

go hand-in-hand with every

STUDEBAKER

automobile. This explains why so many are owned by persons who are exceedingly discriminating and particular in their individual tastes.

"STUDEBAKER STAMINA"

is incorporated into every car which that concern puts out. It is founded upon more than sixty years of experience in vehicle construction. When an owner steps into his STUDEBAKER he is always sure of getting "there and back" no matter what the road conditions may be. That's what "Stamina" stands for—pretty good thing to have in your automobile.

Fremont at Mission — Studebaker — Phone Douglas 3000

Chalmers-Detroit "30"

The beginning and the end car.

In the beginning the initial price is slightly higher, in the end the upkeep and after expense is much less.

"Anybody can cut prices but it takes brain to make a better article."
(Elbert Hubbard.)

Buying a good car is only one step in the right direction.

BUT

Buying a good car from the most reliable dealers on the Pacific Coast is your absolute assurance of satisfaction.

The Pioneer Automobile Company is the largest concern west of Chicago giving its undivided attention to the sale of automobiles. Ten years in business assures our stability and perpetuates our guarantees. Our business motto is "Right or Made Right."

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

901 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

Oakland San Francisco Fresno

A Particular Store for Particular People

TRADE MARK Quality McLean's Service 1158-1168 SUTTER ST. SAN FRANCISCO

PHONE FRANKLIN 2810

Swastika Brand Perfection Bread

We inclose each loaf of Swastika Brand Perfection Bread in a sanitary parchment bag. The bread is placed in this sanitary bag as soon after baking as possible, and is not exposed to dust, etc.; nor is it handled a number of times. It should appeal to persons who appreciate a strictly high-grade loaf of bread packed under sanitary conditions.

Large Loaf only 10c each

L. D. McLEAN CO.

IMPORTERS AND GROCERS

1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

Letters

Grant's Latest Novel

After a silence of several years Judge Robert Grant has spoken again through the pages of a novel that is a long, leisurely recital during the progress of which there are no startling events, few if any surprises, and everything is perfectly obvious. One has time to make the acquaintance of characters, and to forecast their views and actions. "The Chippendales" is one of the rare modern books that deserves to be signalized by capitals. The story is spread over the last twenty years or so of the nineteenth century and the scene is confined to Boston. The Chippendales are the embodiment of New England conscience, introspective, conservative and deep rooted. It has been Chippendale opinions which have made OPINION, and the lesser lights of the Hub city speak their names with bated breath. The new generation appears to be prone to run after strange gods, but Harrison Chippendale, his brother Baxter, his maiden sister Georgiana and the widowed Mrs. Chippendale Sumner, with their ancestry of Baxters and Floyds are firmly intrenched. They belong to the class who court martyrdom for causes, watch over Harvard, the Public Library, and the Art Museum, look upon their annual subscriptions to the symphony concerts as a patriotic duty, and write letters to the Tribune about the squirrels in the public parks. Into this placid, self-conscious and conscientious atmosphere there is injected a modern hustling man of business.

Ball Room of Hotel St. Francis Often Used for Concerts

Blaisdell, who is not even of Massachusetts, knows nothing of their sacred traditions and cares even less. His wife, a girl from Ohio, who has gone East to cultivate a voice which she did not possess, belongs to his own class, and together they storm society, as he alone has stormed the financial bulwarks, but, it must be admitted, less successfully. While Blaisdell can be hand in glove with the men down town, it is quite another matter for him to force the social citadel, and despite their lavish display, Lora meets with quiet opposition when it comes to getting her little daughter into exclusive dancing classes, and she herself is quietly ignored by the patronesses of the Puritan balls. At first one is, perhaps, inclined to be dazzled by the hustle and get-there of the Blaisdells, and to enjoy the discomfiture of the Chippendales, more especially that of Henry Chippendale Summer, who is the incarnation of New England Conscience, spelled with a capital "C," but ere long the other view takes hold, and one sees that the Chippendales really do stand for something. Their habit of applying ethical standards to everything and going into details and principles is, after all, better than the Blaisdell way of achieving immediate ends by any practical means at hand, and quixotic as Henry Chippendale Sumner's renunciation of his aunt's half million, bequeathed to him on condition of his changing his name to Chippendale, may appear, after all, it is only his announcement that there are things not to be bought with coin. An interesting development in the progress of the story is the evolution of the younger Chippendales who, for the most part, show an inclination to break away from the family traditions at first but in the end, return, though not quite to the original starting point, to the principles of their forebears. The same is noticeable in the case of Priscilla Avery, essentially a Boston girl, who seeks to emancipate herself from her birthright and quarrels incessantly with her suitor Henry Sumner, but who gradually resurrects her buried conscience and is in the end quite in accord with the man whom she has kept waiting for over fifteen years. There is a delightful and deliciously sympathetic humor in the recital of events. The discussion which almost disrupted Boston over the MacMonnies Bacchante is given at length, and nothing could be more enjoyable than Mrs. Sumner's verdict on the new Rembrandt presented to the art museum by the objectionable Blaisdel, that the portrait of a Dutch burgher, lacking the spirituality of Emerson, could not possibly be good art. One can better appreciate now the standpoint of that famous committee of readers for the public library which almost depleted its shelves of anything readable. The naive consciousness of all the mothers with marriageable daughters, that in Massachusetts there are two hundred thousand more men than women is alone worth reading the book for. Perhaps "The Chippendales" will not appeal to so wide an audience as "Unleavened Bread," but it ought to meet favor with all readers who can enjoy and appreciate something above the ordinary brand of chewing-gum fiction. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons.

THE NATURAL FLAVOR

Of the richest and purest cow's milk is retained in Borden's Pioneer Brand Evaporated Milk (unsweetened). It is especially adapted for use either plain or diluted on breakfast fruits or cereals. In coffee and chocolate it is much better than fresh cream It enriches all milk dishes.

"And so I suppose, Doctor, I must send my wife away to a sanitarium?"

"No, my dear sir, much worse than that; she may stay at home."

HOTEL CUMBERLAND

Broadway at 54th Street

NEW YORK

Near 50th St. Subway Station and 53d St. Elevated

Ideal Location,
Near Theatres, Shops, and
Central Park.

New and Fireproof

Strictly First Class in Every Respect

Rates Reasonable
$2.50 with bath, and up.

All Hardwood Floors and
Oriental Rugs.

10 Minutes' Walk to 20 Theatres

Excellent Restaurant Prices Moderate

Send for Booklet

HARRY P. STIMSON, formerly with Hotel Imperial

R. J. BINGHAM, formerly with Hotel Woodward

LOW RATES
TO ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC
EXPOSITION

FOR ROUND TRIP TICKETS

FROM

San Francisco	$32.50
Sacramento	32.50
Lathrop	32.50
Stockton	32.50
Tracy	32.50
Suisun	32.50
Davis	32.50
Napa	32.75
Santa Rosa	33.60
Calistoga	33.95

Greatly reduced rates from other points in California. Tickets sold daily May 25 to September 30, and cover two months' trip going and coming via the famous

SHASTA ROUTE
OF THE
SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Stopovers going and coming. Many other routes at slightly higher rates for you to select from.

Write or call on our nearest agent for full details of service, etc., or address

FLOOD BUILDING FOR INFORMATION

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17438, Dept. No. 12.

GEORGE J. MARTIN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of George J. Martin, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue distant thereon one hundred (100) feet northerly from the northerly line of C Street, running thence northerly along said westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue, twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angle westerly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angle southerly, twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angle easterly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue and the point of commencement. Being a part of Outside Land Block No. 379.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that his title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 30th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
German Savings & Loan Society (a Corporation)	530 California Street, San Francisco, Cal.
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17244.

HANNAH EMERY, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Hannah Emery, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Van Ness Avenue, distant eighty (80) feet northerly from the northwesterly corner of Van Ness Avenue, and Turk Street, running thence northerly and along the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches; thence at right angles southerly and parallel with Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles easterly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches to the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue and place of beginning; being a portion of Block Seventy-nine (79) Western Addition;

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: NONE.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Esq., Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market St., San Francisco. 7-10-10.

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17318, Dept. No. 4.

KATE E. BOYANTON, sometimes known as KATE E. BOYNTON, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Kate E. Boyanton, sometimes known as Kate E. Boynton, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Eddy Street distant One hundred and twenty (120) feet easterly from the easterly line of Scott Street; running thence easterly along said northerly line of Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet and to the westerly line of Farren Avenue; thence at right angles northerly and along said westerly line of Farren Avenue Seventy-five (75) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet; and thence at right angles southerly Seventy-five (75) feet to the place of beginning. Being a portion of Block No. 431, Western Addition.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that the title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 29th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17750, Dept. No. 5.

EVA NATHAN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of EVA NATHAN, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Jones Street, distant thereon Southerly ninety (90) feet from the Southerly line of Pacific Street, running thence Southerly and along said line of Jones Street forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty seven (137) feet, six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet, six (6) inches to said line of Jones Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of fifty vara lot number Eight Hundred and Sixty-one (861) of the City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit: for judgment establishing and quieting said plaintiff's title to all said real property as the owner thereof in fee simple, and determining all adverse claims thereto, and ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, and for such other and further relief as may be just and proper in the premises, under and pursuant to the provisions of the Act of the Legislature of California entitled, "An Act to provide for the establishment and quieting of title to real property in case of loss and destruction of public records," approved June 16, 1906, and the Act of the said Legislature, amending the same, approved March 6, 1909.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 2nd day of July, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

(Seal) By M. P. BRUTON, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk, a newspaper, on the 17th day of July, A. D. 1909.

DEVOTO & RICHARDSON, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
Foxcroft Building, San Francisco.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE

Let there be no evasion—we mean chronic and supposed incurable cases involving dropsy, albumen and casts. They are curable in a great majority of all cases.

Let us cite a typical case—that of Mr. R. F. Nitschkke, of 1246 Spaight Street, Madison, Wis. There had been eight physicians on this case and it got so extreme that he finally had one of the last symptoms; namely, failing eye-sight. In January, 1907, the doctors admitted that nothing further could be done, and they sent him to Eureka Springs, Arkansas. He continued to get worse, the dropsy finally reaching the stomach, heart and lungs. At one time tests showed albumen as high as 75 per cent.

He learned of Fulton's Renal Compound and began to take it July 3rd. Dropsy began slowly to decline and the albumen dropped to forty, then to twenty, then to ten, and finally to two per cent in May, 1908.

The patient is now back to his employment and is devoting full time to his business.

Patients desiring to know more of this treatment can get full literature by writing to the John J. Fulton Company, 212 First Street, San Francisco, Cal.

Fulton's Renal Compound can be had at druggists.

We desire every patient to write us who is not noting the usual improvement by the third week.

Wigg—Did you ever work for a railroad company?
Wagg—Well, yes; I've tried to open the car windows.

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Yards and Planing Mills—6th and Channel Streets

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No.17271.

WELLS, RUSSELL & COMPANY, (a Corporation), Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest, in or Lien Upon, the Real Property herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Wells, Russell & Company, (a Corporation), plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows

First Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northwesterly line of Natoma Street, formerly Everett Street, distant two hundred (200) feet southwesterly from the intersection of the southwesterly line of Third Street with said line of Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches; thence at a right angle northwesterly eighty (80) feet; thence northeasterly parallel with Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches and thence at a right angle southeasterly eighty (80) feet to the place of beginning; being a portion of the 100 vara Lot No. 34.

Second Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Fourteenth Avenue, distant one hundred and fifty (150) feet westerly from the northwesterly corner of Fourteenth Avenue and P Street; thence westerly along said line of Fourteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet; thence at a right angle northerly two hundred (200) feet to Thirteenth Avenue; thence at a right angle easterly along the south line of Thirteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet, and thence at a right angle southerly two hundred (200) feet to the place of beginning; being a part of the O'Neill and Haley Tract, as per map on file in the Recorder's Office of said City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that its title to said property be established and quieted: that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover its costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June A, D, 1909. By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attorneys for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 22931, Dept. No. 10.

CATHERINE FRANCIS BERTRAND, Plaintiff,
vs.
BENJAMIN A. BERTRAND, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City of and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Benjamin A. Bertrand, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion of said plaintiff; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 11th day of May, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk
(Seal) By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ORNBAUN, FRASER & LYNCH, Attorneys for Plaintiff.
727 Pacific Building, San Francisco, Cal. 6-19-10

CERTIFICATE OF COPARTNERSHIP—No. 338.

Know All Men by These Presents:

That J. C. MONTGOMERY and MARY MAGUIRE do hereby certify and declare that they are partners doing business in the State of California, under the firm name and style of the St. Anthony Hotel Company, with principal place of business in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California; that the purposes for which the copartnership is formed are to provide for entertaining strangers and travelers for compensation, and to this end to acquire property by lease or otherwise to be rented, or to be used for the above purposes, but neither partner hereto shall or will acquire any property by lease or otherwise, for any of the purposes herein stated, without first obtaining from his copartner the consent to do so.

That the names in full of all the members of this copartnership and their places of residence are as follows, to-wit: J. C. Montgomery, 825 Howard Street, San Francisco, California, Mary Maguire, 825 Howard Street, San Francisco, California.

Witness our hands and seals this 12th day of July, 1909.

J. C. MONTGOMERY.
MARY MAGUIRE.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
City and County of San Francisco—ss.

On this 12th day of July, 1909, before me, I. L. Jacobi, a Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, residing therein, duly commissioned and sworn, personally appeared J. C. Montgomery and Mary Maguire, known to me to be the persons described in, whose names are subscribed to and who executed the within instrument, and they acknowledged to me that they executed the same.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal in said City and County of San Francisco, State of California, the day and year first hereinabove written.

(Seal) I. L. JACOBI,
Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Endorsed: Filed July 13, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys,
Oscar Luning Building, San Francisco, Cal 7-17-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MORTGAGED

In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California—No. 23,856, Dept. 9.

In the Matter of the Estate of SUSAN BLANC, Deceased.

Ida E. Connor, as the administratrix of the estate of SUSAN BLANC, deceased, having this day filed herein her duly verified petition praying for an order authorizing her to mortgage the real property hereinafter described, belonging to the estate of said decedent,

It is hereby ordered and directed that all persons interested in the estate of said SUSAN BLANC, deceased, be and they are hereby directed to appear before said Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, Department Number 9 thereof, on Friday, the 23rd day of July, 1909, at 10:00 o'clock a. m. of said day, at the Courtroom of said Department, in the Grant Building, southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, the same being the time and place hereby fixed for hearing the said petition, then and there to show cause, if any they have, why the following described real estate situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows, to wit:

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Jackson Street, distant thereon Seventy-two (72) feet Easterly from the corner formed by the intersection of said line of Jackson Street with the Easterly line of Drumm Street; running thence Easterly along said line of Jackson Street Fifty (50) feet; thence at right angles Northerly Forty (40) feet; thence at right angles Westerly and parallel with Jackson Street Fifty (50) feet; and thence at right angles Southerly and parallel with Drumm Street Fifty (50) feet, and to the place of beginning, or such part thereof as to the Court may seem meet, should not be mortgaged for the sum of Five Thousand Dollars ($5000.00) or such lesser sum as to the Court may seem just, as prayed for in petition on file, reference to which is hereby made for further particulars.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four (4) successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Dated June 17th, 1909.
CARROLL W. McENERNEY, Attorney for Administratrix.
Flood Building, San Francisco, Cal. 6-26-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 22419, Dept. No. 10.

HILDA M. WILSON, Plaintiff,
vs.
FRANK J. WILSON, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Frank J. Wilson, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion of plaintiff; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 14th day of April, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
(Seal) By W. R. CASTAGNETTO, Deputy Clerk.

A. MORGENTHAL, Attorney for Plaintiff,
1530 Grove Street, San Francisco, Cal. 5-22-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco State of California—No. 16627

ROBERT HECTOR, Jr., Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Robert Hector, Jr., plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest, or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to wit:

Lot number 210 as laid down, delineated and designated on a certain map on file in the office of the recorder of the said City and County of San Francisco, known as "Holiday Map A." Said map was filed in the office of the recorder of the City and County of San Francisco on the 1st day of May 1863.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit, that it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute, that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description, and that plaintiff recover costs herein, and have such other and further relief as may seem meet and proper in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 4th day of June, 1909.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk

MEMORANDUM

The following persons are said to claim an interest in or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names.	Addresses.
Abraham C. Freeman	3034 Washington St., San Francisco, Cal
Ellita Gamboni Mazzitelli	San Francisco, Cal.
Frank Shay, Administrator of the estate of William Hale, Deceased.	640 Fairmont avenue, Oakland, California.

Dated, this 4th day of June, 1909.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in San Francisco Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation, on the 19th day of June, 1909

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys for Plaintiff.
45 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal 6-19-10

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Mackenzie Gordon

TENOR

TEACHER OF SINGING { in all its branches, from the rudiments of tone formation to the highest finish and Completion of Public Singing.

Oratorio, Opera and Concert

By appointment only Phone Franklin 3594

Studio: 1350 FRANKLIN ST.

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

Phone Kearny 3657 Res. Phone West 1784

Dr. A. H. Wright

12 to 4 CHRONICLE BUILDING

60 YEARS' EXPERIENCE

PATENTS

TRADE MARKS
DESIGNS
COPYRIGHTS &C.

Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain our opinion free whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. HANDBOOK on Patents sent free. Oldest agency for securing patents.

Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice, without charge, in the Scientific American.

A handsomely illustrated weekly. Largest circulation of any scientific journal. Terms, $3 a year; four months, $1. Sold by all newsdealers.

MUNN & Co. 361 Broadway, New York

Branch Office, 625 F St., Washington, D. C.

PATRICK & CO.

RUBBER STAMPS

STENCILS, SEALS, SIGNS & ETC.

126 BUSH ST. SAN FRANCISCO

WHAT WOMEN HAVE SAID ABOUT WOMEN

Half the sorrows of women would be averted if they could only repress the speech they know to be useless—nay, the speech they have resolved not to utter—George Eliot.

A woman's tongue is a deadly weapon and the most difficult thing in the world to keep in order, and things slip off it with a facility nothing short of appalling at the very moment when it ought to be most quiet—Countess Von Arnheim.

Women devour many a disappointment between breakfast and dinner time, keep back the tears, and look a little pale about the lips, and in answer to inquiries, say, "Oh, nothing." Pride helps us; and pride is not a bad thing when it only urges us to hide our own hearts—and not to hurt others—George Eliot.

Them "perfect women nobly planned" hev got to bigin right off sharp on their business o' warnin' an' comfortin' an' commandin', an' it must come dretful hard on 'em in the'r inexperience, sometimes, an' they must have moments when th're afeard they haint commanded right—Clara Louise Burnham.

It is only on the rarest occasions that a woman's life is balanced between love and fame—and the two gifts are seldom bestowed together. If she accepts love she is often compelled to forego fame, because she merges herself too closely into the existence of another. If, on the other hand, she chooses fame, men are generally afraid or jealous of her and leave her to herself—Marie Corelli.

It is an interesting fact that Almighty God seems to like widows better than wives. The wives mentioned in the Scriptures, from Eve down to Sapphira, are, with notoriously few exceptions, obnoxious; they are always jealous, or deceitful, or suspicious, or mercenary, or unfaithful or intriguing. But the widows are invariably kind and lovely—Mrs. Craigie (John Oliver Hobbes).

There are few daughters of Eve to whom conquest does not seem a finer thing than humility; and the sovereignty of Dianade Poitiers over a king seems to many a girl just conscious of her own charm a more emphatic testimony of the supremacy of her sex than the angel's greeting of "Blessed art thou!" to the elected Virgin of the world—Marie Corelli.

A woman is never old until the little finger of her glove is allowed to project beyond the finger itself and she orders new photographs from an old plate in preference to sitting again.—Myrtle Reed.

It goes far toward reconciling me to being a woman when I reflect that I am thus in no danger of marrying one—Lady Mary Worthey Montague.

It is easy enough for a rich woman to be good-natured. It doesn't cost her enough to constitute a claim—Frances Hodgson Burnett.

Multitudes of women hold with Becky Sharp—envious of the prosperity of the Pitt-Crawleys—that they could be very good on five thousand a year—Marion Harland.

10-INCH DISK RECORDS 25c

While They Last

Piano purchasers insured against sickness, death and fire. It will pay you to investigate our easy terms on Pianos before buying.

PETER BACIGALUPI & SONS,

Phonographs and Pianos

941 Market St. Opposite Mason St.

Open Saturday Evenings.

MOVED

Gladding, McBean & Co.

CLAY PRODUCTS

Office

311-317 CROCKER BUILDING

Warehouse

147-151 MINNA STREET

Between New Montgomery and Third

San Francisco, Cal.

The German Savings and Loan Society

(Member of the Associated Savings Bank of S. F.)

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,504,498.68
Deposits June 30, 1908	$36,793,234.04
Total Assets	$39,435,681.38

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

RICHMOND DISTRICT BRANCH, 432 Clement Street, between 5th and 6th Avenues. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. W. C. Heyer, Manager.

H. L. Davis W. D. Fennimore J. W. Davis

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store at 181 Post Street, near Grant Avenue.

HENRY P. TRICOU

NOTARY PUBLIC

508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711

Residence 852 Grove St. Phone Park 1870

It takes a heroine to be economical—Dinah Maria Mulock.

MAYERLE'S GERMAN EYE WATER

By Mail 65c

Mayerle's German Eyewater

Highly Recommended for

Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN

Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes, relieves the strain, and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Graduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 960 Market street, opposite Hale's. Phone Franklin 3279.

¶ Nothing can be more refreshing these warm summer days than a glass of cool Weinhard's Portland Beer.

¶ It's brewed from the best Bavarian hops and Oregon barley. It is not only nutricious but exhilirating.

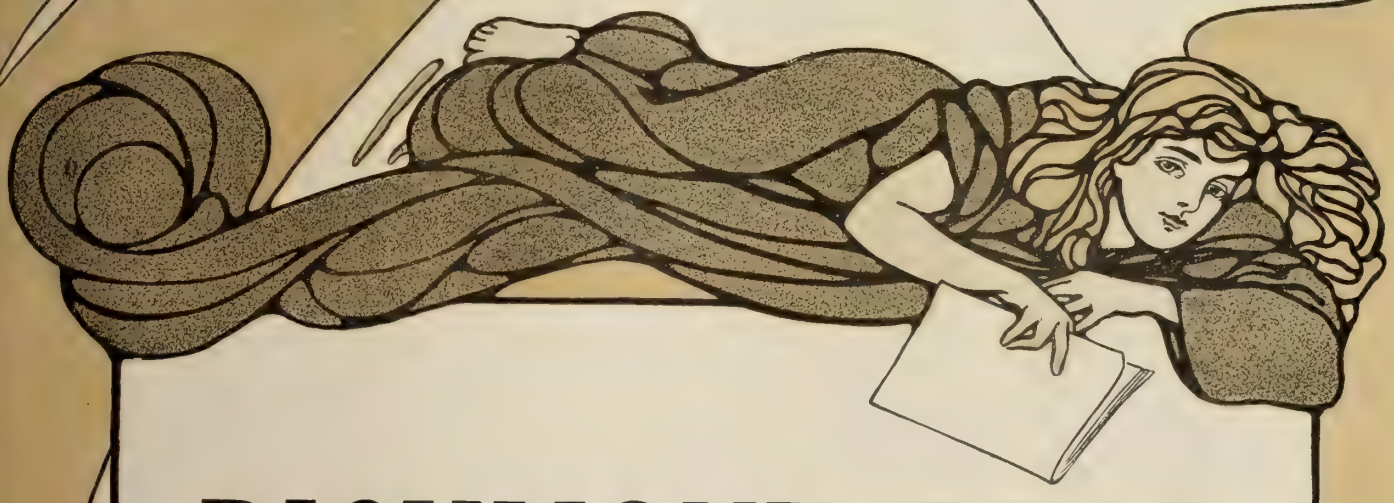
¶ Try it at lunch or dinner.

WEINHARD

PORTLAND BEER

SAN FRANCISCO AGENCY

HENRY WEINHARD BREWERY



TELEPHONE MARKET 1803

1255 HARRISON STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Vol. XVII. No. 883. SAN FRANCISCO, JULY 31, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

RICHMOND COAL

IMPORTED SOLELY BY

James and Alex'r Brown

Owners of the Pelaw Main and Richmond Collieries; also Richmond Vale Colliery, Newcastle, N. S. W., Australia

Represented by Wm. Smellie

IF your dealer cannot supply you with genuine Richmond Coal, kindly communicate with us, or Pacific Coast Coal Co., Merchants' Exchange Building. Please note that all other advertisements claiming to sell you Richmond Coal are not authorized by us. They haven't got the goods.

JAMES AND ALEX'R BROWN
334 RUSS BUILDING, MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Sole Wholesale Distributors

PACIFIC COAST COAL CO.

Beale Street Bunkers San Francisco

SUMMER RESORTS

THE VENDOME SAN JOSE

Is the ideal objective point for the motorist. The accommodations are complete and the ride from either side of the bay is delightful. This hotel is unsurpassed in the West for the beauty of its environment and for those qualities which contribute to ease and comfort. H. W. LAKE, Manager.

PARAISO SPRINGS

MONTEREY CO., CAL.

The most accessible of all resorts; a delightful terminal for an automobile trip. Take 8 a. m. train from Third and Townsend; you arrive at spring 1 p. m. for lunch. Natural hot soda and sulphur plunge and tub baths, 104 to 116 degrees, for rheumatism, malaria and all stomach troubles. Iron and arsenic waters. Altitude 1400 feet. The conditions and surroundings at Paraiso insure one that restful comfort so earnestly desired but so rarely found. H. H. McGOWAN, Proprietor.

Hotel and Grounds

Plan to spend your vacation and your week-end outings at

HOTEL DEL MONTE

during

The Annual Month of Sports---August 15 to September 15th

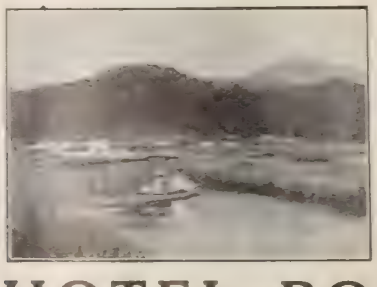
Annual Dog Show — Annual Golf Tournament

First State Bridge Whist Congress — Annual Tennis Tournament

Opening of Pebble Beach Lodge

Make your plans to be there. Write for rates and reservations to-day to H. R. WARNER, Manager.

TAKE TAMALPAIS TRIP



and breathe good air.

Half a mile high in two hours' time. No other trip like it.

Via Sausalito Ferry, Foot of Market Street

BYRON HOT SPRINGS

One of the world's most curative springs, 2½ hours from San Francisco; one of California's best hotels and a delightful place for rest and recreation. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, James Flood Building, any S. P. Agent, or Peck-Judah, 789 Market St., San Francisco, or 553 S. Spring St., Los Angeles, or address manager, Byron Hot Springs, California.

Forty-five minutes from San Francisco

Escalle Station

Via Sausalito Northwestern Pacific R. R. Postoffice Larkspur

Reservations can be made with Mrs. Manlove, Cadillac Hotel, San Francisco

HOTEL BON AIR

That Auto Trip Should Include Santa Cruz

If you haven't got an auto take the short line through the mountains. Ask the S. P. man. Fun, fun, fun, awaits you at Santa Cruz. Bring the family.

Address Box N, Chamber of Commerce, for literature and let them obtain your accommodations, also.

SUMMER RESORTS

HOTEL RAFAEL

SAN RAFAEL

Our Guests Always Return

Buy your tickets snd check your baggage direct to San Rafael

Under the Management of
MR. J. H. HOLMES
Formerly of the Hotel Green, Pasadena

WITTER SPRINGS HOTEL

The Automobile Headquarters of Lake County.

The most delightful place to rest and get well. Every comfort; large, airy rooms, with hot and cold water; private baths.

Witter Springs Water Works Wonders

For people afflicted with Stomach, Liver or Kidney Trouble. Absolutely cures Eczema.

Address Peck-Judah Information Bureaus, or reservations can be made at City Office, Westbank Building, 830 Market Street.

NAPA SODA SPRINGS HOTEL

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

California's famous mountain spa, only 50 miles from San Francisco. The nearest watering place and summer resort to the city. 1,000 feet elevation, overlooking 25 miles of beautiful Napa Valley. For terms address Manager Napa Soda Springs Hotel, Napa County, Cal.

Boca Hotel and Annex

TRUCKEE RIVER

Address CHAS. GARRISON, BOCA, CAL.

CAMP MEEKER

Own Summer Home in Mountains of Sonoma County

Equable climate. Lots $15 up. Cottages built $85 up. Depot, stores, restaurant, hotel, phone, postoffice, express, churches and sawmill; 1800 lots sold; 600 cottages built. Sausalito ferry. M. C. MEEKER, Camp Meeker, Sonoma County.

ROSS McMAHON AWNING AND TENT CO.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

Tents, Awnings, Hammocks, Bags and Covers

Phone Kearny 2030 403 BATTERY STREET

SPEND THE WEEK END AT

ÆTNA SPRINGS

Leave San Francisco at 3:45 p. m., Friday or Saturday via Sausalito. Railroad round trip, $7, including enjoyable ride in our fine automobiles from St. Helena to Aetna Springs and return.

Illustrated Booklet mailed free on application.

Aetna Springs Co., Aetna Springs, Napa Co., Cal.

Calaveras Big Trees Grove Hotel

Situated in the world famous Calaveras Grove of Big Trees. Everything for the comfort and convenience of guests. Table the best. Finest trout streams in the State. For further particulars address JOB WHITESIDE, Big Trees, Calaveras County, Cal.

PINE LODGE

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

In the mountains by the sea. Surroundings perfect for rest and recreation. Trout stream, boating, bathing. Home garden of berries and vegetables. New hotel and cottages, modern conveniences. Two miles from Santa Cruz. Rates $9.00 per week and upwards. For particulars address PINE LODGE, Santa Cruz, Cal.

FALLEN LEAF LODGE

LAKE TAHOE, CAL.

New home-like resort at the head of Fallen Leaf Lake; five miles south of Lake Tahoe. Centrally situated in the grandest part of the Lake Tahoe Scenic Wonderland. Rates $14.00 per week and upward. HARRY WHITCOMB, Manager, Fallen Leaf, Lake Tahoe, Cal.

GILROY HOT SPRINGS

Only four hours from San Francisco; delightful stage ride over the best kept mountain road in California. Unsurpassed table, health-giving waters, telephone, postoffice. Rates $12 to $17.50 a week; baths free. Trains leave Third and Townsend streets at 9 a. m. Direct stage connection. See Peck-Judah, 789 Market street.

W. J. McDONALD, Proprietor.

SUTHERLAND'S

One of Nature's Most Charming Spots for a Summer Outing. Write for rates. Guerneville, Sonoma Co., Cal.

YOSEMITE

SENTINEL HOTEL Open the Year Round; Steam Heated; Electric Lighted.

CAMP YOSEMITE Electric Lighted; Opened May 1st; the Largest Hotel-Camp on the Coast.

Under One Management. For Rates, Reservations or other information, address J. B. COOK, Proprietor, Yosemite, Cal.

Leading Hotels and Resorts

LONG BEACH SANITARIUM

LONG BEACH, CALIF.

Battle Creek Sanitarium Methods

A splendidly equipped QUIET, REFINED and MODERN medical and surgical Institution BY-THE-SEA, where the sick, run down or work-tired may go and know that they will receive the very best of care and attention at reasonable rates. Gentlemen and Lady Physicians. Graduate nurses only. Climate exceptionally fine. Cool in summer, warm and dry in winter. Descriptive Booklet mailed FREE. W. RAY SIMPSON, Manager.

Long Distance Phones in Every Room

YE ALPINE TAVERN

Beautiful Mountain Resort on Mt. Love

Just a mile above the sea. American plan $3.00 per day, $15 per week. Choice of rooms in hotel or cottages. Spend a vacation 5,000 feet above the sea, among great pines and oaks. For information, D. A. Munger, General Agent, Pacific Electric R. R., Los Angeles, or office.

HOTEL ALEXANDRIA

LOS ANGELES

IN SAFETY, SERVICE
AND SANITATION

HAS TAKEN ITS PLACE
AMONG THE BEST HOTELS

A. C. BILICKE, President
S. J. WHITMORE, Vice-Pres. and Gen. Mgr. JOS. REICHL, Asst. Mgr.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO

CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. Power boats from the Hotel meet passengers from the North on the arrival of the Pacific Coast S. S. Co. steamers. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, 334 S. Spring St., Los Angeles.

LAGUNA BEACH

35 miles south of Los Angeles; 8 miles west of Irvine, which is on the El Camino Real

A delightful, cosy, secluded place on the Pacific Ocean. Fine bathing, good hotel and cottages. No grade; oiled roads. Address Manager Laguna Beach Hotel, Laguna Beach, Cal.

ALDER GLEN SPRINGS

In the mountains above Cloverdale. Magnesia, soda, iron, sulphur and arsenic springs. Finest fishing and hunting. Bathing in the Russian River. Large new dancing pavilion this year. For accommodations address
J. A. SERRES, Cloverdale P. O.

THE ANGELUS

LOS ANGELES

One of California's Best Hotels
Centrally located; street cars direct to hotel.
Rates $1.50 per Day Up

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

CAMERAS

Kodaks, Developing, Printing, Supplies, Etc.

"Don't take a vacation unless you take pictures as you go along"

462-464 THIRTEENTH STREET, Between Broadway and Washington

SMITH BROS. STATIONERS OAKLAND

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, July 31, 1909. No. 883.

FRENCH FASHIONS ON PARADE

These snap-shots were taken on the occasion of the last "Grand Prix de Longchamp" which is attended by the wealth and beauty of Paris.

of the question regarding the equivalent of a university education is the moral obliquity which seems to be peculiar to the men who are training the youth of the land. Professor Eliot has long enjoyed the reputation of being one of the noblest representatives of New England's intellect as well as of her peculiar virtue. He has been held up to us as an exemplar of morals, a man of deep insight and broad views with a large and humane ambition to accomplish social and political good. Yet we find him in his old age, full of honors, in possession of the luxuries of life, selling his name for what it would bring in the market; and because the books which he endorsed are not in themselves objectionable he sees no reason why his action should be brought into question. Professor Eliot would be horrified at the iniquity of a man of reputable standing in lending his name to promote a wildcat project, and if the man justified his conduct by the argument that the gold, rubber or coffee, or whatever other commodity was exploited, was in itself a good thing, Professor Eliot would pronounce him a knave. He would be shocked at any form of the sin save the one which he committed himself. The tradesman that availed himself of Professor Eliot's greed was intent on taking advantage of the national passion for education. All over the land there are youths and maidens, men and women, whose ambition is kept in check by physical conditions, and who crave that "priceless boon," a college education, especially if it can be acquired by some simple means, such, for instance, as reading through a pile of books of approximately their own height. To tempt these unprepared and undisciplined minds to invest their money in books which would ordinarily be dead stock on the shelves of the dealers is just as great a swindle as it would be to induce them to put their money into a get-rich-quick scheme or their labor into some useless toil. Professor Eliot must know, if he knows anything at all, that an education cannot be acquired in capsule doses of concentrated wisdom, and that even if it were possible, the average mind is not strong enough to digest the compound. But apparently what interests him more than all else is the music made by the jingle of the guinea.

Perspective Impressions

Aldrich seems to be getting skinned on the hide schedules.

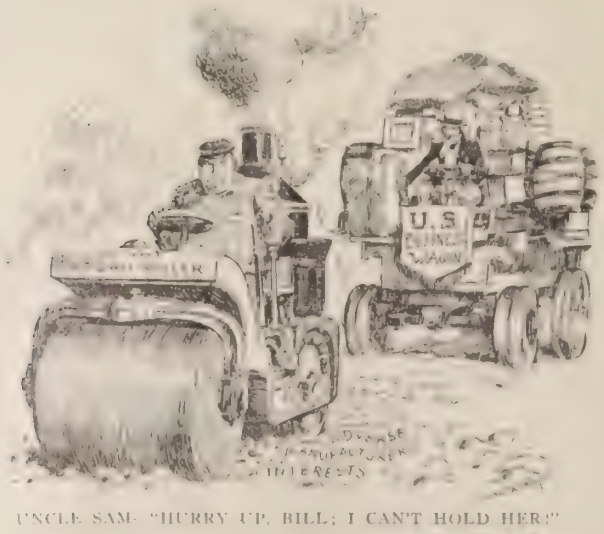
The only was to secure a Calhoun jury is to wait until a new generation grows up.

Good chance now for Roosevelt to take a run up to the scene of the fighting and shoot a few Spaniards in the back.

England is to build some super-Dreadnaughts. In view of the advance of the flying machine it might be well to have all the protective armor on top.

The Hon. Francis J. Heney may be absolutely on the square, but Congress has deemed it prudent to anticipate more "receipts in full for services rendered" by putting the time-lock on the treasury.

It has been said that a conscientious person would rather doubt his own judgment than condemn his own species. Judge Dunne is not that kind of conscientious person.



For the fourth time we are to vote on the Geary street road question. The advocates of that demagogic scheme have more perserverance than sense.

It is said that the Boughten Bulletin has been thinking of starting a subscription contest for the most popular longest-leased judge.

The Indiana bank cashier who stole $50,000 from the institution and locked the safe securely before leaving, saved the directors the trouble of following the old rule about the purloined horse and the stable door.

The fruit growers clamor for help, while the members of the Unemployed League in this city demand work or alms—the latter preferred. The trouble is that the cry from the country is sincere, while none of that element exists among the professional loafers of this city.

The colored troopers of the Tenth Cavalry evoked vociferous cheering when they marched through New York City on Monday. "It's Sambo this and Sambo that, and Sambo keep away; but it's dusky lines of 'eroes when the band begins to play."

UNCLE SAM: "HURRY UP, BILL; I CAN'T HOLD HER!"
New York Herald

"LET THE TWINS DO YOUR WORK, UNCLE"
Idaho Daily Statesman

Huneker Analyzed

English Critic Pokes Many Kinds of Fun at the Author of "Egoists," Who Has Bedazzled the Culturines and Superficial Reviewers of This Country.

By Francis West

After being wearied by the adulation run riot with which reviewers in the United States have greeted James Huneker's "Egoists" it is refreshing to read an opposite view of his book by an English critic, who in one paragraph shows more insight and sanity than is displayed by all the clamorous admirers of Huneker on this side of the Atlantic. Huneker is an excellent example of the journalist who can attract by glittering phrases, by cleverly worded generalities. Hiding his lack of discernment and of the critical faculty in a flow of words, he easily makes an impression on the culturines and the half-baked critics who rally to his standard and proclaim to an eager world that he is a genius. Huneker was dramatic critic for the New York Sun for many years, and is able to write intelligently of plays and players, and particularly of music. But in "Egoists," a critical analysis of a certain lot of pseudo-philosophers, he has got far beyond his depth. But he makes such a splash as to deceive men like our own Edwin Markham, the hoe-poet, himself a product of indiscriminate and undiscerning flattery. "Mr. Huneker's sympathy," according to Markham, "is always with the thinker who breaks the stone wall of custom and shovels out a new path over the sands of the commonplace. . . . Metaphor, allusion, quotation, are all lavished to bring out shades of understanding, and finally we close a chapter, feeling that we have had a revelation of a personality that sheds light on all personality. . . . In Mr. Huneker's 'Iconoclasts' and 'Egoists' we have descriptions of nearly all the radical thinkers of our restless age. Here we find the men who carry divine or demon fire—now radiating light, now scattering thick darkness. They are the Titans of the modern world. And Mr. Huneker sketches these rebellious souls with the brilliancy and boldness with which Sorolla dashes color upon his canvas."

Markham's praise is the easier to understand when contrasted with what is written by a critic in the Saturday Review of London, who in neat, incisive phrases reveals the true inwardness of the qualities of the book that impress the hoe-poet. "Mr. James Huneker," says this critic, "is a literary ostrich for discrimination and a ravening wolf for appetite. Ostriches and wolves do not publish lists of the victims and objects they have swallowed; Mr. Huneker does, and amazing reading they are. . . . Such a jumble of authors, books and notions has rarely been hurled at a reviewer's head. We cannot say, we can only guess, what Mr. Huneker would be at. Like an ostrich in catholicity of taste, Mr. Huneker's power of digestion is hardly that of an ostrich. He gorges himself with good and bad literature, but assimilates nothing, reduces nothing to order. In one respect he certainly resembles the broad-minded bird of the desert that hides its head in the sand and reposes in blissful unconsciousness of what is going on around it. Mr. Huneker shoved his head into the dreary sands of Romanticism long ago and there he remains, oblivious of the great world-changes that have taken place. The heroes of his boyhood are his heroes still. This fidelity is touching, but does not always make for good literary criticism."

Back to the American critics: "What George Brandes is to the old world James Huneker is to the new," says Current Literature. Michael Monahan, in his magazinelet, "Papyrus," which Current Literature calls "the storehouse of literary purples and silks," (how pleased these critics are with one another) says: "Take the essay on Ibsen, in this volume, a piece of work that is a Huneker holograph, withal the most adequate criticism in a literary sense, and the most penetrating spiritually that could be asked. . . . A big, brave book, rich with the stigmata of toil and thought." But the English critic says that Huneker doesn't think. He accuses Huneker of taking a fling at all the philosophers of the age, adequately analyzing none of them and consequently presenting only a surface review of the lot, at the same time making no apparent attempt to distinguish between the real and the false. Says this English satirist:

"Though he may occasionally lift up his head to deal with living authors, he cannot rub the sands of Romanticism out of his eyes; he views everything through Romantic spectacles in the perpetual glow of a Romantic sunset. His own language is ultra-Romantic—flamboyant only weakly describes it. Extremely fond of fine words for their own sake, as deeply stirred by them as the old woman was by 'Mesopotamia,' he incessantly talks of 'jeweled prose' and seems to have ransacked the dictionary in search of jewels for his own prose. Also, the choicest diction of Wall Street—for Mr. Huneker is a New Yorker—delights his soul. The talent for talking a very great deal and saying singularly little, and for warping words away from their true or best sense, is peculiarly American; and Mr. Huneker stands in the first rank. Only grim and resolute analysis of this collection of essays reveals the purpose—or rather, purposes—with which it is written. After making an effort we think the fact is that all the prolixity and wealth of confusion are due to an attempt, so to speak, to assume several different attitudes in one and the same moment."

The Bookman and the New York Times Saturday Review of Books are mightily tickled with Mr. Huneker's effort, the latter saying that "each collection of essays that he puts forth in book form retains the charm of spontaneity." Ah, that spontaneity were the literary test! What fame even the market reporter would have! I am glad to see, however, that the talented William Marion Reedy of the St. Louis Mirror does not allow himself to be altogether captured by Huneker's superficialities. While he gives him praise to some extent, he sees his faults, as is revealed in the following paragraph from his pen:

"Mr. Huneker himself distorts his style into an occasional polyglotic clutter and falls into pomposities of the obvious, the axiomatic. His book is an album of human curios, of little men with swollen visions of themselves induced by 'rapt umbilicular self-contemplation.'"

The truth is that Huneker, dazzled by the sham learning of Neitzsche, Max Stirner and other supreme egoists, has produced a work as false as the writings of most of the men he writes of, and has so succeeded in his word weaving that he has won praise from critics as impressionable as himself, just as Neitzsche in his native land is the apostle only of the culturines. With eagerness that is almost pathetic these fellows grasp at any new so-called philosophy. "Different" is their creed. Neitzsche's defense of all things selfish and indecent appeals to them as true because it is startling; likewise they would embrace the doctrine of any clever writer who would advocate the murdering of a man's own mother. Shaw's

HIGH GRADE
INVESTMENT SECURITIES
List on Request
SUTRO & COMPANY
412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO
Established 1858.

free-love theories impress them because they are promulgated with more or less brilliancy. The opposite, advocated with far more reason and logic, would be too staid for these eager souls that care more for the bizarre than for the meritorious in literature. How sane, in the in the face of the frantic fantasies of Huneker and his worshipers, appear the concluding words of the Saturday Review critic:

"This book is a jungle, but not a jungle with a tropical profusion of green growths. Rather the profusion is that of a marine-store where rarities may be seen heaped with things that men have apparently forever done with and—in the appropriate American phrase—'have no use for.' Mr. Huneker, as has been said, sees the heap transfigured in the glow of a Romantic sunset, but the magic tints are visible to him alone."

Nudity on the Stage

In a Book Written Forty Years Ago, Olive Logan (Olive Schreiner) Denounces Stage Conditions That Were Decorous Compared With Those of Today.

By Robert McTavish.

Before me is a forgotten volume printed in 1869—"Woman and the Stage," by Olive Logan. You may not recognize the name. She became Olive Schreiner afterwards, and under the nom de plume of Ralph Iron wrote a novel that will long remain a classic—"The Story of an African Farm." She was little more than a girl when she produced "Woman and the Stage," and she wrote from knowledge for she had been a very successful actress. Several members of her family were well known actors and actresses in the forties and fifties. She tells that she knew no other life than that of the theatre all through her childhood days. She was a woman of remarkable and diversified talent, but when she died, months ago, it was in an English workhouse. The dailies gave her death a few lines of space; a dead pugilist would have been given columns.

To read this book is to have one's attention called to the difference between stage ideals forty years ago and now. One of the chapters is devoted to "The Leg Business" and the other to "Nudity in Theatres," and in the following language Olive Logan denounces some of the performers:

"These creatures occupy the temples of the drama; they perform in conjunction with actors, on the same stage, before the same audiences, in the same hour. They are made legitimate members of our theatrical companies, and take part in those nondescript performances called burlesques, spectacles, what you will. They carry off the chief honors of the hour; their names occupy the chief places on the bills.

"A woman who has not ability enough to rank as a passable 'walking lady' in a good theatre, on a salary of twenty-five dollars a week, can strip herself almost naked, and thus be qualified to go upon the stage of two-thirds of our theatres at a salary of one hundred dollars and upward.

"Clothed in the dress of an honest woman, she is worth nothing to a manager. Stripped as naked as she dare—and there is little left when so much is done—she becomes a prize of her manager, who knows that crowds will rush to see her, and who pays her a salary accordingly."

It would be thought from the vigor and earnestness of her denunciations, that the stage spectacles of which she wrote were of the Roman saturnalia variety; yet they were little more daring than "The Black Crook," which, when it was presented a few years earlier, with the chorus girls in tights, was looked upon as about the acme of sophisticated wickedness.

It is interesting to reflect on the changes that have taken place since that time, and to speculate on what vitriolic denunciation an Olive Logan might launch upon present day stage spectacles. Isidora Duncan dances in scant draperies, and society people and royalty flock to see her. Maude Allen's Salome dance leaves little to the imagination, yet she has been a reigning favorite in London and Berlin. Mary Garden would come distinctly under the category of "these creatures." Anna Held has made a fortune out of nudity and suggestiveness. In Germany invitational performances and exhibitions are given where clothing is practically discarded. The chorus girl of today as compared to the one of forty years ago is as a lace collar to a Mother Hubbard gown. Yet the world does not seem to get any more wicked, and vice is not on the increase.

The fact of the matter is that nudity on the stage has no lasting vogue. The general public soon tires of that which is easy of access. When living pictures were presented a few years ago it was thought that the world had gone to pot. Women posed in groups with complete suits of fleshlings on. I remember an exhibition at the old Columbia theatre where the living pictures were clad only in bronze paint. Yet the craze for this form of stage entertainment died out, and a living picture exhibit today would not draw a profitable audience.

It is the same with the Salome dances and others of the kind. Already there is a revulsion of feeling. People have tired of these spectacles, and in Germany especially there is a reaction and skirt dances are being hailed as a relief after the prevalence of the skirtless variety.

It is a pretty clean-minded world after all. Plays that are off color are tolerated only in the very largest centers of population. In the other cities there are not enough people with a love for the prurient to support them.

In addition to denouncing nudity, Olive Logan wrote in harsh terms of the depiction of drunkenness on the stage, and in that connection told some interesting anecdotes of the elder Booth.

"Few of my readers are ignorant," she says, "of the fact that the elder Booth, whose like we shall not see again, was often intoxicated while playing. Strangely enough, his artistic powers were as strong when he was in that state as when he was quite sober. Many aver that his sober Richard was a tame and puerile thing compared to the noisy Gloster of perhaps a hundred cups.

"When I was a little girl, Booth was once playing in conjunction with my sister in Memphis, and she sent me one night to deliver a message to him on the stage.

"The curtain had not yet risen, but I found Mr. Booth standing at the back of the stage, inside the tomb of the Capulets, for the nonce unoccupied by any defunct member of that illustrious house.

"I approached timidly, and delivered my message; whereupon, starting up with the graceful spring of a tiger disturbed, he hissed out:

"'Avaunt, avaunt and quit my sight! Let the earth hide thee!
Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
Which thou dost glare with!'

"Any one who has seen Booth, and remembers the

(Continued on Page 34.)

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA
Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets
A General Banking Business Transacted
CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

The Lawyer and the Ring

By Henry Kistemaeckers (From the French)

Attorney Escartepoint, equally celebrated as a high liver and an excellent interpreter of the text of the law, was on his way to the little village of Cures, whither he had been summoned on account of a little question of boundaries, and was driving his automobile along right merrily. Attorney Escartepoint was happy and his remarkable abdomen, with its broad expanse, settled comfortably behind the guide-wheel, looked very impressive in the light of the summer sun. He was gliding along at thirty kilometers per hour and life seemed sweet indeed.

Then suddenly something appeared before him in the middle of the highway, and the something gave him the impression of a scare-crow with its outspread arms. Attorney Escartepoint applied the brake to his machine and brought it quickly to a standstill, feeling somewhat disconcerted at the apparition. Then he perceived that the obstacle was a mere tramp and concluded to proceed without further investigation, but in his excitement he turned on the power so briskly that the motor became clogged and he found it impossible to realize his desire. Attorney Escartepoint felt the cold perspiration standing out on his forehead and was almost overwhelmed at the thought of all the tragic possibilities of the situation.

The tramp, in the meanwhile, was slowly and respectfully approaching the machine. He had every appearance of a desperate criminal, but his words were gentleness itself:

"Monsieur," said he, "I beg you to excuse this interruption of your ride. I only desire to talk to you for a couple of minutes. Allow me merely to offer you this ring for the modest sum of five francs."

He felt in his pocket and brought out a gold ring set with a magnificent solitaire. In his unsightly, filthy fingers the diamond glistened as brightly as a neighboring planet.

"Five francs. You will admit, monsieur, that I am giving it away, and yet I should consider it a great favor if you would purchase it from me at that ridiculous price. The fact is that the stone is absolutely unsalable for me. I stole it last night and you can easily understand that I should be arrested at once if I attempted to sell it in town. Besides the fact that the theft is probably reported, I am perfectly aware that my appearance is not suggestive of the man who may be expected to own such stones. I am therefore willing to dispose of the gem for the merest trifle. It has been a long time since I have worn rings, and I am hungry as a bear."

Attorney Escartepoint sat silent in his machine and the sparkle of the diamond began to cast a hypnotic influence over him.

"There is no use of my telling you," added the tramp, "that the possession of the ring does not offer the same difficulties for you as for me. There is no need of your selling it, and it would make a very pretty present for anyone. Five francs—is it a bargain?"

The respectable man of the law considered for a moment the legal phases of the situation, then he looked up and down the road, saw that it was deserted, extended his right hand and put his left into his pocket. After a moment he drew forth a little gold ten-franc piece and fumbled it excitedly between his fat fingers.

"It's a foolish piece of business, just the same, to pay ten francs for a thing offered you for five," he grumbled peevishly. Then, while he was hesitating, he heard the tramp whisper:

"Diable! There come the gendarmes!"

This remark brought him to himself and, turning around, he saw two gendarmes approaching at the slow trot of their powerful horses. He became red in the face, leaped from his seat to the road and, seizing the robber around the waist, pinned his arms to his sides.

"What is the matter with you?" asked the man.

"You'll see!" replied Escartepoint with heroic irony. Then turning toward the approaching gendarmes, he cried:

"Make haste! I can't hold him much longer! Let's have the handcuffs! I have caught a thief!"

When the little group consisting of Escartepoint, the two gendarmes and the handcuffed tramp reached Cures there was a great stir. At the gate of the town, the district judge, two other attorneys and all the prominent citizens had gathered for the boundary investigation and were impatiently awaiting the tardy Escartepoint. Naturally there was widespread astonishment when they saw him driving his machine slowly to keep pace with the horses of the gendarmes, and the handcuffed prisoner who marched between them, apparently dejected and indifferent to everything.

Everyone was eager to hear the story, but Escartepoint modestly made his explanation brief:

"While I was on my way here this fellow had the audacity to stop me and offer for sale a beautiful ring that he stole yesterday! Without hesitation I leaped upon him and after a short struggle succeeded in holding him until the gendarmes arrived. I am sorry, judge, that it has been my luck to bring you this additional trouble!"

Everyone had to shake hands with Escartepoint and congratulate him on his courage, then they all adjourned to the police station.

"It is an extraordinary piece of luck, judge, that you happened to be here," said the beaming hero. "Don't you think we might as well proceed immediately to a preliminary hearing?"

The judge agreed and gave orders for the solemn opening of the court. Then the accused thief spoke for the first time:

"I am perfectly willing to submit to a preliminary hearing at once," said he in his gentle voice, "but I do it on one condition, that all these gentlemen shall remain and allow me to know their names."

No one objected, for they were all eager to fathom the villainy of the criminal, and the police station is a patriarchal refuge where justice is denied to none. When, therefore, they were all seated, the accused began spontaneously:

"You are going to ask me my name and surname, my profession, residence and reasons for being here. I offer this bundle of documents to set all that forth and establish it beyond question. First, however, I desire to ask you, monsieur"—here he turned toward Escartepoint—"why you had me arrested. Then I desire to ask you, messieurs"—and he now turned toward the gendarmes—"why you handcuffed me? Lastly, I call you to witness"—and he turned toward the auditors—"that I was arrested upon the complaint of monsieur, who threw himself upon me, by messieurs who put handcuffs on me, and that I have been shamefully led through the town in the attitude of the most dangerous criminal!"

"And what about the ring?" asked Attorney Escartepoint, with a smile.

"What ring?" replied the tramp.

"The one that you stole!"

"Messieurs, you are all witnesses once more of the fact

(Continued on Page 34.)

We have moved into our new store at
222 Stockton St., facing Union Square

ROBERTSON'S
BOOKSELLER
ENGRAVER AND STATIONER

The Spectator

Filling a Long Felt Want

One of the most widespread of local delusions is that the legal profession is so crowded as to resemble Virgil's army, the soldiers of which had not sufficient room to use their weapons. Singularly enough the fact is that we need more law schools to supply the demand, for we are a litigious people and clients are everywhere clamoring for counsel. Until the San Francisco Law School came into existence a week or so ago we had nothing but the Hasting College of Law and the Y. M. C. A. Law School to swell the ranks of the most learned of professions. In the circumstances it was obvious to men in touch with the situation that there was urgent need of greater facilities for turning out fledgling lawyers with the elements of education in them, and some of the more altruistic of them got together and instituted what is now known as the San Francisco Law School, the president of which is Bob Harrison, a young lawyer who has written a work on torts, which has been praised by some critics of amiable temperament, and by others pronounced much less interesting in their opinion than would be a dissertation by the same learned authority on tarts.

A Man of Distinction

For those who are not versed in the literature of the science of law it should be explained that President Harrison is a deputy district attorney. But it is not to be inferred that it was on the strength of this somewhat equivocal distinction that the honor of the presidency was bestowed on Mr. Harrison. Nay, it was in despite of the public position which Mr. Harrison holds that he was invested with the dignity of the exalted academic office; for as a matter of fact it would be little short of preposterous folly to attempt to borrow prestige for a law school from the office of the District Attorney under the present benighted dispensation. Since the decision in the Schmitz case, which revealed the fact that the District Attorney's staff had yet to learn how to draw an indictment, the suggestion has been made that we should have a municipal law school for the benefit of court officers. But in justice to Mr. Harrison it should be said that he did not draw the indictment in the Schmitz case.

A Degenerate College

"It is the purpose of the San Francisco Law School," says the prospectus of the institution, "to prepare students for the practice of law." Whether this is to be interpreted as a swat at the Hastings Law College and the Y. M. C. A. Law School, I know not, but I do know that the Hastings Law College is no longer an institution of high rank. It will probably surprise many of my readers to learn that the Hastings Law College of which we were so proud in the long ago, and of which Mayor Taylor is now the dean, has fallen below the standard of Eastern law colleges, so far below that it has impaired the reputation of the State University with which it is affiliated. The faculty of the State University has been denied participation in the Carnegie Pension Fund on account of the character of the Hastings College of Law. And Mayor Taylor is Dean of Hastings! This versatile genius, who draws three salaries at once while odesmithing on the side; this prodigiously industrious public servant,—Dean of a law college, Dean of a medical college, Trustee of the Free Public Library and Mayor of this laughter-loving city—this intellectual giant, the ostentation of whose excellencies is dazzling and bewildering, has suffered our beloved law college to fall below the standard to which it was raised in the halcyon days of yore. Can it be possible that his rare and rich qualities are prerogatives without being advantages?

Ideals Et Cetera

It is saddening to learn of the deterioration of the State institution that supplies us with legal talent, but there is consolation in the prospectus of the San Francisco Law School despite the fact that the president of the school has been identified with the Hastings College in a minor capacity. The new school we are told "is not hampered by a fixed policy and consequently proposes to adapt itself to the needs of the students with the single object of building up an institution which will impart high ideals of the law as a profession and a training which will be of service in maintaining those ideals." This has the true ring to it. High ideals are what the lawyers need—high ideals so firmly imbedded that they cannot be dislodged even by the forces that are encountered in a district attorney's office which teaches by example that men accused of crime must be convicted by hook or by crook. These high ideals are to be implanted during a period of three years or four years, (at the option of the student) between the hours of 7:30 or 9:30 in the evening, six days in the week. So confident are the members of the faculty of their ability to instil high ideals in this limited period by their patented, rush process, that "no examination is required for entrance to the school and no absolute standard of scholarship has been fixed for entrance." It is the policy of the school "to admit only those who have the equivalent of a high school education and who are of good moral character." How these matters are to be determined without an examination the prospectus does not disclose. This is probably one of the secrets of the system. Offhand I should say that it is easier under this system to satisfy the aspirations of an energetic and devoted spirit than to learn to play tennis or bridge. It is evident from the prospectus that we are advancing rapidly. In the old days it was supposed that before you could begin to make a good lawyer it was necessary to give a young man a liberal education, to broaden his mind with history and philosophy, and familiarize him with the secret recesses of the human heart that he might become acquainted with the whole moral world and thus discover the abstract reason of all law, but now under the wise tuition of learned prosecuting attorneys in the brief space of twelve hours a week for about two hundred weeks, a high school graduate with the weakest brain that ever a scalp covered can absorb law and ideals enough to become a Clarendon or a Bacon. The famous Code of Justinian was perfected in four years, the Code Napoleon was finished in four months—there's magic in the number.

TO POLITICAL CANDIDATES

Make your campaign more effective by addressing voters directly with individually typewritten, personal letters. Let me help you to win.

L. A. IRELAND
Manager The Multographers
Kearny 4956 334 Phelan Building

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

Write to the Surbrug Company for samples and prices.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

The Ramona Craze

A centenarian Indian woman in Southern California has been attracting enough attention to herself—real news being scarce—to warrant mention in the press dispatches as a cousin of Ramona. She is only one of a series, however, for there is scarcely a year that some "original" does not materialize, and there have been already nearly as many Ramonas as there are authentic highboys and pieces of genuine crockery that came over on the Mayflower. Only a few years ago a son of Ramona was married at the little church at San Jacinto, and his mother, a squaw of the Coahuilla reservation, garnered a neat little fortune from the sale of her lace and baskets at good round prices to the credulous tourists who were anxious to secure "literary" souvenirs. Down near Riverside there was—may still be—a settler, who was

LOUIS BLERIOT

And the monoplane in which he crossed the English Channel from Calais to Dover, flying 21 miles in 23 minutes.

solicitously concerned to introduce himself to every stranger as a man of note. His name was Sam Temple and he and no other was the original of the Jim Temple who shot Alessandro. Sam didn't charge a cent for the information, either, but his wife was a fortune-teller and he gently steered the curiosity seeker in her direction. It cost only twenty-five cents to have one's fortune told by Mrs. Sam, and who could resist? "People always go away pleased. I insure love, fortune and fame. Only twenty-five cents." The descendants of the old California dons used to wish many a time and oft that either "Ramona" had never been written or else that something dire might befall the horde of tourists and shriners who would insist on pushing themselves into private houses, over-running the gardens and addressing all sorts of impertinent queries to inoffensive people whom they stared out of countenance on the theory that they must all be Ramonas. As a matter of fact there never was a genuine prototype of the fictional character. The probabilities are that the character was suggested by "Bright Eyes," a woman of the Omaha tribe, one of the most civilized of the aborigines, who attracted the attention of Oliver Wendell Holmes and other Boston literary lights in the early eighties by her eloquent plea for justice in behalf of her people. "Bright Eyes" was the daughter of a chief. She contributed to several magazines, more especially a series of papers on Indian child life which appeared in St. Nicholas. Through the influence of Boston philanthropists she was sent to London where she created something of a sensation in a series of drawing room lectures. It was on her return from that enterprise that Helen Hunt Jackson met her, just after the publication of "A Century of Dishonor." That was in 1881. Then the author was appointed a special commissioner for the Mission Indians, and in 1883 "Bright Eyes" made the trip to California with her. "Ramona" was published in 1884, and in 1885 Mrs. Jackson died in San Francisco. "Bright Eyes" married a white man named Tibbles, who was once nominated on the Prohibition ticket for president, and until her death she lived in Nebraska. It is an interesting circumstance to note that Mrs. Jackson had her Indian romance in her mind for four years before it was written. While studying the subject of Indian missions in the Astor Library she became saturated with the romance of the Mission of San Juan Bautista, and it was there that she meant to lay her scenes and write her book. She might have done so had she and her sister been less secretive about their intentions, but they expected liberal payment to cover everything. Mrs. Jackson fixed her heart on the old home of Don Jose Castro as her residence and a portion of the wing of the Mission as a studio. The old caretaker of the house was to eliminate herself, and Father Closa, in charge of the Mission, was to accept the rental and ask no questions. For some reason this course excited suspicion, and they were refused what would have been gladly offered to them had they been more candid. Twenty-four hours they spent at San Juan, instead of the months they had planned to remain there, and "Ramona" was written elsewhere.

Wilde Among the Notable Dead

At brief intervals since the death of Oscar Wilde, whose remains were removed last week from Bagneux cemetery to Pere-la-Chaise, currency has been given to the report that the poet was living among strangers under an assumed name. According to the authors of this story a pauper was buried under the name of Wilde in the Bagneux cemetery. The truth respecting Wilde has been told by Robert Ross, his friend and literary executor, the man who stood by the disgraced poet to the end, and now I have the testimony from the pen of a friend, an attorney, who recently met him in Paris. He writes me under date of July 8th: "Robert Ross has been living at this hotel and I have had several pleasant conversations with him. As you know since Wilde's death Ross has been paying off Wilde's debts. When all direct obligations were cleared off he decided to have the remains removed from Bagneux cemetery where they now are and reinterred in the cemetery of Pere-la-Chaise, the burial place of the illustrious French. It was necessary to have an expensive monument there and this Ross could not afford, as he is not a man of wealth. He started out to get up a subscription among Wilde's admirers, but this is no longer necessary, for an English lady whose name he will not give has donated £3,000 for the purpose. Ross came to Paris to arrange for the removal of the remains. It is now certain that Wilde's

J. C. WILSON
BROKER
Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

J. M. Jacobi & Co.
S. W. COR. MONTGOMERY & SUTTER STS
Individuality is always found in the best tailored garments
OUR SPRING AND SUMMER CLOTHING MERITS YOUR ATTENTION.

remains are to find fitting resting place, for in the Perela-Chaise cemetery are buried Alfred de Musset, Racine, Moliere, Benjamin Constant, Balzac, and Thiers as well as a host of other celebrities such as Marshal Ney, Boulanger, Bellini, Chopin and Rossini. I made a pilgrimage to Bagneux where Wilde's remains now are and I saw his grave. Ross bought this plot at a time when Wilde's body would have been placed in the potter's field had not some friend come forward. Afterwards he bought a small tombstone, and had flowers planted on the grave. Bagneux, is not as I have heard stated, a pauper cemetery. On the contrary it is one of the good burial grounds of Paris. I have also visited the Hotel D'Alsace and passed some time in the room in which Wilde died. The hotel-keeper discovered long ago that there was money to be made out of tourists and a tip of a franc is required of each visitor. The hotel is about fourth rate and is located in a narrow street at the back of the Louvre. It is in the center of a block, a dingy, three-story building, and looks just the place at which a down-at-the-heels Bohemian would seek cheap accommodations. The room is kept exactly as it was when Wilde died in it—furniture, the deathbed and all. It is reached by climbing a narrow, winding stair from a dark low hall, the room itself being at the end of the building and overlooking a little yard. It is really a double-room, but the whole thing is not the size of an ordinary decent living apartment. The hotel people tell all about the last days of the unfortunate poet—how terribly ill he was, with fierce pains in his head that almost drove him insane. Ross was with him in his last illness, and one afternoon, just before the end, he summoned a priest who administered the last rites of the church."

The Slanderer of the Bench

Sensible as I am of his quotidian infirmities and the unfortunate habits of his mind, not to mention anything else, I almost sympathize at times with that choleric, peevish person, Judge Frank H. Dunne, whose splenetic humors cause him to rage and fret and rant to a somewhat brutish degree. I realize that Judge Dunne is more to be pitied than pelted; to be pondered more in sorrow than in anger, for I conceive that it has been his misfortune to be sacrificed to the exigencies of political ambition and the necessities of personal unscrupulousness, and I am persuaded that he has spent so many bad quarters of an hour with himself that he is well nigh distraught and very much distempered. At the same time, however inclined one may be to charity and forbearance, one must deeply deplore the presence of a man of Judge Dunne's temperament on the bench, for whatever is said by him in his official capacity carries more or less of the weight of authority, and consequently a man of his sour temper and virulent mind is at all times pregnant with evil. It is bad enough to have a common scold on the bench, but to have a common slanderer in the exalted seat of Justice is a prodigious calamity. When slander takes the form of an arrow shot in the dark it is most mischievous, but when it is subjected to no caution, tied down to no restraint, and in a measure dignified by official status it is like the pestilence that rages at noonday. To these observations I have been impelled by Judge Dunne's sweeping indictment of the whole medical profession of this city. It is not my purpose to defend the medical profession against the brutal assault made upon it by Judge Dunne, but I feel that an incident so absolutely conclusive of the depravity of Judge Dunne's mind should not be permitted to pass without comment.

His Diatribe

The daily papers have recorded what occurred in Judge Dunne's Court on the occasion of his outbreak, but they have somewhat tempered the violent language which he employed. He had been asked by an attorney to fix the bail in the case of a man who had been convicted of a felony and who had appealed from that judgment. "I do not believe," said Judge Dunne, "that a man who has been convicted of a crime should be admitted to bail, but should be kept in custody unless it appears that confinement so seriously impairs his health that his life is endangered." The judge was told that a doctor had certified that the defendant was suffering from a lung affection. Thereupon Judge Dunne expressed himself thus: "I am very certain that any prisoner in the county jail can get all of the physicians in San Francisco to give a certificate of this character if he has money enough to hire them; money is all he needs, nothing else." This is a pretty tough gratuitous insult to fling at the members of a profession that has the most sacred claims on public confidence and esteem. The sentiment which it embodies is shocking to the sense of justice and repugnant to every instinct of decency. That it should have been uttered from the bench is of course galling to the members of the medical profession, not all of whom perhaps have been cognizant hitherto of the mental caliber of the author of the insolent diatribe. Perhaps some of them have forgotten that Dunne is the man who drooled weak venom on the appelate courts some months ago. If so, from one standpoint, perhaps, it is not to be regretted that Judge Dunne revealed himself at one sitting to the whole medical profession. The quicker Judge Dunne extends the circle of his acquaintance the better. If everybody in town knew Judge Dunne intimately he would be harmless, and the same is true with reference to his cronies. Doubtless there are many doctors in town who were in sympathy, through ignorance of men, motives and methods, with the great moral crusade with which we have been pestered, and who were very much in need of the glimpse which they have been given of one man who is most eloquently typical of the whole malevolent band of reformers.

He Doesn't Like Galwey

As I have said, it is not my purpose to enter upon a task which is quite unnecessary—that of defending the doctors of San Francisco against the emanations of Judge

TOWNSEND'S
CALIFORNIA GLACÈ FRUITS AND CANDIES
27 Years in Palace Hotel Building
All Orders Given Prompt Attention at
46 MARKET STREET
Phone Douglas 4814
Factory, 117 SAN JOSE AVE. Phone Mission 378
Also at News Stands of the Fairmont and St. Francis Hotels

Santa Fe
NEW TRAIN
Via the Santa Fe to Chicago via Kansas City
EAST
Leave San Francisco daily 7:15 a. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m. This is in addition to our two other trains leaving San Francisco and Oakland 8:00 and 10:00 p. m. Also New Train to Fresno. Leaving San Francisco 4:00 p. m.; Leave Oakland 4:05 p. m. This in addition to our THREE other trains leaving San Francisco daily at 7:15 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m.
For detail information phone or call on Jas. B. Duffy, 673 Market Street, San Francisco
T. Love, Market Street Ferry Depot, San Francisco
J. J. Warner, 1112 Broadway, Oakland

amuck among the doctors he was especially incensed against Dr. John Galwey who had certified that one Halsey was physically unable to go to trial. I think it worth while to take a cursory glance at this somewhat prominent representative of the medical profession. Dr. Galwey is in a measure typical of the profession to which Judge Dunne attributes sordid aims and which he characterizes as corrupt and mercenary. So distinguished is he for probity of character that whenever in the past ten years a reform movement has been started in this city the demand invariably has been made that he be nominated for Mayor. He has declined to enter politics because of his devotion to his profession, and though he has the largest practice in San Francisco it is a fact beyond question that the great bulk of it produces no revenue. In other words, Dr. John Galwey prescribes for the poor and sends them no bills. There are hundreds of poor families in San Francisco that could never pay Dr. Galwey for the services he has rendered them, and they have given him naught but their love; no other compensation has he asked. In the service of the poor he has undermined his health and suffered great hardships, and by the poor he is exalted among men for the nobility of his character. But Judge Dunne has no confidence in him. An incident illustrative of Dr. Galwey's character came under my observation some years ago. One day he performed an operation on a poor woman in one of the local hospitals. It was a most serious operation, calling for much skill, much labor, much care. It was understood at the hospital that the woman had no money, but Dr. Galwey saw to it that every possible provision was made for her comfort. In the afternoon he telephoned to inquire as to her temperature. It was satisfactory. He made the same inquiry in the evening about eight o'clock. Again the report was satisfactory. At midnight the nurses were amazed to find Dr. Galwey by his patient's side, taking her temperature. So foolish, they thought, and they said, for him to come all the way to the hospital at that hour of night when he might have telephoned. It was foolish, perhaps, but Dr. Galwey, the representative of a mercenary profession, was so deeply concerned for his patient that he would not go to bed until he had satisfied himself of the poor woman's condition.

The Quality of Mercy

After regaining the composure that is becoming to me and thinking the matter over philosophically I come to the conclusion that Judge Dunne's paroxysm does not call for reprobation so much as commiseration. At the same time, taking a calm and unprejudiced view of the matter, I see no reason why Judge Dunne should be dissuaded from throwing conniption fits since, though they serve not to edify, they are at least instructive. Going back to the colloquy between Judge Dunne and the lawyer I find that the obiter dicta with reference to the medical profession was occasioned by a motion to admit to bail a man who had been convicted of a crime in Judge Dunne's court. By this circumstance I am reminded that it is in the discretion of our State courts to admit a man to bail after he has been convicted of a crime, and that our stern and uncompromising judges invariably resolve their discretion against the prisoner. It is thus that these immaculate and unmerciful individuals clothed in the majesty of the law attest their hatred of all unfortunates that come involuntarily within range of their dreadful jurisdiction. But are we, the dear people, heartily in favor of administering justice in this inexorable fashion? I hope not. This is not precisely the kind of justice which our forefathers conceived that they had fought and bled for, and they took a very wise precaution against the species of cruelty which is indulged in our State courts. Knowing that the verdict of a jury is not the end of the matter; that verdicts are often the result either of the misconduct, ignorance or prejudice of a judge, and that the guilt or innocence of an accused person is not properly determined until the case has been reviewed on appeal, they made it obligatory on trial judges to admit persons to bail pending appeal. This is the practice today in our Federal courts, but in the State courts the judge in his discretion always sends convicted men to jail. Furthermore he takes his time about settling the bill of exceptions, and owing to the dilatoriness and laziness and ignorance of the Dunnes of our Superior Court innocent men and women have languished for years behind the bars of the County Jail. Yes, in the enlightened twentieth century, more than one hundred years after the French Revolution, in the bare, unsanitary cells of our local jail, men and women whose innocence has since been proved, pined and withered in solitary confinement entirely as the result of the discretion of such judges as Lawlor and Dunne. Is it not about time to curb the discretion of these pompous little men?

Mrs. Gaily (at a ball)—Are you enjoying yourself, Morton? Gaily—Pretty well. So far no one has stepped on my corns.

England's Alarm Over Airships

There has been more or less mild fun poked at the extreme anxiety England has felt over the prospect of German invasion by means of airships. But this flight of the Frenchman, Bleriot, across the navy-guarded English channel in the time it takes a ferryboat to cross San Francisco bay, has awakened the public mind to the fact that England has considerable cause for alarm. Remember, the English channel is only twenty-one miles wide—it takes but two hours to go from France to Great Britain by boat. And England is a small country. We, with our boundless distances, find it hard to realize the compactness of an empire that is concentrated within an island scores of which could be wedged into the United

FOR THE BABY
BROOKS
HOMOEOPATHIC COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP
25 CENTS AT DRUGSTORES

BORDEN'S
EAGLE BRAND
CONDENSED
MILK

The Standard for Over 50 Years Proven the Best for Nursery and Household

See that the label bears the name of
BORDEN'S CONDENSED MILK CO.
"Leaders of Quality" New York

States. No wonder there is a feeling of insecurity, a sort of realization of the imminence of being pushed clear off the map. The empire of England is world-wide; but the island itself—well, its diminutiveness may best be illustrated by an old story. A Yankee was traveling by train in England, and called the guard's attention to the excessive speed. The guard was not at all consoling. "If you are afraid we shall run off the track," he said, "you can get off and walk." Oh," said the American, "that's

IN GAY PARIS

This is a Parisian artist's impression of a somewhat extreme display of lingerie. In Los Angeles an ordinance has been passed forbidding ladies to elevate their skirts more than eight inches from the pavement. A Parisian artist would starve in Los Angeles.

not what's worrying me; I'm afraid you'll run off your darned little island into the ocean." But the queer fact remains that England, while feeling alarmed over aerial invasion, has done little to develop a sky-navy. Germany has appropriated nearly $2,000,000 for this purpose, while a popular fund of more than a million has been collected. France has done far less, but still is immeasurably ahead of England in this regard. However, Britain is waking up, and proposes to spend a lot of money on aeroplanes and dirigible balloons. It is characteristic of England that however slow she may be in the matter of radical innovations, when she is once stirred she does the thing thoroughly. It is the irony of fate that the prize of $5,000 that Bleriot won had been offered by a London paper. When it comes down to distance traversed and the time spent in the air, the Wrights have accomplished more than Bleriot. But as was most natural in a Frenchman, the latter's feat was brilliantly spectacular; and in addition, it was something of a history-maker. This country is doing pretty well in the way of encouraging aeronautics, and Curtis and the Wrights are struggling hard for the prize offered. General James Allen, chief of the signal service of the army, seems rather dissatisfied with the progress made, and thinks it it about time we were getting practical results out of the experiments. Let him be patient. The airship business is coming along wonderfully, and now that the experimental stage has been in a large measure passed, we may look for very rapid development.

Local Color Seekers

The seeker after what is rather indefinitely dubbed "local color" strays into devious paths sometimes, and sometimes into jail, as happened in the case of Miss Helena Castle of Boston, who made too close an acquaintance with the unsavory portion of our town while after material for a novel. Miss Castle elected to do her slumming in a sort of hybrid attire that led a policeman who knew nothing of color save the crimson of the Tenderloin to suspect that she was a man masquerading in woman's clothing, so she was arrested, to her intense indignation. Being released on proving that she was a member of the gentle—but in her case not genteel—sex, she sought further adventure in the Tenderloin. In a quarrel with a wayfarer in the early hours of the morning she forgot for a moment that the pen is the mightiest weapon known, and used her fist instead, landing on the unoffending man's jaw—and landing again in jail. From behind the bars she stated that she was annoyed, grieved and shocked at the treatment that she had received in San Francisco, where strong-minded and strong-armed women in search of local color are not permitted to roam the streets of nights walloping unsuspecting citizens in

TAXICABS

(Genuine RENAULT Cars)

PACIFIC TAXIMETER CAB COMPANY

Solicits your patronage of its equipment of imported Renault Taxicabs and will show its appreciation by prompt and reliable service. * * * * *

TELEPHONE

FRANKLIN 4848

Private Exchange connecting all Departments

MAIN STATION AND GENERAL OFFICES, 1355-1363 BUSH STREET

FAY C. BEAL, General Manager.

Gas In Tin Pails

If it were practicable for a housewife to come to our gas manufacturing works and buy a pail of gas, we would need no city franchise to deliver our product.

We would not have to make a large investment in street mains, service pipes and meters, nor would we have to employ a force to inspect and read the meters.

Under these conditions we could sell GAS at a much lower price than we now sell GAS SERVICE.

Were it possible to handle gas in the way that groceries and coal are handled, we could install an automobile express larger than the largest trucking concern in this city, for a ridiculous fraction of the cost of our distributing system.

But forced to accept certain "things as they are," we have to invest more money in our gas DISTRIBUTING equipment than for our MANUFACTURING apparatus.

San Francisco Gas and Electric Company

Copyright, 1909

the jaw. It is a grievous condition of affairs, but unless Miss Castle can demonstrate that such conduct would be tolerated in the city of the sacred bean-pot, whence she hails, I do not see that she has any just reason to complain about San Francisco.

Literary Pretenders

But literary people, with whom she classes herself, have plenty of cause for complaint against Miss Helena Castle and others of her ilk. It is because of the bizarre adventures of such as she that the world at large regards writers with a grain or two of suspicion, classing them with freaks that are to be mingled with most cautiously

BEERBOHM TREE

The English actor who was recently knighted by King Edward if at all. Take it from me that people who noisily call themselves "literary" are for the most part pretenders. They are of the class that will lionize a real writer, eager to bask in reflected glory. They organize themselves into clubs at which they enthusiastically discuss each others' work. They write reams of stuff with which they pester editors to distraction. The real literary people go quietly along and keep their mouths shut, making a living without making a noise. And there is nothing about their appearance to distinguish them from ordinary folk. One of the cleverest I know looks like a truck-driver and dresses like a sailor on a holiday. He avoids literary societies as he would a pest—the adulation of would-be writers and lion-chasers does not attract him. There are plenty more writers of the same general type, and they have a wholesome contempt for "freaks" whether they are genuine literary people or pretenders. They are brought into disrepute by pseudo-novelists who get into jail, and by established writers who draw public attention to themselves through their silly eccentricities. For the good of the profession it is a matter of congratulation that Miss Castle of Boston has not published anything. Let us hope that she will be kept too busy avoiding jail to gather enough local color for a novel.

Gladys—What's the difference between a dress and a gown, dear?

Myrtle—About sixty-five dollars.

The King's Hat

Nothing has so cheered me for a long time as the news which comes from England that King Edward has made a public appearance in a frock coat and a soft Homburg hat instead of wearing the conventional silk headpiece. For a long time I have grieved over the incongruity of men's dress in this city, my artistic soul being jarred nearly from its foundations by the combinations of felt hats and Prince Alberts. I see now that I was wrong and the people whom I supposed were violating the canons of fashion were right. The king has confirmed their choice. They were merely a little in advance, and now they have the laugh on London, where the silk hat, long the badge of respectability, is dying out simply because the king has metaphorically given it a swift kick in the direction of oblivion. But there are other little points of nicety in dress which I wish he would settle. I really cannot believe it proper to wear a golf cap with evening clothes. Mind, I am not attempting to dictate, for I may be as wrong in this as I was regarding the frock coat and soft hat combination. Yet there is something jarring about it, especially when it is accompanied with a pink shirt and a bow tie of white satin with blue forget-me-nots painted on it. It may be that the fact that the flowers are hand painted saves the costume from being an evidence of gaucherie; still, I cannot help being troubled over what seems an incongruity.

Reporter Turns Sailor

Grant Overton, who did the dramatic work on the Examiner for a time, and then was made a feature writer, has temporarily abandoned journalism for the sea. On Friday of last week he sailed on the Wayfarer, a three-masted windjammer, for Liverpool by way of Cape Horn. Moreover, he went as a common sailor, signing articles. The journey will occupy from four to six months, according to weather, and during that time Overton should get a pretty good knowledge of the workings of a ship, which is one of the objects of his journey. Another reason for his going was that he wanted experience, which he lacked, having gone directly from college to a newspaper office. And a third thing that led to this step was that he thought himself harshly treated on the Examiner. Overton showed brilliant flashes sometimes, then again his copy would not be up to the standard. As a consequence it was trimmed considerably, therefore his resignation. His employers tried, by drawing horrible pictures of life at sea, to dissuade him, but Overton was determined to go. Dan Sweeney, the artist, and one or two other friends followed him out to the Golden Gate in a launch, and all suffered horribly from seasickness, which robbed them of any feeling of envy they might have had of Overton's prospects of life on the rolling deep.

MISSION SAN JOSE

This cut shows the original Mission of which only the foundation remains. It was used in constructing the present building. It is near the Anderson Academy, at Irvington.

"There," said the tailor; "that suit certainly fits you perfectly."
"Yes, indeed, you may justly feel proud of that," replied the customer. "It's a credit to you."
"Well—er—I hope you won't forget it's a debit to you."

Funny French Duels

A correspondent sends me from Paris an account of a duel that took place there recently, and of another (a syndicate of duels, rather) that might have occurred had not the challenged man swallowed his words. As to sanguinary results, one affair was just as bloody as the other. The duel that might have been had as one of its principals Francois Flameng, the well known painter. In a cafe one evening the name of a certain paper was mentioned, when the artist told in a loud voice and in very uncomplimentary language just what he thought of the sheet. Sacre! There happened to be at a nearby table a member of the staff. Striding over he presented his card to Flameng and said his seconds would wait upon the painter. Flameng refused to take the card. The seconds came anyway, and there was gory suggestiveness in their manner. Not only the honor of the paper but of the writer for it must be satisfied. But M. Flameng didn't want to fight. In fact, he said on second thought, he had the highest regard for the paper in question, and his regard for the man who had challenged him was exceeded only by his concern for his own skin. By this apology he escaped fighting all the members of the staff in succession. Even the foreman, a quarrelsome fellow, was seriously considering calling out the painter, and the linotype men needed little encouragement. When you insult a paper in Paris every employee including the office boy yells for blood. The other affair was a real duel so far as the encounter was concerned. In the senate one day M. Ciallaux, Minister of Finance, was struck in the face by M. Charles Blos, a former Deputy. The usual challenge followed, and the meeting took place one afternoon at the Artillery Polygon of Vincennes. Standing twenty-five paces apart, the two men fired one shot apiece at each other, and both missed. Refusing to be reconciled, the principals turned their backs on each other and strode majestically off the field.

McCarthy Causes Anxiety

The politicians are coming to the conclusion that P. H. McCarthy is a force to be reckoned with in the coming municipal campaign. Two years ago when there were many union men filled with resentment against their party leaders because of the humiliation that had been brought upon them by their representatives in public office McCarthy ran for mayor and received nearly eighteen thousand votes. He was badly beaten by Taylor, but his defeat was what might have been expected in view of the reaction against union labor politics and the dissensions that threatened the disruption of his party. That he was defeated by a large majority was not surprising inasmuch as the Democratic candidate was snowed under and the bulk of the opposition vote went to Taylor who had seized the popular imagination. But conditions have undergone a great change. Now there is reaction against reform—the kind of reform that we have been dosed with since the noisy patriots took hold of things and gave the Sutter street cars a new lease of life. It is apparent that there is a sentiment in favor

A HUNTER WHISKEY
HIGH BALL
IS REFRESHING
HENRY CAMPE & CO., INC.,
Distributors for California and Nevada
San Francisco, Cal.

LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST
DIAMONDS AND GEMS
BALDWIN
JEWELRY CO.
1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

ASK FOR
BLACK AND WHITE
SCOTCH WHISKEY
IT IS THE BEST
NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

Stella—What is the rule of three?
Bella—That one ought to go home.

of discouraging cant and hypocrisy and making the city a more agreeable place of residence, and for some reason the notion that McCarthy will introduce a more refreshing atmosphere is so much in evidence that the machine politicians are somewhat fearful.

Baby ate nine angle worms,
Several million fever germs,
A caterpillar, and a fat,
Contented grub on top of that.
Yes, his tastes are strange, that's sure—
Baby's such an epicure!

The President at Church

The little Lutheran church in Washington, D. C., that is presided over by Rev. John M. Shick, writes a correspondent, doesn't draw the congregation that it used to. This isn't because of any deterioration in the quality of Rev. Shick's sermons, but on account of the fact that President Taft and ex-President Roosevelt are of different religious faiths. Every Sunday while he was in Washington Roosevelt attended the little Dutch Reformed Lutheran Church referred to, but President Taft, being a Unitarian, goes to All Souls' Church, of which Rev. Ulysses Grant Baker Pierce is the pastor. Taft has attended this church during all the time he has been in Washington, and comes and goes like any ordinary member of the congregation. The fact that Taft attended the church one Sunday as a plain American citizen and came the next Sunday as President of the United States has made no difference in the sermons of Dr. Pierce, who is as unaffected as ever. He and the president are old friends.

Minister Once Sporting Editor

Rev. Pierce is quite a character in himself, and has led a varied life. His father was a Free Babtist, and the son was brought up in that faith. While at a Baptist college he added to his income by writing editorials for a weekly paper and soliciting subscriptions for it. Later he became its sporting editor. After leaving this college he went to Harvard, and on completing his divinity course there was married to Miss Florence Lonsbury of Michigan, herself a regularly ordained Unitarian minister. They had been ordained together at the Hillsdale Theological College in Michigan. Rev. Pierce got a church first in Iowa, then came to California, settling in Pomona, where he had three churches to look after. His next move was to Arizona, where he was a preacher among the cowboys, who called him "Bishop." When he first went among them a spokesman for the others said to him: "Say, Bishop, we want to ask you just one favor, and that is, please don't go to preaching on one particular subject Every parson that comes down here talks about the same thing. We know the story backward, forward and every other old way, and another thing—it always gives a cowboy the 'willies.'" Dr. Pierce inquired what the tabooed subject might be, and was told it was the story of the prodigal son. So the "Bishop" carefully avoided any reference to the popular Bible story, and things went along all right thereafter. Dr. Pierce has been in Washington for eight years.

DIVINE
NECTAREOUS JUICE

Most Fitting
Finale to the Festive Feast

LIQUEUR

PÈRES CHARTREUX

—GREEN AND YELLOW—

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafes,
Batjer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for United States.

The Anglo & London Paris National Bank

Of San Francisco

Successor of The London Paris National Bank of San Francisco, The Anglo-California Bank, Limited.

Northeast Cor. Pine and Sansome Sts., San Francisco

Sig. Greenebaum, Pres.; I. Steinhart, Chairman of Finance Committee; H. Fleishhacker, V.-Pres. and Man.; Alden Anderson, V.-Pres. and Sec.; Jos. Friedlander, V.-Pres.; R. Altschul, Cashier; C. F. Hunt, Asst., Cashier; A. Hochstein, Asst. Cashier; F. E. Beck, Asst. Cashier.

Capital $4,000,000.00
Surplus and Undivided Profits..... 1,500,000.00

We offer our customers every facility consistent with good banking and invite new accounts.

San Francisco Business College

CORNER MARKET, EDDY AND POWELL STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Newly equipped in quartered oak. New location in center of business district. In close touch with the great opportunities for well trained young people in the new San Francisco.

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

Eureka Stoves and Ranges
Kitchen Utensils
Hotel Kitchen Outfits a Specialty
"Alaska" and "Opal" Refrigerators
Mantels, Grates, Tiles

NOW LOCATED AT 557-563 MARKET ST., opp. Junction Sutter and Sansome Sts.

PHONE DOUGLAS 4640

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy.

Stocks: There is very little to say in the matter of news or course of values during the past six days. Fluctuations of securities have been inconsequential and the volume of trading has been unimportant or about normal. With the greater part of the speculative element throughout the country bullish on stock as a result of very favorable crop and business outlook, and the distribution not in progress over a month or so, it is certain that more stock is being carried in Wall Street for public account than for a very long period, hence the market is vulnerable for a setback or a period of minor recessions. It now appears as if the tariff measure will become a law shortly and on this factor bankers are likely to take advantage of the favorable sentiment produced hereby and sell stocks. We doubt if the steel dividend is changed from the present basis next Tuesday. If three per cent basis is made, the stock is high enough—hence some small recession is likely. We think that much conservatism in the market transactions should prevail and a lightening of committments in the event of an important setback in values. Opportunity should exist to take back securities on such recession.

Wheat: There was no mistaking the trend of the market during the past six days, and at the close of the week prices are at the lowest ebb. The news has all been on the side of the seller, and, in fact, it was so much so that holders were forced to liquidate long lines of wheat accumulated at much higher prices. The weather was the principal factor, and, of course, not only was it a big help to the growing spring wheat crop, but it has made it possible to harvest and market the winter wheat crop without further delay. The big cash premiums that were being paid at all markets encouraged farmers to consign their wheat, and there was a rush to deliver the new wheat; receipts were so large that the cash market became demoralized and the bears forced the futures down without much opposition. The foreign markets were also inclined to be weak, and readilly followed our decline, sending more favorable crop reports from all exporting countries. Russia was said to be offering wheat freely at big discount, and shipments from Argentine and Australia were more liberal. The drought in Argentine also partly relieved. Wheat in the northwest and especially in Canada was never better, and barring any unfavorable news from now on, Canada will be a big factor this year, and it looks as if prices would have to seek a lover level to correspond to conditions.

Cotton: After one of the most exciting weeks witnessed since the days of Daniel J. Sully, the cotton market has finally settled down around the price levels that prevailed July 2d, on reading of the Bureau report at that time. Weather in the Eastern Belt has shown some improvement and Texas had moderately heavy rains along the Gulf Coast and south of San Antonio, but we doubt if there has been any improvement in the condition of the crop as a whole since June 25th, even though it is said that all states outside of Texas have improved. We reason that the improvement outside of Texas has not been great because of the probability of the uplands having suffered from abnormally high temperatures in the Mississippi Valley, in some instances from drought, while Texas prospects have been blighted to such an extent that the only good that could come to the crop in that state, in event of general heavy rain, would be to prevent further deterioration, and in that case the weevil would become more active. Outside of Texas, only 9,800,000 bales were made last year, and it stands to reason that not more than 9,200,000 will be made this year, perhaps less than 9,000,000, if Mississippi and Alabama alone are to lose 600,000 compared with a year ago; and as Texas prospects have been made so unfavorable by the excessive heat and lack of moisture, we are too consistent to believe otherwise than that the next season's supply will prove to be inadequate to meet the world's requirements. If Texas makes 3,500,000, and the concensus of opinion now is that she will not make more than 3,000,000, the chances are that the total crop would fall short of the demand by about 1,000,000 bales. The monthly condition report will be issued at nine o'clock, Pacific time, next Monday, and meantime private statisticians will issue data enough to enable the public to forecast the figures, which from present appearances we should expect to be very bullish.

GIERSBERGER WINES

The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.

THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY

Phone Oakland 2510 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

HOTEL CUMBERLAND

Broadway at 54th Street

NEW YORK

Near 50th St. Subway Station and 53d St. Elevated

Ideal Location, Near Theatres, Shops, and Central Park.

New and Fireproof

Strictly First Class in Every Respect

Rates Reasonable

$2.50 with bath, and up.

All Hardwood Floors and Oriental Rugs.

10 Minutes' Walk to 20 Theatres

Excellent Restaurant Prices Moderate

Send for Booklet

HARRY P. STIMSON, formerly with Hotel Imperial

R. J. BINGHAM, formerly with Hotel Woodward

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487 R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and New York

Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

Mrs. Martin Shocked

"The Merry Widow" has caused much discussion. There were those who approved and those who considered it shocking and altogether unfit for youthful eyes. At a recent card party the subject of the play came up again, and one of the young matrons began to laugh. "I saw it, and I thought it was very good," she said. "It did not shock me at all, but I understood that Mrs. Eleanor Martin wanted to retire in the midst of it. She was hostess at a box party and when the Merry Widow waltz began she turned to a friend. 'This is no play for me to see,' she exclaimed, and only her duty as hostess, they add, kept her from sweeping out to her carriage. She was thoroughly scandalized."

MRS. JOHN BROOK KAUFMANN

She was formerly Katherine Metcalf, and was married last week.

Society Names Linked

Since Anna Peters emerged from the schoolroom and made her initial social bow, she has perhaps had to her credit more admirers than the majority of girls. Her name has been persistently coupled with army and navy swains and those on the inner track also aver that there was more than one civilian, besides Frank de Lisle, who fell a victim to the attractive little Stockton maid's charms. And now, if rumor speaks true, Anna herself has succumbed at last and the announcement is to be given to the dear public very shortly. Douglas Grant of Burlingame is named as the fortunate man. He is the son of Joe Grant by his former marriage, and is still very youthful to be contemplating a matrimonial plunge. He has always been a great favorite with girls, so if report is true, there will be a few heart burnings, the more so as this is but another instance of a Stockton girl coming down and walking off with one of our most eligible men. But—well the fact is Rumor is not always to be depended upon. In this instance, having traced Rumor to its inception, I am somewhat sceptical. I have learned that some days ago young Grant and Miss Peters were seen in a jeweler's store inspecting a tray of solitaires and that it was on the strength of this incident that the gossips got busy and sent the news of the engagment buzzing over the wires that lead to Pacific avenue. I have heard it suggested that the young people were only playing a joke on their friends. Douglas Grant is now on his way to Alaska and Miss Peters says she isn't engaged—yet.

THE DUCHESS OF MANCHESTER

Before her marriage the Duchess of Manchester, who is now one of the leaders of English society, was Miss Helen Zimmerman.

Another Rumor

Still another engagement rumor is afloat and they say the prospective groom is the one who has let the cat out of the bag. Some one told me the other day that Arthur Cheeseborough inadvertantly let slip the fact that he confidently expected shortly to join the ranks of the benedicts. He mentioned no name, I believe, but as the

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

Go to Whigham's when you want that baby photograph taken
Permanent Location 739 MARKET ST., Opp. Grant Ave.

jubilant remark was made at the club subsequent to his recent visit to Santa Barbara, the wiseacres who claim to know everything confidently assert that felicitations should be extended to Elizabeth Newhall. If gossip rings true, the news will doubtless be made public the early part of September when the Newhalls will re-open their home here for the winter.

Society Surprised

Society was decidedly jarred last week when the news came that Miss Florence Breckenridge had broken her engagement with Dr. E. B. Stein of Berlin, to whom she was to have been married in Paris early in September. It was Thomas Hesketh, eldest son of Sir Thomas Hesketh, and Lady Hesketh (formerly Flora Sharon), who won her away from the rather elderly physician. Young Hesketh is a nephew of Frederick Sharon, the stepfather of Miss Breckenridge. Mrs. Fred Sharon was formerly Miss Louise Tevis, youngest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Tevis and sister of Dr. Harry Tevis. Mr. and Mrs. Sharon will return to California about November, and if the report be true Miss Breckenridge will accompany them. Miss Breckenridge's fiance is about twenty-eight years of age. No date has been set yet for the wedding.

Romance Recalled

The engagement of Lady Hesketh's son brings to mind her own romantic engagement and the brilliant wedding which took place some twenty-nine years ago at Belmont, the magnificent country home of Senator William Sharon. The only bridesmaid was Miss Bessie Sedgwick, who is now the widow of T. T. Dargie, brother of William Dargie of the Oakland Tribune. Love at first sight was the result of the initial meeting of pretty Flora Sharon and Sir Thomas Hesketh. Miss Sharon and Bessie Sedgwick were going up in the elevator of the old Palace Hotel one morning, and Sir Thomas was a fellow passenger. He took one look at petite, vivacious Flora Sharon, and immediately succumbed to her charms—just like you read about in a Duchess novel. He inquired about the attractive California girl and later sought an introduction. A few weeks later the engagement was announced. At this time Mr. (afterward Senator) and Mrs. Frank Newlands were living on the then fashionable Folsom street in the Milton Latham home, and there many brilliant entertainments took place after the Hesketh-Sharon engagement was announced. Lady Hesketh is a cousin of Mrs. J. C. Kirkpatrick and Mrs. I. N. Allen of this city, Mrs. C. L. McCoy of Oakland, and Mrs. George Hildreth of San Jose. Their late mother, Mrs. Susan K. Davis, of San Jose, was a sister of Senator Sharon, and a great favorite of her brother, who built and presented her with the beautiful Davis home in San Jose.

Breach of Promise Suit

As an aftermath of the news of the Breckenridge-Stein rupture and the Breckenridge-Hesketh alliance a rumor spread around the city that a breach of promise suit was in the air; that Dr. Stein, not caring for the publicity and the sudden jolting given to his affections with no greater rhyme nor reason than the passing whim of a lady, had decided on a suit as his only method of retaliation. The rumor was spread broadcast; whether it is more than a rumor I am not as yet prepared to say, but if women under similar circumstances feel it their privilege, why not the man? If Dr. Stein carries out the idea so far attributed to him, we may yet be treated to some interesting gossip with Florence Breckenridge figuring as the heroine. Rumor also adds that in a recent letter to a girl friend Florence claims she was never before so happy in her whole life and the subsequent cablegram explained the reason.

The Mighels Divorce

The divorce suit brought against Philip Verrill Mighels by his wife was the result of too much artistic temperament. According to Mrs. Mighels, her husband went to New York and persisted in staying there, saying that the atmosphere of the semi-Bohemian colony of that town was best suited to the production of his short stories and novels. Mrs. Mighels says that, tired of waiting for him to return to California, she went to New York, but her husband shipped her back to their ranch at Hayward, where she received from him a few frenzied letters in which he spoke of working out his destiny regardless of consequences. Then he quit writing, and the suit for divorce followed. I remember what a romantic wooing it was between Phil Mighels, then just acquiring a name as a writer, and Mrs. Ella Sterling Cummins, widow of the noted linguist and scholar. She refused for a long time to listen to his plea, but finally consented to marry him at the solicitation of her daughter, Vera, who afterward was a public singer in London. For a time it seemed that the Mighels were most congenially mated. Mrs. Mighels wrote some herself, being the author of "The Story of the Files," a compendium of early California papers and biographical sketches of California. She was of great assistance to Mighels in his work. Mighels is a stepson of Sam Davis of the Carson Appeal. Mrs. Mighels is a sister of Mrs. Franklin Poore of Berkeley, and her maiden name was Haskell.

The Crittendens

An interesting panegyric of the remarkable Crittenden family recently appeared in the Louisville Courier-Journal apropos the death of Thomas Theodore Crittenden, "the last," we are told of a family of heroes and statesmen who, from Revolutionary days, carried the name resplendently upon many fields." The accuracy of this statement may be questioned, for it is hardly true that the Crittenden family has become extinct. Indeed, many of the scions of the family are to be found in this city with the development of which they have been identified from early days. The Crittenden whose death was recorded in the Courier-Journal was the nephew of John Jordan Crittenden, a direct descendant of the founder of the family who was a gallant Continental Major. John Jordan Crittenden was a noted Kentucky statesman, the "preux chevalier of the politics of his time," says the Courier-Journal, "a captivating orator, holding audiences at will, a charming gentleman adored of women and men, courageous, disinterested and far-seeing." This John Jordan Crittenden, who was the uncle of the so-called "last of the Crittendens," was the brother of Harry T. Creswell's grandmother, and Harry Creswell is therefore a direct

COOK'S TOURS
Are the Best for Independent or Escort Travel
AROUND THE WORLD
Parties leave Westward August 24, September 15, October 5 and 19th; Eastward November 6, December 9 and June 8. Highest class, various routes, best of everything. Seventy Tours to Europe. Tickets everywhere, Traveler's checks, hotel coupons, information. Let us make reservations now for your fall tour. No charge for service.
THOS. COOK & SON
32 POWELL STREET SAN FRANCISCO
Offices at Yokohama, Hongkong, Colombo, Calcutta, Bombay, etc.

"CINCINNATI"
80 Days
$325 to $1775
ORIENT CRUISE
Leave N. Y.
Jan. 29, 1910
20th Annual Cruise. Finest trip of its kind.
20 ports visited. Absolutely first-class throughout.
Join the select California party on this most interesting cruise
Handsomely illustrated pamphlet sent free
HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE
PHONE KEARNY 2946
160 POWELL STREET (NEAR ELLIS ST.) SAN FRANCISCO

descendant of the Major Crittenden of Continental days. A. B. Crittenden, the attorney who was killed by Laura D. Fair was the first cousin of the man whose death inspired Colonel Watterson's panegyric in the Courier-Journal, and sons of A. B. Crittenden are still living in this city. "Nobility of nature," says Watterson, "fearless and unselfish devotion, love of country, love of fame and friends and freedom, love of duty and deeds of high emprise, were the distinguishing characteristics of the Crittendens."

Mrs. Oelrichs' Friends

I hear through a New York correspondent that Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs is at outs with the Charlie Oelriches. Time was when she and these relatives were exceedingly chummy; but of late a coldness has sprung up which some think will result to Mrs. Hermann's disadvantage, as Mrs. Charles has a strong social pull, and could if she would make visits to Rosecliff unpopular through her disapproval of them. I am told that Tessie Oelrichs has none too many intimates at present, having estranged herself from many old friends. At present her principal associates are the Elisha Dwyers, the Dolans, the Pembroke Joneses and the Harry Lehrs. Harry and Tessie have been such close friends for years that to have them fall out would be like a social earthquake.

Brilliant Wedding Planned

The wedding of Miss Ida Pattiani of Alameda to Naval Constructor R. Duncan Gatewood will take place early in September. It will be a large and brilliant affair at the residence of the bride's parents.

Home Wedding

The wedding of Miss Alice Naylor, daughter of Charles Naylor, the attorney, to Edward Englebright, the prominent mining engineer, will take place this (Saturday) evening at the residence of the bride's parents in Alameda. It will be a simple affair, only intimate friends of the bride and groom being invited.

Luncheons for Visitors

Mrs. William Cluff gave a large luncheon at her home in Berkeley during the week in honor of Mrs. Edward Kelley and her daughter, Mrs. Noonan, who are visiting here from Honolulu. After luncheon a game of bridge was enjoyed. The Cluffs have been occupying the John W. Haven's home on Benvue avenue for the past two months. Mrs. D. A. Bender and Miss Cherry Bender were luncheon hostesses during the week in honor of Mrs. Noonan and Mrs. Tenny. Among others present were Mrs. Biglow, Mrs. Rail, Miss Lola Davis and Miss Blanche, former Carson City residents.

Artist Wores to Wed

An engagement announcement that has created a great deal of interest is that of Miss Carrie Bauer to Theodore Wores, the well known painter. Mr. Wores has made a name for himself by his marked success in portrait painting. Miss Bauer is a sister of Chris Bauer and of Captain George Bauer, who is prominent in the Naval Militia and commands the naval ship "Alert."

Innovation at Dance

The dance give by Miss Erna St. Goar at Ross Valley was marked by many novel ideas, notably in the manner of distributing the favors. First a basket was passed to all the men, and from it each took a pretty fan, which had

E. B. COURVOISIER

The well known Art Dealer and Frame Maker announces to the public the opening of his new store at 431 Sutter street between Stockton and Powell.

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS

The inspiration of social amenities.

Under the management of JAMES WOODS

FAIRMONT HOTEL

The result of forty years experience in catering to the discriminating travelers of every nation. Single rooms with bath from $2.50 per day upward

PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

HOTEL VICTORIA

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Manager

N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton

CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL

Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine. Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.

American and European Plan.

HOTEL ARGONAUT

Society of California Pioneers Building

FOURTH STREET NEAR MARKET — San Francisco — CENTRE OF THE CITY

Catering to Family and Commercial Trade

400 Rooms $1.00 per day and up Dining room seats 500 guests

Special 50c Luncheon from 11:30 to 2 p. m.

Weekly and monthly rates on application. Free bus meets all trains and steamers.

Telephone Douglas 3393 EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager

Montara Inn

At Montara on the Ocean Shore Railroad

A delightful place to rest. 45 minutes from San Francisco. Pure mountain water and fresh dairy products. The best sheltered and widest sandy beach on the coast. No undertow; splendid bathing. Address for accomodations, Manager, Montara Inn, Montara, Calif.

attached to it the name of the young lady who fell to his lot as a dancing partner. When the basket was passed again it was to the young ladies, and its burden was a number of pipes, each with a name attached; and in this manner the damsels drew their dancing partners. Miss McFarland of Honolulu has been the guest of the St. Goars for some days past.

Former Local Man Engaged.

An engagement recently announced is that of Miss Ethel Blanche Phelps, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fordyce Phelps of New York, to Arthur A. Moore, formerly a resident of this city, but now of Gotham. The wedding will take place in the fall, and will be a large and brilliant event.

Engagement Denied

In regard to the expected announcement of the engagement of Miss Lou Foster to Evan Evans, which it was said would be made public at the wedding of Miss Mary Foster and John Keuchler, I am told that there is no truth in the rumor. Both parties deny that there is any tender feeling between them. Indeed, I am told that young Evans announces himself a confirmed bachelor. However, as he is only twenty-one, he has plenty of time to get over that.

Elaborate Wedding Planned

The wedding of Miss Helen Baker, eldest daughter of Mrs. L. L. Baker, to Drummond MacGavin will take place late in October. If report be true this will be one of the largest and most brilliant weddings of the season. I am told that fourteen bridesmaids will attend the bride, and that the decorations will surpass anything that has been seen in recent years in this city.

Thrashed Joseph Leiter

G. S. Holmes Jr., the young mining millionaire who administered a sound thrashing to millionaire Joseph Leiter on a train near New York because he did not like Leiter's actions before the ladies, is at the Fairmont with his wife. Holmes, who is the son of G. S. Holmes, owner of the Knutsford Hotel in Salt Lake City and at one time owner of the Angelus in Los Angeles, came through the affair without a scratch. He is on his way to Los Angeles and from there will go to Nacrozari, Mexico, where he has a number of mining interests with Harrison Hammond, son of John Hays Hammond, the noted mining expert.

Bridge Whist Tournament

The first bridge whist congress to be held in California will take place at Del Monte September 1 to September 4. This is under the direction of Mrs. A. J. Griffin of Los Angeles, who is known over the whole coast as an authority on bridge. Two events will be played each day with prizes for teams and pairs. Hotel Del Monte has offered a fine cup for the individual making the largest score. There is talk now of bringing Regatta week within the month of sports and the Monterey Boat Club is working hard to accomplish this. If this is done, visitors to Del Monte during that time will see the pennants and colors of the principal yacht clubs of the Coast fluttering in the breeze of Monterey bay. No place in the world affords a better opportunity for a race meet among the swift yachts, and it is hoped that this event can be carried out as planned.

THE BONNET SHOP
Importers of REAL PARISIAN MILLINERY
121 GEARY STREET
Our Specialty, Strictly High Class Tailored Hats at Popular Prices
NOBLE

English Polo Players Coming

R. M. Tobin has been successful in his endeavors to bring a crack English polo team to the Coast next winter. Just who will come to make a try for the recovery of the International Cup is not definitely known, but it is thought that F. A. Gill, manager of the Ranelagh and Paris Club, and Major Rotheram, both of whom played here on the Ranelagh team last winter, may come, as well as Captain de Crespigny, who is well known in Burlingame. There is a possibility that Harry Payne Whitney will bring his team to the Coast at the same time. These, with the Burlingame players, the Bryn Mawr team, a Canadian team which Major Colin Ross is organizing, two Los Angeles and two Riverside teams, would furnish material for a magnificient tournament. Frank Mackey has recovered from his illness, and will come to California next winter. Whether he will play is not known.

AT LONG BEACH SANITARIUM, LONG BEACH, CAL.

Charity Concerts

One of the most successful affairs that has been held in Ross Valley for some time was the concert that took place on Friday evening of last week at the Lagunitas Club for the benefit of the St. John's organ fund. It was largely attended by people from San Rafael, Sausalito and Mill Valley. Among those who contributed to the musical program were Mrs. Kellam, whose voice was heard to great advantage; Miss Hughes, violinist, and Miss Cheeseborough, pianist. The concert was a financial as well as a social success.

I. Magnin & Co.
INCORPORATED
Large Reductions on Summer Apparel
In Every Department
Garments which are specially adapted for Vacation and Outing Wear
GRANT AVENUE AND GEARY STREET

Santa Cruz Popular

Going to Santa Cruz seems to be getting more of a society habit year by year. I have heard many people comment on our good fortune in having so charming a place within easy access of the city. Facing southward upon the glinting waters of Monterey bay, protectingly environed on the north by the calm hills of Santa Cruz,

COSTUME WORN BY PARISIAN BEAUTY
Showing one of the most recent modes.

endowed with every charm of climate and topography, Santa Cruz has well been named the world's playground. One of its main attractions is the diversity of delights. The finest of bathing is offered on the beach, and the town at night is a whirl of social affairs. The best of big salmon fishing may be enjoyed in the bay, while trout fishing may be had in the near-by hills. The big trees, among the great wonders of the world, are but six miles away, while only thirty miles away, and easily accessible, is Sempervirens Park, a four-thousand-acre-forest containing some of the biggest redwoods in existence. Nobody has ever been heard, on leaving Santa Cruz, to complain of any lack of attractions in that seaside resort.

Emile Fonteille
Formerly with the Pup
Victor Laborie John Dubourdieu
Formerly with Poodle Dog
MAISON DORÉE HOTEL AND RESTAURANT
151-157 ELLIS ST., ABOVE POWELL
Phone Douglas 1040. Connecting all Apartments.
Best Merchants Lunch in the City
Lunch with Wine, 75 cents. Dinner with Wine, $1.25

Unconventional Anna Strunsky

San Francisco friends of Mrs. William Walling, who was Anna Strunsky, are much interested in the outcome of the breach of promise suit that a French madamoiselle has brought against her husband. Walling is not known here, but Anna Strunsky was a prominent figure at Stanford University and later in this city, where she was a leading member of the socialist colony and also well known among the ultra-Bohemian set. She fraternized with the Irwins, Gellet Burgess and other writers. In fact, she attained some literary fame through collaborating with Jack London on the Kempton-Wace letters. She is Russian by birth, and is remembered here as of an extremely vivacious, nervous temperament, intense in all her actions. She was very spectacular and totally lacked self-consiousness. I remember that when Wallace Irwin's "Love Sonnets of a Hoodlum" came out Anna Strunsky bought a copy. On the way home, standing on the rear platform of a Geary street car, she read the sonnets aloud to a friend, with full declamatory effect. She attracted the attention of her fellow passengers and of pedestrians, but seemed utterly unconscious of the fact that she was doing anything unusual.

Life at Montara

The beautiful Montara Inn located at the foot of the Montara Mountains overlooking the sea has become quite a popular out of town place. Among the well known people who have recently spent their week ends there are Arthur G. Nasson and daughters, G. D. Gillespie and daughters, Thos. Connell and wife, Alice R. Power, Annie T. Haley, Miss Morrisson and Mrs. Connant, of Berkeley; Chas. M. Wiggin, Chas. Gardiner and wife, Harr Wagner, E. F. Charlton, Dr. Purkitt and daughters, of Willows; Miss Josephine Saunders, Miss Edna Wilson, Dr. Arthur H. Wanz, J. Radford and wife, J. W. Graham and wife, Mrs. Carrie Reef, Henry J. Reef. Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Johnson, formerly of San Diego County, are in charge of the inn, and take great interest in the social life of the place and in the entertainment of the guests.

To Preserve Stevenson Home

James Rea of Aberdeen, Scotland, representing a Scottish Stevenson society of which he is a member, visited Monterey Peninsula recently, and spent much time at the adobe house which Stevenson inhabited while he lived at Monterey. Rea also visited the old residents of the town who knew the deceased writer, confiding to them the fact that he intended to purchase the old house, restore it, and with the aid of other Scots in Canada, the United States and his own country, keep it in proper condition. He collected considerable data concerning Stevenson's life in Monterey. This, with other material that he has been gathering, he will publish in a biography of the great writer. On Saturday Rea left for the Southern part of the state in order to visit Mrs. Stevenson and interest her in his project.

A SKIN OF BEAUTY IS A JOY FOREVER
DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S
ORIENTAL CREAM
OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER
Purifies as well as Beautifies the Skin. No other cosmetic will do it.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash and Skin Diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 60 years; no other has, and it is so harmless we taste it to be sure it is properly made. Accept no counterfeit of similar name. The distinguished Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut-on (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'Gouraud's Cream' as the least harmful of all the skin preparations."
For sale by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers.
GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL TOILET POWDER
For infants and adults. Exquisitely perfumed. Relieves Skin Irritation, cures Sunburn and renders an excellent complexion. Price 25 Cents, by Mail.
GOURAUD'S POUDRE SUBTILE
Removes Superfluous Hair. Price $1.00, by mail
FERD. T. HOPKINS, Prop'r, 37 Great Jones St., New York City.

In the Social Spotlight

Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Talbot and Miss Silvia Talbot are spending a few weeks at Byron Hot Springs.

Mrs. L. L. Baker and her daughter Helen have returned to Hotel Rafael after a short stay at Sission, California.

Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Greenendyke, from Pasadena, are stopping at Hotel Rafael for a stay of a week or more.

Rear Admiral and Mrs. T. F. Jewell arrived at the Fairmont from the Orient on Saturday. Admiral Jewell is en route to Washington.

Ralph Baker, representative of the Pennsylvania lines in Liverpool, England, is a guest at the Fairmont. Mr. Baker has been on the coast about six weeks getting in touch with the conditions here, and consulting with the local traffic men.

Miss Maizie Coyle entertained a number of her girl friends at tea in the St. Francis several days ago, in honor of her friend, Miss Angela Harrison, who is a popular Santa Barbara belle.

At a pretty luncheon in the St. Francis last week, Mr. and Mrs. Remi P. Schwerin and Miss Genevieve King were the guests of Mrs. George Cameron.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Melone, Miss Ethel Melone, Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Swan, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Watt, Miss Jane Crellin and Mr. Phillip Paschel were the members of a jolly coaching party who spent the week-end at Aetna Springs.

Miss Mina Van Bergen left during the week for the McNab ranch in Ukiah where she will visit Miss Christene McNab, who recently returned from an Eastern boarding school. The McNabs have planned an enjoyable motor trip to Lake County. The party is to include, among others, Jurge and Mrs. Frank Kerrigan, formerly Miss Jessie McNab. They will be gone several weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Al. Redding, with Miss Redding, are enjoying a delightful trip in the Yosemite Valley.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Danforth and Miss Fannie Danforth have returned from an enjoyable trip to Tahoe Tavern.

Mrs. George Whitney, widow of the late Senator George W. Whitney, has returned from a year's stay in New York and Washington, D. C. She is at present the guest of the Meeks at their beautiful home near Haywards. Later, Mrs. Whitney will go to her home in Oakland. Mrs. Whitney is a sister of the late Mrs. Stephen S. Field.

Mrs. Eugene Bresse, Miss Lucile Bresse and Miss Meta McMahon are at Aetna Springs.

Mr. and Mrs. George Tyson and their daughter, Miss Jean, are at present traveling in Europe.

Among the prominent Oakland people enjoying a visit at Tahoe Tavern are Mrs. Isaac Requa, the Mark Requas, and the little Misses Amy and Sallie Long, daughters of Captain and Mrs. O. F. Long (Amy Requa).

Mrs. Prentis Selby and Arthur Selby are also visiting Tahoe Tavern.

Mrs. Oscar Sutro made her sister, Miss Ellen O'Sullivan, the guest of honor at an elaborate luncheon recently at the club house, Piedmont Park. Intimate friends of Miss O'Sullivan were the guests. This was the first opportunity they had of meeting this charming girl since her return from a lengthy tour abroad.

Miss Dolly MacGaven has returned from Napa, where she was the guest of Mrs. J. D. Frye.

Mrs. George Victor la Farge of Vancouver, B. C., formerly Miss Roberta Thompson, is visiting her mother, Mrs. R. F. Thompson, in Palo Alto. She will remain until October. Mrs. la Farge's wedding was a society even in Palo Alto last year. Her husband is a member of Dodnell & Co., a shipping firm of Vancouver. He is a cousin of la Farge, the celebrated artist.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Torney, who have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Kirkham Wright since the advent of their little son, have taken a house on Filbert street.

Mayor and Mrs. Pond and Miss Dora McNeal were at Nauheim, Germany, when last heard from. They will remain abroad for several months.

Mrs. Chrystal Harrison has gone to Lake County, where she will spend the next two weeks with friends.

Dr. Arnold Genthe is at Santa Barbara. He will return August 2d.

Miss Marie Louise Foster of Ross Valley is the guest of Miss Edith Schroeder at Eagle's Nest, San Luis Obispo.

Miss Alice Oge, the pretty sister of Mrs. Truxton Beale, is visiting Mrs. R. Porter Ashe at her camp in Half Moon bay.

Mr. and Mrs. Seward McNear have returned to their home in Ross Valley after a visit to Mr. and Mrs. Edward Schmidell at Lake Tahoe.

Mr. and Mrs. Agustus Bray have taken one of the attractive Marsh Japanese Cottages in Mill Valley for the remainder of the season.

Mrs. L. Beedy and her aunt, Mrs. Harrison of Sausalito, have gone to Glenbrook in the Santa Cruz mountains, where they will pass the next month.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace G. Hellmann and their niece, Miss Anita Mailliard, have returned from Valpariso, where they have been visiting for the past six months. Mr. and Mrs. Hellmann have opened their attractive cottage in Belvedere for the summer. Miss Maillaird has joined her parents, Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Mailliard, in Belvedere.

H. E. Bothin, whose marriage to Miss Chabot took place recently, is building an addition to his already large home in School Clothes

We have decided to continue our FIRST SEMI-ANNUAL SALE. We want every mother who has a young man or boy to buy a school outfit for, to take advantage of this sale.

HERE IS AN OPPORTUNITY TO BUY THE FINEST CLOTHES MADE FOR MUCH LESS THAN YOU WOULD PAY FOR THE CHEAP, ORDINARY KIND.

We Want You to Know Us

Sale Young Men's Suits

$35.00 and $30.00 Suits; Sale Price	$23.75
$27.50 and $25.00 Suits; Sale Price	$18.75
$22.50, $20.00 and $18.50 Suits; Sale Price	$13.75
$15.00 and $12.50 Suits; Sale Price	$10.75

Sale Boys' Knickerbocker Suits

This sale includes all our fancy mixtures in Knickerbocker, Norfolk, Junior Norfolk, Russian Blouse and Sailor Suits.

$20.00 and $17.50 Suits; Sale Price	$13.75
$15.00 and $12.50 Suits; Sale Price	$10.75
$11.00 and $10.00 Suits; Sale Price	$7.75
$ 8.50 and $10.00 Suits; Sale Price	$ 5.75
$ 6.50 and $ 5.00 Suits; Sale Price	$ 3.95

Boys' and Children's Straw Hats Half Price

FREE TO THE LITTLE FELLOWS

A New Toy—Soap Bubbles Without Soap.

Stratton's INCORPORATED

A New Store With New Ideas—For Young Men, Boys and Children

136 GEARY STREET

Between Grant Avenue and Stockton Streets.

Ross Valley. It will, when finished, make his place one of the most beautiful in the valley.

Mrs. Walter D. Mansfield was hostess at an elaborate luncheon on last Friday, given at the Hotel Rafael, where the Mansfields are spending the summer. Later in the afternoon the guests went for an automobile ride, visiting the Golf Club, where tea was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert J. Dibblee have been in town for the past few days having made the Fairmont their headquarters. The Dibblees are spending the summer at their charming country home in Ross.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Foster Dutton, who have been away from town for the past few months or so, have returned and are at the Fairmont.

Among the recent arrivals from abroad now at the Fairmont are Ericke Golde, Albereide, Germany; M. Krejner and M. Bucke of Budapest, Hungary; A. Buisson of Yokahama.

Mr. H. M. A. Miller, Mr. G. W. Lewis, Mr. M. E. Pinckard, Mr. G. R. Weeks and Mr. C. A. Miller spent the week-end at Aetna Springs.

Miss Edmee Anhauser, a well-known society woman of St. Louis, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Dewey A. Hickey and F. B. Nielsen, arrived at Del Monte last week and spent a few days there.

H. H. Trowbridge, a prominent attorney of Los Angeles, and Mrs. Trowbridge reached Del Monte on the 21st. A day or two latter they accompanied Mr. and Mrs. Ralph A. Otis of Pasadena, who are spending the summer with their children at Del Monte, in Mr. Otis' motor car to the Big Basin, Santa Cruz County. They returned early this week to Del Monte.

George H. Howard and P. M. Lansdale of San Mateo, accompanied by Thos. S. Kay of Honolulu, were visitors to Del Monte recently, going by automobile.

A Very Immoral Bird

By Hermann Jacques (From the German)

Something had happened in the house of the Reverend Gottlied Mummel—something very strange and very unexpected. The two students, aged respectively fourteen and fifteen, who lived with the good pastor, could not understand it. At least they couldn't understand why such a simple incident should arouse such a great commotion. The fact is that the stork had unexpectedly arrived at the house of the good pastor, and the maid-servant was the mother of a bouncing boy. For some reason, quite incomprehensible to the boys Fritz and Hans, this event seemed to worry the pastor and his wife very much.

A story like this spreads quickly in a small village. The next day the two boys came to the pastor and asked him, very seriously, if it were really true that the stork had come during the night and brought the baby. Mummel called the boys into his study and requested them to sit down. For a few moments he paced back and forth, buried in deep thought; then he said:

"What you have heard is unfortunately true. A son came to Anna last night, but this is not a matter for rejoicing. Anna must go away and you will not see her again. You are too young for me to explain this matter to you any further. The stork is not always a bird of good omen. He is often a very immoral bird, a bird of the devil, and the messenger of evil."

Next day Fritz and Hans went to the store and bought a ball of cord and some leaden balls through which holes had been bored, and through which many fine threads passed and were interwoven, all being held together, however, by the string. In the afternoon both went to the forest and wandered about a long time until they came to a glade through which ran a brook. Here they arranged their trap and then went and hid behind some bushes, each holding one end of the string. Just as the sun was going down Fritz cried out: "There he is!" And so it was; at that moment a tall stork was walking along the bank in search of unsuspecting frogs. Still he was not yet near enough and they were compelled to wait nearly half an hour before the bird stepped into the net. Then the boys pulled the string and the criminal was caught.

That evening, when Pastor Gottlieb Mummel returned home, he found on his desk the body of a dead stork, and pinned to it was a note which read:

"We have killed the enemy."

THE PERRY HOTEL
Madison St. and Boren Ave.
SEATTLE, WASH.
Every Modern Convenience—Absolutely Fire Proof
European Plan, The Highest Grade
Under new management, centrally located and commanding a view of the Olympics, Cascade Mountains, Mount Rainier and Puget Sound.
J. S. McTERNAN, Manager

HOTEL WASHINGTON
J. M. LUX, MANAGER
SEATTLE, WASH.
A magnificent modern structure involving over One Million and a Half Dollars. Conducted on Most liberal ideas of Experience. Its appointments and service cannot be excelled in the United States. The management cordially invites your patronage.

HOTEL WASHINGTON ANNEX
SEATTLE, WASH.
Best Rooms Best Service
Strictly First-Class
J. H. DAVIS - - - - - Proprietor

THE FORUM CAFE
O A K L A N D
Now under the management of
MR. GUSTAV MANN

HOTEL NORMANDIE
SUTTER AND GOUGH STREETS
A comfortable, high order, uptown hotel, now under the management of THOS. H. SHEDDEN, Formerly Manager of St. Dunstan's.

HOTEL HARCOURT
Formerly the Nordhoff.
SUTTER AND LARKIN STREETS
AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN
A Elegantly Furnished Modern Home. Phone Franklin 2100

The Emigrant's Wagon

With a red, hazy shimmer the Texas prairie seethed and quivered in the heat of the summer sun. Tired birds with dusty wings panted beside the sandy beds of dead rivers, thirst-crazed cattle pawed weakly at the roots of dying cotton-woods—and the sun glared over the desert.

A covered wagon drawn by two oxen slowly clanked along the road. A fiery-eyed man with sunken cheeks and bony fingers sat at the front driving. An emaciated woman, wan and ghastly, lay within, her eyes resting upon him, her hands feebly caressing a babe. Behind her, their bare, bony limbs crossed in the last death struggle, lay two other children—a girl of perhaps fifteen and a boy a year younger. As the wagon crushed across a sandbed in the run of a winter stream, a board nailed to a cottonwood on the bank caught the woman's gaze, but her dim, glazed eyes could not decipher the words it bore. She glanced toward her husband:

"Thirteen miles," he groaned.

"To-night?" she wispered.

"Yes, Lucy," he said, and, bending tenderly, kissed her.

For even these dying outcasts of the desert could kiss each other. Grim death rode with them, his yellow-fever hue rested upon their parched skins, but love was also there—stronger even than death.

And slowly the plague-craft trundled onward toward the nearest town, where the man and woman hoped to obtain water and medical assistance—she, for the baby; he, for her.

It was dark when they came within sight of the town, and he, knowin the way, drove directly for the public well.

"Halt," cried a voice. "Are you from Brownsville?"

But the hollow-eyed, spectre-like driver heeded not.

"This is quarantine," said the voice, and a gunlock clicked ominously in the soft, hot night air. "Halt, or I'll fire."

But the spectre-like driver heeded not.

Two fierce flashes pierced the darkness, and the weary oxen started forward as the succeeding reports boomed heavily across the plains.

The scent of water was in their nostrils, and soon they were quaffing deeply from the trough beside the public well. The gaunt driver neither moved nor spoke. The woman was silent.

The weary oxen trudged on beyond the town, and sunrise found them plodding onward.

All day the Western prarie seethed and quivered in the red, hazy glare of the summer sun, and the plague-wagon with its load of dead crept onward. Great droning flies crawled about the faces of the silent voyagers, and dusty-winged vultures hovered above. One gaunt, red-beaked old fellow for a time rode on the seat beside the spectre-driver, then, growing bolder, plunged into the depths of the wagon.

And the heavy wagon slowly clanked and creaked along.

FIRE PLACE OF MONTARA INN, MONTARA

NOT AT HOME

The sins of dawn which we at noonday leave
Behind us, put to rout,
Old twilight sins, they call on us at eve,
And find us out.

—Harry Cowell.

DINING-ROOM OF THE NEW CRUISING STEAMER "CINCINNATI"

Showing arrangement with popular small tables (a la carte service) introduced by the Hamburg-American Line.

EDUCATIONAL

Mills College

FOR YOUNG WOMEN

Only Woman's College on Pacific Coast. Offers same advantages as best Eastern institutions. Full Collegiate course. Degrees conferred. Third and fourth years of College Preparatory during 1909-10. Special opportunities in Domestic Science, Music and Art. Within reach of both Stanford and University of California. Earnest Christian influences; non-sectarian; all forms of healthful out-door amusements. Ideal location in beautiful Oakland hills. 1:10 from San Francisco. Fall term begins August 11, 1909. For catalogue and brochure of views address, President's Secretary, Mills College P. O., California.

Miss West's School

2457 SCOTT STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Thirty-sixth year opens August 16, 1909. Accredited to University of California, Stanford, Wellesley, Vassar and Smith.

MISS HELEN A. O'CONNELL, PRINCIPAL

Miss Head's School

2538 CHANNING WAY, BERKELEY, CAL.

Boarding and day school for girls, accredited to the University of California, Stanford, Vassar, Smith and Wellesley; 22nd year begins August 9, 1909.

MARY E. WILSON, M. L., PRINCIPAL

St. Mary's College

BROADWAY AND 23d STREET, OAKLAND

Endowed with all rights and privileges of State University. Literary, scientific, civil, and mining engineering courses; complete business course. Studies resumed fall term, Wednesday, September 1st. Send for catalog to Registrar, Bro. Vellesian, President.

St. Matthew's Military School

BURLINGAME, CAL.

Rev. William A. Brewer, A. B., Rector.

Lowan's Hill School

MILL VALLEY

A delightful home boarding school for girls. Preparatory for Colleges. Outdoor life. High school, intermediate and primary departments. Fall term begins August 9th.

MISS WOODMAN, Principal.

THE LYCEUM

2590 PINE STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Prepares for university, the law and medical colleges; seventeenth year; here you can save time and money; excellent teachers; special coaching for August examinations of the universities; we have prepared hundreds successfully; day and evening sessions.

Irving Institute School for Girls

147 PRESIDIO AVENUE, SAN FRANCISCO

Residence, 3370 Washington Street

Opens August Second, 1909. Send for Catalogue.

MISS PINKHAM, Principal MISS AMY D. HARRISON, Associate

The Hamlin School

A Boarding and Day School for Girls

Opens Monday, August 9, 1909.

Accredited by the California Universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to high school graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma. Pupils charged from the week of entrance.

In place of the kindergarten, a French school has been opened, where the French language is taught by means of charts, pictures, games, songs and stories.

Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed, and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars, address MISS HAMLIN, 2230 Pacific Avenue, San Francisco.

Boone's University School for Boys

BERKELEY

Commences its twenty-eighth year, Tuesday, August 10th. Accredited to the University of California, Stanford, University of Michigan, Cornell and Pennsylvania.

Apply for Catalogue to

2029 Durant Ave. P. R. BOONE, Principal

Anderson Academy

IRVINGTON, CALIFORNIA

Excellently equipped, beautifully situated, offers greatest advantages to those wishing thorough preparation for college in least time possible. Splendid facilities for athletics, in which a master will coach. Next term begins August 10th. Send for catalogue.

WILLIAM WALKER ANDERSON, M. A., Principal.

The Chandler School For Girls

LOS ALTOS, CALIFORNIA

Beautiful grounds covering six acres in the foothills, three and one-half miles from Stanford University. Outdoor study and classwork. Address

MRS. MARY CHANDLER, Los Altos, California.

Castilleja School

PALO ALTO, CALIFORNIA

Home and Day School for Girls. College preparatory and general courses. Intermediate and primary departments. Domestic Science, Music, Art, Out-of-Door Gymnasium. Pupils admitted to Stanford, University of California, Wellesley, and Smith, without examination. Illustrated Catalogue. Term opens August 30, 1909. Principal, MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B.

California Conservatory of Music

Is now located in its new magnificent building

147 PRESIDIO AVENUE

Between Jackson and Washington Streets

The Watson School

2518 ETNA STREET, BERKELEY, CAL.

Boarding and day school. Offers the best features of public and private school systems. Opens August 18th.

MRS. C. L. WATSON, Principal.

WHY GRACE WAS OMITTED

A tiny girl of seven gave a dinner-party the other day, for which twelve covers were laid, and that number of small maidens sat down to dine. It was a real little girls' dinner, and the little hostess herself presided, sitting at the head of the table. She had been very anxious, in looking forward to it, to do everything as it should be done. "Mamma," she asked, "shall we say grace?" "No," said mamma; "it will be a very informal dinner, and I think you need not do that." That meant one ceremony the less to be gone through, and was a relief. But the little lady was anxious to have all her guests understand it. So, as they gathered about the table, she explained: "Mamma says that this is such an infernal dinner that we need not have grace today!"

The little boy had come in with his clothes torn, his hair full of dust, and his face bearing unmistakable marks of a severe conflict. "Oh, Willie, Willie!" exclaimed his mother, deeply shocked and grieved, "you have disobeyed me again. How often have I told you not to play with that wicked Stapleford boy!" "Mamma," said Willie, washing the blood from his nose, "do I look as if I had been playing with anybody?"

Stage

A Triumphant Polly

Take the kids with you to see "Polly of the Circus." They won't be bored by the dramatic part of it, and the circus scenes in the last act will please them mightily, for the clowns are there, and the trained dogs, and the ponies that walk on their hind feet, and the magnificent steeds and the tumblers—and the circus music with its stirring tummy tum tum. To begin at the end of the show, the presentation of a real circus act as a finish to a drama gives a spectacular aspect to an otherwise conventionally staged play. It is a decidedly pleasing transition, especially when it is done with the perfection that marks the production at the Van Ness Theatre. As to the play itself, it is a wholesome drama, telling a pretty story of love and devotion, and with a plot that embodies several very dramatic situations. Polly, the circus rider, is injured while doing her act in a middle-west village, and is taken to the minister's house, the nearest at hand, to the great scandal of the more religious members of his congregation. This slangy, worldly child of the sawdust ring wins her way into the minister's heart, and by the time the circus returns eleven months later she is as loath to leave as he is to have her go. But the church people, scandalized by her presence under his roof, demand that she depart—they do not care where, as long as the contamination is removed. To this he will not consent. However, the deacons, finding her alone, tell her that the minister's prospects are being ruined by her, so through her love for him she returns to the circus. But he wins her back at the end, much to the discomfiture of the hypocrites. The play puts little strain on the imagination, which is part of its charm. You do not have to worry over the ending, but can sit and enjoy it serenely through your confidence that the minister and the girl he has transformed from a hoyden into a woman will have their hearts' desire. Sympathy for Polly is engendered from the moment she is seen struggling, despite her sprained ankle, to get out of confinement and rejoin the circus. "Why, that show will be on the bum for fair without my act," she protests. Slangy, naive, ingenuous little heathen! For her there is no world that is not under the canvas of the main tent. The surroundings in which she suddenly finds herself puzzle her. In rich and picturesque slang she expresses her astonishment that she should be under the wing of a sky-pilot. A "rube," she calls him, then seeing her error she apologizes by explaining that circus people "call all you guys rubes." But it is an altogether different Polly that we see in the second act, when, having been civilized, she reveals herself as a very earnest seeker after the refinements of life that she has never before had an opportunity to come in contact with. And she is a full-fledged woman in the last act—a tender, adoring woman, with no thought save for the man she loves. Ida St. Leon plays "Polly," and plays it with great art. She is young, and her voice has a childish quality; but she has much emotional power, which she displays with such effect at the end of the second act as to evoke unstinted admiration. She is altogether a sweet and winsome heroine with great charm of manner and a sure sense of dramatic values. The fact that she come of a circus family, and was a star of the ring before she took up the stage enables her to play her part with the greater realism. It is Miss St. Leon who saves the show, for she is really the only star in the company. Earl Ryder as the minister is rather too preachery—if such a word may be used; too much of the professional optimist. However, in the second act, he is called on to depict a real man, and acquits himself with much credit. A more than passably good piece of work is done by John Findlay, impersonator of Uncle Toby, the clown who has shared with Big Jim, the boss canvasman, the task of rearing the orphaned Polly. Uncle Toby comes to the minister's house after Polly has been taken there, and there is extreme pathos in the contrast—the clown in his mirth-provoking motley, but his heart wrung with the deepest anxiety over the accident to his ward. Findlay just hovers on the verge of making his portrayal of this part a very notable one. But he rather overshadows the pathos, and this, while it does not by any means spoil the characterization, provokes by its nearness to dramatic perfection. The other parts, the circus proprietor, the deacons, the women leaders of the church, the colored servants, are all fairly well sustained and furnish much comedy. Charles Lamb as Big Jim is rather a notable figure. As to the spectacular features, they are more than good. The circus scene has already been referred to; but the really remarkable picture is that at the last, when the circus wagons, with their swinging lanterns and their toiling horses, are seen moving dim and spectral in the starlight, far away through the valley, while Polly, her lover's protecting arm around her, watches them out of sight—the vanishing symbol of her old, feverish existence, supplanted now by the peaceful future that the love in her heart assures her. It is a beautiful piece of stagecraft, heart-stirring in its dramatic simplicity. —W. J. W.

"Charley's Aunt" Again

Frank Bacon as the masquerading collegian in "Charley's Aunt" is the exceptionally strong bill announced for the coming week by the Alcazar management. It will be the tenth annual visit of "Charley's Aunt" to the Alcazar. When he was a regular member of the old Alcazar Mr. Bacon made one of his biggest hits in the role he has been specially engaged to resume, and that is why Belasco & Mayer induced him to cancel one of his vaudeville engagements to reappear under their direction. They are paying him an extraordinarily large salary for his week's work, but are confident he will draw more than enough money to compensate them for the additional outlay. No actor has a bigger or more loyal following in San Francisco than this talented comedian. Since his old Alcazar days he had starred in several plays, and now he is a fixed "headliner" in vaudeville. So much has been written and said of "Charley's Aunt" that it is the best-known farce in the world. Since its first production, about thirty years ago, scores of its ilk have come and gone, while it has never waned in popularity. Its story is about the visit of a wealthy widow from Brazil, "where the nuts come from," to her lively young English nephew. He had arranged to have her chaperone two young ladies whom he had invited to luncheon in the college chambers occupied by himself and chum, and when she fails to arrive at the appointed time he persuades a mischievous student to impersonate her. Cold type cannot convey a comprehensive idea of the ludicrous situations that ensue. The genuine aunt arrives while the masquerade is in full swing, and so amusing is it—especially when she sees a couple of aged fortune-hunters in active rivalry to marry the lad whom they believe to be her—that she lets the play go on. The action is quick and the laughter of the audience almost incessant. Mr. Bacon will be supported by the entire Alcazar corps of players, most of whom have before appeared in "Charley's Aunt."

FRANK BACON

An old Alcazar favorite, who returns Monday night to appear for one week only in "Charley's Aunt."

Army Play at the American

"At the Sound of Taps," the drama which created such a furore in Europe and which has been produced in almost every country and language, will be the American Theatre stock company's offering next week. "At the Sound of Taps" which is an adaptation from the German by Charles Swickard, stage director of the American Theatre, and who produced the stirring drama in New York to great success, tells a fascinating story of the customs, manners, brutalities, excesses and medieval red tape which in some places dominate army life. The scenes are laid in Germany and the characters wear the well known colors of the Kaiser's crack regiment and as there is no more picturesque group of soldiers in the world, particularly the Uhlans, the famous cavalry arms of the military, the production of "At the Sound of Taps" is a most elaborate one from a costume standpoint. The play abounds in romance and intrigue. "At the Sound of Taps" will be presented with the full strength of the American's company with Herschel Mayall, Miss Harriet Worthington, James Corrigan, Miss Lillian Elliott, Miss Pauline Lord, Gerald Harcourt and others in the important roles.

"Florodora" at Princess

The musical comedy season at the Princess is proving an enormous success. The audiences that have attended during the week to witness "The Belle of New York" have been large and enthusiastic and the entire production and cast are worthy of praise. There will be matinees of it Saturday and Sunday and the last performance will take place this Sunday night. Next Monday evening the great international musical comedy hit, "Florodora," will be sumptuously revived for one week only. The following cast of exceptional merit cannot fail to insure a splendid success. Silas W. Gilfain, Arthur Cunningham; Frank Aberceed, Robert Wilson; Leandro, Edwin T. Emery; Captain Arthur Donegal, Percy Bronson; Anthony Tweedlepunch, Budd Ross; Dolores, Octavia Broski; Angela Gilfain, Olga Stech; Lady Holywood, Marta Golden. The famous Sextette will be beautifully represented.

"Paid in Full" Coming

"Polly of the Circus" has captured the attention of theatregoers here and full evidence of this is shown by the heavy box office business at the Van Ness Theatre where Frederic Thompson's massive production will begin its second and last week on Sunday night. The final performance is announced for Sunday evening, August 8th, and there will be a Saturday matinee. "Paid in Full" will follow "Polly of the Circus" at the Van Ness Theatre opening a two weeks engagement on Monday, August 9th. The Eugene Walter drama was seen here last season and triumphed signally. It will have a strong cast this season and among the players will be Sara Perry, Louis Morrell, Rose Snyder, Catherine Tallman, Charles Reigel, Ned Finley and Allen Atwell. The company is coming here direct from New York city opening its tour here. The story of Joe Brooks who steals and then tries to hide behind the goodness of his wife is one of the most intensely dramatic works of the age.

At the Orpheum

The Orpheum program for next week will have for its chief new feature those clever and popular musical comedy stars Sam Chip and Mary Marble, who will appear in what is termed a deft dialogue "In Old Edam," written especially for them by Anna Marble Pollock. This little Dutch skit tells a pretty and human story in which Miss Marble and Mr. Chip personate two Dutch kiddies whose cantankerous old uncle (John W. Dunne) is finally outwitted by the pair. Clever songs, dances and dialogue help to make this one of the most attractive of recent vaudeville offerings. Something new in the way of dancing will be introduced by the Six American Dancers, Estelle and Adelaide Lovenberg, Evelyn Ramsey, Charles Connor and Purcella and Orden. Their program includes "The American Vivandieres" by the Misses Lovenberg and Ramsey, "The Dancing Adonis" by Messers. Purcella and Orden, "The Pierrot" by Charles Connor and for a finale a picturesque ensemble which displays to the fullest advantage, the special scenery and attractive costumes provided for this fascinating sketch. The ever welcome comedians, Bob Matthews and Herbert Ashley, will be on hand with a diverting and novel skit entitled "Held Up." The scene represents a dock on the East River, New York City, showing the East River Bridge, the Brooklyn Bridge and the Statue of Liberty in the distance. The action takes place on a New Year's eve and as the whistles are blowing and the chimes are ringing in the New Year, a Hebrew is seen returning from his brother's wedding and is held up by a footpad. The manner in which he turns the tables on the robber provides the humor of the sketch. An act which it is confidently predicted will score heavily is called "A King for a Night" and will be presented by Frank J. Conroy, George Le Maire and an adequate supporting company. It deals with an American confidence man who palms off on a wealthy and beautiful young French heiress his friend, a negro minstrel, as the King of Blackville. It bristles with witty dialogue and abounds in humorous complications. Next week will be the last of Griff, the London Juggling Jesting Johnnie, Walter Schrode and Lizzie Mulvey in their great hit, "A Theatrical Agency," Herbert and Willing and of Sam Watson's Farmyard Circus, which is the quaintest and most unique animal act of its kind ever presented here and has already gone on record as one of the Orpheum greatest successes. A fitting close to this entertainment will be a series of recently imported Orpheum Motion Pictures, dealing with a subject of especial interest.

MISS HARRIET WORTHINGTON
Leading lady at the American Theatre.

MARY MARBLE

The famous musical comedy star who will begin an engagement this Sunday matinee at the Orpheum.

Novelties at the Chutes

Trained elephants and trained fleas form a most unusual combination of attractions on this Sunday's bill at the New Chutes. The flea circus has been entertaining for several days but the elephant troupe will be seen for the first time tomorrow afternoon. The animals will be put on as a free, open-air attraction. It is said that they are the finest herd of trained elephants exhibited since the days of the famous Lockhardt's troupe. The most notable of the Glasscock elephants is "Little Mike." He is the baby of the troupe and possessed of surprising intelligence. Amusement men consider him the best clown elephant in the show world and his antics and unique costumes promise to delight the children. With his head adorned by a mammoth Merry Widow hat "Mike" will dance to the strains of Lehar's popular composition. That is to say he will describe curves and turns to the tune of the merry waltz; to predict that he will do it gracefully is another matter. In another part of the performance "Mike" will be dressed in a big hat and mammoth spectacles of the Roosevelt style and fire a rifle at the other elephants who have been trained to fall seemingly dead at the report of the gun. Other features will include walking on ten-pins, forming pyramids, ringing bells, eating from a table, playing barber, marching to war and going through the various feats generally ascribed to the circus elephant. The troupe will perform afternoon and night. By an unexpected arrangement Desperado, the diver who has claimed much attention with his sensational leaps and who was to have terminated his engagement this evening, will remain to entertain Sunday's patrons. Florence Spray will again be seen in high and fancy diving, and Demon in his fiery ride down the chutes. The open-air motion picture show which has become a favorite diversion with Chutes patrons will have new stories to tell. The entertainers in the refreshment places will sing popular songs and play late instrumental compositions. Sirignano and his Royal Banda Roma fills the many benches in front of the band stand at every concert and the programs to be played Sunday afternoon and night promise many treats.

Belasco-Tully Play at the Liberty

Next week, commencing on Monday evening, the Bishop Players at the Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, will be presented in David Belasco's and Richard Walton Tully's celebrated play of early California life, "The Rose of the Rancho," which, in its present form has never before been given at the popular Oakland theatre. But it will be remember that in its original form, long before "Dick" Tully ever submitted it to Belasco, the Oakland stock players gave it in its original production. Then the piece was known as "Juanita of San Juan," and even before it received its finishing touches at the hands of America's master of stagecraft, the piece was a big success in Oakland, and many who witnessed its original presentation are waiting anxiously to see the revised version at the same theatre next week. The piece in itself is such a picturesque little romance and offers unlimited opportunity for the display of some strikingly beautiful stage settings, and on the Liberty's big revolving stage these opportunities can be realized fully. The management promises that the production of "The Rose of the Rancho" from a scenic standpoint alone, will be a remarkable one and in addition the play will be given by a splendid cast. Florence Oakley of course has the role of Juanita, and Sydney Ayres appears as her "Gringo" lover, while all the remainder of the favorites will be found in equally congenial roles. "The Rose of the Rancho" is announced for positively one week only, after which comes "The Spoilers," the dramatization of Rex Beach's widely read novel which has never before been given around the bay.

In the Limelight

When the Shuberts announced that they had Corinne under contract, it seemed a foregone conclusion that she would appear on the coast. Definite announcement is now made that Corinne will be seen in this city shortly in "Mlle. Mischief," the Viennese operetta by Zeither, the Austrian composer, Corinne has been surrounded by an unusually large company and her visit to the coast in this particular piece will mark one of the first invasions of the Shuberts with a musical comedy. The original production is assured.

George M. Cohan, Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Cohan and Josephine Cohan are all to appear in the cast of "The Yankee Prince" when the engagement is played in this city. It will be the first appearance here of these stars in a number of seasons. The production is said to be the greatest yet turned out by the actor-playwright.

Odd Things in the World

A May kitten is popularly believed to be useless as a mouser but an attraction for disagreeable reptiles.

Mexico is credited with being in the lead of the Latin-American countries in the matter of letters. Besides possessing the oldest organs of Spanish-American journalism it has in active existence the first library established in America, over three hundred years ago.

No bird, beast or creeping thing will touch a castor plant. It seems to be a rank poison to all animals and even a goat prefers starvation to browsing on it. A horse will sniff and turn his upper lip as though the odor were destestable to him. Locusts will pass it by though they will devour every other green thing.

A curious tree grows in some of the South Pacific Islands. It reaches a height of about thirty feet, with branches spreading like a huge umbrella, yet is completely leafless, none of the species having been known to show signs of ever a single bud. Its sap has some medicinal properties but it is useless as fuel, being as hard as iron and as difficult to burn.

There are no black flowers and few green ones. Plants produce flowers which depend on insects for fertilization and both scent and color are lures for bees, ants, etc. Black is unattractive and green too nearly resembles ordinary leaves, and both have disappeared, if they ever existed, by a process of natural selection.

There is only one known "Saint's Garden" in the world, that of Lady Grosvenor, at Saighton Grange, Chester, England. In this garden certain flowers are so tended as to bloom on the days set apart for certain saints, each having a variety cultivated for him or her. The Grange was once a monastery.

Less than eighty years ago there was not a brass band in existence. The very first band entirely of brass dates back to only 1835. Prior to that our military music was produced almost entirely from instruments made of wood, and as recently as 1873 a full regimental band consisted of two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons.

The first mention of the bow and arrow is found in the book of Genesis, where it is mentioned that Ishmael dwelt in the wilderness and became an archer. A bow shot is mentioned also as a measure of distance. In scultpured slates found at Rhorsabad and Nineveh representations of archers occur and the bow seems to have been a weapon in the Assyrian and Persian armies.

The term "watered stock" had its origin on the western cattle ranges. Beef cattle were sold by weight "on the beef" the buyer stipulating that they should not be watered within a specified number of hours before delivery.

There is a custom of immemorable antiquity observed in Westminster school in England on Shrove Tuesday, where the boys "toss the pancake" in the presence of a gathering of relatives, "old boys" and teachers. When all is ready the school cook marches into the great hall bearing the pancake in a pan, and preceded by the dean's pancake over one of the beams and the boys rush into verger who carries a mace. Then the cook throws the a scramble to secure the biggest piece. Before it is reduced quite to atoms the head master calls time and the one who has the largest scrap in his possession wins a guinea. Shrove Tuesday is often called Pancake night, the chief supper dish being pancakes, but there seems to be no authenticated tradition for it.

Dr. Geo. K. Herzog, after an extensive course of studies in the European Medical centers, has returned and is now located in the Whitney Building, 133 Geary street. The Doctor is now making the diseases of women his specialty.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove. Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgr. Phone Market 500

Beginning Sunday Night, August 1st.
SECOND AND LAST WEEK -Matinee Saturday
Frederic Thompson's Massive Production of America's Greatest Dramatic Success

POLLY OF THE CIRCUS

By Margaret Mayo.
Last Time Sunday Night, August 8th.
August 9th "PAID IN FULL."

AMERICAN THEATRE Market St., nr. Seventh. Phone Market 381

One Week Commencing Sunday Matinee, August 1st.
AMERICAN STOCK COMPANY IN The Famous German Military Drama

AT THE SOUND OF TAPS

Special Summer Prices: Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Matinees, 25c and 50c.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Cor. Sutter and Steiner. Class "A" Building. Phone West 1400

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.
Monday Evening, August 2d, and Throughout the Week
The Old Alcazar Favorite, FRANK BACON, in

CHARLEY'S AUNT

The Champion Laugh-Winner.
Prices: Evening, 25c to $1.00. Matinees Saturday and Sunday, 25c to 50c.
MATINEE SATURDAY AND SUNDAY

PRINCESS THEATRE PHONE WEST 663. Ellis Street, near Fillmore. Absolutely Class "A" Building. Matinee, Saturday and Sunday.
S. LOVERICH, MANAGER

Last Two Night, "The Belle of New York."
Beginning Monday Night Next Week Only
The International Musical Comedy Hit

FLORODORA

Magnificent Production—Perfect Cast—Beautiful Girl Chorus.
Popular Prices: Evenings, 25c, 50c, 75c. Saturday and Sunday Matinees, 25c and 50c.

NEW ORPHEUM O'Farrell Street, between Stockton and Powell. Phone Douglas 70

Safest and Most Magnificent Theatre in America
Week Beginning This Sunday Afternoon
MATINEE EVERY DAY
ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

SAM CHIP and MARY MARBLE in The Deft Dialogue with Ditties Designated "IN OLD EDAM"; 6 AMERICAN DANCERS 6; MATTHEWS and ASHLEY; FRANK J. CONROY; GEORGE LE MAIRE & CO.; SCHRODE and MULVEY; GRIFF; HERBERT and WILLING; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES. Last Week—Tremendous Hit, SAM WATSON'S FARMYARD CIRCUS.

Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE Oakland, Cal. Direction H. W. Bishop

Commencing Monday, August 2d, Every Evening
Matinees Saturday and Sunday
BISHOP'S PLAYERS PRESENTING

THE ROSE OF THE RANCHO

With a Magnificent Production and Notable Cast
Soon—"THE SPOILERS."
Entire House, 25c and 50c. All Performances.

NEW CHUTES Fillmore, Eddy, Turk and Webster. San Francisco's Favorite Playground

SUPREME FOR SUMMER TIME FUN
Greatest Open Air Attractions in the West
BEGINNING THIS SUNDAY
GLASSCOCK'S TRAINED ELEPHANTS, Featuring "Little Mike" the Famous Clown Elephant of the Barnum Shows
Last Sunday Appearance of DESPERADO.
New Acts by DEMON and FLORENCE SPRAY.
Special Concerts Afternoon and Night by the

ROYAL BANDA ROMA

Bring the Children to See the LONDON PUNCH AND JUDY SHOW

Nudity on the Stage

(Continued from Page 10.)

terrible intensity of his voice, the wonderful crescendo which he placed on the word 'glare' in this sentence, will not be surprised to learn that a weak, sickly little girl, as I was, should have toppled over in a dead swoon at hearing it so unexpectedly and unjustly addressed to herself in the semi-darkness of the Capulet tomb.

"It is needless to say that the great tragedian was intoxicated.

"On this occasion, after I had been discovered, and a couch had been extemporized for me in my sister's dressing room, I remember hearing such peals on peals of applause for his acting that I lay there in agonized fear that he would add further to my distress by playing so well that the audience would tear the house down in their enthusiasm.

"The next time I saw Booth he was playing with Miss Davenport (Mrs. Lander). The piece was 'The Apostate,' and on this occasion I formed one of the audience. The reader who is familiar with the play will remember where Alvarez gives Florinda to Hemeya, who, receiving her with applause, exclaims, 'Who shall now part us?'

"At that moment on strode the terrible Pescera and roared the one word, 'I!' Booth was intoxicated again! And his whole bearing so reminded me of the previous occasion when he had given me a fright from which I had not yet fully recovered, that, forgetting decorum and everything else, I started from my seat and rushed pellmell out of the theatre.

"On several occasions I saw Edwin Booth, a tall, slender boy, who seemed all eyes, standing behind the scenes intently watching his father's performance, and I remember wondering if the little boy's father ever frightened him as he frightened me."

The Lawyer and the Ring

(Continued from Page 11.)

that this gentleman accuses me of having stolen a ring. Now, your honor, kindly consult my papers and you will learn that my name is Pierre Brezin, that I live at 30 Rue de Rivoli in Paris and am the representative of X & Co., manufacturers of imitation jewelry and precious stones. I am an excellent citizen, very highly esteemed by my business associates and respected throughout the neighborhood in which I live. I am now traveling for X & Co. with these articles," and he took from his pocket a handful of glittering rings and placed them on the table before him.

"These articles are very carefully manufactured and are in perfect imitation of the diamond at a price within the reach of any purse—five francs. I make a profit of two francs on each one, which, though not excessive, allows me to earn from a hundred to a hundred and fifty francs a day. That is the sum and substance of the whole matter, your honor. I beg you now to release me, after taking cognizance of my complaint against this gentleman for libel and false arrest!"

He turned again to the audience and added:

"In asking for your names a moment ago, messieurs, I desired to make sure that you would be present to testify when the case is tried. My arrest was public and I wish now to call your attention to the exceptional humiliation to which I was subjected. You will kindly take note of these facts, as they will be the basis of the civil suit for damages which I intend to bring against this gentleman, who will then have an opportunity to defend himself."

"Why, monsieur! monsieur!" stammered Attorney Escartepoint, almost choking. "You know that you told me—"

"Yes, I know I told you several things," interrupted the pseudo-tramp. "I told you whatever it pleased me to tell you! Success in business nowadays is achieved only by rising to the level of the age. Now this is an age characterized by very curious ideas in respect to probity, and in order to make an easy market for my rings I am obliged to adapt myself to the moral standards of my customers. Therein lies the whole secret of my success. I now bid you good day, messieurs!"

And he walked haughtily past the officers of the law and out into the open air.

Polite Professor

Lieut. Shackleton, in a speech which he made in reply to the toast of his health at the dinner given at the Savoy Hotel, told an interesting story of politeness in the untrodden regions of the Antarctic. His party, he said, were always extremely good-humored and polite, and one professor in particular attained a degree of politeness unusual under such trying circumstances. "Are you busy, Mawson," he called out one night to another member of the party who was in the tent. "I am," said Mawson. "Very busy?" said the professor. "Yes. Very busy." "If you are not too busy, Mawson, I am down a crevasse." The professor was found hanging down a crevasse by four fingers, a position which he could not have occupied for any length of time.

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 56 Kearny street.

If you can't decide where to go—see

PECK-JUDAH CO.

789 MARKET ST., SAN FRANCISCO

They know—Send for "Summer Trips," just out.

LOW RATES

TO

ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION

FOR ROUND TRIP TICKETS

FROM

San Francisco	$32.50
Sacramento	32.50
Lathrop	32.50
Stockton	32.50
Tracy	32.50
Suisun	32.50
Davis	32.50
Napa	32.75
Santa Rosa	33.60
Calistoga	33.95

Greatly reduced rates from other points in California. Tickets sold daily May 25 to September 30, and cover two months' trip going and coming via the famous

SHASTA ROUTE

OF THE

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Stopovers going and coming. Many other routes at slightly higher rates for you to select from.

Write or call on our nearest agent for full details of service, etc., or address

FLOOD BUILDING FOR INFORMATION

Summer Resort Arrivals

Aetna Springs: Capt. A. G. Berry, U. S. N., Albert G. Berry Jr., Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Burns, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Dunphy, Miss Viola Hess, Miss M. Stewart, Mrs. L. R. Mead, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Queen, Mr. and Mrs. L. T. Queen, Mrs. and Miss Queen, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Butler, Mr. and Mrs. Fred J. Butler, David W. Butler, Martin V. Merle, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Schweitzer, Master Maurice Schweitzer Jr., Miss Linda B. Russ, Inyo A. Russ, Mrs. Francis Sievers Jr., Mrs. W. H. Talbot, Miss Talbot, William Talbot, Eric Talbot, Mr. and Mrs. Edger Jones, Chas. Berg, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Gassaway, and Paul Lohse.

Hotel del Coronado: San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. A. Faget, Mr. and Mrs. I. M. Green, D. C. McCord, B. F. Heastand, Mr.

CHANDLER SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AT LOS ALTOS, CAL.

Three and a half miles from Stanford University.

and Mrs. H. T. O'Fallon, L. W. Torrey, A. B. Patterson, W. H. Hovey, John H. Thurston, Mrs. Daniel McKinney, Mrs. M. Wolf, Miss Wolf, G. Horst, Albert Kahn, Miss Emma Kahn, and C. W. Cook.

Hotel del Monte: San Francisco, Mrs. S. A. Jones, Mrs. W. W. Harmon, R. E. Brown, Dr. E. Schmall, Carlton C. Crane, F. W. Blanch, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Johnson and daughter, John Johnson Doran, G. F. Charleston, Anna Kelley, Marion Dittenhoefer, Mrs. Greenhood, Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. Armsby, Major and Mrs. C. H. McKinstry, Mr. and Mrs. George Bertholen, Ivan B. Beer, Mrs. M. T. Serven, Porter Serven, Hother Wisman, Adelaide M. Pollack, Maye R. Carroll, Mrs. B. Weil, Miss M. Weil, Joseph L. Greenebaum, Mrs. Herbert Fleischhacker, two children and nurse, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Dernham, Mrs. J. W. Orr, I. W. Van Landt, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Sweet and chauffeur, Herbert Fleischhacker, Mrs. Hattie Simon, Albert Meyer, Mrs. C. M. Ehrlick, A. M. Rosenbaum, Arthur Bachman, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Jordan, Lawrence W. Jordan, Mrs. J. M. Driscoll, Miss Verdon, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Corkill, son and daughter, and Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Terrill.

Tavern of Tamalpais: San Francisco, M. Newman, Dr. R. A. Day, Miss Claire Brownstone, Adolph A. Son, Annie E. Hartman, Capt. Dittman and wife, S. McIntosh and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Taylor, Miss Agnes Taylor, C. H. Weldron, Rabbi M. S. Levey, Mrs. Jessie Fraser, Miss Laura Fraser, W. Wormley and wife, L. A. Greene, H. F. Baine, Miss E. R. McCord, Miss Patrick, and Mrs. L. A. Edwards.

Hotel Rafael: Albert Fries, Mrs. Gielow, Misses Kumner, W. M. O'Connor, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Smith, Miss McFeely, Miss Bernice Barr, S. M. Heller, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Hughes, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Green, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Greenendyke, Mrs. Jesse D. Carr, and William M. Blaim.

Napa Soda Springs: San Francisco, Mrs. Oppenhenie, Mrs. Marks, Mrs. Jones, Miss M. Profle, Abraham Hein and wife, Miss Blotz, Miss Hogerlin, C. H. Hill and wife, and Henry Bromley.

Wilson's Inn: San Francisco, Miss Florence De Long, Miss Jennie McHechnier, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Hartland, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Weiland, Miss Mae Sparling, Miss Katherine J. Walsh, Miss Anna L. Walsh.

Disastrous Result

A New Jersey politician, in an after-dinner speech, complained that his county was not being rightly treated in the distribution of patronage. Its experience, he said, was not unlike that of Sandy, an old plantation negro, one Christmas morning. His master asked him on Christmas Eve if he intended to hang up his stocking. "Deed I do, boss." The master called Christmas morning. "Well, Sandy, did you hang up your stocking?" "No, boss, I couldn't find no stocking, so I hung up ma pants and tied the bottom of de laigs together." "Well, what did you get?" "I dunno, boss, but I 'spect a nigger—ma pants am gone."

MOTHERS BE CAUTIOUS

In selecting a food for the baby don't experiment. Baby can't stand much experimenting. Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is acted upon by the infant stomach substantially the same as mother's milk. For 50 years it has made glad mothers and started thousands of babies on life's journey with health and happiness.

ON THE TRAIL AT MT. LOWE

Pacific Electric Railway.

Auto Notes

Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Matthews, together with Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Newbert, have just completed a very interesting and enjoyable trip to the southern part of the State and to Mexico. The party left Sacramento on July 4th in a Chalmers-Detroit "30" carrying 200 pounds of luggage. Taking the Coast Road to Los Angeles, they visited Del Monte and the other places of interest along the way. A week was spent at Los Angeles where they attended the Elks' celebration after which they drove to San Diego, and as a matter of course took the run to Tia Juana, Mexico, to see a bull fight. The latter, however, they report as not being much of a success for the bulls would not fight. The car was shipped back to San Francisco, and the party will leave here in a few days for a hunting trip in the northern part of the State, visiting Bell Springs, Highland Springs and other resorts. At Santa Rosa it is expected Mr. W. Albright will join them. Mr. Newbert, in speaking of the trip, was very enthusiastic over the performance of the car, which added so much to the enjoyment of all. This was one of the first 1909 models delivered on this coast and in the year's time it has traveled almost 10,000 miles without a mishap and with the original Diamond Tires.

One of the most welcome incidents to the tourists of this year's Glidden tour was the serving of lunches to the motorists by the Studebaker company when the former passed over the bridge over the St. Joe river at South Bend, Ind. The Studebaker concern departed from the usual custom by serving the lunches in neatly packed pasteboard boxes and handed them to the occupants of the different cars as the latter crossed the bridge. One of the features of the luncheon was the fact that the serving of these did not necessitate the stopping of the machines. Several cars were used by the Studebakers in carrying the lunches to the distributing point.

Among the latest owners of the Chalmers thirties is Mitchell Nathan of C. P. Nathan & Company, Sacramento, who may be seen nightly in his car on the run from Sacramento to Folsom, a distance of forty-four miles for the round trip.

B. T. McCullough of Crown Landing has recently purchased a 6-cylinder Oldsmobile, with 42 inch wheels, and is spending a great deal of time this summer touring in Sacramento Valley. He is much pleased with his car.

Regarding the performance of the Studebaker-Garford "40" in the recent road races at Santa Monica, John Ralph Wilson, a prominent attorney of Los Angeles, and one of the 50,000 persons to witness the races, has written th Studebaker Bros. as follows: "I was in Los Angeles on the 10th and witnessed the automobile race in which the Studebaker car was entered, and want to congratulate the Studebaker Company upon the splendid and consistent showing made by the Studebaker machine in that race. While your machine was not 'in the money,' nevertheless it was my opinion and the expressed opinion of many others that the Studebaker machine made as good a showing in the race as any machine entered. Your machine would perhaps not qualify as a racing machine, but as a consistent, durable and every-ready roadster the Studebaker machine is one which anyone might well be proud of."

A vacation of ten days in a Thomas Limousine at an expense averaging $2.50 per day for all costs pertaining to the car and including the driver's board and lodging, is a new economy mark set by Mrs. C. C. Clay of Fruitvale, who has just returned from a 650 miles tour through Lake County. The car finished with a perfect score and it returned to "Level Lea" with the same air in its tires, which is remarkably good fortune considering the heat encountered. The roads about Middleton and Adams Springs are dusty and rough and go rather had on weak tires and hard riding machines. Mrs. Clay's party consisted of Miss Madeline Clay and Miss Sue Harold. Considerable credit must be given to the driver, Robert Barnat, who is one of the most clever operators in the State, for guiding the Thomas over its successful run.

Lake County proves itself as popular as ever to the motorists and not a day passes that does not see one or more cars starting for that favored spot, or returning from there. The roads are in about the same condition that they were last year, with the worst stretch lying nearest home, viz.: between Sausalito and San Rafael. Dr. R. W. Meek of Oakland has just returned after two weeks of motoring in his little six Thomas, and reports all the regular roads in Lake County in good condition with the decided exception of the approaches to Ukiah. Between the foot of Witter Grade and Ukiah the way is very rough and dusty, and between Ukiah and Vichy Springs it is very bad also. Others in Dr. Meek's party were Mrs. Meek, the Misses Meek and Horace Meek. From Vallejo to Calistoga the road is like a boulevard.

Among the prominent auto parties sojourning at Paraiso Springs recently were Dr. and Mrs. W. B. Coffey, Jos. F. Nolan, Miss Agnes Sargent, Mrs. L. O'Hara, Miss Abbie Schrank, Miss Genevieve Treadwell, Miss Laura Coffey and Dr. and Mrs. E. B. Perrin and child.

A Domestic Eye Remedy

Compounded by Experienced Physicians. Conforms to Pure Food and Drugs Law. Wins Friends Wherever Used. Ask Druggists for Murine Eye Remedy. Try Murine in Your Eyes. You Will Like Murine. Try it in Baby's Eyes. It Soothes.

Do you want an automobile that embodies the latest and most approved in design, an automobile whose makers have spared no expense to make it the most luxurious and easy riding car that skilled workmen can produce from the very finest material, an automobile that is trimmed and finished according to your own specifications, an automobile that is rapidly replacing the finest and most expensive imported cars? Such a car appeals to those who appreciate the fine points of the automobile art and can afford to pay from $3,000 to $5,000 for a car. Such a car is the Studebaker.

Fremont at Mission Studebaker Phone Douglas 3000

Chalmers-Detroit "30"

The beginning and the end car.

In the beginning the initial price is slightly higher, in the end the upkeep and after expense is much less.

"Anybody can cut prices but it takes brain to make a better article."
(Elbert Hubbard.)

Buying a good car is only one step in the right direction.

BUT

Buying a good car from the most reliable dealers on the Pacific Coast is your absolute assurance of satisfaction.

The Pioneer Automobile Company is the largest concern west of Chicago giving its undivided attention to the sale of automobiles. Ten years in business assures our stability and perpetuates our guarantees. Our business motto is "Right or Made Right."

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

901 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

Oakland San Francisco Fresno

A Particular Store for Particular People

TRADE MARK Quality McLean's Service 1158-1168 SUTTER ST SAN FRANCISCO

PHONE FRANKLIN 2810

Cakes

Pound Cake. "Pound for Pound" is the rule in the making of all our Pound Cakes. But in addition, the butter and all the other ingredients must be of the choicest quality. That's why our Pound Cakes are always so sweet and delicious.

Price 75c each.

Special sizes and iced Pound Cakes made to order on short notice.

L. D. McLEAN CO.

IMPORTERS AND GROCERS

1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17438, Dept. No. 12.

GEORGE J. MARTIN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of George J. Martin, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue distant thereon one hundred (100) feet northerly from the northerly line of C Street, running thence northerly along said westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue, twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angle westerly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angle southerly, twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angle easterly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue and the point of commencement. Being a part of Outside Land Block No. 379.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that his title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 30th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
German Savings & Loan Society	530 California Street, San Francisco, Cal.
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17244.

HANNAH EMERY, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Hannah Emery, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Van Ness Avenue, distant eighty (80) feet northerly from the northwesterly corner of Van Ness Avenue, and Turk Street, running thence northerly and along the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches; thence at right angles southerly and parallel with Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles easterly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches to the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue and place of beginning; being a portion of Block Seventy-nine (79) Western Addition;

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: NONE.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Esq., Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market St., San Francisco. 7-10-10

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17318, Dept. No. 4.

KATE E. BOYANTON, sometimes known as KATE E. BOYNTON, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Kate E. Boyanton, sometimes known as Kate E. Boynton, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Eddy Street distant One hundred and twenty (120) feet easterly from the easterly line of Scott Street; running thence easterly along said northerly line of Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet and to the westerly line of Farren Avenue; thence at right angles northerly and along said westerly line of Farren Avenue Seventy-five (75) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet; and thence at right angles southerly Seventy-five (75) feet to the place of beginning. Being a portion of Block No. 431, Western Addition.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that the title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 29th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17750, Dept. No. 5.

EVA NATHAN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of EVA NATHAN, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Jones Street, distant thereon Southerly ninety (90) feet from the Southerly line of Pacific Street, running thence Southerly and along said line of Jones Street forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty seven (137) feet, six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet, six (6) inches to said line of Jones Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of fifty vara lot number Eight Hundred and Sixty-one (861) of the City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit: for judgment establishing and quieting said plaintiff's title to all said real property as the owner thereof in fee simple, and determining all adverse claims thereto, and ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, and for such other and further relief as may be just and proper in the premises, under and pursuant to the provisions of the Act of the Legislature of California entitled, "An Act to provide for the establishment and quieting of title to real property in case of loss and destruction of public records," approved June 16, 1906, and the Act of the said Legislature, amending the same, approved March 6, 1909.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 2nd day of July, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

(Seal) By M. P. BRUTON, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk, a newspaper, on the 17th day of July, A. D. 1909.

DEVOTO & RICHARDSON, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
Foxcroft Building, San Francisco.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco State of California—No. 16627.

ROBERT HECTOR, Jr., Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Robert Hector, Jr., plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest, or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to wit:

Lot number 210 as laid down, delineated and designated on a certain map on file in the office of the recorder of the said City and County of San Francisco, known as "Holiday Map A." Said map was filed in the office of the recorder of the City and County of San Francisco on the 1st day of May 1863.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit, that it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute, that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description, and that plaintiff recover costs herein, and have such other and further relief as may seem meet and proper in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 4th day of June, 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The following persons are said to claim an interest in or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names.	Addresses.
Abraham C. Freeman	3034 Washington St., San Francisco, Cal.
Ellita Gamboni Mazzitelli	San Francisco, Cal.
Frank Shay, Administrator of the estate of William Hale, Deceased,	640 Fairmont avenue, Oakland, California.

Dated, this 4th day of June, 1909.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in San Francisco Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation, on the 19th day of June, 1909.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
45 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. 6-19-10

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No.17271.

WELLS, RUSSELL & COMPANY, (a Corporation), Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest, in or Lien Upon, the Real Property herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Wells, Russell & Company, (a Corporation), plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows

First Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northwesterly line of Natoma Street, formerly Everett Street, distant two hundred (200) feet southwesterly from the intersection of the southwesterly line of Third Street with said line of Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches; thence at a right angle northwesterly eighty (80) feet; thence northeasterly parallel with Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches and thence at a right angle southeasterly eighty (80) feet to the place of beginning; being a portion of the 100 vara Lot No. 34.

Second Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Fourteenth Avenue, distant one hundred and fifty (150) feet westerly from the northwesterly corner of Fourteenth Avenue and P Street; thence westerly along said line of Fourteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet; thence at a right angle northerly two hundred (200) feet to Thirteenth Avenue; thence at a right angle easterly along the south line of Thirteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet, and thence at a right angle southerly two hundred (200) feet to the place of beginning; being a part of the O'Neill and Haley Tract, as per map on file in the Recorder's Office of said City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that its title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover its costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June A. D. 1909. By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attorneys for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 22931, Dept. No. 10

CATHERINE FRANCIS BERTRAND, Plaintiff,
vs.
BENJAMIN A. BERTRAND, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Benjamin A. Bertrand, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion of said plaintiff; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 11th day of May, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk
(Seal) By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ORNBAUN, FRASER & LYNCH, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
727 Pacific Building, San Francisco, Cal. 6-19-10

CERTIFICATE OF COPARTNERSHIP—No. 338.

Know All Men by These Presents:

That J. C. MONTGOMERY and MARY MAGUIRE do hereby certify and declare that they are partners doing business in the State of California, under the firm name and style of the St. Anthony Hotel Company, with principal place of business in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California; that the purposes for which the copartnership is formed are to provide for entertaining strangers and travelers for compensation, and to this end to acquire property by lease or otherwise to be rented, or to be used for the above purposes, but neither partner hereto shall or will acquire any property by lease or otherwise, for any of the purposes herein stated, without first obtaining from his copartner the consent to do so.

That the names in full of all the members of this copartnership and their places of residence are as follows, to-wit: J. C. Montgomery, 825 Howard Street, San Francisco, California, Mary Maguire, 825 Howard Street, San Francisco, California.

Witness our hands and seals this 12th day of July, 1909.

I. C. MONTGOMERY.
MARY MAGUIRE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
City and County of San Francisco—ss.

On this 12th day of July, 1909, before me, I. L. Jacobi, a Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, residing therein, duly commissioned and sworn, personally appeared J. C. Montgomery and Mary Maguire, known to me to be the persons described in, whose names are subscribed to and who executed the within instrument, and they acknowledged to me that they executed the same.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal in said City and County of San Francisco, State of California, the day and year first hereinabove written.

(Seal) I. L. JACOBI,
Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Endorsed: Filed July 13, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys,
Oscar Luning Building, San Francisco, Cal. 7-17-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of JOHN W. FARREN, also known as JOHN W. FARREN, Jr., Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned administratrix of the estate of JOHN W. FARREN, also known as JOHN W. FARREN, Jr., deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said administratrix at the office of her attorney, Neal Power, Esq., Room 545, Mills Building, Northeast corner of Montgomery and Bush Streets, San Francisco, Cal., which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of JOHN W. FARREN, also known as JOHN W. FARREN, Jr., deceased.

MARY A. FARREN,
Administratrix of the Estate of John W. Farren, also known as John W. Farren, Jr., Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, July 31st, 1909.

NEAL POWER, Attorney for Administratrix,
Room 545 Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal. 7-31-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 18016.

MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this Summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

PARCEL NUMBER ONE

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Green Street, distant thereon one hundred and seventeen (117) feet and seven and one-fifth (7 1-5) inches Easterly from the Easterly line of Franklin Street; running thence Easterly and along said Northerly line of Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly and parallel to Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches to the said Northerly line of Green Street and point of commencement.

Being a part of Western Addition Block No. 96.

PARCEL NUMBER TWO

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of "C" Street, distant thereon thirty-two (32) feet and six (6) inches Westerly from the Westerly line of Twenty-fifth (25th) Avenue; running thence Westerly along said Northerly line of "C" Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 356.

PARCEL NUMBER THREE

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of "T" Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the point of beginning.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 1153.

PARCEL NUMBER FOUR

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue, distant two hundred and twenty-five (225) feet Southerly from the Southeasterly corner of "A" Street and Twenty-first Avenue; running thence Southerly along the said Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the place of beginning. The same being a portion of Outside Lands Block Number Three Hundred and Three (303).

PARCEL NUMBER FIVE

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Larkin Street, distant thereon seventy-seven (77) feet and six (6) inches Northerly from the corner formed by the intersection of said Easterly line of Larkin Street with the Northerly line of Union Street, running thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Larkin Street, twenty (20) feet; thence at right angles Easterly sixty (60) feet to the Westerly line of Moore Street; thence at right angles Southerly along said line of Moore Street twenty (20) feet; and thence at right angles Westerly sixty (60) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot No. 1393.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, title, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 26th day of July A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 31st day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., San Francisco, Cal. 7-31-10

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Yards and Planing Mills - 6th and Channel Streets

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Mackenzie Gordon

TENOR

TEACHER OF SINGING { in all its branches, from the rudiments of tone formation to the highest finish and Completion of Public Singing.

Oratorio, Opera and Concert

By appointment only Phone Franklin 3594

Studio: 1350 FRANKLIN ST.

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

Phone Kearny 3657 Res. Phone West 1784

Dr. A. H. Wright

12 to 4 CHRONICLE BUILDING

60 YEARS' EXPERIENCE

PATENTS

TRADE MARKS
DESIGNS
COPYRIGHTS &C.

Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain our opinion free whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. HANDBOOK on Patents sent free. Oldest agency for securing patents.

Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice, without charge, in the Scientific American.

A handsomely illustrated weekly. Largest circulation of any scientific journal. Terms, $3 a year; four months, $1. Sold by all newsdealers.

MUNN & Co. 361 Broadway, New York

Branch Office, 625 F St., Washington, D. C.

PATRICK & CO
RUBBER STAMPS
STENCILS, SEALS, SIGNS & ETC.
126 BUSH ST. SAN FRANCISCO

WHAT WOMEN HAVE SAID ABOUT WOMEN

It is never possible to get at a woman's way, because it is invariably the other way —Nellie Cravey Gillmore.

There is scarcely a woman who does not think herself a minor St. Peter, with the keys of heaven and hell at ther girdle, and the more conscientious she is, the narrower the door she unlocks, and the smaller the number of those who are allowed to enter—E. Lynn Lynton.

It is the popular women who make shipwreck of their lives, and the unpopular ones who sail safely into pleasant havens. My experience is that the attractive woman gets the nice little things and the unattractive ones the nice big things in this world—Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler.

It is an uncommon event to meet a woman who, if put into the confessional of conscience, would not own that at some period of her life she had wished she had been a boy—Marion Harland.

No woman need envy the sphynx her wisdom, if she has learned the uses of silence, and never asks a favor of a hungry man—Myrtle Reed.

There is no use in saying that any particular girl is a spinster from necessity rather than choice. One has but to look at the peculiar specimens of womankind who have married to be certain that there is no one on the wide earth who could not do so if she chose—Myrtle Reed.

The girl with the curly hair and the dimples and the genius for apple-duff may make a very good wife; but these points will not be a vital factor in her success. Neither will a great fortune or social position of itself make life with her for fifty years ideal—Lavina Hart.

A LITTLE HINT

I said: "Don't send me flowers.
They fade and droop and die,
And I'm so sentimental,
They almost make me cry."

I said: "Don't send me bon-bons."
He was a man of wealth,
And bon-bons in profusion
Affect a maiden's health.

He said: "What shall I send you?"
My face was all aglow.
I drew him to me closer
And whispered: "Don't you know?"

—M.

AT THE MEDICAL SCHOOL

Professor (to student)—Now, Miss Lever, if an artery is wounded, let us say in the arm, and the blood gushes out, what is the first thing you would do?

Miss Lever—Faint away.

HE WAS IN LUCK

Doctor (entering hospital)—Well, nurse; how many deaths last night?

"Nine."

"How is that? I wrote out ten prescriptions!"

"The tenth man refused to take the medicine."

10-INCH DISK RECORDS 25c

While They Last

Piano purchasers insured against sickness, death and fire. It will pay you to investigate our easy terms on Pianos before buying.

PETER BACIGALUPI & SONS,

Phonographs and Pianos

941 Market St. Opposite Mason St.

Open Saturday Evenings.

MOVED

Gladding, McBean & Co.

CLAY PRODUCTS

Office

311-317 CROCKER BUILDING

Warehouse

147-151 MINNA STREET

Between New Montgomery and Third

San Francisco, Cal.

The German Savings and Loan Society

(Member of the Associated Savings Bank of S. F.)

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,504,498.68
Deposits June 30, 1908	$36,793,234.04
Total Assets	$39,435,681.38

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

RICHMOND DISTRICT BRANCH, 432 Clement Street, between 5th and 6th Avenues. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. W. C. Heyer, Manager.

H. L. Davis W. D. Fennimore J. W. Davis

California Optical Co.

Makers of Good Glasses

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store at 181 Post Street, near Grant Avenue.

HENRY P. TRICOU

NOTARY PUBLIC

508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711

Residence 852 Grove St. Phone Park 1870

SCIENTIFIC OPTICIAN

MAYERLE'S GERMAN EYE WATER

By Mail 65c

Mayerle's German Eyewater

Highly Recommended for

Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN

Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes, relieves the strain, and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Graduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 960 Market street, opposite Hale's. Phone Franklin 3279.

BISMARCK CAFE

FRITZ MÜLLER & SONS, Proprietors

Seating Capacity, 1800

The only place of its kind in America

Leads in catering to San Francisco's epicures and music lovers

---

POPULAR PRICES

Music noon, evenings and after theatre by the famous Herr Ferdinand Stark's Vienna Orchestra

Pacific Building San Francisco Market and Fourth

Vol. XVII. No. 884. SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 7, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

SAN FRANCISCO TOWN TALK

RICHMOND COAL

IMPORTED SOLELY BY

James and Alex'r Brown

Owners of the Pelaw Main and Richmond Collieries; also Richmond Vale Colliery, Newcastle, N. S. W., Australia

Represented by Wm. Smellie

IF your dealer cannot supply you with genuine Richmond Coal, kindly communicate with us, or Pacific Coast Coal Co., Merchants' Exchange Building. Please note that all other advertisements claiming to sell you Richmond Coal are not authorized by us. They haven't got the goods.

JAMES AND ALEX'R BROWN
334 RUSS BUILDING, MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Sole Wholesale Distributors

PACIFIC COAST COAL CO.

Beale Street Bunkers San Francisco

SUMMER RESORTS

THE VENDOME SAN JOSE

Is the ideal objective point for the motorist. The accommodations are complete and the ride from either side of the bay is delightful. This hotel is unsurpassed in the West for the beauty of its environment and for those qualities which contribute to ease and comfort. H. W. LAKE, Manager.

TAKE TAMALPAIS TRIP

and breathe good air.

Half a mile high in two hours' time. No other trip like it.

Via Sausalito Ferry, Foot of Market Street

BYRON HOT SPRINGS

One of the world's most curative springs, 2½ hours from San Francisco; one of California's best hotels and a delightful place for rest and recreation. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, James Flood Building, any S. P. Agent, or Peck-Judah, 789 Market St., San Francisco, or 553 S. Spring St., Los Angeles, or address manager, Byron Hot Springs, California.

THE PERRY HOTEL

Madison St. and Boren Ave.
SEATTLE, WASH.

Every Modern Convenience—Absolutely Fire Proof
European Plan, The Highest Grade

Under new management, centrally located and commanding a view of the Olympics, Cascade Mountains, Mount Rainier and Puget Sound.

J. S. McTERNAN, Manager

HOTEL WASHINGTON

J. M. LUX, MANAGER

SEATTLE, WASH.

A magnificent modern structure involving over One Million and a Half Dollars. Conducted on Most liberal ideas of Experience. Its appointments and service cannot be excelled in the United States. The management cordially invites your patronage.

HOTEL WASHINGTON ANNEX

SEATTLE, WASH.

Best Rooms Best Service
Strictly First-Class

J. H. DAVIS - - - - - Proprietor

HOTEL NORMANDIE

SUTTER AND GOUGH STREETS

A comfortable, high order, uptown hotel, now under the management of

THOS. H. SHEDDEN, Formerly Manager of St. Dunstan's.

HOTEL HARCOURT

Formerly the Nordhoff.

SUTTER AND LARKIN STREETS

AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN

An Elegantly Furnished Modern Home. Phone Franklin 2100

Montara Inn

At Montara on the Ocean Shore Railroad

A delightful place to rest. 45 minutes from San Francisco. Pure mountain water and fresh dairy products. The best sheltered and widest sandy beach on the coast. No undertow; splendid bathing. Address for accomodations, Manager, Montara Inn, Montara, Calif.

SUMMER RESORTS

Hotel and Grounds

Plan to spend your vacation and your week-end outings at

HOTEL DEL MONTE

during

The Annual Month of Sports---August 15 to September 15th

Annual Dog Show — Annual Golf Tournament

First State Bridge Whist Congress — Annual Tennis Tournament

Opening of Pebble Beach Lodge

Make your plans to be there. Write for rates and reservations to-day to H. R. WARNER, Manager.

WITTER SPRINGS HOTEL

The Automobile Headquarters of Lake County.

The most delightful place to rest and get well. Every comfort; large, airy rooms, with hot and cold water; private baths.

Witter Springs Water Works Wonders

For people afflicted with Stomach, Liver or Kidney Trouble. Absolutely cures Eczema.

Address Peck-Judah Information Bureaus, or reservations can be made at City Office, Westbank Building, 830 Market Street.

NAPA SODA SPRINGS HOTEL

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

California's famous mountain spa, only 50 miles from San Francisco. The nearest watering place and summer resort to the city. 1,000 feet elevation, overlooking 25 miles of beautiful Napa Valley. For terms address Manager Napa Soda Springs Hotel, Napa County, Cal.

Boca Hotel and Annex

TRUCKEE RIVER

Address CHAS. GARRISON, BOCA, CAL.

CAMP MEEKER

Own Summer Home in Mountains of Sonoma County

Equable climate. Lots $15 up. Cottages built $85 up. Depot, stores, restaurant, hotel, phone, postoffice, express, churches and sawmill; 1800 lots sold; 600 cottages built. Sausalito ferry. M. C. MEEKER, Camp Meeker, Sonoma County.

ROSS McMAHON AWNING AND TENT CO.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

Tents, Awnings, Hammocks, Bags and Covers

Phone Kearny 2030 — 403 BATTERY STREET

SPEND THE WEEK END AT

ÆTNA SPRINGS

Leave San Francisco at 3:45 p. m., Friday or Saturday via Sausalito. Railroad round trip, $7, including enjoyable ride in our fine automobiles from St. Helena to Aetna Springs and return.

Illustrated Booklet mailed free on application.

Aetna Springs Co., Aetna Springs, Napa Co., Cal.

PARAISO SPRINGS

MONTEREY CO., CAL.

The most accessible of all resorts; a delightful terminal for an automobile trip. Take 8 a. m. train from Third and Townsend; you arrive at spring 1 p. m. for lunch. Natural hot soda and sulphur plunge and tub baths, 104 to 116 degrees, for rheumatism, malaria and all stomach troubles. Iron and arsenic waters. Altitude 1400 feet. H. H. McGOWAN, Proprietor.

PINE LODGE

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

In the mountains by the sea. Surroundings perfect for rest and recreation. Trout stream, boating, bathing. Home garden of berries and vegetables. New hotel and cottages, modern conveniences. Two miles from Santa Cruz. Rates $9.00 per week and upwards. For particulars address PINE LODGE, Santa Cruz, Cal.

FALLEN LEAF LODGE

LAKE TAHOE, CAL.

New home-like resort at the head of Fallen Leaf Lake; five miles south of Lake Tahoe. Centrally situated in the grandest part of the Lake Tahoe Scenic Wonderland. Rates $14.00 per week and upward. HARRY WHITCOMB, Manager, Fallen Leaf, Lake Tahoe, Cal.

GILROY HOT SPRINGS

Only four hours from San Francisco; delightful stage ride over the best kept mountain road in California. Unsurpassed table, health-giving waters, telephone, postoffice. Rates $12 to $17.50 a week; baths free. Trains leave Third and Townsend streets at 9 a. m. Direct stage connection. See Peck-Judah, 789 Market street.

W. J. McDONALD, Proprietor.

SUTHERLAND'S

One of Nature's Most Charming Spots for a Summer Outing. Write for rates. Guerneville, Sonoma Co., Cal.

YOSEMITE

SENTINEL HOTEL — Open the Year Round; Steam Heated; Electric Lighted.

CAMP YOSEMITE — Electric Lighted; Opened May 1st; the Largest Hotel-Camp on the Coast.

Under One Management. For Rates, Reservations or other information, address J. B. COOK, Proprietor, Yosemite, Cal.

Leading Hotels and Resorts

LONG BEACH SANITARIUM

LONG BEACH, CALIF.

Battle Creek Sanitarium Methods

A splendidly equipped QUIET, REFINED and MODERN medical and surgical Institution BY-THE-SEA, where the sick, run down or work-tired may go and know that they will receive the very best of care and attention at reasonable rates. Gentlemen and Lady Physicians. Graduate nurses only. Climate exceptionally fine. Cool in summer, warm and dry in winter. Descriptive Booklet mailed FREE. W. RAY SIMPSON, Manager.

Long Distance Phones in Every Room

YE ALPINE TAVERN

Beautiful Mountain Resort on Mt. Love

Just a mile above the sea. American plan $3.00 per day, $15 per week. Choice of rooms in hotel or cottages. Spend a vacation 5,000 feet above the sea, among great pines and oaks. For information, D. A. Munger, General Agent, Pacific Electric R. R., Los Angeles, or office.

HOTEL ALEXANDRIA

LOS ANGELES

IN SAFETY, SERVICE
AND SANITATION

HAS TAKEN ITS PLACE
AMONG THE BEST HOTELS

A. C. BILICKE, President

S. J. WHITMORE, Vice-Pres. and Gen. Mgr. JOS. REICHL, Asst. Mgr.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO

CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. Power boats from the Hotel meet passengers from the North on the arrival of the Pacific Coast S. S. Co. steamers. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, 334 S. Spring St., Los Angeles.

LAGUNA BEACH

35 miles south of Los Angeles; 8 miles west of Irvine, which is on the El Camino Real

A delightful, cosy, secluded place on the Pacific Ocean. Fine bathing, good hotel and cottages. No grade; oiled roads. Address Manager Laguna Beach Hotel, Laguna Beach, Cal.

ALDER GLEN SPRINGS

In the mountains above Cloverdale. Magnesia, soda, iron, sulphur and arsenic springs. Finest fishing and hunting. Bathing in the Russian River. Large new dancing pavilion this year. For accommodations address

J. A. SERRES, Cloverdale P. O.

THE ANGELUS

LOS ANGELES

One of California's Best Hotels
Centrally located; street cars direct to hotel.
Rates $1.50 per Day Up

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

CAMERAS

Kodaks, Developing, Printing, Supplies, Etc.

"Don't take a vacation unless you take pictures as you go along"

462-464 THIRTEENTH STREET, Between Broadway and Washington

SMITH BROS. STATIONERS OAKLAND

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, August 7, 1909. No. 884.

THE KING AND QUEEN OF SPAIN

The large picture shows King Alfonso of Spain in his carriage on the occasion of his visit on March 10 and 12 of this year to Barcelona, the scene of last week's rioting. Because of the fact that Barcelona is the hotbed of anarchy, violence was feared, and unusual precautions were taken to insure the safety of the monarch. But contrary to general expectations, the most intense enthusiasm for the king was shown. This is in violent contrast to the feeling that has been displayed against the king during the present trouble. In an upper corner of this picture is shown Queen Victoria and her two eldest children, the one in the carriage being the heir to the throne, while the one in her arms is the Infant Jaime.

KING ALFONSO

On whose head the anarchists of Spain have put a price. He is here shown with Wilbur Wright in the latter's aeroplane.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor
Ralph A Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION—One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.
Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.
The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.
For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.
Los Angeles office, 427 South Main Street
Seattle office, 804 Third Avenue.
We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

Brewer's Idea of the Limit

The Hon. David J. Brewer, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, was interviewed in Milwaukee last week on the subject of the administration of the law and he made many interesting observations. He said, among other things, "Taking, as sometimes happens, four to six weeks to empanel a jury is an outrage." Apparently Justice Brewer is not familiar with the tortuous methods that are pursued in San Francisco by the learned judges who preside over our criminal courts. For it is evident that Justice Brewer believes that even in exceptional cases not more than six weeks' time is ever consumed in the empanelment of a jury anywhere in this country. It is reasonable to infer that the learned jurist has never heard of those distinguished exponents of the California method of empaneling a jury, the Hon. Wm. P. Lawlor and the Hon. Frank H. Dunne, the most celebrated of western reformers of the bench whose bold and wonderful innovations ensure for them lasting renown. Doubtless it would shock the old-fashioned Federal jurist to learn that in San Francisco there is never any undue haste in the empanelment of a jury, and that quite often it takes as long to get twelve good men and true into the box as to circle the globe by slow freight.

Curbing Labor Unions

One of the most encouraging examples extant of the curbing of the viciousness of labor unions is furnished in Indiana, and more especially in Indianapolis, where through intelligent co-operation business men and employers have succeeded to a remarkable degree in establishing the open shop. So far have the unions been subdued that Edward Perkins, president of the Indiana State Federation of Labor, declares that organized labor in Indianapolis is a joke. At present, out of 45,000 men employed in the industries of Indianapolis fully 35,000 of whom are skilled laborers, only 6,500 belong to labor unions. Of the entire population of the city less than 7 per cent belong to unions. This condition is due mainly to the efforts of David Parry, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, who several years ago started an open shop movement that has spread to every city in Indiana, bringing about a most desirable state of industrial freedom. None of the shops which have declared for the principle of running their business in their own way are non-union. They simply make no discrimination in hiring men, taking union or non-union employees without partiality. The only test is efficiency. The change was brought about without any violence, and entirely through intelligent co-operation. In the city of Muncie, for instance, the unions were very strong until the occasion of a street car strike five years ago. The unions took up the cause of the strikers, and declared a boycott on all who should patronize the cars. Business men, frightened by this threat, ceased riding for a time. Then, wearying of the prolonged strike, they declared their defiance of the boycott, rode on the cars and dared the strikers to do their worst. The strike almost immediately collapsed, and since that time the unions have been dying out. The business men found what co-operation could accomplish, and benefited by the lesson. In Anderson, the center of the natural gas industry, the union bogie terrorized people for a long time, until one manufacturer shut down his place and declared that he would keep it closed until he could run it with union or non-union men as he pleased. The Industrial Association sent him a few men, and these he added to from time to time until he had a complete and efficient force. Others followed his example, and Anderson was freed from the tyranny of the unions. At Fort Wayne the Bass Machine Shops after continual trouble with organized labor declared for the open shop and took on non-union men. The strikers picketed the place and rioting was threatened. The business men of the city organized, armed themselves, and patroled the machine shops night after night. This dumfounded the union men, and they gave up the fight, with the result that in factory after factory the managers employed whoever applied for work regardless of affiliations. Walking delegates were not allowed in the factories and soon found themselves without an occupation.

Defending Calvin

Just now the religious press of the East is engaged in a defense of John Calvin, especially with regard to his act in bringing about the death of Servetus, the French theologian and physician who denied the doctrine of the Trinity. One of the warmest in defense of this grim old Presbyterian autocrat and inquisitioner is the Congregationalist and Christian World, which would make the moral code a flexible and variable thing, adapted to times and conditions. According to this paper's reasoning, what is murder now was a few hundred years ago but a minor offense. To be sure, the commandment says, "Thou shalt not kill," but when it was promulgated the fact was not taken into consideration that in time there would spring up an intolerant sect whose creed would be, "Believe me or die." Had there been a prophetic eye as well as a desire to form precepts for the guidance of the world the commandment would have read, "Thou shalt not kill any except narrow-minded bigoted people who show their intolerance by refusing to believe as you do. Kill them off in the most torturous manner imaginable." "If we had lived in Calvin's time," says the paper referred to, "we would have carried fagots to the burning." Doubtless this pious Christian is correct in his conclusions in so far as he and other militant religionists are concerned. The spirit of religious bigotry is the same today as it was in Calvin's time and as it was thousands of years before the Geneva churchman was born. The work of Almighty God, even among modern zealots, is not to be as Origen maintained, the healing of every creature, but the final overthrow of those who reject one set of arbitrary propositions only to adopt another set of not less arbitrary assumptions. Moses, though a merciful man, ran through the camp of the Israelites with great fury and cut the throats of thirty thousand of them because they had fallen into idolatry. In many periods of the world's history since the time of Moses religious zeal has run amuck and slaughtered heretics. Tyranny ever young and ever old, whether inspired by politics or love of God, constantly reproduces herself with the same strong features, with the same instruments of cruelty and torture in her hand The ferocity exhibited by Moors, Turks and Russians in the cause of religion in this twentieth century is an ugly thing but not any uglier than the brutish fanaticism exhibited by our Puritan forbears in New England. The Puritans, who derived their conception of their duty to God from the preachments of Calvin, believed that the way to make religion flourish was to inflict physical punishment on sinners and heretics. The Christian Intelligence which is less sanguinary in its views than the Congregationalist and Christian World, points out as a mitigating circumstance in connection with the murder of Servetus that Calvin did not want him burned at the stake, being in favor of a more humane manner of extinction. Thus we see that, reasoning in the cause of religion today, men are as capable of drawing subtle distinctions in defense of murder as they were in Calvin's time. All unconscious of what its naive sophistries imply, the Intelligence argues that we should not judge Calvin in the light of the twentieth century; but why not since it is evident that we are still governed by the same instincts, the same feelings and the same passions? If in this Christian country today we do not behead people for not agreeing with us, it is only because we are governed through institutions that put restraints on our impulses. We are as passionately engaged in inciting religious hatreds as were the followers of Calvin, and our mobs are as blindly furious as they were when at his behest they beheaded Jacques Gruet for having written impious letters and libertine verses "and for working to overthrow ecclesiastical ordinances." It has been said of Calvin whom the good Christians of this country are defending today, and by one who was far from biased in favor of the Catholic church that not the worst tyrants in their saturnalias ever gave more horribly burlesque reasons for their cruelties than he, and that the career of Robespierre can alone picture to the minds of the present day that of Calvin, who, founding his power on the same bases, was as despotic and as cruel as the lawyer of Arras. The truth about Calvin is that far from thinking that God, who sends his rain and sunshine on the just and on the unjust may have had some fatherly and merciful purpose even for conscientious "papists," he saw in them mere brands for the burning and impatiently waited until all should be plunged into the lake of fire.

The Sickness of the World

"Every country of this Old World is sick and needs a physician," says the Marquis de Castellane, Paris correspondent of the Sunday Examiner. Judging from what we read in the Hearst paper nearly every day in the week there is a very large country in this New World which is also sick and in need of a physician. To believe what we are told through the medium of the Hearst paper by a distinguished editor versed in the philosophy of Karl Marx this country is suffering from the same malady that rages in Spain, France and other lands that are infested with doctrinaire devotees of the Benthamite chimera of rationing out happiness and maximizing felicity. This malady, which, by the way, has existed in all ages, and has been pronounced by learned philosophers essential to human progress, is inequality. The cure advocated by those who have visions of a society of the future where all the evils of the present day have been cast out is socialism, which is nothing more nor less than the abolition of private property in most things and the substitution of individual business enterprise by public ownership and control of all capital. Editor Brisbane of the Hearst syndicate, the great American disciple of Karl Marx, knowing that we are not yet prepared to assimilate his patent nostrum for the cure of inequality hopes to suggestionize us into a state of receptivity, and he is industriously seeking the realization of this hope through socialistic preachments disguised as disquisitions on the inalienable rights of the multitude and the traditional injustice of the capitalistic class. Mr. Brisbane is not an avowed socialist, the reason being that his employer Mr. Hearst cannot afford to proclaim openly the real reason of his prejudice against the institutions of his country and the motive of his assaults on the principles of our government. Hence the fundamental difference between Mr. Brisbane's methods and the methods of the average fanatical Marxist is the difference between an Examiner editorial dripping with compassion for the plain people and an editorial in the Appeal of Reason designed to incite the mob to fury and violence against capital. Most of our readers are familiar with the style and the substance of a Brisbane appeal to prejudice. Here are a few choice paragraphs from the Appeal of Reason, the most widely read of all the socialist weeklies and one that is spoken of in terms of admiration by the Christian Socialist Fellowship:

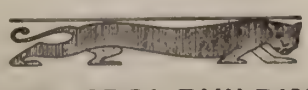
The system we live under is responsible for every murder, every case of drunkenness, every breach of confidence, every case of graft and boodling, every theft, prostitution and oppression.

As the capitalists make the law, an appeal for law and order under the present regime is merely a demand that you obey your masters, the capitalists.

Get next to the game. Men swindle you work people out of great wealth, then use this wealth to prostitute your women. The hundreds of thousands of fallen women is proof of this statement. Rich men and rich women lead shady lives to a great extent.

Elections are a farce, courts are merely for holding the working people while they are skinned. And this is liberty! * * * And you chumps believe it and work for it.

There is a crime in every bill passed by Congress; there is a crime in every act that upholds the capitalist system; not crimes in the eyes of the law, but crimes against justice and the people.



The Hub
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

OUR FALL AND WINTER MODELS OF DAY AND EVENING CLOTHES ARE EXACT REPRODUCTIONS THAT WILL BE SEEN NEXT MONTH AT THE INTERNATIONAL EVENT OF THE NEW YORK CLOTHES SHOW. WE SELECT THE BEST MAKERS, PICK OUT THE NEWEST FABRICS AND GIVE YOU UNCOMMON STYLE. OUR CLOTHES ARE EXCLUSIVE.

All Our Fall Models Have
The Hub
Chas Keilus & Co.
San Francisco.
The New Ham-Shaped Sleeve.

Come here and get your clothes. Here you only pay for cloth and make. You also get the best clothes brain, full of metropolitan fashion and ideas. That's certainly a plausible incentive that should interest good dressers. Our clothes are tailored with precision. Specially adapted for particular men. Our Fall Suits and Overcoats are here. They're just full of snap and style ginger.

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

Is it any more foolish for the working class of Russia to sustain its brutal nobility than for you Americans to sustain your brutal aristocracy?

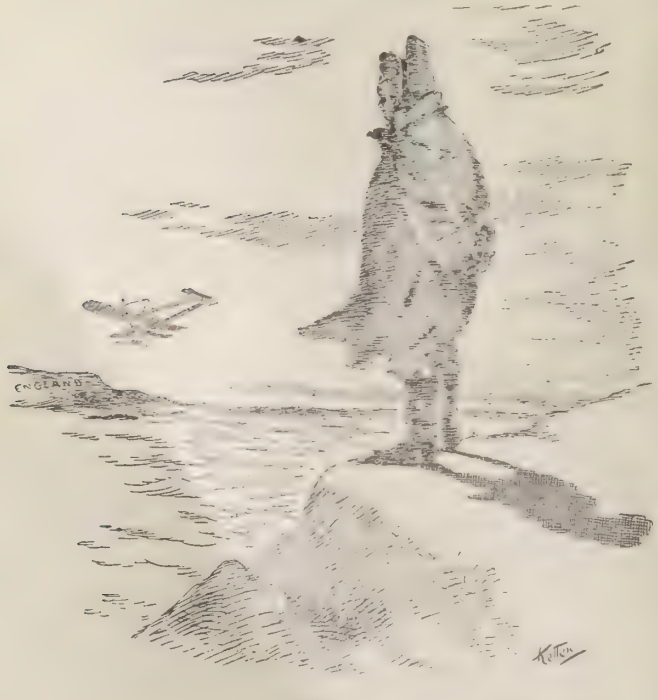
The rich confiscate the property of the poor without any process of law—by cunning and force of economic power. * * * The poor are compelled to work for the rich and produce five to ten times as much wealth as their wages represent.

The crimes the poor commit are logical to the environments made by the action of the rich, and hence the poor are not really to blame.

Under socialism excursions by railroad and water will be going all the time, and the people will have time and means to enjoy them.

Some of these days the workers are going to wake up and enforce a few of these much talked about "unwritten laws," especially one that the earth and the fulness thereof is the collective property of all the people.

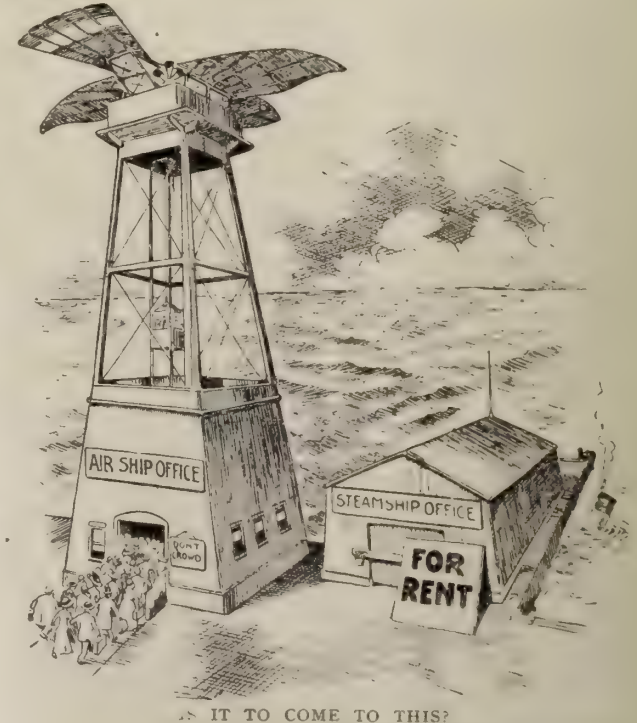
Military maps locate every factory of importance in America. This is because our capitalist Government is preparing itself to fight the laborer in the interest of the rich.



The foregoing incendiary paragraphs embody the choicest sentiments and favorite falsehoods of the more candid American Socialists who are struggling with all their might to make this country as sick as the countries of the Old World. They embody the sentiments of revolutionists who regard Mr. Brisbane as one of their inspired and most ardent prophets. Like him they are waiting for some coup d'etat to start us triumphantly on a new era with a glorious irreducible minimum as the basis for all the moral and economical changes which are to make the world as we know it unrecognizable. Equality is their watchword. "It is probable," said Malthus, "that if the world were to last for any number of thousand years systems of equality would be among those errors which, like the tunes of a barrel organ, will never cease to return at certain intervals." The tune that is now playing has been ringing in the ears of men since the days of the French Revolution, the authors of which based their vast fabric of political change on the equality of man and the sovereignty of the people; and if any lesson is to be learnt from their experience it is the vanity of doctrinaires and the folly of philosophers. Not content with laying their hands on the mysteries of religion they turned men aside from the practical reforms for which they were disposed to a region of nebulous and impossible illusions, and setting theory above practice in a vain endeavor to satisfy in politics that which finds its legitimate place only in science, they sacrificed actual good and possible advantage for abstract principles and the rights of man, and as result France has been involved in revolution ever since—Charles X, Louis Philippe, the Republic, the Empire, the Republic again and now anti-militarism and anti-patriotism, all links in a chain which apparently no human statesmanship can break. France is sick today and so is every country in which crazy socialism is rampant.

A Vision

I saw this monstrous grave the earth
Shake with a spasm as though of birth,
And shudder with a sullen sound,
As though the dead stirred in the ground.
And that great angel girt with flame
Cried till the heavens were rent around,
"Come forth, ye dead!"—Yet no man came.



Then there was silence overhead;
But far below the ancient dead
Muttered as if in mockery;
And there was darkness in the sky,
And rolling through the realm of death,
Laughter and some obscure reply,
With tongues that none interpreteth.

—Margaret Wood.

IF--

-New York World

IS IT TO COME TO THIS?

—Philadelphia Record

Shaw's Latest Play

Despite the Censor, Famous Satirist Produces New Drama Which Begins and Ends Nowhere, But Conveys the Author's Iconoclastic Views on Social and Political Problems.

By Francis West

Thanks to the vigilant stupidity of England's play censor, George Bernard Shaw's latest play, "Press Cuttings," has been given a profitable production. When the news came that the censor had forbidden the production of the play, tickets had been sold and rehearsals were in progress. The ban was avoided by forming a play-producing society called the Civic and Dramatic League. Memberships were sold at five and ten shillings each, and because of the advertising that the censor had provided, two largely attended matinees were given.

Shaw could have saved the actors' salaries and made more money by hiring a hall and delivering a lecture embodying the ideas that he has chosen to set forth in the play, which is nothing more or less than his usual iconoclastic, paradoxical jumble of social and political problems for which he offers little or no solution. The plot is negligible, and the end of the play has little to distinguish it from the beginning or the middle, everything being left unsettled.

The time of the play is three years hence; in the interval military conscription in England has been established. There are certain figureheads portrayed, the General, the conscript, the Prime Minister, two types of anti-suffragists and a charwoman, who is the mouthpiece of woman's grievances. She has grumbled about the commandant swearing at her and General Mitchener tries to pacify her wrath.

Mitchener—When a man has risked his life on eight battlefields, Mrs. Farrell, he has given sufficient proof of his self-control to be excused a little strong language.

Mrs. Farrell—Would you put up with bad language from me because I've risked my life eight times in childbed?

Mitchener—My dear Mrs. Farrell, you surely would not compare a risk of that harmless domestic kind to the fearful risks of the battlefield.

Mrs. Farrell—I wouldn't compare risks run to bear livin' people into the world to risks run to blow dhem out of it. A mother's risk is jooty; a soldier's is nothin' but divilmint.

Mitchner(nettled)—Let me tell you, Mrs. Farrell, that if the men did not fight, the women would have to fight themselves. We spare you that, at all events.

Mrs. Farrell—You can't help yourselves. If three-quarters of you was killed we could replace you with the help of the other quarter. If three-quarters of us was killed how many people would there be in England in another generation? If it wasn't for that, the men'd put the fighting on us, just as they put all the other dhrudgery. What would you do if we was all kilt? Would you go to bed and have twins?

Mitchener—Really, Mrs. Farrell, you must discuss these questions with a medical man. You make me blush, positively.

Mrs. Farrell (grumbling to herself)—A good job, too. If I could have made Farrell blush I wouldn't have had to risk me life so often. You 'n your risks 'n your bravery 'n your self-conthrol, indeed! "Why don't yer conthrol yourself?" I says to Farrell. "It's agen me religion," he sez.

Later she says in speaking to her daughter, about to marry a Duke's son: "Wait'll you're married yourself, me fine lady; you'll find out that every woman's a charwoman from the day she's married."

General Mitchener and Balsquith, the Prime Minister, have numerous arguments. Apropos of a projected campaign against the suffragettes:

Mitchener—A masterpiece of strategy. Let me explain. The suffragettes are a very small body, but they are numerous enough to be troublesome—even dangerous—when they are all concentrated in one place, say in Parliament Square. But by making a two mile radius and pushing them beyond it you scatter their attack over a circular line twelve miles long. Just what Wellington would have done.

Balsquith—But the women won't go.

Mitchener—Nonsense; they must go.

Balsquith—They won't.

Mitchener—What does Sandstone say?

Balsquith—He says shoot them down.

Mitchener—Of course.

Balsquith—You're not serious?

Mitchener—I'm perfectly serious.

Balsquith—But you can't shoot them down! Women, you know!

Mitchener (stradding confidently)—Yes, you can. Strange as it may seem to you as a civilian, Balsquith, if you point a rifle at a woman and fire it she will drop exactly as a man drops.

Balsquith—But public opinion would never stand it.

Mitchener (walking about and laying down the law)—There's no such thing as public opinion!

Balsquith—No such thing as public opinion?

Mitchener—Absolutely no such thing. There are certain persons who entertain certain opinions. Well, shoot them down. When you have shot them down there are no longer any persons entertaining those opinions alive; consequently there is no longer any more of the public opinion you are so much afraid of. Grasp that fact, my dear Balsquith, and you have grasped the secret of government. Public opinion is mind. Mind is inseparable from matter. Shoot down the matter and you kill the mind.

On the German invasion scare:

Balsquith—The Germans have laid down four more Dreadnoughts.

Mitchener—Then you must lay down twelve.

Balsquith—Oh, yes; it's easy to say that, but think of what they'll cost.

Mitchener—Think of what it would cost to be invaded by Germany and forced to pay an indemnity of five hundred millions.

Balsquith—But you said that if you got compulsory service there would be an end of the danger of invasion.

Mitchener—On the contrary, my dear fellow, it increases the danger tenfold, because it increases German jealousy of our military supremacy.

Balsquith—After all why should the Germans invade us?

Mitchener—Why shouldn't they? What else has their army to do? What else are they building a navy for?

Balsquith—Well, we never think of invading Germany.

Mitchener—Yes, we do. I have thought of nothing else for the last ten years. Say what you will, Balsquith, the Germans have never recognized, and until they get a stern lesson they never will recognize the plain fact that the interests of the British Empire are paramount and that the command of the sea belongs by nature to England.

Balsquith—But if they won't recognize it what can I do?

Mitchener—Shoot them down.

(Continued on Page 33.)

J. C. WILSON

BROKER

Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

Literary Friendships

An Old Book, Published in 1861 That Tells of Many Intimacies Between Men of Genius From the Time of Socrates Down to That of Charles Lamb.

By Robert McTavish.

Old and forgotten books sometimes yield infinite treasures. Such a one is "Celebrated Literary Friendships," written by Mrs. Thompson and published in London in 1861. It abounds in accounts of the friendships of great writers with each other, and is rich in anecdote and reminiscence. Going far back, the author tells of the friendship of Socrates and Alcibiades, two men totally different from each other in thoughts, manners and ideals—if Alcibiades could be said to have any ideals. Alcibiades was handsome, vain, foppish, impulsive, while Socrates was an ugly, stoical, logical, plain-spoken, austere old curmudgeon, with little sympathy for the frivolous things of life. Yet they clung to each other, Alcibiades attempting from time to time to follow the philosopher's footsteps, but always returning to the pleasures of life that could be found among the gay people of society. Socrates had an equally strong friend in Plato, from whom he was almost inseparable for eleven years. It is told that when Plato's father found that his son was to become the pupil of the "ugly, unsandaled, poorly clad and half-crazed man he had so often met in the workshops, in the streets and the market, taking, arguing, and divining the character of those about him," he was horrified. But a close companionship that was terminated only when Socrates took the hemlock, was formed.

The author takes a long leap from the time of the old philosophers, and the rest of her book deals mainly with English writers and men of affairs. As great as the contrast between Socrates and Alcibiades was that between Alexander Pope and Lord Bolingbroke, the latter being handsome and commanding in person, accomplished and learned in mind, and joyous and affectionate in heart. But he was rather weak, irresolute and profligate, mainly because he had been brought up under Puritanical influences that he detested, and that in a measure soured him. Pope was puny, sickly, irrascible, and full of those weaknesses and whimsicalities that are peculiar to confirmed invalids. There was much in him that might disgust many, prejudice others and disconcert all. Yet to those who knew him as Bolingbroke did, Pope had many lovable qualities. At the dying bed of Pope his friend said to Spence, the poet: "I never knew a man who had so tender a heart for his friends or a more general regard for mankind." On the other hand, Pope is quoted as saying of Bolingbroke, that he was one of the best men and the greatest friends he ever knew. Their friendship was extended over a period of thirty years, and was consistent throughout. It was a firm, manly and beneficient friendship that made Bolingbroke more noble and Pope less bitter.

The names of Addison and Steele can never be dissociated. Posterity never grows weary of their writings or their lives. We forget their rubs and jars and final quarrel, and remember only their easy wit and bewitching pleasantry. They first met at the Charterhouse as boys, and their friendship remained unbroken until the memorable discussion on the Peerage Bill. Steele opposed it in a Saturday paper called the "Plebeian," and Addison defended it in the "Old Whig." It was impossible that they should mistake the style and treatment in each others anonymous contributions, and in the second papers both indulged in little personalities that formally disclosed their authorship and estranged them forever. During all their intercourse before the final break, Addison had much to endure. Steele was profligate, thriftless, and made many promises of reformation that were broken at the least temptation. Addison's forbearance with his friend's faults was revealed by Steele when he wrote to his wife in 1717, "I ask no favor of Mr. Secretary Addison." As in so many other cases, the contrast between them was decided in every way. As the author of the reminiscences says, "Addison was sober, fastidious and self-possessed, while Steele was rollicking, negligent, and at his wits' end. He was always crying out for the necessaries of life, yet never seemed to be wanting any. He carried out to a nicety Addison's idea of a Frenchman, and like the mute in his own play of 'The Funeral, or Grief a la Mode,' who looked gladder the more shillings he received to be sorrowful, the more loans and gratuities Steele received to make him a glad man, the more determined he seems to have been to play the fool." After Addison's death, Steel's love for him was revived, and he wrote a tender panegyric on his former friend and enemy.

There was another trio of friends not less remarkable—Samuel Johnson, Oliver Goldsmith and Mrs. Thrale. The friendship of the two men had its real inception at a dinner to which Goldsmith invited Johnson in order that the latter might meet a few celebrities. Johnson appeared at the dinner in a new suit of clothes and a new wig decorously powdered—a great contrast to his usual snuffy appearance. Bishop Percy, who was of the dinner company, rallied him on his sudden dandyism. "Why, sir," answered Johnson, "I hear that Goldsmith, who is a very great sloven, justifies his disregard of cleanliness by quoting my practices, and I am desirous this night to show him a better example." It was a wonderful evening, and was the beginning of an intimacy between the philosopher and the poet that was never broken. Their friendship was deep, genuine and without affectation. "Between Goldsmith and Johnson," says Mrs. Thompson, "there were at least two things in common—a certain coarseness and a marvelous generosity; one had the greater sensibility and the other the deeper mind. They always parted as rivals and met as friends. Those who blamed the heaviness of the one praised the sprightliness of the other. Goldsmith was a bundle of oddities, and Johnson a bundle of contradictions."

Johnson was fifty-six years old when he met Mrs. Thrale, who rescued him from uncomfortable lodgings and saw to it that he lived in as civilized a manner as his nature would permit. Their friendship was continued after the death of Thrale, but was never very strong subsequent to Mrs. Thrale's marriage to Piozzi. Johnson objected to this marriage, and regarding it assumed an offensively dictatorial manner that wounded his old friend deeply. They met after that, but on a different footing. The author concludes her account of this trio of friends by saying: "Goldsmith said a witty thing when he said that Johnson was a bear in nothing but his skin. His roughness, dogmatism and literary dictatorship are least offensive when seen through the warmer atmosphere of his friendly congenialities. Of Boswell we have said nothing, and we think justly; for was he not the man who told Hannah More he was building Johnson's pyramid, taking care to get astride of it himself?"

Another triple friendship was that between Coleridge, Southey and Lamb. There was, however, little in com-

(Continued on Page 35.)

We have moved into our new store at
222 Stockton St., facing Union Square

ROBERTSON'S
BOOKSELLER
ENGRAVER AND STATIONER

The Course of True Love

By Alfred af Hedenstjerna (From the Swedish)

He was a bright, cheerful lad, who had adopted farming as a vocation. He had honest blue eyes, heavy-soled riding boots with shiny uppers, and a position as overseer on the estate of Mr. Borst in Lindacker.

She was a blithe young girl, who had just left a school for housekeeping. She possessed a blue-checked working gown, a neat, plump little figure, rosy cheeks, attractive lips, and also a position as housekeeper to Mrs. Borst.

His name was Karl Anders, and hers was Lottie Jensen. They saw each other daily, and it would have been a miracle had they not fallen in love. But the time for miracles is past, therefore they loved each other with all the might of their fresh, unspoiled young hearts. But they had never found the chance to speak to each other on this matter, and when Lottie stood at the stove and turned her roasts, she had a feeling as if she were turning her own longing loving heart in the hissing pan.

Yes, there is much pain that goes with love. And it also goes with love that we desire to impress the loved one with our best qualities. Anders thought over all his good points. He wasn't much on conversation, and the language of the eyes was a dangerous weapon—particularly at table, the only place where they were sure of meeting. His glances might possibly be caught up and misinterpreted by Mrs. Borst or the governess. His hands were large and red; his voice was not adapted to soft song; but his feet—they were his strong point. He had, as we have already seen, fine shiny boots; he could walk twenty miles a day without fatigue and he sat directly opposite Lottie at table. What an opportunity for a delicate touch. So he tried it, between the soup and the fish, just gently, with the very tips of his toes—a tender questioning.

"The devil! Let my corns alone. What are you doing with your feet, man?" Borst's indignation thrilled with his discomfort.

It is well to know the country thoroughly before we attempt foot-tours.

There were many fine horses and a number of pretty little colts on the Lindenacker estate. Anders loved horses, and whenever he had a leisure moment he would stand in the stable door and watch the animals. It seemed to soften his woe a little; although we have no intention of asserting that even the finest horses can prove a satisfying substitute, when a man is thoroughly in love, for the presence of the loved one.

Now whenever Miss Jensen saw Mr. Anders standing like an interrogation point in the stable door, she hurried, quick as a dash, to the shelf where the dried bread was kept, and with here apron full of pieces, she turned her steps towards the barns, to feed the dear little creatures.

"Now or never," thought the overseer every time he saw the blue-checked gown coming toward him over the gravel paths and the smooth grass. But then, each time, when he was just about to open his heart to her, while she caressed little Freya or Felix, one of the men would climb down from the hay loft, or a girl from the dairy would run in to hunt eggs, or Mrs. Borst would call: "Miss Jensen, where's the new spindle?" or the proprietor himself would shout: "Shall we plant the corn today, Anders?"

And then Lottie's brow would darken, and Mr. Anders would murmur under his breath: "The devil take them!"

At last fortune seemed to favor them. There was no one in sight. Lottie stood with her round white arm about the neck of a brown colt, that leaned confidingly against her. The bread was all gone, and two hearts beat in silent happiness. Their pulses hammered, their eyes shone. The old horses munched their fodder, the colts bit each other playfully, the birds caroled blithely in the trees outside. Mr. Anders took Lottie's hand, bent down and began:

"Miss Jensen, I have wanted to——"

But he got no further this time. A mighty push from behind raised him in the air and flung him backwards onto a heap of straw. It was a sad warning for those who would give way to the impulse of their hearts in the barn, without first making sure that the goat is tied up.

Weeks and weeks passed, and love grew in the two young hearts like asparagus in early summer sunshine. Lottie put pepper in the desserts and Mr. Anders hauled in hay that was only half dried.

Then finally, one Sunday morning in August, a fine warm sunshine lay fair on the Lindacker fields. The entire household were to drive to church, except Lottie, who suddenly developed "a dreadful toothache," and Mr. Anders, who thought he ought to stay at home and see that the village children did not steal the ripe fruit.

About ten o'clock a finely brushed pair of riding boots might have been seen wending their way toward the lake in the park, and not ten minutes later a little pair of brown shoes tripped along the same path. They met under a shady alder tree, and for at least the hundredth time, Mr. Anders said to himself: "Now or never!"

The honest boy trembled from head to foot, and all the blood in his body seemed to find an outlet through his ears. And the dear little girl felt her heart beating madly, while her sunburned fingers shook helplessly.

"Miss Jensen—I have been waiting so long for this chance to tell you—how much——"

"I hope I haven't disturbed you?" said the governess in a voice like vinegar, as she pushed her way out of the bush, her skirts held high over her large, flat feet.

"Oh, I though you were at church," stammered the overseer.

"No, I had such a toothache, too! Good morning! I hope you'll enjoy your walk." And she vanished

But when Anders looked about for Lottie, she too had vanished, as completly as if she had been a cloudwraith.

August came slowly to a close, but the moonlight was fine to the last. One evening, after Lottie had put the clothes to soak, boiled a large pot of cranberries, plucked four chickens, and taken in the bleached linen, she thought she could allow herself a few moments in the delightful night air. Mr. Anders had strolled out to smoke a cigar, and the unerring instinct of love led him to the very bench under a great apple tree where Lottie was sitting. The soft, dim light, that covered the confusion of his face, gave him greater courage than he had ever had before, and he began:

"Lottie, at last I can tell you—how deeply I lo——"

A rustling arose in the shaking boughs of the apple tree, a thousand little round objects rained down on the two young people, and a chorus of laughter pealed out of the green. It really is a shame that an honest overseer, who works all day in the sweat of his brow, can't find a moment at evening to open his heart to the maiden he loves, without first looking to see whether or not his employer's small boys are up in the apple tree.

Mr. Anders decided on a bold step. He intended to

(Continued on Page 34.)

TAXICABS
(Genuine RENAULT Cars)
PACIFIC TAXIMETER CAB COMPANY
Solicits your patronage of its equipment of imported Renault Taxicabs and will show its appreciation by prompt and reliable service.
TELEPHONE
FRANKLIN 4848
Private Exchange connecting all Departments
MAIN STATION AND GENERAL OFFICES, 1355-1363 BUSH STREET
FAY C. BEAL, General Manager.

Perspective Impressions

Although the stick that Taft wields is padded it is most effective.

An insane Nevadan had his reason restored through the cutting off of his legs by a train. Let's try it on Boke.

"Bill" Bradbury has again evaded San Quentin for a time at least. He is seventy-three years old, so death may beat the warden yet.

New York has been invaded by great swarms of moths. As they are less profitable than the bucolic variety that flutter along the Great White Way, anguished protest is heard.

"Have you any objection to being treated as a criminal if you are selected for jury duty?" is suggested as an appropriate question to be put to talesmen examined in the Calhoun case.

A man named Ciphers was among those examined for duty on the Calhoun jury. He couldn't have been expected to cut much of a figure.

A Berkeley professor says he has made the important discovery that the California flea is sightless. Not half so important as would be the discovery of some way of making him toothless.

A Chicago woman killed her two children and herself because exposure of an indiscretion of her youth was threatened by a niece of her husband. If every wrong had a remedy the law would provide for the hanging of the niece.

The Harriman railroads are to conduct an immense publicity campaign to advertise the attractions of San Francisco and the coast in general. Something is needed to offset the unwholesome notoriety that we are getting at the hands of the Prosecution.

The Spectator

An Episode of the Road

Everywhere, excepting the domain of politics, the testimony of a good conscience makes the comforts of heaven descend like refreshing dew. But in politics the rare possessor of a good conscience hates to forfeit public favor and is ever in a state of apprehension lest some one misconstrue his words or misinterpret his deeds. Take the O'Gara for example—John of that ilk—one of ornaments, refulgent gems of talent of purest ray serene. that under the present dispensation is noted only for its ornaments, refugent gems of talent of purest ray serene. Mr. O'Gara, as everybody knows, has a good conscience. Mr. O'Gara is, moreover, conscious of the invulnerability of his rectitude. Mr. O'Gara is so good that he worships virtue at all times and in all circumstances, whether it be incarnated in a Heney or take the imponderable character of silent perfections in the soul of one that like Mr. Rudolph Spreckels proudly walks with God. Now despite Mr. O'Gara's conscience and notwithstanding his halcyon consciousness he is at times disquieted and even discommoded and discomposed by the harrowing prospect of being reduced in the public eye below the imperial level of Caesar's wife. In illustration whereof the story is told of an experience of O'Gara's last week while holding communion with the visible forms of nature in Marin County. Trudging along a dusty road, somewhat weary and surfeited with the poetry of nature, he was overtaken by an automobile, a roomy vehicle. Only one seat was occupied, that of the chauffeur, an amiable fellow who out of compassion for the tired pedestrian invited him to jump in. The zealous young prosecuting attorney accepted with alacrity, but hardly had he sunk into an upholstered seat when the chauffeur gave him an electric shock that caused him to bound out again. It appears that the chauffeur was greatly astonished to find that the man he had hailed was none other than the illustrious O'Gara.

"Perhaps I should tell you," he said, "that I am going after the owner of this machine and that his name is Patrick Calhoun."

"My God!" exclaimed O'Gara, "I cannot afford to be seen in this machine," and out he leaped.

"Honk! honk!" said the devil wagon as the almost bedeviled attorney faded in the distance.

Object Lessons From Madera

Those intellectual dapperlings of the Superior Court, the Hon. William P. Lawlor and the Hon. Frank Dunne, are viewing with alarm and other disquieting emotions the record that Judge Conley of Madera is making in our midst. This little jurist fresh from one of the most unsophisticated of pastoral regions appears to be absolutely indifferent to the ways and methods of our urban judges and not at all impressed with the variable precedents which they have established to the utter confusion of members of the bar, not to mention the cost to taxpayers. Judge Conley conducts his court without the aid of a spotlight, he commands the deference and respect of counsel, logically lays down his positions and enforces them in a strain of close reasoning. In short he behaves very much like a judge of the old school, and when a verdict is rendered in his court the attorneys in the case seem to grope in vain for errors upon which to base a motion for a new trial. Singularly enough though a stickler for the niceties of practice and quick and inflexible in his rulings Judge Conley does not conceive it to be his duty to assume that he is infallible, as is evident from the fact that he concedes the right of a defendant to bail pending an appeal. Therein he differs radically from Lawlor and Dunne who hold that when they deny a motion for a new trial it must be presumed that they are fortified against error. Judge Conley acts upon the theory that a person convicted of crime is entitled to bail until it be finally determined that conviction was obtained by due process of law without the sacrifice of any legal light. Upon what theory Judge Lawlor and Judge Dunne act has never been explained.

E. B. COURVOISIER

The well known Art Dealer and Frame Maker announces to the public the opening of his new store at 431 Sutter street between Stockton and Powell.

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA
Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets
A General Banking Business Transacted
CHAS. F. LEEGE, President . B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

When Spencer Shuddered

Several attorneys were discussing Judge Conley's humane and rational methods the other day as contrasted with the drastic cocksureness of his local confreres of the criminal courts when one of them was reminded of a story, "which," he said, "illustrates how absurd it is for trial judges to expect us to stand in awe of their rulings." Reminding his hearers that Lord Jeffreys once said to Robert Wright, who was notorious both for his ignorance and his knaveries, "As you seem to be unfit for the bar or any other honest calling, I see nothing for it but that you should become a judge yourself," the attorney proceeded with his story. Some years ago, he related, when Denis Spencer was practicing law in Napa, his office was in a building part of which was occupied by the sheriff. One day Spencer heard carpenters hammering in a room adjoining his office. Upon inquiry he learned that they were building a scaffold upon which a man named Murback was to be hanged. Spencer shuddered and went out and took a drink to brace his nerves. At the bar he pondered the gruesome prospect of a hanging bee at the very door of his office and under the same roof. At once he resolved to intercede in the doomed man's behalf. Without the loss of a minute's time he conducted an investigation into the merits of the case and then journeyed in hot haste to Sacramento where he petitioned Governor Stoneman to commute Murback's sentence. "On what ground, do you suppose, he based his petition?" asked the attorney. Everybody gave it up. "On the ground," said the attorney, "that as his lawyer botched his case he had not received a fair trial"; and that lawyer is now on the bench, judge of the Superior Court of Napa County—Gesford is his name.

Petition Granted

As Governor Stoneman granted Spencer's petition, commuting the prisoner's sentence to life imprisonment, it is to be inferred that Murback had not had the benefit of the most enlightened counsel, but in justice to Judge Gesford it should be explained that he had just emerged from Ann Arbor. He had been appointed attorney for the murderer by Judge Ham and doubtless made a brave attempt to astonish the natives with his learning. But according to Denis Spencer miserable was the defense that was made. Spencer affected great indignation at Judge Ham for having entrusted a man's life to the fledgling lawyer and he berated Frank Coombs the District Attorney for having cried out for the prisoner's blood. Spencer's petition, by the way, was based on a decision of the Supreme Court of Missouri which is another story that points its own moral.

Ignorance a Ground for Abrogation

The Missouri decision was rendered in 1882 in the case of a man named Jones, convicted of murder and sentenced to be hanged. The trial judge had denied a motion for a new trial and though the Supreme Court found that the record was free from error the defendant nevertheless was given a new trial on the ground of the "ignorance, imbecility and incompetency of the defendant's attorney and his gross mismanagement of the case." The language of the court in this case is worth repeating. "It would be difficult," said the court, "to state with too much emphasis how the stern severity of the courts has generally compelled parties to stand by the consequences of negligent omission, blundering or improper management by their attorneys in legal proceedings. This severity is justified by the most important considerations of public policy as well as by the plain demands of justice as between the parties to the cause. In civil cases the rule is broadly laid down that neither the ignorance, blunders nor misapprehension of counsel not occasioned by the adverse party is a ground for vacating a judgment. But must there be absolutely no limit to the operation of this rule?" Here the court pointed out how great injustice might be done were this rule held to be irrevocable, and then resumed as follows: "In looking over the record in this case we find in the performance of counsel for the defendant an exhibition of ignorance, stupidity and silliness that could not be more absurd or fantastic if it came from an idiot or a lunatic. We consider that the prisoner here in effect went to his trial and his doom without counsel such as the law would secure to every person accused of crime."

Mrs. Newport—What position does Mrs. Oilwell occupy in your city?

Mrs. Portola—Anomalous. She's too rich to be in the middle class, and not vulgar enough for the smart set.

The Governor's Example

This story, which I heard a few days ago, should gain Governor Gillett the temperance vote in case he decides to try for gubernatorial honors again. He was standing on a street corner in Sacramento, talking to three or four politicians, when it was proposed by one of the party that they go into a neighboring saloon and have a drink. Gillett refused. "Why, Governor," said one of the group, banteringly, "when did you become a prohibitionist?" "I am not a prohibitionist," said the Governor, "nor am I a total abstainer. But I do not think that my going into a public drinking place would be a good example. I would hate to have any boy think, 'Well, there's no harm in going into saloons; I have seen the Governor do it.'"

Thaw the Sadist

"A picture of life—of one phase of life," is what we are told the Thaw case is in its most recent developments. This is hardly an apt characterization. The Thaw case presents a picture of disease, a dark brown transcript of sexual depravity. More than of anything else it is reminiscent of the scenes in Circe's palace, where men seduced with sweets and spices mixed with pale honey and pramnian wine, were transformed into swine and wallowed in congenial mud. Harry Thaw, the despatches tell us, whipped young girls with straps in a house which he hired for the purpose of carrying on this exotic pastime. This is a species of diversion upon which pathologists have expatiated learnedly and piquantly in the interest of science. By them it is called the practice of flagellation. It is an ancient form of perversion which originated among the Egyptians, but as practiced by them it was a religious ceremony. The religion of the Egyptians was carnal rather than spiritual. Herodotus tells us that at the Festival of Isis in the City of Busiris thousands of Egyptians whipped one another with straps and not for the purpose of mortifying the flesh. The ceremony was later introduced in Rome and at the Feast of the Lupercalia, Festus tells us, it was the custom among the Romans for men to run about naked and strike

TO POLITICAL CANDIDATES

Make your campaign more effective by addressing voters directly with individually typewritten, personal letters. Let me help you to win.

L. A. IRELAND
Manager The Multographers
Kearny 4956 334 Phelan Building

J. M. Jacobi & Co.

S. W. COR. MONTGOMERY & SUTTER STS

Individuality is always found in the best tailored garments

OUR SPRING AND SUMMER CLOTHING MERITS YOUR ATTENTION.

all the women they met with straps. In modern times the most notorious of the men that were addicted to the practice Thaw revived in New York were the Marquis de Sade and that picturesque character known in light opera and fairy tales as Bluebeard, whose true name was Gilles de Retz.

Dangerous Experiment

The pictures accompanying this illustrate the different stages of danger encountered by a Frenchman who posed in a bed of quicksand for a sculptor who wanted to put realism into a bust that he was to make. He had his model enter the quicksand and gradually sink into it, the while the cinematograph camera registered his expressions of feigned terror as he sank farther and farther into the sand. The experiment was a greater success than had been anticipated, for the model became actually frightened, and with good reason. He went down in the treacherous sands until he despaired of ever being dragged out alive, and equal fear was entertained by those conducting the experiment. They saw that he was in a serious predicament, and then realized that they too were in danger, as their cameras were beginning to sink in the soft sands. Help was summoned, and after hard work the model, who had sunk nearly to his armpits, was dragged from his perilous position. The experiment was conducted in the vicinity of Mont Saint Michel, which can be seen in the background. The final picture shows that the sculptor attained his object.

ENTERING THE QUICKSANDS

GRADUALLY SINKING

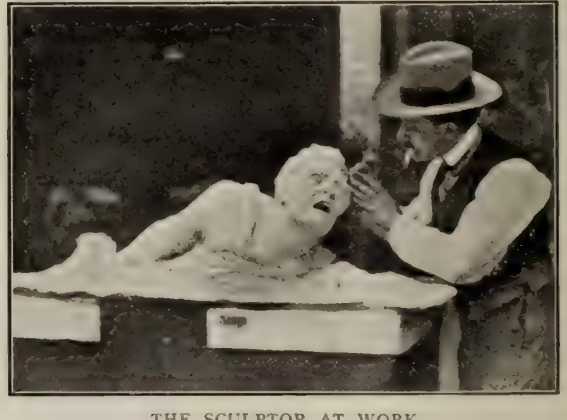
DR. GRANT SELFRIDGE

Announces that he has resumed practice at 709 Schroth Building, 240 Stockton Street, San Francisco, Cal.



When State Pride is Dormant

That there has been no public demonstration in honor of Associate Justice McKenna of the Supreme Court of the United States during his visit to his old home after an absence of many years proves in a measure that we are no longer possessed of that warm generous sentiment that was once the boast of the people of this State. Either that or the oversight is conclusive of the decay of the faculty of imagination. Under our government there is not a more exalted office than that which Justice

REALLY FRIGHTENED

McKenna occupies, and Justice McKenna is a Californian who has been signally and most conspicuously honored, and whose career, opening as it did in the obscure office of district attorney of Colusa County is one that is pregnant with inspiration for every young man in the State. No other Californian ever had so brilliant a career as that of Justice McKenna, none ever reflected so much credit on the State, and in the circumstance it would seem that on the occasion of his visit there should have been some fitting expression to that sentiment of State pride which once abounded in California in frolicsome exuberance. Several private little functions were held in honor of Justice McKenna, but the only affair that implied a sense of values was the luncheon given by our premier attorney Garret McEnerney, a man who is blessed with an imagination in proportion to his other titanic faculties. Mr. McEnerney made the luncheon a quasi-public affair by having as his guests the members of the judiciary and many of the leading members of the

THE SCULPTOR AT WORK

HIGH GRADE
INVESTMENT SECURITIES
List on Request
SUTRO & COMPANY
412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO
Established 1858.

bar. Mr. and Mrs. McEnerney, by the way, are now en route to Europe where they will spend about two months in travel.

Mrs. Bixby—If woman goes into politics, what do you suppose the leading issue will be?
Mr. Bixby—The money question.

Now for the "Cut-Up"

The Rancho Los Meganos, once upon a time known as the Marsh Ranch, and later as the Sanford Ranch, is about to be subdivided and thrown open to settlers. This is a matter of some interest as this ranch, valued at five hundred thousand dollars, comprises about 13,316 acres of the richest land in Contra Costa County. The most remarkable thing about the ranch is its fertility, not only in cereals, fruits and vegetables, but also in lawyers' fees and in the intensely human and harrowing interest that is supposed to grow mainly on promissory notes. Legal and financial entanglements have been propagating on the Rancho Los Meganos for many years, but this vast tract of land has at last emerged from litigation and the litigants are about to make what in sporting parlance is called the cut-up. The lawyers, singularly enough, are not to get the lion's share of it. The heirs-at-law, contrary to tradition, are to get a considerable slice of the land.

How Marsh Recognized His Son

The litigation involving the Rancho Los Meganos came to a close a week or two ago when the Supreme Court rendered a decision in an action for the partition of the property sustaining the position of Garret W. McEnerney, the attorney for the devisees under the will of Josephine L. Sanford. The only question in dispute on appeal was whether or not the ranch was subject to a mortgage said to have been created December 11, 1875. But long before the date of this mortgage transactions had taken place which gave rise to claims that threw the title of the property into such confusion that even the proverbial Philadelphia lawyer might despair of clearing it up. The history of the ranch for the purposes of this narrative begins in 1852 when title was acquired by John Marsh from the original holder of the Mexican grant. Marsh was a unique character in the early history of the state. Among the amusing stories told of him is one with reference to his son by his first marriage contracted in the east before venturing across the plains. When the young man appeared on the scene Marsh did not recognize him, but he remembered that his son had a deformed foot. Before acknowledging him as his heir, Marsh asked him to pull off his boot and exhibit his foot, which he did. The physical prima facie evidence was deemed sufficient.

From Broadway to Contra Costa

Marsh died in 1871 owning ninety-one per cent of the ranch, the other nine per cent having been given to Horace Hawes for legal services in perfecting the title. Shortly after Marsh's death along came James T. Sanford, a wealthy New Yorker, who had been given a tip that there was a big deposit of coal on the ranch. Sanford was so sure that he would strike it rich on the ranch that he sold a piece of property at the corner of Tenth and Broadway in New York to raise sufficient money to purchase the land. Sanford was the owner of a steamship line and was the father of a large family. When he purchased the ranch he gave Marsh's heirs a mortgage for part of the purchase price. A year later, in 1873, he was caught in the Black Friday panic, and as a result he had to borrow $150,000 from the Savings and Loan Society to pay off the mortgage held by Marsh's heirs. About that time Sanford's creditors were pressing him and the bank bought up their claims. In 1881 a controversy arose between Sanford and the Savings and Loan Society, and a suit was commenced involving the title to the property. Pending the suit, Sanford died, his whole estate going to his sisters Josephine and Harriet Sanford. Before the suit was ended Harriet Sanford died, and Josephine Sanford carried the whole burden of the fight. Her attorneys were McAllister & Bergin, to whom she farmed out for counsel fees fifteen per cent of her interest in the ranch. In the course of time Hall McAllister died and his surviving partner retained Stanley, Stoney & Hayes to assist him, farming out to them ten of the fifteen per cent. The case dragged along in the Circuit Court until all the members of the firm of Stanley, Stoney & Hayes went to sleep with their fathers. But, meanwhile, they had farmed out five per cent of their interest to Garret McEnerney, who, in turn farmed out half of his interest to Attorney Treadwell, with whom he was associated at the close.

Wins and Dies

In 1893 Josephine Sanford won her case. One of the last things that Judge McKenna did before going to Washington to become the Attorney-General in President McKinley's cabinet was to sign the decree in favor of Josephine Sanford. He decreed that the bank was entitled to $195,000 and that Josephine Sanford was entitled to the property. The bank had loaned $250,000 on the ranch, but during the twenty-five years that the litigation was on the bank realized off rentals $450,000. Josephine Sanford lived for a year after winning her suit. She died in 1897, bequeathing a quarter of the eighty-five per cent which remained after deducting the interest of attorneys, to Professor George Davidson, one-fourth to Andrew S. Mosely, one-eight to Dr. C. N. Ellinwood, one-eight to T. T. Bergin and the remainder to relatives. Then followed the contest which ended a week or so ago. Under the decree each of four relatives of Josephine Sanford will get a fraction over 707 acres; Davidson and Mosely will get 2829 acres, Dr. Ellinwood, 1414 acres; T. T. Bergin, 1680 acres; the heirs of Hall McAllister, 266 acres; Garret McEnerney, 332 acres, and W. B. Treadwell, 332 acres.

Artists Out of Work

The photo-engravers' strike, which led first to the daily papers abandoning their illustrations—to their great improvement—has resulted in disaster to the art staff of the Examiner. All the photographers and illustrators

FOR THE BABY
BROOKS
HOMOEOPATHIC COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP
25 CENTS AT DRUGSTORES

Santa Fe
NEW TRAIN
Via the Santa Fe to Chicago via Kansas City
EAST
Leave San Francisco daily 7:15 a. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m. This is in addition to our two other trains leaving San Francisco and Oakland 8:00 and 10:00 p. m. Also New Train to Fresno. Leaving San Francisco 4:00 p. m.; Leave Oakland 4:05 p. m. This in addition to our THREE other trains leaving San Francisco daily at 7:15 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m.
For detail information phone or call on Jas. B. Duffy, 673 Market Street, San Francisco
T. Love, Market Street Ferry Depot, San Francisco
J. J. Warner, 1112 Broadway, Oakland

on that paper have been let out, the hardship of the incident being tempered to some extent by the statement that their term of idleness would be but temporary—that is, until the trouble with the strikers is settled. Among those cast out were Virgil Nahl and Dan Sweeney, two exceptionally good illustrators, and Harry Coleman, known as one of the best newspaper camera men in the business. The Call, up to the present writing, has retained its art staff, although dismissal is contemplated. The Chronicle seems disposed to keep its men. The whole thing is a reversal of form. The Hearst policy has heretofore been to take care of employees during troublous times, and the letting out of the art staff has caused no little comment. Equally surprising is the action of the Chronicle, which in the old days would have been the first to fire the whole staff under similar circumstances. But Charlie de Young, who is at the head of the paper now, has adopted a liberal method of dealing with employees that takes away the breath of the old-timers. The famous dictum, "No reporter is worth more than three dollars a day" was for many years the keynote of the attitude of the paper toward its employees. In former times when a Chronicle man laid off on account of illness his salary stopped with the first day's lay-off. Now his pay goes on for a reasonable length of time.

"The Biltons are in very much reduced circumstances."
"How do you know?"
"Well, Bilton has resigned from his club and Mrs. Bilton has stopped going to church."

A Luminous Debate

Some weeks ago the subsidized organs of the Spreckels-Phelan cabal were greatly incensed at their contemporaries for publishing inaccurate reports of the debate in the House of Representatives on the bill appropriating money for the payment of assistants to the Attorney-General in special cases. According to the subsidized organs, nothing was said during the debate that could be construed as a reflection on the integrity of the Hon. Francis J. Heney. It did not take the indignation of the subsidized ones very long to subside. It was probably assuaged by a full report of the debate which was sent for, but not published. From the New York "Sun," which devoted two of its editorial columns to a discussion of the debate and verbatim excerpts therefrom, I learn that the questions that have been asked with reference to the money paid to Heney out of the national treasury have become "matters of serious national importance."

Receipted in Full, But—

The whole story of Heney's financial transactions came out in the following colloquy between Representatives Sims and Tawney:

"Mr. Sims—I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman has stated that $23,000 was paid to one gentleman for no service rendered. I would like for the gentleman to explain to the House how it comes that those officers paying out our public funds pay them out for no services rendered?

"Mr. Tawney—It is claimed that he was paid that sum for service rendered in previous years; that there was no service rendered in the fiscal year 1908. It was for services previously rendered.

"Mr. Sims—Upon the authorization of Congress?

"Mr. Tawney—Authorization of the Attorney-General.

"Mr. Fitzgerald—He was paid the additional money after he had resigned and had been paid and receipted in full for his services?

"Mr. Tawney—I am informed that is the fact, although I have not been able to verify it.

"Mr. Sims—Cannot the gentleman so clothe the language of legislation in appropriation bills as to prevent a thing of that sort?

"Mr. Tawney—Mr. Heney was appointed Assistant Attorney-General of the United States on the 7th of November, 1903. He served for some time as assistant to the Attorney-General and then was appointed as an Assistant District Attorney for the District of Oregon. He was then appointed District Attorney for the District of Oregon, and served in that capacity a few months, and then resigned and was again appointed assistant to the Attorney-General and appointed to prosecute certain cases as assistant to the Attorney-General. His services extended from November 7, 1903, until 1906, since which time he has performed no active service for the Government, as is shown by the testimony of Mr. Field, the chief clerk of the Department of Justice, which is printed in the hearings. For that total service as assistant to the Attorney-General, as assistant to the District Attorney, and as District Attorney he has received $69,125. These are the facts disclosed by the testimony of the chief clerk of the Department of Justice before the gentlemen who prepared this bill.

"I want to add that it appears from the testimony of Mr. Field that for the last three years Mr. Heney has not performed any active service in any of the cases in which he has been retained by the Government of the United States. It is also claimed that he gave a receipt in full shortly before the close of the last calendar year, and that subsequent to the giving of that receipt in full for all services he was paid, on the order of the then Attorney-General, Mr. Bonaparte, $5,000."

The salient and eloquent fact brought out by this colloquy it that the honest and patriotic Mr. Heney was paid $5,000 after he had given a receipt in full for services rendered. So profoundly cryptic is the bookkeeping of the Department of Justice touching Mr. Heney's accounts that it is impossible to prove that all of the twenty-three thousand dollars paid to the gallant little prosecutor in 1908 was for services rendered to the Spreckels-Phelan combination, but it is at least clear that he received five thousand dollars after he had receipted in full for services rendered to the Federal Government.

Locking the Stable Door

As a result of the revelations that were made in Congress, Representative Fitzgerald proposed an amendment specifically excluding Mr. Heney from receiving any more money. This amendment was in the nature of a precautionary measure against the further gouging of Uncle Sam for the benefit of the San Francisco Graft Prosecution. Speaking for the amendment, Representative Fitzgerald, who has not yet been charged with being a hireling of Calhoun's, said:

"I do not propose to characterize the conduct or actions of Mr. Francis J. Heney; but when I find that in the course of four or five years, while engaged in important public business for other divisions of a State or municipal government, he received $69,000 for alleged services to the Federal Government it does seem to me that some check should be placed upon the possibility of paying him further for his supposed services, at least until some investigation can be made. I am further inclined to this belief, Mr. Chairman, for the following reasons: I find from an examination of what purports to be a compilation of the vouchers on file in the Department of Justice, that

TOWNSEND'S
CALIFORNIA GLACE FRUITS AND CANDIES
In Palace Hotel Building
All Orders Given Prompt Attention at
46 MARKET STREET
Phone Douglas 4814
Factory, 117 SAN JOSE AVE. Phone Mission 378
Also at News Stands of the Fairmont and St. Francis Hotels

J. Magnin & Co.
First Showing of Correct Models
LADIES', MISSES' AND GIRLS' TAILORED SUITS AND COATS FOR AUTUMN, 1909
Moderate Prices European Style and Materials
GRANT AVENUE AND GEARY STREET

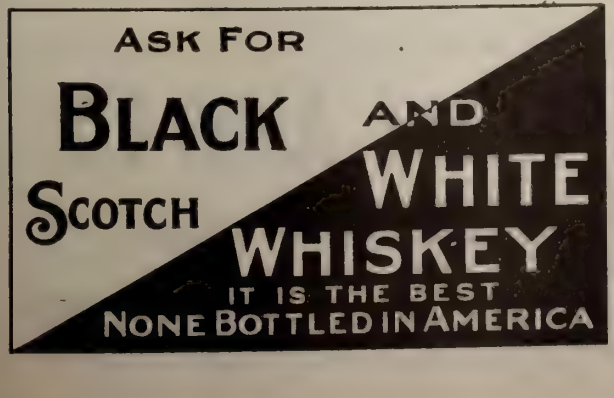
on January 8, 1907, Mr. Heney filed his resignation with the Attorney-General as a special assistant in the case of the United States against Binger Hermann. This was accepted on January 11. Some time later—February 19, 1908, I believe—he filed a claim for $8,000 in full payment for services as Special Assistant to the Attorney-General in the case of the United States against Hyde, United States against Diamond, United States against Benson, and United States against Binger Hermann. Yet in January, 1909, he was paid a further sum of $5,000 for services in the Hermann case. It may be that although he had resigned and his resignation had been accepted, although he had been paid in full for his services and at that time had received all told in the nature of $54,000, he was still entitled to $5,000 additional for his services. However, I should like to have that investigated."

"It is apparent," says the New York Sun, in closing its discussion of the debate, "that this groping in the dark for facts, these delayed payments, all point to the high desirability of an investigation of the bookkeeping in the Department of Justice and a general ventilation of the employment of special assistants to the Attorney-General, which seems to have attained during the Roosevelt administration a magnitude not suspected by the public."

Bobby—Grandma, do your glasses magnify?
Grandma—Yes, dear.
"Well, when you cut my cake will you please take them off?"

Victoria and Her Children

Royal happiness is not a lasting thing. It was only a few weeks ago, when her third child was born, that Queen Victoria of Spain was pronounced the happiest mother in Europe. Now she is practically a fugitive, having fled the country on account of the riots in Spain, and a price is on the head of her husband. King Alfonso and his queen were married on May 21, 1906. The Prince of Asturias, the heir apparent, was born May 10, 1907. His brother, the Infant Jaime, first saw the light June 23, 1908, while the daughter, Beatrice, arrived a year later, lacking a day. The queen and her spouse had prayed that a girl might follow the two boys, and when the third child came the queen's cup of happiness was full. Her mother remarked that the queen took to motherhood as though it were her chosen profession, and the daughter laughingly declared her intention to have more children than her grandmother, Queen Victoria of England.



Fateful Royal Jewels

The opal ring which for many generations has exercised a sinister influence over the rulers of Spain, seems to be at work again. This jewel was worn first by Queen Mercedes, being a gift from her husband, and she died shortly after receiving it. It was given in turn to three Spanish loyalists, none of whom long survived the gift. It then reverted to its original owner, who died soon afterward. The ring was then made part of the adornment of a statue of a saint in a Spanish cathedral, the idea being that in such associations it would lose its malignant influence. Apparently this precaution did not avail. Another opal ring that harassed royalty was worn by the Czar Alexander II when he was killed by the Nihilist bomb in 1881. The little finger on which he wore the ring remained intact, and the bit of jewelry was removed and laid away for seventeen years, at the end of which time the Empress Marie gave it to her mother, the Queen of Denmark, who died very soon after receiving the gift. The ring then became the property of the Empress' second son, George, who died mysteriously in a short time, and after the three fatalities it disappeared, secreted or destroyed, without causing question or regret

---

A Pretender Squelched

A friend recently home from Europe tells me of the trouble that befell a girl plentifully endowed with beauty, rather short on brains, but possessed of a desire to appear intellectual. She was a passenger from Liverpool to New York, and it happened that she fell in with a group of people who were decidedly up on the best literature, books forming the chief topic of their conversation. Miss Pulchritude found herself left behind, but determined to make a bluff as to her mental qualities. So she injected herself into the conversation, telling with great enthusiasm of her love for beautiful books, for beautiful pictures—for anything, in fact, that represented high culture. But her comments were decidedly impressionistic and abstract, which fact was noticed by a young physician. Making up his mind to have some fun with her, he began directing his conversation to the pretended lover of literature, asking her if she had read certain books. She was skilled in evasions and excuses. No, she hadn't read this, and she hadn't read that, but she had heard they were very fine, and intended to read them at the first opportunity. She expressed particular enthusiasm over "Robert Elsmere," saying that just as she had started to read it the exigencies of travel prevented her finishing it—but she intended to absorb the novel as soon as she got ashore. That was what the young physician had been waiting for. "I have a copy in my stateroom," he said, "and I will be more than glad to let you have it." There was no refusing, and the bulky volume was put into her hands. For the re-

Why We Use The Streets

There is no way of transmitting the ordinary illuminating and fuel gas of commerce to the places where it is used except through iron pipes.

To protect the pipes against the ravages of atmospheric conditions and to put them where they will be of least public inconvenience, they are buried underground.

Gas is needed in homes, stores, offices and factories. Delivery of gas means a network of pipes covering the entire city and occupying a small amount of space beneath the surface of practically every street and many alleys.

There is only one alternative to the use of the public highways for distributing gas; namely, the purchase or lease of private rights of way. Such purchases or leaseholds would double, triple and even quadruple the cost of the distributing system.

The cost of interest on the investment, taxes and rents of private rights of way would have to be included in the price of gas service.

The people own the streets to use them. We use the streets in order to sell gas service at a much lower price than we would be forced to charge if our mains were laid on private rights of way.

San Francisco Gas and Electric Company

Copyright, 1909

mainder of the voyage her fellow-passengers had plenty of fun. Immediately after breakfast Miss Pulchritude would appear on the deck with "Robert Elsmere" in her hand and a do or die look on her face. Getting into her steamer chair she would struggle with the psychology of the story, occasionally she would nod and then pull herself together and tackle it again. At every meal time her relentless tormentor would ask her if she had finished the story and how she liked it. She would gush and enthuse. then bravely wrestle with it again. And on the last day she came to him with an air of triumph, defiance and relief, announcing that at last she had finished the work, which she had found too cute for anything. It was rather a cruel joke, yet a good lesson. It was agreed among the passengers that thereafter the victim would be content to be merely beautiful and make no more pretensions to having brains.

Alice Nielson's Ambitions Realized

Alice Nielson—our Nielson—is at last to appear in grand opera at the Metropolitan in New York. She has been struggling toward this goal for a long time, and word comes from London, where she is sojourning, that she is at present overjoyed at the prospects of appearing before the New York public as a grand opera star. Alice Nielson began her career in this city at the old Wigwam Theatre, and graduated from there to the Tivoli, where she became a great favorite. Then she went East, and later, backed by Thomas Williams, the racing man, toured the United States at the head of her own company in two comic operas, the "The Singing Girl" and "The Fortune Teller." I shall never forget the reception she got in this city on the night of her first appearance as a triumphant returning star. A packed house greeted her at the old Columbia Theatre, and when little Alice appeared the applause was so vociferous that the singer very nearly broke down. Quarrels between the star, her backer and the manager of the company ended her comic opera career for a time, and after various vicissitudes she sang with the San Carlos Opera Company in London and in this country, and of late has been appearing in vaudeville. She was offered a grand opera engagement by Grau in 1901, but had no roles, and when later Conreid tried to engage her she had already signed with the San Carlos Company. She sang at Palm Beach, in Florida, last winter, and attracted the attention of Eben D. Jordan, of Boston, with the result that she is to be a real grand opera star in her own country at last. Alice Nielson has a very sweet and pleasing voice. It was rather light for grand opera when heard here last, but it is said to have developed wonderfully since.

"I'm afraid our cook hasn't had much experience."
"Why?"
"She has been here a week and hasn't broken a dish."

Portola Dragoons at Drill

The Portola Dragoons give promise of overshadowing every other feature of the great October festival. The company is to consist of one hundred of the most stalwart sons of California, and when these handsome fellows, in their gorgeous trappings, and mounted on coal black horses, appear with Don Gaspar at their head, they are expected to thrill the spectators most effectively. The costumes, historically correct, will be a replica of the uniforms worn by the Spanish Dragoons that Captain Don Gaspar de Portola headed. They consist of heavy gold-braided coat, white breeches, top boots, spurs, leather gauntlets and wide hats with streaming plumes. The trappings of the horses, which are to be of uniform size and the most magnificent that can be procured, will be elaborate and picturesque. The lusty cavaliers will be conspicuous figures at all court functions and like the maids who are to attend the queen, will receive many court favors. In the parades and the review of the naval pageant they will be close to the merry monarchs, and

NEW IDEAS IN TENTS

Our Silk Waterproof Tents are the lightest, most convenient ever conceived. Light to carry and easy to put up. From $6.00.

CAMP EQUIPMENT

Our line embraces every practical device in the market.

Portable Aluminum Bakers
Portable Broilers and Standards
Portable Stoves and Utensils
Portable Buckets and Camp Furniture

TEN DEPARTMENTS DEVOTED TO SPORTING GOODS

THE ELLERY ARMS CO.

48-52 GEARY STREET

SAN FRANCISCO CALIFORNIA

therefore the center of attraction. It is for that reason that places in the company are eagerly sought. Those already chosen are drilling nightly in Golden Gate Park, and the practice they will constantly have from now until the time of the festival will insure perfect discipline. The royal salute from one hundred six-footers on snorting coal black steeds, the flash of the sabers in the sun, the waving plumes and the brilliant coloring of the company, will be something that no feminine heart will be able to resist.

She—Did you enjoy Miss Pacific Avenue's musicale?
He—No, the nap I had there was disturbed by an awful dream.
She—What did you dream?
He—That I went again.

Sabbatarians Confounded

The Sabbatarians might take a lesson, if they were capable of absorbing one, from the results that have followed the opening of the British Museum on Sundays. Puritanism had its way for a long time in this regard, and London's great depositary of art and literature was hermetically sealed on the Sabbath day in order that the public might be driven to the churches. The people refused to be herded, however, and worshiped at the shrine of Bacchus instead of at the altar. At last, gathering wisdom, the trustees of the Museum decided that they might as well be modern, so the doors were thrown open on Sundays, to the horror of the exponents of virtue by force. The result has been most gratifying. The Sunday attendance last year totaled nearly 75,000. So on every Sunday more than 1400 people were given a means of occupying their time pleasantly. Many of them were busy workers who had not the time during week days to seek intellectual diversion; and many others of them undoubtedly were people who, without this opportunity to occupy themselves, would have gravitated to the saloons. Reforms are being worked every day despite the misguided efforts of the reformers.

Seattle's Puritanism

It does not do to associate all Puritanism with England, however. Seattle is at present furnishing an example of blue law meddlesomeness that must be attracting the approval of the shades of our Mayflower ancestors. Lovemaking is the principal bete noir of these Seattle purists, and "dates" are strictly tabu. Men and women meeting on street corners are followed, and arrests frequently take place on the suspicion that there is anything improper in their association. In more than one occasion married couples have been arrested in hotels and taken to the police station, and there called upon to demonstrate that they had the right to be together. I don't mind giving Bill Burns and his gunshoe men the benefit of the result of my reflections on this condition of affairs. I would suggest that when they have been run out of San Francisco, an event that should not be long delayed, they go to Seattle and gain employement as spies upon suspected violators of Seattle's peculiar variety of blue laws. It would be a congenial occupation, one for which these keyhole detectives are by nature, instinct and training adapted.

The Anglo & London Paris National Bank

Of San Francisco

Successor of The London Paris National Bank of San Francisco, The Anglo-California Bank, Limited.

Northeast Cor. Pine and Sansome Sts., San Francisco

Sig. Greenebaum, Pres.; I. Steinhart, Chairman of Finance Committee; H. Fleishhacker, V.-Pres. and Man.; Alden Anderson, V.-Pres. and Sec.; Jos. Friedlander, V.-Pres.; R. Altschul, Cashier; C. F. Hunt, Asst., Cashier; A. Hochstein, Asst. Cashier; F. E. Beck, Asst. Cashier.

Capital $4,000,000.00
Surplus and Undivided Profits..... 1,500,000.00

We offer our customers every facility consistent with good banking and invite new accounts.

Promotion Committee Moves

No longer will the attractive structure known as California Building be the headquarters of The California Promotion Committee. The structure in Union Square, near the corner of Geary and Stockton streets, which has been the home of The Committee since the first of July, 1906, has reverted to the Board of Park Commisioners, through whose courtesy the committee maintained its occupancy in the Square during more than three years. The building was one of the first erected in the burned district after the fire, so that the work of the Committee was scarcely even checked by the disaster. Having secured comfortable quarters in the Merchants Exchange Building, the Committee took occasion to thank the Park Commission in a formal manner for the co-operation it had accorded, and it presented California Building to the board to be put to such purpose as it might deem most advantageous. The Merchants Exchange Building is now the home of the large civic organizations of the city—the Merchants Exchange, Chamber of Commerce, and Merchants' Association, the largest of the local bodies. The concentration of the big associations in one building marks another forward step in the movement looking to a closer co-operation of San Francisco's commercial bodies.

"Know him? I should say so! We are husbands-in-law"
"Eh?"
"Our wives were divorced from the same man."

Worse and More of It

Wits give us, to diversify our woes,
Rhyme masquerading in the guise of prose,
Who've given us from immemorial time
Prose masquerading in the guise of rhyme.

—Harry Cowell.

"THE HUB'S" NEW YORK CLOTHES EXHIBIT

The first international men's clothes show is now in progress at Madison Square Garden, New York City. The productions of the best clothes makers in the world are represented in this exhibit, thus showing the marvelous progression that the ready-for-cervice clothes have achieved in latter years. New York is positively the fashion fountain of America, and Fifth Avenue is the style pulse of the world. There you find the best dressers of all countries. It's on Fifth Avenue or within a stone's throw of it, you'll find behind crested walls of marble and millions housed the greatest clothes designers and clothes-crafters known.

"The Hub," Chas. Keilus & Co., have now on display and on sale the reproductions of the models as shown at the New York Exhibit of the following makers: Atterbury System, Alfred Benjamin & Co., Brokaw Bros., Paragon trousers, Ely Meyer & M. C. Simon, Adler-Rochester, Levy Bros. A visit to "The Hub's" beautiful shop on Post Street, near Kearny, would be very interesting to good smart dressers. They have the largest and best equipped men's clothes shop in the world.

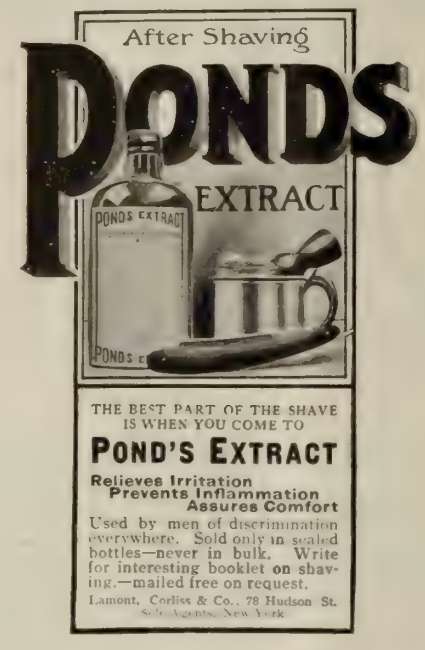
LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST

DIAMONDS AND GEMS

BALDWIN JEWELRY CO.

1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

Odd Things in the World



The book of Job is believed to be the most ancient literary work in existence. It is known to have been written prior to the Pentateuch and prior to the Promulgation of the Law.

In rural England the lilac is held in ill repute, and prudent mothers of marriageable daughters will not allow a sprig inside the house. To wear a blossom is to advertise one's preference for the single state and to present one to a sweetheart is equivalent to breaking the engagement. Country folk are aghast at the temerity —or ignorance—of Londoners who court fate by carrying lilacs.

The blue naval uniform in universal use is patterned after the English, and has been in use there since 1747. The king was contemplating a change in the outfitting of his sailors and was considering the color, with an inclination towards French gray laced with silver. While the question was yet in abeyance, he saw the Duchess of Bedford in a dark blue riding habit laced with white and enlivened with gold lace. The combination was so attractive that he abandoned all thoughts of the gray and adopted the blue and white instead.

The ceremony of "Riding Langholm Marches" is a quaint English survival. At half past five in the morning of the day appointed a drum and fife band summons the people from their beds and precedes them to the old Hillhead, where they witness a hound race of six miles. A man bearing aloft on a pole a barley bannock and a salt herring, and followed by the cornet elected for the year and some sixty horsemen, then perambulates certain streets and the steep sides of the neighboring hill, the party being refreshed with bannocks, herrings and whisky. On their return to town, hundreds of children carrying heather blosoms and an enormous Scotch thistle join the ranks.

The origin of the postage stamp is a curious bit of history. About seventy years ago, its "father," Rowland Hill, traveling through one of the northern districts in England, was sojourning at an inn when the post carrier came with a letter for the daughter of the landlord. She took it in her hand, examined the envelope minutely, but returned it, saying that she could not afford to pay the postage—a shilling. Mr. Hill, looking on, was touched with pity and paid the charge. The girl seemed embarrassed, and when the post man had gone on she explained that the supposed envelope contained no writing. They had devised a code system by means of which they communicated through marks on the envelope and neither of them was obliged to pay charges. Mr. Hill thought over the results of a system that made such frauds practicable and before another day he had devised the pre-paid stamp system.

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

Write to the Surbrug Company for samples and prices.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of BERTHA MARKS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Rose Marks, the Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of BERTHA MARKS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executrix, at the office of C. H. Oatman, room 516 Balboa Building, corner Second and Market streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of BERTHA MARKS, deceased.

ROSE MARKS,
Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of Bertha Marks, deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 7th, 1909.

ARTHUR L. LEVINSKY, Attorney for said Executrix,
Stockton, California. 8-7-5

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

Eureka Stoves and Ranges
Kitchen Utensils
Hotel Kitchen Outfits a Specialty
"Alaska" and "Opal" Refrigerators
Mantels, Grates, Tiles

NOW LOCATED AT 557-563 MARKET ST., opp. Junction Sutter and Sansome Sts.

PHONE DOUGLAS 4640

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy.

Wheat: The wheat market was depressed in the past week by the rush of new grain, receipts of winter wheat being the largest in years with a total of 7,000,000 bushels. The sensational advance of July in the first half of the month caused a heavy selling by farmers, and in turn by dealers. The movement in the past week brought the July receipts up to the normal. Extreme nervousness marked the last three days on reports of rust in the spring crop. These reports were scattered and with but one exception revealed very little damage. However, the trade recognized the possibilities of danger, for the destructive rust epidemic of 1904 did not appear until the last days of July, when harvesting was almost ready in South Dakota and the yield was cut down 60,000,000 bushels in the grain states during August. Conditions are now similar to 1904 in a heavy growth and unusual moisture. We have not heard the last of the rust and an excited market will prevail until all danger has passed. South Dakota will be in the harvest next week, and the harvesting will be general in two weeks. The extent of the spring crop cannot be determined as long as rust is threatened. Fall in the price has checked the movement from the farms and the receipts will not be materially enlarged until the first movement of the spring crop. Growers are reluctant to accept offers under $1, and they will be less disposed if damage to spring crop develops. Receipts, while large, have been well absorbed by the milling trade. Southern mills are seeking grains in the northern markets as their local crops have been absorbed. Europe has been purchasing on a smaller scale as prices have been dropping and there will be no improvement in these prices as long as prices continue to show a lower trend. The heavy crop of Russia will supply Europe with a larger volume than during the last two years and being the cheaper grain, it is reasonable to expect importers to keep out of our market until necessity forces purchases. The wheat market is in a scalping position, should be sold on all showing of strength and only bought when crop damage reports appear.

Stocks: Bullish operations on an extended scale was the feature in last week's security market. Favorable political conditions abroad, with a continuance of excellent crop weather in this country, and a feeling that the tariff measure will become a law very shortly, left the situation clear for the buying of stocks by leading syndicates. There was nothing new or novel in the matter of news, and all that can be really said in regard to the advances made in the best lines of stocks and speculations is that the buying of these is in anticipation of increased dividends that will come later in the year, or upon the return of some of the leading bankers from Europe.

Cotton: The past week has been one of advancing prices and renewed bullish enthusiasm, the net advance representing about 100 points or $5.00 per bale. The most important feature of the week was the publication of the regular monthly condition report by the Agricultural Department of the United States, on Monday, which proved to be the lowest condition ever published in August and indicates a crop of 11,500,000 bales maximum with good weather balance of the season. The previous low August condition was 74.9 in 1905 when the crop was only 11,250,000. The next lowest was 75 in August, 1907, when the acreage was practically the same as that devoted to cotton the present year, and the total yield only amounted to 11,300,000 bales. We are now entering the most crucial period for the cotton plant, and as the weed is in such a poor state of development, the loss in condition the next two months will probably exceed all previous records, which makes it impossible to harvest a crop of anything like the world's constantly increasing requirements, and the price will necessarily have to advance to such high levels as to greatly curtail the consumption. With the world at peace and the tariff out of the way, we think the world will use all of the cotton the south can grow in the next few years at anything under 16 cents per pound. We have persistently advised the purchase of cotton since the price was below nine cents per pound, and we consider that the opportunities on the bull side are just as good as they were five months ago, only the profits will not be quite so great.

She—I understand that young Jerome is quite a motorist.
He—Yes, but aside from that he is perfectly harmless.

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487

R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and New York

Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

Airy Mary, Quite Contrary

Representatives of San Francisco society have done some very queer things in New York, but shooting up the Waldorf-Astoria in regulation Hangtown style is perhaps the most picturesque feat that ever won distinction for one of our aristocracy. But Mrs. Neville Castle, the author of this unique feat is a woman of originality with genius for initiative. A somewhat checkered career she has had and more than her share of the limelight. As a girl she was under the wing of her aunt, Mrs. Monroe Salisbury, the Queen of the Fortnightlies and with her sister lived under the same roof that sheltered the Salisbury menage which included her cousins, the Salisbury sisters, one of whom married Danforth Boardman, and the other, Alexander Keyes. When Mary Scott married Neville Castle, the attorney society conjectured that she had made a very good match. As usual society put its estimate on a cash basis, but as it soon turned out that Castle was a briefless lawyer and as he had to go to San Jose to economize and grow up with the Santa Clara bar it soon became apparent that Mary Scott had not feathered her nest. In San Jose she had her first experience with the limelight. She attempted to organize the society of the town along the lines laid down by her aunt, but society in San Jose was not to be driven or branded and Mary had trouble. To make matters worse Neville Castle failed to get his share of the litigation that abounded in San Jose, and he pulled down his shingle and went to Nome. About the same time his wife took to the stage under the guiding hand of T. Daniel Frawley, who was something of a wizard in handling debutantes from the upper circles. Society flocked to see Mary and the limelight came to Mary as a result of her figuring in what was known as "the war of the three Marys"—the other two being Mary Hampton and Mary Van Buren. In the course of time Mrs. Castle drifted East, and went last heard from she was on the Keith Circuit. That was in 1901.

Photo, Genthe.

MISS KATHERINE PAGE BROWN

Miss Brown is the beautful protege of Mrs. Francis J. Carolan. During her recent visit to New York she attracted the attention of several artists who spoke in high praise of her beauty and asked permission to paint her portrait.

An Accomplished Dog

Mrs. Abby M. Parrott has a pet dog. My San Mateo correspondent writes me that nowhere is she seen unless accompanied by "Monkey," the pet dog belonging to her granddaughter, Vicomtesse Philippe de Tristan. Monkey is a very accomplished dog and is well known throughout San Mateo and Burlingame, as he was the constant companion in walks and drives of the Vicomtesse before her departure for Paris. Also is he more traveled than many of his human contemporaries, as, on every previous trip across the pond since her marriage, he has accompanied his attractive owner. As the de Tristans expect to make a shorter stay this year than usual in Europe, Monkey was left behind in care of Mrs. Parrott, and they say that not only is he her daily and hourly companion, but he also shares her room as well and is carefully tucked in his little bed alongside of her's every night. The Parrotts as a family have always been great lovers of horses, the ones raised on their ranch being far famed, but this is the first I have heard of their being fanciers of dog flesh, and Monkey, they tell me, will speedily develop into the most spoilt and petted canine down the peninsula. From Switzerland comes word that the younger branch of

Photo, Genthe.

MISS ENEZ ESTUDILLO

This attractive society girl was recently one of a merry house party given by her aunt Mrs. W. P. Daugherty at her home at Pleasanton.

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

THE BONNET SHOP
Importers of REAL PARISIAN MILLINERY
121 GEARY STREET
Our Specialty, Strictly High Class Tailored Hats at Popular Prices
NOBLE

the family, the Jack Parrotts, instead of returning here this winter as was anticipated, because of the mother's ill health, have renewed their lease on their chateau at Vevey and have elected to remain abroad for another twelve months or more. It is a great dissapointment to the Parrott girls as they were looking forward to meeting again their old friends here, and Josephine, the youngest of the four, was anticipating with great glee the making of her formal social bow. Instead, they tell me she is doomed to another year at a convent boarding school, and that even that is more exciting from a worldly point of view than their home near Vevey, which is rural and picturesque and pastoral to a degree. In fact, their whole stay abroad has been a keen disappointment to the girls as they have seen very little of the social life in the continental cities, and their friends here are almost as distressed as they are that they will not be able to count them in on the winter's gaieties. However, they are hoping that one or two of them may accompany Vicomtesse de Dampierre out here for her primised visit this fall, in which case they will be the motif for any amount of delightful affairs both here and in San Mateo, where they are great social favorites.

MADGE RICHARDSON

The California actress, the false report of whose re-marriage to her former husband, Arthur Macondray, caused a sensation in the California colony of New York, where she is playing at present.

Baron Von Schroeder's Inheritance

Bishop de Silva is at present the guest of Baron and Baroness Von Schroeder at Eagle's nest, San Luis Obispo. Apropos of Baron Von Schroeder I am told that the statement in the papers to the effect that he had inherited millions is far from true. His father directed that the Baron's debts should be paid and the fortune was to go to Baron Von Schroeder's eldest son who is at present abroad where he is studying banking affairs.

Handsome Engagement Rings

Miss Nora Brewer and Miss Elsa Draper are two girls whose engagement rings may well be the subject of envy as they both are remarkably costly and handsome. Nora's is a huge emerald set in a cluster of diamonds and Elsa's is a very magnificent row of three enormous diamonds. Which reminds me that her wedding date has been set for June of next year and will take place in San Rafael. Nora Brewer's wedding is to be one of the largest church affairs ever celebrated in San Mateo.

MRS. WALTER N. GABRIEL

Who was, before her marriage last Saturday, Miss Emma Morris, daughter of Mrs. W. F. Morris of this city.

but as the Brewer home is a small bungalow the wedding breakfast will be restricted to the bridal party and the immediate family connections. In the meantime Nora is the honored guest at innumerable little teas and dinners in San Mateo and Burlingame, that on last Sunday at the new polo club house in El Cerrito park being one of the largest and most enjoyable. Amy Brewer, who is to be maid of honor, they say is also engaged. So far the family has not confirmed it but Ed Tobin is generally conceded to be the lucky man. And as Amy caught the bouquet at the last San Mateo wedding, Vicomtesse de Dampierre's, everyone is looking forward to the second wedding in the Brewer family as an event of the late fall or early winter and Dame Rumor has promised not to disappoint them.

CALIFORNIA SCHOOL OF DESIGN
SAN FRANCISCO INSTITUTE OF ART
(Formerly the Mark Hopkins Institute)
Affiliated with the State University
DRAWING PAINTING
DECORATIVE DESIGNING MODELING ILLUSTRATING TEACHERS' COURSE
DAY, NIGHT AND SATURDAY CLASSES
THE SAN FRANCISCO ART ASSOCIATION
Circulars mailed on application to the Assitant Secretary, S.F. Institute of Art, San Francisco.

I. Magnin & Co.
INCORPORATED
Large Reductions on Summer Apparel
In Every Department
Garments which are specially adapted for Vacation and Outing Wear
GRANT AVENUE AND GEARY STREET

Mrs. Breeze's Damage Suit

The many friends of Mrs. Louisa Breeze were amused at the manner in which some of the daily papers spoke of the suit for $12,500 that she has brought against the National Ice and Cold Storage Company because of injuries that she suffered when she was run down by one of the firm's wagons. The heading in one paper read, "An Aged Woman Sues Ice Company for Damages," while the tone of some of the stories would give the impression that Mrs. Breeze is a tottering old lady, in her dotage. While Mrs. Breeze is far from young, she is a tall, stately, commanding, well preserved woman. She belongs to the most exclusive set, and is very wealthy. Her daughter, Mary, married Major Harry Benson, one of the most popular officers here. Thomas and Will Breeze are married into the Moore and Norwood families, and their wives belong to the ultra smart set. It will be remembered that last winter, while crossing the street with Mrs. Benson, Mrs. Breeze was knocked down by an ice wagon. She was in a hospital for many months suffering now a broken arm, and has recently returned to her rooms at the Granada Hotel.

Excitable Bridge Players

Bridge playing for money is beginning to develop a [illegible] of speech and outspokenness among friends that is assuming alarming proportions to anyone of a sensitive nature. A misplay or mistake is the signal for a severe reprimand, and one's feeling of natural mortification is somewhat assuaged by being informed in no uncertain terms as to just what sort of a "stupid player" one appears. At a card party the other day, I hear, the [illegible] misplay caused a broker on to suggest a book of etiquette as a first prize next time the aggrieved party is asked to a bridge rencontre. In this instance it was her hostess who called attention to her flustered and unsuspecting head when, in her zeal as mistress of the house, she turned to give an order to a servant on the further comfort of her guests. She failed in consequence to make the partnership brilliant play that her partner fondly anticipated. Immediately the clouds gathered. "You just make me tired," said one of the players in a high, hysterical key. "Why don't you pay attention, or stop playing bridge?" "What did you make that play for? I'll not stand for your carelessness—seventy points will I not afford it." "You make me sick!" A pin might be heard drop in the dead and ominous silence that followed. Everyone held her breath for the next hot shot that was to be hurled, and the oppressiveness lasted for nearly a minute. Then "You need not worry," was the mild response. "I was not mistaken and I am capable of playing my own hand," and the game progressed smoothly though [illegible] hovering in the atmosphere. The [illegible] of bridge at least [illegible] the refreshments were served [illegible] temperature to a normal degree.

Cummings-Childs

The wedding of Miss Lodge Cummings and Myers Merrick Childs took place on Wednesday evening, July 28th, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Cummings. The Rev. William Taylor officiated. Mrs. George Alexander Knox, a sister of the bride, was matron of honor. Miss Madeline Cummings and Miss Constance Cummings attended as bridesmaids. All were gowned in pink chiffon, pink being the prevailing color scheme. The bride's robe was an elaborate creation of white duchess satin trimmed with rare lace and embroidered in pearls. A long tulle veil completed an artistic costume. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies-of-the-valley. Mr. and Mrs. Childs will reside in Spokane.

Pringles Not to Return

Word comes from New York that Mrs. Edward Pringle and her daughters Hess and Nina will not return to San Francisco as soon as was anticipated. They have decided to remain East until the early fall as Hess Pringle has set the date of her wedding for the first week of September. The ceremony is scheduled to take place in Quebec, and after a honeymoon trip through Canada, New York is to be their future home. Morris Houghton is a distant cousin of the bride, and is making quite a name for himself in the world of writers. He has won no little fame by some of his magazine work, and is at present connected with the New York Tribune. Hess Pringle is one of the most musical of the society girls on the Coast and comes of a distinguished Southern family that originally hailed from Charleston, South Calorina. She is related to the Pringle and Hayne families here and is connected with the Moore and Bull families. Her father, the late Edward Pringle, was well known, and her brothers, Ed, Will, Charles, Covington and Sydney, have all been great social favorites, and the old fashioned Southern hospitality of the Pringle home is famed throughout California.

Morris-Gabriel Wedding

Mrs. W. F. Morris announces the marriage of her daughter Emma to Walter N. Gabriel of Pasadena. The wedding took place in Grace Church last Saturday at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, with only immediate members of the family present. Rev. David M. Crabtree of Bakersfield officiated. The young couple left for the South, and on their return will live in Oakland, where Mr. Gabriel is engaged in business.

Artists in the Country

San Francisco's art studios are pretty much deserted at present, most of the painters being in various parts of the state drawing their inspiration direct from nature. Miss Evelyn McCormick is sketching at Pacific Grove, where she will remain for a month. She opened her studio quarters on Saturday with a tea, which was attended by about twenty people, among them army officers from the Monterey Presidio, and a number of representatives of the younger social set of Monterey. Among the guests was Miss Kay, daughter of the proprietor and editor of the Monterey New Era, whose engagement to Lieutenant Adams has been announced at a reception given in her honor the previous afternoon. Harry Stuart Fonda is putting up a studio on his property overlooking Monterey Bay. Robert Harshe has been showing an interesting lot of oil sketches done during his summer vacation. Professor Harshe is [illegible]

COOK'S TOURS
AROUND THE WORLD
THOS. COOK & SON
561 POWELL STREET SAN FRANCISCO
Offices at Panama, Honolulu, Sydney, Auckland, Suva, Brisbane, etc.

"CINCINNATI"
ORIENT CRUISE
80 Days
$325 to $1775
Leave N. Y.
Jan. 29, 1910
HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE
160 POWELL STREET SAN FRANCISCO

sistant teacher in drawing at Stanford University. Henry Lovering, a Denver artist, has been occupying a studio at Monterey during the summer. J. W. Cantrell, well known in the local art colony, has returned from Seattle and is settled at Pacific Grove for the fall and winter months. "After Rain in Barbizon," a charming painting done by Cathea Vivian, who is sketching in Brittany this summer, has been purchased by Mrs. G. B. Moore of Texas. It has been on exhibition at the Del Monte art gallery. One of Chapel Judson's fine paintings, also one of the Del Monte collection, has been purchased by Mrs. M. J. Monette of Los Angeles. Miss Julia E. Raymond, the Redlands artist, is still at Deer Park Inn, high up in the Sierras. With snow-capped peaks on every side, pines surrounding the camp, and a rushing mountain stream tearing through, this is an ideal spot for an artist who loves the grand in nature. Miss Raymond has decorated the social hall, a most artistic little log cabin, with a number of her water colors showing scenes at Bear Valley, Laguna Beach, Cazadero and other picturesque spots in California. She has been equally successful with the light, sunny atmosphere of Southern California and the deep, rich tones of the Sierra forests. Her redwood trees are especially good. Miss Raymond is rapidly adding to her collection sketches of the scenery in the vicinity of Deer Park Springs, and has mustered quite a class of students among the quests. She is planning before the season is over to visit Lake Tahoe and other mountain resorts.

Another Week of "The Rose" in Oakland

Due to the enormous success and unbounded popularity of "The Rose of the Rancho" at the Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, the management of that theatre have decided to break their rule of a new play each week and will continue their picturesque production of the Belasco-Tully play another week. The Oakland stock players have scored the greatest hit of their career in the charming romance of old California, and the decision of the management to present them in it for another week will be welcome news to the playgoers across the bay. Florence Oakley is delightful as Juanita and Sydney Ayres, Robert Harrison, George Friend and all the remainder of the favorites fit nicely into their respective roles. The piece as mounted on the Liberty's revolving stage has never been given a better scenic setting anywhere, and it is no wonder that a second week has been demanded. The final performance of "The Rose of the Rancho" will be given on Sunday evening, August 15th.

Successful Concert

The California Conservatory of Music opened its new session with a splendid reception and concert in the hall and rooms especially prepared for that purpose. The leading artists participated in the endeavor to make the evening an artistic as well as a social success. The audience assembled filled the spacious hall and reception rooms completely, representing not only the musical and social life of our own city, but that of the entire state. The president, Professor Hermann Seuss, opened the evening with an appropriate speech, setting forth the importance of a well managed institute of music on this coast. He looked upon the Conservatory of Music as a means to further musical understanding, and spread it over all the larger cities of the West, to be made evident in an increased interest in the musical activities of our city. George Kruger, who has recently arrived from the

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE
Oakland, Cal.
Direction H. W. Bishop
Commencing Monday, August 9th, Every Evening.
Matinees Saturday and Sunday
Second Big Week of the Elaborate Production of
THE ROSE OF THE RANCHO
Final Performance Sunday Evening, August 15th.
Monday, August 16th, Rex Beach's "The Spoilers."

FAIRMONT HOTEL
Anticipates every wish of the most discriminating travelers. Single rooms with bath from $2.50 upward.
PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
UNION SQUARE
An expression of the San Francisco spirit
Under the management of JAMES WOODS

HOTEL VICTORIA
MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Manager
N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton
CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL
Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine.
Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.
American and European Plan.

HOTEL ARGONAUT
Society of California Pioneers Building
FOURTH STREET NEAR MARKET — San Francisco — CENTRE OF THE CITY
Catering to Family and Commercial Trade
400 Rooms $1.00 per day and up Dining room seats 500 guests
Special 50c Luncheon from 11:30 to 2 p. m.
Weekly and monthly rates on application. Free bus meets all trains and steamers.
Telephone Douglas 3393 EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager

THE FORUM CAFE
OAKLAND
Now under the management of
MR. GUSTAV MANN

Emile Fonteille, Formerly with the Pup
Victor Laborie, John Dubourdieu, Formerly with Poodle Dog
MAISON DORÉE HOTEL AND RESTAURANT
151-157 ELLIS ST., ABOVE POWELL
Phone Douglas 1040. Connecting all Apartments.
Best Merchants Lunch in the City
Lunch with Wine, 75 cents. Dinner with Wine, $1.25

East to assist in the artistic management of the Conservatory, demonstrated himself a master of the piano by his rendition of the Faust Waltz, the A Flat Major Polonaise and the two etudes by Chopin. Misses Hazel and Myrtle Wood won the applause of the audience by their perfect harmonizing in the difficult duet from "The Merry Wives of Windsor." Miss Grace Brown rendered two of Mr. Genss' selections in a fine full voice of excellent expression. It was to be regretted that Mr. Bullitti's illness prevented his singing. Of the rendition of the Minetti Quartet we can only say that it was the ensemble playing of veteran artists and was highly appreciated.

Mrs. Lynch Returns

Mrs. E. Lynch, the milliner, has just returned from a very delightful trip to New York, where she has been buying for the Fall season. She has as usual secured the latest creations comprising everything in the millinery line that will be in vogue this Fall.

In the Social Spotlight

Mr. and Mrs. Henry St. Goar, Miss St. Goar, Miss Helen St. Goar, Fred and Charles St. Goar, entertaining Miss Macfarlane of Honolulu, Miss Hotaling, Miss Lowe and Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Smith, were the members of an automobile party motoring to Aetna Springs.

P. E. Bowles, George D. Metcalf, George M. Bowles and Robert Bowles of Oakland spent the week-end at Aetna Springs.

Chapin F. Tubbs and H. W. Bingham are registered at Aetna Springs.

A notable reception of the week was given on Thursday evening by the ladies of the Outdoor Art Club of Mill Valley in honor of Mrs. Lovell White and in recognition of her invaluable work for the preservation of the Big Tree Grove.

Miss Isabel Sprague, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Sprague, has been the guest of Mrs. Eleanor Martin at her home on Broadway. Miss Sprague's mother was Isabel Wallace, daughter of Judge and Mrs. William T. Wallace.

Miss Linda Cadwalader recently returned from a visit to her relatives, the Mayo Newhalls, in Santa Barbara. She will leave soon for Edge Hill Park on a visit to her aunt, Mrs. Robert N. Graves, who is spending the summer in St. Helena.

Mrs. John McMullen and her grand-daughter, Miss Eliza McMullen, will soon leave for Kentucky, where they will spend several months. They will return for the winter festivities. On their return trip they will come by the way of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado.

Mr. and Mrs. William Mintzer and children, and Mrs. Mintzer's mother, Mrs. Tewxbury, have returned from Philadelphia, where they have been spending the past year. They will open the handsome home on Pacific avenue very soon.

Earl Rogers, the attorney, has taken the Martin house, on Washington street, for the winter.

Miss Adele Martel has returned from Santa Cruz to her home on Buchanan street.

Miss Anita Gonzales will soon leave for Paris, where she will join her mother, Mrs. Philip Smith.

Charles Turner, the artist, leaves next week for a year's travel and study in Paris.

Theodore Wores gave a delightful but informal tea at his studio on California street on Saturday afternoon. Many new and beautiful pictures from his brush were on exhibition.

Richard N. Hellmann is spending his vacation in Aberdeen, Washington. He will return in time to resume his studies at Hitchcock Military Academy, San Rafael.

Mrs. Alexander F. Douglas and Mrs. Gerritt L. Lansing, who have been enjoying a visit at Edgemont, will return to their homes this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Davis, who have been spending the summer in Belvedere, will return to their home on Scott street this week. Miss Sidney Davis is in Santa Barbara. She will visit Mrs. J. W. Sefton Jr. in San Diego before returning to this city. Later in the season she will go east to visit Mrs. Childs in Massachussets. Mrs. Childs, who is a cousin of Miss Davis, was formerly pretty Sibyl Hodges of this city.

Mr. and Mrs. Archie B. Treat of Sausalito are passing a few weeks at the Socrates mines, above Healdsburg.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Edward Ambrose (formerly Miss Florence Bramhall) have taken a cottage at Mill Valley for the summer. They are entertaining extensively.

B. M. Wright, the youngest son of Mrs. Selden S. Wright, arrived on Sunday from Tacoma on a visit to his mother and relatives. He has been doing newspaper work on the Tacoma News.

LAMP POST AT DEL MONTE

Professor Oliver Shaw of Winona College, Miss., a nephew of Mrs. Selden S. Wright, will arrive this week on a visit to his relatives.

Mrs. Robert Greer of Portland, Oregon, formerly Charlotte Ellinwood, is visiting her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Ellinwood, on Pacific avenue; Mrs. Greer will be extensively entertained during her stay.

Mrs. L. P. Fuller of San Francisco spent the week-end at Del Monte. Her son, W. Palmer Fuller, Jr., of Stanford University, joined her on the 31st.

Riverside is represented at Del Monte by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Chase, Mr. and Mrs. H. Gordon Pattee and Mrs. G. B. Pattee. The first four are keen golfers and are practicing hard for the coming golf tournament, which bids fair to be the largest ever held in the state. Mr. Pattee is a member of the polo team, and president of the Polo Club at Riverside.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Fee and Miss Marcia G. Fee came down from Lake Tahoe to Del Monte in their private car last week and were joined by D. Jerome Fee. Mr. Fee is an enthusiastic golfer and spends most of his time on the links.

The Millar System of Beauty Culture
INC.
MME. ADELE MILLER, President
Second Floor, Moss Building
GRANT AVE. AND GEARY ST.
Entrance 117 Grant Avenue
Telephones, Douglas 5095 and Home C-1537
Pupils taken for night school. Every branch of Facial Massage, Hair Dressing and Manicuring taught

MRS. E. LYNCH
MILLINERY
ANNOUNCES
that she has just returned from a buying trip to New York City, where she has secured advanced millinery creations comprising everything that is newest and most authentic for the Fall season.
875 MARKET STREET
Lincolon Realty Building, Opposite Powell

Robin Grey, the mining engineer who has charge of the Vanderbilt mining interests in California, has returned from England and is at the Fairmont.

Among the recent additions to the "Service Set" at the Fairmont are Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Glassford, U. S. N.; Charles W. Woodruff, U. S. N.; Major and Mrs. McKinstry, U. S. A.; Major and Mrs. W. P. Chamberlain, U. S. N.; Lieutenant-Commander and Mrs. Raby, U. S. N.

Among the recent guests at the Fairmont were Mr. and Mrs. Julius Kruttschnitt of Chicago, Miss Kruttschnitt and Mr. John Kruttschnitt. Mr. Kruttschnitt, as director of the operative departments of the Harriman lines, is one of the most important men in the railway world of today. He will go to Mexico for a short visit, but his family will remain at the Fairmont during his absence.

LATEST FRENCH FASHIONS

From photographs taken on the boulevards of Paris.

The following are among the rectent arrivals at the Hotel Victoria: Mrs. H. L. Warner, Del Monte; W. C. Parsons, McCabe, Arizona; O. Y. Woodward, Woodward Island; Dr. and Mrs. Sherman, Crown Point, New York; Mrs. F. Cunningham, Santa Cruz; Dr. R. L. Saville, Monteville, New York; Mrs. W. H. Patten, city; Mrs. C. F. Hargrove, Napa, and Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Olmstead, Los Angeles.

The Keith Spauldings of Chicago are at the St. Francis, where many local society people are endeavoring to make their stay pleasant by informal entertainment.

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 56 Kearny street.

A luncheon was tendered to Colonel J. B. Bellinger, U. S. A., in the Red rooms of the Hotel St. Francis last Wednesday by the Trustees of the Chamber of Commerce and a number of his friends, who gathered to bid him good luck on his departure for the Philippines.

The Ebony Chest

A young man stood beside an ebony chest, gazing at it with perplexity and longing. Upon the lid, wrought in jeweled letters, was the word "Fame." In the massive iron lock was a key, and the young man held in his hand a bunch of other keys of all sizes and descriptions.

"I cannot open it," he sighed. "I have tried them all.

AT LONG BEACH SANITARIUM, LONG BEACH, CAL.

The chest, with all its rich contents, is locked to me forever."

"You are a wanton," a harsh voice said.

He turned, startled, and saw that Ambition had entered the room, and that he looked upon him with dark reproach.

"What is my weakness," faltered the youth. "Why do I fail?"

"You have friends, and truth, and tenderness, and, worst of all, a sweetheart. You cannot serve me while these things hamper you. Cast them all out, and seek the key again."

Whereupon the shade vanished and the youth pondered long over the words. He was torn by many emotions. He thought of his friends, of his trusts, and, most of all, of the bright eyes and rustling skirts of his plighted love. But ever he turned from these to the chest and read that rich inscription, "Fame."

At last he steeled his heart and made his choice. He severed all the ties that bound him to his little world, and turned again to the magic chest.

The first key he tried turned easily in the lock, and he lifted the lid.

Then he fell back with white lips and frightened eyes.

The chest was empty.

—The Fabulist.

The Watson School (Mrs. C. Watson, principal) announces an "at home," Saturday evening, August the seventh, at 2518 Etna street, Berkeley. A cordial invitation is extended to those interested to visit this new boarding and day school which offers the best features of public and private school system.

EDUCATIONAL

Mills College

FOR YOUNG WOMEN

Only Woman's College on Pacific Coast. Offers same advantages as best Eastern institutions. Full Collegiate course. Degrees conferred. Third and fourth years of College Preparatory during 1909-10. Special opportunities in Domestic Science, Music and Art. Within reach of both Stanford and University of California. Earnest Christian influences; non-sectarian; all forms of healthful out-door amusements. Ideal location in beautiful Oakland hills. 1:10 from San Francisco. Fall term begins August 11, 1909. For catalogue and brochure of views address, President's Secretary, Mills College P. O., California.

Miss West's School

2457 SCOTT STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Thirty-sixth year opens August 16, 1909. Accredited to University of California, Stanford, Wellesley, Vassar and Smith.

MISS HELEN A. O'CONNELL, PRINCIPAL

Miss Head's School

2538 CHANNING WAY, BERKELEY, CAL.

Boarding and day school for girls, accredited to the University of California, Stanford, Vassar, Smith and Wellesley; 22nd year begins August 9, 1909.

MARY E. WILSON, M. L., PRINCIPAL

Miss Harker's School

PALO ALTO, CALIFORNIA

Boarding and Day School for Girls. Certificate admits to College. Intermediate and Primary Departments. Special attention given to Music, Arts and Crafts. Send for catalogue. Eighth year begins August 16, 1909.

St. Mary's College

BROADWAY AND 23d STREET, OAKLAND

Endowed with all rights and privileges of State University. Literary, scientific, civil, and mining engineering courses; complete business course. Studies resumed fall term, Wednesday, September 1st. Send for catalog to Registrar, Bro. Vellesian, President.

St. Matthew's Military School

BURLINGAME, CAL.

Rev. William A. Brewer, A. B., Rector.

Lowan's Hill School

MILL VALLEY

A delightful home boarding school for girls. Preparatory for Colleges. Outdoor life. High school, intermediate and primary departments. Fall term begins August 9th.

MISS WOODMAN, Principal.

THE LYCEUM

2590 PINE STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Prepares for university, the law and medical colleges; seventeenth year; here you can save time and money; excellent teachers; special coaching for August examinations of the universities; we have prepared hundreds successfully; day and evening sessions.

Irving Institute School for Girls

147 PRESIDIO AVENUE, SAN FRANCISCO
Residence, 3370 Washington Street

Opens August Second, 1909. Send for Catalogue.

MISS PINKHAM, Principal MISS AMY D. HARRISON, Associate

The Hamlin School

A Boarding and Day School for Girls

Opens Monday, August 9, 1909.

Accredited by the California Universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to high school graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma. Pupils charged from the week of entrance.

In place of the kindergarten, a French school has been opened, where the French language is taught by means of charts, pictures, games, songs and stories.

Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed, and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars, address MISS HAMLIN, 2230 Pacific Avenue, San Francisco.

Boone's University School for Boys

BERKELEY

Commences its twenty-eighth year, Tuesday, August 10th. Accredited to the University of California, Stanford, University of Michigan, Cornell and Pennsylvania.

Apply for Catalogue to

2029 Durant Ave. P. R. BOONE, Principal

Anderson Academy

IRVINGTON, CALIFORNIA

Excellently equipped, beautifully situated, offers greatest advantages to those wishing thorough preparation for college in least time possible. Splendid facilities for athletics, in which a master will coach. Next term begins August 10th. Send for catalogue.

WILLIAM WALKER ANDERSON, M. A., Principal.

The Chandler School For Girls

LOS ALTOS, CALIFORNIA

Beautiful grounds covering six acres in the foothills, three and one-half miles from Stanford University. Outdoor study and classwork. Address

MRS. MARY CHANDLER, Los Altos, California.

Castilleja School

PALO ALTO, CALIFORNIA

Home and Day School for Girls. College preparatory and general courses. Intermediate and primary departments. Domestic Science, Music, Art, Out-of-Door Gymnasium. Pupils admitted to Stanford, University of California, Wellesley, and Smith, without examination. Illustrated Catalogue. Term opens August 30, 1909. Principal, MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B.

California Conservatory of Music

Is now located in its new magnificent building

147 PRESIDIO AVENUE

Between Jackson and Washington Streets

The Watson School

2518 ETNA STREET, BERKELEY, CAL.

Boarding and day school. Offers the best features of public and private school systems. Opens August 18th.

MRS. C. L. WATSON, Principal.

San Francisco Business College

CORNER MARKET, EDDY AND POWELL STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Newly equipped in quartered oak. New location in center of business district. In close touch with the great opportunities for well trained young people in the new San Francisco.

Too Quick for Them

There were three at the little table in the cafe, a lady and two men. Suddenly the electric lights went out, and the lady, quickly and noiselessly, drew back. An instant later there was the smack of a compound kiss. As the electric lights went up each man was seen to be smiling complacently. "I thought I heard a kiss," said the lady, "but nobody kissed me." Then the men glared at each other, and flushed and looked sheepish.

Stage

Excellent Orpheum Bill

Off with the old love and on with the new. Stand around the Orpheum lobby and you will invariably hear seasoned patrons of that house declaring that some specially clever turn is the best of its kind they ever saw there. The merit of the old is forgotten in the glamor of the new. It is so with the six American dancers who are at the Orpheum this week. I don't doubt that just as good have been there before, but I can't recall them; and when the next lot of skillful foot-workers come along, we shall all take off our hats to them as "the best thing ever seen at the Orpheum." "A Sextette of Stylish Steppers" this present aggregation is called. Of the lot Charles Connor, who wears the Pierrot costume first and then the red, is easily the best. His grace and agility are amazing, and his poise gives his work a distinction attained by few dancers. The three ladies of the troupe do some extremely fine foot work, as do the other two men who make up the remainder of the sextette. The ensemble dances are very tempests of movement and riots of color. It is the best—there, now; what did I tell you? This week's bill all through is of exceptional merit. High honor must go to Herbert Ashley, who convulses with his depiction of the Hebrew held up during a New Year revelry and turning the tables on the robber, finally convincing him of the error of his dark and devious midnight ways. But it is a notable fact that the thug, when he reforms, keeps what he has stolen; in which he resembles the immunity supervisors of San Francisco. Ashley is a comedian of rare worth, with an ingratiating grin that in itself arouses roars of laughter. He does not employ the farce manner so common in depicting Hebrews, and in his quiet way succeeds in accentuating the comedy of his lines and business. His work shows brains as well as comedy ability. The sketch that he and Matthews do abounds in bright lines and epigrams. And Mary Marble is at the Orpheum too—Mary of the diminutive size, the queer, cracked little voice, the ingenuous face and the gurgling, infectious laugh. Her smile provokes good humor, and when it the transition into peals of merriment comes she has the audience rocking in joyousness with her. She is ably assisted by Sam Chip, and the vehicle for their fun-making is a sketch showing the vicissitudes of two Dutch lovers who defeat the machinations of a tyrannical father. The plot amounts to but little, being merely an excuse for bright dialogue, clever songs and good dancing. The whole thing is a howling success. Another winner on the program—it seems that they are all winners this week—is furnished in the sketch done by Frank J. Conroy, George Le Maire and company in "A King for a Night," in which is depicted the adventures and tribulations of a darky, played by Conroy, who is introduced to a French heiress as an Ethiopian king. Conroy is an unctuous black-face comedian, who does not miss a iota of the opportunity that his lines give him for fun-making. He is well supported. The best of last week's acts are in the hold-over, the combination making an all star program.

—W. J. W.

"Florodora" at the Princess

It isn't every theatregoer that is given an opportunity to witness the rehearsal of a play; but that privilege was extended to the people who assembled at the Princess on Monday night to see "Florodora" presented. The performance was intended for a regular rendition of the opera, but the company's lack of knowledge of the lines, the stage business, and the time for entrances and exits turned the performance into more of a farce than the authors intended. But it was quite a lot of fun, anyway; and it takes a lot of incompetency on the part of the performers to destroy altogether the effects of the beautiful melodies in this musical piece. But both principals and chorus came near achieving that distinction. It was almost unforgivable when the "Tell Me, Pretty Maiden," the effectiveness of which depends so much upon correct maneuvers, was spoiled by hesitancy, by the ladies and gentlemen in the roles stepping on each others' feet, and by the male members of the double sextette loudly whispering directions to each other. The encore was more polite than insistent. And "The She-ade of the She-eltering Palm" didn't get a hand. This was due in some measure to the fact that George Burke, who was cast for Abercoed, was taken ill on Sunday, and Ray Youngman had to be substituted. Mr. Youngman could be excused for not knowing his lines; but his manner of delivery made it immaterial what he said. He was the mildest mannered man that ever defied a sweetheart's tyrannical father, and his love making would have failed to inspire hope in the bosom of the most ardent and anticipative spinster. Arthur Cunningham, who played Gilfain, was good, of course, giving his role the proper comedy touch, and singing well. Bud Ross played Tweedlepunch in a broad farce vein, and worked hard to make up for the failing of the others. He succeeded in being very funny at times, gaining the most enthusiastic applause of the evening. Miss Stech as Angela Gilfain was one of the shining lights of the piece, luminous to some extent through contrast, yet charming enough to win favor with the audience. She sings and dances prettily, and has looks to carry her along. Miss Broske played and sang Dolores indifferently, while Miss Golden was only passable as Lady Holyrood. The orchestra lacked to a pleasing degree the faults of the singers.

SCENE FROM "PAID IN FULL"

At the Van Ness Theatre commencing Monday Evening, August 9th.

—W. J. W.

"Three Weeks" in Stock

Probably no dramatic event announced in this city in years has inspired so much interest or attracted so much attention as the production of Elinor Glyn's dramatization of her own remarkable story, "Three Weeks," which will begin a limited engagement at the American theater tomorrow afternoon. The footlight story has been told in this city before, but its production was of such mediocre caliber that justice was not done the really great play. From a financial standpoint no production of its kind has attained greater success, and figuring on its possibilities with an artistic and sumptuous revival the American theater management lost no time in procuring the Pacific Coast rights to the play and preparing it for its stock company.

Long before manager Abe S. Cohn contemplated engaging a stock company to fill in the time pending the coming of the Shuberts with "The Witching Hour" and a host of other attractions, he had received hundreds of requests from many admirers of Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks" for an early revival. Prior to the announcement that "Three Weeks" would follow "At the Sound of Taps" at the American, the management was deluged with letters from various quarters suggesting the production of the celebrated love tragedy and, the demand becoming greater every day, "Old Heidelberg," the piece in preparation, was abandoned and "Three Weeks" substituted.

The story which "Three Weeks" unfolds is not a new one. It simply shows that marriage between the royalty of the old world is all wrong—and that the same principle applies here in our own social world to marriages of convenience. One of the strongest moral and object lessons it conveys is that much of the unhappiness of the marriages among the moderns is due to the fact that there is no poetry or romance in their lives—after marriage they settle down to the utter commonplaces of life and forget the splendid opportunity for the mental, spiritual and romantic development of their souls. During the engagement of "Three Weeks" a special Thursday matinee will be given, to which ladies only will be admitted.

"Paid in Full"

Eugene Walter's "Paid in Full," a play of exceptional power in every respect, will be at the Van Ness Theatre, Monday, August 9th, for a two weeks' engagement with a specially chosen New York cast. "Paid in Full" needs no recommendation. Its fame is a guarantee sufficient to fill the theater with an audience alert to enjoy one of the greatest stage stories in years. More than two million five hundred thousand persons can testify that "Paid in Full" is richly entitled to its tremendous popularity. More than two and a half millions of persons had seen it when, last May, the five companies that had been playing it the entire season were permitted a brief rest to freshen them for this season. Again, this season, five companies are presenting it. The enormous number of persons that have crowded to this play, so vast indeed as to demand five companies to act it all over this country, stamp "Paid in Full" as one of the dramatic wonders of this generation. No other play has required five companies, no other has ever been witnessed by so many millions of persons in so short a time, for "Paid in Full" is now in only its second season outside of New York. There it has another year to its credit, for it ran two years on Broadway, thereby upsetting all theatrical precedents. The cast is as follows: Louis Morrell, Sara Perry, Ned Findley, Charles Riegel, Rose Snyder, Catherine Tallman and Allen Atwell.

Sousa Coming

Manager Will Greenbaum announces that he has arranged with John Philip Sousa for a short tour of his famous band commencing in November. The band this season will be stronger and better than ever and only the principal cities will be visited, with just a few exceptions. The Faculty Committee on Music and Drama has invited Sousa to play at the Greek Theater in Berkeley and Stanford University has offered its Assembly Hall for one event. Dr. Ludwig Wullen, the famous interpreter of classic songs who came to this country for a series of forty concerts last season and who met with such success that the number had to be increased to over one hundred with the result that he was too fatigued to fulfill his engagements in the west, will come here early in the coming season. Schumann-Heink and Sembrich will also visit us right at the height of the season. Greenbaum says he is tired of taking the singers at the end of their work in the east when they are tired out and stale. Sembrich appears in January and Schumann-Heink in February.

"The Squaw Man" at the Alcazar

Something akin to a double event is announced by the Alcazar management as its offering for the coming week. Augustus Phillips, engaged to play masculine leads dur-

ELEANOR GORDON

The gifted young actress who will appear in Edgar Allen Woolf's comedietta "Tips on Tap" this Sunday matinee at the Orpheum.

ing the season of 1909-1910, will make his first professional appearance in San Francisco, the medium of his introduction being Edwin Milton Royle's celebrated drama, "The Squaw Man." As the play has never been presented here by a stock company, and as Mr. Phillips will be entirely new to the Alcazar's clientele, the bill will possess two-fold novelty. As the title indicates, the story has to do with the life of the west, where, when a white man takes an Indian woman for his bride, he becomes in local parlance, "a squaw man." In this particular instance the squaw man is a self-sacrificing young English gentleman, and the play opens in his native land. To save the head of the family, an Earl, from punishment for embezzlement and his wife from disgrace, he permits suspicion of the crime to fall upon himself, and disappears. When next seen by the audience he is a Wyoming cattleman and known as Jim Carston. The scene of the act is at a Union Pacific water station, where Cash Hawkins, a desperado, who had a grievance against Carston, is about to shoot him down in cold blood, when the daughter of an Indian chief shoots Hawkins from ambush. Carston is at first accused of the crime, but manages to prove his innocence, and the curtain drops with the Indian girl's revelation of herself as the murderess. In the next act, which shows Carston's ranch, and is six years later, the rancher has married the Indian girl and is in possession of a son. News comes that the Earl is dead, and that Carston is head of the family, and possessor of the title. Feeling that he cannot desert his wife, he decides to renounce his claim to the title, and send his boy off to England to be educated and prepared for the position he is to hold. The Indian mother tries to dissuade her husband from separating her from the child, and when her pleadings are of no avail, she wanders out to the desert and shoots herself. Mr. Phillips will have all the Alcazar favorites and many extra people in the cast with him, and a very elaborate production is promised. Stage Director Butler will have abundant opportunity to display his art in "The Squaw Man."

Novelties at The Orpheum

The Orpheum announces for next week a most tempting program of novel acts that have scored heavily in the East and Europe. "La Petite Revue" produced by Charles Lovenberg, well known in New York as the originator of novelties, will head the coming bill. It is a review of old and new footlight successes arranged and presented in a most unique manner. Special scenery is used, the first picturing a youth in reverie reviewing the stage celebrities of the day. In his imagination he beholds minature productions of favorite vaudeville and musical comedy artists upon a minature stage.

AUGUSTUS PHILLIPS

The Alcazar's new leading man who opens Monday night in Edwin Milton Royle's romance, "The Squaw Man."

Then the scene changes and the dreamer recalls several of the dear old comic operas of bygone days whose popularity will never abate. In his dream the characters of these operas appear on the little stage. A delightful tableau entitled "A Slumberless Serenade" is the finale. La Petite Revue calls for the services of those melochous vocalists Ray O. Dietrich, Mabel Rettew, F. Kek Schilling, Kirby Kahill, Arline Fredericks, Eleanor Caldwell and Harry Irwin. Eleanor Gordon, a handsome and gifted young actress who has made for herself an enviable reputation on Broadway will appear in a sketch of which report speaks most highly entitled "Tips on Tap." It was written for her by Edgar Allen Woolf and in it she has the assistance of that favorite and sterling actor Joseph Sullivan. The Five Avolos, the premier Xylophonists in Europe, will introduce selections from their large and varied repertoire. Lena Pantzer, assisted by Sam Mint, will contribute a terpsichorean specialty in which she dances on the floor, on a spade and on a wire. She is a skillful slack wire artist but her aerial performance is but a single feature of an extraordinary act which contains something new in the dancing line. Next week will be the last of the Six American Dancers, Matthews and Ashley, Conroy and Le Maire and of also Sam Chip and Mary Marble in their immense hit "In Old Edam." Something entirely original in the way of motion pictures will conclude the performance.

Attractions at the Chutes

Seeing the new Chutes from the back of elephants will be a unique innovation introduced at the Fillmore street amusement park this Sunday. The Glasscock mammals, the ones that have been entertaining throngs of delighted patrons with their quaint tricks and amusing antics during the past week, are to be turned into sightseeing carriers. "Little Mike," the pet of the juvenile visitors and clown of the herd, is to be set aside for the especial use of the children. The larger members of the herd will be expected to accommodate adults of any and all sizes offered. At least one of the elephants, Nero, will probably suffer no apprehension from this quarter for it was, once upon a time, his duty to carry the fat lady on parade when the Glasscock performers were with Ringling Brothers' circus. The added duties imposed upon the Chutes elephants will in no way interfere with their trick exhibitions to be given afternoon and evening. The band-stand is to be used by the elephant performers and their trainers promise several new features. One of the best of the new offerings will be the clowning of "Little Mike" who would seem to be rightly styled "the jungle comedian." The diving of Towers will be another addition to Sunday's free bill. This young man claims to be the world's champion high diver when it comes to making leaps into shallow water. By way of illustration he will Sunday afternoon and night plunge a distance of ninety-seven feet into a tank less than four feet in depth. Another feature of a similar character will be the dives performed by Florence Spray. Demon continues to be a favorite with those who admire the highly sensational. He will again ride the length of the chutes astride his flame enveloped bicycle. In contrast with the sensationalists will be the entertainment offered by the American comedy trio, song and dance artists of high merit; the open-air motion pictures, the burlesques of the clowns and the splendid concerts furnished by the Royal Banda Roma. The band and its popular leader, Sirignano, promise many fine numbers. Brilliant marches, stirring two-steps and overtures from favorite grand operas will constitute the greater portion of the programs.

GIERSBERGER WINES

The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.

THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY

Phone Oakland 2510 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

In the Limelight

The final performance of the charming comedy drama, "Polly of the Circus," will be given at the Van Ness Theater on Sunday night. Frederic Thompson's production of the Margaret Mayo play is complete in every detail.

"Cameo Kirby," the new play to be brought here by Dustin Farnum, tells a thrilling and romatic story of life in Louisiana in the early thirties. In it Mr. Farnum has scored the success of his career.

Blanche Bates and her company have started west and will be here at the Van Ness Theater next month with the brilliantly successful production of "The Fighting Hope." This should one of the events of the theatrical season.

Hartley Manners is giving Clyde Fitch a close run for the honor of being America's most prolific playwright. In addition to having several plays produced last season, Mr. Manners is at work on no less than five new dramas and one musical comedy.

Nazimova, who is now resting at her country place in Portchester, N. Y., is studying her three hundredth role. She is said to have a repertory larger than any foreign artist. Eugene Walter is at work on a drama for the Russian actress, the scenario of which will be delivered to the Shuberts by the middle of August. As previously announced, Madame Nazimova will open the new Shubert theater in New York (which, by the way, is to be named after her) in January.

When Julian Edwards, the composer, received the book of Sam Bernard's new comedy, which was written on very short notice by Hartley Manners, he is said to have declared: "The best book I've ever had to work on!" The tentative title of "The Magician" is still perplexing Mr. Bernard. Rehearsals of the new piece have been called for early August.

Edna Wallace Hopper has gone abroad to purchase gowns in Paris for her starring tour in "The Harrigan Girl" by George M. Cohan.

VAN NESS THEATRE
Cor. Van Ness and Grove
Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgr.
Phone Market 500

Sunday Night, August 8th, Last Time "Polly of the Circus."
TWO WEEKS BEGINNING MONDAY, AUGUST 9th,
Matinee Saturday
Wagenhals and Kemper Company Presents
THE GREAT PLAY OF REAL LIFE OF TODAY

PAID IN FULL

By Eugene Walter
New York Cast—Special Production
Coming—Dustin Farnum in "Cameo Kirby."

AMERICAN THEATRE
Market St., nr. Seventh
Phone Market 381

Commencing Sunday Matinee, August 8th, 1909.
ELINOR GLYN'S

THREE WEEKS

Its the Talk of the World.
Prices: Evenings, $1.00, 75c, 50c and 25c. Matinees, 75c, 50c and 25c.
All Reserved.
Special Matinee Thursday for Ladies Only.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE
Cor. Sutter and Steiner
Class "A" Building
Phone West 1400

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.
Monday Evening, August 9th, and Throughout the Week,
An Elaborate Production of Edwin Milton Royle's Famous Play of the Plains,

THE SQUAW MAN

Introducing Mr. Augustus Phillips, Leading Man.
Prices: Evening, 25c to $1.00. Matinees Saturday and Sunday, 25c to 50c.
Matinee Saturday and Sunday

NEW ORPHEUM
O'Farrell Street, between Stockton and Powell
Phone Douglas 70

Safest and Most Magnificent Theatre in America
Week Beginning This Sunday Afternoon—Matinee Every Day
ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

LA PETITE REVUE, an Old Idea Uniquely Vocalized and Twentieth Centurized by Charles Lovenberg; ELEANOR GORDON and CO., Including Joseph Sullivan in the Comedietta "Tips on Taps"; 5—AVOLOS—5; LENA PANTZER, Assisted by Sam Mint; 6—AMERICAN DANCERS—6; MATTHEWS and ASHLEY; CONROY, LE MAIRE & CO.; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES. Last week and Enormous Success SAM CHIP and MARY MARBLE in a Deft Dialogue with ditties designated "In Old Edam."

Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

NEW CHUTES
Fillmore, Eddy, Turk and Webster
Open Morning, Afternoon and Night

THE BILL OF THE SEASON
TOWERS, the Man Who Jumped From Brooklyn Bridge.
TRAINED ELEPHANTS. Bring the Children to See "Little Mike."
FLORENCE SPRAY and DEMON More Sensational Than Ever.
ELEGANT CAFE. Song and Dance Artists Offer Unique Entertainment While You Eat and Drink.
They're Here: The Frolics of 1909
TAKE THE POPULAR CHUTES JOY JAUNT

Shaw's Latest Play

(Continued from Page 9.)

Balsquith—I can't shoot them down.

Mitchener—Yes, you can. You don't realize it, but if you fire a rifle into a German he drops just as surely as a rabbit does.

Balsquith—But dash it all, man, a rabbit hasn't got a rifle and a German has. Suppose he shoots you down.

Mitchener—Excuse me, Balsquith, but that consideration is what we call cowardice in the army. A soldier always assumes he is going to shoot, not to be shot.

Balsquith (jumping up and walking about sulkily)—Oh, come! I like to hear you military people talking of cowardice. Why, you spend your life in an ecstasy of terror of imaginary invasions. I don't believe you ever go to bed without looking under it for a burglar.

Mitchener (calmly)—A very sensible precaution, Basquith, I take it, and in consequence I've never been burgled.

Balsquith—Neither have I. Anyhow, don't you taunt me with cowardice. (He posts himself on the hearth rug beside Mitchener, on his left.) I never look under my bed for a burglar. I'm not always looking under the nation's bed for an invader. And if it comes to fighting, I'm quite willing to fight without being three to one.

Mitchener—These are the romantic ravings of a jingo civilian, Balsquith. At least you'll not deny that the absolute command of the sea is essential to our security.

Balsquith—The absolute command of the sea is essential to the security of the principality of Monaco. But Monaco isn't going to get it.

Mitchener—And consequently Monaco enjoys no security. What a frightful thing! How do the inhabitants sleep with the possibility of invasion, of bombardment, continually present to their minds? Would you have our English slumbers broken in the same way? Are we also to live without security?

Balsquith (dogmatically)—Yes. There's no such thing as security in the world, and there never can be as long as men are mortal. England will be secure when England is dead, just as the streets of London will be safe when there's no longer a man in her streets to be run over or a vehicle to run over him. When you military chaps ask for security you are crying for the moon.

Mitchener (very seriously)—Let me tell you, Balsquith, that in these days of aeroplanes and Zeppelin airships the question of the moon is becoming one of the greatest importance. It will be reached at no very distant date. Can you, as an Englishman, tamely contemplate the possibility of having to live under a German moon? The British flag must be planted there at all hazards.

The opinions of two representatives of anti-suffrage, Lady Corinthia Fanshawe and Mrs. Banger, have a whole scene to themselves.

Mrs. Banger—This pistol, sir, was carried at Waterloo by my grandmother.

Mitchener—I presume you mean your grandfather.

Mrs. Banger—You presume unwarrantably.

Lady Corinthia—Mrs. Banger's grandmother commanded a canteen at that celebrated battle.

Mrs. Banger—Who my grandfather was is a point that has never been quite clearly settled. I put my trust not in my ancestors but in my good sword, which is at my lodgings.

Mitchener—Your sword!

Mrs. Banger—The sword with which I slew five Egyptians with my own hand at Kassassin, where I served as a trooper.

Mitchener—Lord bless me! But was your sex never discovered?

Mrs. Banger—It was never even suspected. I had a comrade—a gentleman ranker—whom they called Fanny. They never called me Fanny.

Lady Corinthia—The Suffragettes have turned the whole woman movement onto the wrong track. They ask for a vote.

Mrs. Banger—What use is a vote? Men have the vote.

Lady Corinthia—And men are slaves.

Mrs. Banger—What women need is the right to military service. Give me a well mounted regiment of women with sabres opposed to a regiment of men with votes. We shall see which will go down before the other. No; we have had enough of these gentle, pretty creatures who merely talk and cross-examine Ministers in police courts and go to prison like sheep and suffer and sacrifice themselves. This question must be solved by blood and iron, as was well said by Bismarck, who I have reason to believe was a woman in disguise.

Mitchener—Bismarck a woman!

Mrs. Banger—All the really strong men of history have been disguised women.

Mitchener (remonstrating)—My dear lady!

Mrs. Banger—How can you tell? You never knew that the hero of the charge at Kassassin was a woman; yet she was; it was I, Rosa Carmina Banger. Would Napoleon have been so brutal to women, think you, had he been a man?

Mitchener—Oh, come, come! Really! Surely female rulers have often shown all the feminine weaknesses. Queen Elizabeth, for instance. Her vanity, her levity—

Mrs. Banger—Nobody who has studied the history of Queen Elizabeth can doubt for a moment that she was a disguised man.

As is usual with Shaw plays all ends in a general confusion of incident and idea. Mitchener marries the charwomen. The suffragists appear to have scored a victory and Balsquith and Mitchener shout "Votes for women!" with all the rest of the world.

It will readily be seen that Shaw has not lost his power of uttering witty, rasping sarcasms. Yet really there was no need of hiring help to project them over the footlights. But what would he have done without the censor?

MURINE EYE REMEDY CO., Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—We have a little fellow four months old who was troubled for three months after birth with sore eyes. A large amount of pus came from them, accompanied with severe inflammation. Our family Doctor, also an Eye Specialist, attended him without relief.

I saw your MURINE EYE REMEDY advertised in one of our Electric Cars, and utterly discouraged, I resolved to try it, and do you know, in three days' time all worry was over. In one week the Sore Eyes were a thing of the past.

This is an unasked for testimonial, but I know you will accept it as it is sent with much gratitude toward MURINE EYE REMEDY.

Yours truly,
Arthur Snow.

HOTEL CUMBERLAND

Broadway at 54th Street

NEW YORK

Near 50th St. Subway Station and 53d St. Elevated

Ideal Location,
Near Theatres, Shops, and
Central Park.

New and Fireproof

Strictly First Class in Every Respect

Rates Reasonable
$2.50 with bath, and up.

All Hardwood Floors and
Oriental Rugs.

10 Minutes' Walk to 20 Theatres

Excellent Restaurant Prices Moderate

Send for Booklet

HARRY P. STIMSON,
formerly with Hotel Imperial

R. J. BINGHAM,
formerly with Hotel Woodward

If you can't decide where to go—see

PECK-JUDAH CO.

789 MARKET ST., SAN FRANCISCO

They know—Send for "Summer Trips," just out.

The Course of True Love

(Continued from Page 11.)

leave his place by the first of October, and to take over a little farm as tenant. He thought he would not make any further attempt to see Lottie alone. But when he had received his money, given up his books, and thanked the Borst family for their kindness to him, then he intended to ask Mrs. Borst, calmly and quietly: "May I ask where I can find Miss Jensen? I would like a few words with her alone."

And then, equally calmly, he would take the hand of the adored one, would look into her eyes and say: "Lottie, you know how I love you. Will you try to love me a little?"

That was the way to do it. How stupid of him not to have thought of it sooner!

The first of October came. Mr. Anders received his money, gave up his books, thanked the Borst family for their kindness, then turned to the lady of the house, and said with dignity, although his voice trembled:

"Mrs. Borst, may I ask where I can find Miss Jensen? I wanted to—I mean I wanted to speak to her——"

Mrs. Borst laughed. "I am sorry, Mr. Anders. I gave Miss Jensen leave to go away to visit her sick brother."

"When—when is she coming back?" whispered poor Anders.

"I don't know. I gave her leave to stay several days, in case her brother should be very ill."

As if dazed, Anders staggered out of the room and into the wagon that was to take him to the station. He bought his ticket, entered the train, settled himself in a corner, drew forth his blue-checked handkerchief, blew his nose violently, and wept—wept for the first time since his mother's death, when he was fourteen years old.

Station X was the place where the express, Mr. Anders' train, should meet and pass the local. The local is supposed to leave just as the express draws into the station. The trains often pass each other in motion, but sometimes they stand side by side for a minute or two.

Mr. Anders' train drew up to the station. The local stood blowing off steam, its crew all in their places, ready to start. Good Heavens! There was Lottie's blue shawl in a third class compartment!

The man who is thoroughly in love does not notice the existence of fellow passengers or of train crews. They simply are not there, so far as he is concerned. Mr. Anders fell out on to the platform, made a deep bow before the blue shawl—and cried, in a voice trembling with the longing of years, with endless love and endless fear:

"Lottie, will you be my wife?"

Lottie, horrified at the gentle amusement of the other passengers in her compartment—fortunately they were but few—was about to fall into the usual maidenly evasions. But then the thought shot through her innocent soul that this was the moment which might determine her whole life's happiness, and so she answered simply and sincerely:

"Yes, Karl."

"Then get right out of that train," said Mr. Anders.

And she did. Hand in hand they ran into the first class waiting room, and Lottie sank on the faithful heart that had beat for her so long. But the fair young maiden, whose every nerve was quivering with joy, suddenly trembled in the arms of her lover, raised her sweet, moist eyes to his and whispered in chaste bewilderment:

"Oh, my hand bag!"

But Mr. Anders did not answer. What are all the handbags in the world to an overseer who loves and knows that his love is returned?

Summer Resort Arrivals

Hotel Rafael: C. E. Johnson, Miss Helen Baker, Mrs. L. L. Baker, Walter C. Gover, Mrs. W. J. Somers, David Bachmann, P. C. Bertene, Gray Stubbs, Miss Marion Hall, E. O. Selfridge Jr., M. A. Sloper, William H. Blake, E. M. Cason, John Hughes and Mrs. Hughes, Miss Helen Dean, Albert Fries, J. Steinhart, R. E. Mulcahy, Edgar A. Mizner, George A. Mizner, George E. Crothus, Dr. R. E. Biber and wife, Mrs. Samuel Behvendt and son, G. Mosbacher, Mrs. L. Wormser, Miss Bruemmer, and Philip S. Baker.

Aetna Springs: San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. Henry St. Goar, Miss St. Goar, Miss Helen St. Goar, Fred St. Goar, Chas. St. Goar, Miss Hotaling, Miss Edith Lowe, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Smith, Capt. and Mrs. W. J. Gray, William J. Gray Jr., Carlton R. Gray, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Nolan, J. C. Nolan Jr., Miss Esther Nolan, Master L. B. Nolan, H. W. Bingham, G. J. Scharlach, L. Weissberg, H. B. Stedman, Dr. and Mrs. Edw. J. Creely, Mr. and Mrs. Mulford L. Pancoast, J. A. Young, Otto tum Suden, Richard tum Suden, Miss Blanch Beamer, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Ingram.

Hotel del Coronado: San Francisco, C. W. Cook, Jay W. and Mrs. George N. Armsby, Major and Mrs. C. H. McKinstry, Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Bishop, Martin F. Sneideher, Mr. and Mrs. George N. Armsby, Major and Mrs. C. H. McKinstry, Mr. and Mrs. William Shore, Mr. and Mrs. Marcus S. Koshland, Miss Koshland, Daniel E. Koshland, Robert J. Koshland, Mrs. B. Schweitzer, Will Hoff, and E. F. Swann.

Tavern of Tamalpais: San Francisco, Mrs. Clara I. Peel, Clarence E. Comstock, Anna Nickelson, E. Peterson, B. S. Rowe, wife and daughter, P. A. Converse, Miss R. Moore, Miss E. Moore, A. Gussard, Mrs. C. Schneider, F. M. Butler, Capt. O. Anderson, Mrs. O. Anderson, Oscar Anderson, Helen Anderson, and Wm. W. Bishop.

Byron Hot Springs: San Francisco,Miss E. McEwen, F. C. Talbot, wife and daughter, Miss D. R. Tomes, Mrs. Thos. Salmon, Z. Sorich, I. R. Wilbur, wife and daughter, J. R. Josue, John Hardiman, H. Ricker, Peter Johnson, H. M. Carter, J. D. Mouser and wife, Miss N. C. Gerhard, J. C. Smythe, J. Nelson and wife, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Avery, James Quinn, R. F. Lewis, Jos. A. Sullivan, A. S. Hoffman and son, F. W. Wallace, Miss L. Johnson, Mrs. M. Stenson, A. E. Goetz, W. J. McDowell, J. M. Boas and wife, E. A. Sandstrom, Wm. Ham. Hall, L. Kieve and wife, D. E. Cervalli, Mrs. M. J. L. McDonald, B. Rich, Mrs. Emma L. Hunt, Mrs. J. F. Moroney.

Hotel del Monte: San Francisco, Mrs. Chas. C. Judson, Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Somers and chauffeur, Miss Cleaves, Fred S. Shoup, J. B. Scofield, H. J. Small, Miss Barbara Small, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. S. Fee, Miss Marcia G. Fee, F. E. Batturs, R. C. Van Fleet, Percy Graves, Mrs. E. Aranjo, Mary Aranjo, C. Aranjo, D. Jerome Fee, Stanley Webster, Mrs. Felix Coblentz, Lambert Coblentz, Arthur Bachman, Mr. and Mrs. W. Erythropie, R. Burgens, Mrs. L. P. Fuller and maid, Mrs. H. C. Stratton, Mrs. S. W. Waterhouse, S. W. Waterhouse, Miss Dorothy Waterhouse, Mrs. J. H. Marshall, E. L. Dewey, TRAVELING BY SPECIAL OBSERVATION CAR ON PACIFIC ELECTRIC RAILWAY

Literary Friendships

(Continued from Page 10.)

mon between Coleridge and Southey but their literary aspirations. In character they were diametrically opposite. Set Southey anything to do, and it was done and done with ease; but get Coleridge to promise to do a thing, and he was pretty sure not to do it. He was to have met Southey at Marborough, on their way to Bath, but the wagon came without him; he was to have lectured on the Decline of the Roman Empire, but sat smoking in his room in perfect oblivion of both audience and subject; he was to dine, but never went; he promised Cottle copy that was never ready in time; and he promised himself to write books that were never written. He was, in fact, a man of infinite promises. Southey's notions of right and decency were disturbed by these delinquencies. They quarreled, were reconciled, only to quarrel again, then become firmer friends than ever. In all Coleridge's misfortunes Southey gave him a helping hand and a sympathizing heart.

The friendship between Coleridge and Lamb was more ideal. "Coleridge," writes Lamb from London, "I know not what suffering scenes you have gone through at Bristol. My life has been more diversified of late. The six weeks that finished last year and began this (1796) your very humble servant spent very agreeably in a madhouse at Hoxton. I am now rational and don't bite any one. But mad I was! And many a vagary my imagination played with me. Coleridge, it may convince you of my regard for you when I tell you my head ran on you in my madness, as much almost as on another person (Lamb's sister) who, I am inclined to think, was the more immediate cause of my temporary frenzy."

There was Lamb, and here was Coleridge, married to poetry, and beset by difficulties upon every hand: "My happiest moments for composition are broken in upon by the reflection that I must make haste! I am too late! I am already months behind! I have received my pay months beforehand! O wayward and desultory spirit of genius! Ill canst thou brook a taskmaster!"

Lamb and Coleridge consoled each other as only friends can, and they loved each other through every adversity, as is possible only to heroic hearts. They had their sadnesses, but they also had their triumphs. Lamb and Coleridge were united in their sensibilities, pursuits and fates, but they were in many respects dissimilar. Coleridge was by nature a man constituted for high and lonely thought; he was the high-priest of solitude. But Lamb was impelled in another direction. He had fine talents for display in the amenities of social life, and a kindly knowledge of many of the most intricate recesses in the human heart, that have to be set over against his friend's philosophy and speculation. Coleridge went groping among the ghosts of ancient ideas, but Lamb was a very Bacchid of the city, sporting and gambolling wherever his fancy led him, and the touch of his thyrsus had more pleasantness and the murmur of his ditties more homeliness than came from the wand of the magician or the terrible spell of the exorcist.

In her work Mrs. Thompson tells also of the friendship between Goethe and Schiller, but there is not any more space here than to say that while the two men were inimical for a long time, they at last became fast and enduring friends.

The two volumes contain much to delight all lovers of literature.

TREATMENT FOR SUNBURN

By permission of Mme. Adele Millar, the following letter to one of her correspondents is published:

San Francisco, Cal., July 28, 1909.

My Dear Miss Baker:

Your very nice letter just to hand. I could not help but smile at your frankness in telling me how imprudent you have been in getting your face all sun burnt, and at the same time of your confidence in my ability to make good in one day what you have made bad in two weeks' time. I shall be glad to have you in my care again, but since you are not coming home for several weeks, I shall do my best to help you to take care of yourself by letter.

I imagine I can see your face red and rough, and brown from the hot sun on the windy beach. Now the first thing you must do is to give your face a beauty bath. Take a little dish or bowl, put into it two tablespoonfuls of witch hazel, the smallest pinch of boracic acid and a few drops of peroxide of hydrogen; to that add a half cup of hot water. Wet flat pieces of cotton batten, or still better a little soft linen with this lotion and lay these refreshing poultices all over your face, forehead and eyes, and let them remain there for half an hour. Of course, I should advise you to lay flat on your back during that time and give all the little muscles of your face and body a perfect rest. After the half hour take off the little patches and apply generously good cream, or skin food, which you are sure has for its foundation neither lard or lanolin, massage thoroughly into the pores of the face, throat, neck, ears and the back of the neck clear into the edges of the hair, using soft rotary movements. Keep the muscles of your face relaxed as much as possible. The cream should remain on the skin for ten minutes, then be wiped gently and powder put on the face and neck. Do not be stingy with the powder, for it protects the face wonderfully against the sun and wind. I believe I have told you before and for fear that you have forgotten, I will tell you again, that your last touch to your face after powdering, should be a soft downward, caressing movement to smooth down and flatten all the hair and fuzz on the face, because powder that remains on the ruffled hair, no matter how fine and hardly visible it may seem, will leave a rough appearance. Unless the sunburn has entirely left your face do not use soap, but cream instead, and cream again, and plenty of cream and plenty of powder. Of course, I need not tell you too emphatically to be careful, as you always are well groomed. Let me hear from you again and tell me also if your hair has suffered and your hands by too much sun, and too much salt water. I will answer you immediately and give you all the best advice to keep yourself beautiful.

Very sincerely yours,

—Adele Millar.

One Oil for All Engines

Don't be confused by the conflicting claims and uncertain performances of oils that are "made especially" for different types of cars and engines or to meet different conditions. There's one oil that gives perfect lubrication in all types of engines under all conditions. Ask for

ZEROLENE Auto Lubricating Oil

The only oil that is really non-carbonizing, so pure, free and clear that it feeds regularly under all conditions of heat or cold. Made in the one grade only, which never varies — produced in only one place in the world—sold only under the name Zerolene.

Put up in cans with patent spout, that cannot be refilled — also in barrels for garage trade. Sold by dealers everywhere. Write for booklet "21,000 Miles with Zerolene." Free.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(Incorporated)

LOW RATES

TO

ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION

FOR ROUND TRIP TICKETS

FROM

San Francisco	$32.50
Sacramento	32.50
Lathrop	32.50
Stockton	32.50
Tracy	32.50
Suisun	32.50
Davis	32.50
Napa	32.75
Santa Rosa	33.60
Calistoga	33.95

Greatly reduced rates from other points in California. Tickets sold daily May 25 to September 30, and cover two months' trip going and coming via the famous

SHASTA ROUTE

OF THE

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Stopovers going and coming. Many other routes at slightly higher rates for you to select from.

Write or call on our nearest agent for full details of service, etc., or address

FLOOD BUILDING FOR INFORMATION

Auto Notes

The Pioneer Automobile Company of this city has already taken sixty orders in seven days for the wonderful Hudson "Twenty" car that is being manufactured in Detroit and will be sold for $900. The price with a Bosch magneto, top, gas tank, and extra rumble seat will be only $1050. This automobile will present in a concrete form all of the ideas in small car construction gained in the past season, and from a manufacturing standpoint will embody the results of twelve years of automobile construction knowledge. Starting with a staff of old experienced automobile men, concentrating its attention on a single model, and going in for a very large production, many economies are thus brought about, with the result which has has aroused the automobile world. Of the men behind the new car, most are well known in the industry, with the possible exception of the president, J. L. Hudson, one of Detroit's leading merchants. Of the others, Hugh Chalmers is president of the Chalmers-Detroit Motor Company. So, too, R. D. Chapin and H. E. Coffin are connected with the Chalmers company, while R. B. Jackson, general manager, and G. W. Dunham, chief engineer, both served many years with the Oldsmobile manufacturers. With such a motor-wise bunch "on the job," it is not strange to find the product so meritorious. From the front to the rear of the chassis, every part has been carefully considered both for its individual ability and serviceability, and for its interrelation wth every other part.

Autoists who are looking for an "out of the beaten path" tour are advised by I. Kutner of Selma to take the following trip which Kutner recently made with his Studebaker touring car and reports exceptionally delightful: Down the coast from San Francisco to San Jose, thence Gilroy, San Filipe, over the Pacheco Pass to Los Banos, Mondota, White's Bridge; then over the famous Kearney Park avenue to Fresno. "This is an eight to ten hours' run," says Kutner, "with stop-off at Los Banos for dinner. It may be made with a one night stopover at the same place and an early start for Fresno in the morning. One can make the return trip by taking the road paralleling the Southern Pacific tracks to Tracy, then through the Livermore Valley or via Stockton to San Francisco."

J. B. Wallace has just completed a tour in his '09 four cylinder Stevens-Duryea car from San Francisco to Eureka and thence to Crescent City. He found the roads in very good condition except from Crescent City to Crater Lake where the highways were badly washed out and so rocky that four miles an hour was considered fairly good time. From Crater Lake he went to Klamath Falls, to Tahoe, and back to Alameda, experienced no troubles whatever, although he looked for some ignition difficulties in these high altitudes.

Again a Studebaker car has come in for honors on the Lake Tahoe run, this being the third time this year that a Studebaker car has made automobile history in that portion of the state. On Thursday, July 29th, J. T. Degman, who recently figured in a romantic elopment form Auburn to this city, drove a Studebaker "40" touring car from Placerville to Lake Tahoe in three hours and thirty minutes. Degman's time is the record for the year. The car carried a top and several extra tires and casings and a full complement of pasengers.

According to many of the automobile owners of the west, the pleasures of touring may be considerably added to if the roads followed include drives through vineyards and orange orchards. S. Mitchell, a prominent banker of Visalia, who has scored many hundred miles in his Studebaker touring car this year, suggests the following route for just such a tour: South for Fresno and east through Sanger, Reedley, Dinuba, Orosi, Visalia, Farmersville, Exeter, Lindsay, Porterville, Delano and Bakersfield. "The road may be rough in some places," says Mitchell, "but the average is far better than that along the route of the regular automobile road."

The Diamond Rubber Company is in receipt of the following letter:

Los Angeles, Cal., July 13, 1909.

Diamond Rubber Company,
1207 Main St., Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Sirs—I desire voluntarily to say a word of praise for Diamond Tires, and for the treatment which we received at your hand in equipping the Apperson "Jack-Rabbit" which won the Ferris Cup in the Santa Monica Road Race. At no time did I feel any anxiety about the tires, and am pleased to state that we finished the race without a change of any kind, or thought of tire trouble. The tires at the completion of the 202 miles looked practically as well as they did when they were put on. The fact that they showed so little wear is certainly nothing short of remarkable, because I made no special effort to favor them in any way. You can rest assured that I will always use Diamond Tires whenever possible. Wishing you many such victories, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,
(Signed) Harris M. Hanshue.

In a recent hill climbing contest held in Corry, Michigan, on the occasion of celebrating "Old Home" week there the Studebaker E-M-F "30" was an easy winner over all contesting cars. There were six cars entered, of which one was a 90 horsepower machine. According to reports from Corry, the E-M-F created a most favorable impression, and auto experts expressed themselves to this effect: "It seems to have a way of getting there, when speed on the hills or on the level is desired." The E-M-F was awarded the cash prize.

Hugo A. Taussig, who left San Francisco about the 1st of June for a tour to New York in his Thomas Flyer, has written the Pioneer Automobile Company as follows: "Thought it might interest you to know that 4159 miles and a trans-continental tour did not give us enough experience. We (Sherman and I) sail on 'Majestic,' July 28th, 1909, for Europe. The 'Thomas' goes with us. Hope to tour England and Ireland, and then, after a visit to gay Paree, tour France."

A Domestic Eye Remedy

Compounded by Experienced Physicians. Conforms to Pure Food and Drugs Law. Wins Friends Wherever Used. Ask Druggists for Murine Eye Remedy. Try Murine in Your Eyes. You Will Like Murine. Try it in Baby's Eyes. It Soothes.

Sturdiness, Speed and Style suggest a few reasons for the large number of STUDEBAKER Automobiles seen in constant service throughout the country. One reasonable cause for the success of the STUDEBAKER concern is that they have been constructing vehicles for pleasure and commercial purposes for decades and have eliminated all false theories.

Demonstrations at any time in any of our various models.

Fremont at Mission

Studebaker

Phone Douglas 3000

Chalmers-Detroit "30"

The beginning and the end car.

In the beginning the initial price is slightly higher, in the end the upkeep and after expense is much less.

"Anybody can cut prices but it takes brain to make a better article."
(Elbert Hubbard.)

Buying a good car is only one step in the right direction.

BUT

Buying a good car from the most reliable dealers on the Pacific Coast is your absolute assurance of satisfaction.

The Pioneer Automobile Company is the largest concern west of Chicago giving its undivided attention to the sale of automobiles. Ten years in business assures our stability and perpetuates our guarantees. Our business motto is "Right or Made Right."

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

901 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

Oakland San Francisco Fresno

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17438, Dept. No. 12.

GEORGE J. MARTIN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of George J. Martin, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue distant thereon one hundred (100) feet northerly from the northerly line of C Street, running thence northerly along said westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue, twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angle westerly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angle southerly, twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angle easterly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue and the point of commencement. Being a part of Outside Land Block No. 379.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that his title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 30th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
German Savings & Loan Society (a Corporation)	530 California Street, San Francisco, Cal.
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17244.

HANNAH EMERY, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Hannah Emery, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Van Ness Avenue, distant eighty (80) feet northerly from the northwesterly corner of Van Ness Avenue, and Turk Street, running thence northerly and along the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches; thence at right angles southerly and parallel with Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles easterly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches to the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue and place of beginning; being a portion of Block Seventy-nine (79) Western Addition;

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: NONE.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Esq., Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market St., San Francisco. 7-10-10.

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17318, Dept. No. 4.

KATE E. BOYANTON, sometimes known as KATE E. BOYNTON, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Kate E. Boyanton, sometimes known as Kate E. Boynton, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Eddy Street distant One hundred and twenty (120) feet easterly from the easterly line of Scott Street; running thence easterly along said northerly line of Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet and to the westerly line of Farren Avenue; thence at right angles northerly and along said westerly line of Farren Avenue Seventy-five (75) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet; and thence at right angles southerly Seventy-five (75) feet to the place of beginning. Being a portion of Block No. 431, Western Addition.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that the title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 29th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17750, Dept. No. 5.

EVA NATHAN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of EVA NATHAN, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Jones Street, distant thereon Southerly ninety (90) feet from the Southerly line of Pacific Street, running thence Southerly and along said line of Jones Street forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty seven (137) feet, six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet, six (6) inches to said line of Jones Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of fifty vara lot number Eight Hundred and Sixty-one (861) of the City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit: for judgment establishing and quieting said plaintiff's title to all said real property as the owner thereof in fee simple, and determining all adverse claims thereto, and ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, and for such other and further relief as may be just and proper in the premises, under and pursuant to the provisions of the Act of the Legislature of California entitled, "An Act to provide for the establishment and quieting of title to real property in case of loss and destruction of public records," approved June 16, 1906, and the Act of the said Legislature, amending the same, approved March 6, 1909.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 2nd day of July, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By M. P. BRUTON, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk, a newspaper, on the 17th day of July, A. D. 1909.

DEVOTO & RICHARDSON, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
Foxcroft Building, San Francisco.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco State of California—No. 16627.

ROBERT HECTOR, Jr., Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Robert Hector, Jr., plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest, or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to wit:

Lot number 210 as laid down, delineated and designated on a certain map on file in the office of the recorder of the said City and County of San Francisco, known as "Holiday Map A." Said map was filed in the office of the recorder of the City and County of San Francisco on the 1st day of May 1863.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit, that it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute, that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description, and that plaintiff recover costs herein, and have such other and further relief as may seem meet and proper in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 4th day of June, 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The following persons are said to claim an interest in or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names.	Addresses.
Abraham C. Freeman	3034 Washington St., San Francisco, Cal.
Ellita-Gamboni Mazzitelli..	San Francisco, Cal...
Frank Shay, Administrator of the estate of William Hale, Deceased,	640 Fairmont avenue, Oakland, California.

Dated, this 4th day of June, 1909.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in San Francisco Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation, on the 19th day of June, 1909.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
45 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. 6-19-10

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No.17271.

WELLS, RUSSELL & COMPANY, (a Corporation), Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest, in or Lien Upon, the Real Property herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Wells, Russell & Company, (a Corporation), plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows

First Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northwesterly line of Natoma Street, formerly Everett Street, distant two hundred (200) feet southwesterly from the intersection of the southwesterly line of Third Street with said line of Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches; thence at a right angle northwesterly eighty (80) feet; thence northeasterly parallel with Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches and thence at a right angle southeasterly eighty (80) feet to the place of beginning; being a portion of the 100 vara Lot No. 34.

Second Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Fourteenth Avenue, distant one hundred and fifty (150) feet westerly from the northwesterly corner of Fourteenth Avenue and P Street; thence westerly along said line of Fourteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet; thence at a right angle northerly two hundred (200) feet to Thirteenth Avenue; thence at a right angle easterly along the south line of Thirteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet, and thence at a right angle southerly two hundred (200) feet to the place of beginning; being a part of the O'Neill and Haley Tract, as per map on file in the Recorder's Office of said City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that its title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover its costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June A, D, 1909. By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attorneys for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 22931, Dept. No. 10.

CATHERINE FRANCIS BERTRAND, Plaintiff,
vs.
BENJAMIN A. BERTRAND, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Benjamin A. Bertrand, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion of said plaintiff; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 11th day of May, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk
(Seal) By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ORNBAUN, FRASER & LYNCH, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
727 Pacific Building, San Francisco, Cal. 6-19-10

CERTIFICATE OF COPARTNERSHIP—No. 338.

Know All Men by These Presents:

That J. C. MONTGOMERY and MARY MAGUIRE do hereby certify and declare that they are partners doing business in the State of California, under the firm name and style of the St. Anthony Hotel Company, with principal place of business in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California; that the purposes for which the copartnership is formed are to provide for entertaining strangers and travelers for compensation, and to this end to acquire property by lease or otherwise to be rented, or to be used for the above purposes, but neither partner hereto shall or will acquire any property by lease or otherwise, for any of the purposes herein stated, without first obtaining from his copartner the consent to do so.

That the names in full of all the members of this copartnership and their places of residence are as follows, to-wit: J. C. Montgomery, 825 Howard Street, San Francisco, California, Mary Maguire, 825 Howard Street, San Francisco, California.

Witness our hands and seals this 12th day of July, 1909.

J. C. MONTGOMERY.
MARY MAGUIRE.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
City and County of San Francisco—ss.

On this 12th day of July, 1909, before me, I. L. Jacobi, a Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, residing therein, duly commissioned and sworn, personally appeared J. C. Montgomery and Mary Maguire, known to me to be the persons described in, whose names are subscribed to and who executed the within instrument, and they acknowledged to me that they executed the same.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal in said City and County of San Francisco, State of California, the day and year first hereinabove written.

(Seal) I. L. JACOBI,
Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Endorsed: Filed July 13, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys;
Oscar Luning Building, San Francisco, Cal. 7-17-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of JOHN W. FARREN, also known as JOHN W. FARREN, Jr., Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned administratrix of the estate of JOHN W. FARREN, also known as JOHN W. FARREN, Jr., deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said administratrix at the office of her attorney, Neal Power, Esq., Room 545, Mills Building, Northeast corner of Montgomery and Bush Streets, San Francisco, Cal., which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of JOHN W. FARREN, also known as JOHN W. FARREN, Jr., deceased.

MARY A. FARREN,
Administratrix of the Estate of John W. Farren, also known as John W. Farren, Jr., Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, July 31st, 1909.

NEAL POWER, Attorney for Administratrix,
Room 545 Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal. 7-31-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 18016.

MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this Summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

PARCEL NUMBER ONE

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Green Street, distant thereon one hundred and seventeen (117) feet and seven and one-fifth (7 1-5) inches Easterly from the Easterly line of Franklin Street; running thence Easterly and along said Northerly line of Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly and parallel to Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches to the said Northerly line of Green Street and point of commencement.

Being a part of Western Addition Block No. 96.

PARCEL NUMBER TWO

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of "C" Street, distant thereon thirty-two (32) feet and six (6) inches Westerly from the Westerly line of Twenty-fifth (25th) Avenue; running thence Westerly along said Northerly line of "C" Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 356.

PARCEL NUMBER THREE

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of "T" Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the point of beginning.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 1153.

PARCEL NUMBER FOUR

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue, distant two hundred and twenty-five (225) feet Southerly from the Southeasterly corner of "A" Street and Twenty-first Avenue; running thence Southerly along the said Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the place of beginning. The same being a portion of Outside Lands Block Number Three Hundred and Three (303).

PARCEL NUMBER FIVE

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Larkin Street, distant thereon seventy-seven (77) feet and six (6) inches Northerly from the corner formed by the intersection of said Easterly line of Larkin Street with the Northerly line of Union Street, running thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Larkin Street, twenty (20) feet; thence at right angles Easterly sixty (60) feet to the Westerly line of Moore Street; thence at right angles Southerly along said line of Moore Street twenty (20) feet; and thence at right angles Westerly sixty (60) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot No. 1393.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, title, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 26th day of July A. D. 1909.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 31st day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., San Francisco, Cal. 7-31-10

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Yards and Planing Mills—6th and Channel Streets

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Mackenzie Gordon

TENOR

TEACHER OF SINGING { in all its branches, from the rudiments of tone formation to the highest finish and Completion of Public Singing.

Oratorio, Opera and Concert

By appointment only Phone Franklin 3594

Studio: 1350 FRANKLIN ST.

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

Phone Kearny 3657 Res. Phone West 1784

Dr. A. H. Wright

12 to 4 CHRONICLE BUILDING

60 YEARS' EXPERIENCE

PATENTS

TRADE MARKS
DESIGNS
COPYRIGHTS &c.

Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain our opinion free whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. HANDBOOK on Patents sent free. Oldest agency for securing patents.

Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice, without charge, in the Scientific American.

A handsomely illustrated weekly. Largest circulation of any scientific journal. Terms, $3 a year; four months, $1. Sold by all newsdealers.

MUNN & Co. 361 Broadway, New York

Branch Office, 625 F St., Washington, D. C.

PATRICK & CO.

RUBBER STAMPS

STENCILS, SEALS, SIGNS & ETC.

126 BUSH ST. SAN FRANCISCO

WHAT MEN HAVE SAID ABOUT MEN

It is amazing to see how easily men are governed and imposed upon by words—and the less they understand them the more readily they submit to them—Philip Gilbert Hamerton.

The greatest obstacle to being heroic is the doubt whether one may not be going to prove himself a fool; the truest heroism is to resist the doubt, and the profoundest wisdom is to know when it ought to be resisted and when obeyed—Nathaniel Hawthorne.

A man with a mission is a devouring lion who pays no heed to time or place or feelings or individuals—Julian Ralph.

The darkest day in any man's career is that wherein he fancies there is some easier way of getting a dollar than by squarely earning it—Horace Greeley.

When some men die it is as if you had lost your pen-knife, and were subject to perpetual inconvenience until you could get another. Other men's going is like the vanishing of a great mountain from the landscape, and the outlook of life is changed forever—Philip Brooks.

No man is so merciless as he who, under a strong self-delusion, confounds his antipathies with his duties—Macaulay.

The fractional value of the wisest shows a small numerator divided by an infinite denominator of knowledge—O. W. Holmes.

The fortunate man is he who, born poor or nobody, works gradually up to wealth and consideration, and having got them, dies before he finds out they were not worth so much trouble—Charles Reed.

A wit—a man who says things about other people that they are too polite to say about him—James Jay O'Counell.

A lawyer—a gentleman who rescues your estate from your enemies and keeps it himself—Lord Brougham.

Men will be men * * * They are divided into two classes—the found-out and the not-found-out—Julian Ralph.

But a man's a man, not a post or a holy angel; us wouldn't hear such a deal about angels' tempers, either, if they'd got to face all us have—Eden Phillpotts.

Liberty, equality, fraternity—they are only possible for the bachelor—Winston Churchill.

The only man we ever heard of that wasn't spoiled by being lionized was a Jew named Daniel—George D. Prentice.

One may take it that no man is sent into the world a ready-made scoundrel. It all depends on the circumstances of life No one is safe right up to the end, and events may combine to make the very best of us into that thing which the world calls a villain—Henry Seton Merriman.

With most men duty means something unpleasant which the other fellow ought to do.

Man of all ages is a selfish animal and unreasoning in his selfishness. It takes every one of us in turn many a shrewd fall in our wrestlings with the world to convince us that we are not to have everything our own way—Thomas Hughes.

10-INCH DISK RECORDS 25c

While They Last

Piano purchasers insured against sickness, death and fire. It will pay you to investigate our easy terms on Pianos before buying.

PETER BACIGALUPI & SONS,

Phonographs and Pianos

941 Market St. Opposite Mason St.

Open Saturday Evenings.

MOVED

Gladding, McBean & Co.

CLAY PRODUCTS

Office

311-317 CROCKER BUILDING

Warehouse

147-151 MINNA STREET

Between New Montgomery and Third

San Francisco, Cal.

The German Savings and Loan Society

(Member of the Associated Savings Bank of S. F.)

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,504,498.68
Deposits June 30, 1908	$36,793,234.04
Total Assets	$39,435,681.38

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

RICHMOND DISTRICT BRANCH, 432 Clement Street, between 5th and 6th Avenues. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. W. C. Heyer, Manager.

H. L. Davis W. D. Fennimore J. W. Davis

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store at 181 Post Street, near Grant Avenue.

HENRY P. TRICOU

NOTARY PUBLIC

508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711

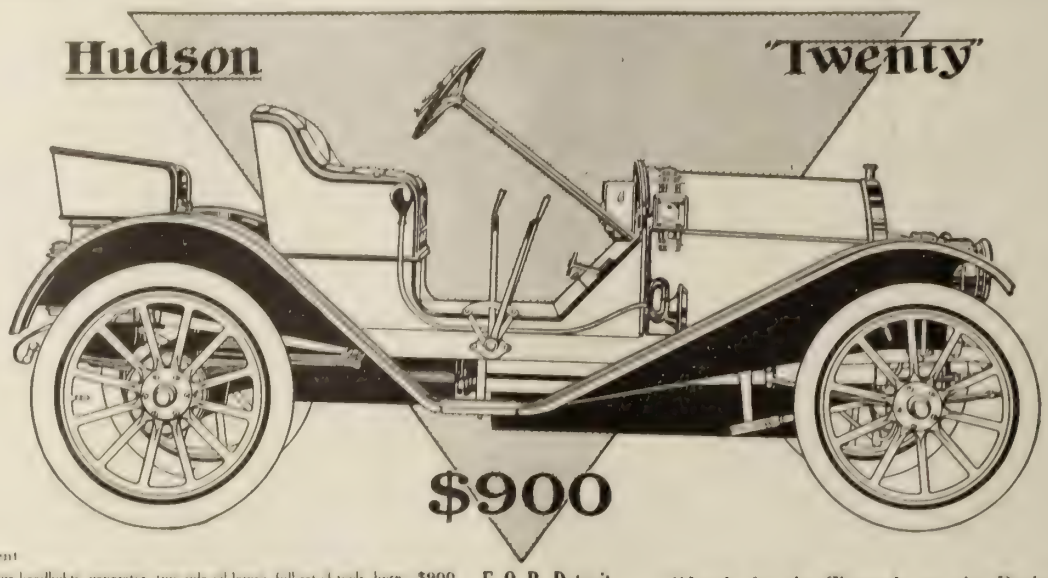
Residence 852 Grove St. Phone Park 1870

MAYERLE'S GERMAN EYE WATER

By Mail 65c

Mayerle's German Eyewater

Highly Recommended for



Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN

Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes, relieves the strain, and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Graduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 960 Market street, opposite Hale's. Phone Franklin 3279.

Equipment
Two large headlights, generator, two side oil lamps, full set of tools, horn---$900.
With Bosch magneto, top, Presto-O-Lite tank, double rumble seat---$1050.

F. O. B. Detroit.

"Look for the Triangle on the Radiator"

1,452 Cars Asked For in Five Days

The highest compliment ever paid a new car followed our announcement to the trade. Every automobile dealer in America received practically the same day an announcement of the Hudson "20" giving complete specifications.

Some Reasons Why the Hudson "Twenty" Has Created a Sensation

In the first place it is a good looking car. The officers of the Hudson "Twenty" have been the first to appreciate that it is as easy to make a good looking car and sell it for less than $1,000 as it is to make the other kind.

It is a big car with a 100-inch wheel base, and 32-inch wheels.

It is as roomy as any roadster made, regardless of price. To insure absolute comfort to the driver and passenger, the foot pedals are adjustable. A woman can drive it with as much comfort as a 6-foot man.

SLIDING GEAR TRANSMISSION

It has a sliding gear transmission, selective type, three speeds forward and reverse, such as you find on the Packard, Peerless, and other high grade cars.

Its motor is the Renault type, patterned after the famous French motors of that name.

LONG STROKE MOTOR

With a bore of three and three-quarters inches and a stroke of four and one-half inches it conforms to the most up-to-date foreign design, a long stroke motor.

The same company which makes the frames for the high priced Stearns cars makes the frames for the Hudson "Twenty."

The front axle is a one-piece drop forged I-beam section of the best grade of open hearth steel carefully heat treated.

THREE-QUARTER ELLIPTIC SPRINGS

The judgment of the best designers in the world is back of the suspension of the Hudson "Twenty." Semi-elliptic in front, and three-quarter elliptic rear springs are the easiest riding under all conditions, faster and due to their peculiar actions, are the least liable to fracture. This is the spring suspension found on the Hudson "Twenty." Springs are unusually long, and mounted with heavier and stronger fittings than on many cars twice the weight.

The radiator is composed entirely of brass and copper of such dimensions that more cooling surface is provided than on most cars of half again as much horse power.

CARBURETER SPECIALLY DESIGNED

The carbureter has been especially designed for the motor, insuring absolute control at all speeds.

The fan, as in the best high-priced cars, is belt driven; and so throughout the entire car—judged by every mechanical and engineering standard, the Hudson "Twenty" is thoroughly up-to-date without embodying any experimental features.

FIFTY MILES AN HOUR

Any Hudson "Twenty" will do fifty miles an hour. It has all the power you could ever have use for. It not only looks like the most expensive cars, but acts like them too. It is strong, speedy, roomy and stylish.

Please write today for complete specification. The Hudson "Twenty" is the only four cylinder licensed car selling for less than $1000. It is the first ideal car at the price.

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

901 GOLDEN GATE AVE. SAN FRANCISCO

Vol. XVII. No. 885. SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 14, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

CALIFORNIA STATE LIBRARY

RICHMOND COAL

IMPORTED SOLELY BY

James and Alex'r Brown

Owners of the Pelaw Main and Richmond Collieries; also Richmond Vale Colliery, Newcastle, N. S. W., Australia

Represented by Wm. Smellie

IF your dealer cannot supply you with genuine Richmond Coal, kindly communicate with us, or Pacific Coast Coal Co., Merchants' Exchange Building. Please note that all other advertisements claiming to sell you Richmond Coal are not authorized by us. They haven't got the goods.

JAMES AND ALEX'R BROWN
334 RUSS BUILDING, MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Sole Wholesale Distributors

PACIFIC COAST COAL CO.

Beale Street Bunkers San Francisco

THE VENDOME SAN JOSE

Is the ideal objective point for the motorist. The accommodations are complete and the ride from either side of the bay is delightful. This hotel is unsurpassed in the West for the beauty of its environment and for those qualities which contribute to ease and comfort. H. W. LAKE, Manager.

TAKE TAMALPAIS TRIP

and breathe good air.

Half a mile high in two hours' time. No other trip like it.

Via Sausalito Ferry, Foot of Market Street

BYRON HOT SPRINGS

One of the world's most curative springs, 2½ hours from San Francisco; one of California's best hotels and a delightful place for rest and recreation. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, James Flood Building, any S. P. Agent, or Peck-Judah, 789 Market St., San Francisco, or 553 S. Spring St., Los Angeles, or address manager, Byron Hot Springs, California.

THE PERRY HOTEL

Madison St. and Boren Ave.
SEATTLE, WASH.

Every Modern Convenience—Absolutely Fire Proof
European Plan, The Highest Grade

Under new management, centrally located and commanding a view of the Olympics, Cascade Mountains, Mount Rainier and Puget Sound.

J. S. McTERNAN, Manager

HOTEL WASHINGTON

J. M. LUX, MANAGER

SEATTLE, WASH.

A magnificent modern structure involving over One Million and a Half Dollars. Conducted on Most liberal ideas of Experience. Its appointments and service cannot be excelled in the United States. The management cordially invites your patronage.

HOTEL WASHINGTON ANNEX

SEATTLE, WASH.

Best Rooms Best Service

Strictly First-Class

J. H. DAVIS - - - - - Proprietor

HOTEL NORMANDIE

SUTTER AND GOUGH STREETS

A comfortable, high order, uptown hotel, now under the management of

THOS. H. SHEDDEN, Formerly Manager of St. Dunstan's.

HOTEL ARGONAUT

Society of California Pioneers Building

FOURTH STREET NEAR MARKET — San Francisco — CENTRE OF THE CITY

Catering to Family and Commercial Trade

400 Rooms $1.00 per day and up Dining room seats 500 guests

Special 50c Luncheon from 11:30 to 2 p. m.

Weekly and monthly rates on application. Free bus meets all trains and steamers.

Telephone Douglas 3393 EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager

HOTEL HARCOURT

Formerly the Nordhoff.

SUTTER AND LARKIN STREETS

AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN

An Elegantly Furnished Modern Home. Phone Franklin 2100

SUMMER RESORTS

Hotel and Grounds

Plan to spend your vacation and your week-end outings at

HOTEL DEL MONTE

during

The Annual Month of Sports---August 15 to September 15th

Annual Dog Show — Annual Golf Tournament
First State Bridge Whist Congress — Annual Tennis Tournament
Opening of Pebble Beach Lodge

Make your plans to be there. Write for rates and reservations to-day to H. R. WARNER, Manager.

WITTER SPRINGS HOTEL

The Automobile Headquarters of Lake County.

The most delightful place to rest and get well. Every comfort; large, airy rooms, with hot and cold water; private baths.

Witter Springs Water Works Wonders

For people afflicted with Stomach, Liver or Kidney Trouble. Absolutely cures Eczema.

Address Peck-Judah Information Bureaus, or reservations can be made at City Office, Westbank Building, 830 Market Street.

NAPA SODA SPRINGS HOTEL

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

California's famous mountain spa, only 50 miles from San Francisco. The nearest watering place and summer resort to the city. 1,000 feet elevation, overlooking 25 miles of beautiful Napa Valley. For terms address Manager Napa Soda Springs Hotel, Napa County, Cal.

Boca Hotel and Annex

TRUCKEE RIVER

Address CHAS. GARRISON, BOCA, CAL.

FALLEN LEAF LODGE

LAKE TAHOE, CAL.

New home-like resort at the head of Fallen Leaf Lake; five miles south of Lake Tahoe. Centrally situated in the grandest part of the Lake Tahoe Scenic Wonderland. Rates $14.00 per week and upward. HARRY WHITCOMB, Manager, Fallen Leaf, Lake Tahoe, Cal.

GILROY HOT SPRINGS

Only four hours from San Francisco; delightful stage ride over the best kept mountain road in California. Unsurpassed table, health-giving waters, telephone, postoffice. Rates $12 to $17.50 a week; baths free. Trains leave Third and Townsend streets at 9 a. m. Direct stage connection. See Peck-Judah, 789 Market street.

W. J. McDONALD, Proprietor.

ROSS McMAHON AWNING AND TENT CO.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

Tents, Awnings, Hammocks, Bags and Covers

Phone Kearny 2030 — 403 BATTERY STREET

SPEND THE WEEK END AT

ÆTNA SPRINGS

Leave San Francisco at 3:45 p. m., Friday or Saturday via Sausalito. Railroad round trip, $7, including enjoyable ride in our fine automobiles from St. Helena to Aetna Springs and return.

Illustrated Booklet mailed free on application.

Aetna Springs Co., Aetna Springs, Napa Co., Cal.

PARAISO SPRINGS

MONTEREY CO., CAL.

The most accessible of all resorts; a delightful terminal for an automobile trip. Take 8 a. m. train from Third and Townsend; you arrive at spring 1 p. m. for lunch. Natural hot soda and sulphur plunge and tub baths, 104 to 116 degrees, for rheumatism, malaria and all stomach troubles. Iron and arsenic waters. Altitude 1400 feet. H. H. McGOWAN, Proprietor.

PINE LODGE

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

In the mountains by the sea. Surroundings perfect for rest and recreation. Trout stream, boating, bathing. Home garden of berries and vegetables. New hotel and cottages, modern conveniences. Two miles from Santa Cruz. Rates $9.00 per week and upwards. For particulars address PINE LODGE, Santa Cruz, Cal.

CAMP MEEKER

Own Summer Home in Mountains of Sonoma County

Equable climate. Lots $15 up. Cottages built $85 up. Depot, stores, restaurant, hotel, phone, postoffice, express, churches and sawmill; 1800 lots sold; 600 cottages built. Sausalito ferry. M. C. MEEKER, Camp Meeker, Sonoma County.

Montara Inn

At Montara on the Ocean Shore Railroad

A delightful place to rest. 45 minutes from San Francisco. Pure mountain water and fresh dairy products. The best sheltered and widest sandy beach on the coast. No undertow; splendid bathing. Address for accomodations, Manager, Montara Inn, Montara, Calif.

Leading Hotels and Resorts

LONG BEACH SANITARIUM

LONG BEACH, CALIF.

Battle Creek Sanitarium Methods

A splendidly equipped QUIET, REFINED and MODERN medical and surgical Institution BY-THE-SEA, where the sick, run down or work-tired may go and know that they will receive the very best of care and attention at reasonable rates. Gentlemen and Lady Physicians. Graduate nurses only. Climate exceptionally fine. Cool in summer, warm and dry in winter. Descriptive Booklet mailed FREE. W. RAY SIMPSON, Manager.

Long Distance Phones in Every Room

YE ALPINE TAVERN

Beautiful Mountain Resort on Mt. Love

Just a mile above the sea. American plan $3.00 per day, $15 per week. Choice of rooms in hotel or cottages. Spend a vacation 5,000 feet above the sea, among great pines and oaks. For information, D. A. Munger, General Agent, Pacific Electric R. R., Los Angeles, or office.

HOTEL ALEXANDRIA

LOS ANGELES

IN SAFETY, SERVICE
AND SANITATION

HAS TAKEN ITS PLACE
AMONG THE BEST HOTELS

A. C. BILICKE, President

S. J. WHITMORE, Vice-Pres. and Gen. Mgr. JOS. REICHL, Asst. Mgr.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO

CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. Power boats from the Hotel meet passengers from the North on the arrival of the Pacific Coast S. S. Co. steamers. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, 334 S. Spring St., Los Angeles.

YOSEMITE

SENTINEL HOTEL Open the Year Round; Steam Heated; Electric Lighted.

CAMP YOSEMITE Electric Lighted; Opened May 1st; the Largest Hotel-Camp on the Coast.

Under One Management. For Rates, Reservations or other information, address J. B. COOK, Proprietor, Yosemite, Cal.

THE ANGELUS

LOS ANGELES

One of California's Best Hotels
Centrally located; street cars direct to hotel.
Rates $1.50 per Day Up

SUTHERLAND'S

One of Nature's Most Charming Spots for a Summer Outing. Write for rates. Guerneville, Sonoma Co., Cal.

ALDER GLEN SPRINGS

In the mountains above Cloverdale. Magnesia, soda, iron, sulphur and arsenic springs. Finest fishing and hunting. Bathing in the Russian River. Large new dancing pavilion this year. For accommodations address
J. A. SERRES, Cloverdale P. O.

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

CAMERAS Kodaks, Developing, Printing, Supplies, Etc.

"Don't take a vacation unless you take pictures as you go along"

462-464 THIRTEENTH STREET, Between Broadway and Washington

SMITH BROS. STATIONERS OAKLAND

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, August 14, 1909. No. 885.

SPRECKELS RESIDENCES IN THE SOUTH

No. 1, Facade of house at Rancho Jamul; 2, residence of J. D. Spreckels Jr. at Coronado; 3, residence of J. D. Spreckels Sr. at Coronado; 4, a corner of the veranda overlooking the lake, Lower Otay ranch; 5, a vista of Lower Otay Lake. See page 13.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION—One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.
Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.
The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.
For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.
Los Angeles office, 427 South Main Street.
Seattle office, 804 Third Avenue.
We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

The Satirical Thrust at Hellman

It was to be expected that the Boughten Bulletin would deride and rebuke Mr. I. W. Hellman for saying on his return to town that he had met people in New York who were unwilling to send capital to this city so long as the graft prosecution dragged its weary and unsavory length along. But the longest leased journal was not expected to become gay and satirical. This ponderous, platitudinous journal is by nature grave and profound, given to impressive solemnity in its self-sufficiency, self-righteousness and self-satisfaction. Vivacity of temperament has never been a characteristic of this noisy organ of special and exacting interests. Levity is prohibited in the Bulletin office. Everybody is dignified and serious in the presence of the smug-featured proprietor, a man of rigid, vinegar aspect, whether engaged in washing his hands with invisible soap or quoting scripture to suit his sinister purposes. Hence it was that the Bulletin disappointed expectations when, to gratify its implacable, mean vindictiveness, it assumed the role of a mucker indulging in what the Bible likens unto the laughter of fools and the crackling of thorns under a pot. Even though we did not know that the Bulletin's editor was not at home in a role that calls for the affectation of lightness of spirit we should have had no difficulty in detecting the lack of that equanimity which is essential to successful, biting raillery. Twice he alluded to the loan made by Mr. Hellman to the Calkins Syndicate for the purpose of assisting in the establishment of the paper that is rapidly driving the boughten journal to the wall. Thus was revealed the inspiration of the Bulletin's hostility and thus was the satire of the editorial made flat and insipid.

Our Clean Administration

Mr. Hellman to the contrary notwithstanding the Bulletin proclaims its unalterable conviction that the graft prosecution has not injured the credit of this city. Notwithstanding the evils that have been brought upon a community divided by passions that are fomented by the Bulletin's vindictive and unscrupulous masters, that journal would have us believe that the graft prosecution has wrought a benefit which is immeasurably expanding itself and will continue to expand itself through all time. This view of the matter is more easily expressed than maintained. The most that can be said of the graft prosecution is that it drove the Schmitz-Ruef gang out of office. To this achievement the Bulletin points with pride, at the same time observing that the city's credit has been repaired under the present clean administration. Now unfortunately this is not true. The fact is that the present administration, responsive as it has ever been to the malevolent dictation of millionaire demagogues who are distinguished for their hostility to every dollar that isn't their own, has done more than was done by its predecessors to excite the aversion and destroy the confidence of foreign capital. It has done everything that has been asked of it to harass the men that are not in sympathy with the Phelan-Spreckels cabal. The victims of this persecution are not all higher-ups. So bitter and petty and irrational is the persecution carried on by the Spreckels-Phelan cabal that for a man to be remotely connected in business with the chief objects of its hatred is deemed sufficient to merit bludgeoning. The ramifications of the feud extend through so many avenues of industry and touch so many enterprises that the whole state has been more or less affected by the personal quarrel conducted in San Francisco. This situation, as we have briefly described it, is familiar to the moneyed men of the East. They know that our municipal government is under the domination of conspirators who have undertaken not only to punish men under indictment but also to harass everybody by whom they have been criticised and censured. Furthermore, from what they have read and heard they know that so far as civil government is concerned we are now in a far more lamentable state than that to which we were brought by Schmitz and Ruef. They know that some of our courts are personally conducted institutions, that the machinery of justice in the criminal department is in private hands, and that the supervisors stand ready to aid and abet any scheme of confiscation that may be hatched in the sanhedrin that claims a monopoly of virtue and is unfettered by common sense. According to the Bulletin's acceptation of the term it may be a clean administration that we now have, but that journal will find it somewhat difficult to persuade astute Eastern capitalists to hazard their money in enterprises which are subject to the whims of the time-servers in the Board of Supervisors. If the editor of the Bulletin can no longer seduce local sentiment he is at least doing his best, and there are moments when he feels that he is earning his money.

The Value of System

There is a brand new system for teaching school children to spell, and its inventor "points with pride" to the success he has achieved in a mid-West city, where good orthography is coming to be the rule instead of the exception. But when one comes to analyze this miraculous discovery it appears to be nothing more than the old method of studying the day's allotment and reviewing that of the preceding days, with semi-occasional spelling matches between the divisions of one class, the different classes of the same grade in the school, and the corresponding grades of other schools. The twentieth century "educator" has discovered what the mere teacher of the mid-years of the nineteenth century seemed to have known by intuition, that nothing is accomplished without application, and that the stimulus of competition with some reward in the shape of honor and glory for individual, class, school or township, will incite children to endeavor where no amount of abstract ethical moralizing will have the least effect. The "educator" assigns a daily task of two words to his brain-fagged pupils, whose fathers and grandfathers took twenty, and that is the extent of the difference between the old and the new methods. Some day an "educator" will win undying fame for himself by promulgating the revolutionary doctrine that system is a small and negligible quantity and that the essential element to success in any direction lies not in the method but in the application, the concentration of the mind on the thing to be done and the determination to do it. We have had spelling books arranged on every imaginable principle, from grouping words of similar sound to grouping those of common derivation, and those used in connection with the same subject. The names of birds, animals and minerals have been segregated, and every scheme of simplification that could be designed has been tried, but no one of the "improved methods" has proved as effective as the old blue-back Webster with its lists compiled with reference to length and accent only. The trouble with our whole education mill is the exaltation of "system." It is all "system," and reminds one of the story of a rural English innkeeper who expressed his admiration of a well-known writer who frequented his house during the trout season. Boniface, on being questioned, admitted that the gentleman never caught anything, but " 'E do fish beautiful." Somehow, it never seems to occur to the pedagogical mind that it is results that count, not the manner of acquiring them. The most perfect system of teaching spelling which leaves pupils unable to spell is a dire failure. Scientists long ago abandoned the idea of discovering the philosopher's stone, but the educator is still exploring the wilds for a royal road to learning which will accomplish results without labor, as the magic carpet of the old fairy tale transported its possessor whither he would go at the expense only of a wish.

The Married Teacher

The married women teachers of Stockton are in a state of anxiety lest some recent action on the part of the Board of Education shall prove but the beginning of the end as far as their positions and salaries are concerned, and there is the usual argumentation to prove that matrimony is the crown and capsheaf of all the pedagogical virtues. But the heart of the matter lies not in determining whether married women or spinsters make the more perfect teachers, nor whether there is manifest injustice in depriving a matron of her "career" and thus penalizing marriage but in the other fact that when a woman marries she tacitly binds herself to duties and obligations which should confine her activities to the home and fireside. The married woman is like the man enlisted in the army, who, though he may never be called upon to fight, yet may not assume any other occupation during the term of his service lest he be called and found wanting. No woman can superintend a household and teach school on the side and give satisfaction in both jobs. Wifehood implies motherhood and it is the duty of a mother to take care of her children. The married teacher, if she has not children that are without proper care and supervision is in all probability shirking the responsibilities of a family in order to assert her economic independence, and in either event there is demoralization. There is more or less tolerance for the social sins of the man whose frivolous wife prefers a boarding house and unlimited bridge to the drudgery of home, but in what better situation is he whose spouse is breadwinning. It is a matter of common comment that when both wife and husband continue to earn with the expectation of an early acquirement of riches they are far more apt to drift apart and end in the divorce court than when one earns and the other guards.

Meddlesome Missionaries

The average missionary worker is one of the least understandable of mortals—particularly the feminine variety. A glittering example of her and her propensity to meddlesomeness has arisen in New York, where an unsuccessful effort has been made to emancipate the Chinese women from the bondage that has been their lot for centuries. And the Chinese women, with stubbornness that the zealots cannot understand, refuse to be made new women. One enthusiast managed to get thirty Chinese women, comprising about half the number in New York's Mongolian quarter, to meet one night for the purpose of forming a club. She was an earnest, hypnotic speaker, and for a time she had her hearers going, as the sporting editor would say. A club was formed, officers appointed, and—well, that's all. The women could not be got together again. They object to appearing on the street, they are fond of their brand of domesticity, they like to cook for their husbands and rear their children. They are perfectly satisfied with their own mode of life, and see no reason for a change. But the missionaries die hard. This summer they have taken a new tack. Persuaded that the Chinese women and their children are pining for fresh air in the country, the obtrusive ones have made violent efforts to get them out of New York. One worker succeeded in inducing half a dozen women to go to Central Park with her, but she had to hire a carriage, as they absolutely refused to walk to the elevated station, and even when in the carriage shrunk back from prying eyes. The plans for farm vacations have altogether fallen through. The green grass and the flowers and the cows and the chickens and the gurgling brooks do not at all appeal to the Chinese women. As to fresh air, it is something that they and their ancestors have done without for tens of centuries; so why make a change, they argue. Besides, they must have their own diet, which they could not get in the country—and most essential of all is privacy, which they would not be able to maintain if they went junketing. So the enthusiasts are in despair. They hold out freedom, and the thralls refuse to accept it. The situation is horrible, and provokes tears in the Society for Minding Your Neighbor's Business. These missionaries would do well to come to San Francisco, where a Chinese woman in public is rather a common sight. But this would not satisfy the busybodies. Nothing satisfies them except endeavoring to change existing conditions whatever they may be. "What is, is wrong," is their motto. Otherwise they would lack an occupation.

Public Safety Disregarded

Two things have come to light within the past few days which add to the knowledge that the public already had of the incompetency of the present city administration. It has been discovered that eight of our school

The Hub.
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

OUR NEW YORK STYLE EXHIBIT OF ADVANCE WINTER CLOTHES HAS BEEN HIGHLY SPOKEN OF BY DRESSERS WHO UNDERSTAND. A GATHERING OF TAILORS' ART THAT'S UNEQUALED ANYWHERE, CONFINED PATTERNS, MODELS OF MAKERS THAT ARE EXCLUSIVE. THIS IS APPARENTLY THE SHOP FOR GOOD, CORRECT CLOTHES.

This Label Does Not Countenance

The Hub
Chas Keilus & Co.
San Francisco.

Any Acrobatic Feats in Price Juggling

Our clothes for this Fall and Winter season have every feature of goodness installed in them. If you'd visit our exclusive men's clothes studio and observe our clothes quality and high class makes, you will admit that our kind of clothes can't be had in department or country stores. "Ours" are not intended for "anticipated sales" that cater for the "Semi-Annual Bargain Hunter." Our clothes appeal to good, sensible dressers, men who want the right clothes in season.

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

buildings, some of them three stories in height, have not been provided with fire escapes as is required by ordinance. Equally important is the revelation that six of the cisterns designed to hold water as an emergency auxiliary to the fire department fail of their purpose. They have been so constructed that they leak badly. Just with whom the fault lies has not been determined, but that the city government in not properly superintending their erection is largely responsible cannot be denied. These two failures to have city work done properly are correlated to an alarming degree. On the one hand, the children should be made safe by proper fire escapes on the buildings in which they gather. Added safety should be given them through a complete fire-fighting system. The city government has neglected its duty in both instances with apparently an utter disregard for the safety of human life or property. The lesson of the Iroquois theatre in Chicago, the burning of a schoolhouse and the attendant fearful loss of life in Ohio, and our own great conflagration, have already been forgotten. The lack of cisterns was greatly felt on April 18, 1906. They had been built and filled with water, many years ago, but in time their existence was forgotten. When an attempt was made to draw water from them on the first day of the big fire it was found that some were empty and that others could not be uncovered. While it is not certain that the fire could have been checked had the cisterns been in condition, there is a possibility that such would have been the case. In the present instance, it is proposed to remedy the deficiency by plugging up the leaking places with pieces of redwood. Such a makeshift should not for a moment be considered. The contractors should be made to turn over to the city absolutely water-tight cisterns built according to specifications. Whether the contractors would lose money through so doing cuts no figure. Public safety is the first consideration. As to the schoolhouses, it may be that in the eyes of the supervisors the safety of thousands of children is not so important as an absolute subservience to the Spreckels-Phelan oligarchy that has been established in this town. But it is mighty important to the children and their parents, who are less concerned with the perpetuation of the present tyranny of government than they are with safe school buildings. These buildings are a heritage of the Schmitz-Ruef administration, having been built under the first bond issue. The money ran out before the buildings were completed and no fire escapes were provided. Our present supervisors have taken no steps to remedy the defect. Rather, they have been following the footsteps of their predecessors in spending more money than has been appropriated for the building of the schoolhouses now under construction. It may be that they also will be left without fire escapes in order that the appropriation be not too greatly exceeded.

Perspective Impressions

A Calhoun jury will finally be secured, for a new generation will grow up while the present search is going on.

Burbank's spirited retorts to his critics show that, unlike his cactus, he is not spineless.

The New York courts are denounced as rotten. They can be worse than those of this town in only one respect —that there are more of them.

It was 90 in the shade at Beverly, the presidential summer home on Sunday, but our chief executive is reported to have stood the heat with equanimity. He has been making it so hot for the standpatters that a little excess temperature does not worry him.

A Benicia man threatened suicide Saturday, and his brother handed him a revolver telling him that he was not game to kill himself. He proved that he was by putting a bullet through his head. The average man would rather be the dead brother than the surviving one.

Plumas is the latest addition to the "dry" counties. Instead of drinking at least moderately good liquor openly, its inhabitants will be forced to imbibe poisonous compounds on the sly.

Plans are being made to bring the next Irrigation Congress to San Francisco. Let it come. Plenty of the stuff with which the dry throats of city dwellers are irrigated will be found here.

THE ANNUAL CALL

Chicago Record Herald

MISERY LOVES COMPANY

Abdul Hamid (to Clemenceau) "So you, too, I see, have joined the army of the unemployed."

—Pasquina (Turin, Italy)

Henry Murger, Bohemian

An Account of the Life of One Who Made Himself Immortal Through a Book Based on His Own Hopes, Struggles and Privations in the Garrets of Paris.

By W. J. Weymouth

A chance perusal of an old magazine—the Westminister Review for April, 1873—has revealed to me the best biography of Henry Murger, author of "The Bohemians," that I have ever read. It consists of an extended review of several books dealing with the career of this prince of all Bohemians, and is intensely absorbing through its completeness and by reason of the sympathy with which it is written.

An account of it should prove particularly interesting to San Franciscans, for it was here that Puccini's "La Boheme," the opera founded on the book, was first produced in America. A strolling company of singers, the Lambardis, drifted in here from South America some ten years ago and played at the California theatre on Bush street. It was through them that San Francisco first heard this supremely beautiful opera. Agostini was the Rodolpho on that occasion, and in the season of 1902 he again sang the role at the Tivoli—the original Tivoli of beloved memory. His wife, Montanari, was Mimi, and never was music more sweetly sung than by these two with their liquid lyric voices, with their complete abandonment to the part, with their perfect companionship adding realism to their depiction of the two Bohemians who found love in a cheerless garret. The Tivoli's was a wonderful production of the world's most fascinating opera.

Never was literary work born of more travail than preceded Murger's history of himself and other strugglers for fame. They hoped and starved and froze and loved and frolicked in the attics of Paris. Murger, in recording their adventures, drew little on fancy. The tears and the laughter in the "Bohemians" are real tears and real laughter. The privations that Murger tells of were actually suffered, as is revealed in the review mentioned, which gives an account of the career of Murger from the time of his birth in one of the poorer quarters of Paris to his miserable death from blood-poisoning at the age of thirty-nine. He had been comparatively affluent for a few years before his death, the book on which his fame rests, having brought him considerable money; but his health had never recovered from the privations of his student days.

The word "Bohemian" is one to which wide latitude of definition has been given; but the only construction that can rightfully be put upon it is that which is suggested by a reading of Murger's book. Genuine Bohemians are rare. San Francisco is supposed to be full of them; yet during a long acquaintance with people of this city who cultivate the arts I have known less than half a dozen who could be really classed as Bohemians. Two of these were students who inhabited a Clay-street garret and for two years lived on a painfully small income. They were offered work at commercial drawing by which they could earn a few dollars, but they scorned it, being consistent to their principle of art for art's sake. They at last became able to cultivate it for the stomach's sake, and grew fat. Both have attained a fair measure of success and one has shown promise of fame. A third that I knew in the same quarter used to wear a kimono and sandals when he ran across Montgomery street to the bakery for his breakfast loaf; and in his vest pocket —when his wardrobe was complete—he carried a fork, so that when he dipped into saloon free lunches he might maintain an air of exclusiveness. These were all Bohemians in every sense of the word, as have been two or three newspaper men and musicians whom I have known; and they were totally different from the posers who think that Bohemianism consists in suppers at Italian restaurants and a fondness for spaghetti, garlic, and astringent red wine. I once deeply offended a lady —a singer—by a definition of a Bohemian provoked by her persistence in so classifying herself. "A Bohemian," I told her, "is a talented person of dissolute habits." She angrily insisted that she had no dissolute habits, the obvious and unforgivable reply to which was that she was no Bohemian.

But Murger is becoming lost in these ramblings. He was born in Paris on March 24, 1822, in a house in the Rue St. George of which his father was the concierge. A wonderfully beautiful child, and a favorite in the neighborhood, his mother took great pride in his personal appearance and formed high ambitions for his future. These plans for greatness were not shared by the boy's father, who wanted to make him a tailor. At last, when Henry was fourteen years old, his father consented that he should become office boy to an attorney. He was a poor office boy. He had formed the acquaintance of some writers and painters who lived in a garret, and with these he spent as much of his time as he could steal away from his employers. His great ambition was to be a poet, and he and his little coterie of friends recited their verses to each other. And, by the way, Murger's first volume of poems was not published until the day of his death. He painted some, but on the advice of the brothers Bisson, with whom he spent his evenings, he gave it up. Meanwhile, his employers were complaining bitterly of his inattention to his work, and quitting the law office he took employment with Count Tolstoy as secretary.

But the trouble between him and his father continued because of the son's propensities for spending his time in the studios and writing verse. At last he was told to shift for himself, and went to the attic of a writer named Lelioux, with whom he was very friendly, and with whose life his was destined to be closely associated.

The winter of 1839-40 was a trying one for struggling poets. Murger's income of forty francs a month earned him the title of the "capitalist" among his associates, most of whom depended on selling a few verses or doing hack literary work now and then. Before spring came Murger and Lelioux had burned most of their furniture and many precious manuscripts in their efforts to combat the severe cold. Among the inmates of the house was an actor named Lureau, who played the role of the father at one of the minor theatres, and was the parent of seven children, by which fact he was able to add realism to his act but nothing to his income. The family of nine lived on seventy francs a month. Through their acquaintance with this actor Murger and Lelioux sold a play they had written. It ran eighteen nights, and their share of the profits was twenty-seven francs, which was enough to pay for the paper on which the piece had been written and allow a tip to the prompter.

"Still," says the reviewer, "Murger was advancing gradually in his art, and his style daily became more assured; and though nothing of this early period was intrinsically worth preserving, he felt that he had mastered the rudiments and technicalities of poetry. As before and after, he worked through the night and slept during the day—an arrangement by the way that doubtless led to some comfort in the economy of beds; he had discovered that coffee appeased hunger and excited the imagination, and with coffee and these midnight vigils

(Continued on Page 32.)

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA
Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets
A General Banking Business Transacted
CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

The Summit of the Mountain

By Jean Rameau (From the French)

A native of Navarreux, not far from the summit of the mountain of Annie, Cazanbon had only one dream of bliss; to die near the summit in a house of his own. To realize his dream he worked in Paris from morning to night, and sometimes from night to morning, copying anything and everything, accounts, plays or novels, since his star had made him a copyist. What a star to have been born under! By copying fourteen or fifteen hours a day he earned three hundred francs a month, enough to keep his wife and son André from dying of hunger. Under such conditions, where did he find the hope of becoming the owner of a house with a view of the summit of Annie?

Every four or five years, if the times had been prosperous, he would indulge in a week's vacation; take a walking trip in Navarreux, and ask the price of every house with a view of Annie. What exorbitant prices they wanted! Ten thousand, twenty, even fifty thousand francs, is what they demanded for any house where Annie could be seen with the snow-capped summit, like a cathedral, against the blue sky.

But one day he found a little farm house on a mountain stream for which they wanted only three thousand francs. The summit of Annie could be seen distinctly about ten miles away, rising majestically above the other mountains, and Cazanbon's eyes sparkled at the view.

"Three thousand francs is not exorbitant," he said to the owner. "I will return. This is my address. Do not sell without warning me." He left a printed card. Then he waved his hand to the summit of Annie. "I will see you again my beauty," he cried, and trudged away.

Yes, he certainly had the hope of again seeing that white capped mountain which was the earliest memory of his childhood. Three thousand francs! Well, he could save it in ten years, if business was good, and what are ten years in a strong man's life?

Cazanbon returned to work with enthusiasm. How many manuscripts he copied! How his pen flew! But he saw only that beloved mountain smiling on him as a reward for thirty years of hard work. When his hand had a cramp, he would stop writing and draw pictures of the view from the little farm. "It is the view from our house in Navarreux, the most beautiful view in the world. You must come and visit us—some day," he said to his friends.

He would copy sometimes until three in the morning, and the next day his eyes would be very tired, so tired that he could hardly see the end of the Rue des Martyrs.

One day he went to spent a few hours at Saint Cloud.

"Papa, see how pretty the Eiffel Tower looks from here," said his son, André.

"What? You can see the Eiffel Tower?"

"Why, yes, plainly."

Cazabon could not see it, and a great fear entered his soul. Was he becoming blind? Had he worked too hard to see the summit of Annie? Perhaps he could not see it when he had saved the three thousand francs.

And now Cazanbon has the three thousand francs, but he thinks of the fact without enthusiasm, for he is blind.

"But we will buy the farm, just the same," he says, as the tears come to his dead eyes. "You can see it, my son, if I cannot."

The son is a man now and it is he who copies and earns the three hundred francs a month necessary for the family support. And although he finds his father's hobby very useless and expensive, he goes by the first excursion train to buy the farm. But the farm is not for sale. The old owner is dead and it has been bought, like everything in the neighborhood, by one of the wealthy Parisians, as a summer home. And the prices of everything in the place have soared to impossible figures. The best André can buy is a little hut, in a hole without space or view, but as his father cannot see and will not know——

As soon as he had provided a little necessary furniture, he brought the poor old man, and the blind face beamed with joy to think that the summit of Annie was there before him, with its white peak against the blue sky.

"How beautiful it is," he said, as he held his son's hand and pointed to the imaginary spot.

"Yes it is very beautiful," André replied in a tender voice.

"Is there still snow on the mountains near it?"

"Yes, dazzling snow."

"And are the houses of Navarreux visible?"

"Yes."

"And the chasm at the right?"

"There is a white cloud in it."

"And are the pine trees still there?"

"Oh, yes!"

"What a view!" said the blind old man. "The most beautiful view in the world."

Then, one day, André, who had returned to Paris to continue his work, received a letter from his father.

Dear André:—A great surprise. My cousin, the doctor from Pau, has examined my eyes and assures me he can cure them. Come quickly. They are waiting for you, before performing the operation.

Young Cazabon was happy to read the letter, but his happiness was tinged with melancholy. He thought: "What will he say if he regains his sight and discovers that I have deceived him? Poor father! When he does not see his summit of Annie from the window!"

If André had had the money, how quickly he would have bought that farm at any price, but copying was so badly paid since the invention of the typewriter—— Nevertheless, André must go to be present at the operation.

It was performed. It seemed to have succeeded.

Oh! The joy of the old man in whom there was so little strength left.

"Take me to the window. Oh, take me to the window!" he said, the moment he could be moved.

His son was crying.

"Father," he murmured, "I must tell you——"

But he did not finish. At the window, the dim eyes of his father shone with an expression of ecstasy.

"Oh, how beautiful!" he sighed in a trembling voice.

Much astonished, André looked. And he saw above the trees a white cloud with pointed peaks, that looked like a mountain against the blue sky.

"How happy I am to see again!" said the feeble old man, as two tears fell from his clouded eyes.

And his emotion was so strong that his eyes closed and he fell gently into his son's arms, as his heart stopped beating forever, without a doubt of the illusion.

Far away, the white cloud arose with a more and more imposing majesty and radiance, as it carried a human soul to the summit of the mountain.

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 56 Kearny street.

TAXICABS

(Genuine RENAULT Cars)

PACIFIC TAXIMETER CAB COMPANY

Solicits your patronage of its equipment of imported Renault Taxicabs and will show its appreciation by prompt and reliable service. * * * * *

TELEPHONE

FRANKLIN 4848

Private Exchange connecting all Departments

MAIN STATION AND GENERAL OFFICES, 1355-1363 BUSH STREET

FAY C. BEAL, General Manager.

The Spectator

Johnson and Boswell

The lovers of that dogmatic old philosopher Samuel Johnson are preparing to celebrate in September the two-hundredth anniversary of his birth. The result will doubtless be a great revival of interest in "Boswell's Johnson," a work which stands preeminent among the great works of literary history. Nowadays few people find time to read Johnson himself, though his works include stories, biographies and essays full of the charm of fancy and philosophic reflection. Most people prefer to know Johnson at second-hand—through his friend and servile admirer "Bozzy." Thousands have read Boswell's "Life" that never read Rasselas or Johnson's Lives of the Poets, a circumstance chiefly due to the passion for royal roads; for if the Life had never been written people that are satisfied with a superficial knowledge of literature and its producers would feel constrained to read Johnson. It is therefore in consequence of the worship that the old philosopher inspired that he achieved immortality largely by proxy. With the ironical humor of this one is all the more deeply impressed when reminded that when Johnson was told that Boswell intended to write the biography he exclaimed, "If I were sure that Boswell intended to write my life I'd take Boswell's."

The Cracker and The Comet

It is not to be regretted that Johnson suffered Boswell to live, for after all we could better afford to spare the classics of the old dogmatist than the work which he inspired, a work that, as Carlyle says, "gives us a better insight into the history of the England of those days than twenty other books falsely entitled histories." The readers of this work steadily increase and multiply. Peter Pindar's prophecy as to the future of this popular work has received a fulfillment which even the prophet hardly thought possible when he penned these lines:

O Boswell, Bozzy, Bruce, whate'er thy name,
Thou mighty shark for anecdote and fame,

* * * * * * *

Triumphant, through Time's vast gulf shall sail,
The pilot of our literary whale.
Thou, curious scrapmonger, shall live in song
When death has stilled the rattle of thy tongue.
Even future babes to lisp thy name shall learn,
And Bozzy join with Wood and Tommy Hearn,
Who drove the spiders from much pose and rhyme
And snatched old stories from the jaws of time.
What tasteless mouth can gape, what eye can close,
What head can nod o'er thy enlivening prose.

* * * * * * *

Yes! whilst the Rambler shall a comet blaze,
And gild a work of darkness with its rays,
Thee, too, that world of wonderment shall hail,
A lively, booming cracker at his tail!"

It has come to pass that it is the cracker which keeps the memory of the comet alive. Johnson lives today not in his writings but in his talks—the talks that were snatched from the jaws of time by Boswell. Johnson was the literary despot of his day. He towered above men who gave him the most slavish adulation, but who are now ranked above him in the realm of literature. Even the writings of Lord Chesterfield, whom Johnson despised, are now more generally read than those of the grim old philosopher. The marks of respect that were shown him were such as in these days are reserved for persons of royal rank. It was not unusual when he entered a room for every one to rise to do him honor. The homage paid to him, however, was due in part to the histrionic element in his character. He presented a solemn and imposing aspect and spoke in a sonorous voice, employing well-rounded periods which did not always ways bear close analysis. Lord Pembroke once said of him: "Dr. Johnson's sayings would not appear so extraordinary were it not for his bow-wow way." How to celebrate Johnson fitingly it would be hard to determine, and to celebrate him at all without celebrating Boswell would be impossible.

Wheeler the Enemy of Hastings

The tender sensibilities and pardonable pride of some of the alumni of the Hastings College of Law have been wrought upon severely by my statement that on account of the retrogression of that institution and its present low standing in the academic world the faculty of the California State University had been barred from participation in the Carnegie Pension Fund. The statement was deemed incredible, but on inquiry it was found to be true. It appears from investigation that the law college which was once the pride of California has been falling into a state of decay from neglect. The lamentable fact is that from this affiliated college the haughty President of the State University has withdrawn his support. Not only that; he is doing all in his power to render it a negligible factor in the university scheme. Some time ago it occurred to Dr. Wheeler that the course of study at the Hastings College of Law should be conducted in the genial atmosphere of Berkeley. When he learned that its founder had established it for all time in San Francisco for the purpose of rendering it accessible to students employed in law offices he decided to institute a rival college across the bay. This he was permitted to do, and thus was the incredible Boke given a job as a professor of law, the same Boke that has been carrying on the graft prosecution propaganda in the East while drawing a salary from the State by kind permission of President Wheeler. So the State today has two law colleges, neither one of which is worthy of the name. The Hastings College was liberally endowed and there is no reason why it should not rank with the best in the country save that it meets with discouragement from headquarters.

He—Do you know French?
She—Oh, yes; but I don't like talking it, because one always has to think before speaking.

Colonel Emerson vs. Cabrera

Friends of Colonel Edwin Emerson, that amazing soldier of fortune whose adventures have put a girdle round the world from San Francisco to Shanghai and who numbers the great Bwana Tumbo among his intimates, may be surprised to learn that his most recent activities have involved him in a charge of lese majeste against the president of Guatemala. Let me hasten to

TO POLITICAL CANDIDATES

Make your campaign more effective by addressing voters directly with individually typewritten, personal letters. Let me help you to win.

L. A. IRELAND
Manager The Multographers
Kearny 4956 334 Phelan Building

J. C. WILSON
BROKER

Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

explain, however, that Colonel Emerson is not within the immediate reach of the terrific Cabrera and there is small likelihood of his being marched out, of a moonlight night, and shot against a stone wall. Colonel Emerson is waging strife on Cabrera from the canyons of little old Broadway, having reached New York after a trip from San Francisco via Guatemala, an account of which would in itself prove vastly entertaining, if its details were set before my readers. Be it known that Emerson was recently arrested in New York on a charge of criminal libel preferred against him on behalf of President Cabrera by Bengoecha, Consul General of Guatemala in New York. It may surprise many to learn that when Colonel Emerson took spectacular leave of San Francisco, the remote cause of his departure was his anxiety to determine the truth or falsity of the story that President Cabrera had contributed $6,000 to the Taft campaign fund. It seems that while Colonel Emerson was in this city last August, Francis J. Heney called his attention to this story and roused in him an intense eagerness to investigate it. So Emerson packed his lares and penates and hied hence to Guatemala. Soon after arriving there he received a letter from his friend, the then President Roosevelt, assuring him that the story should be characterized by short and ugly words, and much relieved, he continued his journey until he reached New York. Colonel Emerson suspected that the letter from Roosevelt had been tampered with by Cabrera before it came to his hands and he arrived in Broadway with a very healthy detestation of the ruler of Guatemala.

"A Modern Caligula"

Colonel Emerson immediately plunged into his familiar field of journalism as the editor of Uncle Sam's Magazine which used to be known as the Army and Navy, and one of the first subjects he turned his editorial hand to was the Cabrera administration. He referred to the President of Guatemala as a modern Caligula, declared that he had bankrupted his country and said many other unkind things about him. The result was a suit for libel brought on behalf of Cabrera by the aforesaid consul general. Far from shrinking before the dread possibilities of such an action, the adventurous colonel seems to have met the issue with provoking gusto. The hearings, I am told, have attracted the attention of all the San Francisco members of New York's Bohemian set and they have attended court in imposing relays. One of the spectacular incidents of the trial was the letter which Emerson addressed to District Attorney Jerome, offering to prove all that he had editorialized and summoning Cabrera and all his emisaries to come on and do their darnest. It was Emerson himself, by the way, who translated the suit for libel into the grandiloquent terms of "lese majeste of a foreign potentate," a fact which indicates that he is losing no opportunity of glorifying the rather formal proceedings. The action seems to have been assigned to the Dogberry of the New York bench, one magistrate O'Connor who, at the first hearing, demanded: "What and where is Guatemala, anyway;" and later expressed his unwillingness to proceed against the defendant unless Cabrera appeared in person to prosecute. The case is still pending and I am authorized to state that Colonel Emerson, who is too much of a newspaperman to be appalled by a libel suit, is enjoying himself immensely.

"He's a good salesman."
"Persuasive, eh?"
"Persuasive? He could sell the Cuban Government a snow-plow!"

FOR THE BABY
BROOKS
HOMOEOPATHIC COUGH AND CROUP SYRUP
25 CENTS AT DRUGSTORES

Burbank and His Critics

The Pasadena Gardener's Association, which up to last week was unknown to fame, has gained much public notice for itself by attacking one already famous Luther Burbank, the plant wizard of Santa Rosa, who, the Pasadena men with the hoes assert, is not a wizard at all, but a plain fakir. They say that his spineless cactus and winter rhubarb are but importations, the former from Mexico and the latter from Australia. They also attack his wonderberry, stating that it is nothing more or less than a development of the deadly nightshade. Burbank does not lack his supporters. Professor E. J. Wickson, Dean of the College of Agriculture at the University of California, maintains that "Burbank has disclosed material of incalcuuable value to science, and has accomplished more than any other man in the elevation of horticulture toward the lofty plane of biology." Rival horticulturists do not share these views. Hans Plath, president of the Pacific Coast Horticultural Society, denies to Burbank the discovery of the spineless cactus and the improved rhubarb, while Hugo Lilienthal, founder of the Juvenile Horticultural Society of America, speaks of the wonderberry as a fake, poisonous, and in need of the guardianship of the pure food law. The attack of the local critics was no doubt inspired by the controversy in which Burbank has been involved with Eastern and European horticulturists regarding the wonderberry. He has offered $10,000 for a demonstration of the claim that its parent is the nightshade. This offer was provoked through the action of the Gardeners' Chronicle, an English journal, which published the assertion that the new fruit was the poisonous nightshade sublimated. It was to a correspondent who wrote direct to Burbank regarding this that he offered to pay $10,000 to any one who could prove that the wonderberry is either the black nightshade or identical with any previously known berry. Then the editor of the Rural New Yorker procured seeds of the berry and grew the fruit under glass. The resultant plant was declared by expert botanists to possess all the characteristics of the nightshade. It declares further that the berry has been sampled by a dozen people, only two of whom could swallow it after tasting, and none of whom wanted a second dose. Its editor claims to have earned the $10,000. His objections to the berry are concurred in by Dr. N. L. Britton, of the New York Botanical Garden, Dr. Charles F. Wheeler, of the United States Department of Agriculture, and E. C. Matthews, who has grown the berry in Mexico. In answer to all of these Burbank refers to the fact that the berry has been grown on a large scale for three years, and that it has been used by thousands of people whose verdict he says must be final. While condemnation of the fruit is strong, Burbank seems to have rather the better of the controversy by balancing facts against his detractors' theories.

History Repeating Itself

Even in the matter of San Francisco's celebration of its rehabilitation after fire and earthquake history will be at its old trick of repeating itself. During the reign of the Emperor Commodus to which Gibbon assigned the first rudiments of the Roman declension, the imperial city was ravaged by a pestilence, by riots amount-

J. M. Jacobi & Co.
S. W. Cor. Montgomery & Sutter Sts
Individuality is always found in the best tailored garments
OUR SPRING AND SUMMER CLOTHING MERITS YOUR ATTENTION.

ing to civil war, by a massacre of the mob, by shocks of earthquake and finally by a great conflagration. After recovering from these calamities there was a grand celebration to which all the world was invited. DeQuincey tells us that people "were summoned by circles of longitude and latitude to come and see things that eye had not seen nor ear heard of." The celebration took the form of a series of festivals of gorgeous pomp. There were amphitheatrical exhibitions upon a scale of grandeur absolutely unparalleled by all former attempts. The Queen of Roman celebration was the beautiful Marcia, mistress of Commodus, who not long after gave the emperor a cup of poisoned wine and employed a gladiator to assist the poison by means of strangulation.

"I never hear an unkind word from my husband!"
"Oh, is he so thoughtful?"
"No, he's so thoughtless."

The Spreckels Will

Unless present plans go astray, Rudolph Spreckels will be compelled on August 23 to relinquish the reins of city government temporarily in order to attempt to prove to the public that he did not wrongly influence his father toward making a will in his and his brother Claus Jr.'s favor to the exclusion of John D. and Adolph Spreckels. It was on May 18 that something of a sensation but no degree of surprise was occasioned by the news that two of the sugar king's sons were to fight in the courts for their share of their dead father's estate. The legal documents filed and the interviews given out by John D. Spreckels confounded the admirers of Rudolph, and confirmed the opinions already entertained regarding him by people possessing the acumen to see that in posing as a savior of this sorely harrassed town he was playing a part that had as its end the downfall of a business rival. John D. Spreckels has promised some wonderful revelations. He has told the public that when the will contest comes into court he will show that Rudolph was a traitor to the father whom he influenced to leave him more than his rightful share of the estate; that he was a traitor to his brothers; that for a long time during the last illness of Claus Spreckels this saintly son had complete domination over him. After this document was filed, the usual court legal formalities were complied with, and now the hearing that is expected to pave the way for a contest of the will has been set for the date mentioned. For some time afterward, unless there is another postponement, Jimmy Phelan will have to run the city practically alone, for Rudolph Spreckels will not have time to give him much assistance. Francis J. Heney will be back in town by that time, but he will be shouting all his energy away in the Calhoun case. There will be nobdy left to help Phelan, unless perchance E. P. E. Troy comes to the front. So far the Spreckels-Phelan cabal has merely allowed E. P. E. to do nothing more important than to run around and make strange noises; but now with help short, he mav be permitted to do some real governing.

Fighting for Principle

John D. Spreckels declares that it is not for the money involved that he is making the fight against his father's will, but in order to expose to the public the true character of Rudolph Spreckels—to strip the saint's garb from him, and show him as he really is, a cunning politician and wire puller, who for three years has kept the city of San Francisco divided against itself that he might profit through the downfall of his rival, Patrick Calhoun. John D. Spreckels says he will show that for a long time before his father died his mind was weak. He will prove, he says, that when his parents moved to their old Howard street residence after the fire they were joined there by Rudolph Spreckels and Claus Spreckels Jr., although the two sons had not spoken to their father for years. What went on in that old mansion, what falsehoods were told, what insinuations were made, what sinister influences were employed, those who know will not tell unless compelled to. John D. Spreckels says that he will bring it all out in court and that the public, even accustomed as it is to hypocrisy and deceit, will stand amazed at the revelations.

Spreckels' Country Homes

The frontispiece of this issue of Town Talk shows the country residences of John D. Spreckels and his son of the same name, who when they want surcease from business cares have the choice of ranches and mansions in the Southern part of the State for their recreation. One of the prettiest places that they frequent is Lower Otay Ranch, on the edge of Lower Otay Lake, some twenty-five miles from the city of San Diego, belonging to the great water supply system which John D. Spreckels and his associates are constructing for San Diego and vicinity. Here has been erected a house of adobe, the same material that was used in the building of the old missions of the Franciscan fathers, but instead of the dingy, comfortless structures of early California, this house is a model of convenience, and seems like a heaven to the wanderer in the unsettled and unfrequented foothills. Particularly is the place delightful from its proximity to the little lake, so rare in this semi-arid region, and the boating, shooting and fishing which it affords. The privilege of indulgence in these sports is zealously guarded, and permitted of but a favored few, and as a result large mouth black bass are abundant in the lake, and the duck shooting in season is excellent. Nestling amid the mountains, about an equal distance from San Diego, but in a different location, is Jamul Ranch, also a holding of the Spreckels, which is part of one of the monster old Spanish land grants. The ranch even now contains thousands of acres, embracing hill and dale, mountain and canyon, and in a broad, level valley, surrounded by tall mountain peaks and shaded by graceful peppers and eucalypts, is situated the Jamul House. This is also of the mission style of architecture, with great arches and broad verandas, and likewise has all the appointments requisite for the perfect enjoyment of one's sojourn. The shooting of small game may be enjoyed to its fullest here, and should the Spreckels or their guests crave hardier sport, the deep canyons and the rocky mountain sides offer larger spoils. At Jamul the atmosphere of the old days of Spanish sovereignty seems still to hover near. The ranch is isolated from and neglected by the rest of the world, and except for the daily intrusion of the mail stage one can almost imagine himself relegated, transported to the seventeen hundreds. At fashionable, populous Coronado Beach, so different from these tiny hamlets in the mountains, as though to provide for every mood and every need, the Spreckels have just built two elegant mónolithic concrete residences, one for John D. Spreckels, the other as the home of his son, John D. Jr., or "Jack." The residence of the elder is on the Italian Renaissance order, and overlooks what is probably one of the most superb scenes in the world—Glorietta Bay, dotted with its flotilla of little crafts just at one's feet, opening into the bay of San Diego, here so landlocked that it appears to be a river, with tier upon tier of ascending mountains in the distance. each successive chain fainter and fainter, headed by Mt. San Miguel, the last so closely resembling in form Vesuvius as to complete the illusion and compel the beholder to believe himself really "under Italian skies." Only a few rods away are the grounds of the Hotel del Coronado, also one

INVITATIONS MONOGRAMS CRESTS
VISITING CARD PLATES ENGRAVED
ROBERTSON
UNION SQUARE SAN FRANCISCO

of the Spreckels interests. The home of John D. Spreckels Jr. is situated on the Ocean Boulevard at Coronado, and looks directly upon the broad Pacific.

Irate Father—How dared you kiss my daughter in the dark?
Jack Cynique—I don't know. I've wondered myself ever since I've seen her by daylight.

Mirza Ali-Kuli Khan Once More

It is not long since that the most exclusive of our social nabobs, drowsy with the cheer of late and lengthy dinners, nodded in their comfortable chairs at the St. Francis while the polished Mirza Ali-Kuli Kahn, imperial consul from Persia, tried to make it plain to them that Omar Khayam had spiritualized sufism. Not many of our elite knew what sufism was and those who did would have been surprised to learn that the great Richard Burton had explained, long before Mirza Ali-Kuli Khan swam within our ken, that when genial old Omar talked of wine, he really meant "entranced love for the Soul of Souls." However, this is neither here nor there, except that it gives me an opportunity to recall Mirza to my readers' minds before announcing, with the impressiveness due a matter of such importance, that the distinguished Persian has forsaken the winding paths of esoteric philosophy for the straight road of occidental prophecy and has soothsaid that California is destined to become the center of the creative arts of America.

Carmel To Be the Hub

However much some of us may differ from Mirza when he expounds sufism, it would be utterly unbecoming to disagree with him when he lays his tongue to so flattering an utterance as this. No true Californian but believes that art could find no more fitting abiding place than in our midst. But it must be admitted that Mirza elaborates his prophecy with a circumstantiality calculated to give us pause; for he would have us understand that when the artistic center of America is shifted to California, the little seaside village of Carmel will be, in the expressive language of the Persian, "the hub of that center." It may not be superfluous to add that this very complimentary pronouncement was given forth at the aforesaid Carmel, the occasion being the annual breakfast of the Arts and Crafts Club. I am not particularly interested in the arguments, some of them ingenious enough, wherewith Mirza, unlike the prophets of old, seeks to substantiate his sooth-saying; but I do take an almost incontinent pleasure in learning what the residents of Carmel think about the glittering future of their sparse settlement. Happily the views of some of them are set forth for our edification in that unique little publication, "The Carmel Whirl" which celebrated the recent "Whirl Around," organized, I believe, by Mrs. Josephine Foster. George Sterling, true poet, finds that art is "indubitably dependent upon environment."—"One country, at any rate," he says, a little cautiously, "can be shown to be a more fertile soil for it than some other country." And he instances Greenland as an uncongenial soil for artistic endeavor. Here, it seems to me, is an unfortunate citation. My bookish reader will immediately recall that Carlyle, speaking of Iceland in the first lecture on Heroes and Hero Worship, wields his authority against this theory. But I did not intend to grow argumentative and I will straightway admit that Sterling's thesis is neatly rounded. What most appeals to me is this sentence which displays a charming geographical exactitude which leaves nothing to be desired: "It is, then, my opinion that California (at least 'middle' California on the coast) is to excel other portions of the United States not only in the relative number of its artists, but in their artistic stature."

The Vision of Mirza

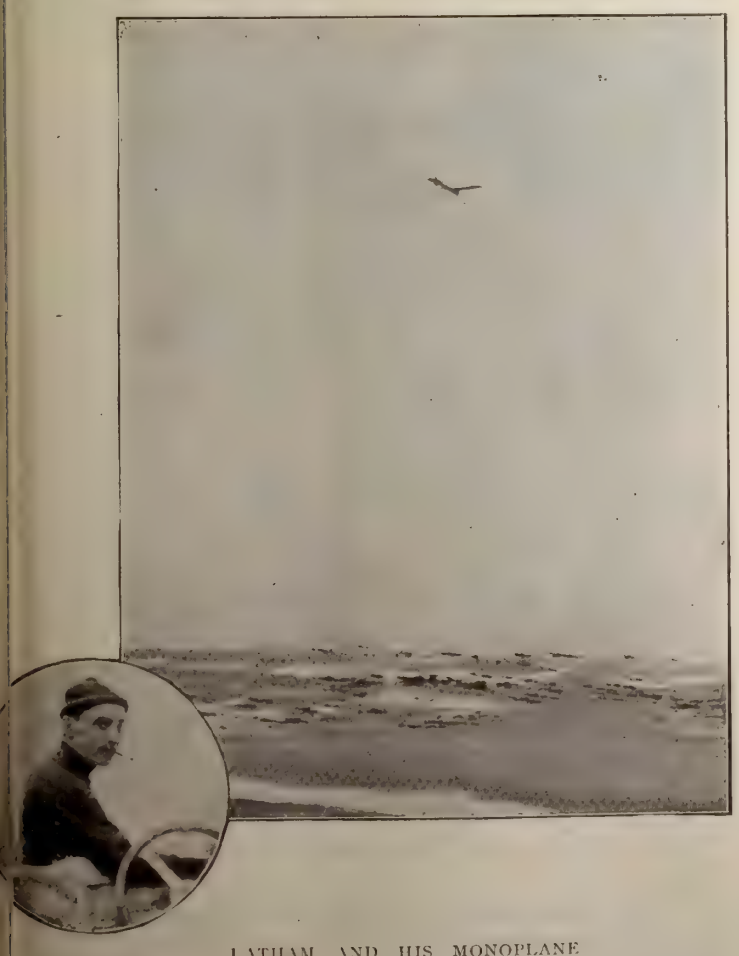
There is a little shy hesitation apparent in the attitude toward this question of Mrs. Grace MacGowan Cooke. While agreeing that scenically and climatically the coast is fitted for its proposed high future, this writer remembers that art clusters about the great centers of publication, the schools, the museums, the collections; and she is not clear how California is to overtake and distance the East in those advantages. Miss Alice MacGowan draws a cunning distinction between "art centers" and "the delectable land of artists"; finds the "art feeling" strong in California; and is prepared to admit, at least, that the future is big with promise. But it is to Michael Williams that the vision of Mirza most particularly appeals. "I do believe," he says, "that California is to be the Greece—the center of Art, of the new world of America." This, explains Mr. Williams, not only because California is the most beautiful and the most healthful of the states, but also because California "has a most vigorous and most healthy soul." Evidence of this Mr. Williams finds in the growing strength among us of the socialistic movement. San Franciscans may not have noticed this, but the positiveness with which Mr. Williams writes indicates that it is a fact of crystal clearness to the gazers of Carmel. "All the young artists and thinkers in California who amount to anything are Socialists," says Mr. Williams with finality. This also I, for one, had not noticed, but not being in the wrangling vein, I am not going to dispute it just now, any more than I am going to dwell upon Mr. Williams' rather trite assertion that "art is the only true religion."

"Sir! You're sitting on my hat!"
"Oh, beg pardon; thought it was mine!"

Zemansky and the Reformers

The Spreckelsites, the Phelanites, the Heneyites and the other reformers of various stands and affiliations who compose that ridiculous organization known as the Good Government League, have shown their lack of brains in many ways. So long as they were content to issue pronunciamentos as to what they proposed to do for the redemption of the town they attracted little public attention. But a few weeks ago they tried to spy upon the mental attitude of the voters of San Francisco by means

TOWNSEND'S
CALIFORNIA GLACÈ FRUITS AND CANDIES
27 Years in Palace Hotel Building
All Orders Given Prompt Attention at
46 MARKET STREET
Phone Douglas 4814
Factory, 117 SAN JOSE AVE. Phone Mission 378
On Sept. 15th we open a new store at 755 Market St.
Also at News Stands of the Fairmont and St. Francis Hotels



Santa Fe
NEW TRAIN
Via the Santa Fe to Chicago via Kansas City
EAST
Leave San Francisco daily 7:15 a. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m. This is in addition to our two other trains leaving San Francisco and Oakland 8:00 and 10:00 p. m. Also New Train to Fresno. Leaving San Francisco 4:00 p. m.; Leave Oakland 4:05 p. m. This in addition to our THREE other trains leaving San Francisco daily at 7:15 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m.
For detail information phone or call on Jas. B. Duffy, 673 Market Street, San Francisco
T. Love, Market Street Ferry Depot, San Francisco
J. J. Warner, 1112 Broadway, Oakland

of a straw vote by which, in connection with secret markings under the stamps on the envelopes, they hoped to be able to line up their friends and enemies. The reader who keeps up with the humor of the day will remember this political trick, its expose, and the guffaw that went up from the Ferry Tower to the Cliff House—for we are a fun-loving people, and the spectacle of these reformers hoist on their own petard, wriggling in discomfiture, caused more laughter than has been heard in this town since Fremont Older was kidnaped. The ordinary type of politician, having a proper estimate of the public's intelligence, would have gracefully given up after this defeat. But not so these ardent reformers. They announced that their principal object in sending the decoy letters out was to trace illegal registrations. When a great many letters came back to their headquarters undelivered because no one lived at the addresses named, they gave a shout of triumph, and carried the startling news to Registrar Zemansky that people by the thousands were registering illegally. "There," they said, "that ought to hold a doubting and suspicious public for a while." But it didn't. The registrar looked into the matter, and as a result of his investigations has addressed to the reformers a letter which while it is perfectly polite, embodies a roast that would make a hardened ward politician shrivel. Zemansky calls attention to the fact that of the letters that were returned more than ten per cent had been wrongly addressed, the clerks having used a register of two years ago. He further calls attention to the circumstance that a voter after registering is not compelled to reside in the place from which he registered. Further than this, in response to the request that he take action against these supposed law-breakers, he informed the complainants that such action would have to be taken on far greater evidence than they had produced; that if he busied himself in looking after every man who did not at present live at the place from which he registered in some remote period there would be not time for anything else. All these are things that any man well informed should know. The good Government Leaguers, being possessed of but one idea, the perpetuation of the fake reform that is making San Francisco ridiculous in the eyes of the world, had no time to consider the law in the matter nor the wit to understand it had they considered it. This last defeat should squelch their activities, but it will not. They are of the pestiferous breed that will not be downed because they do not know when they are out. But their own foolishness has rendered them harmless, and hereafter they will merely be a source of mirth-provoking entertainment.

SAVING THE MONOPLANE

When Hubert Latham made his unsuccessful attempt to cross the English Channel, the French torpedo boat destroyer kept close at hand and reached the monoplane within five minutes after its fall into the sea. Mr. Latham himself fastened ropes around the machine which was promptly towed to the side of the destroyer and later hoisted by a crane to the deck of the steam-tug Calaisen.

LATHAM AND HIS MONOPLANE

The large picture shows Hubert Latham's monoplane high in the air above the English Channel. The portrait is of Latham.

Langdon Shows Temper

Until Tuesday the people of San Francisco had almost forgotten that William Langdon was our de facto district attorney, so completely had his shining intelligence been obscured by the corruscating mentality of our district attorney pro tem, Francis J. Heney, who is now in the north hunting big game instead of corporations. But Langdon has come to the front and demonstrated that he can shout as loudly as the man who is his underling in rank but his superior in court. The occasion of Mr. Langdon's outburst of temper and noise was the stubborness of two veniremen who were being examined for jury duty in the Calhoun case. One of them had a strong opinion to the effect that Calhoun was not guilty; the other was willing to hear the evidence and act accordingly, but expressed little faith in the integrity of the immunity supervisors. These two men did not know that it is somewhat of an offense against the present rulers of the commonwealth to believe that Patrick Calhoun is anything but guilty or merits any less punishment than being drawn and quartered. They did not know that the district attorney's office has settled beforehand the question of the defendant's guilt or innocence, and that in trying to pick a jury the representatives of this important but perverted office are endeavoring to secure only men of their own way of thinking. Had they known this these misguided veniremen would have realized that after many days of baiting prospective jurors without result, Langdon's temper would naturally be frayed and uncertain. It is a nerve-racking job to have one's opinions combated by a lot of ordinary citizens who do not have a proper appreciation of the prospect of sharing in the halo that rests upon the august brows of Heney, Langdon, Spreckels, Phelan and others of the pretended reformers of San Francisco. So it was that Bill Langdon turned his tongue loose in a flood of abuse and showed that he has profited well in sitting at the feet of his strenuous special prosecutor. But what specially riled Langdon was that one venireman said he thought the ex-supervisors had been coached by the district attorney's office to testify against Calhoun. Langdon broke out into a fury against being accused of suboring perjury. But really what has Langdon to do with what has gone on in his office for the past three years in respect to the prosecution? Ever since he was forced to allow Heney to usurp his place, he has been a cipher. The district attorney's office could be convicted of having done all sorts of atrocious things without any particulad odium being cast on Langdon. It is surprising that he should have so much pride in the fair fame of the position that he occupies but does not adorn. Langdon has only a few months more to serve, and he should finish out his career in the calm obscurity that has enveloped him for three years past.

Host—Won't you have some grapes?
Soaker—No, thank you, I never take my wine in pills.

Our Queen's Novel

"Every queen her own press agent" would seem to be the motto of Miss Virgilia Bogue, who on the eve of appearing as queen of the Portola Festival that is to take place here in October is launching a novel, the second she has written and the first she has published. My chapeau is doffed to Miss Bogue as a clever young lady who knows how to take time by the forelock and twist it (the forelock) to her advantage. I feel perfectly safe in predicting that "The Strength to Yield" will have a large sale because of the prominence of the author—which is not by any means to say that it will not sell on its merits. The book, the proofs of which have just been revised by Miss Bogue, will be on sale soon and the public will have a chance to judge of its merits. That it will divide the reading world into two camps is a foregone conclusion, for it deals with the sort of love that leads to scandal and divorce. Passion is the theme of the book, and Miss Bogue has employed a very realistic pen in depicting the struggle of a beautiful young married woman to resist the advances of an artist. To what extent he succeeds Miss Bogue will not tell, saying that whoever wishes to know must read the book. But that he is not altogether repulsed is revealed in the description of long and ardent kisses, and lengthy moonlight siestas. An unusual element is injected into the book by endowing the heroine with a hereditary mania for suicide —a mania that comes only with love, and is fully developed by the artist. The author defends the frankness of her descriptive scenes—and believe me, they are frank —by maintaining that "The morality of a book is not of the slightest consequence; the main point to consider is whether it is written well or ill." I do not altogether dissent. But I cannot agree with Miss Bogue when she says, "The ablest writer is he who lies the most successfully. Such men as Guy de Maupassant and Balzac, regarded as the extreme realists, were only clever in telling lies. Life is not what they made it out to be. They succeeded because they clothed their prosaic facts with the color of their brilliant imaginings." Especially do I disagree with her regarding de Maupassant, the most pitiless realist that ever made human foibles ridiculous or life's tragedies heart-breaking. It was because de Maupassant wrote of things as they are, because he told of things that you and I know in our hearts but do not care to express, that he is the king of short story tellers. "It is only when we come to analyse the hidden emotions of a man or a woman, understanding their good and their bad, examining the thoughts which, while not on the surface, yet play a vital part in their actions and their outlook, that we depart from the prosaic," says Miss Bogue. And it was exactly that which de Maupassant did—and it was that which made him a realist. But I am courting lese majeste in combating a queen's philosophy. I'll cease lest I be banished from this joyous town during the merry days of October.

Clairvoyantistic Distinction

Mrs. Annie Besant, president of the Theosophical Society, who arrived in New York from India a few days ago, confers a new distinction upon California, which she is shortly to visit on a lecture tour. She told the newspaper reporters that a great light was to come out of this State, which, she said, had more clairvoyants than any other part of the universe. She stated that a great leader was to be born into the world, one who would take the public by its willing hand and lead it out of the gross materialism of the present into an idealism that will be perfect. Mrs. Besant did not say specifically that this

ASK FOR
BLACK AND WHITE
SCOTCH WHISKEY
IT IS THE BEST
NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

Selling Service

We sell more than gas. We sell gas plus delivery and the two combined are covered in the term "gas service."

This service differs very much from the delivery department of a mercantile house or dairy. It is constant every one of the twenty-four hours and 365 days in the year. It is at your command instantly for the case of sudden sickness in the early hours of the morning as easily as it is for the preparation of the midday meal.

It is a service that must be prepared at any and all times to be sufficient to the greatest simultaneous demand. Everyone appreciates the fact that many more gas burners are in operation from 5 to 8 o'clock in the evening than during any other period of the day. It is also apparent that the darker and shorter the day, the heavier will be the gas consumption.

Our works must be large enough to care for the maximum demand of the average day, and the maximum demand of the shortest and darkest day in the year. This means that during the most of the time a big percentage of our capacity stands idle.

Besides this we must at all times, in our gas holders, retain a large reserve supply of gas to be used in cases of accident or emergency at the works.

San Francisco Gas and Electric Company

Copyright 1909

leader was to come out of California, but as this State is credited by her with being the world's principal rendezvous for clairvoyants, it is safe to presume that Mrs. Besant regards California as the future birthplace of this leader who is to make us forget the tariff, graft prosecutions and municipal elections. The fatal defect in the prediction is that California has been pretty well purged of clairvoyants through ordinances forbidding them to practice their peering and unveiling art. It was found that their power of vaticination and necromantic skill were exercised mainly in inducing the owner of a purse to turn its contents over to the practicer of the mysterious art. So the clairvoyants are practicing under the ban of depressing restrictions. A lot of them went to Oregon, but at last accounts ordinances similar to those enacted here were about to be put in force in Portland. Without clairvoyants, how can this State expect to give birth to the great leader? To deprive us of this prospective distinction was a grievous error on the part of the city fathers.

Sees Ghost

Mrs. Besant told the reporters that she saw a ghost in London—saw him very frequently, and conversed freely with him. He seems to have been the shade of an omnibus driver, for Mrs. Besant never saw him except on the upper deck of one of those two storied vehicles which we see pictured with advertisements of baby-food pasted all over them. Still, in this connection it may be safe to suggest that when on earth he conducted a baby farm. But at any rate this ghost had a grievance which he freely confided to Mrs. Besant. It seems that people had a habit of sitting right down on him—or through him, rather. He would be seated comfortably when along would come a fat lady, and without even begging his pardon fairly bury him in draperies and adipose tissues. The lady couldn't be blamed, for the power hadn't been given her to see ghosts; even the suspicion that she was squashing one would have caused her to squeak in affright and tumble headlong off the bus. But what complaint could the ghost logically make? He hadn't paid his fare, for the conductor was as spirit-blind as the fat lady. Now don't imagine that I am quoting Mrs. Besant. These ramblings of the mind are all my own. Mrs. Besant took his ghostship very seriously and commiserated him on his troubles. Some people are lucky. I'd enjoy nothing more than to see the arms and legs of a ghost frantically waving for help from beneath the drapperies and adipose tissues of a fat lady.

TORPEDO BOATS IN THE THAMES

One of the most interesting features of the great naval demonstration in England was the voyage up the Thames past the houses of parliament of Great Britain's fleet of torpedo boats. Millions of people gathered along the Thames to watch the spectacle, which is looked upon as having aroused more enthusiasm for the maintenance of a great navy than any other display of forces.

Saving the Buffalo

While agreeing with the New York Sun in its plea for the propagation of the American buffalo, I must take issue with that paper's statement to the effect that but for the activities of the American Bison Society the buffalo would soon have been extinct in the United States. The Sun is respectfully informed that in Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, there isaconstantly increasing herd of buffalo. There are twenty-three of the beasts there at present. But the work of the American Bison Society is not to be discredited, as it is making a successful effort to increase the number of buffalo in this country. The United States, through its then monarch, Theodore Roosevelt, made a serious mistake when it failed to purchase the Pablo Allard herd of 639 buffalo. The animals were sold to the Canadian government, which paid $200,000 for them, while Congress was ruminating over the purchase. Shortly afterward the American Bison Society was formed, and it offered to provide a sufficient number of animals for breeding purposes if the government would set aside land for a range. More than $10,000 was raised by subscription to purchase buffalo from private owners and Congress appropriated $30,000 with which to acquire and fence the National Bison Range in Montana. Five pairs of bison have been donated to the society and forty more animals will be purchased. With this start, and with a range of 20,000 acres adapted to the animals, the preservation of the bison is assured. Saving the buffalo is not altogether a

TECHAU TAVERN
Cor. Eddy and Powell Sts.
CAFE AND LADIES' GRILL
Rigo and his Gypsy Orchestra
Concerts Daily during Shopping Hours
From 3:30 to 5:00 p. m. and from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m.; 10:30 to 1:00 a. m.
Private Dining Booths and Banquet Rooms on Mezzanine Floor. Entrance—No. 4 Eddy Street.
Under the management of A. C. MORRISSON

matter of sentiment. A Texas rancher has been conducting experiments in breeding buffalo with domestic cattle, and although he has not yet succeeded in producing a hybrid that can be profitably raised, he has made gratifying progress. The hybrid is hardier than the domestic animal, being therefore better able to stand long drives. It has more brains, too, so far as taking care of itself is concerned. For instance, a herd of thirsty domestic cattle will rush into a water hole, tramping it into a mess of mud. The hybrid, under similar circumstances, will do as the buffalo does—stand on the edge of the pool and drink, thus conserving the water. In many other ways does it show its ability to take care of itself under adverse circumstances. Another thing in favor of the hybrid is that it is heavier than the domestic animal, and the meat, which is very delicious, has a larger proportion of choice cuts than is found in beef.

The Ladies — God Bless Them!

Some familiar faces have been missed since Judge Lawlor began rounding up jurors for the second Calhoun trial; among others those of the feminine limelighters of the League of Justice who reminded the mordant Moore of the knitters of the French Revolution; misguided but zealous ladies taken advantage of by the Bokes and the Olders. I am glad the lady reformers have not returned to court to encourage with sullen smiles that betray remorsefulness the men that are trying to send Patrick Calhoun to jail. Even though I were in the most ardent sympathy with those men I should not be gratified at finding the ladies of the League of Justice participating in the melancholy scenes that mark the administration of cold, stern justice when the liberty of a man, a husband and father, is at stake. Conscious though I am that it is the instinct of patriotism that prompted the lady reformers to prop the tottering structure of the prosecution with their presence, nevertheless I felt there was something painfully anomalous in the part which they played. The impulse to which they yielded seemed to me akin to that which prompted the blood-mad ladies of the imperial court in ancient Rome to turn thumbs downward as they sat beneath the purple canopy of the amphitheatre. While it is heartening to know that the women of San Francisco, animated by the highest principles of morality, are intent upon purifying politics and keeping the municipal government clean, it would seem advisable that they should further their beneficial purposes rather by the milder means of moral suasion than by constituting themselves instruments of relentless justice. With womanhood we associate the emotions of compassion, sympathy and pity, and it is as important to keep the sex gentle and sensitive to the tender appeals of humanity as to insure a full house on penitentiary soil. It is well to remember that "every jot of the greatness of man is unfolded out of woman" and that in the keeping of the women of the world are the babes of mankind.

The Professor in Court

The ladies of the League of Justice are not the only personages I am told that have become conspicuous by their absence since the opening of the second Calhoun trial. Among the others is an old gentleman who excited much interest during the first trial. He tottered into court in the train of Special Prosecutor Heney, and when that lawyer left court at recess or adjournment the aged man followed him. He had nothing to say to anybody with the exception of Mr. Heney. Nobody else spoke to him; nobody seemed to care for him. A figure at which Time had been throwing darts not in vain, he maintained, when awake and when Mr. Heney was inert, the impassive attitude of an Egyptian sphinx. A great part of the time he slept. Sometimes he snored, when, perhaps, he had dreams of his lost youth when all his geese were swans and life had something in store for him; but his snoring disturbed nobody; it was so gentle, so soft and unobstructed, so like the sighing of a low wind through a small keyhole. This gentle old man slept

SELF-ASSURANCE

When we say that we have the highest grade, most exclusive Fall TAILORED SUITS and TAILORED COATS for women we do so with an assurance absolutely founded on fact. We know that the Fall goods we show are shown only by the highest grade specialty shops in New York city. We have the confidence that they will be appreciated.

Our $35.00 SUIT SPECIAL, so attractive last Season on account of its exceptional value, will be our leader this Fall. It is a greater value than ever.

The same distinction and exclusiveness will be found in our show of FALL TAILORED HATS. Among the well known models we are carrying are the famous Gage hats, the Phipps hats, the Burgesser hats, the Crofts hats and the Fiske hats.

For an idea of absolutely correct Fall styles see our exceptional window display.

ROOS BROS. Market Street

through the questions of the lawyers of the defense in their examination of the jurors, but at the sound of the hoarse and rasping interrogatory of Heney he awoke and listened with uncontrolable joy. The voice of Heney was as the harmony of Orphic strains to this devotee; his sluggish blood tried to leap in his veins responsive to that harsh snarl; his faltering heart gave an extra throb per minute as the dull portals of his ears received what to him was the concord of the sweetest sounds he had ever heard. This old gentleman, it was said, was Professor Bunnell of the State University, emeritus instructor in Greek. He is also suspected of being the President of the Citizens' League of Justice, but the suspicion cannot be verified. If this sleepy old man is Professor Bunnell he is responsible for Abe Ruef's Greek—somewhat less, it is believed, than that which Ben Johnson ascribed to Shakespeare along with his "small Latin." It was Professor Bunnell who proudly announced at the beginning of the prosecution that he was Ruef's tutor in the classics. He afterwards tried to get Ruef to "confess"; and subsequently made an affidavit about it. For the space of a day-and-a-half the old man was conspicuous in the limelight—a sixth-age actor on the stage of events; the age that shifts into the lean and slippered pataloon, with spectacles on nose and pouch on side, his youthful hose, well saved, a world too wide for his shrunk shank; and his big manly voice, turning again to childish treble, piping and whistling in its sound. But his day was soon ended and other matters began to engross the public mind. Professor Bunnell and his small part in the big drama were forgotten. The old gentleman, however, had acquired the habit. He regarded himself as something in the prosecution and thought it was his duty to attend the Calhoun case to contribute his homage to Heney. So there he sat and listened when his oracle spoke, sleeping the sleep of venerable age when his adored one put on his overcoat. Perhaps the reverend old Greek thought Heney was some sort of Greek god reincarnated. Now that Heney is away, so is Bunnell. The dear old gentleman has left a vague memory which has already become a nucleus for myth and tradition.

Magistrate—The evidence shows that you threw a brick at Casey.

Mrs. Maloney—It shows more thin that, yer Honor; it shows that Oi hit him.

Tait Down Town.

The opening of the Tait-Zinkand cafe on O'Farrell street, opposite the Orpheum, has more than delighted lovers of good things to eat. John Tait has catered to the epicures and the after-theatre crowds of San Francisco for may years, and has made his name a synonym for the best to eat and the best of service. The new cafe is a handsome place, built especially for the proprietors, magnificently appointed, and promises to be the rallying place of all society people. A decided innovation has been established in the shape of a daily automobile and taxicab service between this cafe and the Cliff House, which is also managed by Tait. between the hours of 10 a. m. and 7 p. m., the route being through the Presidio and Golden Gate Park, with stopovers at the Cliff of from one to two hours. Persons wishing to avail themselves of this service may do so by telephoning to the Tait-Zinkand Cafe. The prices will be very moderate, only two dollars each for parties of four or more, including the stopover.

The Perennial Reformer

Regarded aright, without passion,
Despite all thy claims, suffragette!
Of woman reformers Dame Fashion
Is the greatest, as yet.

—Harry Cowell

One Experience of the Satisfactory Results obtained from

BORDEN'S
PIONEER
BRAND EVAPORATED
MILK

(Unsweetened)

and you will always have a supply in your house. Perfectly adaptable to all kinds of cooking.

Rich in Cream and Absolutely Pure

BORDEN'S CONDENSED MILK CO.

Est. 1857 "Leaders of Quality" New York

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

Eureka Stoves and Ranges
Kitchen Utensils
Hotel Kitchen Outfits a Specialty
"Alaska" and "Opal" Refrigerators
Mantels, Grates, Tiles

NOW LOCATED AT 557-563 MARKET ST., opp. Junction Sutter and Sansome Sts.

PHONE DOUGLAS 4640

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy.

Wheat: Heavy receipts of winter wheat and glowing prospects in the spring region maintained a pressure on market the past week, forcing an eight-cent decline with sentiment more bearish at the end than at the beginning of the week. Black rust fear faded away as no new infection developed, and recovery was noted in places where damage was expected. The heavy sown wheat is in harvest, the coming week will find the harvester working over two-thirds of the spring region, and a crop will be gathered second to that of 1898. The wheat has run safely through every danger but a wet harvest, and the reduction in yield by blight, and premature ripening will not exceed 5 per cent. of deterioration. The present outlook is for a crop averaging 14½ bushels over the spring region, equaling 270,000,000, and as good crops are better than expected, the result may be 10,000,000 bushels greater. The government report on Monday will probably show an average yield of 15 bushels, or 420,000,000 bushels. The outlook is now for a combined crop of 700,000,000 bushels, which, with a carry-over of 20,000,000 bushels less than last year, places this country in the same position as a year ago. September wheat is now 2 cents higher, May wheat 2 cents lower. A year ago Europe was a heavy purchaser, but now it is drawing upon Russia's large winter crop. While European demand will probably be as heavy as a year ago, its supplies will come from Russia, and it will not be a large buyer here until the extent of our crops is known. The spring wheat region furnishes the bulk of the export wheat—durum—our winter wheat goes out principally as flour. Canada has a promise of 30,000,000 bushels larger than last year. On the whole the European buyer finds haste unnecessary. Under this condition no important rally of prices need be expected until receipts fall off. There is a disposition to hold for higher prices on the farms, but there has been so much low grade, principally No. 3 wheat in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Kansas, that it is being pressed forward. Grain dealers and millers contracted heavily for new wheat at higher prices, and every decline is forcing some of this for sale, either direct or on hedging. Until the cash houses and consumers show a disposition to load up wheat is a sale on all rallies. Spring shipments will be heavy in the next three weeks and repulse any bull demonstration.

Cotton: Just as the preceding week was rounded out with bulling enthusiasm and advancing prices, so was the past week full of bear raids and rapidly declining values, and as a result all options have depreciated about ninety points of $4.50 per bale, which is only another illustration of the need of speculative support in the South, in the interest of the farmer to combat northern pressure which is always brought to bear in the welfare of the cotton goods manufacturers of New England. Taking advantage of the restrictions placed on speculations, especially in Texas, where the crop has suffered and is still being injured by the drought and high temperatures, traders on the short side of the market made a savage assault upon the small army of bull operators, causing them to retreat in the face of the most bullish instrument that has ever appeared before the public at this period of the year, the lowest July 25th cotton crop condition report on record by three points. Under the circumstances, although legitimate influences should make much higher prices reasonably certain, if the probable supply and demand of the future is to have any consideration at all in the framing of values, it looks as if it will be a hard task to bring about the warranted advance in prices without the assistance of the states that have put the ban on trading in futures. Nevertheless, we have every confidence in the market as we realize that the law of supply and demand will govern in the long run, but wide fluctuations must be expected in a market as speculatively hysterical as the present and we therefore advise buying only on good breaks.

Stocks: Except for a slight hesitation Thursday, due to the unsettled feeling regarding the passage of the tariff bill, the market continued its upward trend and in some instances new high records were made. The buoyant flight to new high records of such stocks as steel, Reading and Atchison and the Harriman stocks was well regarded by the trade and exercised a dominating influence on sentiment toward the entire market. The principal factor in the trade has been the glowing outlook for all crops with the possible exception of cotton and the Government report Monday should be very favorable as it will indicate a crop of all kinds of cereals far above the average. We have now passed the danger period of crop damage and the money situation will become the principal factor, and while there is no immediate fears of tight money it will take a lot of money to move the big crop of all kinds of cereals, and this may tend to give us a little scare later on. On the whole the situation looks very strong and higher prices may be looked for.

HER GLEEFUL EYES

Her gleeful eyes, they charm me, yet
I know she is a born conquette,
  And though their sparkle sends a thrill
  Of pleasure through my being, still
Her falseness is between us set.

She knows love's subtle alphabet
And weaves about my heart a net
  By using, with such cunning skill,
    Her gleeful eyes.

But why this tantalizing fret?
Why this vague feeling of regret?
  Why longer let her presence fill
  My troubled dreams? Enough—I will,
I swear it now—I will forget
    Her gleeful lies.

—The Punster.

"Hasn't she a soft voice?"
"Yes, but you ought to hear the hard things she says."

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487 R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and NewYork

Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

A Warm-tempered Debutante

Mrs. Scott Castle's gunning expedition after W. B. Craig of New York, resulting in the burning of powder within the sacred precincts of the Waldorf-Astoria hotel, still holds the attention of the gossips of local society, where the fair shootee was well known both as Mary Scott and Mrs. Neville Castle. Many stories regarding her social career here are revived. She was decidedly original, witty and clever, displayed not only a hasty temper but an abundant flow of words. One evening, shortly after she made her debut, a prominent and eligible society man called to escort her to a cotillion. Having waited for some time for the charming society girl to make her appearance, he concluded to play a trick on her. As he heard her descending the stairs he slipped behind the portiere, first leaving word with her little

Photo, Scharz

MISS RUTH HALL

The beautiful daughter of Judge Hall of Oakland, and a favorite in society in the transbay city.

sister that he had grown weary of waiting and had gone on to the dance without her. When informed to this effect Miss Scott unloosed a volume of language in which she freely expressed her opinion of the supposed deserter, who was so overwhelmed by this frank exposition of his faults and shortcomings that he darted out of his hiding place and fled the house. The two never spoke afterward.

Caught a Tartar

On another occasion at a card party given by Miss Scott in her own home, one of the guests, a rather rustic appearing young man, aggravated her by making several rather stupid plays. These called forth from the hostess some rather uncomplimentary remarks, all made in French, regarding him. He paid no attention to them; but when he arose to go he thanked his hostess for his evening's entertainment, and in doing so employed the most polished French. Despite his somewhat countrified appearance, he was educated and widely traveled, but had little use for society, and abominated cards. After her becoming Mrs. Neville Castle the former Miss Scott became a society leader at San Jose, forming a cotillion club which broke up in a quarrel. Subsequently the Castles came back to San Francisco, where, apparently, they were very happy, and as a consequence their divorce was something of a surprise. It was thought that the ex-wife still cared greatly for her husband. This idea was dispelled, however, when the auction sale of the contents of her luxuriously appointed California-street

Photo, Genthe

MISS ERNA HERMANN

Who will soon leave for a trip abroad with her mother, Mrs. William Hermann. At present she is in Mill Valley, where she is a leader in social affairs.

flat took place. Her wedding presents went under the hammer along with everything else. Since leaving the stage Mrs. Castle has made a comfortable living through receiving a percentage on high-class trade that she has brought to well-known New York residents who are patronized by wealthy people. The local family connections of Mrs. Castle and Craig, the man in the case, include many people in the local exclusive set—the Thompsons, Taylors, Thorntons, Van Eycks, Robinsons, Crittendens, Cresswells and Salisburys.

Wedded in Presidio Chapel

The little chapel at the Presidio was the scene of a brilliant wedding on the evening of August 4th, when Miss Henrietta Walker, the charming daughter of Mrs.

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

THE BONNET SHOP
Importers of REAL PARISIAN MILLINERY
121 GEARY STREET
Our Specialty, Strictly High Class Tailored Hats at Popular Prices
NOBLE

Etta B. Walker of Los Angeles became the bride of Lieutenant John Stuart Williams, U. S. A. Rev. Edward Morgan officiated, while Lieutenant Eugene Walker gave the bride into the keeping of the groom. Mrs. Eugene Walker was matron of honor, and Captain John B. Murphy, U. S. A., was the best man. The color scheme in the chapel decorations was red, a pretty compliment to the groom who belongs to the artillery branch of the service. Only relatives and a few intimate friends were invited to the informal reception which followed the wedding. Lieutenant Williams and his bride sailed during the week for the Philippines. They were accompanied by Lieutenant Walker and his bride, who were also very recently married. Lieutenant Walker is a brother of Mrs. Williams, while Mrs. Walker is a sister of Lieutenant Williams. Their marriage was a notable society event recently, in the same little Presidio chapel. A large crowd gathered at the dock to wish the newly married four a fair voyage and great happiness.

Mrs. Mackay Knighted

A few days ago Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay was hostess to 200 youngsters comprising the Sunday-School class of Trinity Episcopal Church, New York, entertaining them at a picnic at her summer home, Harbor Hill. She was knighted during the picnic, being made a member of the Knights of King Arthur, an organization to which the boys of the class belong. There was considerable hesitancy about asking Mrs. Mackay to become a member, but when the subject was broached she expressed herself as delighted, and the silver pin which is the emblem of the order was pinned on her by little Wallace Hart Peache, great-grandson of John Hart, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. Mrs. Mackay proved a brilliant entertainer of children, superintending the games, and bestowing the prizes, parasols and baseball sets, on the winners of the races and other contests. Her little daughters, Katherine and Eileen, were enthusiastic competitors in almost every event.

Clings to Goodwin's Name

A London correspondent tells me that many society people in that foggy old town are asking, Who is Mrs. Maxine Goodwin? So accustomed are they to hearing and reading of her as Maxine Elliott that they blinked a little at the unfamiliarity of the Goodwin appellation when it appeared among a list of guests at a dinner given by Lord Winterton and F. E. Smith, two of the younger members of the House of Commons. The beautiful actress was in good company, her fellow guests including the Prime Minister, the Duchess of Marlborough, Dr. Jameson, Lady Downshire, Lady Grove and George Wyndham — mighty names socially and undoubtedly ample compensation to Maxine for the loss of her frisky husband, from whom she was separated because he refused to mix up in London society life. But why she should switch from Elliott to Mrs. Maxine Goodwin, especially since Nat has consoled himself by taking another wife in the person of another actress, Edna Goodrich, is something of a puzzle.

Hackett at Rhea's Tomb

The same writer tells me that when in Paris recently he found the French capital full of Americans. He caught a flying glimpse of Norman Hackett, who went to France especially to visit the tomb of Mlle. Rhea. This tomb, which has just been completed, was put up by American friends of the Belgian actress at the little town of Montmorenci, where she lived and died. Writing further of things quasi-theatrical my correspondent tells me that Gibbs, the little son of the late Robert Mansfield, is at school at Vevey. The great tragedian's widow is at Vevey also, and is devoting herself to the study of Christian science.

Abruzzi May Come

It is reported that the Duke of Abruzzi will be in San Francisco during the Portola Festival in October. At present Abruzzi is exploring the Himalaya Mountains. A letter recently received in Rome from Dr. de Fillippi, a member of the Duke's party, stated that the explorers were having success in locating new peaks among the sky-scraping mountains of India. When the doctor wrote he and several others of the party were 17,330

MISS KATHERINE ELKINS

The daughter of Senator Stephen Elkins. She was engaged to Duke de Abruzzi, whose portrait appears in another column, but the match was broken off for State reasons. There are rumors that the engagement has been renewed.

feet above the sea level on the slope of a mountain as yet unnamed but designated as K 2. It is 26,000 feet high. De Abruzzi had gone forward with three guides and was camping at an altitude of 19,330 feet up. It was the intention of all the party to ascend to the top of the mountain. De Abruzzi is a vigorous, athletic six footer, who is fond of exploring out of the way places. He made one expedition to the Arctic. There is a possibility that he may yet marry Miss Elkins, as the rumor of a renewed or to-be-renewed engagement persists in cropping up.

MRS. J. COUGHLAN CO.
Removed to
101 GEARY ST., Cor. GRANT AVE.
Mezzanine Floor

The Millar System of Beauty Culture
(INC)
MME. ADELE MILLAR, President
Second Floor, Moss Building
GRANT AVE. AND GEARY ST.
Entrance 117 Grant Avenue
Telephones, Douglas 5095 and Home C-1537
Pupils taken for night school. Every branch of Facial Massage, Hair Dressing and Manicuring taught

To Ride With Troop

Miss Genevieve Walker, the attractive grand-daughter of Mrs. Eleanor Martin, will soon leave for a visit to Lieutenant and Mrs. Thurman Harrison Bane, at Camp Sequoia. Apropos of Lieutenant Bane and his charming bride who was Bessie Louise Dichman, it will be pleasant news to their many friends to learn that they have been ordered to the Presidio on September 1st. They have been at Camp Sequoia ever since their marriage. Mrs. Bane is the only lady at the camp; she is a fearless horse-back rider and intends to ride with the troop from Camp Sequoia to the Presidio, a distance of 300 miles. She writes enthusiastically of her weeks spent in camp. As the order to leave San Francisco for the Philippines

DUKE DE ABRUZZI

This Italian explorer, who may be in San Francisco during the Portola Festival, is now in the Himalayas.

does not take effect until November, there will be some gay times at the Presidio for the many friends of Lieutenant and Mrs. Bane, who have not been here since their wedding.

Martin's Sarcasm

Mrs. Francis Carolan's lack of attention at a bridge game is always a source of great annoyance to her friends, and her wild plays often generate wrath which is expressed in cleverly concealed or thinly veiled sarcasm according to the wit of those in the game or to the amount of courage they can conjure up to tell her just what they think of absentmindedness when it costs them several tricks. She was playing with a group of friends on a south bound overland one day and for the tenth time between snatches of the song which she was humming asked blandly, "What is trumps?" Walter Martin exasperated beyond endurance, but with the Martin sangfroid still on the surface replied amiably: "Just hold on a minute, Mrs. Carolan, and we will ask the conductor."

Engagement Rumored

It is confidently rumored that the next engagement to be announced is that of dainty little Marie Churchill who has just returned from her summer vacation spent at Brookdale. She has been such a favorite in army circles and has had so much devoted attention from the service men at the Presidio that it is a distinct disappointment to the army set that after all she has chosen her future husband from civilian life. His home is down the peninsula. He is said to be more than usually well provided with this world's goods and his devotion to pretty Miss Churchill has been such as to place at a discount even the proverbially satisfactory brand of adoration for which army officers are famed the world over.

Society Speculates

Speculation is rife as to whether Miss Dorothy Draper will await the return of her sister Elsa from Paris before announcing her engagement to the young man who has been spending his summer in San Rafael because of the advantages of its proximity to the Draper home at Maraqiuna Park. Miss Dorothy has an attractive personality of a most distinctive type.

Wedding a Surprise

Mr. and Mrs. Adelbert Blackmer (Miss Enid Cunningham), who were married at the Unitarian Church on July 31, will live in a bungalow purchased in Berkeley by the groom, who is in business in this city. The bride's sister, Miss Madge Cunningham, is well known in Berkeley society. This wedding was an extremely quiet one, and was a great surprise to the friends of this young pair. The engagement had existed for some time, but it was understood that the marriage was not to take place for some two years on account of the youth of the contracting pair. The wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. Lathrop. Livinston Baker was best man, and there were no other attendants. The bride, who is very pretty, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Loring Cunningham, and is a niece of Mrs. Lloyd Baldwin, Sr.

Youngsters Anticipate Dance

All the younger members of Burlingame social set are eagerly looking forward to the brilliant ball which Mrs. George Pope will give at her country home Edgecourt, Burlingame, in honor of Miss Ethel Crocker. The guest list includes only those in their early teens. As Mrs. Pope is noted for her lavish hospitality, many delights are in store for the youngsters.

Berkeley Engagement

An engagement of interest in Berkeley is that of Miss Emma Elizabeth Moore, second daughter of Mrs. W. P. Moore, to Ralph Haven Gordon, of Plumas county. The wedding will take place on August 26th. The

TAIT-ZINKAND CAFE
168-178 O'FARRELL STREET
(Opposite the Orpheum)
OPEN FOR BUSINESS
We are prepared to cater for outside Parties, Weddings, Breakfasts, Balls, Luncheons, etc., in the city and bay counties. Menus and prices submitted on request.
TEL. DOUGLAS 560 JOHN TAIT, Manager

I. Magnin & Co.
First Showing of Correct Models
LADIES', MISSES' AND GIRLS' TAILORED SUITS AND COATS FOR AUTUMN, 1909
Moderate Prices European Style and Materials
GRANT AVENUE AND GEARY STREET

groom is in the employ of the Western Pacific Railroad Company, and is stationed at Mohawk, to which place he will take his bride to reside.

A Titled Tiger Hunter

San Franciscans who have the entree in English society had the opportunity last week to welcome Sir Edward Paulet Stracey, who spent a few days at the St. Francis while en route to the Orient. He was not accompanied by his wife, who has a number of friends here who have met her abroad, as his trip to India is mainly for the sport of hunting tigers. He comes of one of the best known families in England, being the seventh baronet in the family since the creation of the baronetcy in 1818. He is the eldest son of the sixth baron, Edward Stracey, and his mother was a daughter of Sir Charles des Voeux. He succeeded his father in 1888, and in 1902 married the eldest daughter of Algernon Sheridan of Hampden Court, Dorchester. At his country home, Rackhealth Park, at Norwich, and at his city home in Manchester Square, his hospitality has been extended on many occasions to visiting Californians among whom he has a number of friends.

OUT-DOOR GYMNASIUM DRILL CASTILLEJA SCHOOL, PALO ALTO

AT LONG BEACH SANITARIUM, LONG BEACH, CAL.

Darrach Society Favorite

Marshall Darrach, the New York clubman, whose love of Shakespeare art and the drama has caused him to devote his life to the study and interpretation of the works of the great bard promises to become as great a fad in society here as he is in the effete east where his recitals during the winter season are exclusive social functions in New York, Boston and Philadelphia. He is a member of the Lambs and the Lotus Clubs in New York and was one of the distinguished guests at the Bohemian Club jinks last week. The San Francisco society contingent at Lake Tahoe have arranged to hear him give "The Merchant of Venice" at the Tavern next Saturday evening and the recital is to be followed by a ball which will mark the height of the season at that resort.

Merry Dancing Party

The James A. Folger home at Woodside was the scene, on Thursday evening, of a merry dancing party, given in honor of Genevieve and Evelyn Cunningham, daughters of Mrs. Folger. These young girls are in their early teens and have not yet made their debut. Mrs. Folger was formerly Clara Lunning, daughter of the late Nicholas Lunning. She married Mr. Cunningham of the firm of Cunningham, Curtis & Welch. After his death some years later she married James A. Folger of Oakland.

Leave for Honolulu

Dr. and Mrs. Benjamin Brodie of Detroit who have been visiting California, left for Honolulu during the week for an indefinite stay. Mrs. Brodie was formerly Miss Ann Tallant, daughter of the late well known banker, D. J. Tallant. Her first husband was Austin C. Tubbs who died several years ago. She married Dr. Brodie last year in Washington, D. C. I am told Mrs. Brodie dislikes Detroit where Dr. Brodie is one of the leading and most prominent physicians, she longs for her old California home and friends and is trying to persuade Dr. Brodie to take up his residence here.

The Tafts at Beverly.

The summer home of President Taft and his family at Beverly, Massachusetts, a correspondent writes me, is

COOK'S TOURS
Are the Best for Independent or Escort Travel
AROUND THE WORLD
Parties leave Westward August 24, September 15, October 5 and 19th; Eastward November 6, December 9 and June 8. Highest class, various routes, best of everything. Seventy Tours to Europe. Tickets everywhere, Traveler's checks, hotel coupons, information. Let us make reservations now for your fall tour. No charge for service.
THOS. COOK & SON
32 POWELL STREET SAN FRANCISCO
Offices at Yokohama, Hongkong, Colombo, Calcutta, Bombay, etc.

"CINCINNATI"
80 Days
$325 to $1775
ORIENT CRUISE
Leave N. Y.
Jan. 29, 1910
20th Annual Cruise. Finest trip of its kind.
20 ports visited. Absolutely first-class throughout.
Join the select California party on this most interesting cruise
Handsomely illustrated pamphlet sent free
HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE
PHONE KEARNY 2946
160 POWELL STREET (NEAR ELLIS ST.) SAN FRANCISCO

one of the most beautiful spots in the country, right on the shores of the Atlantic, near the quaint little village of Beverly. In every direction is a beautiful or picturesque view, and the place is so restful that the President's wife has regained her health, which had been pretty badly shattered by her social duties in Washington. In front of the house that the presidential family occupies is a huge piazza, in one corner of which is a cozy nook sacred to Mrs. Taft. There she has a work table covered with books and magazines. It is here that she spends her forenoons, going over her mail, reading, doing fancy work, or otherwise amusing herself. Her physician does not allow her any social diversion. Several automobiles are in the garage, and in one of these Mrs. Taft makes excursions to Gloucester, Manchester, Ipswich and neighboring villages. The people of the town of Beverly have received the Tafts in a very neighborly and democratic spirit, paying little attention to their comings and goings. However, the fact that the President has rented office rooms on the main street has sent rents and real estate prices booming. The Mayor of the town is a liveryman, and a blacksmith is one of the aldermen. A taxicab company wanted a license to operate in the town during the summer, but these two officials thought that between them they could take care of all the transportation and repair work that was to be done, so the license was not granted.

Dunphy's Troubles

Speaking of his never ending troubles, Jimmie Dunphy, the rich young man who is without a will, save that of his sister Jennie, told a friend that his first marriage, which proved to be no marriage at all, set him going. From that time on, Jimmie confided, he has been drinking straight whiskey, without a chaser. "Do you know," said this careless young man, "that my former near-wife came from a much married family. Why, her grandmother was married five times and had as many divorces, and her mother, who was a nun in Alsace-Lorraine, ran away and was married not once, but four or five times. Can my former wife be blamed?" And the present Mrs. Dunphy (formerly Dodie Valencia) is not going to stand idly by and see her meal ticket disappear—not while Timothy Lyons, her family attorney, is physically able to fight for her. Mrs. Dunphy does not care to go through life with an incompetent husband, even though he is wealthy, so she is vigorously opposing the effort to have her hubby declared incapable. Judge Troutt declared that the young cattleman was incompetent, but that decision did not hinder Dodie from taking the case to the Supreme Court, where her attorneys will endeavor to have Troutt's decision set aside. If Dunphy continues as an incompetent there will, of course, be an end to the marriage, which occurred in Redwood City. It really did occur, Dunphy says. It was sudden to him, and his mind is still hazy about the event. There is another phase of the case of which Dodie takes judicial cognizance, and that is Jimmie's income which is $612.75 every month. Besides this he has another income from the Dunhpy estates of about $10,000 yearly, but he places such implicit confidence in his sister's integrity and judgment that he does not care to receive any part of that income, but prefers to let it accumulate and be used to pay off a mortgage on the Dunphy ranch in Nevada, which amounts to about $180,000. Miss Jennie Dunphy, the sister, is a fond fancier of high class dogs and she is always to be seen at the principal dog shows in the state.

Mrs. Wright Honored

The reception given by the Albert Sidney Johnston Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, on last Saturday at the Lombard-street residence of Mrs. Selden S. Wright, founder of the chapter on this coast, was one of the most brilliant of the season. Greatly to the surprise of Mrs. Wright the Chapter presented her with a magnificent silver bowl and salad service. Mrs. Virginia A. Beede in a graceful manner made the presentation address. A fine musical program was rendered. About one hundred and fifty guests were present.

Visiting New York

Mrs. J. Sheehan, of The Mrs. J. Coughlan Co.'s millinery store, has gone to New York, where she will spend some time selecting stock for the new store, which is now located at 101 Geary street on the mezzanine floor.

NOTING THE FASHIONS

The leading dressmakers of Paris do not display their latest modes in their windows because they would be immediately copied by dressmakers of the humbler class. But when the costumes are worn on the street there is no way to prevent notes being taken on them. This is done both by pencil and camera, as is shown in the illustration.

In the Social Spotlight

Mrs. Clinton E. Worden, who has been spending some time at Lake Tahoe, returned on Saturday, the 7th, to Del Monte, rejoining her mother, Mrs. A. N. Towne, and Mrs. Towne's niece, Miss Bertha Rice. A few days later Mr. Worden reached Del Monte.

D. A. Bender was suddenly taken ill on Saturday last and removed to a sanatorium. At last accounts he was rapidly improving. The Benders recently engaged rooms for the season at Berkeley Inn, having given up their home in town.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Sutro have gone to the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition. They will be gone several weeks.

Judge James Cooper recently was host at a stag party given on the McCloud at the beautiful place of W. F. Whittier, who placed his sporting box at Judge Cooper's disposal.

Mr. and Mrs. Percy A. Hooe, and daughter, of Cincinnati, Ohio, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Raleigh P. Hooe at the Fairmont, and are being extensively entertained.

Mr. and Mrs. Webster Jones and Mrs. M. P. Jones have taken a cottage at Aetna Springs.

Mrs. Cheney, wife of Judge Cheney of Reno, Nevada, is at the Hotel Stewart for a visit of a few weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Calhoun and Mr. and Mrs. Dixwell Hewitt have returned from an auto trip to Lake County. They were guests of the A. B. Hammonds at Clear Lake. The Hammonds are relatives of Theodore Roosevelt.

Mrs. Charles Shields and her niece, Miss Allen, will leave on August 15 for a lengthy tour abroad. Later, Mr. Shields, who is detained here on account of business, will join his wife in Paris.

Mrs. George J. Bucknall will soon leave on a visit to her niece, Mrs. Thurman Harrison Bane, at Sequoia.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Huntington of Pasadena are guests of Mrs. M. A. Huntington in Piedmont. Mrs. Howard Huntington was formerly Miss Leslie Green of Berkeley. A great deal of entertaining is being done in her honor.

At tables strewn with innumerable yellow blossoms over fields of ferns, there were gathered at luncheon in the St. Francis last Saturday, Mrs. Charles Sutro, Miss Mabel Gregory, Miss Helen Sullivan, Mrs. Cowdery, Mrs. McGovern, Mrs. Eugene Hale Douglass, Mrs. Kauffman, Miss Katherine Metcalf, Miss Alice Cowdery, Miss Ina Cowdery, Mrs. Henrica Critcher, Mrs. Ellis and Mrs. Sullivan.

Victor H. Metcalf, whose health has not been of the best recently has returned from the southern part of the state much improved. The Metcalfs are building a handsome new home in Vernon Heights. When finished, it will be one of the handsomest in Oakland.

Mrs. John Kirchen of Tonopah arrived in the city during the week on a visit to her sister, Mrs. Bronte M. Aikins. As usual she will be the motif of much entertaining during her visit. Mr. Kirchen is the manager of the Schwab mines at Tonopah.

Chapman Grant and his sister, Miss Nellie Grant, who are visiting in this city, will be the guests of Mrs. Eleanor Martin at Del Monte for a week during August. Chapman Grant will leave in September to resume his studies at an Eastern college.

Among the recent San Francisco arrivals at The Tavern of Tamalpais were Miss K. Sullivan, C. E. Benedict, Mrs. Ida Benedict, Mrs. Fred Petri, Mr. F. W. Petri, Minnie Warren, Mrs. F. C. Warren, Mr. F. C. Warren, C. M. Jones, Henry H. Taylor, Geo. B. Stevens, Mrs Alexander Russell, Mrs. E. A. Dexler, D. R. White, E. E. Gillon, wife and daughter, Mary E. McIntyre, F. W. Bennett and wife, J. C. Brown, D. W. Burnett.

Mr. and Mrs. Lippman Sachs have returned from their two months' vacation in San Rafael, and are again at the St. Francis.

Mrs. John D. Tallant and her son, Jack, arrived recently from New York. Mrs. Tallant has taken rooms at the Granada and will remain until October. Jack Tallant is a student at Columbia College and has come here for his vacation. He left on Monday for the Bodil mines with Herbert Landers. As young Tallant is taking a course in mining engineering he will be gone several weeks putting his knowledge to practical use.

A delightful hop took place at the Presidio on Monday evening. The date was changed from the 11th in order that the Misses Murray, daughters of Brigadier-General Murray, could attend. They left on Tuesday for Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Charles Huse and her sister, Mrs. Selby Hanna, have gone to Mendocino County on a few weeks' trip. Upon their return they will leave for New York. Mrs. Huse will then go to her home in Chicago. Mrs. Hanna will spend the winter in the East.

A number of prominent society folk from Brooklyn, N. Y., are now at the Fairmont. They are Mrs. George Freifeld, Mrs. Robert, B. Freifeld, Mrs. William Enturstle and Miss Margaret Enturstle. Among the guests from New York City are Endicott Fiske and Ralph L. Schlott, A. L. Schuer, Mrs. Willis E. Peck, Elmer M. Peck, Mrs. A. M. Crosby and Mrs. M. A. del Rio, Dr. Harry R. Decker

Frank Bosqui, the prominent mining man, will soon leave with his wife and family for London. Later, they will take up their residence in South Africa, where Mr. Bosqui has a most important position awaiting him. Mr. Bosqui has written several valuable books upon the cyanide process of mining, on which he is an authority. Mr. Bosqui is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bosqui of Ross Valley. Mrs. Frank Bosqui was formerly Miss Reynolds, member of a well known family here.

Mrs. M. A. Huntington and her daughter, Miss Marian, are spending the summer in Piedmont. Miss Marian is studying the violin, on which she is already proficient.

Mr. Arthur Best, the well known landscape artist, has for the past six weeks been busily engaged in sketching in and around Green Brae, Marin County. He has a number of fine canvases now on view depicting many beautiful nooks of that locality, and also some of larger scope with Mount Tamalpais, in the distance. Mr. Best will be in his studio, 1628 Bush street, on and after August 16th, where he will be glad to see his friends. Best's Art School will open on that date for the coming year's work.

E. B. COURVOISIER

The well known Art Dealer and Frame Maker announces to the public the opening of his new store at 431 Sutter street between Stockton and Powell.

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS

UNION SQUARE

¶ A location that adds convenience to the pleasure of cheerful environment.

¶ A service that relieves hospitality of all burdens.

Under the management of JAMES WOODS

FAIRMONT HOTEL

Affording that atmosphere of dignity, elegance and refinement rarely found outside one's own home

PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

HOTEL VICTORIA

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Manager

N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton

CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL

Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine. Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.

American and European Plan.

THE FORUM CAFE

OAKLAND

Now under the management of

MR. GUSTAV MANN

MAISON DORÉE HOTEL AND RESTAURANT

151-157 ELLIS ST., ABOVE POWELL

Phone Ex. Douglas 1040, Connecting All Departments

The gourmets favorite place to dine;

Also Mercantile Lunch at reasonable rates.

Stage

"Paid in Full"

Eugene Walters' play, "Paid in Full," contains no problem in the sense of sending one from the theatre mentally debating as to what the wife should have done under the circumstances. The outcome is as inevitable as birth and death. It is a simple story of sordid poverty and resultant temptation centering around dwellers in a cheap Harlem flat. A young woman finds herself tied by marriage to an egotistical cad and leaves him when the full measure of his cheap iniquity has been taken. A vicious weakling, the husband cannot even comprehend his own baseness, and it is this which makes but one ending for the drama possible. She cannot kill him—he is not worth the punishment that would follow. It is easy to understand how a certain amount of satisfaction and even pleasure could be derived from killing some people—people with strength enough of character to make the putting them out of the way something of an achievement. But this fellow Joseph Brooks is too contemptible to be worth the risk. The woman loves him at the beginning of the play. He loves and pities himself. Fretting over the miserable inadequacy of his salary, he finally steals from his firm, so that he and his wife may live in a certain degree of luxury. Yet this desire is inspired by his wish to appear successful enough to absolve her from drudgery. It is not that work is aging her that hurts him, but that he is looked on as incompetent. When discovered, he sends her to make terms with his employer, giving her full latitude as to what the price of his liberty shall be. Like Monna Vanna she goes to the sacrifice, not alone for her husband's sake, for she has found what a cur he is, but chiefly for the sake of her family. When the final test comes she rebels, not knowing that the man she is visiting had decided to let the husband escape punishment if she refused to yield. Then she goes back to her husband, who in his delirium of joy is less concerned with the price paid than with the fact that he is not to go to prison. It is then that she blisters him with words that are scorching in their very simplicity and calmness, and leaves him. There are only six people in the play—Captain Williams, the employer; Joseph Brooks, and his wife Emma, her mother and sister, Mrs. Harris and Beth; and Jimmy Smith, a friend of the family. A most appealing character has been drawn in Smith, whose concealed love for Emma and willingness to suffer any sacrifice for her, make him a figure that would be pathetic but for its fine manliness. The captain is not at all admirable. He is fair and just in his way, but his harshness is repellant, and that it should antagonize anyone is resented by him. He carries a chip on his shoulder and is angry when any one accepts the challenge. The mother-in-law is of the rare and abominable kind that the comic papers try to make us look upon as the prevalent type. As to the wife, she is simply the ordinary mate of an ordinary clerk, willing to work for him, glad of his small success—to make her husband happy her first ambition, to be able to hire a servant her second. Sara Perry in the role is not all that one could want, as she plays the part with a certain perfunctoriness and with an irritating drawl. But she comes out well in the scene in the captain's room, especially where he persists in chattering instead of discussing her husband's liberty. As she sits and listens to his stories her face well reflects the terrible emotions that are storming within her. And she rises to a considerable dramatic height in denouncing her husband. As to Louis Morrel, who plays the husband—his work is absolutely satisfying, strong, tense, an absolute photograph of the selfish weakling. He succeeds in making himself thoroughly repellent, his technique is almost above criticism, absolutely so in the last act where he waits his wife's return. He is perfect in his simulated anxiety and impatience and in his swift transitions of mood. Ned Finley as Smith gives a very pleasing characterization, employing great skill in keeping the pathos of his part within bounds, and revealing ability as a comedian of the quiet sort when occasion demands. Charles Riegel as the captain is the weakest member of the cast, although his role gives opportunities for exercise of the highest dramatic abilities. He is a poseur all through, seldom lapsing into anything that approaches naturalness.

—W. J. W.

Phillips Makes Good

"The Squaw Man" will run a second week in the Alcazar, commnecing next Monday evening. In the title part Augustus Phillips, the new leading man, has proved himself to be the sterling actor that the advance announcements predicted. He impersonates a flesh-and-blood character in such a way as to make it an actuality in the mind of his audience. It is a portrayal that places the man who gives it upon a firm footing in the favor of the Alcazar's clientele. But the play is not solely dependent upon the personality and art of the actor who depicts its central figure, for it possesses every element that goes to make greatness. Dealing with an interesting question that obtrudes itself at every point, the plot marches steadily onward with a superior dignity. Each of the four acts is a play in itself, complete in every detail, yet each scene is absolutely dependent upon the others to make the whole structure coherent. The characters are real types—everyday men and women—and the atmosphere is so convincing that the spectators live for the time being in the very heart of aristocratic England and later in the Wyoming cow country. As for the story, it is clean, strong, human and satisfying in its every phase.

Mayall's Farewell

"Old Heidelberg," a drama of German student life, will follow "Three Weeks" at the American Theatre. This is the beautiful story which was adapted from the German for the late Richard Mansfield and it was one of his most successful vehicles. This engagement will be Herschel Mayall's farewell appearance with the American company of players as he goes direct to New York to join Mrs. Fiske as her leading man. In "Old Heidelberg" Mr. Mayall will appear in the role of Karl Heinrich, the hereditary prince. He has played the part before with great success and his familiarity with the situations will serve to assist the preparation of the production materially. Kathie, the winsome barmaid, who loves the prince and who in turn is loved by the heir apparent, will be played by Miss Harriet Worthington. "Old Heidelberg" will be followed by "The Hills of California," a comedy drama by Judson Brusie, author of "Lonesome Town," with Frank Bacon in the leading comedy role. At the conclusion of this engagement which will be for one week the Shuberts will offer the first of their enterprises, "The Witching Hour" with John Mason in the leading role.

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

Farnum Coming

Dustin Farnum supported by no less notable players than May Buckley, McKee Rankin, Maud Hosford, Donald Gallaher, Gordon Johnstone, Richard Pitman, George W. Deyo, John Harrington, Ruth Lloyd, Nora Shelby and Jane Kendrick, will be seen at the Van Ness Theatre commencing Monday, August 23, in the new

SARA PERRY IN "PAID IN FULL"
At the Van Ness Theatre.

play of love and adventure, "Cameo Kirby." The play is by Booth Tarkington and its action takes place in Louisiana in the early thirties. Dustan Farnum appears in the role of a picturesque Mississippi River gambler and it is said that the author has fitted the star with a role that excels even that of "The Virginian." Mr. Farnum's characterization of the Mississippi River gambler of the early 30's has been acclaimed a notable achievement, rich in local color, with quaint, fascinating atmosphere of the South wafting gently through the cane brakes and through the festooned magnolias. "Cameo Kirby" is one of the truest and happiest entertainments of the past decade. The scenic embellishment of the four acts is a revelation in artistic stagecraft. The advance sale of seats opens Thursday.

Increases High Dive.

Florence Spray, the little lady of innumerable costumes and a propensity for diving, who has been delighting New Chutes patrons with her long-distance leaps for the past three weeks, is jealous. Towers, whose ninety-seven foot dives into a flamming tank have held the wondering and thrilled attention of the Chutes patrons for the past ten days, is the object of her discontent. Having nursed her envy for a week Miss Spray has determined to out-dive her rival in point of distance and will this Sunday increase her plunge by fifteen feet with that ultimate end in view. All this week Towers has followed Miss Spray's seventy-foot dive with one measuring ninety-seven feet. Sunday afternoon and night the little lady will leap eighty-five feet and announces that she will gradually increase the distance. As for Towers,

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove. Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgr. Phone Market 500

SECOND AND LAST WEEK BEGINS MONDAY.
Nightly, Including Sunday. Matinees Saturday.
Wagenhals and Kemper Present
The Great Play of Real Life of Today

PAID IN FULL

By Eugene Walter.

VAN NESS STARS—DUSTIN FARNUM, BLANCHE BATES, BILLIE BURKE, FRITZI SCHEFF, GEORGE M. COHAN.

AMERICAN THEATRE Market St., nr. Seventh. Phone Market 381

Phone Market 381 For Good Seats.
Commencing Sunday Matinee, August 15th,
The Americal Players in a Special Elaborate Production of OLD HEIDELBERG

The Famous Play of German Student Life.
Farewell Week of Herschel Mayall.
Next.—Frank Bacon.

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Cor. Sutter and Steiner. Class 'A' Building. Phone West 1400

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.
Monday Evening, August 16th, starts the Second and Last Week of Edwin Milton Royle's Romance of the West,

THE SQUAW MAN

A Most Emphatic Success.
Prices, Nights, 25c to $1.00; Matinees, 25c to 50c. Matinee Saturday and Sunday.
AUGUST 23.—Reappearance of Evelyn Vaughan in the First Stock Production of "The Lion and the Mouse."

NEW ORPHEUM O'Farrell Street, between Stockton and Powell. Phone Douglas 70

Safest and Most Magnificent Theatre in America
Week Beginning This Sunday Afternoon—Matinee Every Day
ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

CURZON SISTERS, The Human Butterflies; WORLD & KINGSTON; WILBUR MACK and NELLA WALKER; HERR J. RUBENS; LA PETITE REVUE; 5—AVOLOS—5; LENA PANTZER; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES. Last Week of the Gifted Young Comedienne, ELEANOR GORDON, and Her Company, Including Joseph Sullivan.

Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE Oakland, Cal. Direction H. W. Bishop

Commencing Monday, August 16th. Every Evening,
Matinees Saturday and Sunday
BISHOP'S PLAYERS, Presenting

CLASSMATES

Entire House 25c and 50c. All Performances.

NEW CHUTES Fillmore, Eddy, Turk and Webster. Open Morning, Afternoon and Night

The Great Diving Duo, TOWERS, Ninety-Seven Feet Into a Flaming Tank.
FLORENCE SPRAY, the Girl with Twenty-Seven Costumes.
TRAINED ELEPHANTS, the Mystifiers of Nature Fakers.
DEMON.
ROYAL BANDA ROMA, Concerts Every Afternoon and Every Night. Song and Dance Artists in the Cafe; Open Air Motion Pictures, a Panoramascope for the Children, and Many Other Free Features.

TAKE THE POPULAR CHUTES JOY JAUNT

he is content to stand upon his present achievement until pressed to protect his laurels. He claims that he can dive 125 feet if the occasion demands. Meanwhile lovers of the highly sensational will undoubtedly take a lively interest in the rivalry. Aside from the diving contest many other diversions will be offered Chutes patrons. The splendid music of Sirignano and his Royal Banda Roma has entertained thousands during the week and two programmes of classical and popular selections promise many treats for those who attend the concerts Sunday afternoon and evening. Scenes from "Trovatore," "Carmen," "Lucia," "Faust" and "La Boheme" will be included in the heavier offerings. Added to these will be a dozen

THE BEAUTIFUL CURZON SISTERS

The human butterflies, who will begin an engagement this Sunday matinee at the Orpheum.

march, waltz and two-step selections. Mme. Ermin Arnolde will be the soloist. Other acts on today's free bill will be those of the Glasscock trained elephants, the songs and dances of the street singers in the cafe; the new panoramascope installed especially for the amusement of the children; the fiery rides of Demon down the chutes and a fresh series of motion pictures projected on an open-air screen at the end of the lake.

DR. MATILDA A. FEELEY

Is now located at 1700 Sutter Street. Diseases of women and children. Hours 2 to 4 and 7 to 8 p. m.

Airy Fairies at the Orpheum

One of the daintiest and most daring of acts will be installed at the Orpheum next week when the Curzon Sisters give their performance. They are two handsome girls who, supporting themselves by their teeth alone, perform beautiful evolutions, first as butterflies and later as filmy-gowned fairies. They have just returned from London. The Daily Telegraph of that city said of them: "As these sprites fly through midair suspended by their teeth waving white draperies under colored lights, the scene is as marvelous and fascinating as any witnessed in this country for a long time." Wilbur Mack and Nella Walker will introduce a lively and diverting novelty called "The Girl and the Pearl" which they aptly style a musical flirtation. Mr. Mack has written many popular songs, including that old favorite, "There's None So Sweet As Sallie," as well as "Mandy I Love You," "I've Been Told," "Just Suppose," which with the assistance of Miss Walker he introduces in his offering. John World and Mindell Kingston will appear in their latest skit, which has proved a great hit wherever it has been given. Mr. World has long been recognized as a versatile singing and dancing comedian, and Miss Kingston's fame as the soubrette with a voice is well known. It isn't what they do, it's the way they do it. Their act is full of hearty laughs, good dancing, travesty and song. Herr J. Rubens, the Munich Academician who will be a unique feature of the new program devotes himself particularly to transparent painting and in a short space of time provides a landscape in all its summer glory which he changes to a winter scene and then a setting sun picture wherein among other things birds sleeping in the branches stand out specially. Dogs, flower arrangements and butterflies are also painted with wonderful artistic affect almost instantaneously. This will be Herr Rubens' first appearance here, he having been imported expressly for a tour of the Orpheum Circuit. Next week will be the last of that delightful comedienne Eleanor Gordon, the Five Avolos, Lena Pantzer and of La Petite Revue. A novelty in the way of Orpheum Motion Pictures will close an entertainment that cannot fail of extraordinary popularity.

In the Limelight

The Theatrical Field Day at the Polo Grounds in New York on July 29, netted over $12,000 for the New York Home for Destitute Crippled Children, of which Mrs. Abraham L. Erlanger is founder and president. Messrs. Cohan and Harris were the directors of this delightful fete of the profession which drew the entire theatrical colony to the baseball park for an afternoon of riotous fun.

A very formidable array of musical attractions will be found included in the booking by Gottlob, Marx and Company for the current season. One of the earliest will be George M. Cohan (himself) and his father, mother and sister in the big production of "A Yankee Prince." Cohan's music play called "The Talk of New York" will be played by Victor Moore and the original New York cast; "The Three Twins" will come here after a notable eastern run and charming Fritzi Scheff will bring her latest production. The spectacular musical work "The Top O' the World" will be offered and much in praise has been heard concerning Joseph Weber's travesty on "The Merry Widow" and "The Devil" which is booked for the Van Ness.

The part of Colonel Moreau in "Cameo Kirby" in which Dustin Farnum comes to the Van Ness on the 23rd, has been alloted to a young California actor, John Harrington. Mr. Harrington was for some time a leading character actor of the celebrated Frawley company, though he is best known for his Petronius in "Quo Vadis" and his Cash Hawkins in "The Squaw Man."

We own and offer any part of
(Subject to sale)
300,000 PRESIDIO & FERRIES R. R. CO.
First Mortgage 5% BONDS

SUTRO & COMPANY
412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO
Particulars on request

Odd Things in the World

The thirty-seventh chapter of Isaiah and the nineteenth chapter of II Kings are alike.

In all Mohammedan countries laundries use a secret mark in order to keep the linen of true believers from contact with that of infidels.

Chinese literature is so extensive that a catalogue of the books in the four imperial libraries, classifying and briefly describing their contents, itself fills two hundred volumes.

The first magazine in America was published in 1741 by Andrew Bradford, a business rival of Benjamin Franklin. It was called the American Magazine and was edited by John Webb. The idea was stolen from Franklin, who, three days later, brought out The General Magazine. Both met early deaths. The American survived two issues and the General six.

A Douglas Fir in Muir Woods National Park, Mt. Tamalpais.

In the country town of Hungerford, in Kirkshire, there is an annual kissing day in April, when the Hocktide festival is celebrated. Certain duly appointed officials hold a court, collect tithes and claim a kiss from every house they have to visit during the ceremony. The two officials are known as the "tutty men" and usually there is keen competition for the honor amongst the eligibles. The custom is hundreds of years old, and as a rule neither husbands nor wives make any objections to the advent of the "tutty men" nor their inevitable demand.

Once every five years the town of Newcastle-on-Tyne holds a celebration called "barge day," when the mayor and corporation go down the river in a fine state barge to claim the rights of the town to certain dues, at an appointed spot. The procession then returns up the river to a certain well-known stone, where the mayor selects any woman he chooses from the crowd assembled and kisses her publicly. Then he makes her a gift of a sovereign, and the "mayoress," to show that there is no ill feeling on her part, also makes a gift of a purse or some appropriate trifle. Not only is it the duty of the mayor to perform this act, but the sheriff also carries out a similar privilege, and likewise makes a gift. The ceremony is supposed to take place every five years, but it rests with the mayor for the time being to decide whether or not it shall be performed. The last time it was carried out was in 1901.

When the Thames town of Maidenhead decides to revive the old ceremony of "beating the bounds," the steward appointed for that purpose is always accompanied by a crowd. These assist him, or imagine they do, when he has to pass over houses or through windows or other obstructions and when the party meets anyone on its peregrinations it proceeds to "bump" him, if a man. If the person met is a lady, she is given her choice of "bumping" or being kissed. The ceremonial is ancient and designed as a sort of indestructible record, it being assumed that the memory of exceptional happenings would fix the place of their occurrence and in case of necessity testimony as to the location of landmarks would be forthcoming.

Passing through the Redwoods on Mt. Tamalpais Railway

In Sweden the railway stations at which meals are served are designated by the symbol of a crossed knife and fork opposite the name of the station.

The Anglo & London Paris National Bank

Of San Francisco

Successor of The London Paris National Bank of San Francisco, The Anglo-California Bank, Limited.

Northeast Cor. Pine and Sansome Sts., San Francisco

Sig. Greenebaum, Pres.; I. Steinhart, Chairman of Finance Committee; H. Fleishhacker, V.-Pres. and Man.; Jos. Friedlander, V.-Pres.; C. F. Hunt, V.-Pres.; R. Altschul, Cashier; A. Hochstein, Asst. Cashier; F. E. Beck, Asst. Cashier.

Capital $4,000,000.00

Surplus and Undivided Profits..... 1,500,000.00

We offer our customers every facility consistent with good banking and invite new accounts.

Beauty and Health

By Mme. Adele Millar, Beauty Specialist, of San Francisco

This is vacation time. I wonder if everyone knows what that means—that you fully understand that a vacation means a rest, or really a rest cure. Now let me ask you. Are you resting your body, your eyes, your hair, your feet, your hands, are you giving yourself rest, and are you taking advantage of rest? For the fortunate ones there probably has been or will be a trip in store out of town to the mountains, or to the seashore, But really the clever girl will know that she can take a rest just as well at home provided that she knows how. To rest you have to relax every muscle, every thought. Close your eyes and let them rest as well as your brain. Complete rest is science, and science really is common sense. To rest the skin from its usual treatment, and powder, do not neglect to guard against freckles, and sunburn, but protect your skin by using good cold cream and lotions every morning before going out. You can make a splendid lotion yourself by using one teaspoonful of tincture of benzoin in one quart of warm water. To rest your eyes use one ounce of witch hazel in one ounce of warm water. Fill your eye cup with this lotion and hold to the eyes or apply with soft cloth or cotton batting. This will also help to prevent wrinkles about the eyes, and wrinkling of the lids. To rest the hair, give it a sun bath, and let the draught blow through it in the wind, air and sun.

For shampoo there is nothing better than the following:

Powdered castile soap	1 teaspoonful
Boiled water	1 pint
Borax	½ teaspoonful

Rinse well and dry thoroughly, brushing well.
The following is a good scalp cleanser and tonic:

Peruvian bark	3 ounces
Quinine	40 drops

Bottle and shake well, and apply every night, using the rotary motion with the finger tips to the scalp.

Questions asked by correspondents will be cheerfully answered. Direct them to Editor of Beauty Department, Town Talk.

THE BISMARK CAFE

A little over a year ago, under the name of the Bismark Cafe & Catering Company, was started one of the finest as well as one of the most original cafes on the Pacific Coast. The proprietors, three young men, had that faith in the future of this city to invest the large amount necessary to equip and start their venture, and the result after the year's business shows that their faith was not misplaced.

"The Bismark" has become known throughout the state as the most attractive place we have to dine, and to entertain our friends. Its central location, in the Pacific Building at Fourth and Market streets, its immense seating capacity of 1800, the magnificent furnishings and the excellent service combine to place it at the head in the catering line.

The Muller brothers, Otto, Charles and Fritz, are all thoroughly conversant with this, the cafe business, and devote their entire attention to making the Bismark a credit to San Francisco. Besides the main dining room there is a "Dutch Grill" with rooms and booths for private parties. Then there is the "College Room" accommodating 70, the famous "Beefsteak Room" (which must be seen to be appreciated) holding 50, and the beautiful "Banquet Room" seating 200 people. Music and entertainers are always furnished when desired.

The cuisine is the best, a well drilled staff renders splendid service to patrons. An orchestra under the leadership of the celebrated Herr Ferdinand Stark plays afternoons and evenings. Altogether one cannot afford to miss a visit to this famous cafe.

The milkman and the grocer
Were walking on the strand.
"I dearly love the water!"
The former chuckled. And
The grocer with a wink averred
He just adored the sand!

—The Office Boy.

EDUCATIONAL

Miss West's School

2457 SCOTT STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Thirty-sixth year opens August 16, 1909. Accredited to University of California, Stanford, Wellesley, Vassar and Smith.

MISS HELEN A. O'CONNELL, PRINCIPAL

Miss Head's School

2538 CHANNING WAY, BERKELEY, CAL.

Boarding and day school for girls, accredited to the University of California, Stanford, Vassar, Smith and Wellesley; 22nd year begins August 9, 1909.

MARY E. WILSON, M. L., PRINCIPAL

St. Matthew's Military School

BURLINGAME, CAL.

Rev. William A. Brewer, A. B., Rector.

THE LYCEUM

2590 PINE STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Prepares for university, the law and medical colleges; seventeenth year; here you can save time and money; excellent teachers; special coaching for any examination. We have prepared hundreds successfully; attend the school where you get the best preparation; day and evening sessions.

San Francisco Business College

CORNER MARKET, EDDY AND POWELL STREETS, SAN FRANCISCO.

Newly equipped in quartered oak. New location in center of business district. In close touch with the great opportunities for well trained young people in the new San Francisco.

Irving Institute School for Girls

147 PRESIDIO AVENUE, SAN FRANCISCO
Residence, 3370 Washington Street

Opens August Second, 1909. Send for Catalogue.

MISS PINKHAM, Principal MISS AMY D. HARRISON, Associate

Boone's University School for Boys

BERKELEY

Commences its twenty-eighth year, Tuesday, August 10th. Accredited to the University of California, Stanford, University of Michigan, Cornell and Pennsylvania.

Apply for Catalogue to

2029 Durant Ave. P. R. BOONE, Principal

The Chandler School For Girls

LOS ALTOS, CALIFORNIA

Beautiful grounds covering six acres in the foothills, three and one-half miles from Stanford University. Outdoor study and classwork. Address

MRS. MARY CHANDLER, Los Altos, California.

Castilleja School

PALO ALTO, CALIFORNIA

Home and Day School for Girls. College preparatory and general courses. Intermediate and primary departments. Domestic Science, Music, Art, Out-of-Door Gymnasium. Pupils admitted to Stanford, University of California, Wellesley, and Smith, without examination. Illustrated Catalogue. Term opens August 30, 1909. Principal, MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B.

California Conservatory of Music

Is now located in its new magnificent building

147 PRESIDIO AVENUE

Between Jackson and Washington Streets

The Watson School

2518 ETNA STREET, BERKELEY, CAL.

Boarding and day school. Offers the best features of public and private school systems. Opens August 18th.

MRS. C. L. WATSON, Principal.

Henry Murger, Bohemian

(Continued from Page 9.)

he undermined his constitution. Candles were at this time his only extravagance. At night he used to light his whole stock of them, laying a sheet of paper before each before he began to compose. Walking to and fro he would write a line—in one form on one sheet, in a different form upon a second, and so on through the five or six, merging them eventually into one completed whole—not a pleasant habit, this, for his luckless companions, who slept, or tried to sleep, as nature bade, from night to morn."

It was during this period that love played a tragic part in Murger's life. After leaving the attorney's office he had studied bookkeeping with an old instructor who had a young and pretty wife. A platonic love affair sprang up between the poet and the woman. At last her husband had to leave Paris because of frauds in which he had been discovered, and the wife fled to Murger for protection. The police were looking for her and so Murger secured a room adjoining the studio of Bisson, the painter. There for two months the pair lived, very happy—at least the boy was, for her affection was not enduring. "There were long Sunday excursions into the pleasant country around Paris, when the trees and the streams and the flowers had new meanings of their own, and the singing birds sweeter melodies. It was a dreamland that comes to most men once, to brighten a few weeks, to bless or curse an after life. Limitless protestations of love, wonderful hopes of a rosy future when fame and glory would justify his choice, were poured hour after hour into her ear by a lover all unconscious of the yawn upon his mistress' face." The affair ended suddenly. Murger came to their tiny home one evening to find a laconic note in which Marie told him that she had gone to live with a relative whose name and address it would be safer to conceal because of the police. He rushed to Bisson's studio, and the artist received him with an embarrassed air. Murger suspected nothing, but a few days later he saw Bisson and Marie walking together. The revelation threw him into a terrible illness which was increased when he escaped from his friends and rushed out into the wintry night. He was taken back to his quarters, and at last removed from there to a hospital.

Early in the spring of 1814, Murger was allowed to leave the hospital, but the doctors told him that he must take care of his health and leave coffee alone. He went back to his companions, who received him joyously, and again took up employment with Tolstoy. But he paid little heed to the doctor's warnings. At about this time the young poet, Noel, was introduced to the circle, and Murger, Lelioux and Noel began a new brotherly intercourse, sharing alike bed and board. Murger would not abandon his old habit of working at night. His companions tried to break him of it by drawing the curtains and lighting the candles, but the Muses were not to be deceived. He disdained prose, and still struggled to express himself in poetry, but not often with success. Totally dependent on their own literary efforts for their daily bread, these three boys lived or starved on credit. They were hungry, but merry, writing their verses and calling maledictions upon the world that refused to recognize their talents. They were the founders of the famous little society known as the "Buveurs d'Eau," the principle of which was art for art's sake. The name came from the fact that each member on his initiation pledged himself in a glass of water. All worldly pleasures were forsworn—except love. The society had a dozen or more members, writers, musicians and artists, and their existence was in the main very miserable. Once in a while fortune smiled upon them, when there was feasting and merriment. For the most part famine and wretchedness were with them. Three members died; the hospital was the constant refuge of the survivors. Yet they kept up their spirits, for youth is hopeful and joyful. They made a resort of the Cafe Momus (celebrated in the book and the opera), which they made unbearable to the older and staider guests through their rioting, and even the garcon, Murger tells us, was "driven to idiocy in the flower of his age." What grieved the proprietor most was that they spent but little, yet wanted all the privileges of the place. One member complained bitterly if the wrappers had been taken off the newspapers before he arrived. This same member forced the cafe to subscribe to the Castor, of which he was the editor, by calling out vociferously, "Waiter, bring me the Castor? What—you don't take the Castor here?" until the regular patrons of the place demanded that so seemingly popular a paper be kept on file. One of the painters brought his easel and summoned models. Another was grieved almost to tears because he could not install his piano.

"For three days I have eaten nothing but dry bread," said Murger in a letter written in 1841. A few months later he wrote: "Carissimo! * * * I swim in a golden sea, an ocean of fifty cent pieces, in a veritable exhibition of kings and queens of all countries and all profiles. I wash my hands in the Pactolus—and with almond soap. I wear gloves of many colors, and frock coats and trousers, ditto, ditto. Mark you, friends, the poets are but vain babblers when they pretend that life is dark and gloomy. Why should they, forsooth, who all day long yell 'miserere nobis' know of life at all? They do not even dream of the existence of the crowd of delights that I am at present tasting. They have never fully understood the joy of hearing a cabman ask for a pour-boire. They know not

YCHTING COMFORTS

FROM THE WIDE DEEP'S PLACID BOSOM COMES A BREATH OF SALT SEA AIR. UNDER CANOPIES ON THE DECKS YACHTING PARTIES OF MERRYMAKERS SEEK REFRESHMENT IN THE JULEP, THE HIGH BALL OR ANY MILD FORM OF STIMULANT.

HUNTER

BALTIMORE

RYE

WILL MAKE THE BEST BECAUSE IT IS A PURE WHISKEY.

HENRY CAMPE & CO., INC.,
Distributors for California and Nevada
San Francisco, Cal.

HOTEL CUMBERLAND

Broadway at 54th Street

NEW YORK

Near 50th St. Subway Station and 53d St. Elevated

Ideal Location,
Near Theatres, Shops, and
Central Park.

New and Fireproof

Strictly First Class in Every Respect

Rates Reasonable
$2.50 with bath, and up.

All Hardwood Floors and
Oriental Rugs.

10 Minutes' Walk to 20 Theatres

Excellent Restaurant Prices Moderate

Send for Booklet

HARRY P. STIMSON,
formerly with Hotel Imperial

R. J. BINGHAM,
formerly with Hotel Woodward

A Particular Store for Particular People

TRADE MARK
Quality
McLean's
Service
1158-1168 SUTTER ST. SAN FRANCISCO

Cakes

Pound Cake.—"Pound for Pound" is the rule in the making of all our Pound Cakes. But in addition, the butter and all the other ingredients must be of the choicest quality. That's why our Pound Cakes are always so sweet and delicious.

Price 75c each.

Special sizes and iced Pound Cakes made to order on short notice.

L. D. McLEAN CO.

IMPORTERS AND GROCERS

PHONE FRANKLIN 2810

1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

Freddy—You are the first and only girl I ever loved.
Ethel—Ah, what lots of fun you have ahead of you.

there is a perfume in Havana cigars, light in costly wax tapers, music in the gracious crackling of too tight a boot and varnished. Ha! Ha! All that I feel, I see, I hear! You, O meager great one, would no longer recognize your fat Fleming. He has vanished into dust and space with his old coat and his battered boots: 'An owl he died, but as a Phoenix rose.'"

This golden shower consisted of 350 francs that Tolstoy had given Murger for a poem written on the Czar. Yet, three days later, Murger wrote of being in hard luck again, writing for a children's paper at two francs a page.

In May of that year he was taken to the hospital, suffering terribly from various troubles brought on by a miserably insufficient diet. All through that year he was in the hospital at frequent intervals, and again in 1842. Then he met Jules Fleury, who afterwards, as Champfleury, was a distinguished novelist, and they cast their meager fortunes together. On a joint income of 70 francs a month and high hopes of more, they hired a room at 300 francs. The record of their life together is one of alternate feasting and starving, of hope and despair treading on each other's heels. In January, 1844, Murger obtained a position on the Journal de Commerce at 50 francs a month, to earn which he had to work eight hours a day, including Sundays. Then his fellow Bohemians, seeing that his health was broken down, subscribed enough out of their slender purses to send him to the country for a time. When he came back he again took up hack work, writing prose for the various publications, and at last fortune began to smile on him to the extent that he was able to make a living. But he cursed his fate that he had to write prose and that his poetry would not sell. Yet some of it was very beautiful, the following, entitled "Memories," being a good example:

Have you forgotten, O Louise,
Our little garden's leafy shrine,
And that long evening 'neath the trees
When your small hand stole into mine?

When both our lips did half beseech
The words that were not spoken yet,
For you and I were all to each:
O, tell me, dear, do you forget?

Have you forgotten, O Marie,
The fountain with its voice sonorous,
The golden light on land and sea,
That flung its mystic mantle o'er us?

The rings we changed when last we swore
We would be faithful till we met?
O, these and many memories more,
O, tell me, dear, do you forget?

Have you forgotten, O, Christine,
Thy rosy boudoir's sweet delights;
The little room that lay between
The earth and sky, the long May nights—

Clear nights when every glittering star
Said 'Sweet, unveil like us and let Your beauty daze us from afar.'
O tell me, dear, do you forget?

Louise is dead, and lack-a-day,
To vice Marie has stretched her hand.
And pale Christine has gone away
To bloom in some sweet southern land!

Louise, Marie, Christine, you seem
All dead and gone to me, all three;
Our love is but a ruined dream
And only to be dreampt by me.

Although Murger had many love affairs after that with the faithless Marie, his first passion influenced his whole later life to a great degree, and he never entirely recovered from his passion for this woman who held him so lightly.

In 1848, the Corsair, of which Murger was editor, published "The Bohemians," written from night to night as the printer demanded copy, depicting the life the author had led, and was leading daily. For this masterpiece he received at that time some seventy dollars. The series attracted no particular attention. Then a bookseller gave Murger about one hundred dollars for the book rights and immediately struck off 70,000 copies. The book made its way slowly for a considerable time. Although Murger received little direct benefit from the work, the merit of it led to profitable work for him on various papers, but he was scarcely adapted to editorial duties. The Figaro relates that when he would come into the office he would yawn uneasily for half an hour, and finally pull out a five franc piece and toss it into the air, saying, "Heads you must write the article—tail, I will do it on Monday or some other day."

Then the book was dramatized. The actors who were to take part in the play predicted a complete fiasco. On the contrary, it was a prodigious success. The book was eagerly sought, and everything that could be written on Bohemianism was eagerly seized upon. The best journals of Paris clamored for work from Murger's pen, and his future was assured. He could have made a comfortable fortune, but he contented himself with writing enough to bring in an income of three to four thousand francs a year.

In August of 1851 Murger met Madame Anais, and they formed an intimate friendship that lasted until his death. In

LIQUEUR

PÈRES CHARTREUX

GREEN AND YELLOW

GREEN AND YELLOW

The original and genuine Chartreuse has always been and still is made by the Carthusian Monks (Pères Chartreux), who, since their expulsion from France, have been located at Tarragona, Spain; and, although the old labels and insignia originated by the Monks have been adjudged by the Federal Courts of this country to be still the exclusive property of the Monks their world-renowned product is nowadays known as "Liqueur Pères Chartreux."

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafes,
Batjer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for United States.

LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST

DIAMONDS AND GEMS

BALDWIN
JEWELRY CO.

1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of BERTHA MARKS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Rose Marks, the Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of BERTHA MARKS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executrix, at the office of C. H. Oatman, room 516 Balboa Building, corner Second and Market streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of BERTHA MARKS, deceased.

ROSE MARKS,
Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of Bertha Marks, deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 7th, 1909.

ARTHUR L. LEVINSKY, Attorney for said Executrix,
Stockton, California.

8-7-5

1855 he gave up his residence in Paris and went to live at Marlotta, near the forest of Fontainebleau. There he farmed and also became a mighty hunter, wearing a sportsman's costume—but never killing anything. It is said that during all one summer he unremittingly hunted a hare that had her abode in a potato field, and the other sportsmen, looking upon her as Murger's quarry, left her alone. But along came a strange hunter, who started to fire upon it. He was prevented by a keeper who told him that it was Murger's hare. "Murger's hare, it is?" said the sportsman. "Then I will leave my card." And taking aim he shot off one of the animal's ears. Still the sport, harmless as it was, entertained Murger immensely, and he spent most of his time on his estate.

In January, 1861, he was seized with what was at first thought to be an attack of gout in one leg, but which developed into an abscess and a blood poisoning. Penniless, he went to Paris and entered a hospital. As soon as news of his affliction circulated he was overwhelmed by the public with delicacies and gifts. He lived but two weeks.

His funeral was a public affair. Three thousand people, bareheaded, and one hundred carriages, followed his body to the grave. The ministers of state and public instruction were represented, as well as the Academy and other learned bodies. And close behind the hearse, arm in arm, walked the three surviving members of the "Buveurs d'Eau." On the following day a subscription to provide him was a costly monument was opened. "Long ago he had asked for bread; now they gave him a stone of the costliest.'

Summer Resort Arrivals

Paraiso Springs: F. Howard, T. L. Tobin, Mr. and Mrs. B. Harter, C. A. Mauser Jr., Sergeant O. Gormon, Miss Teresa Gormon, Harry Pinkham, Herbert Farjeon, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Enright, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Jordan, Master Lawrence Jordan, W. A. Cavanaugh, Mrs. M. Daley, Mrs. M. M. Wilson, C. W. Levy, L. Crocker, Miss M. Mitchell, Mrs. Leo. W. Shea, Miss Anita Shea, Jack Shea, H. M. Glazier, S. H. Platt, Mrs. H. B. Mermann, Helen Alice Mehrmann, May M. Finnegan, Mrs. M. Fleming, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Lynch, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Cutting, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Hagan, Fred Kaemline

Aetna Springs: Mr. and Mrs. Webster Jones, Mrs. M. P. Jones, Miss Merrill Jones Mr. and Mrs. Harry S. Bostwick, Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Hunt, Mrs. H. M. A. Miller, C. A. Miller, Milt. Block, Julius Auerbach, Mrs. B. N. Hannon, Miss May M. Hannon, Mr. and Mrs. M. H. L. Corran, Geo. R. Cellar, Mrs. L. Greenewald and maid, O. W. Greenewald, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Elliott, Miss Bessie Elliott, Mr. and Mrs. Churchill Taylor and sons, Mrs. R. W. Bahls and son, Miss Eleanor Cushing, J. E. Cushing, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. J. Kay and son, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Lindow, E. C. Winship.

Napa Soda Springs: Miss Christine Bilxt, Miss Aurora Hogrelius, Mark Andrews and Wife, Fred J. Butler and Wife, David W. Butler, Martin V. Merle, S. Simpson, Miss Eleanor Wooster, Chas. E. Trower, B. Getz, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Hill, E. L. Nix, Fred B. Evers, Henry Brownley, Chas. Treadway, Mrs. Adolph Meese, Miss Georgina Moynihan, Abe Haines and Wife, Mrs. D. D. Michael, Mrs. A. Rheinstein, Alfred Rheinstein, Mrs. M. Siebenhauser, Miss Amy Siebenhauser, Fred Siebenhauser, J. Dannenbaum, B. F. Darneille and Wife, R. H. Sterling, Miss Von Olando, W. C. Poppyhead, Mrs. B. Getz, Peter Ramsey, J. R. Ramsey, Mrs. Smith and son, Mrs. Nelson and daughter, Philip Duff Jr., J. J. Woodward and Wife, Miss Isabel Chase, P. Calhoun Jr., Janet Moore, Carlton E. Miller.

Hotel Del Monte: San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. N. Poston, Miss Mary Poston, Mrs. M. T. Barnett, Noah W. Gray, Charles Small, Barrett Small, A. M. Rosenbaum, F. F. Muller, Mrs. Fee, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Greer, Miss Neilson, Eldridge Green and chauffeur, Doc. Thomas L. Barrett, Mr. and Mrs. W. V. McDonald, Mrs. Jno. W. McDonald Jr., Miss G. C. O'Toole and chauffeur, Mrs. James Coffin, Miss Natali Coffin, Mrs. C. P. Eells, Mrs. and Mrs. J. C. Johnson, Mrs. J. H. Wallace and child, Geo E. Crothers, Mrs. Henry Hamburger, Mrs. Belle Indey, Miss Jessica Eppstein, D. Hamburger, John B. More, W. M. Giffard, Mr. and Mrs. Elias H. Heynemann, Charles Adams.

IN THE YOSEMITE.

It was in the wild canyon that shows in the right of the above illustration that young Horace Logan disappeared and is supposed to have met his death by falling from a precipice.

Auto Notes

R. A. Brassy, president of the Thomas Motor Car Company of Los Angeles, arrived here Thursday on his way home from Buffalo, N. Y., where he attended the convention of Thomas dealers held the last week of July. At this convention were gathered Thomas representatives from all parts of the United States, who were royally entertained by the Thomas Manufacturers. Besides banquets and daily drives about the city and its vicinity, the entertainment included a trip to Niagara Falls. The 1910 models were demonstrated to the visitors and they had ample opportunity to inspect same. Mr. Brassy, while expressing himself as pleased with all the new models, was especially enthusiastic in regard to the new "M," a 50-horsepower car which will take the place of the 1909 "L." The new Thomas cars are expected to arrive on this coast about the first of September.

"Of all sources of automobile troubles the ignition system is the most prolific and naturally this feature of the motor car construction gets most attention from both manufacturer and buyer," says Chester N. Weaver of the Studebaker Bros. "It is safe to say that in the best car of accepted type seventy-five per cent of the difficulties arise from faulty ignition. Consequently any improvement in this important part of the mechanism is greeted cordially by every motorist who really understands the development of the automobile. In the new Studebaker '30s' and '40s' is found the new electro magnetically operated spark plug, a device which does away with the mechanical parts of the make-and-break without eliminating any of the many advantages of that form of ignition. Before the adoption of this system the Studebaker Company conducted a six-months' test of it on their cars and the results were so eminently gratifying that all their model 'Cs' and 'Ds' are equipped with this system. During the tests one car made more than ten thousand miles without missing a single shot. The advantages of this magnetic spark are, first, absolute reliability; second, great reduction of wear and tear; third, no extra cam shaft and fourth, being a complete system it can be adapted to the motor without special fittings."

The following has been received from Santa Cruz by Calvin C. Eib of the Pioneer Automobile Company: "Just a line to say that we are immensely enjoying a trip in our Chalmers "30." She takes the mountains beautifully, and has passed the "20 Century" mark without adjustment or puncture. The Diamond tires show very little wear. Dr. H. D. Reynard."

...."Midway between San Francisco and Los Angeles there is a beach which at low tide is twenty-one miles long and two city blocks wide, and so hard and smooth that eighteen automobiles can race abreast and hardly leave an imprint of their tires on the damp sand as they speed by," says Halsey W. Smith Jr., the Sacramento agent for the Studebaker cars. "The beach is known as Oceano and lies just south of Port Harford in San Luis Obispo County. It may be reached by the Coast line. A town is fast building there and many Sacramentans are spending their vacations there. But, the place could be used admirably for speed contests of the highest type.

The Pioneer Automobile Company is in receipt of the following telegram dated August 6th: "Thomas won at Algonquin Hill Climb. Fully equipped stock cars won gold medal for fast amateur time, won second place in free for all, defeating every car except special Charwick six, defeated every stock car on both hills, including two Knoxs, two Steamers, Locomobile, two Stoddard-Daytons, six-cylinder National. Second fastest time in field of eighty-five entries. Arthur Greiner, driver, entered as an amateur in all events. E. R. Thomas Motor Co."

The 300-mile track race to be held at Tanforan on September 5th is creating unusual interest in the automobile world, and will undoubtedly prove a great attraction, though it is admitted by many whose opinions cannot be disregarded that a fatal mistake is being made by the California Motor Racing Association, under whose auspices the meet is held, in permitting a classification which eliminates from the contest cars listing under $4000, and already the public is asking why the cheaper cars that have demonstrated their speed and endurance in contests of long distance, should be denied the privileges of competition. In this connection Mr. C. S. Howard, of the Howard Automobile Company, who are distributors for the Buicks on the Pacific Coast, said in an interview: "I have heard much adverse criticism concerning what has been termed a deliberate attempt on the part of some one, who apparently fears the speedy Buick cars, to bar us from the coming 300-mile track race by the old and well known process of elimination. Personally, I cannot but conclude that the responsibility of such action rests with those interested in the high priced cars, for they are only too familiar with the victories which the Buick "40" has this year swept from them in all the big speed and hill climbing contests held in the country. They have too keen a recollection of the grilling Cobe race of 400 miles in which the Buick "40" defeated the greatest cars produced in America and Europe. They are not unmindful of the fact that this phenomenon of speed and power holds the world's track record for every mile from fifty to one hundred. But these facts should not be permitted to influence the promotors of the approaching, or any other contest, it is unfair and unsportsmanlike to say the least. Let us hope that it may be seen in the proper light and that all restrictions except those as to the requirement of stock cars, may be removed, that all who desire may have the opportunity to compete. The public will not tolerate unjust discrimination."

A Domestic Eye Remedy

Compounded by Experienced Physicians. Conforms to Pure Food and Drugs Law. Wins Friends Wherever Used. Ask Druggists for Murine Eye Remedy. Try Murine in Your Eyes. You Will Like Murine. Try it in Baby's Eyes. It Soothes.

THE LASTING QUALITY of a STUDEBAKER automobile is never in doubt. The material that goes into a STUDEBAKER car, plus the way it is made, insures a machine of high quality, perfectly proportioned and easy running.

THE BEST THAT MONEY CAN BUY is always found in a STUDEBAKER.

The Choicest materials.
The finest workmanship
The most approved styles.

IF YOU

appreciate quality and satisfaction in a motor car, you need not look beyond a STUDEBAKER.

Fremont at Mission

Studebaker

Phone Douglas 3000

Chalmers-Detroit "30"

The beginning and the end car.

In the beginning the initial price is slightly higher, in the end the upkeep and after expense is much less.

"Anybody can cut prices but it takes brain to make a better article."
(Elbert Hubbard.)

Buying a good car is only one step in the right direction.

BUT

Buying a good car from the most reliable dealers on the Pacific Coast is your absolute assurance of satisfaction.

The Pioneer Automobile Company is the largest concern west of Chicago giving its undivided attention to the sale of automobiles. Ten years in business assures our stability and perpetuates our guarantees. Our business motto is "Right or Made Right."

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

901 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

Oakland San Francisco Fresno

GIERSBERGER WINES

The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.

THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY

Phone Oakland 2510 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

Letters

A Readable Novel

To the older generation of readers "Poppea of the Post Office," Mabel Osgood Wright's latest contribution to current literature, will suggest in its plot George Elliot's "Silas Marner, the Weaver of Raveloe," but there is small probability that later comers on the scene have ever heard of that work in these days of chewing-gum fiction. The scene is laid in a Connecticut village in the stirring days of the civil war. It is evident that the recent Lincoln centennial was too strong a temptation for the author to resist, so, though the president does not appear in person in the course of the narrative, every opportunity to bring in his name is made use of. The main plot of the story deals with the life of a mysterious waif left at the door of the postmaster of the village late on a stormy winter night. The child, well and comfortably clothed, has no other garments save those she has on, and there are no marks of identification. Around her neck is a gold chain to which is suspended a locket enclosing the miniature of a beautiful young girl, with the inscription, "Poppea, 1850." and the assumption is that the portrait is that of the child's mother. Instead of turning her over to the town authorities, the old man with whom she is left adopts the child and brings her up as his own. Until she is fourteen she has no suspicion of any other condition, and not until she is fully grown does accident reveal her true origin. Meanwhile, one of the wealthiest men in the township, John Angus, whose palatial home overlooks the few acres of the plebian Oliver Gilbert, and who has long nursed a grievance against him because the Gilbert homestead takes a notch out of his principality, persecutes both Gilbert and Poppea in quiet and secret ways, only to have coals of fire heaped on his unworthy head at the last, when the secret is revealed. But more interesting than the obvious romance of Poppea Gilbert is the secondary story, that of the Feltons and their distant cousin, William Esterbrook. It would make a most interesting novel if expanded to its full length, and is so typically New England that it would be at home in no other environment.. The Feltons were the "quality" of the village. They lived in that portion of the settlement known as "Quality Hill," and were to their fellow-townspeople all that it implies. When old Mr. Felton died he left but two daughters, aged respectively twenty and eighteen, but he had virtually adopted a distant relative, twelve years older than the eldest daughter, who was to him as a son, and to the two Misses Felton as a brother. The elder daughter was somewhat sedate, but the younger, "Emmy," was kittenish and sprightly. William Esterbrook might have fallen in love with either of the sisters and married, or either of the Misses Felton might have done likewise had they ever separated and gone their several ways for even a few months, long enough to have acquired a perspective. But when William thought he might propose to Emmy, he likewise thought of what Miss Elizabeth would say, and when Elizabeth might have given some slight indication of her feelings, she thought of Emmy, who, though but two years younger, was the "little sister," and in virtue of her blonde hair, "delicate," so for over forty years they put off really living, growing old and set in their ways, keeping up their traditions and customs, until, at last, they learned, too late, that there are other things worth doing besides crystallizing into an "institution." The story of the Feltons is interwoven with that of Poppea and the Anguses in the usual way of village intercourse between high and low, and the encouragement of undoubted talent in a very pretty girl. "Poppea of the Post Office," while far from profound, is yet a readable romance for the young and youthful. Like the other "Barbara" books, it is from the house of Macmillan.

Vanquished the Conductor

A woman passenger on a trolley car in Brooklyn recently tried to get the conductor's attention just as the car arrived at Borough Hall, which is a large transfer station. Finally succeeding, she called that she wanted a transfer.

"You should have asked for it when you paid your fare," replied the conductor.

"I want a transfer," repeated the woman, evidently not understanding.

"It's too late now. Transfers are given only when the fare is paid," announced the conductor.

"Then stop the car," said the passenger.

The bell rang and the car stopped. When the woman was fairly in the street she turned to the conductor and holding a nickel in her fingers toward him she said: "I have not paid a fare yet," then turned and walked away. The conductor joined in the laugh that followed and remarked, "Guess that's one on me." "Or on the company," added a passenger.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of ROBERT FRANCIS SPEAR, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Mary J. Spear, executrix of the last will and testament of ROBERT FRANCIS SPEAR, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Mary J. Spear at the office of Ira S. Lillick, Esq., No. 524 Kohl Building, on the northeast corner of California Street and Montgomery Street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Robert Francis Spear, deceased.

MARY J. SPEAR,
Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of Robert Francis Spear, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 6, 1909.

IRA S. LILLICK, Attorney for Petitioner,
524 Kohl Building, San Francisco, Cal.

8-14-5

LOW RATES
TO ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC
EXPOSITION
FOR ROUND TRIP TICKETS
FROM

San Francisco	$32.50
Sacramento	32.50
Lathrop	32.50
Stockton	32.50
Tracy	32.50
Suisun	32.50
Davis	32.50
Napa	32.75
Santa Rosa	33.60
Calistoga	33.95

Greatly reduced rates from other points in California. Tickets sold daily May 25 to September 30, and cover two months' trip going and coming via the famous

SHASTA ROUTE
OF THE
SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Stopovers going and coming. Many other routes at slightly higher rates for you to select from.

Write or call on our nearest agent for full details of service, etc., or address

FLOOD BUILDING FOR INFORMATION

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17438, Dept. No. 12.

GEORGE J. MARTIN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of George J. Martin, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue distant thereon one hundred (100) feet northerly from the northerly line of C Street, running thence northerly along said westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue, twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angle westerly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angle southerly, twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angle easterly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue and the point of commencement. Being a part of Outside Land Block No. 379.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that his title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 30th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
German Savings & Loan Society (a Corporation)	530 California Street, San Francisco, Cal.
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17244.

HANNAH EMERY, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Hannah Emery, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Van Ness Avenue, distant eighty (80) feet northerly from the northwesterly corner of Van Ness Avenue, and Turk Street, running thence northerly and along the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches; thence at right angles southerly and parallel with Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles easterly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches to the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue and place of beginning; being a portion of Block Seventy-nine (79) Western Addition;

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By T. C. RYAN, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: NONE.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Esq., Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market St., San Francisco. 7-10-10.

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17318, Dept. No. 4.

KATE E. BOYANTON, sometimes known as KATE E. BOYNTON, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Kate E. Boyanton, sometimes known as Kate E. Boynton, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Eddy Street distant One hundred and twenty (120) feet easterly from the easterly line of Scott Street; running thence easterly along said northerly line of Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet and to the westerly line of Farren Avenue; thence at right angles northerly and along said westerly line of Farren Avenue Seventy-five (75) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet; and thence at right angles southerly Seventy-five (75) feet to the place of beginning. Being a portion of Block No. 431, Western Addition.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that the title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 29th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17750, Dept. No. 5.

EVA NATHAN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of EVA NATHAN, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Jones Street, distant thereon Southerly ninety (90) feet from the Southerly line of Pacific Street, running thence Southerly and along said line of Jones Street forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty seven (137) feet, six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet, six (6) inches to said line of Jones Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of fifty vara lot number Eight Hundred and Sixty-one (861) of the City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit: for judgment establishing and quieting said plaintiff's title to all said real property as the owner thereof in fee simple, and determining all adverse claims thereto, and ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, and for such other and further relief as may be just and proper in the premises, under and pursuant to the provisions of the Act of the Legislature of California entitled, "An Act to provide for the establishment and quieting of title to real property in case of loss and destruction of public records," approved June 16, 1906, and the Act of the said Legislature, amending the same, approved March 6, 1909.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 2nd day of July, A. D. 1909.

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
(Seal) By M. P. BRUTON, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk, a newspaper, on the 17th day of July, A. D. 1909.

DEVOTO & RICHARDSON, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
Foxcroft Building, San Francisco.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco State of California—No. 16627.

ROBERT HECTOR, Jr., Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Robert Hector, Jr., plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest, or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to wit:

Lot number 210 as laid down, delineated and designated on a certain map on file in the office of the recorder of the said City and County of San Francisco, known as "Holiday Map A." Said map was filed in the office of the recorder of the City and County of San Francisco on the 1st day of May 1863.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit, that it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute, that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description, and that plaintiff recover costs herein, and have such other and further relief as may seem meet and proper in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 4th day of June, 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The following persons are said to claim an interest in or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names.	Addresses.
Abraham C. Freeman	3034 Washington St., San Francisco, Cal.
Ellita Gamboni Mazzitelli	San Francisco, Cal.
Frank Shay, Administrator of the estate of William Hale, Deceased,	640 Fairmont avenue, Oakland, California.

Dated, this 4th day of June, 1909.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in San Francisco Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation, on the 19th day of June, 1909.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
45 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. 6-19-10

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No.17271.

WELLS, RUSSELL & COMPANY, (a Corporation), Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest, in or Lien Upon, the Real Property herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Wells, Russell & Company, (a Corporation), plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows

First Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northwesterly line of Natoma Street, formerly Everett Street, distant two hundred (200) feet southwesterly from the intersection of the southwesterly line of Third Street with said line of Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches; thence at a right angle northwesterly eighty (80) feet; thence northeasterly parallel with Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches and thence at a right angle southeasterly eighty (80) feet to the place of beginning; being a portion of the 100 vara Lot No. 34.

Second Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Fourteenth Avenue, distant one hundred and fifty (150) feet westerly from the northwesterly corner of Fourteenth Avenue and P Street; thence westerly along said line of Fourteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet; thence at a right angle northerly two hundred (200) feet to Thirteenth Avenue; thence at a right angle easterly along the south line of Thirteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet, and thence at a right angle southerly two hundred (200) feet to the place of beginning; being a part of the O'Neill and Haley Tract, as per map on file in the Recorder's Office of said City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that its title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover its costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June A, D, 1909. By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attorneys for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 22931, Dept. No. 10.

CATHERINE FRANCIS BERTRAND, Plaintiff,
vs.
BENJAMIN A. BERTRAND, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Benjamin A. Bertrand, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion of said plaintiff; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 11th day of May, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk
(Seal) By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ORNBAUN, FRASER & LYNCH, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
727 Pacific Building, San Francisco, Cal. 6-19-10

CERTIFICATE OF COPARTNERSHIP—No. 338.

Know All Men by These Presents:

That J. C. MONTGOMERY and MARY MAGUIRE do hereby certify and declare that they are partners doing business in the State of California, under the firm name and style of the St. Anthony Hotel Company, with principal place of business in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California; that the purposes for which the copartnership is formed are to provide for entertaining strangers and travelers for compensation, and to this end to acquire property by lease or otherwise to be rented, or to be used for the above purposes, but neither partner hereto shall or will acquire any property by lease or otherwise, for any of the purposes herein stated, without first obtaining from his copartner the consent to do so.

That the names in full of all the members of this copartnership and their places of residence are as follows, to-wit: J. C. Montgomery, 825 Howard Street, San Francisco, California, Mary Maguire, 825 Howard Street, San Francisco, California.

Witness our hands and seals this 12th day of July, 1909.

J. C. MONTGOMERY
MARY MAGUIRE

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
City and County of San Francisco—ss.

On this 12th day of July, 1909, before me, I. L. Jacobi, a Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, residing therein, duly commissioned and sworn, personally appeared J. C. Montgomery and Mary Maguire, known to me to be the persons described in, whose names are subscribed to and who executed the within instrument, and they acknowledged to me that they executed the same.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal in said City and County of San Francisco, State of California, the day and year first hereinabove written.

(Seal) I. L. JACOBI,
Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Endorsed: Filed July 13, 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk. By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys,
Oscar Luning Building, San Francisco, Cal. 7-17-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of JOHN W. FARREN, also known as JOHN W. FARREN, Jr., Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned administratrix of the estate of JOHN W. FARREN, also known as JOHN W. FARREN, Jr., deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said administratrix at the office of her attorney, Neal Power, Esq., Room 545, Mills Building, Northeast corner of Montgomery and Bush Streets, San Francisco, Cal., which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of JOHN W. FARREN, also known as JOHN W. FARREN, Jr., deceased.

MARY A. FARREN,
Administratrix of the Estate of John W. Farren, also known as John W. Farren, Jr., Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, July 31st, 1909.

NEAL POWER, Attorney for Administratrix,
Room 545 Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal. 7-31-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 18016.

MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this Summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

PARCEL NUMBER ONE

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Green Street, distant thereon one hundred and seventeen (117) feet and seven and one-fifth (7 1-5) inches Easterly from the Easterly line of Franklin Street; running thence Easterly and along said Northerly line of Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly and parallel to Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches to the said Northerly line of Green Street and point of commencement.

Being a part of Western Addition Block No. 96.

PARCEL NUMBER TWO

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of "C" Street, distant thereon thirty-two (32) feet and six (6) inches Westerly from the Westerly line of Twenty-fifth (25th) Avenue; running thence Westerly along said Northerly line of "C" Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 356.

PARCEL NUMBER THREE

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of "T" Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the point of beginning.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 1153.

PARCEL NUMBER FOUR

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue, distant two hundred and twenty-five (225) feet Southerly from the Southeasterly corner of "A" Street and Twenty-first Avenue; running thence Southerly along the said Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the place of beginning. The same being a portion of Outside Lands Block Number Three Hundred and Three (303).

PARCEL NUMBER FIVE

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Larkin Street, distant thereon seventy-seven (77) feet and six (6) inches Northerly from the corner formed by the intersection of said Easterly line of Larkin Street with the Northerly line of Union Street, running thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Larkin Street, twenty (20) feet; thence at right angles Easterly sixty (60) feet to the Westerly line of Moore Street; thence at right angles Southerly along said line of Moore Street twenty (20) feet; and thence at right angles Westerly sixty (60) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot No. 1393.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, title, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 26th day of July A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 31st day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., San Francisco, Cal. 7-31-10

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Yards and Planing Mills—6th and Channel Streets

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and

PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

Phone Kearny 3657 Res. Phone West 1784

Dr. A. H. Wright

12 to 4 CHRONICLE BUILDING

HENRY P. TRICOU

NOTARY PUBLIC

508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711

Residence 852 Grove St. Phone Park 1870

The German Savings and Loan Society

(Member of the Associated Savings Bank of S. F.)

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,504,498.68
Deposits June 30, 1908	$36,793,234.04
Total Assets	$39,435,681.38

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

RICHMOND DISTRICT BRANCH, 432 Clement Street, between 5th and 6th Avenues. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. W. C. Heyer, Manager.

There's the Rub.

Judge (to prisoner)—"When your ten years' imprisonment is over, you will have the opportunity of returning to the society of your fellow men. You will doubtless have work offered you."

Prisoner—"That's what is troubling me."

No Relief.

Father—"And so your teacher is dead?"

Sonny—"What's the good of that while the school is still there?"

Truly Celestial.

Young Lady—"This novel is heavenly. I never read one with so many romantic unfortunates and miserable failures in it."

Took Her Flight.

"What! Beatrice gone off? She was considered quite an angel of a wife!"

"Exactly so. But she had at last found out that her wings would act."

His Explanation.

The milkman stood before her, nervously twirling his hat in his hands.

"So," she said, sternly, "you have come at last?"

"Yes, madam. You sent for me, I believe," he replied.

"I wished to tell you that I found a minnow in the milk yesterday morning."

"I am sorry, madam; but if the cows will drink from the brook instead of from the trough, I can not help it."

Meant for Encouragement.

Artist—"Yes, I keep pegging away. Sometimes I get discouraged and say to myself, 'What's the use?'"

Friend—"Don't give up, old man. You can't do worse than you've done, you know."

The Reason.

The following conversation was overheard between two boys, aged seven and five: "Joe, why can't chickens talk?" "Aw, they don't have to. When they wants anything, they just pull their wish-bones and they gets their wish."

Woman Suffrage.

Gladys—"So you've sent Herbert about his business, have you?"

Maybelle—"Yes. But I have since used the—er—recall on him."

A Question.

Uncle Joe—"Yes, Teddy, it is quite possible that there are people in the moon."

Little Teddy—"Well, what becomes of them when there isn't any moon?"

A Pirate.

"What do you think of Miss Calihope's voice?" whispered the tall girl with the mountainous pompadour.

"She sings like a pirate," growled the rude man in the starry vest.

"Like a pirate? Gracious! And what is the resemblance?"

"She's rough on the high C's."

$550.00 Will buy the best 88-note Player on the market

CROWN AND CONCORD PIANOS

10-inch Disc Records, 25 Cents

PETER BACIGALUPI & SONS,

Phonographs and Pianos

941 Market St. Opposite Mason St.

Open Saturday Evenings.

MOVED

Gladding, McBean & Co.

CLAY PRODUCTS

Office

311-317 CROCKER BUILDING

Warehouse

147-151 MINNA STREET

Between New Montgomery and Third

San Francisco, Cal.

H. L. Davis W. D. Fennimore J. W. Davis

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store at 181 Post Street, near Grant Avenue.

A Suggestion.

Mr. Simple—"I see that this here piano-playin' Paderewski has got the rheumatism in his hand so he can't play."

Mrs. Simple—"Then why don't he use one of these mechanical pianos?"

It Sure Ain't.

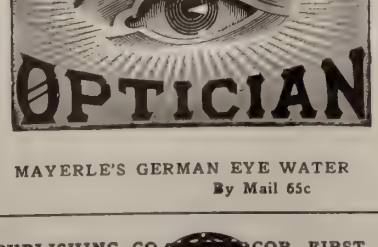
"Money may make the mare go," said Uncle Eben, "but I don't see as it's much of a guaranty agin kickin'."

60 YEARS' EXPERIENCE

PATENTS

TRADE MARKS
DESIGNS
COPYRIGHTS &C.

Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain our opinion free whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. HANDBOOK on Patents sent free. Oldest agency for securing patents.



Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice, without charge, in the Scientific American.

A handsomely illustrated weekly. Largest circulation of any scientific journal. Terms, $3 a year; four months, $1. Sold by all newsdealers.

MUNN & Co. 361 Broadway, New York

Branch Office, 625 F St., Washington, D. C.

MAYERLE'S GERMAN EYE WATER

By Mail 65c

Mayerle's German Eyewater

Highly Recommended for

Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN

Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes, relieves the strain, and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Graduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 960 Market street, opposite Hale's. Phone Franklin 3279.

—You'll ultimately want a Steinway Piano—in the meantime be protected

Every piano purchaser sees the time when they wish they had bought a Steinway.

After the bill has been paid, after the piano has become a fixture in the household, after the years have passed and the volume wanes and the weaknesses begin to show, invariably the purchaser wishes they'd paid a little more and bought a Steinway.

It is inevitable.

It happens every time.

There is no question but that every true lover of piano music ought to have a Steinway just as every exponent of the violin ought to have a genuine Stradivarius.

If a musician cannot have the instrument that best interprets the music that fills his very soul it is indeed a pity.

But many cannot afford such instruments.

Many have to get along with cheaper pianos simply because they haven't the money to buy a Steinway.

They know they'll wish they'd bought a Steinway, but rather than have no piano at all they buy a $200 or $300 instrument as a temporary expedient.

Here is the danger point!

The danger is in where they go to buy this temporary piano.

Do they go to the Steinway dealer or do they go where (when they are ready to discard the cheaper piano for a Steinway) they cannot get a Steinway?

Remember this—you cannot trade an old piano for a new Steinway anywhere in this city except at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s. No one else is allowed to handle new Steinways. If we find that your cheaper piano was purchased of us (within three years of the time you came to trade it in for a Steinway) we allow you every cent you paid on the purchase price. You don't lose a nickel if the cheaper piano originally came from us.

In other words—any one purchasing a piano of us may exchange it for a new Steinway at any time within three years. We simply send out the Steinway whenever you say and take back the other piano, transferring to your credit all you've paid on the cheaper piano over to the new Steinway account.

Our only stipulation is that this cheaper piano must have been bought of us, otherwise we will only do as any other dealer would do—simply allow you what it is worth, irrespective of what it cost you.

So you see the wisdom of purchasing your $200 or $300 piano here. It is simply insurance against a loss that otherwise is bound to come, for you'll want a Steinway some day just as sure as anything.

Sherman Clay & Co.

STEINWAY AND OTHER PIANOS — PLAYER PIANOS OF ALL GRADES

VICTOR TALKING MACHINES

KEARNY AND SUTTER STS., SAN FRANCISCO

FOURTEENTH AND CLAY STS., OAKLAND

Vol. XVII. No. 886. SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 21, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

RICHMOND COAL

IMPORTED SOLELY BY

James and Alex'r Brown

Owners of the Pelaw Main and Richmond Collieries; also Richmond Vale Colliery, Newcastle, N. S. W., Australia

Represented by Wm. Smellie

IF your dealer cannot supply you with genuine Richmond Coal, kindly communicate with us, or Pacific Coast Coal Co., Merchants' Exchange Building. Please note that all other advertisements claiming to sell you Richmond Coal are not authorized by us. They haven't got the goods.

JAMES AND ALEX'R BROWN
334 RUSS BUILDING, MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Sole Wholesale Distributors

PACIFIC COAST COAL CO.

Beale Street Bunkers San Francisco

SUMMER RESORTS

THE VENDOME SAN JOSE

Is the ideal objective point for the motorist. The accommodations are complete and the ride from either side of the bay is delightful. This hotel is unsurpassed in the West for the beauty of its environment and for those qualities which contribute to ease and comfort. H. W. LAKE, Manager.

THE PERRY HOTEL

Madison St. and Boren Ave.
SEATTLE, WASH.

Every Modern Convenience—Absolutely Fire Proof
European Plan, The Highest Grade

Under new management, centrally located and commanding a view of the Olympics, Cascade Mountains, Mount Rainier and Puget Sound.

J. S. McTERNAN, Manager

BYRON
HOT SPRINGS

One of the world's most curative springs, 2½ hours from San Francisco; one of California's best hotels and a delightful place for rest and recreation. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, James Flood Building, any S. P. Agent, or Peck-Judah, 789 Market St., San Francisco, or 553 S. Spring St., Los Angeles, or address manager, Byron Hot Springs, California.

HOTEL WASHINGTON

J. M. LUX, MANAGER

SEATTLE, WASH.

A magnificent modern structure involving over One Million and a Half Dollars. Conducted on Most liberal ideas of Experience. Its appointments and service cannot be excelled in the United States. The management cordially invites your patronage.

HOTEL CUMBERLAND

Broadway at 54th Street

NEW YORK

Near 50th St. Subway Station and 53d St. Elevated

Ideal Location,
Near Theatres, Shops, and
Central Park.

New and Fireproof

Strictly First Class in Every Respect

Rates Reasonable
$2.50 with bath, and up.

All Hardwood Floors and
Oriental Rugs.

10 Minutes' Walk to 20 Theatres

Excellent Restaurant Prices Moderate

Send for Booklet

HARRY P. STIMSON,
formerly with Hotel Imperial

R. J. BINGHAM,
formerly with Hotel Woodward

HOTEL WASHINGTON ANNEX

SEATTLE, WASH.

Best Rooms Best Service

Strictly First-Class

J. H. DAVIS - - - - - Proprietor

YOSEMITE

SENTINEL HOTEL Open the Year Round; Steam Heated; Electric Lighted.

CAMP YOSEMITE Electric Lighted; Opened May 1st; the Largest Hotel-Camp on the Coast.

Under One Management. For Rates, Reservations or other information, address J. B. COOK, Proprietor, Yosemite, Cal.

HOTEL ARGONAUT

Society of California Pioneers Building

FOURTH STREET NEAR MARKET San Francisco CENTRE OF THE CITY

Catering to Family and Commercial Trade

400 Rooms $1.00 per day and up Dining room seats 500 guests

Special 50c Luncheon from 11:30 to 2 p. m.

Weekly and monthly rates on application. Free bus meets all trains and steamers.

Telephone Douglas 3393 EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager

SUMMER RESORTS

Hotel and Grounds

Plan to spend your vacation and your week-end outings at

HOTEL DEL MONTE

during

The Annual Month of Sports---August 15 to September 15th

Annual Dog Show — Annual Golf Tournament
First State Bridge Whist Congress — Annual Tennis Tournament
Opening of Pebble Beach Lodge

Make your plans to be there. Write for rates and reservations to-day to H. R. WARNER, Manager.

WITTER SPRINGS HOTEL

The Automobile Headquarters of Lake County.

The most delightful place to rest and get well. Every comfort; large, airy rooms, with hot and cold water; private baths.

Witter Springs Water Works Wonders

For people afflicted with Stomach, Liver or Kidney Trouble. Absolutely cures Eczema.

Address Peck-Judah Information Bureaus, or reservations can be made at City Office, Westbank Building, 830 Market Street.

NAPA SODA SPRINGS HOTEL

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

California's famous mountain spa, only 50 miles from San Francisco. The nearest watering place and summer resort to the city. 1,000 feet elevation, overlooking 25 miles of beautiful Napa Valley. For terms address Manager Napa Soda Springs Hotel, Napa County, Cal.

Boca Hotel and Annex

TRUCKEE RIVER

Address CHAS. GARRISON, BOCA, CAL.

FALLEN LEAF LODGE

LAKE TAHOE, CAL.

New home-like resort at the head of Fallen Leaf Lake; five miles south of Lake Tahoe. Centrally situated in the grandest part of the Lake Tahoe Scenic Wonderland. Rates $14.00 per week and upward. HARRY WHITCOMB, Manager, Fallen Leaf, Lake Tahoe, Cal.

GILROY HOT SPRINGS

Only four hours from San Francisco; delightful stage ride over the best kept mountain road in California. Unsurpassed table, health-giving waters, telephone, postoffice. Rates $12 to $17.50 a week; baths free. Trains leave Third and Townsend streets at 9 a. m. Direct stage connection. See Peck-Judah, 789 Market street.

W. J. McDONALD, Proprietor.

ROSS McMAHON AWNING AND TENT CO.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

Tents, Awnings, Hammocks, Bags and Covers

Phone Kearny 2030 — 403 BATTERY STREET

The grape cure season at

ÆTNA SPRINGS

will commence on September 9th with a

GRAPE FESTIVAL

a unique celebration, in costume, following the traditions of the annual feasts in the vineyard sections of the various European countries. Write for information to

LEN. D. OWENS, Proprietor,
Aetna Springs, Napa Co., Cal.

PARAISO SPRINGS

MONTEREY CO., CAL.

The most accessible of all resorts; a delightful terminal for an automobile trip. Take 8 a. m. train from Third and Townsend; you arrive at spring 1 p. m. for lunch. Natural hot soda and sulphur plunge and tub baths, 104 to 116 degrees, for rheumatism, malaria and all stomach troubles. Iron and arsenic waters. Altitude 1400 feet. H. H. McGOWAN, Proprietor.

PINE LODGE

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

In the mountains by the sea. Surroundings perfect for rest and recreation. Trout stream, boating, bathing. Home garden of berries and vegetables. New hotel and cottages, modern conveniences. Two miles from Santa Cruz. Rates $9.00 per week and upwards. For particulars address PINE LODGE, Santa Cruz, Cal.

TAKE TAMALPAIS TRIP

and breathe good air.

Half a mile high in two hours' time. No other trip like it.

Via Sausalito Ferry, Foot of Market Street

Montara Inn

At Montara on the Ocean Shore Railroad

A delightful place to rest. 45 minutes from San Francisco. Pure mountain water and fresh dairy products. The best sheltered and widest sandy beach on the coast. No undertow; splendid bathing. Address for accomodations, Manager, Montara Inn, Montara, Calif.

Leading Hotels and Resorts

LONG BEACH SANITARIUM

LONG BEACH, CALIF.

Battle Creek Sanitarium Methods

A splendidly equipped QUIET, REFINED and MODERN medical and surgical Institution BY-THE-SEA, where the sick, run down or work-tired may go and know that they will receive the very best of care and attention at reasonable rates. Gentlemen and Lady Physicians. Graduate nurses only. Climate exceptionally fine. Cool in summer, warm and dry in winter. Descriptive Booklet mailed FREE. W. RAY SIMPSON, Manager.

Long Distance Phones in Every Room

YE ALPINE TAVERN

Beautiful Mountain Resort on Mt. Love

Just a mile above the sea. American plan $3.00 per day, $15 per week. Choice of rooms in hotel or cottages. Spend a vacation 5,000 feet above the sea, among great pines and oaks. For information, D. A. Munger, General Agent, Pacific Electric R. R., Los Angeles, or office.

HOTEL ALEXANDRIA

LOS ANGELES

IN SAFETY, SERVICE
AND SANITATION

HAS TAKEN ITS PLACE
AMONG THE BEST HOTELS

A. C. BILICKE, President
S. J. WHITMORE, Vice-Pres. and Gen. Mgr. JOS. REICHL, Asst. Mgr.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO

CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. Power boats from the Hotel meet passengers from the North on the arrival of the Pacific Coast S. S. Co. steamers. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, 334 S. Spring St., Los Angeles.

THE FORUM CAFE

O A K L A N D

Now under the management of

MR. GUSTAV MANN

THE ANGELUS

LOS ANGELES

One of California's Best Hotels
Centrally located; street cars direct to hotel.

Rates $1.50 per Day Up

MAISON DORÉE

HOTEL AND RESTAURANT

151-157 ELLIS ST., ABOVE POWELL

Phone Ex. Douglas 1040, Connecting All Departments.
THE GOURMETS FAVORITE PLACE TO DINE
Also Mercantile Lunch at reasonable rates.

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

CAMERAS

Kodaks, Developing, Printing, Supplies, Etc.

"Don't take a vacation unless you take pictures as you go along"

462-464 THIRTEENTH STREET, Between Broadway and Washington

SMITH BROS. STATIONERS OAKLAND

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, August 21, 1909. No. 886.

THE SHAH OF PERSIA

This twelve year old lad who has been most unhappy since ascending the peacock throne, attempted suicide a few days ago. He wept bitterly when the time came to leave his mother and go to the Russian Legation to be made the ruler of his country. But when told that tears were unmanly he dried his eyes and was driven alone to Sultanabad, where he was met by the Regent and others, and ceremoniously notified of his high position. The hope was expressed that he would make a good ruler, and he gravely answered, "I will." Ahmed Mirza is his name, and he is the heir-apparent and succeeds Ali Mirza, his elder brother by another mother, who was deposed on July 17. Azad-Ul-Mulk, head of the Kajar tribe, is regent. There is a world of sorrow in this boy's face; a deep seriousness that is the heritage of many generations.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION—One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.
Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.
The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.
For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.
Los Angeles office, 427 South Main Street.
Seattle office, 804 Third Avenue.
We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

The People's Friends

By the reappearance of the Hon. George C. Pardee on the political stage and his espousal once more of the people's cause we are reminded that even in these degenerate days, filled with the lamentations of the Prophets of Evil, there is much to be thankful for, if we but pause and reflect. George C. Pardee is a type of blessing which has been bestowed upon us with a liberal hand. In George C. Pardee the people have a steadfast friend, and he is but one of an innumerable tribe that has consecrated itself to the redemption of the downtrodden masses. What is so rare in the life of the individual, what more to be appreciated, than a true friend? According to Socrates all men have their divers objects of ambition—horses, wealth, honor, etc., but for his own part he would rather have a good friend than all the other blessings of life put together. Now if whatever to the individual is desirable should also be deemed grateful to the multitude, then the people of this country, notwithstanding all the burdens and wrongs from which they suffer, have abundant reason to felicitate themselves; for of friends they have a vast supply. Amid the luminous signs of the times there should be nothing more gratifying than the phenomenon of self-sacrificing devotion to the masses exhibited in the attitude of the Beveridges, the Bryans, the La Follettes, the Pinchots, the Heneys, the Phelans, the Pardees and the E. P. E. Troys. The plain people as we are insistently and vociferously reminded by the Jeremiahs of the tripod, are the victims of grievous injustice, of grinding greed, of inequality of opportunities and other malignant diseases which are due not alone to sublunary misgovernment but to the blindness of Providence. In the circumstances how fortunate are we in the possession of a large and growing tribe of friends! How refreshing to find ourselves attended and counseled in our hours of dejection by lovers and comforters of mankind intent upon striking off the chains that hold us in bondage vile! Emerson was wrong when he said that such friends as we desire are dreams and fables. Such friends are found in every Chautauqua circle. They are as thick as autumn leaves in Vallombrosa. In these unhappy days their passionate love of the dear people blooms as a sun-kissed island in a desert sea. They are the spiritual, as well as the realistic, heroes of the hour, venturing forward into the gulf for our deliverance, making the whole land moan the while with words of wrath and wrong. Were it not for our friends, the ardent gentlemen who are eternally singing misereres over a nation in the grip of Capital, we should never know to what depths we had fallen. So blind are we to our own interests that it is only when our devoted friends come forward and strike the scales from our eyes that we are able to perceive the wrongs which afflict us. It was but the other day that Forester Pinchot and "Pickhandle" Pardee brought dawn to our intellectuals, enabling us to appreciate the significance of Secretary Ballinger's rulings with reference to power sites. Of a sudden we learned that Secretary Ballinger had put himself squarely on record in favor of permitting the development of our national resources by private capital. It has been made clear to us by our affectionate ex-Governor that Secretary Ballinger is a rogue, since it is his purpose to encourage private enterprise and thus render negligible one of the most vital policies of the Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, the greatest living prophet of paternalism and social democracy. "Pickhandle" Pardee is a great and far-seeing statesman, but above all things he is a friend of the people, one that feels the hard-grinding, unequal pressure of social affairs. Out of the abundance of his heart he has spoken, but he cannot sufficiently testify his love and veneration of the "mutable, rank-scented many." The La Follette of the West, his love for the dear people is indestructible. Its holy flame burneth forever. He has no depeer wish than to know that all his fellow-citizens, with the exception of incorrigible dissenters, are happy. It is "his evening song and his morning prayer." He will be a candidate for Governor again.

Puritans Gone Mad

News most encouraging to lovers of personal liberty comes from Alabama, where on Saturday the most drastic anti-liquor law of modern times was passed by the State legislature. By the provisions of this law no liquor can be sold, no advertisement of liquor can appear in any paper or upon any billboard, no car containing liquor can be left upon any track, the word "saloon" cannot be employed in connection with places where drinks of any kind are sold. The possession of an internal revenue license is regarded as prima facie evidence of guilt and calls for a raid regardless of whether there is any liquor on the premises. Even places where there are frequent assemblages may be raided. We repeat that this is most encouraging to lovers of personal liberty, for no better means could be taken to bring tyrannical laws into disrepute than making them as objectionable as possible. Making them ridiculous, as these are, is also a very effective manner of arousing a sense of disgust in the public mind. It would be better if the law could have been made more severe. It might have been made illegal to have had an ancestor who at one time sold liquor. It might have been pronounced unlawful to possess any book or periodical containing the word "whisky." Ridiculous? Hardly more so than the majority of the provisions of the law just passed, and not a whit more tyrannical. Missouri is helping along in the personal liberty work by passing a law which bars the nude in art and provides for a press censorship. No newspaper or periodical may publish scandalous items, even though they be a matter of court record. Hereafter in Missouri the hypocrite who goes wrong need have no fear of accounts of his misdeeds being published to the world. Violation of the seventh commandment will be robbed of most of the terror of consequences through the assurance that the public will have no opportunity to learn of the misdeed. It will be a Godsend to the divorce lawyers. As to the nude in art—that subject has been discussed until it is threadbare. Suffice it to repeat that an outcry against beautiful nude pictures merely reveals the workings of a prurient mind.

A Clamorous Editor

The country editor of the clamorous type is never satisfied unless he is in a ferment over something, and the less he knows of a subject the more he clamors over it. He can be depended to shout for the people whether they are right or wrong. He looks upon all rich men as evil, all corporations as malignant. The faculty of discrimination has not been given to him. It is by reason of these characteristics and attributes that the country editor of the variety mentioned has done California infinite harm. He has been instrumental in advertising our courts as the most corrupt in the world. He has spread the news broadcast that our highest tribunals of justice are conducted in the interests of the wealthy. Following the lead of the Hireling Call and the Boughten Bulletin he has assisted in branding this State and particularly this city as supremely venal. He has shouted for the prosecution without knowing anything of the facts at first hand. He has elevated Francis J. Heney to a pedestal and worshiped him without knowing anything of the real man or the malignant powers he represents. He actually thinks that the Appellate and Supreme Courts decided in the Schmitz case that bribery is no crime—he does not know that the faulty indictment drawn in the district attorney's office was responsible for a mistrial in the Schmitz case, nor that the greatest and most impartial legal minds in the country have upheld the Appellate and Supreme Courts in their decision. The editor of the Stockton Press is of this type, as is revealed in the following extract from one of his editorials:

"The people of the sovereign State of California are plaintiffs in those trials. It was the State that was disgraced by the miscarriage of justice when the Ford jury brought in a verdict of acquittal; it was the State that was disgraced when the Calhoun jury disagreed; again when the Supreme Court turned Schmitz free. The attorney-general of the State ought to have the power to have the Calhoun case transferred to some county in which public sentiment is not so cowardly subservient to 'business' and wealth as it is in San Francisco."

The Real Plaintiffs

The first sentence of the foregoing is largely a misstatement. Technically, the State of California is the plaintiff; in reality Rudolph Spreckels, James D. Phelan and Fremont Older are the plaintiffs. With these three and their cohorts directing the work of a hired district attorney, the State of California has very little to say as to the conduct of the trial of Patrick Calhoun. Time after time these persecutors have set aside the laws of the State that is supposed to be represented. With only one object in view, the ruin of a business rival, they have not stopped even at the ransacking of his private papers under the thin mask of the law as interpreted by a complaisant judge. The State of California indeed! The commonwealth has long ago been forgotten in the malignancy of this personal fight. As to the Ford case, it is in his comment thereon that the editor of the Stockton Press shows his supreme ignorance of law, evidence and facts. As anyone knows who followed the Ford trial closely there was nothing brought out which in even a remote way connected Tirey Ford with the payment of money to supervisors. It is well recognized in San Francisco that the trials of Ford were merely fishing expeditions in which it was hoped to bring out something that could be used against Calhoun. It was only because the people looked upon the repeated trials of this defendant as persecution that he was not brought into court a fourth time. The history of the graft trials in San Francisco is full of incidents of men indicted when there was no hope of conviction. Honest citizens were disgraced for life in order that the backers of the graft might display their power, might perchance discover something that would help out the accomplishment of the object that they had in mind. The Stockton Press and others of that ilk have profited well by the lessons of their teachers, our two subsidized dailies. They have been taught to regard a man as guilty when an accusing finger is pointed at him. They have forgotten that wise beneficent provision of the law that holds every man innocent until he has been proved guilty. And public sentiment is not "cowardly subservient to wealth" in San Francisco. Spreckels and Phelan have been trying for three years to make it subservient to their wealth, but so far they have failed in spite of the oligarchy they have established and the reign of terror they have attempted to maintain.

The Thaw Case

Justice had an inning when Harry K. Thaw was adjudged insane and ordered returned to Matteawan Asylum. This decision will have a tremendous effect in discrediting the farcical procedure of expert testimony, which has grown to be a very great evil seriously hampering the course of justice. It was bad enough that Thaw's insanity should have kept him from the electric chair; that the sort of testimony that saved him should have freed him on the recent hearing from the comparatively slight punishment that was inflicted on him would have been so great a flouting of common sense and justice as to have called for a cry of protest from all over the country. The very weakness of his case was shown when Thaw maintained that he was never medically insane, but that he was legally insane when he killed Stanford White, regaining his balance of mind almost immediately thereafter. It was probably the very preposterousness of this plea that largely militated against him. It is easy to imagine what an avenue of escape the success of this plea would have opened up for criminals who wished to take advantage of the insanity dodge—and who is there that would have neglected it with so well blazed a trail to follow? We would have had legally insane burglars recovering their reason as soon as their loot was secured and sane enough to hold fast to what they had got. We would have had footpads suddenly restored to a normal condition on felling their victims and rifling the pockets thereof. In fact, there would have been no limit to the quibbles and technicalities that would have been possible with the freeing of Thaw as

The Hub.
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

ALL THE GARMENTS THAT WE SHOW ARE MASTERPIECES OF MAKERS WHO ARE PREMIUM WINNERS AT THE EXHIBIT IN NEW YORK. EACH GARMENT STANDS OUT AND SHOWS DISTINCT THOUGHT. OUR FALL AND WINTER CLOTHES ARE THE GRANDEST AND FINEST THAT WE'VE EVER HAD PRODUCED. "MERIT" GAVE US REPUTATION.

This Label Is on the Best Men's Clothes

The Hub
Chas Keilus & Co.
San Francisco.

and Represents the Best Clothes Makers.

"Specializing," as we do in this shop, we put every thought into Men's clothes. We have nothing else here to bother with. This makes us thorough exclusive clothiers. You get more clothes satisfaction buying here than you get at shops that sell everything. Here you get genuine clothes knowledge, where quality always agrees with price. The best dressers trade here, our clothes are right. Just scientific clothes selling and fitting.

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

a precedent. Already we had drifted far in the direction indicated, and this decision of Judge White will go far toward arresting a dangerous tendency.

Spiritual Pocket Rules

Speaking more dogmatically than is the use of Science, some scientist has declared that there is no better way of gauging the spiritual status of a nation than by noting the way in which it treats its weak—its women and children, its paupers and criminals; the inference being that the nation which uses its gigantic strength tenderly, not tyrannically, is in admirable spiritual standing. The pronunciamento is evidently intended to be used, as a rule, when taking our moral measure or, preferably, that of our neighbor. 'Tis a handy rule in this, that, like the patent zig-zag, it works both ways, is easily carried in the mental pocket, and, moreover, might be all that is claimed for it were it not for the fact that spiritual status is not to be estimated nor spiritual life to be led by rule of thumb. To be sure, there is significance in the truth the poetaster sings,

'Twas woe the weak betide
When life was grim and glum,
And gladiators lived and died
By rule of thumb!

and that the exposing of weakling babes exposed more than them is undeniable. The rule is doubtless helpful in determining the spiritual status of the day wherein a husband was privileged to beat his wife upon occasion (what part of the human anatomy that may be one can only conjecture) and domestic life was carried on in no small measure by rule of thumb, or fist, or rod no thicker than a benedict's little finger. Indeed, there are moral suasionists and to spare who hold that the spiritual status of our own day and generation is not incorrectly gauged by marking the prevalence of the belief ("superstition") that all manner of infantile spiritual ailments are to be cured by the laying on of motherly hands. Any rule is obviously a poor one when applied to paupers, so we will make no further application of the patent dogma under discussion, but without more ado express our own conviction that the best possible index of the spiritual status of a nation is the depth of its appreciation of poetry. Now, despite cheap editions, the common people do not know their Burns, and Keats or Shelley in levant at $100 a copy is bound not to be read. So fast does the world move nowadays that poetry written half a century ago doesn't. Already the Victorians, though in print, are out of date, on the shelf, loveless as old maids. Poetry essentially modern and American is not read for the simple reason that it is not written. It is not written for the simple reason that, if it were, it would not be read, that if by any chance it were read it would not be appreciated. Nor is this the view of pessimism alone. A very optimistic though acute critic of our acquaintance holds that poetry needs only to be written to be appreciated—by the writer. A line on our spiritual status ("our" is used uneditorially) may be had by making due inferences from the fact that not a line of poetry is printed in our magazines. For years we tried to convince a fair-minded young friend of ours that the divine afflatus had passed high over his head, leaving his locks unstirred—without success until continuous acceptance of his work by the magazines came to our aid and proved to him beyond all peradventure that he was no poet. He has now settled down into a prominent business man whose versified wares find ready markets at prices such as never yet has poetry commanded. If any further proof that we as a nation have no deep appreciation of poetry is demanded, a superabundance is forthcoming. There is no mistaking the inferences from the popularity of Ella Wheeler Wilcox and James Whitcomb Riley.

Posers for Latter-Day Darwins

Why are they deaf, her Persian cats
With eyes so blue, snow fur so nice?
Her thin-haired dogs, of sorry tooth?
But why does she herself, forsooth!
Being thin-haired, simply dote on rats?
Detest, being thinner-ankled, mice?

—Harry Cowell.

NEAT WORK

The only way the Little Father of Russia can keep his balance
—Sueddeutscher Postillon (Berlin)

THE FIRST VOLUNTEER

—New York American

Aeroplanes and War

Opinion Divided as to the Military Efficiency of Dirigible Balloons and Other Navigators of the Atmosphere—Gilbert K. Chesterton Sets Forth His Views as to the Foolishness of Increasing Armament.

By Robert McTavish

The possibilities and probabilities of the aeroplane and dirigible baloon in war are subjects now agitating England more than any other country, but do not fail to arouse interest and speculation in all quarters. Germany may be said to be really in advance, as Count Zeppelin's dirigible balloon, while it has not made the spectacular success that has attended Bleriot's aeroplane, seems to have demonstrated the greater practicability. France and the United States are trying hard for the supremacy in aeroplanes, and England is away behind, which is just what is agitating that country. Visions of aeroplanes coming across the North Sea and the English Channel are keeping the nervous awake of nights. England's lack of forehandedness in the navigation of the air has called forth some bitter paragraphs from H. G. Wells, the scientist and novelist, who says:

"What does Bleriot's achievement mean to us? It means first and foremost that the world cannot wait for the English.

"It is not the first warning we have had. It has been raining warnings upon us—never was a slacking, dull people so liberally served with warnings of what was in store for them. But this event—this foreigner invented, foreigner built, foreigner steered thing, taking our silver streak as a bird soars across a rivulet—puts the case dramatically.

"We have fallen behind in the quality of our manhood. In the men of means and leisure in this island there was neither enterprise enough, imagination enough, knowledge nor skill enough to lead in this matter. I do not see how one can go into the history of this development and arrive at any other conclusion.

"The French and Americans can laugh at our aeroplanes, the Germans are ten years ahead of our poor navigables. We are displayed a soft, rather backward people. Either we are a people essentially and incurably inferior or there is something wrong in our training, something benumbing in our atmosphere and circumstances.

"That is the first and gravest intimation in M. Bleriot's feat."

The availability of airships of any type as war machines is a matter of much argument, various opinions being advanced, the balance being against them as military adjuncts. They are thought to be too unreliable, too risky, too apt to be disabled by the enemy's bullets. The New York Sun in discussing them says in part:

"The conquest of the air by Count Zeppelin and the achievements of the aeroplanes appeal irresistibly to nimble imaginations, but conservative military men are not ready to see the waging of war in the lurid colors that dazzle the sight of the dreamers of nightmares. We undertake to say that the aeroplane affrights no war department, although its availability for scouting purposes under somewhat limited conditions is generally recognized. The aeroplane is not navigable in the darkness—it is a swallow, not a bat; the rude elements despoil it and dismantle it, and if it is capable of flights at an altitude beyond the rifleman's range, which may be doubted, no pilot has yet taken the risk, or cares to. Mr. Glenn H. Curtiss, a leading authority on the subject, explains—and every man who owns a motor boat can understand him—that 'in higher altitudes there is always fear that the carbureter may go wrong, causing an imperfect mixture in the proper combination of air and gas, and this may result in such a diminution of speed as to cause the machine to fall.' This difficulty may eventually be eliminated, but the structure of the aeroplane manifestly beclouds the hope that it can be used for aggressive warfare on a destructive and determinative scale.

"But the mammoth dirigible ship of the air, such as that with which Count Zeppelin has electrified the world, is not to be dismissed as an engine of war with so much confidence. Its pretensions to destructive powers must be acknowledged, but we are yet to hear from a military specialist who believes that with any possible equipment of rapid fire guns and explosives it would be more fatal to squadrons in the field than the same guns and explosives are on the firm earth. The presumption is that the aerial battleship beyond gun range would fail to annihilate any considerable body of troops deployed in open order, which would be the order adopted in the presence of an aerial battleship. Could a fleet of such vessels repeat the slaughter of Mukden? We venture to doubt it. As to the destruction of seagoing fleets by aerial engines of war plying at a great altitude, we are almost of a mind to scoff at the idea.

"With the advent of the light and effective (but imperfect) motor transferred from the automobile, and no doubt improved upon, wonderful progress has been made in aeronautics within a few years, but let us keep our wits about us and not get hysterical concerning the use of airships in the business of killing men to settle international quarrels."

The cynical doubt that pervades the foregoing is a counterpart of the dubiety that prevailed regarding the use of steam, the telegraph, the telephone and the wireless. It does not seem that it would be necessary for an aeroplane or a dirigible airship to carry an armament of big guns. Dynamite or any other explosive dropped from a moderate height among bodies of men would cause destruction that would be ample to spread terror through an army or the inhabitants of a city. Imagine great explosives dropped upon our city from a height of a thousand feet or so by a bird-like machine sailing over us at the rate of forty miles an hour. No marksman could be true enough of aim to puncture her sails. On the other hand, a mathematical calculation of speed and distance on the part of the people navigating the aerial monster would enable them to come close enough to a given spot to cause terrifying destruction. A few bombs dropped anywhere within a half mile radius of Third and Market streets would be thoroughly effective in creating destruction and panic. These are not airy fancies either. The dirigible balloon can carry several hundred pounds. The aeroplane is increasing its carrying capacity—and explosives by the ton are not needed for the shattering of buildings and the killing of human beings. As to the risk the aviators run, that would be merely part of the game of war. When Hobson was sent to sink a ship at the entrance to the harbor of Santiago men begged to be allowed to go with him to what seemed a certain death. And what hero could wish a more spectacular ending than to shoot toward the earth in a cripple-winged aeroplane or a punctured dirigible?

The advocates of world-wide peace see in the airships the forerunner of disarmament, claiming that their activities and destructive power will make war so hideous that people will rebel against it.

We own and offer any part of
(Subject to sale)
300,000 PRESIDIO & FERRIES R. R. CO.
First Mortgage 5% BONDS

SUTRO & COMPANY
412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO
Particulars on request

A View and a Review

By Harry Cowell

Albeit a prattler myself, when tempted of the—editor to record my individual opinion of Ambrose Bierce and his book, "The Shadow on the Dial and Other Essays," I find me, for lack of the word, without a word to say. My pen held readily in one hand is as unlike the tongue of that ready speaker, W. J. Bryan, as anything well could be. In the first place, our author's word for it, the one-time, nay, the many-times, "Presidential peril" can not hold his tongue with both hands. In the second place, when writing of Bierce, I for one am not minded to write in such a way as to appear to him to be doing something next door to "waving the red flag in the cave of the winds and tormenting the circumjacence with a brandish of abundant hands."

My pen, though that of a prattler, thus accountably dumb, I none the less write on, because in two Americas I know of but one prose pen worthy to write of Ambrose Bierce at his best, and that is the pen that wrote "The Shadow on the Dial," and other the like inimitable essays. For my part, 'twould content me could I borrow it just long enough to tell him and the world, simply, sincerely, and incisively, how much I admire him, man and artist alike—the man of the autobiography inevitably written between the lines by every writer of the personal essay.

The essay, I've been told—a little pedantically, it seems to me—is a discourse, usually brief, upon a special subject, in studied prose, aiming primarily at instruction. Now, in Ambrose Bierce's indefinable essays are not only instruction for men and its equivalent for women, but also entertainment for the gods and the near-gods upon whom wit is not wasted.

Take, for example, his "A Dissertation on Dogs." To a turn Mr. Bierce roasts the dog, and if than that there be any more delectable tit-bit in all the cookery civilized man cannot live without, it is Lamb's Roast Pig. For all the inimitable twist to the pig-tale, the dog is hard on its trotters. Lamb's dish, it may be, is the tenderer of the two, but, on the other hand, Bierce's is the more spicy. To my taste ambo's excellent Latin.

Speaking in behalf of the people, our satirist accuses the "destable quadruped" in question of knowing "more ways to be unmentionable than can be suppressed in seven languages," and any man who would deny to any self-respecting dog so accused the right to take himself—I mean itself—off deserves to be brought to the notice of the Society for the Suppression of Cruelty to Animals, though I would myself deny the dog the right to raise a—leg in his own behalf and in contempt of court.

Although never straining at the gnat of originality while swallowing the conventional camel, Mr. Bierce is nothing if not original, and, my word for it, he is not nothing. What he has to say is as nearly new as anything said beneath the sun. The charm of variety he knows and we who read him know. On one page we have his civilized defense of the cannibal. Then, undeterred by the hobgoblin of little minds, he turns over a new leaf and savagely attacks the dog. Small blame to him! the difference between the cannibal and the dog being this: that the former eats his "mostly dead" enemy, whereas the latter eats his mostly live friend.

Brother to Aristophanes and Heine, Ambrose Bierce's native wit puts him above the paradox that is but a platitude in disguise and immeasurably above the beasts that write it and perish. Much as he dislikes the dog, he must needs himself unwittingly expose a canine tooth at sight of the literary mountebanks who deal in cheap inversions, writing as if standing upon their heads and so viewing the world upside down, and giving the impression that they think with their feet and that they are long-headed, level-headed and broad-minded men by their wearing of No. 10 E's. Is is not plain to be seen as the "nose on an elephant's face" that when such heels-over-head wits are called on of the critic to defend their undignified position, they haven't a leg to stand on? With all due respect to Anatole France, I hold that the Temple of the Muses is no place for literary mountebanks; yet, did they but turn their somersaults in the spirit of the juggler of Notre Dame before the Lady Herself, and, lacking other miracle, my own maculate hands would wipe the sweat from their brows.

Persons who will not take the trouble to read Bierce go miles out of their way to complain bitterly of his bitterness, and that despite the proverbial sweetness of satire from the day of Horatius Flaccus even unto this. (Parenthetically let me say that myself do not take any trouble to read Bierce—in fact quite the contrary.) That the following characteristically Biercean passage is sweet as a bee's sting I am not prepared to admit but to avow. Speaking of the eulogists of dead members of Congress, distinguished from the living by a golden silence, he says: "Their efforts in the way of eulogium illustrate and illuminate Pascal's obscure saying that poetry is a particular sadness. If not sad themselves, they are at least the cause of sadness in others, for no sooner do they take to their legs to remind us that life is fleeting, and to make us glad that it is, than they burst into bloom as poets all!" The poetry, he comments, is commonly not the eulogist's own, "when it violates every law of sense, fitness, metre, rhyme and taste, it is." At that, there is doubtless more poetry than truth in a eulogy which "expresses in a general way the eulogist's notion of what he would like to have somebody say of himself when he is by death elected to the Lower House."

Bierce, the man, I know not, to my sorrow, but I have read somewhere between the lines that his love of laughter matches his hatred of folly and saves his execration of crime from taking itself too seriously—and off. Bierce, the artist, to make the usual invidious distinction without a difference, I have known, to my joy, ever since one blessed Sabbath morn many years ago when a rare-voiced newsboy woke me to a realization of the fact that in California was one man strong enough to overcome the natural prejudice of the editor of a popular newspaper against thought expressed in impeccable thought-provoking English. More than one literary love have I married and divorced since that springtime when I used to think of Monday as so many days distant from "Prattle," and of Tuesday as one day less; but to the hand that feeds me on occasion with roast dog have I ever been faithful.

Gentleman of the old school, scholar, mettlesome throughbred that Bierce is, I am not surprised to find him restive under the beneficent rule of the majority, which is a tyranny of lack of thought tempered by assassination of the English language. That he should regard murder of the Mother Tongue he reveres as matricide and appoint himself executioner of the murderer or murderess, has never been to me a "matter of just wonder," nor so much as just a matter of wonder.

That unfeigned joy in poetry such as Keats wrote is indicative of inborn culture I hold with both hands; like-

(Continued on Page 34.)

TAXICABS

(Genuine RENAULT Cars)

PACIFIC TAXIMETER CAB COMPANY

Solicits your patronage of its equipment of imported Renault Taxicabs and will show its appreciation by prompt and reliable service. * * * * *

TELEPHONE

FRANKLIN 4848

Private Exchange connecting all Departments

MAIN STATION AND GENERAL OFFICES, 1355-1363 BUSH STREET

FAY C. BEAL, General Manager.

The Fortune Teller

By Pedro De Alarcon (From the Spanish)

I don't know just what day of August it was in the year 1816 when a ragged, disreputable looking tramp, evidently a gypsy, walked up to the door of the palace of the Captain-General of Granada and demanded to see his excellency. The sentinel lowered his bayonet and the soldiers who stood about laughed uproariously. The man had just dismounted from a dun-colored donkey that looked like a skeleton. He claimed that his name, or nickname, was Heredia.

Someone told his excellency, Don Eugenio Portocarrero, Count de Montijo, that the tramp wished to see him. He had heard of him before and knew him to be a jolly fellow and a teller of good stories, and there was no man fonder of a joke than the captain-general himself, so he gave orders that the gypsy should be allowed to enter.

Heredia entered the office by taking two steps forward and one backward, and then fell upon his knees and exclaimed:

"Blessed be the Mother of God and blessings upon your excellency, who is the best governor of a good part of the world!"

"Get up! Stop your nonsense and tell me what you came here for," said the count curtly.

"Senor," answered the gypsy, very seriously, "I came here to get the hundred gold dollars."

"What hundred gold dollars?"

"The reward you offered a few days ago to any man who would give you a description of the famous Parron."

"You have known him?"

"No, sir."

"Well, then?"

"I know him now."

"How is that possible?"

"Very simple, your excellency. I sought him out, found him, saw him, have his description, and would ask you to pay me the reward."

"Are you really sure that you have seen him?" asked the captain-general, who seemed to be very much interested in the gypsy's statement.

The tramp laughed. "You think I desire to deceive you. May God curse me if I lie! Only yesterday I saw Parron."

"But, man, do you understand the importance of what you are saying? Do you know that we have followed this man for three years—this monster, this devil? That no one knows him or has ever been able to see him? Do you know that every day he murders travelers in the mountains, on the principle that the dead cannot testify against him, and that this is the only reason why we have never been able to arrest him? Do you not know that to meet Parron is to encounter death?"

The gypsy laughed again. "Does not your excellency know that a gypsy can do what no one else can? Did you ever hear of a fox as shrewd and keen as one of our tribe? I repeat, senor, that not only have I seen Parron, but have talked with him."

"In God's name, where?"

"On the road to Tozar."

"Prove it to me."

"Listen: A week ago I and my donkey, or let us say, my donkey and I, were captured by highwaymen. They tied my hands and led me through a maze of canyons in the mountains until I came to their camp. I had a horrible suspicion that I had fallen into the hands of Parron, and in that case I knew I would surely be killed, for I remembered that this man would never allow anyone to escape who had ever seen him. While I was indulging in these sad reflections, a tall man, elegantly dressed, suddenly appeared before me, and exclaimed:

"'Old fellow, I am Parron!' Down I went, flat on my back, as if I had been shot, and the bandit roared with laughter. I struggled to my knees and began in a pleading voice: 'Blessed be you, king of men! I would have recognized you anywhere had you not spoken your name. What mother could have given birth to such a royal son? Permit me to embrace you, to kiss your hand, and, by the way, let me see your hand, and I will tell your fortune. I am the kind of man you want to meet. Do you want me to teach you how to trade dead donkeys for live ones? To exchange worn-out horses for prancing steeds? I can teach a mule how to talk French.'"

The Count de Montijo could not refrain from laughter.

"And what did Parron say to all that? What did he do?"

"Just what your excellency is doing—he roared."

"And what did you do?"

"Well, sir, I laughed, too, but cold shivers were running down my spine just the same."

"Go on."

"Well, sir, he extended his hand to me and said:

"'Old fellow, you are the only man of talent that ever fell into my power. All the others have bored me; they cry, they complain, and do all sorts of things and put me in a very bad humor. You are the only man who has been able to make me laugh. Still—it seems to me there are tears in your eyes.'

"'Oh, they are tears of joy, your lordship!'

"'I believe it. The devil knows that this is the first time I've laughed in eight years. True, neither have I cried.' Then turning, he cried out to his men: 'Come here, boys,' and a second later I was looking down the muzzles of a dozen guns. 'May God have mercy upon my soul!' I exclaimed.

"'Stop!' exclaimed Parron. 'Don't finish him yet. I called you to ascertain how much you have gotten from this gentleman.'

"'An old donkey and three dollars and forty cents.'

"'It is well, go!' The men left, and then the great bandit turned to me and said, extending his hand, palm upward: 'Now tell me my fortune.'

"I took his hand, looked at it for a moment and then I said very solemnly: 'Parron, I must tell you the truth. You are certain to be hanged.'

"'I knew that already,' he replied quietly. 'What I want to know is, when?'

"Then I began to think. 'This man,' I said to myself, 'will spare my life; tomorrow I can get to Granada, and I will give a description of him; the following day the police will catch him, he will be hauled up before the court and a week later he will swing.' So I answered: 'Next month.' Parron turned very pale, and for the matter of that, so did I.

"'Listen to me, gypsy,' he said after a moment's pause, 'I am going to hold you prisoner. If I am not hanged during the following month I shall certainly hang you. If I die as you have predicted, you shall have your freedom.'

"'Many thanks,' I replied. The men took me to a cave and barred me in, while Parron mounted his horse and galloped away."

"Good, good, I understand!" exclaimed the count. "Parron is dead, and so you are free. I don't see what good a description of the man is going to do us now."

"On the contrary, senor, Parron is very much alive, and now I am going to tell you the worst part of the story.

(Continued on Page 32.)

INVITATIONS MONOGRAMS CRESTS
VISITING CARD PLATES ENGRAVED
ROBERTSON
UNION SQUARE SAN FRANCISCO

Perspective Impressions

The heating plant put in one of our new schools has been found seriously defective. Queer, under an administration that has been run mostly on hot air.

Harriman's illness is said to be caused by the rigidity of his spinal column. His business rivals will agree as to the correctness of the diagnosis.

The fantastic foolishness indulged in by the freshies on the Berkeley campus indicates that general education is not needed so much as a general spanking.

A daily contemporary tells with great circumstance of a New York millionaire being sued for $100,000 by his cook because he kicked her cat through the window, but it aggravatingly fails to record whether the animal lived up to tradition by coming back.

Several veniremen have been excused from duty in the Calhoun case because of deafness. That was a mistake. They would have matched the blind quality of justice that the district attorney's office attempts to administer.

A New York physician has charged $1,000 for taking a cataract from the eye of a rhinoceros in the Zoo. Teddy charges more than that for telling about shooting one.

A citizen of Punxsutawaney, Pennsylvania, swallowed his false teeth and his life was saved by an operation. He was probably a new resident of the town trying to pronounce its name.

It is proposed to cut down the salaries of our prison wardens. Considering how many of the unworthy go unhung, it must be admitted that the wardens are hardly earning their salaries.

An Louisiana negro was lynched because he sued a white man who had killed his cow. If his family can be made to pay for the rope used in stringing him up vengeance will be satisfied and the episode pleasingly closed.

"Boy" Osborn separated Naval Constructor Evans and his wife through his attention to the latter, and now they are to be reconciled because of his subsequent lack of devotion. Nothing could be more simply logical.

The Spectator

Crocker Republican Candidate

The so-called reformers were given a hard drubbing at Tuesday's primaries, William Crocker winning the Republican nomination over Byron Mauzy, his leading opponent, by a comfortable majority. The vote was heavy, and its result is an indication of the interest that the general public takes in the issues at stake. It is an indication too that the people are tired of the present Spreckels-Phelan-Heney rule—not only tired of it but disgusted with it. They have seen public office subverted to private interests for three years, and on Tuesday they expressed their dissatisfaction by voting for a man whose only pledge is that he will be fair to everybody. "If successful," says Crocker, "I will assure the citizens that I will endeavor to look after and serve the interests of all the people. I will give the wants of the city my best efforts and see that they receive attention at the earliest possible moment. I think I fully realize these municipal needs and it will be my purpose to see that they are met as soon as practicable, and I will permit of no unnecessary delay in their accomplishment. The citizens want the streets put in good order, and they want public buildings for the proper and convenient conduct of the municipal business." Fair words these, and evidently sincere. It seems that it is Mr. Crocker's intention, if elected (and there appears to be nothing to prevent that) to be mayor of all the people, not the mouthpiece of any faction. What a change and what a relief such a mayor will be to this town, disturbed as it is by fighting factions! There is no consolation in the result of the primaries for Rudolph Spreckels, James D. Phelan, Fremont Older, Francis J. Heney or the members of the key-hole spying Good Government League. But there is comfort for the people in the prospect that we will have industrial and political peace.

The District Attorneyship

For the very important office of district attorney Charles Fickert has been nominated by the Republicans and the Union Labor Party. Fickert is an attorney of experience, both in the State and Federal courts. After leaving college he was for a time Assistant United States District Attorney, and since leaving that office has been practicing law with signal success. He has gained a reputation as an upright, fearless, straight-forward young fellow thoroughly able to take care of himself. His election is practically assured. There is no lack of prediction that when Fickert gets into office he will be his own master and his own district attorney, not depending on privately hired prosecutors for the conduct of cases that come before him. It is also pretty safe to say that every case will be tried on its merits regardless of whether the defendant is a friend or a foe of the powers that are trying to dominate the town. There is a likelihood that under Fickert the courts will be conducted in a sane manner for the benefit of all the people, and that they will not be made adjuncts of a private detective bureau.

She (musing)—Thirty-five again tomorrow!

Morse Stephens' Grove Play

The annual midsummer high jinks of the Bohemian Club has come and gone. For the thirty-second time, I believe, the devotees of the owl, the foes of the weaving spiders, have gathered in merry company to witness a dramatic presentation by one of their numbers and to participate in the cremation of care. This annual celebration by the Bohemian Club is no longer a theme for merely intramural appreciation. It is famed along the shores of all the seven seas, not only for the spirit of good fellowship which characterizes it or for the wit than runs riot among the redwoods, but principally for the distinc-

J. C. WILSON
BROKER
Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

tive art-form which is embodied in the annual forest play. It has been a disappointment to me that the grove drama has lacked fitting expositors this year. The newspapers gave the most casual and uninspired accounts of it and yet, if I may believe Bohemians who have witnessed many grove plays and who are properly equipped for passing judgment, the forest drama of this year, "St. Patrick at Tara," the work of Professor Henry Morse Stephens, was one of the most impressive and the most inspiring that have been performed in Bohemian Grove.

The Work of a Scholar

Not having participated in the annual revel by the banks of the Russian River, I am forced to form my opinion of Professor Stephens' drama from the printed page. "St. Patrick at Tara," of course, was not composed primarily with a mind to closet appreciation. Like all real drama, it was intended to be performed, and naturally the reader, approaching it without the stimulation of magnificent settings, elaborate costumes, the interpretation of excellent actors and, by no means least of all, the accompaniment of such music as Wallace Sabin is capable of providing—the mere reader, I say, must summon imagination to his aid in perusing it and must constantly bear in mind the technical requirements of the stage as it is set at Bohemian Grove. Perhaps proper appreciation of Professor Stephens' drama is difficult in such circumstances; yet I cannot refrain from raising my voice in admiration of his splendid achievement. Surely somebody must call attention to the latest addition to a long chain of unique artistic accomplishments. The book of "St. Patrick at Tara" is a model of scholarly thoroughness. Not only is the text attractively presented, but there is an equipment of notes and a winning acknowledgment of the author's indebtedness which do credit to Professor Stephens in more ways than one.

Stephens Not an Irishman

Professor Morse Stephens is not an Irishman; but whoso of the Emerald Isle reads "St. Patrick of Tara" will recognize in its author, that rarest of gifts, perfect understanding of the Celtic mind on the part of an outsider. This is something for which Professor Stephens should probably thank the fairies; he has wandered up and down Erin and has doubtless won their friendship by his sympathetic study of Irish character and history. Professor Stephens is not, I believe, of the Catholic faith; yet in his presentation of the mission of St. Patrick, there is again unerring accuracy of detail. To say, after these things, that Professor Stephens writes of Ireland as one might who had devoted himself particularly to her history, is rather unnecessary; no doubt Professor Stephens can write that way on many subjects, including the San Francisco disaster. It is altogether fitting that this Irish drama should be dedicated to the memory of Denis O'Sullivan, "good Bohemian, good Irishman."

"St. Patrick at Tara"

Professor Stephens chooses as the scene of his play the holy hill of Tara where the four kings of Leinster, Munster, Ulster and Connaught have gathered to meet the ardrigh or high king of Meath in solemn conclave. News of the arrival of Bishop Patrick, a missionary from Rome, who has announced his intention of supplanting druidical worship by Christianity, is to be the subject of their debate. It is the dawn of Easter Sunday and in violation of the solemn ordinance which forbids the lighting of a secular fire on this, the great feast of Beltane, there flares up on the neighboring hill of Slaney the light of the Paschal fire lit by St. Patrick. The characters of the five kings are dramatically differentiated in the discussion which ensues and retainers are sent to take St. Patrick prisoner. At this point an Irish chieftain, miserable in feature and dress, makes his appearance and tells a heartrending story. His home has been razed, his wife ravished, his children butchered. Quickly but quite simply it develops that the king of Connaught has done all this and the chieftain, drawing his dagger, tries to avenge himself, but succeeds only in wounding the king's councilor and is made prisoner. The Easter hymn is heard from the hilltop and a procession approaches, the cross bearer, eight missionaries and St. Patrick clad in his episcopal robes. In dignified language St. Patrick tells why he lit the forbidden fire, describes his early slave life in Ireland and the inspiration of his zeal to convert the island; but the council is interrupted for the customary revel. Night has come when the second scene opens. The revels are over and the kings prepare to renew their council in conditions varying from exhilaration to drunkenness. There are singing and dancing before St. Patrick and the sorrow laden chieftain again appears before the council. St. Patrick is bidden to speak and in easy but forceful words he tells of Christianity, the creed of martyrs, of ordered authority, of temperance, of chastity, of peace; but particularly, the creed of immortality. The high king asks whether Cuchulainn, the great hero, has been damned and to resolve this difficulty, St. Patrick raises Cuchulainn's ghost. Sobered but not fully convinced, the kings prolong the discussion. The unhappy chieftain, attracted by the new faith, tells his story to St. Patrick and receives sympathy with assurance of the existence of another world where he may see his wife and children again. The chieftain offers himself as the first convert whereupon a Druid, infuriated at St. Patrick's success, rushes forward to kill the missionary. The chieftain receives the blow and as he dies, with forgiveness on his lips, St. Patrick summons a great white cross to the hilltop, in miraculous proof of all that he has promised.

READY FOR THE START

M. Bleriot standing in the monoplane in which he flew from France to England.

Stephens as a Poet

The innovation in this grove play consists in substituting for Care which is usually symbolized, a victim of Care in the person of the Irish chieftain. This departure, it seems to me, is amply warranted by the beauty of Professor Stephens' treatment. Professor Stephens has chosen to write his play in blank verse, the most difficult of all poetical instruments. That he has written great blank verse cannot be said; that he has even achieved success with his measure is only partially true. There are times when Professor Stephens' thought loses in dramatic grip on account of imperfect mastery of the "mighty line." That was bound to be true, for I do not think that Professor Stephens indulges often in verse writing. Prose is his accustomed medium. But Professor Stephens is always direct and forceful; some of his lines hit hard at the heart; and there are times when he rises above himself as in the following bit of dialogue:

King of Oriel:

Did your god live on earth
And die a shameful death? Then those who slew
Were mightier than he. A hero god,
As some we worship, or sweet Nature's self,
Never can die, but oft renewing life,
Gives signs to us of life beyond the grave.
The trees above us speak of Nature's god;
Their soaring height that ever seeks the sun
Draws our eyes upward, when we would adore;
Their length of years and calm, majestic growth
Rebuke our petty love for earth-born days.
What sort of hero was your Son of God
Who lived on earth and died?

Patrick:

No warrior he;
A man of sorrows, who loved all mankind
And with his life atoned for all their sins.

King of Oriel:

Worship a dead man, that I cannot do.
Our gods are young and beautiful, or else
Aged and splendid; and to us they are
The mysteries of life and death; they show
In each returning year fair Nature's work
Upon the earth, or else explain the strange
And haunting fancies of the minds of men.
Shall we renounce them all and in their place
Take the pale shadow of a god that died,
And could not save himself?

Of the lyrics that are scattered through the piece I shall say no more than that they are simply framed and flow naturally from the context. The following extract from the song of Erin will give a taste of their quality:

Dear is the island, the land of our mothers,
Dear is the land where our forefathers died;
Dear is the country where all men are brothers—
Great is our love for her, great is our pride.
Love for her meadows fair,
Love for her mountains bare,
Love for the marsh land and love for the glen.
Pride in her gallant sons,
Pride that each heart o'erruns,—
Land of pure women and land of brave men.

Chorus:

'Tis Erin, dear Erin,
The green isle of Erin,
The island of Erin, that all of us love;
We'd fight for her honored name,
We'd die for her righteous fame—
The island of Erin that all of us love.

Taken all in all, "St. Patrick at Tara" is a work conceived in lofty vein and executed worthily; it has the tang and odor of the green, wooded hills about it; it is a composition which Irishmen will accept for its historical accuracy; and which Irishmen and all others will welcome for its unquestioned artistic value as an embodiment of the single art form which the west has so far initiated.

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA
Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets
A General Banking Business Transacted
CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

A Noted Jurist

Judge William Wallace, who died in this city last week in his eighty-second year, was an attorney and jurist of far more than ordinary note. He was a man of strong individuality, of rugged nature and of blunt ways. He was a terror to evildoers, sending burglars and footpads to the State Prison for 25 and 50 year terms. Would that we had more like him now—for his methods struck terror to evil-doers, and crime was considerably lessened while he was on the bench. Despite his severity on the bench—some called it severity, he regarded it as plain justice—he was a loveable man, of generous nature, a strong friend and just as strong a foe. There never was any mistaking his attitude. In this connection a story of what happened many years ago between Wallace and Colonel Jack Hayes, a politician, is interesting.

Unwelcome Bedfellow

The episode occurred long before Wallace went on the bench, and during the week of the first State fair in San Jose. The Wallace family lived in San Jose at the time, and their house was crowded with guests, so the subject of this story went up town to find a bed in a hotel. The proprietor of the place where he sought rest said; "Well, Wallace, I can give you a room with a double bed, but the hotel is so crowded that I will have to put some one in the room with you." "All right," Wallace replied, "only don't put that damned Jack Hayes with me if he happens in town." The primitive hotel was lighted with candles, and there were not enough of them around. After Wallace and the stranger with whom he was to share his bed had retired, a clerk knocked on the door saying that he must have the candle, and that also he must squeeze in a stranger. Wallace grumbled considerably, then turned over and went to sleep. In the meantime the third man prepared for bed in the dark, and got in with the others. While Wallace slept his bedfellows, neither of whom knew the other's identity, got to talking politics. Wallace's original companion was an admirer of Colonel Jack Hayes, and spoke in glowing terms of that politician. The newcomer remained silent. The eulogist of Hayes, as he grew more enthusiastic, spoke more and more loudly, until at last his voice awoke Wallace. "Hayes," roared Wallace, as he caught the name, "why, that rascal"—and he gave his opinion of Hayes in terms that left no room for doubt as to his hatred of him. Early the next morning the third bedfellow went down stairs ahead of the others. When Wallace appeared in the hotel lobby sometime later, a friend remarked, "Well, Wallace, I see that Jack Hayes is in town." "That so?" said Wallace. "'That so?'" repeated the other. "Well, you ought to know—you slept in the same bed with him last night." Wallace was furious at first at finding that the man whom the clerk had squeezed in, and to whom he had unbosomed himself was Hayes, but later he saw the humor of the episode, and was fond of telling the story.

Professor of the Human Comedy—The law of the association of ideas is truly wonderful!

Student—As, for example?

Professor—When my wife calls me honey, I know I'm going to be stung.

J.M. Jacobi & Co.
S.W. COR. MONTGOMERY & SUTTER STS
Individuality is always found in the best tailored garments
OUR SPRING AND SUMMER CLOTHING MERITS YOUR ATTENTION.

Wrong About Bierce

Fame is rather a transitory and uncertain element. Here I pick up a London weekly, "The New Age," an exceptionally clever publication, and find in it a contribution regarding Ambrose Bierce that shows a lamentable lack of knowledge as to this foremost American essayist—whose latest book by the way is reviewed on another page of this paper. The correspondent of The New Age says in part: "Twelve years or so back Bierce nearly obtained the distinction of book-publication in this country. I was acting editor of a certain London weekly, one of whose contributors was an eccentric but gifted Bohemian named Cowley-Brown. He had lived for a while in the United States, and had read and met Bierce, whom he described as 'wasting the greater part of his time breaking his shins over his own wit, excoriating Irish-American saloon-keeping politicians, and filth of that sort, in an ininitable causerie called 'Prattle,' which he contributes to a San Francisco paper.' I asked Cowley-Brown to write about Bierce, and he did so, his articles causing some little sensation in literary circles on this side. Later on I learned that the late James Payne and Robert Barr had already praised Bierce over here. . . . I have an idea that Cowley-Brown told me that Bierce was an Englishman and wrote some of his earlier stories in London, that failing of recognition, even of a livelihood here, he went to America. But I am not sure of this, and in print I find that Cowley-Brown alluded to Bierce as a product of California, bracketing him with Bret Harte, Joaquin Miller, and Mark Twain as the pride of the Golden Gate in that day when she shall come to be proud of her noblest achievements. I may add that years ago Mrs. Gertrude Atherton tried to work up a London interest in Bierce, declaring that he 'has the best brutal imagination of any man in the English-speaking race.' Cowley-Brown while in London not only blew the Bierce trumpet to some purpose but introduced his work to a number of Londoners who did not know them before. . . . When last I heard of Cowley-Brown he was at the Bohemian Club in 'Frisco. If he should see this he may be tempted to send you further information regarding Bierce and his work. There are so few writers of fiction in any generation that really matter, that it is a pity to allow any of them to escape his public for want of the necessary drumming." All of the foregoing proves what I said at the beginning regarding the evanescence of fame. Forty years ago, before we of the Pacific Coast had ever heard of Bierce, he was a noted literary man in London, where he was known as "Bittah Bierce." He contributed essays to London publications and some of his earlier stories were printed there and caused a sensation. Later he came to San Francisco, where, as the writer quoted says, he gained much fame through his "Prattle." His short stories are regarded as masterpieces, and his essays are among the best of modern times. For fear of being accused of provincial pride, I may mention that Gladstone was one of the warmest English admirers of Ambrose Bierce. I remember reading several years ago of Gladstone being overjoyed at finding in a London bookstore a volume of Bierce's works that had almost passed out of print.

McCUTCHEON IN AFRICA

Famous cartoonist draws an impressionistic picture of himself pursued by one of the few hippopotami that escaped Teddy.

VINTINE

MADE BY BROOKS

A tonic for men and women---will cure chronic constipation

Your druggist will get it—price, $1.00

More Ignorance

Additional evidence of the ignorance of the English regarding Bierce is found in the Saturday Review, wherein, in a notice of one of Bierce's volumes, "Ashes of the Beacon," the reviewer states: "We do not know whether 'Ambrose Bierce' is a real or an assumed name." One might almost imagine Andrew Lang responsible for that sentence, so provincial is it; for Lang, despite the fact that he has written many delightful things and is possessed of a wide literary knowledge, has an abysmal lack of information regarding American writers. He says he has never read an American book. In some regards he is fortunate; but for a man not to have read Hawthorne, Washington Irving or Thoreau is to betray a narrow and prejudiced mind. Such a mind is shown by the reviewer in question when he says that "Bierce is no more a descriptive historian than he is a political satirist." Of course Bierce's fame rests on too secure a foundation to be disturbed by such slighting mention; yet it is rather aggravating to see a man who has gained his laurels dismissed almost with light contempt by some unknown scribbler.

Student of the Human Comedy—What do you think Goethe had in mind when he wrote "The age is always the same?"
Professor—The eternal womanly.

Cartoonist Goes Hunting

John T. McCutcheon, Chicago's famous cartoonist, is off for a trip to Africa, where he will be one of a party that, headed by Fred Stephenson, is going to the Niobri country to secure specimens for the New York Museum of Natural History. "I love my Chicago," says the cartoonist, "but O, Uganda." To a World reporter he said: "I want to shoot big game, if there is any left after Mr. Roosevelt is through. But I also intend to make game of the big game with pen and pencil. I am going to be explicit about it. I don't care whose feelings I hurt. But I suppose the lions and elephants won't care how their pictures look. They'll be so busy getting off the firing line of scientists, sportsman, statesmen, journalists, taxidermists, faunal naturalists and ex-Presidents that they won't have time to look at the papers. I'll shoot lions by day and draw pictures by

Santa Fe

NEW TRAIN

Via the Santa Fe to Chicago via Kansas City

EAST

Leave San Francisco daily 7:15 a. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m. This is in addition to our two other trains leaving San Francisco and Oakland 8:00 and 10:00 p. m. Also New Train to Fresno. Leaving San Francisco 4:00 p. m.; Leave Oakland 4:05 p. m. This in addition to our THREE other trains leaving San Francisco daily at 7:15 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m.

For detail information phone or call on Jas. B. Duffy, 673 Market Street, San Francisco
T. Love, Market Street Ferry Depot, San Francisco
J. J. Warner, 1112 Broadway, Oakland night. In case I don't shoot any lions I can draw pictures showing frightful slaughter, with me as the nucelus of it. And if anybody else shoots an elephant or a rhinoceros or a lion or a hippo, after they have been photographed standing on the defunct beast, I can go out and hold it up by the tail while some of the bunch snapshots me with it, can't I?"

Student of the Human Comedy—How is it that every drop of wine I drink goes straight to my head?
Professor—Nature abhors a vacuum.

The Coming Grape Festival

On September 7 and 8 Napa county is to celebrate the vine and its burden, the grape, with festivals similar to those held in the vintage sections of Europe. San Francisco society is to participate on the afternoon and evening of September 9 by a festival and barn dance at Aetna Springs. Our smart set is preparing to attend almost in a body, and it is proposed to make this dance one of the most unique in the annals of the State. The ladies will attend in costume, prizes being offered for the most striking habiliments. The dresses are to consist of a bodice and a skirt coming a little below the knees. The cost is limited to $2.50, but there is no restriction in the matter of color, which may run riot as the wearer's fancy dictates. The costumes will be similar to those worn at vintage celebrations in Europe. Two prizes are donated by the California Keramic Club. The first is for the most artistic and characteristic costume, and consists of a beautiful vase decorated by Miss Minnie Taylor, president of the Keramic Club. Painted on the vase will be flaming Tokay grapes, golden white

M. BLERIOT AND FAMILY

The famous aviator is shown here with his wife and children. The picture was taken after he had made his flight across the British Channel.

Muscats and black Hamburgs, typifying table, raisin and wine grapes. The second prize is for the costume showing the most care in the making, and consists of a china cup and saucer decorated with grape vines, leaves and clusters by Miss Malloy of the Keramic Club. As to the dance itself, it is to be a real country affair, with fiddlers, quadrilles and a caller. In the middle of the ballroom will be the first wine press ever used in California, heaped high with grapes. There will be a banquet at midnight at which speeches will be made and toasts responded to by Andrea Sbarbaro, Charles Bundschu, Frona Waite Colburn, Senator Frank Coombs, Mrs. Florence Richmond, Mrs. Ella M. Sexton and others.

Beautiful Decorations

The grounds at Aetna Springs are to be beautifully decorated for the occasion. One thousand Japanese

WATCHING THE WRIGHT AEROPLANE

In the carriage are M. Jusserand, the French Ambassador, Madame Jusserand, and Senator Newlands of Nevada.

lanterns in carnival colors, red yellow and green will be strung around the grounds. Girls in picturesque costumes bearing baskets of grapes will pass among the guests inviting all to partake of the fruit. Vintage songs will be sung, and altogether the occasion will be a very correct imitation of the festivals that take place in Europe. In fact, it is the intention of the California Grape Growers' Association and others who are back of this year's festival to arouse enough public interest to create a demand for a legal holiday to be known as Vintage Day. Governor Gillett has been invited to attend the Aetna Springs festival and dance, the letter sent to him pointing out the importance of the grape industry in California and the desirability of promoting it. "Now as California is eminently a grape-growing and wine producing country," the letter reads in part, "it would be very appropriate indeed that we follow the example of our ancestors and celebrate annually Vintage Day on the date of the admission of California into the Union. By so doing we will gradually educate the American people to the use of the temperance health beverage, wine, at their meals; thus making them more healthy, and happy, and developing the viticultural industry of California which will have the effect of turning our sheep ranges into beautiful vineyards, creating new towns and cities, and giving employment to millions of people in our sparsely settled State."

Wide Ambitions

The ambitions of the projectors of vintage day are wide. They want to make our annual celebration of the grape and its products world-famed—something that will attract people from every part of the globe. To this end they intend to emphasize as much as possible the value of grapes as a medicine. In Europe people go out to the country and live for weeks exclusively on grapes. Starting in with a pound of the fruit per day they gradually eliminate other food and increase the supply of grapes until they are eating ten pounds of

---

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 56 Kearny street.

E. B. COURVOISIER

The well known Art Dealer and Frame Maker announces to the public the opening of his new store at 431 Sutter street between Stockton and Powell.

them daily, to the great benefit of their health. "Why not make this the greatest health resort in the world?" is asked. But the artistic side appeals also. The Bohemian Club has a jinks annually among the redwoods, and its fame has spread everywhere. Yearly a play is produced that ranks high artistically. Such talent can be developed for the grape festivals. Pastoral plays can be presented all over the State. Our poets can write verses extolling the grape. We can have vintage songs of our own. There is no need to imitate Europe in this regard, for we have enough local talent to originate our own manner of celebration. The public does not realize the amount of money invested in grapes in this State—more than $100,000,000. And there is as little realization of the possibilities of the industry. There are not more than half a dozen real vintage sections in the world, and California is one of them. Nature has endowed us prodigally in this regard, and we hardly take the trouble to acknowledge her beneficence. It is different in Europe where the grape is actually reverenced. At Schloss Johannisburg, for instance, the first day of the vintage is the occasion of a great festival in which nobles and peasants join. The burgomaster plucks the first cluster of grapes and superintends the handling of the others. Everything in connection with the work is done with the utmost care. Vineyards are small there in comparison with the imperial domains of California to which the vine is indigenous. We grow table and raisin grapes that cannot be beaten, and our ordinary claret has taken so many prizes abroad in competition with French and Spanish wines of the same class as thoroughly to demonstrate its superiority. The time will come when California will be known as the land of the grape instead of the land of gold. The time can be hastened by co-operation on the part of the people. There is nothing that will so readily induce such co-operation as the establishment of a vintage day.

Student of the Human Comedy—Is there any possible way of making a stupid youngster smart?
Professor—Yes; by spanking him.

When Taft and Diaz Meet

It will be enough to make the dramatic Theodore give up his chase of the lumbering hippopotami and the divers beasts that are indigenous to Africa and sulk in his tent when he hears of the spectacular stunt that President Taft and President Diaz are to pull off on the international bridge that crosses the Rio Grande river at El Paso. It will be a spectacular affair—and Teddy does dearly love a spectacle, especially if the chief feature is his own glory-loving self. El Paso is making great preparations for this meeting of the rulers. The center of the bridge, marking the dividing line between this country and Mexico, will be indicated by a chain of roses, on either side of which the two presidents will stand and clasp hands as they exchange greetings. Afterward they will be seated at a unique banquet. The table will be run lengthwise of the bridge. On one side of the line will be Taft, on the other Diaz, touching elbows yet each in his own country. It bids fair to be as historical an affair as the famous meeting between the governors of the Carolinas. The bridge will be decorated in the colors of the two countries, and in the center will be a canopy composed of the national colors of the United States and of Mexico. It is under this canopy that hands will be clasped. On the Mexican end of the bridge, Diaz, advancing to meet Taft, will march between lines of soldiers at present arms, while Taft from his end will perform a similar maneuver, the bands meanwhile playing the national airs. Cabinet officials and others will sit with Taft, while with Diaz will be leading statesmen of his country. For years it has been the dream of the people of El Paso to have the rulers of the two great North American republics meet there, and when Benjamin Harrison visited El Paso in his first term and William McKinley paid a visit to the city in 1900 efforts were made to have Gen. Diaz as a guest also; but he was unable to be present either time. However, no American President has ever before extended a formal invitation to the President of Mexico to meet him here until the present, when Mr. Taft sent a personal letter to Gen. Diaz expressing the pleasure that such a meeting would give him. Gen. Diaz has formally accepted and will be at El Paso to meet Mr. Taft, traveling in his own special train, accompanied by cabinet officers, a battalion of the Chapultepec castle guard, the Presidential band and a retinue of military, naval and other aides.

BEAUTY IN BEAUTEOUS SURROUNDINGS

Society at Goodwood, where the King and Queen of England were the guests of the Duke of Richmond and Gordon and his youngest daughter, Lady Helen Gordon-Lennox. The race meeting was the great social event of the week.

Greenway Turns Author

Local royalty is busy with the pen. Virgilia Bogue, Queen of the Portola Festival, is publishing a novel, and Ned Greenway, king of San Francisco's social world, is writing a book of reminiscences which is to be edited by Jeremiah Lynch, traveler, historian and importer of Egyptian mummies. Greenway's book, besides being more or less of an autobiography, is also to be something of a guide to social aspirants—not to climbers, though, for Greenway abhors people who have no business within the sacred precincts of society yet attempt second-story work. In his eyes it is as great a crime to steal into the social circle as to force a door with a jimmy—worse, for although purloined silver can be replaced what can revamp a good name that has been tarnished by contact with the socially unworthy? You see, Shakespeare and I entertain a good deal the same idea as to the stealing of a purse being but the filching of trash and the harming of a good name the real crime. Greenway, as I have intimated, holds the same views. I am glad to have two such eminent authorities agree with me. But to return to the purposes of the book. While not a guide to climbers it will be of great benefit to the really worthy who aspire for the top of the social ladder. Of course it will not be a book on etiquette—there will be no warnings in it against wearing tan shoes with a dress suit, eating peas with a knife or carrying one's laundry bundle along the street. One is supposed to know that these things are gaucheries through guides to etiquette in the Home and Heart departments of the daily papers; and any one who has not taken the trouble to inform himself regarding those every day niceties is really not of the class that belongs in society. Greenway's book will, in fact, be a sort of study of the psychology of society, with discussions of the broader ethics of the game. Its author says of it that for one thing it will inform young men of the value of knowing how to dance as an entree to good society. In this respect it will fill a long-felt want and will bring joy to many a wall-flower's heart. Too many young men who might under proper instruction be able to lead a cotillion devote their time to foolish athletics, hunting and fishing, cross country tramps or intellectual pursuits.

The Anglo & London Paris National Bank

Of San Francisco

Successor of The London Paris National Bank of San Francisco, The Anglo-California Bank, Limited.

Northeast Cor. Pine and Sansome Sts., San Francisco

Sig. Greenebaum, Pres.; I. Steinhart, Chairman of Finance Committee; H. Fleishhacker, V.-Pres. and Man.; Jos. Friedlander, V.-Pres.; C. F. Hunt, V.-Pres.; R. Altschul, Cashier; A. Hochstein, Asst. Cashier; F. E. Beck, Asst. Cashier.

Capital $4,000,000.00

Surplus and Undivided Profits..... 1,500,000.00

We offer our customers every facility consistent with good banking and invite new accounts.

Greenway's Triumphs

Greenway's book is to contain a great many reminiscences of his life as social arbiter of San Francisco, but all written in a kindly spirit. He says he will not mention any names, unless mayhap it be that of one Chambliss, who tried to usurp his place, failed, wrote a roast on San Francisco society, and then sank into obscurity. I am inclined to think that Greenway will say some real sassy things about Chambliss. He tells in an interview of the various attempts that have been made to tear the crown from his brow, but recalls with pride that he always won. He acknowledges that his enemies gave him a hard run for his money sometimes, but that ultimately he triumphed. Thus he ranks with Julius Caesar, Hannibal, Wellington, Grant, Dewey, Hobson and others who, unafraid, flew into the fray and battled for supremacy. Let us with loud huzza proclaim our admiration of this hero of the pink tea and the cotillion, who, determined to sell his wine, fought his way against enemies and calumnators and held his place as the leader of society and the distributor of the bubbling emblem of Bacchus. His is an example that any youth might do well to emulate. Young man, when you feel your ambitions sag remember that Ned Greenway, too, had his bad days and was beset by enemies armed with social prestige and the support of fond dowagers with marriageable daughters. Consider well how he held his place at the top of the ladder, putting a neat foot to every jaw that came within kicking distance. Anyway, his job depended on it, and a man will do many things to hold his job—even become a leader of society.

Mrs. Besant Coming

The announcement that the distinguished woman, authoress, philosopher, and psychologist, Mrs. Annie Besant, is to be here again and speak to a public audience on August 29, at the Garrick Theatre, is causing quite a flutter among those who keep in touch with the advanced ideas of modern and liberal theology. This will

Forced Investments

The manager of a gas plant has no better means of seeing into the future than has any other citizen. At the same time he is compelled in building and extending his property to make ample provision for the future as well as for the present.

The manufacturing capacity of a gas plant can always be enlarged by ADDITIONS, but unless the distributing system is laid out with liberal estimates for the future growth of the city, it may be necessary to RECONSTRUCT it long before it is worn out.

Such reconstruction adds excessively to the capitalization of the property and the amount which must be earned to pay interest on the investment.

Therefore, every properly constructed gas property for many years contains a distributing capacity much greater than current demands call for. This at first thought seems expensive, but in the long run it is in conformity with the best public policy.

If an ordinary manufacturing establishment receives orders in excess of its capacity because of specially prosperous conditions, it may refuse the business because it thinks it is of a temporary nature and will not warrant the expense of enlarging the plant.

A gas company must meet the demands for its service whenever they arise and must make the necessary investment for extensions, additional gas generating capacity, etc., regardless of whether it considers the demands temporary or permanent. It has no choice whatever in deciding questions of this kind.

An ordinary manufacturing plant in dull times can turn out and store products for sale in good times, or may shut down altogether. A gas company cannot possibly operate on this basis and must maintain an efficient service always save in war and municipal disaster.

San Francisco Gas and Electric Company

Copyright, 1909.

be the third visit of Mrs. Besant to San Francisco. She comes this time as before as the representative of the Theosophical Society of the World. In her previous visits she spoke to crowded and representative audiences and was listened to with interest. Whether one's mind is in accord with her beliefs or not, a statement of her theories carries weight from the forceful manner in which she marshals her facts, and the masterly style in which she delivers her speeches. She is the leader of the society which she represents, and is touring the world in its interests.

The Malevolent Amen

According to Mr. William T. Stead, the hoary supernaturalist, who every week raises more hair than can the most infallible of tonics raise in a year, of all the amens that ever were said or sung to common curses or anathemas, the most malevolent is Amen Ra, late—very late—royal Egyptian priestess. Unless one droop one's eyelids in presence of the lid of her sacred mummy-case, there's the she devil to pay. Raise the eyebrows into ever so slight a resemblance to a question-mark; disclose ever so little of a pearly canine tooth; do so much as look askance at the lid, and forthwith death or lesser disaster follows as the constable in a prohibition town. Now the lid is very properly in the British Museum, but, marry and amen! the mummy is there too, of her own free will, only invisible, a sort of Egyptian darkness that may be felt. Now there's no telling whether or not we be within earshot and eyeshot and spiteshot of the dead, but it strains my not inelastic credulity to the snapping point to credit the idea that a priestess, dead some thousands of years, should be loafing around the mummy lid here below instead of around the throne there above—a royal priestess at that! In the British Museum moreover! My experience of—not with—Egyptian ladies teaches me that they think hades far preferable to Great Britain where the idea of more than one wife is insupportable to the average pocket. No, Mr. Stead, not in malevolence is to be found the explanation to all your reported marvels, but in coincidence!

Pleased Over Free Hides

E. S. Grover, managing editor of the Shoe and Leather Reporter, writing to the New York Times from Boston, declares that the trade is jubilant over the free-hide victory, and while it is too early to foretell the precise effect upon shoe, leather, and hide values, the very fact in itself that our tanners will be able to buy hides on an equal footing with the world, gives manufacturers much encouragement in viewing the future. Stocks of shoes in dealers' and wholesalers' hands are probably below normal, and even with a firm market the prospects strongly favor better business this fall. That the boot and shoe men appreciate work done for their cause was evidenced by the present that the New England Shoe and Leather Association gave Charles H. Jones, president of the Commonwealth Shoe and Leather Company. The gift was an artistic bronze figure representing a winged victory, done by Tiffany & Company, and was presented to Jones in recognition of the work he did at Washington toward having hides placed on the free list.

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
UNION SQUARE
An ideal place for a pleasant hour with friends after shopping, after theatre or for afternoon tea
Under the management of JAMES WOODS

FAIRMONT HOTEL
An hotel of rich appointment, perfect service, superb cuisine, and an atmosphere of quiet elegance and dignity which appeals to the refined and discriminating traveler of every land. Rates---Single rooms with bath from $2.50 per day upwards.
PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

HOTEL VICTORIA
MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Manager
N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton
CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL
Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine. Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.
American and European Plan.

HOTEL NORMANDIE
SUTTER AND GOUGH STREETS
A comfortable, high order, uptown hotel, now under the management of THOS. H. SHEDDEN, Formerly Manager of St. Dunstan's.

HOTEL HARCOURT
Formerly the Nordhoff.
SUTTER AND LARKIN STREETS
AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN
An Elegantly Furnished Modern Home. Phone Franklin 2100

TOWNSEND'S
CALIFORNIA GLACÉ FRUITS AND CANDIES
27 Years in Palace Hotel Building
All Orders Given Prompt Attention at
46 MARKET STREET
Phone Douglas 4814
Factory, 117 SAN JOSE AVE. Phone Mission 378
On Sept. 15th we open a new store at 755 Market St.
Also at News Stands of the Fairmont and St. Francis Hotels

ASK FOR
BLACK AND WHITE
SCOTCH WHISKEY
IT IS THE BEST
NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy.

Wheat: The market the past week steadied on the Government report. The winter yield was slightly over our expectation and spring wheat in agreement. The selling which followed the report increased the short interest and covering operations soon checked the decline. The unknown factor is the spring wheat. The harvest results thus far are fixed, but a crop exceeding Government August indication is not apparent. The blight, rains and hail have made North Dakota results very much mixed. A private expert report today of 318,000,000 spring wheat fell flat because the trade regarded it as an effort to average a winter wheat estimate of 370,000,000 bushels made by the same authority. Northwest interests have been fair buyers on the break and it looks as if they anticipated a further rise. The cash houses are less bearish as they are getting less acceptances on offers. The great bulk of the wheat arriving at the markets was bought at early harvest at high prices and hedged. The trade is getting down to closer dealings with the producers who are showing an inclination to hold. Southern millers and millers in the wheat belt are again in the market. There will be no vigorous buying until the supplies are hard to get, or a fall down in spring harvests develops. A scalping market will be the rule for another week. Europe shows no disposition to purchase here, being strengthened in its position by the official Canadian estimate of 155,000,000 bushels which would give that country 40,000,000 more for export than a year ago. Our investigation does not show over 135,000,000 for Canada at present situation. There is nothing just now upon which to base a sustained bull movement.

Cotton: The week just ending has been full of surprises and the price movements have been due more to the character of orders that reached the ring than to the news from the fields or reports from trade centers. The crop deterioration has been continuous during the week, except in some sections of the Central and Eastern belts, and trade reports have shown steady improvement in this country and abroad. The tendency, however, seems to be to anticipate a heavy movement of cotton in the early fall, due to the belief that the planters will be willing to part with a large portion of their cotton at these prices. It is interesting to note, however, that the high prices of two years ago, when cotton sold above 12.75, were recorded on September 4th. It strikes us that with the August condition report of 71.9 (3 per cent lower than any ever issued as of that date) behind us and the September bureau ahead of us, which must reflect the natural deterioration during August, short sales around this level would prove very hazardous. The average deterioration during August for the last 10 years is 7.1, hence, if this ratio of deterioration is kept up, the September condition would be 64.8, the lowest in 10 years. Notwithstanding these facts, it looks now as though the decline of nearly 100 points had so shattered the nerves of some of the bulls as to induce them to hold off and deprive the market of its normal support. No one, not even those who are bearishly inclined, will deny the belief that this crop will be a very, very small one. The selling was based on the claim that all the bad news obtainable is in, but we rather think there will be some more news during the month that may have a tendency to shatter the nerves of the bears. During the rush movement in October and November some decline in the market may reasonably be expected but we think this is too early to anticipate; it is about 60 days before such a late crop as this will reach the rush movement period; in the meantime the smallness of this crop may be so unquestionably established as to cause a panic.

Stocks: We find many of the high grade stocks soaring to new high levels, the Harriman Pacifics being the feature of the market, there seems nothing illogical about the rise in these securities at this particular period in view of good crops being practically assured and the plans ready for a re-adjustment of these securities, and increased dividends in sight at the coming quarterly meeting. The violent rise in Union Pacific at the closing of the week created irregularity in the general market, and recessions as a result of public selling, this element fearing financial disturbance, or a corner in this stock. Crops are rounding out splendidly from latest reports, and business conditions continue to improve with the outlook with a famine in steel and copper materials are long, hence we might say that basic conditions could not be more satisfactory. Much is said of the tightening of money rates in the not distant future. We are not in sympathy with this sentiment at the present, money rates will harden next month, and 3½ to 5 per cent are not impossible in 60 days, but with increased dividends pending on many stocks this will act as a material offset to these rates.

Percy—You look sweet enough to eat.
Mabel—I do.

TECHAU TAVERN
Cor. Eddy and Powell Sts.
CAFE AND LADIES' GRILL
Rigo and his Gypsy Orchestra
Concerts Daily during Shopping Hours
From 3:30 to 5:00 p. m. and from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m.; 10:30 to 1:00 a. m.
Private Dining Booths and Banquet Rooms on Mezzanine Floor. Entrance—No. 4 Eddy Street
Under the management of A. C. MORRISSON

TAIT-ZINKAND CAFE
168-178 O'FARRELL STREET
(Opposite the Orpheum)
OPEN FOR BUSINESS
We are prepared to cater for outside Parties, Weddings, Breakfasts, Balls, Luncheons, etc., in the city and bay counties. Menus and prices submitted on request.
TEL. DOUGLAS 560 JOHN TAIT, Manager

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487 R. E. MULCAHY, Manager
E. F. HUTTON & CO.
THE PIONEER HOUSE
BROKERS
Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade
490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO
Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL
Two Private Wires to Chicago and New York
Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

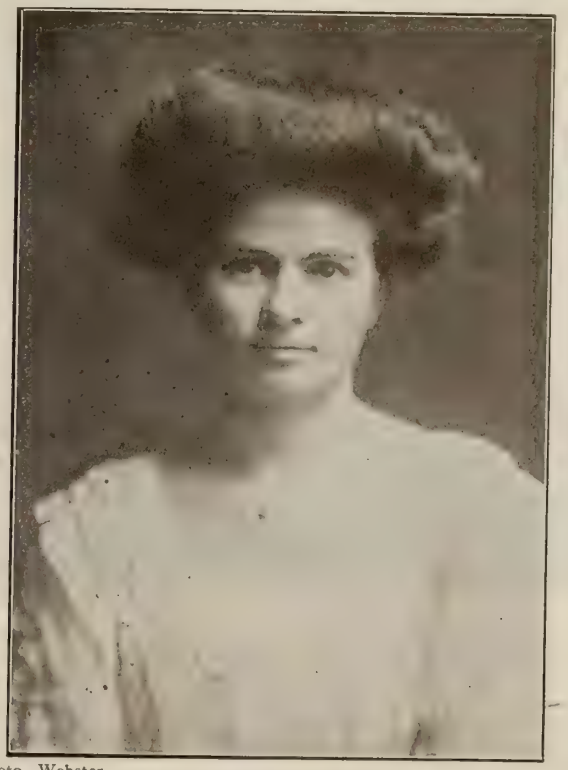
Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

Brilliant Wedding Planned

Trinity Church will be the scene of another brilliant wedding on September 29, when Miss Helen Wilson, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Scott Wilson, will become the bride of Paymaster Walter Greer, U. S. N. A small reception will follow at the residence of the bride's parents on Washington street. As yet all the details of the affair have not been perfected, but brass buttons will play an important part. Miss Wilson's family is identified with the early and prominent history of the State. Her paternal grandfather was the late Samuel M. Wilson, one of the foremost lawyers of his day. Mrs. Samuel Wilson was the daughter of General Scott, prominent in the South a decade ago. The prospective bride's mother was Miss Mary Hutchinson,

Photo, Genthe



MRS. WILLIAM ALEXANDER GLASSFORD

Formerly Miss Eleanor Phelps, only daughter of Rear-Admiral and Mrs. Phelps Thomas S. Phelps, whose recent marriage to Ensign Glassford, U. S. N., was brilliantly celebrated at Mare Island.

daughter of Gene Hutchinson of Sacramento, an old and respected citizen, prominent in the early history of that city. He subsequently moved with his family to this city where they were well known socially and in business circles. Eli Hutchinson, an uncle of Miss Wilson's, married one of the daughters of the Woodward who founded Woodward's Gardens. Miss Wilson is a pretty blonde with delicate coloring. She is very young, having made her debut last year at an elaborate tea given by her mother. Mrs. George Cadwalader, formerly Charlotte Wilson, and Mrs. Orville Pratt, formally Emily Wilson, are cousins of Miss Wilson.

Americans in London

A London correspondent writes me that the greatest social successes of the year in England's metropolis have been made by American women, who have established themselves as leaders in the exclusive set. Ambassador Reid and Mrs. Reid have surpassed themselves this year by the magnificence of their receptions. The Duchess of Marlborough has brought the cotillion back into favor in the inauguration of her new ball room in Sunderland House. She planned new and charming figures, and purchased costly and novel favors in Paris. Her cotillion was so successful that other hostesses have followed her example. One of these was Mrs. Potter Palmer, who gave a cotillion for the younger smart set, with whom she is a great favorite. Her favors included hand-painted fans, beautiful sunshades and silver cigar and cigarette cases. Mrs. John Ford, a rather new American hostess, brought out her daughter with a cotillion given at the Ritz. Other Americans who struck out on new lines of entertainment were Lady Cheylesmore and Lady Cooper, the former giving a vaudeville performance in her house at Princes Gate. The Russian dancers who are so popular in London also appeared. Lady Cooper's vaudeville followed a dinner at which there were some fifty guests, several hundred coming later. William

Photo, Webster

MISS ALMA THANE

One of the charming and popular members of the young set who have been enjoying the summer months at Mill Valley. Miss Thane recently returned from a tour abroad with her mother.

Waldorf Astor gave two concerts at Carlton House Terrace, bringing Tetrazzini, Destinn and other singers over from Paris. Royalty attended in the persons of the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and the Princess Patricia. Mrs. John Mackay also gave a concert at which she had famous singers for the pleasure of her guests. The King's liking for Americans is well known and this season he has dined with many American hostesses. Lady Granard gave a dinner at which both the King and the Queen were present. Consuelo, Duchess of Manchester, had a small dinner for the Queen and Princess Victoria with

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

Vogel's
MAKERS OF
LADIES' GOWNS AND FANCY COSTUMES
418 SUTTER ST., Near STOCKTON

a dance to follow and she has had the King as guest several times. Lady Lister-Kaye, Mrs. Cavendish Bentinck, Mrs. Lewis Harcourt, Mrs. Walter Burns are other hostesses who have had the King as a guest.

Engagement News Confirmed

The rumor of the engagement of Miss Suzanne Kirkpatrick to Allan Macdonald which was mentioned in Town Talk two weeks ago has become public talk and duly acknowledged by the interested parties. I am told that Miss Kirkpatrick's intimate and inseparable girl friend felt much hurt at not being informed of the engagement before it was announced in the newspapers as it was only in reading therein that the boon companion first found out that Miss Kirkpatrick no longer denied the soft impeachment. Miss Kirkpatrick is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Kirkpatrick. Mrs. Kirkpatrick was formerly Miss Lillie Davis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. K. Davis of San Jose. Mrs. Davis and the late Senator Sharon were brother and sister. Miss Kirkpatrick is a dainty little miss and has been much sought after since making her debut last year. Kenneth Macdonald is a brother of Allan Macdonald who married Miss Anita Davis, the charming daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Minfield Scott Davis last year. Allan Macdonald came here from Louisville two or three years ago. He is a rising young architect, a member of the firm of Applegarth & Macdonald. No date has been set for the wedding.

MISS ALITA GHIRARDELLI

Whose death by drowning in the surf at Carmel-by-the-Sea on Monday was a great shock to society. Miss Ghirardelli was a beautiful and talented young woman, being a painter of more than ordinary merit.

Burlingame Deserted

San Mateo and Burlingame are deserted. There is a forlorn air to clubs and a Sabbath stillness reigns in the air. Polo is stopped and the golf links are playerless. Those becalmed down the Peninsula are making up for past gaieties by getting in lost beauty sleep these dull and empty days. With the postponement of Nora Brewer's wedding, because of the groom's breakdown in health after a three days' walk, came the social calm. Mrs. Jack Casserly, Edward Cudahy and Nora Brewer departed at once for Chicago and the little round of entertaining in their honor that was adding a zest to things mundane in the charming little suburb suddenly ceased. Now, with the Carolans still at Beaulieu, Mrs. Hobart domiciled at Ross, Ed. Tobin east, the Parrotts still abroad, the de Tristans en route to Europe and the Charlie Clarks, Tom Driscolls and Harry Simpkins on their hunting and fishing trip in the wilds of Montana, sleepy little San Mateo is quite, quite dead. The social lethargy promises to hold until way into September, when the Andrew Welches will return from Santa Barbara and reopen their San Mateo home with a flourish. The only active personage among the socially elect at present to stir up things is Walter Hobart, who occasionally

MISS HELEN WILSON

Who will wed Paymaster Walter Greer, U. S. N., on September 9.

COOK'S TOURS
Are the Best for Independent or Escort Travel
AROUND THE WORLD
Parties leave Westward August 24, September 15, October 5 and 19th; Eastward November 6, December 9 and June 8. Highest class, various routes, best of everything. Seventy Tours to Europe. Tickets everywhere, Traveler's checks, hotel coupons, information. Let us make reservations now for your fall tour. No charge for service.
THOS. COOK & SON
32 POWELL STREET SAN FRANCISCO
Offices at Yokohama, Hongkong, Colombo, Calcutta, Bombay, etc.

"CINCINNATI"
80 Days
$325 to $1775
ORIENT CRUISE
Leave N. Y.
Jan. 29, 1910
20th Annual Cruise. Finest trip of its kind.
20 ports visited. Absolutely first-class throughout.
Join the select California party on this most interesting cruise
Handsomely illustrated pamphlet sent free
HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE
PHONE KEARNY 2946
160 POWELL STREET (NEAR ELLIS ST.) SAN FRANCISCO

prowls forth from his bachelor den and makes his presence known.

Debut is Postponed

Contrary to expectations Miss Gertrude Thomas, the pretty youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Thomas, will not make her debut in society this winter. She will leave the first week in September with her mother for Boston where she will spend the winter in study. Mrs. Thomas will remain East with her daughter and early in the spring Mr. Thomas will join his family. They will spend the next year in travel. Mrs. Thomas recently gave a delightful dance at the Hotel Rafael in honor of her young daughter. Only members of the younger set were invited. Miss Thomas is an unusually attractive girl and bids fair to be as popular as her two sisters, Mrs. Latham McMullin and Mrs. Fred Kimball, were in their debutante days.

Coope-Gordon

The wedding of Miss Ethel Egerton Coope, only daughter of Mrs. Bertha Coope to Mackenzie Gordon, the popular tenor, took place on Saturday afternoon at the residence of the bride's mother. The ceremony was performed by Rev. George C. Adams, and was witnessed by relatives and intimate friends only. There were no attendants, the utmost simplicity marking the wedding. The bride's father was the late I. F. Coope, an Englishman well known here and long a resident of Santa Cruz. The bride was presented with a handsome residence by her grandfather, H. S. Billings. Mackenzie Gordon is a general favorite here besides being one of our foremost singers. He was one of the leading musical contributors at the Bohemian Jinks. After a brief honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Gordon will reside in this city.

Puffs, Rats, False Curls

Lillian Russel brings glad news from abroad to the effect that hereafter simplicity is to be the thing in women's hair-dressing. Rats and puffs are to be discarded. The preferable way is to part the hair in the center, comb it down over the ears and then wind it around the head in a coil. I hope I may be permitted to say "Hurrah!" It was only last week that I had my evening at a theatre spoiled by elaborate hair arrangements that were fully as bad as large hats. They were most extravagant displays of puffs, twists, piled up masses and jumbled waves. One that I observed had a waterfall of curls in the back. The comicality of the effect compensated me somewhat for what I was missing of the performance. I got entertainment, too, out of the conversation of two middle-aged dames who were exchanging confidences regarding store hair that a man

THE LARGEST TOURING CAR

Mrs. Nat Goodwin (formerly Miss Edna Goodrich) stepping out of her automobile in London. It contains a bed, a bathroom, and a small kitchen.

S. & G. GUMP CO'S MIDSUMMER SALE

NOW ON

¶ In our European department we offer the best and most varied assortment of Wedding, Engagement and Holiday Gifts that can be found anywhere.

Discounts in all departments

¶ In connection with our European department we have a distinct Oriental section. Within real Japanese interiors there is a rare opportunity of seeing a wonderful collection of Japanese and Chinese Embroideries, Opera and Mandarin Coats and Kimonos.

Distributors of Minton China

246-268 POST STREET

should not be permitted to hear. How can one's admiration for the opposite sex survive after hearing of beautiful switches that can be bought for seven dollars, of puffs at two dollars each, and of the advisability of hanging a false switch over the back of a chair and brushing it on going to bed? So let us rejoice at the news that Lillian brings, and hope that the new fashion will very speedily travel across the continent.

Divorce Suit Pending

I am told that Neville Castle, whose wife is accused of shooting at W. B. Craig in New York, will bring suit for a divorce as soon as her trial over the Waldorf-Astoria episode ends. Although they have been separated for several years, during which time Castle has given his wife liberal alimony, the idea of divorce has always been distasteful to him. But the notoriety attending the affair of two weeks ago has overcome this repugnance, I am told. The husband's mother, Mrs. Michael Castle, is a gentle, retiring, lovable woman who always treated her daughter-in-law with the utmost kindness and consideration, often paying extravagant bills that she had contracted.

Rumor is Busy

A rumor that is fluttering over tea cups is that Miss Alice Boggs, daughter of the late Senator John Boggs of Colusa, is engaged to Charles Dutton, the well known pianist of Berkeley. Miss Boggs is a talented musician, being a skillful performer on the harp. She has studied abroad and has spent the last three or four years in Boston which time she has devoted to study. During the past year Miss Boggs has resided in Berkeley. Mrs. John Boggs will pass this winter at the Fairmont where she has engaged apartments. An early announcement at a tea to be given by her is expected.

Prepares for Wedding

Miss Lucy King, the attractive fiancee of Laurence W. Harris, is very busy these days preparing for her wedding, which takes place the first week in September. The bride to be is a daughter of Joseph King and a granddaughter of James King of William, a famous editor of early days whose assassination led to the hanging of Casey and Cora by the Vigilantes. She is a niece of Mrs. Russell Wilson. The groom is in business in this city.

Barn Dance at Belevedere

Mrs. Gordon Blanding will give a barn dance at her beautiful home in Belvedere on Friday evening, August 27, in honor of her daughter, Miss Henrietta, who has been spending her vacation here, and who will return to Vassar College early in September. Miss Blanding is a cousin of Miss Florence Brickenridge. Mrs. Blanding and Mrs. Frederick Sharon are daughters of the late Lloyd Tevis.

Artist Returns

L. Boronda, who has returned to Pacific Grove after several years spent in study in France and Italy, has established a studio at Pacific Grove and is sketching along the shore and in the Peninsula forest. The pictures he brought back with him are attracting much admiration. He has sold two of his sketches that were on exhibition at the Hotel Del Monte, Mrs. A. H. Egelly of Oakland being the purchaser. Twelve new canvases were added to the Del Monte exhibit on Sunday. Piazzoni will send down another large picture soon.

THE DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH

Before her marriage, which took place in November, 1895, the Duchess was Consuelo, daughter of William Kissam Vanderbilt of New York. The Duke and Duchess, who have two children, have been separated for some time, but it is rumored that they are about to be reconciled.

Gibbons-Schaefer Wedding

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Paul Gibbons have issued invitations to the marriage of their daughter, Lydia, to Gustav Edmund Schaefer. The ceremony will take place on Friday evening, August 27, at half past eight o'clock at the First Presbyterian Church. A reception will follow at the Fairmont Hotel. The groom is a son

MRS. J. COUGHLAN CO.
Removed to
101 GEARY ST., Cor. GRANT AVE.
Mezzanine Floor

J. Magnin & Co
INCORPORATED
First Showing of Correct Models
LADIES', MISSES' AND GIRLS' TAILORED SUITS AND COATS FOR AUTUMN, 1909
Moderate Prices European Style and Materials
GRANT AVENUE AND GEARY STREET

of one of the wealthiest men in Honolulu where he and his bride will in the future reside.

Hotel Rafael Not to Close

The report recently circulated to the effect that the Hotel Rafael would close August 20 is not correct. J. H. Holmes, proprietor, has just announced that the hotel would remain open at least until October 15, and possibly completely through the winter. It may be necessary to close the hotel in November in order to make a great many renovations which were postponed this season on account of Mr. Holmes' late arrival in San Rafael from the South.

In the Social Spotlight

Mr. and Mrs. N. V. S. Thorne, with a party of friends from New York arrived in the city Friday, and while here will be at the St. Francis. Mrs. Thorne, who is a prominent society women of Morristown, N. J., was Miss Therese T. Keyser before her marriage, and she and her husband have a number of friends in San Francisco, as they spent several winters at the old Palace Hotel about six years ago.

Santa Barbara is well represented at the Fairmont this week. Among the guests from the southern city are Mrs. C. C. Park and Miss Park, J. Howard Park, Mrs. Chas. Hopkins, Prince C. Hopkins, M. A. Latailaide, and Harleig Johnson.

Mrs. W. B. Tubbs entertained Miss Ruth Haskins, Miss Vera Havemeyer, Miss Ethel Havemeyer, Mr. Chapin Tubbs and Mr. Dudley Valentine at Aetna Springs recently.

Julius Kruttschnitt, director of traffic of the Harriman lines, arrived at the Fairmont from Mexico recently. Mr. Kruttschnitt had a number of important matters pending his arrival, chief among them being the choice of the new ticket office for the Southern Pacific in the new Palace Building.

Mrs. I. L. Requa has taken a cottage at Aetna Springs. With her are her grandchildren, Miss Amy and Miss Sallie Long.

Applications for permanent apartments at the Fairmont are already pouring in and the indications are that the coming winter at this hotel will be one of the gayest that has ever been. Manager Chas. Cooke has stated that already the applications for reservations has exceeded that of last season and that the house will be entirely filled up before the social season really begins.

Owing to the death of Judge William T. Wallace Mrs. Eleanor Martin has postponed her party to Del Monte this month. Included among her prospective guests was Mrs. Richard Sprague who was Isabel Wallace.

The Maburys of San Jose have taken an apartment at the St. Regis for the winter. They are having it decorated in oriental style, spending several thousand dollars in decorations and furnishings. The Maburys are wealthy people of the Garden City.

Miss Mae Livingstone Chace, of New York, has been the guest recently of her cousin, Mrs. Bronte M. Aikens. On Sunday Miss Chace accompanied another cousin, Mrs. John Kirchen, to Tonopah, where she will visit several weeks, then return to this city, when she will be the motif of much entertaining before leaving for her New York home.

Miss Nellie Grant will soon leave for San Diego. Her brother, Chapman Grant, left on Saturday for Williams College, Mass., where he will remain until next February.

The Army and Navy Club gave another one of their delightful dances on Tuesday evening. The dance was in honor of the Thirteenth Infantry, U. S. A.

Miss Nannie Wright, daughter of Mrs. Selden S. Wright, returned to her home in this city on Tuesday evening after an absence of two years in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Moses have taken an apartment at the St. Regis for the winter.

LATEST PARISIAN FASHIONS

Of the three cloaks shown here, the one on the left is of old-rose embroidered silk, the centre one of embroidered liberty satin, while the third is of while cloth, embroidered. The hat in the small picture is of Sevres velvet with white aigrettes.

Mrs. Helen Freese who has been visiting in New York for sometime past, is now contemplating an extended tour of Europe before returning to this coast. Her many friends will regret her prolonged absence but will wish her a delightful trip.

Mrs. Paris Kilborn has opened her Pacific Grove home after months spent in New York and other eastern cities. On her westbound trip Mrs. Kilborn was accompanied by her sister, Mrs. W. D. Coonish, her neice, Mrs. E. Tillney and Mrs. S. E. Hooper.

Mr. and Mrs. Parker Whitney came down from their home at Rocklin Saturday and are occupying apartments in the Hotel St. Francis.

Mrs. Peter Fletcher and her little daughter of Yonkers, N. Y., arrived during the week on a visit to Mrs. Fletcher's sister, Miss Irene Tay. Mrs. Fletcher was formerly Miss Hattie Tay, one of the well known and attractive Tay sister of this city.

Mrs. George W. Downing, accompanied by her sister, Miss Florence Cluff, is enjoying a visit at Los Gatos. Miss Cluff entertained several of her girl friends on Saturday last.

The Misses Gertrude and Marian Mills have been guests of Mrs. Lewis Risdon Meade at Byron Springs.

Major and Mrs. Foster arrived from Honolulu during the week. Major Foster belongs to the 5th Cavalry, U. S. A. He will take a five months leave.

Mr. and Mrs. Athol McBean (Margaret Newhall) who have been enjoying their honeymoon trip abroad sailed for home on August 13th. Mrs. William Mayo Newhall who is spending the summer in Santa Barbara will come to the city to welcome her daughter when she arrives late in August.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Clay Miller Jr. (formerly Madeline Bohrmann) who have been spending the summer at the Miller home in Sausalito will close the house on September 1 and come to the city. They have taken rooms at the Colonial Hotel for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Van Bergen, Miss Mina Van Bergen, Mrs. Anna L. Bauer and young Nicholas Van Bergen who have been spending the summer at the Hacienda, the beautiful country home of the C. J. Fosters in Ross Valley, have returned to town and opened their handsome Pacific Avenue house for the winter.

The Wellington Greggs and their two attractive daughters have taken rooms at the St. Regis on Gough street for the winter.

Miss Minerva Hamilton of Sausalito is the guest of Miss Helen Wheeler at her attractive bungalow on the McCloud.

Late letters from Mrs. E. Walton Hedges report her enjoying an auto tour through Wales with a merry party of friends. Mrs. Hedges has taken a cottage in Wales. Mrs. Hedges will pass the month of October in Paris.

Captain McMaster, U. S. A., now quartered at the Monterey Presidio, gave a dinner party at Hotel Del Monte on Monday night to six friends. The table was decorated handsomely in red, white and lavender sweet peas.

Recent arrivals among the "Service Set" at the Fairmont include Mrs. W. A. Glasford, U. S. N., J. H. Rowen, U. S. N., S. H. Laws Jr. and Mrs. Laws, U. S. N., W. H. Wilderdink, C. A. Woodruff, U. S. N.

Mrs. Walter D. Mansfield was the hostess at an elaborate luncheon on Saturday last at the Hotel Rafael, followed by a tea at the Golf Club later in the afternoon. Mrs. Mansfield has been giving a series of these luncheons during the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Taylor (Ethel Thompson) have gone on a hunting trip ten miles above Healdsburg. They will be away two or three weeks.

Mrs. A. A. Watkins who has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. Wolfe, wife of Captain Wolfe, U. S. A., now stationed in Alaska, has returned to her home in Sausalito.

Mrs. Marguerite Hanford who has been the guest of Mrs. E. Walton Hedges in Wales, left for Paris where she will join Miss Hilda Clough of California. All these California ladies are thoroughly enjoying their travels and will be gone until next spring.

One of the most delightful although quite informal teas of the midsummer season was given by Mrs. Alexander McCracken at her home on Scott street on Saturday afternoon in honor of her cousin, Mrs. Parker, wife of Captain Parker, U. S. N., who has just returned from Manila.

After all the watching and waiting anxiously for the return of Mrs. Buck from Manila her friends are again disappointed. Captain and Mrs. Buck will not return to San Francisco until January. The younger set are particularly disappointed as Mrs. Buck it was fully expected would early this season start a new dancing club composed of the most exclusive younger members of society.

DR. MATILDA A. FEELEY

Is now located at 1700 Sutter Street. Diseases of women and children. Hours 2 to 4 and 7 to 8 p. m.

THE BONNET SHOP

Importers of REAL PARISIAN MILLINERY

121 GEARY STREET

Our Specialty, Strictly High Class Tailored Hats at Popular Prices

NOBLE

EDUCATIONAL

Miss West's School

2457 SCOTT STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Thirty-sixth year opens August 16, 1909. Accredited to University of California, Stanford, Wellesley, Vassar and Smith.

MISS HELEN A. O'CONNELL, PRINCIPAL

Miss Head's School

2538 CHANNING WAY, BERKELEY, CAL.

Boarding and day school for girls, accredited to the University of California, Stanford, Vassar, Smith and Wellesley; 22nd year begins August 9, 1909.

MARY E. WILSON, M. L., PRINCIPAL

The Chandler School For Girls

LOS ALTOS, CALIFORNIA

Beautiful grounds covering six acres in the foothills, three and one-half miles from Stanford University. Outdoor study and classwork. Address

MRS. MARY CHANDLER, Los Altos, California.

Castilleja School

PALO ALTO, CALIFORNIA

Home and Day School for Girls. College preparatory and general courses. Intermediate and primary departments. Domestic Science, Music, Art, Out-of-Door Gymnasium. Pupils admitted to Stanford, University of California, Wellesley, and Smith, without examination. Illustrated Catalogue. Term opens August 30, 1909. Principal, MISS MARY I. LOCKEY, A. B.

The Hamlin School

A Boarding and Day School for Girls

Opens Monday, August 9, 1909.

Accredited by the California Universities and by Eastern colleges. Advanced courses of study are offered to high school graduates and to those who have left school, with lectures by professors from the University of California and elsewhere. There are also special courses and those leading to a school diploma. Pupils charged from the week of entrance.

In place of the kindergarten, a French school has been opened, where the French language is taught by means of charts, pictures, games, songs and stories.

Classes in Instrumental and Vocal Music and in Drawing and Painting are formed, and facilities are given for Horseback Riding, Lawn Tennis, Basket Ball, etc. For particulars, address MISS HAMLIN, 2230 Pacific Avenue, San Francisco.

Boone's University School for Boys

BERKELEY

Commences its twenty-eighth year, Tuesday, August 10th. Accredited to the University of California, Stanford, University of Michigan, Cornell and Pennsylvania.

Apply for Catalogue to

2029 Durant Ave. P. R. BOONE, Principal

California Conservatory of Music

Is now located in its new magnificent building

147 PRESIDIO AVENUE

Between Jackson and Washington Streets

San Francisco Business College

CORNER MARKET, EDDY AND POWELL STREETS, SAN FRANCISCO.

Newly equipped in quartered oak. New location in center of business district. In close touch with the great opportunities for well trained young people in the new San Francisco.

THE LYCEUM

2590 PINE STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Prepares for university, the law and medical colleges; seventeenth year; here you can save time and money; excellent teachers; special coaching for any examination. We have prepared hundreds successfully; attend the school where you get the best preparation; day and evening sessions.

"Your husband has merely fainted."

"Dear, dear, these men always do things by halves."

Stage

Variegated Vaudeville

The Orpheum's bill for this week offers plenty of variety. Tumbling, dancing, fantasy, song, sketch, slack-wire work, music and painting combine to make a kaleidoscopic program in which the most blase vaudeville patron can find something to suit his fancy. The most sensational thing offered is the act by the Curzon sisters, advertised as the human butterflies. They are more than that—they are the human bulldogs so far as strength of jaw is concerned. Suspended over the stage is a bar with a rope fastened to each end. To each rope is attached a bit of leather, and to these the Curzon sisters cling with their teeth while the bar, some twelve feet long and fifteen feet above the floor, is whirled rapidly. The two performers are swung around high above the stage at a rapid rate, the speed suspending them in an almost horizontal position at times—and during this they are kept in the air entirely by the grip of their teeth on the leather. Not satisfied with being merely swung through the air, they whirl themselves while being whirled—do a whirl within a whirl, if the use of the dizzying word so many times may be permitted. They shake at their frail hold as would the bulldog whose jaws theirs resemble in tenacious grip. During one whirl they spread drapery upon which colored lights are thrown, giving a beautiful effect. It is an amazing act, made the more so by the appearance of the two girls, who do not look at all athletic. The smaller one is very pretty and demure, a country lassie in demeanor—but what a jaw! Her teeth would make a dentist dream of starvation. Great diversion is furnished by Wilbur Mack and Nella Walker, in their skit, "The Girl and the Pearl," which is a rapid fire of repartee mixed with a little singing and dancing. Miss Walker has a laugh that nobody can resist. At her companion's witty savings she throws back her head and laughs with such utter lack of restraint, with such heartiness and apparent mirth, that the audience cannot resist joining her. She has a charming personality and a dashing appearance, and is ably supplemented by Mack, the personification of a "wise one." Another pair that furnishes considerable amusement is John World and Mindell Kingston, who sing, dance and chatter in an inconsequential sketch. World does a very good piece of work as the broken down actor, while Miss Kingston displays much cleverness in her song, "I Want a Home." Both dance very well, and succeed in establishing an intimate friendliness with the audience. A novelty is furnished in Herr Rubens, who dashes off paintings at a terrific rate. He has an easel on which is mounted a piece of glass with a light behind it. With great sweeps and slaps of the brush he spreads paint with almost incredible rapidity and when he has finished there is as pretty a Christmas card as you would want to see—moonlight and snow and sunsets and all that sort of thing. He employs some art and an unusual amount of skill. The five Avolos take up part of the program in thumping near-music out of xylophones, those instruments of torture for the hammering of which they get real money, I understand. They take themselves very seriously, as do some of their auditors. Really, it is a serious matter to so shatter harmony. It is worse when one member of the aggregation sings. Let's try to forget it.

—W. J. W.

Dustin Farnum in "Cameo Kirby"

Next Monday night, August 23, at the Van Ness Theatre, Dustin Farnum presents a new play called "Cameo Kirby" written by Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson, a pair of celebrated novelists who made a very successful debut as collaborating dramatists when they turned out "The Man From Home," which ran for a year in New York and thirty-six weeks in Chicago. In the Farnum play, the authors have seized upon a fertile time and locale for the action of their story. The time is about 1832, the place New Orleans and the country surrounding that attractive city. In this picturesque setting is introduced the unusual character of Eugene Kirby, a Mississippi river gambler, nicknamed "Cameo" Kirby because of his fondness for a jewel that had saved his life. About the quaint character, which Mr. Farnum of course plays, the authors have constructed a romantic story, full of thrilling situations yet never overstepping the bounds of probability. The play and character are essentially human, and Mr. Farnum's interpretation of the title role will add a remarkably effective characterization to the long gallery of types this favorite actor has created. In addition to that played by Mr. Farnum, there are several characters that contribute genuine comedy to the play. One of these is that of Larkin Bunce, Kirby's "side-partner" on the river, which falls to the lot of that splendid character actor, McKee Rankin. May Buckley is Mr. Farnum's leading lady for this season and will be seen in the role of Adele Randall. Maud Hosford has the delightful part of the Creole widow, Mme. Davezas. Donald Gallaher, Richard Pitman, Gordon Johnstone, John Tarrington, George W. Deyo, Ruth Lloyd, Norah Shelby and Jane Kendrick are other members of one of the strongest companies of the year.

FLORENCE OAKLEY

The charming little leading lady of the Bishop players at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland.

Garrick Theatre

Will Greenbaum, San Francisco's only impresario, is to join the ranks of the local theatre managers, and incidentally we are to have a new permanent temple of Thespis in this city. Greenbaum has arranged to take care of the Cort bookings, originally scheduled for the Colonial, now being rebuilt, and will offer them at the Garrick, formerly the Orpheum on Ellis near Fillmore. For years Greenbaum has devoted his energies toward the promulgation of the higher art, and now he takes his first dip into the real theatricals as they are given these days. His first attraction is "The Girl from Rector's," a naughty Frenchy farce that has created no end of a sensation in New York where it has been boldly billed as "A spicy salad with very little dressing." However, critics have all agreed that it has much merit, and is brimful of laughter-provoking situations. An excellent cast, with very few changes from the original is promised, and "The Girl from Rector's" is to remain in our midst two weeks. Greenbaum says the johnnies are already asking for first night seats. The Garrick season starts Sunday, September 5th.

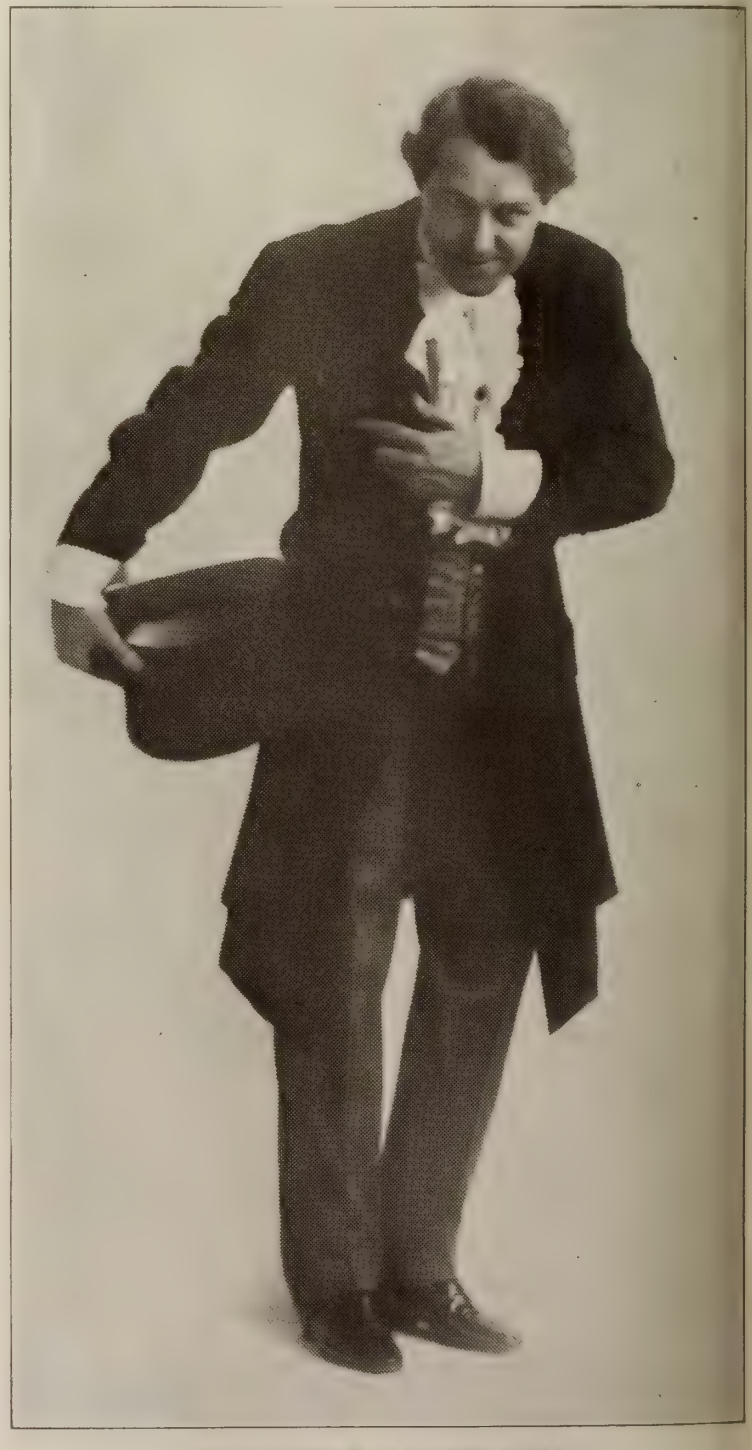
Bohemian Club Concert



All arrangements are completed for the Bohemian Club concert which will be given at the Van Ness Theatre on Thursday afternoon, August 26th. All of the boxes and a good portion of the house have been sold, and the event promises to be a notable musical as well as society affair. Mr. Paul Steindorf will direct a full orchestra of sixty pieces, supplemented by the Bohemian Club chorus of fifty voices. Features of the program will include Peter Robertson's Christmas Ode with music by Theodor Vogt, the Montezuma Suite of four selections by H. J. Stewart, two or three songs by Mackenzie Gordon and several selections from the music of this year's jinks by Wallace A. Sabin, "St. Patrick at Tara." Seats are on sale at the club.

Alcazar Favorites Back

There is abundance of attractiveness in the bill announced by the Alcazar management for the coming week, commencing Monday evening. Evelyn Vaughan, the popular leading woman, will reappear after an absence of two months; Will R. Walling, one of last season's Alcazar idols, has been drawn from retirement to portray a character for which no actor is better fitted than himself; Grace Travers, favorably known to local theatregoers, will make her debut as an Alcazar actress, and, last, but by no means least in magnetism, the offering will be Charles Klein's great American play, "The Lion and the Mouse." It will be the first presentation of this celebrated drama by a stock company. Miss Vaughan will have the role of Shirley Rossmore, the young woman who fights and conquers John Burkett Ryder, a Napoleon of finance. He is a man of strong character and tremendous energy—a human dynamo—and her only capital consists of brains and determination. She is in Europe when her father, a jurist, is reduced to penury through Ryder's machinations, and on the homeward-bound steamer she meets and captures the love of his son, Jefferson. Confronted by necessity of earning her bread, she takes up literature and, under the non de plume of Sarah Green, writes a book entitled "The Great American Octopus," the central figure of which bears such a striking resemblance to the senior Ryder that he sends for her to visit him at his home. There she impresses him so favorably that, unaware of her real identity, he engages her to be his amanuensis. He tells her of his son's infatuation for Shirley Rossmore and requests her to "save the boy" by marrying him herself. The big scene of the play is that in which she tells Ryder who she is and scathingly denounces his methods of enriching himself by impoverishing others. She (the mouse) finally defeats him (the lion), and the thrilling story has a happy termination. Anyone who has witnessed "The Lion and the Mouse" and is aware of Miss Vaughan's dramatic force can foresee how effective she will be as Shirley. Mr. Walling will be seen as the elder Ryder, Augustus Phillips as his son, Howard Hickman as Judge Rossmore, Burt Wesner as Senator Roberts, Louis Bennison as ex-Judge Stott, Grace Travers as Senator Roberts' daughter, Bessie Barriscale as Miss Nesbitt, Adele Belgarde as Mrs. Ryder, Christie MacLean as Mrs. Rossmore, with the remainder of the Alcazar favorites in appropriate roles. There are four acts in the play, and as each of them permits sumptuous staging some pretty pictures are assured.

Bacon's Farewell

Beginning with a matinee Sunday afternoon the American Theatre players will offer as their farewell attraction "The Hills of California" from the pen of the late Hon. Judson C. Brusie, author of "Lonesome Town" and other notable plays. Frank Bacon, for whom this play was especially written, will appear in the leading comedy role during its limited engagement at the American Theatre. This will be Mr. Bacon's farewell appearance in San Francisco for at least a year. He is planning to tour the country with "The Hills of California" and will open in New York immediately after the conclusion of this engagement. Mr. Bacon appeared in the initial performance of "The Hills of California" in this city. On that occasion the Senate and Assembly of which its author, Mr. Bruise, was a member of the upper house, adjourned as a compliment to him and attended in a body. The story of "The Hills of California" weaves around the people of a rural locality. A son born out of wedlock to the daughter of a respected farmer of Amador County inherits the estate of his father's father. Ariel Hill, who is next in kin, conceives a plan to rid the community of the child, and thereby come into what rightfully belongs to the son of the wronged girl. The child is kidnapped and hidden away for nine years in San Francisco. His mother engages in an indefatigable search and then with the aid of a young lawyer ultimately finds the boy. The search for the boy is made through the medium of the Salvation Army of which the mother becomes a member and is known among her workers as Captain Lucy. Worrying because of his daughter's protracted absence the father comes to San Francisco to hunt her and finding her tries to induce her to return home with him. She prefers to continue the search and in order to be with her and protect her, he too joins the Army. This is one of the stirring climaxes of the play. After the child is restored to its mother's arms the play ends happily by Lucy marrying the young lawyer who aided her in her long search for the boy. "The Hills of California" will be presented on a most elaborate plan as well as an artistic one, scenic effects being especially built for this production.

DUSTIN FARNUM IN "CAMEO KIRBY"
At the Van Ness Theatre.

Goodwin Comedy at Ye Liberty

In "Classmates," Robert Edeson's well known success which they are offering for the first time anywhere at popular prices, the Bishop players at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland have an attraction that has filled the big theatres at nearly every performance, but in keeping with their policy the piece will make way for a new production after the performances this Sunday afternoon and evening. The change is one that should keep the theatre in popular favor however, for it will be the amusing De Mille comedy, "The Genius," the piece in which Nat Goodwin and Edna Goodrich starred both before and after they were married. Rarely has the stage known a comedy that has contained more genuine wit and humor than "The Genius," and a more original plot—if plot it may be termed. For it tells of the experiences of a young New Yorker in his endeavor to acquire the "artistic temperament" in order to win the favor of the girl of his choice. He buys outright the output of three struggling artists, a painter, a sculptor and a musician, and through his wealth and social standing is immediately stamped a "genius." He soon tires of living up to the exacting role though, and when he finally denounces himself in the height of his fame his friends declare that art has slightly unhinged his mind. During his art education he meets with a charming little artists' model and a delightful romance is brought in. The authors have used a novel method of extracting their hero from his embarrassing position and leaving him free to marry the humble model. George Friend should fit into the Goodwin role nicely, and Edith Lyle, the new ingenue, should be charming as the little model. The remaining favorites will all be seen to advantage and the usual elaborate scenic surroundings will be provided. An elaborate production of "Romeo and Juliet," with Florence Oakley and Sydney Ayres in the leading roles, is in preparation to follow "The Genius."

EVELYN VAUGHAN

The clever leading woman at the Alcazar Theatre.

"The Witching Hour" Coming

The Messrs. Shubert's production of "The Witching Hour," with John Mason in the stellar role, will be the offering at the Valencia Theatre for an engagement lasting but two weeks and commencing Sunday evening, August 29. There seems to be no question as to the public's fondness for the drama with a mystic element. This is fully proven in the record of "The Witching Hour," Augustus Thomas' psychological play, in which John Mason appeared for more than a year at the fashionable Hackett Theatre in New York. Mr. Mason played the part of Jack Brookfield, the hypnotic gambler, nightly in New York all last season and part of the present season to an attendance that completely nonplussed the skeptics who, up to the advent of the famous play, failed to see any chance for psychological drama, dealing with the problems of hypnotism and thought suggestion. The scientific discussion of telepathy in "The Witching Hour" is not presented in the prosy cut-and-dried manner one is accustomed to. On the contrary, the lines in the celebrated Thomas play teem with the richest bits of sparkling dialogue, and it is pronounced not only one of the most instructive dramas of the decade but also one of the richest in comedy. "The Witching Hour" is in four acts, and the scenes depict spirited scenes in Louisville, Ky., and Washington, D. C. Mr. Mason, during his appearances here will be supported by the original Hackett Theatre cast, including, besides Mr. Mason in his best of character studies, Russ Whytal, Amelia Gardner, Charlotte Ives, Clinton Preston, Albert Andruss, Edward See, E. L. Walton, W. E. Butterfield, Harry S. Hadfield, W. H. Sadler, Belle Howell Bohn, Preston W. Crewe and Robert Bond. The scenery and paraphernalia as seen in New York will be utilized here. There will be matinees on Wednesday and Saturday and seats will be ready Monday morning.

JOHN MASON AND RUSS WHYTAL
In "The Witching Hour" coming to the Valencia Theatre.

Orpheum Novelties

The Orpheum has certainly dealt a death blow to the ancient proverb, "There's Nothing New Under the Sun," and the program to be presented at this justly popular theatre next week will afford another striking illustration of this assertion. An interesting novelty will be the appearance of George Auger and his little company in "Jack the Giant Killer," a clever and amusing playlet founded on that most celebrated and popular fairy tale in which it is illustrated that truth is sometimes as strange as fiction, for Mr. Auger is a real giant while Ernest Rommel who personates Jack is the smallest actor and singing comedian in America. Messrs. Auger and Rommel are ably assisted by Sylvia Hearne, Caroline Haas and Daisy Robinson. This act appeals to children of all ages. Joseph Hart's "Bathing Girls," a pretentious ensemble in six scenes and perhaps the most novel series of musical specialties this prolific producer has yet evolved will be another strong bid for popular favor. "Bathing Girls" is really a miniature girl review of rapid fire quick changing scenes as carefully prepared, as far as scenery, costumes, lighting, etc., as a complete musical comedy. The Thalia Quartette, which will be heard for the first time in this city is an organization that has met with great success in the British Isles. The Quartette consists of Dan Thomas, tenor, who thrice carried off the Blue Ribbon at the National Eisteddford of Wales, Ivor Davies, tenor and gold medallist; Idris Perkins, baritone and comedian, double gold medallist, holder of two silver cups and thrice winner of chief solo honors at the National Eisteddford of Wales and formerly comedian of the Gaiety Theatre, London, and Leonard Bean, bass, who has been rightly termed the "Ideal Basso Profundo." Carson and Willard, two Dutch comedians, will present an act which they style "The Dutch in Egypt." The idea is very funny and presents a couple of Germans in exaggerated tourist dress in a scene representing the Sphinx and the Desert of the Sahara. Carson and Willard are both capital and original fun makers whose humor is irresistible. Next week will be the last of Wilbur Mack and Nellie Walker who will present the new musical sketch entitled, "The Bachelor and the Maid." It will also terminate the engagements of World and Kingston, Herr J. Rubens and that marvelous aerial sensation, the Curzon sisters. A new series of Orpheum Motion Pictures will close the performance.

GEORGE AUGER AND HIS COMPANY
The tallest actor in the world in "Jack the Giant Killer" next week at the Orpheum.

Daring Deeds at the Chutes

A triumvirate of headliners of the unusual kind will open an entirely new bill of open-air attractions at the New Chutes this Sunday afternoon and night. Two of the performers will put on acts seen for the first time in the West. For uniqueness and sensationalism the performance of Marino, who will permit a seven passenger automobile to run him down, promises to set a new standard. Le Roy in his slide for life across the Chutes grounds suspended by his teeth from an aerial wire should be the joy of those patrons who admire feats of daring, and Master Humbert and his Royal Marine band offer satisfaction for the lovers of martial music. Assisting the new arrivals in entertaining followers of the Fillmore street park will be Florence Spray, who will be seen for the last times Sunday; Towers in his long-distance dives from platform to flaming tank; the La Forge comedy trio in variety songs and dances, the burlesques of the skating clowns and many new reels of open-air motion pictures. Marino, of Berlin, has been brought to the Chutes direct from New York, where he lately concluded a series of fifty exhibitions at Hammerstein's Victoria. Sunday he will deposite his 350 pounds of avoirdupois on the ground and permit a seven-passenger Thomas Flyer, filled with occupants, to pass over his body. With the Royal Marine Band comes Master Humbert who claims to be the world's youngest conductor. He is fifteen years of age and musician enough to have composed a number of marches and two-steps of merit. Some of these will be played during his present engagement. He is said to lead with the precision of a veteran. For the act to be put on by Le Roy a pole, 150 feet high, has been erected and a wire stretched from this to a point near the double-whirl. Suspended by his teeth the daring performer will slide over the heads of the spectators at terrific speed. He will give exhibitions afternoon and night and all next week.

In the Limelight

During the recent engagement of Sothern and Marlowe at the Academy of Music a single afternoon performance of "Romeo and Juliet" netted $2600. Just after the close of the notable engagement, Mr. Sothern sailed for Europe on business connected with his forthcoming autumn productions.

Work upon the new and magnificent Columbia Theatre is progressing very rapidly and the new year will see the playhouse occupied by the great attractions booked by Gottlob and Marx. It will be the finest theatre San Francisco has ever had.

Blanche Bates follows Dustin Farnum at the Van Ness Theatre. She will be seen in the intensely dramatic play "The Fighting Hope."

The first big musical comedy to be seen at the Van Ness Theatre this autumn will be George M. Cohan's production of "The Talk of New York" which he prepared for Victor Moore and in which that comedian is to appear here. A large company will be brought all the way across the continent for the engagement at the Van Ness.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove. Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgr. Phone Market 500

Two Weeks Beginning Monday, August 23, Matinees Saturdays Only America's Premier Romantic Actor
DUSTIN FARNUM
In the Brilliant Play of Love and Adventure
CAMEO KIRBY
By Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson
A Distinguished Company in Support
(Liebler & Co., Managers)

VALENCIA THEATRE Valencia Street, near Thirteenth. Phone Market 17

Starting Sunday Evening, August 29, Matinees Wednesday and Saturday
S. S. and Lee Shubert's Most Pretentious Theatric Offering
JOHN MASON in Augustus Thomas' Greatest Play
THE WITCHING HOUR
Precisely Original New York Cast and Production.
Prices: $2.00 to 50c. Seats Ready Monday, at Box Office and Emporium.
Mail Orders Now.

AMERICAN THEATRE Market St., nr. Seventh. Phone Market 381

One Week, Commencing Sunday Matinee, August 22,
That Quaint Comedian FRANK BACON
In the Rural Classic
THE HILLS OF CALIFORNIA
By Judson C. Brusie.
Next—John Mason in "The Witching Hour."

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Cor. Sutter and Steine. Class "A" Building. Phone West 1400

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers
Week Commencing Monday, August 23, EVELYN VAUGHAN and the Full Strength of the Alcazar Company in Charles Klein's Great Play
THE LION AND THE MOUSE
Its First Production in Stock
Prices—Nights, 25c to $1.00. Matinees, 25c to 50c.
Matinee Saturday and Sunday.

NEW ORPHEUM O'Farrell Street, between Stockton and Powell. Phone Douglas 70

Safest and Most Magnificent Theatre in America
Week Beginning This Sunday Afternoon—Matinee Every Day
ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE
GEORGE AUGER, the Tallest Actor in the World and His Players in "Jack the Giant Killer"; JOSEPH HART'S BATHING GIRLS with Clenwood White and Pearl Hunt; THALIA QUARTETTE; CARSON & WILLARD; WORLD & KINGSTON; WILBER MACK and NELLA WALKER; HERR J. RUBENS; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES. Last Week of the International Aerial Sensation, CURZON SISTERS.
Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE Oakland, Cal. Direction H. W. Bishop

Commencing Monday, August 23, Every Evening,
The BISHOP PLAYERS Present Nat Goodwin's Best Comedy
THE GENIUS
Same Popular Prices, 25c and 50c. No Higher.
Next "Romeo and Juliet."

NEW CHUTES Fillmore, Eddy, Turk and Webster. Open Morning, Afternoon and Night

GREAT NEW FREE BILL
MARINO, He Permits Himself to be Run Over by a Seven-Passenger Automobile.
MASTER HUMBERT, World's Youngest Conductor and His Royal Marine Band.
DARE DEVIL LE ROY, the Man of the Iron Jaw in His Slide for Life Across the Chutes.
TOWERS, in His 97-foot Plunge Into Flames.
FLORENCE SPRAY, Last Appearances This Sunday.
DEMON, LA FORGE COMEDY TRIO, FUNNY CLOWNS, OUT DOOR MOTION PICTURES. TAKE THE JOLLY JOY JAUNT

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

The Fortune Teller

(Continued from Page 11.)

"I was eight days locked up in the cave. The captain of the bandits never came near me. So far as I could learn, he had not been in the neighborhood since the day I told his fortune. There was nothing remarkable about this, for, as one of my guards told me, he frequently absented himself for long periods.

"'You know,' said the guard to me, 'our chief goes to the infernal regions once in a while and only returns when he feels like it. We do not know what he does when he is away.'

"By dint of pleading and as compensation for telling the fortune of every rascal in the gang, prophesying to some that they would be hanged, and to others that they would die of old age, I managed to get them to take me out of the cave during part of the day and tie me to a tree, where I could get a breath of fresh air. However, there was always a sentinel with a loaded gun standing at my side. One evening, about six o'clock, the bandits brought in a poor devil of a farmer whom they had caught in the valley below. He was weeping like a child who has been whipped, and was crying continually: 'Give me back my twenty dollars. If you only knew how hard I worked to make that money! All summer I've toiled in the sun to get this sum and take it back to my wife and children to carry us over the winter. Have pity on me, gentlemen, for the love of the Holy Virgin; give me back my twenty dollars.'

"A roar of laughter answered the pleading of the old man. I, tied to the tree, was trembling with fear and horror, for you must remember that even we gypsies have families and love them.

"'Don't be a fool! exclaimed one of the bandits, addressing himself to the farmer. 'You have more important things than your money to think about.'

"'Why?' asked the poor devil, not understanding.

"'You are in the power of Parron.'

"'Parron? I never heard of him. I am from Alicante.

"'Well, my friend, Parron means death. Everyone who falls into his power must die. You have four minutes to make your peace with God.'

"'For God's sake, listen to me!' said the old man.

"'Go on.'

"'I have six children and an unfortunate wife. I should say widow, as I must die. I can see in your eyes that you are worse than wild beasts. Yes, worse, because animals of the same species do not eat each other. Oh, forgive me! I do not know what I am saying! Is there not a man among you who is a father? Do you not know what it is to have six children starve to death? Gentlemen, have pity! It is only for their sakes that I care to preserve my life, for what is life to me? An endless chain of work and suffering! I must live for the sake of my children.'

"The old man threw himself upon the ground and dragged himself at the feet of his executioners. Oh, what an expression he had! Like those Christian martyrs I have heard about at the time when Nero threw them to the lions. The men were evidently moved; they looked at each other doubtfully and then one of them spoke up and said—"

"What did he say?" asked the captain-general, who had been deeply affected by the story of the gypsy.

"He said: 'Friends, is it understood between us that Parron shall never know what we are going to do?'

"'Never, never!" stammered the others.

"'Then go free, old man,' exclaimed the one who had first spoken.

"I, myself, made signs to the farmer that he should go as quickly as possible. The poor wretch rose to his feet. 'Quick, go!' they all cried out, turning their backs upon him.

"The old man held out his hand pleadingly. 'Is it not enough to escape with your life?' they exclaimed.

"Weeping, he walked away, and a moment later disappeared in the forest.

"A half hour went by, during which the bandits swore to each other by all the saints that they would never tell Parron they had allowed a man to escape alive, and then Parron himself dashed up on his white horse, dragging the poor farmer along by a rope.

"The bandits were nearly frightened to death. The chief slowly dismounted and taking his double-barreled gun, pointed it at his men.

"'Fools! Scoundrels! I do not know why I do not kill you all! Give this man back the money you took from him.'

"One of the band drew out the twenty dollars and handed them to the farmer, who threw himself at the feet of the chief with cries of gratitude. Parron said to him: 'May the peace of God be with you. Had it not been for you I should never have known what kind of men I had. Now go!'

"The man had not gone twenty paces when Parron called him back.

"'What can I do for you, sir?' asked the poor devil filled with gratitude toward the man who had given him his life and fortune.

"'Do you know Parron?' asked the chief.

"'No, sir, I do not.'

"'You are mistaken,' answered the bandit. 'I am Parron.'

"The farmer looked at him in astonishment and the chief threw his gun up to his shoulder and shot the man dead. The only words the dying man uttered were: 'May God curse you!'

After Shaving

THE BEST PART OF THE SHAVE IS WHEN YOU COME TO

POND'S EXTRACT

Relieves Irritation
Prevents Inflammation
Assures Comfort

Used by men of discrimination everywhere. Sold only in sealed bottles—never in bulk. Write for interesting booklet on shaving.—mailed free on request.

Lamont, Corliss & Co., 78 Hudson St. Sole Agents, New York

A SKIN OF BEAUTY IS A JOY FOREVER

DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S

ORIENTAL CREAM

OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER

Purifies as well as Beautifies the Skin. No other cosmetic will do it.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash and Skin Diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 60 years; no other has, and it is so harmless we taste it to be sure it is properly made. Accept no countefeit of similar name. The distinguished Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut-on (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'Gouraud's Cream' as the least harmful of all the skin preparations."

For sale by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers.

GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL TOILET POWDER

For infants and adults. Exquisitely perfumed. Relieves Skin Irritation, cures Sunburn and renders an excellent complexion. Price 25 Cents, by Mail.

GOURAUD'S POUDRE SUBTILE

Removes Superfluous Hair. Price $1.00, by mail

FERD. T. HOPKINS, Prop'r, 37 Great Jones St., New York City.

LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST

DIAMONDS AND GEMS

BALDWIN JEWELRY CO.

1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

GIERSBERGER WINES

The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.

THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY

Phone Oakland 2510 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

"Notwithstanding my terror, I noted that the rope which bound me to the tree seemed to have been loosened. It had been cut by one of the bullets that had been fired at the farmer. I stood quite still, hoping for a chance to escape. Then Parron turned to his men and pointing to the dead body, exclaimed: 'Now you can take his money. You are a lot of fools! Were you going to allow this man to escape, who could have identified every one of us, and we would all be hanged?

"While the men were digging a grave, Parron turned his back to me, and that gave me a chance to slip away. It was now dark, but by the light of the stars I managed to find my donkey, which was quietly grazing, not far away. I came here at full speed, never stopping till I arrived at your excellency's residence, so please give me the hundred gold dollars which you promised to anyone who would give you a faithful description of Parron."

The money was paid to him and he went out leaving the Count de Montijo and the man who told me this story almost speechless with astonishment. The question now was whether the prophecy of the fortune teller would come true.

A fortnight later, about nine o'clock in the morning of a bright spring day, many thousands of idlers had gathered in the street of San Juan to witness the departure of two companies of soldiers who were being sent by the captain-general to bring in Parron dead or alive. His place of refuge was known and his description, as well as that of his followers.

"The lieutenant is going to call the roll in a minute," said one soldier to another, "and I don't see Lopez."

"It is certainly strange," was the reply, "for he is always the first to arrive when it is a question of attempting to capture Parron. He hates him worse than the devil hates holy water."

"Don't you know what has happened?" asked another soldier who had overheard the conversation.

"Hello! This is our new comrade. How do you like the service?"

"Very much, indeed." He was a pale but distinguished looking man, to whom the military uniform was very becoming.

"What is that you were going to say?" asked the first soldier.

"Oh, only that Lopez is dead," replied the pale man.

"Lopez? What are you talking about? I saw him only this morning as plainly as I see you, Manuel."

"Parron killed him half an hour ago," replied Manuel.

"Parron? Where?"

"Right here in Granada. The corpse of Lopez has just been found on yonder hill."

They were all silent, and Manuel began to whistle a patriotic song.

"That makes eleven soldiers that have been killed within six days!" exclaimed a sergeant. "It is evidently the intention of Parron to exterminate us all! But how can he be here in Granada?"

Manuel stopped whistling. "An old woman who witnessed the deed said that Parron told her if we went to look for him we would surely find him."

"Comrade!" exclaimed the sergeant, "you talk about this man with the most astonishing indifference, even with contempt."

"Well, Parron is no more than a man, is he?" answered Manuel, disdainfully.

"Fall in!" commanded the captain.

The soldiers formed in two lines and the officer began calling the roll.

Just at that moment it happened that the gypsy, Heredia, was passing, and he stopped for a moment to look at the soldiers. His eyes fell upon Manuel, the new recruit. He stepped back, trying instinctively to hide himself in the crowd. Then after taking a second look at Manuel the gypsy turned and ran as if for his life in the direction of the palace of the captain-general. The new recruit threw up his carbine and took aim at the fleeing gypsy, but a soldier who stood by him pushed aside the weapon.

"He is crazy! One of the soldiers has become crazy!" exclaimed hundreds of people who had witnessed the act. Officers and bystanders surrounded the man, who fought like a demon, and finally succeeded in securing him and tying his hands and feet.

In the meantime Heredia had been stopped by several people who, having heard the shot and seeing him running, mistook him for a criminal.

"Let me go! Or take me to the captain-general!" yelled the gypsy. "I must speak to the Count de Montijo."

"No, indeed," exclaimed those who had caught him. "There are plenty of police here; they will take care of you."

"Then for God's sake," answered Heredia, "see that Parron does not kill me."

"Parron? What's the man talking about?"

"Come with me and you will see."

They conducted the gypsy to the commander of the soldiers.

"Colonel," said Heredia, "this man is Parron, and I am the gypsy who, two weeks ago, gave a description of him to the captain-general."

"Parron! Parron is caught at last! He was masquerading as a soldier!" shouted hundreds of voices.

"There is no doubt about it," said the commander, looking at the bound man; then reading the description which had been given to him by his chief: "We are a stupid lot, the whole of us. But who would ever have thought of looking for the chief of the bandits among the soldiers sent to capture him?"

"It is I who am a fool!" exclaimed Parron, looking at the gypsy with an expression of deadly hatred. "He is the only man I ever captured and allowed to escape with his life. I deserve my fate."

The following week Parron was executed and thus, after all, the prophecy of the gypsy was fulfilled.

BROMO-SELTZER

CURES

HEADACHES

10¢, 25¢, 50¢, & $1.00 Bottles.

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

Eureka Stoves and Ranges

Kitchen Utensils

Hotel Kitchen Outfits a Specialty

"Alaska" and "Opal" Refrigerators

Mantels, Grates, Tiles

NOW LOCATED AT 557-563 MARKET ST., opp. Junction Sutter and Sansome Sts.

PHONE DOUGLAS 4640

A View and a Review

(Continued from Page 10.)

wise that any one who finds prose such as Bierce writes unreadable is wanting in native intelligence no less than taste. Here is truth so self-evident that even the invertionist who will write standing on his head should have no trouble to grasp it with one or the other of his prehensile feet. Born aristocrat of letters, Bierce writes naturally for the few. Nowadays whoever writes naturally writes for the few. So clear, so pellucid, is Bierce that the many understand him not. How it may be on Mars I know not, but on this planet, the indubitable habitat of "homo sapiens," wisdom makes its appearance for all the world like a "sport," to struggle hopelessly for existence, for survival, against the swamping effects of folly. The "mostly fools" and their money are not easily parted by such penmen as Bierce and Flaubert. It is style such as Bierce's that the people hate, because, as the author of "Madame Bovary" points out, it sets them on work, forces them to think. To read Bierce without being moved to thought being impossible, persons incapable of thought are naturally moved not to read Bierce. True, he does not altogether meet the requirements of the execrable taste of the vulgar herd, to which names writ in deadly cesspools are sweeter than those writ in the living water of wells of English undefiled. No wonder he affirms "The Right to Take Oneself Off." Hear the conclusion of "The Shadow on the Dial" or rather of the "Right" aforesaid:

"Why do we honor the valiant soldier, sailor, fireman? For obedience to duty? Not at all; that alone—without the peril—seldom elicits remark, never evokes enthusiasm. It is because he faced without flinching the risk of that supreme disaster—or what we feel to be such—death. But look you: the soldier braves the danger of death; the suicide braves death itself! The leader of the forlorn hope may not be struck. The sailor who voluntarily goes down with his ship may be picked up or cast ashore. It is not certain that the wall will topple until the fireman shall have descended with his precious burden. But the suicide—his is the foeman that never missed a mark, his the sea that gives nothing back; the wall that he mounts bears no man's weight. And his, at the end of it all, is the dishonored grave where the wild ass of public opinion

'Stamps o'er his head but cannot break his sleep.'"

It is permitted a man not to concede "the right to take one self off," but he who does not joyfully recognize the right to write like that would better never have learned to read.

Summer Resort Arrivals

Aetna Springs: Miss Lincoln, Miss Schussler, Miss A. Schussler, Miss Hamilton, Mrs. W. B. Tubbs, Miss Ruth Haskins, Miss Vera Havemeyer, Miss Ethel Havemeyer, Chapin Tubbs, Dudley Valentine, Mrs. I. L. Requa, Miss Amy Long, Miss Sallie Long, Miss K. O'Donnell, Dr. A. E. Phelan, Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Reed, Dr. and Mrs. Kaspar Pischel, Miss Inez Pischel, Miss Leaha Pischel, Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Meyer, Mrs. A. N. Norton, C. H. Bush, Mrs. M. Good, Miss Ella Good, Will Rancel, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Lavenson, Miss Schamberg, Lester J. Dinkelspiel, C. S. Broadwell, T. White, Miss Annie N. Daly, Mrs. J. C. Hoover.

Hotel Del Monte: San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. Edward S. Rothchild, Lewis Howard Rothchild and maid, Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Sloss and children, Mrs. Harry F. Allen, Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Heller and maid, Walter S. Heller, Mrs. M. Burns, Mrs. S. G. Harris, Mrs. C. E. Godfrey, Misses Godfrey, Albert Schwabacher, Walter Haas, Sig Niederberger, A. Leitch, Mrs. A. Meertief, Miss Hannah Meertief and maid, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Chambers, H. E. Chambers, Robert Chambers, Walter Chambers, Miss Helen Chambers, Willie Hunt, Milton Davis, A. M. Fournier, Mr. and Mrs. Leo Himmelstern and son, W. B. Godfrey, C. G. Godfrey, Dr. Florence N. Ward, Miss Adeline Bogart, Mr. and Mrs. Cuyler Lee, Mr. and Mrs. Raleigh P. Hove, Mr. and Mrs. Scott Seaton and chauffeur, R. A. Pabst, Lou F. Sullivan, Mae E. Sullivan, Clinton E. Worden and valet, Mr. and Mrs. Mansfield Lovell, Miss Hathaway, Miss Lovell and chauffeur, Mrs. J. F. Brien, Miss Brien, Miss Osborne, H. G. Martell, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Best Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Breck, J. P. Horgan, Emily Travis, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Richardson, Lucia Chamberlain, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Rutherford

Byron Hot Springs: San Francisco, Mrs. H. Goldsmith, Mrs. C. Peach, Judge Geo. H. Cabaniss, H. C. Farquharson, Mrs. I. Davis, L. Faust, D. M. Schoenfeld, J. E. Strachen, Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Hilmer, Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Duffy, F. H. Strohm, C. J. Brown, wife and child, Mrs. E. B. Barker, W. A. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Firmstone, G. Eppenheimer, Frank Shibley, Mr. and Mrs. D. F. Mullin, Mrs. L. B. Raymond and family, J. J. Lynch, W. L. Helvey, J. C. H. Fergerson, A. Newman, Mrs. Bairwald, A. S. Price and wife, F. G. Wier, D. E. Mulligan, W. J. Patterson, Mrs. G. F. LeCert, Mrs. G. Millzner, Mrs. R. Lewis, M. J. McBrearty, Miss Jule Conway, M. L. Schmitt, A. A. Knox, Miss L. Lauppe, W. H. Scott, Jas. Higgins, E. Davis, Henry Bloan, Mrs. S. Sachs and party, Leo. Bruck and wife, Mrs. Paul M. Nippert and daughter, J. D. Lofquist, Jos. Magner, Gertrude and Marion B. Mills, Mrs. A. McCarron, U. G. Lindsay, W. D. Caldwell, Mrs. H. B. Adler and party.

Montara Inn: Mrs. E. F. Charlton, J. A. Wilson, Lloyd Wilson, Miss Margaret Burke, Miss Lenora Burke, Anna T. Haley, of San Mateo; Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Connell, of Oakland; Alice Rose Power, Mrs. E. G. Richards, of Mills College; Morris Wagner, Henry J. Reef, Louis Townsend, M. B. Johnson, C. A. Henderson and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Church, of Oakland; Miss Edna Wilson, Mortimer Savage, Chas. M. Wiggin and Miss Mae Mullen.

MURINE EYE REMEDY CO., Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—We have a little fellow four months old who was troubled for three months after birth with sore eyes. A large amount of pus came from them, accompanied with severe inflammation. Our family Doctor, also an Eye Specialist, attended him without relief.

I saw your MURINE EYE REMEDY advertised in one of our Electric Cars, and utterly discouraged, I resolved to try it, and do you know, in three days' time all worry was over. In one week the Sore Eyes were a thing of the past.

This is an unasked for testimonial, but I know you will accept it as it is sent with much gratitude toward MURINE EYE REMEDY.

Yours truly,
Arthur Snow.

A Domestic Eye Remedy

Compounded by Experienced Physicians. Conforms to Pure Food and Drugs Law. Wins Friends Wherever Used. Ask Druggists for Murine Eye Remedy. Try Murine in Your Eyes. You Will Like Murine. Try it in Baby's Eyes. It Soothes.

Studebaker Motives Remain Constant

Behind every STUDEBAKER automobile stands the unchanging purpose of the maker to produce the best car that it is possible to make for the use for which it is intended. That policy hasn't changed in the slightest respect since the beginning of the history of this organization.

Studebaker Methods Up-to-date

The methods of the STUDEBAKER organization are constantly changing and being improved. There isn't an improvement in automobile building that the STUDEBAKERS haven't tested and if found good, adopted; in fact many of the most modern and improved methods of automobile construction originated in the STUDEBAKER shops.

Fremont at Mission

Studebaker

Phone Douglas 3000

Auto Notes

What is believed to be a manufacturing record for thirty horse-power cars was made on July 31st last by the Studebaker E-M-F "30" Company, on which day 131 Studebaker E-M-F "30" touring cars were shipped. Fifty cars is an average day's output, but owing to a shortage of bodies, the daily average output had been low for several days preceding the 31st. In order to make up the monthly quota of 1250 cars, the factory was run overtime on that day. The body company having caught up with its schedule, the result was the big output. Walter E. Flanders, general manager of the company, says that one of these cars may be assembled in ten minutes, but on the record day assembling one car required about five minutes.

Bert Dingley, the racing driver who has piloted the Chalmers-Detroit and the Thomas to so many victories on the coast the past two years, left for Detroit last Sunday. It is said that Dingley will drive the Chalmers-Detroit in the big events at Indianapolis this month and it is a safe bet that when the eastern cracks go up against the big curly headed boy, they will know that they have been in a race. In the small car race at Santa Monica, Dingley drove the Chalmers "30" at an average speed of 55.2 miles per hour for 202 miles which was four miles faster than Matson, the factory driver, had gotten out of a similar car in the Indiana Road Race. Dingley is one of the "nerviest" drivers who ever sat behind a steering wheel, and at the same time his modesty is well known. After winning the Santa Monica race, the big crowd waited at the grand stand for Dingley to come back and make his bow as the other winner had done, but he was nowhere to be found. His friends chided him afterwards for disappointing the crowd, but Dingley replied that he was not an actor but a driver, and if he had won the race that ought to be enough.

RESERVOIR AT MONTARA, ON OCEAN SHORE RAILWAY

Spring water is distributed by gravity system.

Mr. C. E. Mathewson, Pacific Coast Manager of The Diamond Rubber Company, is in receipt of the following telegram: "Locomobile on Diamond Tires won $10,000 match race with Stearns yesterday at Ascot Park—300 mile race. (Signed) The Diamond Rubber Co., Los Angeles, Cal."

Two punctures and one blow-out was the extent of tire trouble to the Studebaker E-M-F "30" pilot car in the recent Glidden Tour which covered, officially, 2,653 miles, the speedometer showing that about 200 miles more were run up in rerouting portions of the run. Detroit air came back in both front tires, which again brings up the question—why is it that most punctures occur on the rear tires? From this showing George Meinzinger, driver of the pilot car, claims he holds the tire record for the trip.

"Contrary to the general opinion, the Studebaker Automobile Company pays no attention to the calendar in adding improvements to their cars," says Chester N. Weaver, general manager of the Studebaker Bros. "Whenever we find anything that in our opinion would be an improvement, it is given a thorough tryout and if it is found to be desirable it is incorporated in the car at any time without regard to the season of the year. Little refinements are constantly being added to the Studebaker, but no radical changes have been made in the Model 'D.' Merit is embodied in every line of the car. In the chassis we could not make the slightest change in the mechanical parts to please the best customers we have, more than we have in the past. The best proof of this is found in the fact that for several years no radical change has been made in the Studebaker-Garford chassis, none that a layman could detect unless his attention was called to it particularly. One of the special features of the Model 'D' is the spring suspension. The springs were changed on this model when a contract for the bodies was let to an American manufacturer who never takes a contract unless he is permitted to fix the suspension. The regular springs are replaced with a style adopted by the body builder after experiments dating from the inception of his business when it started as a carriage body factory."

The Howard Automobile Company reports the following deliveries of Buick automobiles: "White Streaks," Carl Christiansen, Oakland, 3; M. J. Nightingale, Oakdale, 2; Clipps Bros., Grimes, 2; Santa Rosa Garage, Santa Rosa, 2; Sacramento Valley Irrigation Company, 3; Bert Dingley, Modesto; E. F. Fordyce, Eureka; Charles Clarke, San Francisco; Moore Motor Supply Company, San Francisco; Wm. G. Van Zee, Woodland; Crane Bros., Livermore; Sam Tognazzini, San Luis Obispo; A. Freed, Willows; Ray Machine Works, Visalia; A. Shaw, Lodi; James Dunne, San Francisco. "White Streaks," Toy Tonneau: S. Tognazzini, San Luis Obispo; Carl Christiansen, Oakland; E. E. Rinehart, San Francisco. Forty Horse-Power Touring Cars: L. Barkhausen, Palo Alto; Waterman Bros. Co., Fresno, 2; Carl Christiansen, Oakland; Salbach-Middlekauff Co., Stockton; M. A. Little, San Francisco; C. F. Legris, Oakland; Empire Foundry, Marysville; Santa Barbara Sporting Goods Company, Santa Barbara. Two-cylinder Touring Car: Waterman Bros. Co., Fresno.

Severe Tests Prove Its Superiority

Although a comparatively new product, Zerolene has been more severely tested under all conditions than many other lubricants, and, distinctly better than any of these, has triumphed in every test.

ZEROLENE

Auto Lubricating Oil

lubricated the winning Thomas car in the famous New York to Paris race, also the Protos and Zust cars which ran second and third. Zerolene proved its perfect lubricating and non-carbonizing qualities, and its zero-working ability in the most severe tests to which a lubricating oil has ever been put.

Zerolene is the only "all round" oil that serves all types of cylinders and bearings. There is only one kind of Zerolene, produced in only one place in the world. Put up in sealed cans with patent spout that cannot be refilled. Also in barrels for garage trade.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(Incorporated)

Sold by dealers everywhere.

Write for booklet, "21,000 miles with Zerolene." Free.

Chalmers-Detroit "30"

The beginning and the end car.

In the beginning the initial price is slightly higher, in the end the upkeep and after expense is much less.

"Anybody can cut prices but it takes brain to make a better article."
(Elbert Hubbard.)

Buying a good car is only one step in the right direction.

BUT

Buying a good car from the most reliable dealers on the Pacific Coast is your absolute assurance of satisfaction.

The Pioneer Automobile Company is the largest concern west of Chicago giving its undivided attention to the sale of automobiles. Ten years in business assures our stability and perpetuates our guarantees. Our business motto is "Right or Made Right."

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

901 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

Oakland San Francisco Fresno

Letters

A New Allen Novel

It is decidedly a new departure on the part of the Macmillan Company to publish in June a book with so strong a holiday flavor as James Lane Allen's "Bride of the Misfletoe," but even apart from the explanation that this is but the first of three volumes, the others to follow during the autumn months, the idea is far from being a bad one. Holiday books usually make their appearance so close to the date of Christmas that one has not time to make acquaintance with their contents, and either makes choice of something the quality of which has already been proved or makes a blind grasp in the dark, trusting to the god of good fortune that the choice will not be altogether worthless. As Mr. Allen has disarmed criticism by apprising his readers that "The Bride of the Mistletoe" is not a novel but a story with only two characters and a time cycle of but forty hours, and with no external events, it becomes evident that we are to treat it simply as an introduction, and to wait and ponder until "The Brood of the Eagle" appears. As in all of Mr. Allen's stories, the scene is laid in Kentucky, and though the human characters are only two, the middle aged college professor and his wife, with their children hovering in the background, the ancestral farmhouse in which they live and its surroundings are as important in the plot as the people themselves. This is to be the last year in which they will celebrate the Christmas holidays, likewise their wedding anniversary, in the old home, and the children have made unusual preparations for their Christmas party. The professor has been utilizing his spare time in the preparation of a work, a gift to his wife. On the previous anniversary she had queried, "When and where did the Christmas celebration begin, how and why?" and he had set himself to work to answer her question, tracing the tree myths, the customs, the decorations and the gifts back to their earliest origin. The brief digest of his work which the professor gives standing beside the lighted tree is so absorbing and interesting that one rather loses sight of the wife, coldly receiving his gift, both the manuscript packet, which she scarcely touches, and the words which he speaks. For she has come to the conclusion that within the last two years the constant association and attrition of married life have banished the lover from the husband and she cannot rest until she has made him acknowledge it in words For one, I must confess to small sympathy with these high-strung heroines who expect a man to be an archangel and yet adapted to the common usages of life, and the hysterics which Josephine indulges herself in during the long night when she turns over in her mind the various ways in which she can revenge herself on Frederick, though natural enough, and laid aside in the light of day, seem like the tantrums of an ill regulated child beside the calm practicality of the professor himself, who, having done nothing to bring about the mental condition, and probably much too busy with his class rooms and lecture courses, to keep up a perpetual game of peek-a-boo, enjoys a comfortable night's rest. It will be scarcely necessary to say that Mr. Allen treats the subject in a restrained and dignified manner. He does not tear a passion to tatters, and there are no spectators invited to look on at the exposition. After Josephine has held her midnight conference with herself she does what ninety-nine out of a hundred sensible women always do—considers her obligations to her children and her surroundings and for the present does nothing at all, or rather, takes up the thread of life where she laid it down. "The Brood of the Eagle" will be the story of the children's lives, the two of the household and the two of their nearest friends, and the third volume, "The Christmas Tree, an Interpretation," which is not to be fiction, will round out the whole.

Most Widely Circulated Books

The most widely circulated book in the whole world is a Chinese almanac, printed in Pekin at the Imperial Press. The edition consists of 8,000,000 copies, which are sent into the provinces, and so great is the interest taken by the Chinese in the publication, so high the confidence reposed in the information contained, that of the 8,000,000 copies not one comes back to the printers. Nothing approaching these figures is attained by any publication in the western world. The work which attains the widest circulation in Europe and America is the Bible, and next to the Bible in popularity comes "Don Quixote" and then "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The fifth in order of merit belongs to an alphabet book, published at Essen by Baedeker, which has run through 1,200 editions.

Wigg—What is society?
Wagg—A game that isn't worth the scandal.

REDUCE THE CARES

Of housekeeping. One decidedly practical way is to use Borden's Pioneer Brand Evaporated Milk in all cooking where milk or cream is required. Results will be more satisfactory than with most "fresh" milk. The convenience and economy will please you. Dilute Peerless Milk with water to any desired richness.

LOW RATES
TO
ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION
FOR ROUND TRIP TICKETS
FROM

San Francisco	$32.50
Sacramento	32.50
Lathrop	32.50
Stockton	32.50
Tracy	32.50
Suisun	32.50
Davis	32.50
Napa	32.75
Santa Rosa	33.60
Calistoga	33.95

Greatly reduced rates from other points in California. Tickets sold daily May 25 to September 30, and cover two months' trip going and coming via the famous

SHASTA ROUTE
OF THE
SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Stopovers going and coming. Many other routes at slightly higher rates for you to select from.

Write or call on our nearest agent for full details of service, etc., or address

FLOOD BUILDING FOR INFORMATION

UNION LUMBER COMPANY
Redwood and Pine Lumber
Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, etc.
CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Yards and Planing Mills—6th and Channel Streets

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of HENRIETTA ECKHARDT, Deceased—No. 8187, Dept. 10, Probate.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executor of the Last Will and Testament of HENRIETTA ECKHARDT, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said executor at Room 609 Union Trust Building, at the northeasterly corner of Montgomery and Post Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said place the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of HENRIETTA ECKHARDT, deceased.

ROBERT J. ECKHARDT,
Executor of the Last Will and Testament of Henrietta Eckhardt, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 21, 1909.

CHARLES S. WHEELER, Attorney for Executor,
609 Union Trust Building, San Francisco, Cal. 8-21-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of ROBERT FRANCIS SPEAR, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Mary J. Spear, executrix of the last will and testament of ROBERT FRANCIS SPEAR, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Mary J. Spear at the office of Ira S. Lillick, Esq., No. 524 Kohl Building, on the northeast corner of California Street and Montgomery Street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Robert Francis Spear, deceased.

MARY J. SPEAR,
Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of Robert Francis Spear, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 6, 1909.

IRA S. LILLICK, Attorney for Petitioner,
524 Kohl Building, San Francisco, Cal. 8-14-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of BERTHA MARKS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Rose Marks, the Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of BERTHA MARKS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executrix, at the office of C. H. Oatman, room 516 Balboa Building, corner Second and Market streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of BERTHA MARKS, deceased.

ROSE MARKS,
Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of Bertha Marks, deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 7th, 1909.

ARTHUR L. LEVINSKY, Attorney for said Executrix,
Stockton, California. 8-7-5

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17318, Dept. No. 4.

KATE E. BOYANTON, sometimes known as KATE E. BOYNTON, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Kate E. Boyanton, sometimes known as Kate E. Boynton, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Eddy Street distant One hundred and twenty (120) feet easterly from the easterly line of Scott Street; running thence easterly along said northerly line of Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet and to the westerly line of Farren Avenue; thence at right angles northerly and along said westerly line of Farren Avenue Seventy-five (75) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet; and thence at right angles southerly Seventy-five (75) feet to the place of beginning. Being a portion of Block No. 431, Western Addition.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that the title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 29th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco State of California—No. 16627.

ROBERT HECTOR, Jr., Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in or Lien Upon the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Robert Hector, Jr., plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest, or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situate in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to wit:

Lot number 210 as laid down, delineated and designated on a certain map on file in the office of the recorder of the said City and County of San Francisco, known as "Holiday Map A." Said map was filed in the office of the recorder of the City and County of San Francisco on the 1st day of May 1863.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to wit, that it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute, that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, or whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description, and that plaintiff recover costs herein, and have such other and further relief as may seem meet and proper in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 4th day of June, 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The following persons are said to claim an interest in or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names.	Addresses.
Abraham C. Freeman	3034 Washington St., San Francisco, Cal.
Ellita Gamboni Mazzitelli	San Francisco, Cal.
Frank Shay, Administrator of the estate of William Hale, Deceased,	640 Fairmont avenue, Oakland, California.

Dated, this 4th day of June, 1909.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in San Francisco Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation, on the 19th day of June, 1909.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
45 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. 6-19-10

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 2622, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of INDIA MASTERS, Deceased.

J. R. Pringle, the Administrator of the Estate of INDIA MASTERS, deceased, having filed his petition herein, duly verified, praying for an order of sale of the real estate of said decedent for the purposes therein set forth,

It is therefore ordered by the said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the Superior Court on Wednesday, the 22nd day of September, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10, Probate, of said Superior Court, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said J. R. Pringle, Administrator, to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary.

And that a copy of this order be published four successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

And it is further ordered that the manner in which publication of this order shall be made shall be once a week for four successive weeks in said Town Talk, and that the number of publications during the above mentioned period shall be reduced accordingly.

Dated, August 13, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

OLNEY, PRINGLE & MANNON, Attorneys for Administrator,
1236 Merchants Exchange Bldg., San Francisco, Cal. 8-21-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17750, Dept. No. 5.

EVA NATHAN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of EVA NATHAN, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Jones Street, distant thereon Southerly ninety (90) feet from the Southerly line of Pacific Street, running thence Southerly and along said line of Jones Street forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty seven (137) feet, six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet, six (6) inches to said line of Jones Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of fifty vara lot number Eight Hundred and Sixty-one (861) of the City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit: for judgment establishing and quieting said plaintiff's title to all said real property as the owner thereof in fee simple, and determining all adverse claims thereto, and ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, and for such other and further relief as may be just and proper in the premises, under and pursuant to the provisions of the Act of the Legislature of California entitled, "An Act to provide for the establishment and quieting of title to real property in case of loss and destruction of public records," approved June 16, 1906, and the Act of the said Legislature, amending the same, approved March 6, 1909.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 2nd day of July, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

(Seal) By M. P. BRUTON, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk, a newspaper, on the 17th day of July, A. D. 1909.

DEVOTO & RICHARDSON, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
Foxcroft Building, San Francisco.

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17244.

HANNAH EMERY, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Hannah Emery, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Van Ness Avenue, distant eighty (80) feet northerly from the northwesterly corner of Van Ness Avenue, and Turk Street, running thence northerly and along the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches; thence at right angles southerly and parallel with Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles easterly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches to the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue and place of beginning; being a portion of Block Seventy-nine (79) Western Addition;

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

(Seal)

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: NONE.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Esq., Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market St., San Francisco. 7-10-10.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 3835, Dept. No. 10.

In the Matters of the Estate of BYRON J. TAYLOR, Deceased.

Avy A. Holdgate, formerly Avy A. Kitto, the Administratrix of the estate of BYRON J. TAYLOR, deceased, having heretofore presented to the Court and filed with the Clerk thereof her verified petition, praying for an order of this Court authorizing, empowering and directing her to sell certain real property in said petition particularly described, belonging to the estate of said deceased, and it appearing to the Court that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real property in said petition described to pay the debts, expenses and charges of administration and that it is for the advantage, benefit and best interest of the estate and those interested therein that said real estate be sold,

It is hereby ordered that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased be and they are hereby directed to appear before the above entitled Court, Department No. 10 thereof, at its Courtroom, situate in the Grant Building, at the corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on Wednesday, the 22nd day of September, 1909, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, then and there to show cause, if any you have, why an order should not be granted to said administratrix for the sale of all of said real estate.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order to show cause be published in Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation, printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, once a week for four successive weeks.

Dated, August 17, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

H. M. OWENS, Attorney for Administratrix,
Mechanics Savings Bank Building, San Francisco, Cal. 8-21-5

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No.17271.

WELLS, RUSSELL & COMPANY, (a Corporation), Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest, in or Lien Upon, the Real Property herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Wells, Russell & Company, (a Corporation), plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows

First Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northwesterly line of Natoma Street, formerly Everett Street, distant two hundred (200) feet southwesterly from the intersection of the southwesterly line of Third Street with said line of Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches; thence at a right angle northwesterly eighty (80) feet; thence northeasterly parallel with Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches and thence at a right angle southeasterly eighty (80) feet to the place of beginning; being a portion of the 100 vara Lot No. 34.

Second Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Fourteenth Avenue, distant one hundred and fifty (150) feet westerly from the northwesterly corner of Fourteenth Avenue and P Street; thence westerly along said line of Fourteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet; thence at a right angle northerly two hundred (200) feet to Thirteenth Avenue; thence at a right angle easterly along the south line of Thirteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet, and thence at a right angle southerly two hundred (200) feet to the place of beginning; being a part of the O'Neill and Haley Tract, as per map on file in the Recorder's Office of said City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that its title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover its costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June A, D, 1909. By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attorneys for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17438, Dept. No. 12.

GEORGE J. MARTIN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of George J. Martin, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue distant thereon one hundred (100) feet northerly from the northerly line of C Street, running thence northerly along said westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue, twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angle westerly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angle southerly, twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angle easterly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue and the point of commencement. Being a part of Outside Land Block No. 379.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that his title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof. whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 30th day of June, A. D. 1909.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
German Savings & Loan Society (a Corporation)	530 California Street, San Francisco, Cal.
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of JOHN W. FARREN, also known as JOHN W. FARREN, Jr., Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned administratrix of the estate of JOHN W. FARREN, also known as JOHN W. FARREN, Jr., deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said administratrix at the office of her attorney, Neal Power, Esq., Room 545, Mills Building, Northeast corner of Montgomery and Bush Streets, San Francisco, Cal., which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of JOHN W. FARREN, also known as JOHN W. FARREN, Jr., deceased.

MARY A. FARREN,
Administratrix of the Estate of John W. Farren, also known as John W. Farren, Jr., Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, July 31st, 1909.

NEAL POWER, Attorney for Administratrix,
Room 545 Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal. 7-31-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 22931, Dept. No. 10.

CATHERINE FRANCIS BERTRAND, Plaintiff,

vs.

BENJAMIN A. BERTRAND, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send Greeting to Benjamin A. Bertrand, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the Complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and County; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground of defendant's wilful desertion of said plaintiff; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the Complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said Plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the Complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the Complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 11th day of May, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk
(Seal) By L. J. WELCH, Deputy Clerk.

ORNBAUN, FRASER & LYNCH, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
727 Pacific Building, San Francisco, Cal. 6-19-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 18016.

MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this Summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

PARCEL NUMBER ONE

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Green Street, distant thereon one hundred and seventeen (117) feet and seven and one-fifth (7 1-5) inches Easterly from the Easterly line of Franklin Street; running thence Easterly and along said Northerly line of Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly and parallel to Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches to the said Northerly line of Green Street and point of commencement.

Being a part of Western Addition Block No. 96.

PARCEL NUMBER TWO

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of "C" Street, distant thereon thirty-two (32) feet and six (6) inches Westerly from the Westerly line of Twenty-fifth (25th) Avenue; running thence Westerly along said Northerly line of "C" Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 356.

PARCEL NUMBER THREE

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of "T" Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the point of beginning.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 1153.

PARCEL NUMBER FOUR

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue, distant two hundred and twenty-five (225) feet Southerly from the Southeasterly corner of "A" Street and Twenty-first Avenue; running thence Southerly along the said Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the place of beginning. The same being a portion of Outside Lands Block Number Three Hundred and Three (303).

PARCEL NUMBER FIVE

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Larkin Street, distant thereon seventy-seven (77) feet and six (6) inches Northerly from the corner formed by the intersection of said Easterly line of Larkin Street with the Northerly line of Union Street, running thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Larkin Street, twenty (20) feet; thence at right angles Easterly sixty (60) feet to the Westerly line of Moore Street; thence at right angles Southerly along said line of Moore Street twenty (20) feet; and thence at right angles Westerly sixty (60) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot No. 1393.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, title, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 26th day of July A. D. 1909.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 31st day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., San Francisco, Cal. 7-31-10

Louis Crepaux

(Member of Paris Grand Opera)

Has removed to his new studio,

Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.

Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.

For appointments phone Merritt 2845

Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Donald Maclean

SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske

STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO

Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan

ATTORNEY AT LAW

CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor

Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty

ATTORNEYS AT LAW and PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.

Rooms 626 and 630

Phone Kearny 3657 Res. Phone West 1784

Dr. A. H. Wright

12 to 4 CHRONICLE BUILDING

HENRY P. TRICOU

NOTARY PUBLIC

508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711

Residence 852 Grove St. Phone Park 1870

The German Savings and Loan Society

(Member of the Associated Savings Bank of S. F.)

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,504,498.68
Deposits June 30, 1908	$36,793,234.04
Total Assets	$39,435,681.38

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

RICHMOND DISTRICT BRANCH, 432 Clement Street, between 5th and 6th Avenues. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. W. C. Heyer, Manager.

PATRICK & CO.
RUBBER STAMPS
STENCILS, SEALS, SIGNS & ETC.
126 BUSH ST. SAN FRANCISCO

What Men Have Said About Men

He who is not strong before twenty, handsome before thirty, wise before forty and rich before fifty—on such a man even beer is altogether lost—German Proverb.

There are three reasons why men of genius have long hair. One is that they forget it is growing. The second is that they like it. The third is that it comes cheaper; they wear it long for the same reason that they wear their hats long—Israel Zangwill.

There are men whom no one respects very highly, who are not sincerely trusted, whose honor is not spotless, and whose ways are far from straight, but who nevertheless hold a certain ascendency over others by mere show and assurance—F. Marion Crawford.

A man is, in general, better pleased when he has a good dinner than when his wife talks Greek—Samuel Johnson.

A poet may be a good companion, but, so far as I know, he is ever the worst of fathers. Even as grandfather he is too near, for one poet can lay a streak of poverty over three generations—Irving Bachelder.

Russian's Odd Wager

A man named Duhoroff has just won a highly original wager at Kief in Russia. He had undertaken to appear daily during eight days in the streets employing each time a different mode of locomotion. He commenced by running down the steps of his dwelling and along the boulevard on his hands. The following day he hopped through the town on one leg. Stilts, a skipping rope, roller skates and a bath chair all followed in turn. One day he was conducted through the principal thoroughfares by a small boy who led him on a string. The finest of his exploits was undoubtedly when, turning successive somersaults in the air for nearly a mile, he arrived amidst enthusiastic cheers at the cafe where his friends were waiting to bestow the prize upon him.

Nature Study

"Tommy," said the father to his small son, who was following him around the course, "what makes the grass grow?"

"The grass has blades, and with these it cuts its way through the ground."

Its Daily Thrill

The through train from the West had stopped at the little station where the overland flyer from the East was to pass it.

"What is the population of your village?" asked one of the passengers.

"I don't know, sir," said the station agent; "but if your train doesn't leave within the next five minutes you'll have time to count 'em for yourself. They're all here at the depo."

Parvenue (receiving telegram at dinner, to her guests)—Ladies and gentlemen, I have the pleasure to inform you that the stork has just come to my daughter and brought her a little girl. La petite vient en mangeant, you know, as we say in French."

$550.00 Will buy the best 88-note Player on the market

CROWN AND CONCORD PIANOS

10-inch Disc Records, 25 Cents

PETER BACIGALUPI & SONS,

Phonographs and Pianos

941 Market St. Opposite Mason St.

Open Saturday Evenings.

MOVED

Gladding, McBean & Co.

CLAY PRODUCTS

Office

311-317 CROCKER BUILDING

Warehouse

147-151 MINNA STREET

Between New Montgomery and Third

San Francisco, Cal.

W. D. Fennimore J. W. Davis A. R. Fennimore

California Optical Co.
Makers of Good Glasses

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store at 181 Post Street, near Grant Avenue.

The Spice of Life.

Ashley—"Do you have much variety in your boarding-house?"

Seymour—"Well, we have three different names for the meals."

Encouraging.

"Tell me frankly, sir, what do you think of my daughter's voice?"

"Well, madam, I think she may have a brilliant future in water-color painting."

60 YEARS' EXPERIENCE

PATENTS

TRADE MARKS
DESIGNS
COPYRIGHTS &C.

Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain our opinion free whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. HANDBOOK on Patents sent free. Oldest agency for securing patents.

Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice, without charge, in the Scientific American.

A handsomely illustrated weekly. Largest circulation of any scientific journal. Terms, $3 a year; four months, $1. Sold by all newsdealers.

MUNN & Co. 361 Broadway, New York

Branch Office, 625 F St., Washington, D. C.

SCIENTIFIC OPTICIAN

MAYERLE'S GERMAN EYE WATER
By Mail 65c

Mayerle's German Eyewater

Highly Recommended for

Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids.

NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN

Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes, relieves the strain, and preserve the sight.

GEORGE MAYERLE

Graduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 960 Market street, opposite Hale's. Phone Franklin 3279.

¶ Nothing can be more refreshing these warm summer days than a glass of cool Weinhard's Portland Beer.

¶ It's brewed from the best Bavarian hops and Oregon barley. It is not only nutricious but exhilirating.

¶ Try it at lunch or dinner.

WEINHARD

PORTLAND BEER

SAN FRANCISCO AGENCY

HENRY WEINHARD BREWERY

TELEPHONE MARKET 1803

1255 HARRISON STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Vol. XVII. No. 887. SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 28, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

RICHMOND COAL

IMPORTED SOLELY BY

James and Alex'r Brown

Owners of the Pelaw Main and Richmond Collieries; also Richmond Vale Colliery, Newcastle, N. S. W., Australia

Represented by Wm. Smellie

IF your dealer cannot supply you with genuine Richmond Coal, kindly communicate with us, or Pacific Coast Coal Co., Merchants' Exchange Building. Please note that all other advertisements claiming to sell you Richmond Coal are not authorized by us. They haven't got the goods.

JAMES AND ALEX'R BROWN
334 RUSS BUILDING, MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Sole Wholesale Distributors

PACIFIC COAST COAL CO.

Beale Street Bunkers San Francisco

SUMMER RESORTS

THE VENDOME SAN JOSE

Is the ideal objective point for the motorist. The accommodations are complete and the ride from either side of the bay is delightful. This hotel is unsurpassed in the West for the beauty of its environment and for those qualities which contribute to ease and comfort. H. W. LAKE, Manager.

THE PERRY HOTEL

Madison St. and Boren Ave.
SEATTLE, WASH.

Every Modern Convenience—Absolutely Fire Proof
European Plan, The Highest Grade

Under new management, centrally located and commanding a view of the Olympics, Cascade Mountains, Mount Rainier and Puget Sound.

J. S. McTERNAN, Manager

HOTEL CUMBERLAND

Broadway at 54th Street

NEW YORK

Near 50th St. Subway Station and 53d St. Elevated

Ideal Location,
Near Theatres, Shops, and
Central Park

New and Fireproof

Strictly First Class in Every Respect

Rates Reasonable
$2.50 with bath, and up.

All Hardwood Floors and
Oriental Rugs

10 Minutes' Walk to 20 Theatres

Excellent Restaurant Prices Moderate

Send for Booklet

HARRY P. STIMSON,
formerly with Hotel Imperial

R. J. BINGHAM,
formerly with Hotel Woodward

YOSEMITE

SENTINEL HOTEL Open the Year Round; Steam Heated; Electric Lighted.

CAMP YOSEMITE Electric Lighted; Opened May 1st; the Largest Hotel-Camp on the Coast.

Under One Management. For Rates, Reservations or other information, address J. B. COOK, Proprietor, Yosemite, Cal.

BYRON
HOT SPRINGS

One of the world's most curative springs, 2½ hours from San Francisco; one of California's best hotels and a delightful place for rest and recreation. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, James Flood Building, any S. P. Agent, or Peck-Judah, 789 Market St., San Francisco, or 553 S. Spring St., Los Angeles, or address manager, Byron Hot Springs, California.

HOTEL WASHINGTON

J. M. LUX, MANAGER

SEATTLE, WASH.

A magnificent modern structure involving over One Million and a Half Dollars. Conducted on Most liberal ideas of Experience. Its appointments and service cannot be excelled in the United States. The management cordially invites your patronage.

HOTEL WASHINGTON ANNEX

SEATTLE, WASH.

Best Rooms Best Service

Strictly First-Class

J. H. DAVIS - - - - - Proprietor

HOTEL ARGONAUT

Society of California Pioneers Building

FOURTH STREET NEAR MARKET San Francisco CENTRE OF THE CITY

Catering to Family and Commercial Trade

400 Rooms $1.00 per day and up Dining room seats 500 guests

Special 50c Luncheon from 11:30 to 2 p. m.

Weekly and monthly rates on application. Free bus meets all trains and steamers.

Telephone Douglas 3393 EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager

SUMMER RESORTS

Hotel and Grounds

Plan to spend your vacation and your week-end outings at

HOTEL DEL MONTE

during

The Annual Month of Sports---August 15 to September 15th

Annual Dog Show — Annual Golf Tournament

First State Bridge Whist Congress — Annual Tennis Tournament

Opening of Pebble Beach Lodge

Make your plans to be there. Write for rates and reservations to-day to H. R. WARNER, Manager.

WITTER SPRINGS HOTEL

The Automobile Headquarters of Lake County.

The most delightful place to rest and get well. Every comfort; large, airy rooms, with hot and cold water; private baths.

Witter Springs Water Works Wonders

For people afflicted with Stomach, Liver or Kidney Trouble. Absolutely cures Eczema.

Address Peck-Judah Information Bureaus, or reservations can be made at City Office, Westbank Building, 830 Market Street

NAPA SODA SPRINGS HOTEL

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

California's famous mountain spa, only 50 miles from San Francisco. The nearest watering place and summer resort to the city. 1,000 feet elevation, overlooking 25 miles of beautiful Napa Valley. For terms address Manager Napa Soda Springs Hotel, Napa County, Cal.

Boca Hotel and Annex

TRUCKEE RIVER

Address CHAS. GARRISON, BOCA, CAL.

FALLEN LEAF LODGE

LAKE TAHOE, CAL.

New home-like resort at the head of Fallen Leaf Lake; five miles south of Lake Tahoe. Centrally situated in the grandest part of the Lake Tahoe Scenic Wonderland. Rates $14.00 per week and upward. HARRY WHITCOMB, Manager, Fallen Leaf, Lake Tahoe, Cal.

GILROY HOT SPRINGS

Only four hours from San Francisco; delightful stage ride over the best kept mountain road in California. Unsurpassed table, health-giving waters, telephone, postoffice. Rates $12 to $17.50 a week; baths free. Trains leave Third and Townsend streets at 9 a. m. Direct stage connection. See Peck-Judah, 789 Market street.

W. J. McDONALD, Proprietor.

ROSS McMAHON AWNING AND TENT CO.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

Tents, Awnings, Hammocks, Bags and Covers

Phone Kearny 2030 — 403 BATTERY STREET

The grape cure season at

ÆTNA SPRINGS

will commence on September 9th with a

GRAPE FESTIVAL

a unique celebration, in costume, following the traditions of the annual feasts in the vineyard sections of the various European countries. Write for information to

LEN. D. OWENS, Proprietor,
Aetna Springs, Napa Co., Cal.

PARAISO SPRINGS

MONTEREY CO., CAL.

The most accessible of all resorts; a delightful terminal for an automobile trip. Take 8 a. m. train from Third and Townsend; you arrive at spring 1 p. m. for lunch. Natural hot soda and sulphur plunge and tub baths, 104 to 116 degrees, for rheumatism, malaria and all stomach troubles. Iron and arsenic waters. Altitude 1400 feet. H. H. McGOWAN, Proprietor.

PINE LODGE

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

In the mountains by the sea. Surroundings perfect for rest and recreation. Trout stream, boating, bathing. Home garden of berries and vegetables. New hotel and cottages, modern conveniences. Two miles from Santa Cruz. Rates $9.00 per week and upwards. For particulars address PINE LODGE, Santa Cruz, Cal.

TAKE TAMALPAIS TRIP

and breathe good air.

Half a mile high in two hours' time. No other trip like it.

Via Sausalito Ferry, Foot of Market Street

Montara Inn

At Montara on the Ocean Shore Railroad

A delightful place to rest. 45 minutes from San Francisco. Pure mountain water and fresh dairy products. The best sheltered and widest sandy beach on the coast. No undertow; splendid bathing. Address for accomodations, Manager, Montara Inn, Montara, Calif.

Leading Hotels and Resorts

LONG BEACH SANITARIUM

LONG BEACH, CALIF.

Battle Creek Sanitarium Methods

A splendidly equipped QUIET, REFINED and MODERN medical and surgical Institution BY-THE-SEA, where the sick, run down or work-tired may go and know that they will receive the very best of care and attention at reasonable rates. Gentlemen and Lady Physicians. Graduate nurses only. Climate exceptionally fine. Cool in summer, warm and dry in winter. Descriptive Booklet mailed FREE. W. RAY SIMPSON, Manager.

Long Distance Phones in Every Room

YE ALPINE TAVERN

Beautiful Mountain Resort on Mt. Love

Just a mile above the sea. American plan $3.00 per day, $15 per week. Choice of rooms in hotel or cottages. Spend a vacation 5,000 feet above the sea, among great pines and oaks. For information, D. A. Munger, General Agent, Pacific Electric R. R., Los Angeles, or office.

HOTEL ALEXANDRIA

LOS ANGELES

IN SAFETY, SERVICE
AND SANITATION

HAS TAKEN ITS PLACE
AMONG THE BEST HOTELS

A. C. BILICKE, President
S. J. WHITMORE, Vice-Pres. and Gen. Mgr. JOS. REICHL, Asst. Mgr.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO

CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. Power boats from the Hotel meet passengers from the North on the arrival of the Pacific Coast S. S. Co. steamers. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, 334 S. Spring St., Los Angeles.

THE FORUM CAFE

O A K L A N D

Now under the management of

MR. GUSTAV MANN

THE ANGELUS

LOS ANGELES

One of California's Best Hotels
Centrally located; street cars direct to hotel.
Rates $1.50 per Day Up

MAISON DORÉE HOTEL AND RESTAURANT

151-157 ELLIS ST., ABOVE POWELL

Phone Ex. Douglas 1040, Connecting All Departments.
THE GOURMETS FAVORITE PLACE TO DINE
Also Mercantile Lunch at reasonable rates

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

CAMERAS

Kodaks, Developing, Printing, Supplies, Etc.

"Don't take a vacation unless you take pictures as you go along"

462-464 THIRTEENTH STREET, Between Broadway and Washington

SMITH BROS. STATIONERS OAKLAND

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, August 28, 1909. No. 887.

THE TRUCKEE RIVER DAM

Reports in the daily papers to the contrary notwithstanding work is still in progress on this dam against which there has been much protest on the part of agitators who object to the development of water power by private enterprise. It has been said that as a result of this engineering work Lake Tahoe will be almost exhausted; also that the owners of property bordering on the Lake are greatly excited at the prospect. As a matter of fact the owners of Lake Tahoe property have not the slightest objection to the work. D. L. Bliss Jr., general manager of the Bliss properties, which include Tahoe Tavern, is of the opinion that the dam is a good thing.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION—One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.
Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.
The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.
For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.
Los Angeles office, 427 South Main Street.
Seattle office, 804 Third Avenue.
We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

Wigmore's Open Letter

On the eve of the primary election our moral uplifters deemed it advisable to preoccupy the mind of this susceptible and long suffering community with a few arguments designed to reinstate the Hon. Francis J. Heney in the affections of the multitude. Professor J. H. Wigmore, dean of the law school of the Northwestern University, was regarded as the man for the enterprise, not so much by reason of his talent as on account of the prestige with which the unsophisticated might be likely to credit a member of a university faculty, especially one who has written a book. So the milch-cow of the academic pasture was led out at the psychological moment and milked of an essay in the form of a letter addressed to Patrick Calhoun and consisting of impassioned denunciation of that individual and a defense and eulogy of Mr. Heney. The letter failed of its purpose. It excited no interest, it occasioned no landslide. Viewed merely as a contribution to the inspired literature of the graft prosecution it is worthy of no more attention than is usually given to a partisan editorial in the Boughten Bulletin. It was written in precisely the same peevish spirit that pervades the shallow sophistries that shriek from the subsidized columns of that noisome journal. With as much enthusiasm as the servile editor of the Bulletin has shown, Professor Wigmore has absorbed the sentiments of our uplifters and he images them back with equal fidelity. Like Gratiano, the professor utters an infinite deal of nonsense. With great expenditure of words and froth he produces arguments which even a half-educated polemic should have no difficulty in demolishing. Even Boke, though still in his salad days and green of judgment, could turn out a better job. But notwithstanding the shallowness of Professor Wigmore's arguments we feel that they should not be permitted to pass without discussion, for it was this same individual, who poses as the priest of Justice and acts like the lackey of our pharisaical patriots, that questioned the soundness of the decision of our Supreme Court in the Schmitz case. Ever since Professor Wigmore attacked the Supreme Court he has been held up for admiration by the organs of the prosecution. To add weight to his utterances they have proclaimed him one of the world's great authorities on law. As a matter of fact he ranks no higher than our own rosy-cheeked evangelist, the darling of the Ladies League of Justice—Professor Boke of Berkeley. Also, as a matter of fact, in his criticism of the Supreme Court Professor Wigmore came so far from apprehending the point upon which the Schmitz case was decided as to convince many learned lawyers that he never read the decision but relied on second-hand information. Now in our opinion the open letter to Patrick Calhoun betrays a mind that would hardly scruple at the enormity that has been imputed to the distinguished college professor, and consequently we feel that it should be given some attention since it is of some importance that our readers should become more intimately acquainted with this ready auxiliary of the cabal that has consecrated itself to the defamation of the State's highest tribunal. If Professor Wigmore lacks the most important of the essentials to good thinking—intellectual honesty—the fact should be known. We think that in his letter to Patrick Calhoun the Professor convicts himself of intellectual dishonesty. Reluctant to do him an injustice, that our readers may not be influenced by our judgment, we shall let them study his style of reasoning that they may thus get an insight into the man. It will not be necessary to quote the inflammatory language in which, after the manner of a bitter partisan of a temper of mind and heart in restraint of honest research and opinion, Professor Wigmore adjudges Patrick Calhoun guilty. Tedious as a twice-told tale vexing the dull ear of a feud-weary city, the professor's philippic persuades us that unconsciously he allows sentiment to prevail over reason; that his most cherished convictions are not the result of the necessary deductions from the inexorable facts of logic. But to come to his arguments. Taking up the question, "Can a federal assistant attorney-general, under federal salary lawfully act at the same time as State assistant district attorney?" Professor Wigmore says: "As to this constitutional question I leave this to the courts as you should. As to the 'moral' question I say that it is moral for any federal officer to help any State officer in the pursuit of a crime, and that only guilty lawbreakers could be imagined to desire to the contrary." Let us see if in these answers Professor Wigmore does not betray very pronounced symptoms of intellectual dishonesty. The first question he evades by professing to be in favor of abiding by the decisions of our courts, and yet but a few months ago he aided a conspiracy to defame and intimidate our Supreme Court by dissenting with an air of oracular authority from one of its decisions which, it is believed, he had never read. As to his assertion with respect to the "moral" question we cannot conceive of its having been made from no other motive than fidelity to honest conviction. On this point we are not dogmatic, but we submit that it is hardly likely that Professor Wigmore does not know that in the circumstances of the Calhoun case it would have been extremely immoral for Mr. Heney as an assistant to the Attorney-General of the United States to masquerade before a jury in a State court, in the prosecution of a man accused of crime, as an officer exclusively of the State. Mr. Heney was not engaged in the pursuit of crime. If he was attending strictly to his sworn duty then he was engaged in ascertaining whether a crime had been committed; nothing more. If he was covertly receiving a fee from the Federal government the inference is inevitable that he was being incited to greater zeal than the law requires and in violation of the constitutional rights of a citizen. Professor Wigmore answers in the affirmative the question, "Can a private citizen contribute money to help the State's prosecuting officers in the investigation and trial of a criminal charge?" He argues that as under the original jury system more than a century ago the private citizen was usually obliged to pay the prosecuting expenses, the State not doing so and crime going unpunished otherwise, "if nowadays in any community crime is again likely to go unpunished without the help of private citizens there is no reason why we should not revert to the old system." From this we are almost tempted to the conclusion that there is more of sublimated asininity than intellectual dishonesty in the general make-up of Professor Wigmore. For it is almost incredible that a man of his pretensions would thus calmly expose himself to the contempt of men of ordinary intelligence. It is astonishing to find so absurd an argument employed with the expectation either of misleading the wise or instructing the foolish. Under our system of government, as Professor Wigmore knows, it is the function of the State to prosecute men accused of crime and this function cannot be alienated without violating fundamental principles that were unknown in the days of the practice to which Professor Wigmore alludes. The private citizen who was "obliged" to pay the prosecuting expenses under the old system was the particular citizen who claimed to have been injured. The system dates back to the days of ancient Rome, and it was abandoned by the Anglo-Saxon people because of the evils to which it gave rise, some of which were similar to those that have arisen in this city as the result of reverting half-way. And yet the old system was not quite so bad as the innovation on the present system which we have witnessed, for under that ancient system the role of private prosecutor was attended by some danger, since failure to secure a conviction was followed by severe penalties on the head of the unsuccessful individual. The purpose of this rule was to hold vindictiveness in check. Obviously it would be most unfair to revert to the old practice of private prosecutions under a system which makes no provision against the passions that are most to be dreaded in all communities. But surely Professor Wigmore would not approve of a reversion that might result in the jailing of his friend Heney. Far be it from us, however, to insinuate that Professor Wigmore would consciously be guilty of unfairness in anything but discussion.

Death at the Steering Wheel

The auto races at Indianapolis came to an end on Saturday because of the fact that seven people, spectators and participants, had been killed in three days. These fatalities somewhat sickened the public, and the meet was abandoned. But that does not mean that the tragedies of last week will have a permanent deterrent effect on automobile racing, which will go on as long as daring, reckless men can be found to grasp the steering wheel—or until aviation supersedes automobiling as a dangerous sport. It will go on also as long as people will congregate with the half hope of seeing a bad accident. There is no denying the fact that the danger of fatalities has a large part in drawing audiences to automobile races, which in themselves are only mildly exciting, not to be compared for a moment with the spectacle afforded by horses straining every nerve and muscle to get or hold the leadership. The lust for bloodshed is only a little way under the surface in the human race, and is easily aroused. People flock to bullfights where the chances of a matador being gored or trampled to death are large. A man was murdered on Market street the other day, and thousands of people gathered, men, women and children crowding up to look upon the bleeding form of the dead man as it lay on the sidewalk. There are plenty of people who find no diversion in such a spectacle; but of the kind who do there are enough in the world to provide audiences for any event which has in it a large element of danger—to the participants. And there will never be a lack of men willing to risk their lives for pay or excitement. These men who ride in racing automobiles fully realize the danger that encompasses them. Not one of them ever goes into a race without feeling that there are many chances against his coming out of it alive. They are a nervy, coolheaded lot, brave to a high degree, reckless to a higher degree—admirable men in many ways. It is through the infusion of such blood as runs in their veins that the human race is kept up to a standard of daring that makes progress possible. The men who are willing to take a chance, "who will match with destiny for beer," as Kipling says, are of the sort that lead their fellows into unexplored countries, that build railway bridges across dizzying chasms, that open the avenues of trade, commerce and civilization for the more timid. The foregoing is not to be taken as indicating a lack of lament over the fact that seven people were killed; rather it is a bowing to the inevitable and a recognition of the truth that without the spirit that brings about such tragedies we should degenerate into a lackadaisical, conquerable race, the antithesis of the Anglo-Saxon.

Another Phase

There is another phase of the automobile game that demands constant attention—that is the recklessness of drivers on the public highways. The man who goes at breakneck speed on a track has no one but himself to look out for, generally. At Indianapolis spectators were killed, but in going to the track they knew that there was some danger. It is the man who uses the public highway in his ordinary pursuits that is entitled to all the protection that the laws can give him. He is entitled to his share of the road; he goes upon it under the presumption that while he is there the law will throw safeguards around him; he does not invite disaster, as does the man who drives a racing machine or the man who witnesses a contest; and his personal liberty is at stake if an automobile driver deliberately or through carelessness endangers his safety. The laws are not nearly rigorous enough in this respect, and the ones that do exist are not adequately enforced. On Sunday night a drunken man at the lever of an automobile which contained six people besides himself drove his machine into a freight car standing on the Belt Line track near the local waterfront. The accident resulted fatally. The driver, had he been in the crowded part of town, might have steered his machine into a crowd of people with much slaughter as a result. We cannot prevent every man who drives an automobile taking a drink; but we can pass and enforce laws so severe that he will hesitate to fill himself full of liquor and then go charging through the community in a machine that under the influence of his unsteady hand is as dangerous on a highway as an uncontrolled locomotive. In many communities automobilists of the better class are co-operating with the authorities in curbing criminal carelessness on the part of

The Hub.
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

NEW YORKERS ARE QUOTED AS AMERICA'S BEST DRESSERS. EVERY GARMENT IN THIS SHOP IS MADE FOR US IN NEW YORK. THE PATTERNS AND FABRICS ARE A YEAR OR SO IN ADVANCE OF ANY OTHER METROPOLIS. REALLY, THIS IS THE SHOP FOR TO GET FIT AND FASHION. CLOTHES OF HIGH PEDIGREE.

Clothes with This Label Are Ready Made.

The Hub
Chas Keilus & Co.
San Francisco.

No Pretensions Here to Make Clothes to Order.

They can't show much real clothes brain in shops that sell hats, shoes or shirts in conjunction with men's clothes. Such stores are simply all around traders. They are not considered "practical clothiers." The kind of clothes good dressers like are "our kind," that drift entirely away from the ordinary hand-me-downs, nor do we use anybody else's label. We give you our clothes brain with our label.

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

drivers, and it is through their efforts that the greatest relief will be gained.

Fatal Strike Riots

The strike at the Pressed Steel Car plant at Schoenville, near Pittsburg, assumed very serious proportions early in the week. Blood was shed both by strikers and the authorities, several men on both sides being killed and scores wounded. The State troops fought the strikers determinedly, firing volley after volley into the ranks of the men who attacked them with revolvers and rifles. Ever since this trouble started nearly seven weeks ago, the strikers have shown a lawless spirit. The employers' attempt to land men to take the places of those who were out was met by forced resistance and for many days there were sporadic fights in which clubs and similar weapons were used. But on Sunday the strikers went beyond the limit, and were fired upon by the troopers. Bullets were met by bullets and men on both sides fell dead. Women and children were wounded in the hot fighting that followed. Women were among the most fanatical leaders of the insurgents, taking a hand in the fighting, and urging the men on to violence. Apparently insane with rage, they used stones and clubs on the men in authority and on non-union workmen. Brutality on the part of the strikers marked every phase of the trouble. A deputy sheriff who had been surrounded and who emptied his revolver at his assailants, threw his weapon away, crying, "I give up—I am all in." The next instant he fell dead, five bullets in his body. He was kicked and terribly mutilated by his frantic murderers. The strikers are in the main ignorant foreigners who until they came to this country never earned living wages, never had any decency or comfort, never knew what liberty was. Infinitely better off than ever before in their lives, they have become drunk with their new found freedom, and are defying the law that made their liberty possible. They are led, as usual, by American agitators of the variety that care little how much blood is shed—as long as it is not their own—if they can keep their hold on these ignorant dupes who sacrifice themselves for the fattening of walking delegates. The inception and the conduct of the strike do not mark it as different from hundreds of others that have occurred. It is unusual only in its violence. It is a matter of congratulation that the State troops of Pennsylvania have shown great bravery and determination in helping to put down the trouble. Work such as they have done has a deterrent effect on incipient anarchists.

Perspective Impressions

The Republicans announce themselves as not in favor of a noise-making campaign. Anyway, it would be futile to try to compete against Heney's vociferousness.

Wellman has again failed to reach the North Pole, but he had enough adventures to furnish plenty of platform and magazine material.

A steel plant in Illinois has closed down because the workmen refuse to be lured even by wages of $6 a day from the good fishing furnished by the neighboring streams. Good prospects for a strike when the rigors of winter come and the lack is felt of the money that should have been earned and saved during the summer.

In Portsmouth, Virginia, a silver medal is presented to every child born. This is nearly as good as being born with a silver spoon in one's mouth.

A local butcher wielded a knife the other evening and threatened to slaughter his whole family. Business affairs should be kept out of the home.

There are prospects that the case against James C. Tomalty, accused of embezzling a large sum of money from the city, will be dropped. Tomalty happens not to be a business rival of any of our kings of finance—so what's the use?

JUST LOAFING

New York World.

ON THE SIGHTSEEING BUS

"On your right, gents, you will observe wot happens to kings that can't agree with their subjects."

—Ulk (Berlin)

Witchcraft in England

But Little Change Exists Between the Extent of Superstitious Belief in Great Britain Sixty Years Ago and at the Present Day—Quaint Story of a Perturbed Farmer

By Robert McTavish

Superstition is one of the most lasting of the human attributes. The wisest of people have a touch of it, a survival of witch-burning days. Thirteen at the table is a bugaboo to many, and there are plenty of otherwise sensible people who will not start upon any important piece of work or begin a journey on a Friday. Jay Gould, hard-headed financier that he was, when starting up a flight of stairs always aimed to put forth his left foot first. He was known on more than one occasion to descend half a flight of stairs, having remembered that he started up with his right foot. I can look upon all these foibles from a height, having not a tinge of superstition. To be sure, I know opals to be capable of bringing much ill luck to the wearer. But certain knowledge cannot be classed as superstition. I know of several members of a family who went through various misfortunes because of an opal ring that they wore successively. I will acknowledge that the stone was proved afterward to be bogus; but they all thought that it was an opal at the time they wore it, and from a Christian Science standpoint that made it in fact an opal. I am not of the Christian Scientists but they are likely to be right in their beliefs as I am in mine, so I feel that I am not violating the canons of consistency in borrowing their belief for the purpose of bolstering up my contention that in the case referred to the opal proved unlucky. Thus is any suspicion of superstition on my part banished by logic.

I believe it safe, from knowledge gained through general reading and observation, and through the recent perusal of two interesting articles on the subject, to maintain that this country has advanced more during the past century than has Great Britain in freeing itself from superstition, especially as regards witchcraft. In an old English magazine of sixty years ago I find an article on "Recent Cases of Witchcraft," while in the Occult Review for August of this year a writer describes "Survivals of Old Magical Customs in Great Britain." A comparison of the two is interesting.

"Lord Brougham," says the Westminster Review of January, 1859, "in one of his recent admirable addresses, pronounced witchcraft an exploded hallucination of the past; yet numerous localities have recently given proof that belief in it is still extensively entertained, and that in this species of delusion the nineteenth century successfully emulates the worst absurdities of the sixteenth. There is the same ungenerous tendency to make the gentler sex responsible for the ills of life, and to trace a relation of cause and effect between a sick cow and a superannuated female. Spells have been muttered in churchyards by swarthy women carrying dragon's blood, and suddenly vanishing with the artfully appropriated wardrobe of a too confiding housemaid at the conclusion of the ceremony. A pig was recently seen by the assembled members of a highly respectable family regaling itself with fruit in the upper branches of a cherry tree. Through the malice of an envious neighbor, the wife of a substantial Norfolkshire yeoman is 'harassed about night and day.' In a case at the Stafford Spring Assizes of last year, a quarrel with the mother of the prosecutor ended in the cheeses not turning, and on application to the prisoner, recommended by reputed skill in the art magic, it appears that the prosecutor's wife, horses, cattle, cheese and cheese-kettle were all of them bewitched; the wife, who was in the habit of curing the obsession of one evil spirit by another, deposed that she had often been 'snatched up in her sleep in her bed, as straight as she then stood, and shaken all to death'; at last on horror's head horrors accumulating, a fiery dog burst through the street door, terrifying the housemaid out of her wits, and illuminating the house with disastrous lights. In the village of East Thorpe in Essex, the bad language of an ill-conditioned girl was conjecturally traced to the insidious spells of a seemingly inoffensive neighbor, whereupon the peasantry rushed tumultuously to the assault, thinking themselves as ill-used in being prevented burning a witch as the Hindoos when thwarted in a similar propensity as to widows.

"'Think!' cries a Somersetshire carrier to his surprised interrogator when disdaining veterinary aid he hies to the women of Somerton about his ailing cattle, according to the ancient precedent recorded in the book of Samuel; 'Think! I do know it! Why, d'ye mean to say that a man could have four hosses die in one day, without nuthing done to 'um? There's no more the matter with them hosses than there is wi' you or I.' And when on a late occasion at the Worship Street Office, Mrs. Mary Anne Gable, that lady-like person who, after appealing in vain to the medical skill of Dr. Ramsbotham, took refuge at last in the burnit powders of Mrs. Macdonald, observed, 'Well, sir, we know that there are such things,' it is remarkable that beyond our expression of surprise at the paradoxical union of folly and respectability before him, the magistrate had no argument to adduce in refutation of the proposition."

A quaint incident is given in support of the argument that too wide a diffusion of knowledge induces superstition. "A clergyman," it is related, "not long ago was earnestly pressing on the attention of a dying Lincolnshire farmer certain doctrines which have presented difficulties to clearer heads under more favorable circumstances. 'Wut wi' faath,' was the faint response, given in the sick man's native Doric; 'wut wi' faith, and wut wi' the earth a turning round the sun, and wut wi' the railroads a fuzzin' and a whuzzin', I'm clean muddled, stonied and bet'; and so saying he turned to the wall and expired."

So, it may confidently be expected that the aeroplane will cause a revival of witchcraft in England. Bleriot and the Wrights will have much to answer for.

As to the decrease in the belief in witchcraft in Great Britain during the sixty years just passed, draw your own conclusions from the following synopsis of the Occult Review's account of present conditions:

It is said that in North Ireland and Arran many of the natives absolutely refuse to tell their names because the knowledge would enable the inquirer to 'call' them, no matter how far he was from them and whenever he cared to do so. Moreover, they also believe that any spell worked on the written name would have the same effect as if worked on the owner. All over Great Britain this instinctive dislike to giving one's name to a stranger exists.

Dislike to the pronunciation of their names is not confined to human beings. Certain Scotch and English fishermen believe that the salmon and pig have a similar objection to being named, but they may be called the "red fish" or the "queer fellow."

Contagious magic is founded on the idea that objects once related to one another retain their spiritual connection, although separated, and that if anything happens to one part the other part is affected. Thus by acting on any part the whole may be influenced. This explains why a magician wishing to act on an individual

(Continued on Page 33.)

J. C. WILSON

BROKER

Private Wire Chicago and New York

Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco

LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS

Main Office, Mills, Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482. Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

The Incubator

By Emil Kaiser (From the German)

"Yes, I set the hen, day before yesterday, upon a dozen eggs, the Cochin China hen," said Fraulein Tipps, with an important shake of her head.

Herr Felix Mainlaender took his meershaum pipe from his mouth. He was so put out that he handled the bowl with his fingers and made two deliberate spots upon the dusky cheeks of the fair maiden whose simpering head formed the receptacle for the tobacco.

"You should have waited, but you do not know how," he said reproachfully.

"Well, it is in the middle of August now and it will be very late in the summer before the chickens are hatched," she defended herself.

"Yes, but now the hen is on her nest, and the incubator will arrive tomorrow!"

Fraulein Tipps made a sarcastic grimace. "The incubator? Is that the latest idea?"

"We must advance with the times," exclaimed Herr Mainlaender. "Nowadays progressive people do not do their own hatching."

"Neither do I propose to hatch," replied the elderly spinster somewhat contemptuously. "Still, I prefer a good hen to the best of incubators."

"Nonsense! No hen can hatch more than a dozen chickens, and even that number is exposed to all sorts of accidents. She may abandon the nest, or break a few eggs. The incubator is reliable; I can regulate the temperature, I can control the development of the embryo. I can hatch one hundred eggs at once—in one word, it is the only rational method."

"Just like your bee-hive with the artificial honeycombs," agreed Fraulein Tipps.

Herr Mainlaender angrily shook out the ashes from his pipe. He did not relish conversations concerning his experiments with the apiary, for they awakened painful recollections of certain joyless weeks during which he had been obliged to stay indoors with a badly swollen face and hands.

"Will you ever get tired of those silly bees?"

"Well, if you prefer, I can speak of your mushroom culture instead."

Herr Mainlaender insisted that this experiment would have been a decided success, if only he had not happened to catch cold in the cellar.

"Oh, yes, to be sure there was some success about it," admitted Fraulein Tipps amiably. "Your overalls are still spotted and the cellar is overrun with mold."

Herr Mainlaender arose and walked up and down along the railing of the veranda, like a lion in his cage. He had retired from business rather early in life, not so much because he felt the need of rest, as because he had always intended to retire from active business at the age of sixty. He had invested in a cottage with a garden around it in a pretty little country town, where he intended to pass his declining years in leisurely comfort. Of leisure he had enough and to spare, but somehow the comfort was not so great as Herr Mainlaender had planned. Smoking palled upon him as his one pastime, and he had begun to devote himself to all sorts of rustic pursuits. These agricultural enterprises were conducted on a small scale, chiefly from the scientific point of view, with strict regard to the latest theories. His various failures would not have mattered in the least, if only his old and trusted housekeeper had not interpreted every single defeat as a triumph of her own common sense. Her self-complacent "I told you so!" was enough to drive him to frenzy.

"How can a man enjoy trying a new proposition, when you insist upon throwing cold water upon it?" he would say.

"I suppose I am to be held responsible," Fraulein Tipps would reply in an injured tone of voice. "Very well, I shall have nothing more to say."

But that would not have been like her at all. When the incubator arrived that afternoon and was unloaded in front of the house, she simply could not keep her mouth shut about it.

"The front garden will be absolutely ruined. Two of the finest rosebushes are already spoiled. Where is the monstrosity supposed to go?"

"Into the hen-house, of course!" said Herr Mainlaender briefly.

"The case is too large to get in."

"Oh, they will manage to get it in all right."

But they did not, for the door of the hen-house actually proved too small. A mason had to be sent for to enlarge the opening and to brick up the wall again. Meanwhile, the incubator remained outside. "As an ornament for the front garden," said Fraulein Tipps sarcastically.

At the end of a few days the incubator had at last been installed and, after a few more days, Herr Mainlaender had sufficiently studied the construction to regulate the temperature without getting up enough heat to hatch alligator eggs, as Fraulein Tipps pleasantly expressed it.

"Well, everything is in readiness," Herr Mainlaender very contentedly informed his housekeeper one fine afternoon.

"Indeed? But you will need some eggs for your machine, I suppose?" she inquired.

He nodded. "I am not going to start with more than a dozen this year. That is enough for an experiment. It is late in the season, almost September. Next year I shall hatch several hundred eggs, so as to make it worth while."

"Are you going to use cold storage eggs for the experiment?" inquired Fraulein Tipps.

"I have ordered a dozen high-class Brahmaputras," he replied, quite unruffled. "They are rather expensive eggs, it is true, at sixty cents apiece, but then the chickens are going to be plump, juicy broilers, instead of mere trash, like your measly little Minorcas."

"Well, all I can say is that I hope your chickens will not grow so large that they can't get out of the door," scoffed the housekeeper; "else we will have to send for the bricklayer again."

On the following day she stood in the kitchen and curiously opened a package which had been left by the expressman. It contained a dozen large, carefully packed eggs. She took one out and weighed it in her hand. It was heavy enough, but then sixty cents was a lot of money for one egg. Truly sinful waste, she called it.

Her gaze wandered from the box with the eggs to the kitchen stove, and from the stove back to the eggs. "It would serve him right," she murmured to herself. "Moreover, it would be an act of wisdom, in order to avoid a whole lot of bother next summer."

She resolutely put on a large kettle of water and, when it was bubbling and hissing away, she took the Brahmaputra eggs one after another and carefully dropped them in. Then she counted a number of times up to one hundred, according to her own favorite method, and said contentedly: "All right. Now they are hard-boiled Brahmaputras!"

She took the eggs out of the boiling water with a big ladle, allowed them to cool off, wrapped them carefully up again in the excelsior in which they had come, and carried the box into her master's room.

(Continued on Page 35.)

INVITATIONS MONOGRAMS CRESTS
VISITING CARD PLATES ENGRAVED
ROBERTSON
UNION SQUARE SAN FRANCISCO

Echoes

As one who walks upon a windy night,
  Through unknown streets, to reach the Minster door,
Guides not his footsteps by the gusty light,
  But by the clangor that the wild bells pour:
  Yet oft he pauses, when in the wind's roar
Some louder echo calls him left or right:
And much he joys when, full of angels bright,
  He sees the great rose-window flame before.
So if the wanderer in life's ways attend
  To catch the heavenly carillon, above
  Its earthly echoes, nature, heart and love:
Then in his ears, as earth's sweet voices end,
  The bells sound clearer, and before his eyes
  Bright windows open in the darkening skies.

—F. W. B.

Is the Dollar as Black, Etc.

By Harry Cowell

Money talks the world over: in Europe infrequently, "soto voce," drawing-room-wise, noiselessly dressed; but in America, incessantly, at the top of its voice, conspicuous in loud checks—the which is bad manners. Wherefore across the pond it is the fashion to contrast the loud-mouthed, hail-fellow, well-met! Dollar with the taciturn, wait-till-we-are-introduced Pound, needless to tell a nation of guessers in favor of which. Wherefore small wonder that from fashionable pulpits this side the duck-run unadvertised clergy deplore in well-bred monotones the screaming of the golden eagle and shake somniferous heads over this our so dollar-ous day and this our most distressfully noisy country. Nor is such talk cheap. Else would the laborer be unworthy of his $10,000 a year hire.

Now, for all their well-feigned blissful ignorance, the British Isles know well as we that the Dollar is a dragon no St. George has yet been born to slay. All the more dread because indispensable, it battens on things spiritual, waxes fat on enthusiasms, and Fletcherizes the ideals dropt one by one into its maw. Only, whereas, yonder, lacking a coronet, the hair is worn carelessly low so as to hide the birth-mark of the beast upon the forehead, here, out of pure bravado, we wear his very eye midmost of our shirt-front.

Contrast there indubitably is; yea, deadly is the drawing-room dollar as the latest Maxim, and comparatively harmless the bar-room variety as the smokeful booming cannon. The Filthy Lucre that is forever blowing its own horn is easily avoided as the warning-sounding leper of the East. Our money-worship is childish superstition rather than adult religion. As savagely we idolize the Dollar, so ridiculously we beat it, if it fail to answer prayer. In over-civilized Great Britain, on the other hand, 'tis a Deity invisible, high-throned, out of reach of blasphemous beatings; a Name that may not be named, save only in awed circumlocutions and of dire necessity.

Now, this is no retort of that puerile race prejudice which draws upon an imagination already overdrawn. Osler despite, I am now forty-three years young. The British Isles not only bore me but bored me. There for twenty-one years, more or less, I existed, and well I mind Miss Europe's graceful, not to say courtly, genuflections to the Demigod L. S. D. During a year or so spent in the halfway house of Canada, I qualified for life. For one-and-twenty years have I lived in the United States; with the result that it stirs my ink-well of English undefiled to see the land of my adoption maligned of envious critics and ungrateful Anglo-maniacs.

Golden with a vengeance is Great Britain's silence, and louder far than our words are its deeds. When some degenerate, with a lordly air and a monacled eye to the main chance, lays his redeemed coronet at the feet of Fire-and-Dew, daughter of the Demi-god, divinely tall and most divinely fair, the bending of his sorry back is patently a labor of love, and only Hatred, Malice and All Uncharitableness can possibly construe it into a bowing-down before the Almighty Dollar! Verily, 'tis a spectacle worthy the eyes of gods and men, that of the daughter of the Noisy One, demure as Charity, alleviating the distress of the Old-World unfit-to-survive! All of which goes to prove that in well-groomed places no more than in wild-and-woolly is the glittering Anti-Christ without his worshipers. Contrasting the idolatry of the New World with that of the Old, I should say that ours was the lip service, theirs the heart-felt. In Heaven only, where even the precious pavement is spurned of the wing-lifted foot, is no worship of the Demigod. But that is neither here nor there.

Nations perish; languages die; "sacra fames auri" lives on; least accursed—blessed almost—when it means love of larger life. As to us, our lust of gold is obvious, headstrong, has in it somewhat of the magnificent amorousness of the stallion; while that of our critics overseas is secret, cold, the Eden-destroying libidinousness of the serpent. Numismatically, our Dollar may be a fallen "angel," come down from half a sovereign to four-and-tuppence; but for all its screeching itself black in the face, is it really of quite so devilish a hue as it is painted?

We own and offer any part of
(Subject to sale)
300,000 PRESIDIO & FERRIES R. R. CO.
First Mortgage 5% BONDS

SUTRO & COMPANY
412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO
Particulars on request

TAXICABS
(Genuine RENAULT Cars)
PACIFIC TAXIMETER CAB COMPANY
Solicits your patronage of its equipment of imported Renault Taxicabs and will show its appreciation by prompt and reliable service.
TELEPHONE
FRANKLIN 4848
Private Exchange connecting all Departments
MAIN STATION AND GENERAL OFFICES, 1355-1363 BUSH STREET
FAY C. BEAL, General Manager.

The Spectator

A Gillig Story

This story is vouched for by Frank Unger. Harry Gillig, the noted Bohemian who died a few months ago, and Clay Green, the dramatist, were the chief actors. Gillig was noted for his sleight of hand tricks, which he delighted in showing off at the Bohemian and Lambs Clubs, to the great delight of his fellow members, for he possessed unusual skill. But in time all his tricks became stale through repetition, and he longed for some new ones. He consulted Unger, who had often aided him in his feats of magic, and they decided to go to the Orient in search of new legerdemain tricks. They went to Japan first, and there saw many quite wonderful things, but all too complicated and needing too many accessories and assistants. Then they went to India, where the same difficulty presented itself. Up and down the land they traveled, and many were the fakirs they interviewed without success. All these magicians were willing to part with their secrets if paid enough, but Gillig and Unger could find nothing to suit them. At last one day after they had bargained with a lean Hindoo agreeing to pay him forty rupees if his trick were satisfactory, only to find the same objections that had prevented them buying the secrets of the others, they were about to give up in despair. Then the fakir told them that he had another trick that he would sell them for one hundred rupees. He led them into a room in which sat a young native naked save for a breechclout. Up to him the fakir strode, and drawing a knife cut a slight gash in the young man's side—just enough to break the skin. From the gash he drew the end of a piece of thread—and drew, and drew, and drew, until he had more than one hundred feet of string piled up at his feet, all of it apparently coming directly out of the side of the stoical young native, who never even flinched during the ordeal. Gillig and Unger were wild with wonder and astonishment, and readily agreed to pay the price if the trick were within their limitations. Then the fakir showed them that a needle had been run under the young man's skin from the back to near the front of his body, and the wound allowed to heal, a free passage being left. The subject sat with his hands behind him holding a ball of thread and paying it out as the fakir drew it forth. Gillig and Unger were a little dubious, as they felt it would be next to impossible to get a subject. But having no hope of finding anything else they paid the money and came home.

Lambs Faint

After their arrival in New York, Gillig hunted in vain for an assistant. He tried tramps and beggars, but none of them was willing to undergo the pain of the trick—and some of them were mighty hungry at that. It was a thirsty man who at last came to Gillig's rescue—after his thirst had been abundantly assuaged. Gillig and Clay Green were out together one night, and after they had been around town until nearly midnight Gillig confided his troubles to Green. The latter offered to be the depository of the thread. Up to the Lambs' Club they went, and sought the room where the bath plunge was. There Green stripped to the waist, and Gillig, taking a heavy needle, poked it under his skin in the back. Things went all right for a moment when the needle became lost. But Gillig recovered it and started over again, and this time was successful. There sat Green with a piece of thread resting under his skin for a space of several inches, while he held the spool behind him in his hand. Then Gillig sent word for the club members to gather, as he had a new trick. They came in droves. When a goodly audience had gathered Gillig stepped forward, repeating incantations as the Indian had done, and with his knife made a nick in Green's side. Then he took the end of the tread, and began to pull, having two or three of the spectators take up the slack and carry it back to the others. Green sat like a stoic while Gillig pulled forth yard after yard of blood-stained thread, and the clubmen stood, their eyes popping, some with wonder and some with horror. Finally, after some thirty or forty feet had been drawn forth three spectators fainted and several others were seized with nausea. That put an end to the exhibition, and they were all driven out, while Green had his thirst further assuaged—for he needed it after the trial he had been through. But never again would he consent to be threaded. He said he was no human needle.

Critic (as the composer plays his last piece)—"Very fine, indeed! But what is that passage which makes the cold chills run down the back?"

Composer—"That is where the wanderer has the hotel bill brought to him."

Markham Sees Green

Glad tidings come to the culturine in the news that Edwin Markham, the hoe poet, is coming home again. He has tired of the effete East, and longs for the freedom of the raw and unbridled West. He says that the brown hills and plains are calling him, and that here he will be able to cultivate his garden of poesy as of old—will be able to hoe out the weeds as it were, and thereby rake in ducats. There are too many people in the East, Markham says, and too much green. "Here in the East it is all green," is the poet's plaint. "In the West—and mark that when I speak of the West I mean the scope of country beyond the Rockies—it is all brown half the year. But it is not a monotonous brown, as your green is monotonous and tiring. . . . It is a brown of infinite varieties, of changing beauties. . . . Here in the East there is nothing but people, people, people—and green, green, green." One wonders that Markham has never observed the mantle of white that overspreads the Eastern landscape for a considerable portion of each year. The old boy must have hibernated throughout the winters.

Local Sculptor's Success

Arthur Putnam, because of his modesty known only to a discriminating few as the leading sculptor of the West, has just sold a bronze, "The Snarling Puma," to the Metropolitan Museum of Art of New York. The piece was selected by Daniel Chester French, which in itself places the hallmark of merit on it. Putnam has made his greatest success in figures of wild animals, and although he has his studio here he sells most of his work in New York, where it is handled by the leading art

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA
Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets
A General Banking Business Transacted
CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

J. M. Jacobi & Co.
S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY & SUTTER Sts
Individuality is always found in the best tailored garments
OUR SPRING AND SUMMER CLOTHING MERITS YOUR ATTENTION.

dealers. Putnam, who has learned sculpture almost entirely without teaching, casts his own bronzes, in which he is unique among sculptors. His work received very high honors in Paris two or three years ago, attracting much attention. Putnam is a plain, farmer-like fellow, who leads a simple life, works hard, and is not in the least inflated by his success. He has a certain dry Yankee type of humor which is well illustrated by an incident which occurred in Paris. He had just finished a piece to be entered at the salon—where it was accepted, by the way. The figure was of a reclining athlete, and Putnam needed a name for it, preferably Greek. His knowledge of Greek was extremely limited, and he was afraid of naming the figure wrongly. Then an inspiration came to him. Picking up the entry card he wrote on it, "The Reclining Eucalyptus." And that was the name it was given in the catalogue.

Madame Wu's Pidgin English

Why Wu Ting-Fang, the Chinese minister at Washington has been recalled by his government is a mystery that is agitating diplomatic circles. This is the second time Wu has been withdrawn from ministerial work at the capital. I remember that when he passed through here some eighteen months ago on his way to Washington, he landed in a pouring rain, but nothing could dampen his bland urbanity or make him cease his perpetual questioning. Wu is the most inquisitive man on earth, and when he is interviewed he and the reporter change places. He speaks the best of English, and his children are being educated in this country. But a good knowledge of our tongue is not possessed by Madame Wu, who in her rich Chinese brocades and striking headgear has been a marked personality in Washington society. At an afternoon function last winter some one asked Madame Wu whether she liked Washington entertainments, and after a moment's reflection she replied, "Likee eatee party." Shortly afterward she was seen in the dining room giving proof of her preference by devoting herself with great enthusiasm to a plate of cakes and sandwiches. Madame Wu is credited with playing a great joke on a newspaper photographer during her first visit to this city several years ago. With her husband she was staying at the Chinese Consulate, and she was constantly importuned to sit for her photograph. The Chinese conception of exclusiveness and privacy, combined with something of a dread of the little black box, made this impossible. Yet one photographer insisted, and finally after several visits he was told that Madame Wu would sit for him. He was shown into the principal room of the house, and presently a stately Chinese lady made her appearance, accompanied by an English speaking Chinese. It was Madame Wu, the delighted photographer was told, and he lost no time in taking a portrait of her. His paper published the picture on the first page the next morning, proudly stating that it was the only photograph of the Chinese minister's wife ever taken. Several months afterward the fact leaked out that the diplomat's wily spouse had been photographed by proxy, having sent one of her ladies in waiting to face the camera.

Student of the Human Comedy—What do actors mean when they assure us that things are coming their way?
Professor—Cabbages and eggs.

Poet Predicted Airships

It is interesting to note that something like a century and a quarter ago William Cowper, the poet, predicted that some day ships would fly through the air. In a letter written in 1783 to a friend, Rev. John Newton, the poet said in reference to a balloon ascension that had just been made:

"The invention of these new vehicles is yet in its infancy. * * * The atmosphere, though a much thinner medium (than water), we well know resists the impression made upon it by the tail of a bird as effectually as the water that of a ship's rudder. Pope, when inculcating one of his few useful lessons, and directing mankind to the providence of God as the true source of all their wisdom, says beautifully:

"'Learn of the little nautilus to sail,
Spread the thin oar, and catch the driving gale.'

"It is certain at least that nothing within the reach of human ingenuity will be left unattempted to accomplish and add all that is wanting to this last effort of philosophical contrivance. * * * (We have) in every fowl of the air a pattern which now at length it may be sufficient to imitate. Wings and a tail, indeed, were of little use, while the body, so much heavier than the space of air it occupied, was sure to sink by its own weight, and could never be held in equipoise by any implements of the kind which human strength could manage. * * * Should the point be carried and man at last become as familiar with the air as he has long been with the ocean, will it in its consequences prove a mercy or a judgment?"

Would Shoot Aviators

Cowper was not pleased with the prospect of machines whizzing through the air—in fact, he looked upon such things as a contravention of the will of the Almighty, arguing that if God had intended us to fly he would have given us wings. He speculated, as we speculate today, upon the effect of flying machines upon the enforcement of customs, laws and relations international and otherwise. He saw springing from aviation "The confusion of all order, an annihilation of all authority, with danger both to property and person and impunity to the offenders." The gentle old poet must have been terribly stirred by his thoughts, for he wrote as follows as to what punishment should be inflicted upon men who would dare to fly:

"Were I an absolute legislator I would therefore make it death for a man to be convicted of flying, the moment he could be caught; and to bring him down from his altitudes by a bullet sent through his head or his carriage should be no murder. Philosophers would call me a vandal; the scholar would say that had it not been for me the fable of Daedalus would have been realized, and historians would load my memory with reproaches of phlegm and stupidity and oppression; but in the meantime the world would go on quietly, and if it enjoyed less liberty would at least be more secure."

The world is beginning to realize that it must soon face the problems that speculatively presented themselves to Cowper. But as it has never yet failed in a measurably satisfactory solution of the trobules that have confronted it, the hope may be entertained that it will be able to cope with the aeroplane and the dirigible without going gunning for aviators.

A Wise Parrot

At Sisson Tavern a few nights ago several congenial fellows were gathered in the tavern's dispensary thirstily awaiting the filling of several prescriptions that the barkeeper had in hand. Just as he was draining the last Gibson into the glass, in came a guest whose manners and characteristics had gained him the nickname of "Lizzie." With an expression almost of horror upon his face he gazed upon the array of cocktails, and the

VINTINE
MADE BY BROOKS
A tonic for men and women---will cure chronic constipation
Your druggist will get it—price, $1.00

J. Magnin & Co.
IMPORTERS
First Showing of Correct Models
LADIES', MISSES' AND GIRLS' TAILORED SUITS AND COATS FOR AUTUMN, 1909
Moderate Prices European Style and Materials
GRANT AVENUE AND GEARY STREET

situation became a little embarrassing. To relieve it, the man who was buying said, "Will you join us?" "Oh no, no," gasped Lizzie; "I never indulge." And then Polly Sisson, the tavern parrot, shrieked, "Have some bread and butter"—one of her pet expressions. The remark came so pat that the wicked revelers roared with laughter, and Lizzie fled.

"Was your first meeting with your wife romantic?"
"Extremely so. It occurred at a picnic. I was eating a very ripe tomato and some of it squirted into her eye."

Ship Subsidy Promised

Some time ago the people of Hawaii extended an invitation to members of both houses of Congress to visit their islands. Through the acceptation of the proffer, the whole United States is to be the gainer, for the score of Senators and Congressmen who have been here this week on their way to Honolulu promise to give us a ship subsidy bill at the next session of Congress. There were nearly a score of men in the party, and many of them had declared against the ship subsidy; but a day on the bay of San Francisco, a sight of American merchant ships lying idle while subsidized foreign ships were loading with freight, convinced them that we had not been presumptuous in our requests. They saw practical evidence of the fact that the American merchant marine is being driven from the ocean by the ships of other countries, which, because of the bounties given them are enabled to carry freight at a rate with which our shipowners cannot compete. It has long been to the shame of this country that the stars and stripes are seen more and more seldom on the seas. Our greatest humiliation, though, came during the journey around the world of the fleet that Roosevelt sent on its spectacular voyage. It is a fact that while in foreign waters our fighting ships had to engage foreign vessels as coal tenders. The American flag was at such a discount abroad that we had to call on others for aid. Such a condition of affairs could not exist were there a shipping subsidy large enough to enable our shipping men to compete with foreigners. The continued refusal of Congress to grant this subsidy has long been a disgrace to legislation, but it looks now as though the error were to be remedied. If so, the American flag will again come to its own. San Francisco will benefit greatly. Ships will be loading at the docks a year from now instead of rotting in the stream, and the business done at our waterfront will benefit home instead of foreign shippers.

A Mystified Parvenue

J. Warren Keene, who is doing his tricks in magic at the National Theatre this week, is a San Francisco boy, and is home after covering a goodly part of the world in his journeyings. He is a brother of George Keene, the local politician, of Theodore and Gus Keene, both well known in literary and artistic circles here, and of Frank Keene, the New York illustrator. Heller, the magician, pronounces Keene the greatest prestidigitator and coin palmer of the present time. Keene has had many funny experiences in his travels, but he says the most amusing occurred when he was giving his act in a Newport mansion as part of an evening's entertainment. A portly parvenue took a deep interest in his skill, and questioned him at length regarding his paraphernalia and his methods. "Do you know," she said, "I have been just flabbergasted trying to watch your hands, your face, and the things you toss about." "And how did the tout ensemble please you?" asked the man of magic employing his best French accent on the "sawmble." "What trick will I find that in, please?" she asked.

Our Mayor's Plaint

Mayor Taylor has lately returned from Los Angeles where he was much impressed with the politeness of the street car employes in assisting old gentlemen and ladies on and off the cars. He recently spoke to Horace Platt on the subject bemoaning the fact that San Francisco's conductors do not so—though how he knows no one can guess, as he has never ridden on the cars since his induction into office and the grafted red automobile. Horace Platt replied, "Why yes, of course, your honor, the street car men of Los Angeles are polite because they are treated with politeness. In that city they encourage their transportation companies, understanding that there can be no municipal growth without them. Here you and your friends appear to be under the conviction that a man who owns a street railway should be persecuted and prosecuted as though he were committing a felony while the street car employes are regarded as being accessories before the fact. In such a hostile atmosphere how can you expect anything of these men?"

Her (reading)—"And so they were married, and that was the last of their troubles."
Him (sotto voice)—"Last, but not least!"

Physicians in Combat

Dr. Philip Mills Jones has been missed from his usual haunts of late, and inquiries have brought the reply that he is in the country on a vacation. The doctor is in the country all right, but the vacation consists in passing most of the time in bed, where he is being treated for an injury that is the result of a little fun in the redwood grove where the Bohemians foregather and make merry. The hurt was inflicted by Dr. Harry Weill, who, by the way, was not in the least to blame in the matter. It was a sort of Jack and Giant Killer episode, or the David and Goliath incident repeated—for Jones stands over six feet, while Weill is small. But the latter has a jiu-jitsu trick that is more efficacious than size or strength. It consists of grasping an opponent by the legs and standing him on his head. The two physicians were scuffling, and Weill was getting a little the worst of it when he did the jiu-jitsu. The result was that Jones landed on his head, and when he got his his feet he was badly dazed; then a moment later he fainted. An examination showed that there was a slight fracture of the bone at the base of the nose, a queer feature of the

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

Santa Fe

NEW TRAIN

Via the Santa Fe to Chicago via Kansas City

EAST

Leave San Francisco daily 7:15 a. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m. This is in addition to our two other trains leaving San Francisco and Oakland 8:00 and 10:00 p. m. Also New Train to Fresno. Leaving San Francisco 4:00 p. m.; Leave Oakland 4:05 p. m. This in addition to our THREE other trains leaving San Francisco daily at 7:15 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m.

For detail information phone or call on Jas. B. Duffy, 673 Market Street, San Francisco
T. Love, Market Street Ferry Depot, San Francisco
J. J. Warner, 1112 Broadway, Oakland accident being that despite the violence of the fall the doctor's glasses were not broken. It was thought at first that he had suffered concussion of the brain, but later it was ascertained that he was in no danger of death. He is now convalescing in the country.

A Lynching Bee

This happened two or three days before the big jinks took place, and while there were only a few Bohemians in the grove. When the crowd arrived on Saturday night it was determined to hold a mock trial with Weill as the defendant. The "Corpse" consisting of the injured man on a stretcher was brought in, and the fact that a crime had been committed having been established by a coroner's inquest, a posse was sent to hunt Weill. It was a spectacular chase, but at last the pseudo-sheriff and his men caught the fugitive. Then came the mob bent on lynching. It was headed by Dick Hotaling, and a great fight ensued for possession of the prisoner, the mob finally capturing him. The lynchers were about to string him up forthwith, but Hotaling as leader announced, "Here, we want to be sure first that he done it." "He done it all right," yelled the members of the mob in chorus, so the lynching proceeded. A real hangman's noose was tied, but as the rope was fastened under Weill's arms he got as much fun out of the hanging as anybody did. Then came the inevitable snapshot, which when developed showed a really ghastly picture—the dark and somber redwoods, the shadows, the knot of men, the limp body hanging to the branch of a tree. These photographs are highly prized by their possessors.

A Thrilling Episode

But this was not the only thrilling thing that took place at the grove. One day there was a river episode that created no end of excitement. It occurred at the swimming pool, where the Bohemians disport themselves. The Russian river is deep and wide there, and makes an ideal bathing place. It is public, and many people in boats pass up and down. On the day in question, while half a hundred or more Bohemians were in the water, a boat containing two girls came around the bend. As it drew opposite the bath house a dispute arose between the occupants, the one in the stern insisting on taking the oars, and the one on the seat refusing to surrender them. Then a scuffle ensued, and before the eyes of the horrified Bohemians the boat tipped over and with gurgling screams the girls sank from sight. Immediately there were all kinds of excitement. "Billy" Hopkins and Sid Caville, the noted swimmer, leaped into a boat and rowed at all speed for the scene of the accident, while Bohemians swam to the same point from every part of the pool. Dr. Harry Weill meanwhile had hastened to the nearest point with his medicine case in his hand. The girls had sunk the second time before any of the rescuers reached them, and when they were caught as they came up for the third time they were found to be limp and apparently unconscious. It was hard work to lift them into the boat, and in the struggle the wig slipped of one of the "girls" revealing the features of Frank McComas, the artist. His companion proved to be Judge William Smith. So bent were the duped Bohemians on vengeance that the practical jokers were nearly drowned in earnest before making their escape.

First Straphanger (in a whisper)—"Why did you give that woman your seat? She isn't bundle-laden, tired, or pretty, or even polite."

Second Straphanger—"Well—er—you see—she is my wife."

A Boorish Poet

In a recently published article Harry Thurston Peck reveals a new side of Tennyson, describing him as indifferent to the feelings of others, a user of coarse language and a teller of obscene stories. To illustrate the great poet's boorishness, Peck tells of an incident that occurred while Tennyson was a guest of Max Muller and his wife, spending the night with the Mullers at Oxford. In the morning he strode into the breakfast room, and without the usual salutation stalked up to the table, which was already laid. Whipping the cover off the principal dish, he snorted with disgust. "Mutton chops!" he roared. "The staple of every second class inn in England." Now I have a very great reverence for the works of any literary genius; but I do not think that his endowment gives him the privilege of insulting his fellow man. It has become a custom to overlook the eccentricities of the great, and it is because of this that they presume on lesser mortals. It occurs to me that if Muller had said to Tennyson, "You boor, there's the door—leave my house as quickly as possible," the poet would have been painfully surprised and shocked, but would have mended his manners. The artistic temperament carries with it an inclination to do unconventional things—and for rebels against some of the conventions many thanks should be given. But the artistic temperament does not confer any rights that we everyday people should be denied. We are all entitled to a certain amount of respect and consideration from

PORTOLA Cafe

OPENS

Wednesday, Sept. 1

A NEW Cafe which, if merit counts for anything, will immediately take its proper place as San Francisco's leading restaurant.

WE mean by Merit---an unsurpassible cuisine, an assured satisfactory service, delightful environment and the best music in San Francisco.

Music under direction of B. Jaulus

C. O. SWANBERG, Manager

FLOOD BUILDING
Market — Powell — Ellis
Main Entrance, 18 Powell Street

HOTEL NORMANDIE
SUTTER AND GOUGH STREETS
A comfortable, high order, uptown hotel, now under the management of THOS. H. SHEDDEN, Formerly Manager of St. Dunstan's.

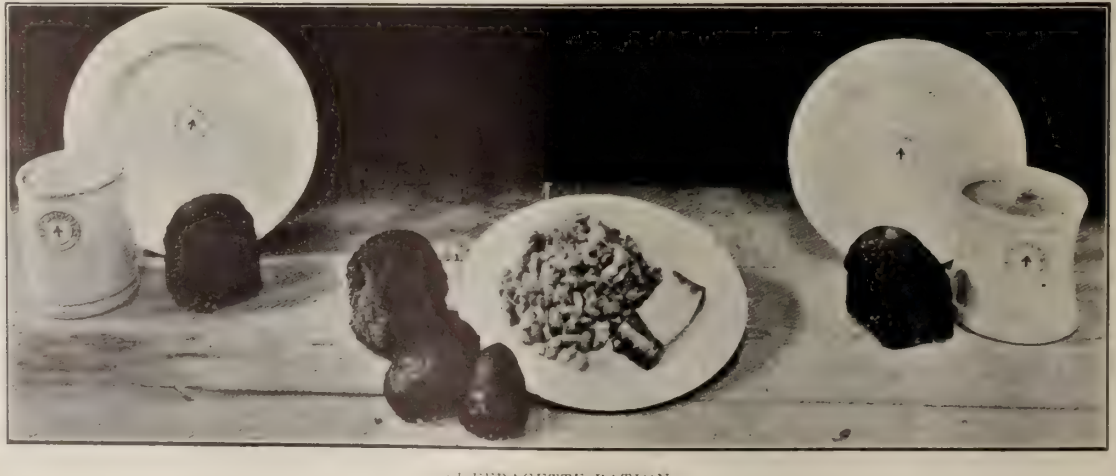
our fellows, and if geniuses were given to understand that this decent treatment was demanded they would soon accord it. Ibsen was begged and implored once to attend a reception and meet some women who greatly admired him. He finally consented on the promise of his hostess that there would not be more than a dozen other guests. When he arrived he found nearly two score. Turning on his hostess he abused her for breaking faith with him and stamped out of the house. It is not recorded that any of her male relatives mussed up the great dramatist's face for him, but that is exactly what should have happened. Similar treatment should have been given the great musician—I think it was Beethoven—who threw his hostess' pet poodle through the window with the remark, "I hate dogs." An obvious reply would have been, "So do I—trot along home." But geniuses will always be spoiled, so prone is the publice to worship them, forgetful of the fact that a great writer, a painter or musician may have two personalities —the one which produces his work, and the one which determines his actions toward others. Eugene Field was often heard using foul language in speaking of some of the tenderest and sweetest poems he ever wrote. Divinely gifted violinists have been hogs at the table.

Swinburne and Tennyson

The difference between a man and his writings is aptly illustrate in Swinburne. His poems were loudly condemned for their sensuality and passion, yet he was one of the shyest of men so far as women were concerned, and wonderfully refined and sensitive. Tennyson wrote chaste poetry, yet his mind ran to the lower things of life. It is told that when Longfellow visited him the first time Tennyson regaled him for more than an hour with off-color stories. Longfellow, not enough of a genius to be impolite, suppressed all signs of his disgust. But he went away terribly shocked, and never could feel the same toward Tennyson as before. According to Peck, Tennyson had all the egotism that is usually associated with genius. "He had but little care for another's feelings," says Peck. "Visitors who came to him on his invitation or on the invitation of his wife were often appalled by his grimness, his sullen silence, his rude indifference to all the duties of a host. Nor was even his sociability at times less typical of a strangely self-centered nature; since it often took the form of egotism, and he would bear down all other conversation in his arrogant monologues upon his own achievements, ending usually with interminable recitations of his own productions; for he was inordinately fond of declamatory renderings of his latest verse; and while, no doubt, one might esteem it a high privilege to hear Tennyson interpreted by himself, the fact remains that the act was one of gross indifference to others."

"Do you believe surgery can ward off old age?"
"Oh, yes. Frequently the patient dies under an operation."



A Scattered Harem

The fact is now revealed that there were more than 1,300 women in the harem of Abdul Hamid, the deposed Sultan of Turkey. When he was spirited away to Salonica he took only eleven of his wives with him, all girls under twenty years of age. Thirty-one women of the harem went to London, where they have been quartered by the English government in fine apartments, and are leading the lives of English ladies, receiving calls from gentlemen friends, going to receptions and teas, and altogether having a most delightful time. They take naturally to the freedom that is given them, and seem to enjoy it the more because of its contrast to their former restricted lives. The government of Turkey has demanded the return of these women, but England refuses to give them up. Few people know that the Sultan was never legally married, the Ottoman law providing that he could contract an alliance only with a house of equal importance to his own. As Khalipha, vicar of Mohammed and king of kings it is obviously impossible for him to find an equal. Still he has official wives. To be such, a woman must be married to him on the seventeenth day of the Ramazan, and afterward bear him a child. A child thus born is the legal offspring of the Sultan, although its mother is not his legal wife. While he was Sultan, Abdul Hamid sent agents all through the empire selecting future consorts for him. Children were bought from their parents, turned over to the head of the harem, and by him cared for until they reach the age of sixteen, when they were sent to the Sultan's living quarters, where they remained or not according to whether they met his favor. Since the deposition of the Sultan the Turkish government has made efforts to find the parents of the women of his harem, succeeding in but a few instances. Many of them have been given to officials to marry, while others are living in retirement on pensions. More than sixty, including those who went to London, escaped to Europe. One group of eighteen arrived in Paris, but were at the request of the Turkish government sent back an hour after their arrival.

She offered an explanation of her tearful mood.
"I've been to a wedding," she said. "I always cry more at a wedding than I do at a funeral. It's so much more uncertain."

Suffragettes' Prison Quarters

According to all accounts, the London suffragettes who were sent to Holloway Prison for various disturbances that they created were not model prisoners. The wardresses asserted that they were the most unruly with whom they had ever dealt, and warrants were sworn out against two of the militant ladies for striking their keepers. As will be noted in the pictures on this page, there is not a prisoner to be seen. This is owing to a wise order on the part of the authorities, who will not permit the prisoners to be photographed, thinking probably that to publish their pictures would heighten their martyrdom

SUFFRAGETTE RATION

Breakfast, one pint of gruel and a six-ounce brown roll; dinner, six-ounce brown roll, six ounces of potatoes, ten ounces of beans and ten ounces of fat bacon; supper, one pint of gruel and a six-ounce brown roll.

and make them more popular among their followers. Mrs. Pankhurst and her daughter and many other very prominent woman suffragists occupied the jail of which pictures are shown. They were treated well according to prison standards, being given an adequate supply of food, although there was a lamentable lack of variety.

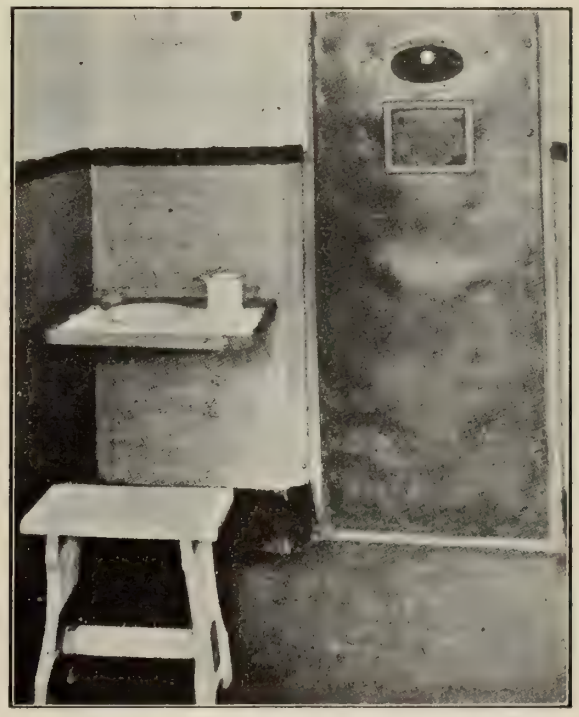
THE BUNDLE ROOM

Here is kept the clothing of the suffragettes, who are compelled to wear prison garb while in jail.

The cells were furnished with plank beds and baths were supplied. Some of the most obstreperous of the suffragettes caused considerable trouble by refusing to eat, and one or two were on the verge of starvation before they could be induced to take any food. The suffragettes

RECEPTION CELLS

In which prisoners sit while waiting to be given a bath and change of clothing before being taken to permanent cells.



have been nothing daunted by imprisonment, and daily run the risk of again sleeping on plank beds, eating coarse food and doing prison work—making bead blinds for windows and otherwise helping to pay for their board and lodging.

DR. MATILDA A. FEELEY

Is now located at 1700 Sutter Street. Diseases of women and children. Hours 2 to 4 and 7 to 8 p. m.

Mrs. Belmont's Campaign

I hear through a New York correspondent that Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont is making great preparations for the vigorous campaign for woman suffrage that she is to conduct this coming winter. Mrs. Belmont is no dilettante in the cause, but is going into the work with an ardor that bodes ill for her opponents. She threatens the Republican and Democratic parties with dissolution, saying that if they continue persistently to ignore the claims of the suffragettes she and her followers will organize a third party. She says there are plenty of men who will espouse her cause. "Women are not such cowards as men are in the matter of voting," says Mrs. Belmont. "We shall urge the men who do not vote now because of their disgust with the methods of the old parties, to join us. And so the two big parties, because of their disregard for the welfare of the country, will force us in time, perhaps, to organize a powerful third party that will force them to pay some attention to us."

INTERIOR OF CELL

Showing spyhole in the door through which wardresses may peep, and the shelf and stool used by the prisoners at meal time.

Hall for Meetings

As an afterthought, Mrs. Belmont is making a large addition to her new marble house on Fifth avenue. This is to be used as a lecture and entertainment hall for suffragette meetings. Also Mrs. Belmont is to open her Newport home, Marble House, for two suffragette lectures during the month. Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, President of the National Woman's Suffrage Association, will deliver a lecture there on votes for women on August 24. On August 28 Professor Charles Zueblin of the University of Chicago will talk on "Women's Place in Pub-

TOWNSEND'S

CALIFORNIA GLACÈ FRUITS AND CANDIES

27 Years in Palace Hotel Building

All Orders Given Prompt Attention at

46 MARKET STREET

Phone Douglas 4814

Factory, 117 SAN JOSE AVE. Phone Mission 378

On Sept. 15th we open a new store at 755 Market St.

Also at News Stands of the Fairmont and St. Francis Hotels

lic Life." The admission fee will be $5—an excellent opportunity for climbers to perch on the steps of the throne. Mrs. Belmont will open her State campaign in Troy in October and will lecture all winter.

Kipling and Royalty

Nowadays royalty has no such regard for the poet as the poet has for royalty—this despite the fact that it pleased the most gracious majesty of Great Britain and Ireland to put poetry on a footing of superiority to porter by creating one Lord Alfred Tennyson and the other merely Sir Arthur Guinness. There be royalty and royalty, and Rudyard Kipling, "conscience-keeper of the English-speaking peoples," and no such lover of beauty personified as is the most gentlemanly of gentlemen, can well afford to scorn to change his state with kings, seeing that even prosaic petty tradesmen are fain to add to his bank account by declining to subtract therefrom their devilish due. Innumerable checks for small amounts bearing his royal autograph are never cashed, much to his chargin, so much that he now makes a practice of paying "spot" for onions, curry, liver, bacon, and the like. 'Tis said that he would dearly love to see passed a law compelling persons to take what is coming to them even as he takes what is coming to him. For a poet, Rudyard is credited with being no mean business man. Not long ago an admirer of his took pains commensurate with his capacity to write Kipling up to the skies, trusting thereby to turn an incidental and honest penny. To Doubleday & Page he submitted his "write-up," and for his pains received the information that the "conscience-keeper" had a hard and fast contract with them to get a twelve and a half per cent royalty on all books written about him, the which, over and above the writer's ten per cent, "queered" an otherwise reasonable business venture. When our own Herman Whitaker was planning the famous fight between the Tropics and New England, wherein Cancer swings and Mr. David, moral giant, goes down, and takes the count, but comes up smiling, it occurred to him that he might make his New Englander read "McAndrew's Hymn," and no harm done, never dreaming that by so doing he was running no small risk of subjecting his generous publishers, Messrs. Harper Bros., to a damage suit for infringement of copyright. Politely awakened, the author of "The Planter" contented himself (and, I trust, the author of the hymn) with two lines, as follows:

"Lord, Thou hast made this world below the shadow of a dream."
"But swells the ripenin' cocoanut an' ripes the woman's breast."

In this world below, the shadow of a dream yclept Rudyard Kipling sees to it that he gets what's coming to him, in the world below this, others, no doubt, will see to it for him.

A Civil War Incident

By the way, the author of "The Planter," etc., was once quartered in Ireland. Here is the story of how he cheated the gallows. Having been duly quartered, he was drawn from Cork to Bandon by a pitiful jade urged by a typical Irish jarvey given to cracking jokes with his very whip. As ill luck would have it, the road led past certain sorry reminders of Oliver Cromwell, a row of gibbets fallen into innocuous desuetude, whereat the Irishman must needs shake his whip hand. Thinking to take a rise out of his Jehu, the Englishman asked, "What are you shaking your fist at? Just think where you'd be if they'd had their due!" Pat ceased his hostile demonstrations on the instant, and, sober as a judge, returned: "Just think, yer honor!—out a good fare, dhrivin' alone! G't up there, y' hussy! Where's yer manners? Can't y' see th' gintleman's feelin' powerful onaisy?"

"Do you ever write on an empty stomach?" asked the mere man.

"Sir!" exclaimed the literary person, "I am a poet, not a tattoo artist!"

Music at Meals

From far-off London comes a wail that finds its echo here—a protest against too noisy music in restaurants. Music as an accompaniment to gastronomic delights is all right if it does not disturb all the other pleasures of the table, among which may be counted conversation. There is no pleasanter way to add to the gustatory joys of meal time than by chatting with a companion. But who can talk within a few feet of a noisy orchestra playing Sousa marches or the crashing strains of Wagner? Here is what is said on the subject by a Londoner writing in the Saturday Review: "The proper position of a restaurant band presents a problem of some difficulty. If it is put too far away it is inaudible; if it is too near you cannot hear yourself speak. The relative disadvantage of these alternatives can only be determined if one has complete information as to the badness of the orchestra and the excellence of the conversation. If it is put too near the pantry the rattle of plates and cups provides a constant xylophone accompaniment, and if this is to be appropriate the repertoire will have to be confined practically to one piece by Saint-Saens and one by Liszt, with short fragments from one or two more modern composers. If the pantry is at some distance from the instrumentalists, the constant competition of the pseudo-xylophones and the other instruments is an-

EDUCATIONAL

The Chandler School For Girls

LOS ALTOS, CALIFORNIA

Beautiful grounds covering six acres in the foothills, three and one-half miles from Stanford University. Outdoor study and classwork. Address MRS. MARY CHANDLER, Los Altos, California.

California Conservatory of Music

Is now located in its new magnificent building

147 PRESIDIO AVENUE

Between Jackson and Washington Streets

noying to the unmusical and maddening to the musical diner. If the band is too visible it distracts one's attention from one's food, which may or may not be an advantage according to the nature of the restaurant; if it is too invisible the leader becomes dispirited, and does not display his accustomed vigor." Here's hands across the sea in sympathy, old man. If you keep hammering away on that side and I on this, we may in time educate restaurant keepers to the fact that there should be no music at meal times except of the soft variety—the kind that soothes and pleases without distracting the attention from everything else and making utterly futile all attempts at conversation.

"Hips, curves, embonpoint! Everything has had to go."
"Yes; woman is pretty near down to the original rib."

Telephones for China

Since China began rubbing her sleepy eyes a few years ago and awakening to the fact that outside her domains was a very large world that had outstripped her while she slumbered, many things pointing to advance have occurred in that Celestial land of leisurely ways and manners. Armies have been formed and trained, modern school books have supplanted those that were in use for thousand of years, drastic laws have been made against opium, railways have been projected and built. And the latest demonstration of an advance that will astonish the world within a generation is the adoption by the Chinese government of the telephone. A New York company has secured a huge contract after competition with French, English, German and other foreign firms, and within six months will install in Pekin a system with two switchboards, one at either end of the city. The switchboards, which will be of the most modern make, will cost approximately $150,000. China really has no telephone system now. There are only 2,000 telephones for all the 400,000,000 people in the vast empire. Most of these are owned by foreigners, and are of the old hand-ringing variety. They are used only for social purposes, the telephone for shopping and business purposes being unknown in China. The switchboards to be installed in Pekin will have a capacity of about 10,000 telephones. Later on plants will be installed in Tientsin, Canton, Hankow and other big cities. The government will control the service.

EXCURSION TO UKIAH

The Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company announces that it will run an excursion to Ukiah on Sunday. August 29th. This is California's most popular excursion. Everyone is sure of a seat, as no more tickets are sold than there are seats provided. Owing to this precaution it is a most comfortable ride. Passing through the various valleys and skirting the Russian River for forty-six miles, a constant change of scenery is had. There will be over four hours at Ukiah, during which time visits can be made to Vichy Springs, the Fish Hatchery and the Asylum. The rate is only $2.50 for the round trip, and leaving time from San Francisco is 8:15 a. m. and from Ukiah on the return at 4:45 p. m. Tickets may be secured at the Ferry Office or at the uptown ticket office, 874 Market street (ground floor of Flood Building).

A Particular Store for Particular People

TRADE MARK Quality McLean's Service 1158-1168 SUTTER ST. SAN FRANCISCO

PHONE FRANKLIN 2810

Cakes

Pound Cake.—"Pound for Pound" is the rule in the making of all our Pound Cakes. But in addition, the butter and all the other ingredients must be of the choicest quality. That's why our Pound Cakes are always so sweet and delicious.

Price 75c each.

Special sizes and iced Pound Cakes made to order on short notice.

L. D. McLEAN CO.

IMPORTERS AND GROCERS

1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS

UNION SQUARE

A community of content

Under the management of JAMES WOODS

FAIRMONT HOTEL

Superb in situation, rich in appointment, with an atmosphere of quiet elegance and dignity unusual in any hotel. Rates from $2.50 per day upwards.

PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

HOTEL VICTORIA

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Manager

N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton

CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL

Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine. Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.

American and European Plan.

HOTEL HARCOURT

Formerly the Nordhoff.

SUTTER AND LARKIN STREETS

AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN

An Elegantly Furnished Modern Home. Phone Franklin 2100

TECHAU TAVERN

Cor. Eddy and Powell Sts.

CAFE AND LADIES' GRILL

Rigo and his Gypsy Orchestra

Concerts Daily during Shopping Hours

From 3:30 to 5:00 p. m. and from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m.; 10:30 to 1:00 a. m.

Private Dining Booths and Banquet Rooms on Mezzanine Floor. Entrance—No. 4 Eddy Street

Under the management of A. C. MORRISSON

TAIT-ZINKAND CAFE

168-178 O'FARRELL STREET

(Opposite the Orpheum)

OPEN FOR BUSINESS

We are prepared to cater for outside Parties, Weddings, Breakfasts, Balls, Luncheons, etc., in the city and bay counties. Menus and prices submitted on request.

TEL. DOUGLAS 560 JOHN TAIT, Manager

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy.

Wheat: The effort to advance prices on the September wheat succeeded for a day or two. The large interest which has maintained September at a premium over December has relied upon small threshing operations in Nebraska and Northern Kansas to bring about a congestion in the North. The rise over a dollar came at a time when dry hot weather put grain in condition and threshing was taken up with sales on the market. Omaha and Kansas City showed the effect in a bulge in receipts and the support was withdrawn. In the natural course of wheat, December should sell two cents over September and the playing of a spread in sale of September and purchase of December will prove profitable. The total Northwest crop will yield 30,000,000 over last year.

Stocks: The past week has been one of wild fluctuations in Wall Street securities. There has been a quiet whispering by the bankers down the line to curtail the amount of long stocks being carried by commission houses. This news started a great deal of liquidation resulting in some smart declines in many of the leading issues, the Harriman group being affected most, Union Pacific declining from 119 to 103¼, Southern Pacific from 139⅛ to 130½. At the decline good buying support appeared causing a sharp rally, which was only natural. The time for reflection has arrived. Wall Street operators are not slow in grasping true conditions and are now preparing themselves for a period of retrenchment in the way of commitments. We have experienced an advancing stock market for nearly two years. Many stocks are higher than their interest paying condition warrants. They may have all kinds of assets to cut up into melons, but until the melon is cut stockholders have the assets in their mind not in their pockets. It is hardly reasonable to suppose Harriman will give everything to stockholders until he has put his properties in the best of condition, and to do this will require an enormous amount of money. It is easier to disappoint stockholders than your banker. I am not questioning the fact that great things are to come about in the railway world, but I do question the advisability of such things happening at the present time. I cannot see anything to buy stocks on until the crops of the country have been moved and money has returned to its regular channels. After this has been done which will not be before December I believe securities will sell at prices that today would seem ridiculous. Call and time money show a decided hardening tendency. The Aldrich Currency Act will not show itself until some actual necessity for its use is brought about. It would appear to be the part of wisdom to clean up and await a good reaction in prices before again taking on new commitments. Don't overlook the fact that investors are not particularly fond of stocks when they don't return more than 4½ per cent; they prefer bonds. There are many stocks which will not yield 4½ per cent. It is a good time to look on with the other fellow holding the bag.

Cotton: The cotton market during the last week was rather a scalping affair with fluctations ruling between 25 and 30 points but around 12 cents there seems to be ample support to take care of all offerings and check any further decline; the halt seems to bring in good buying. Shorts are depending upon a free run of receipts the balance of this month and in September to depress prices, but in this city they will be mistaken, as all indications point to a comparatively light run of arrivals for the next month or so, perhaps for some time to come if farmers refrain from sacrificing their cotton; and we do not think they will since all sections but the Atlantic have poor crop prospects. especially Arkansas, Oklahama, Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi. Georgia seems to have the best prospects of any State. Alabama conditions are very spotted; some few sections describe fair crop, others describe poor. South and North Carolina are said to be well under last year, and all the reports coming in are so overwhelmingly bad that we feel they must be regarded as in a measure true.

Complaints

It used to be good form in the utility business to ignore the word "complaint." The word had an unpleasant sound to managerial ears. "Information desk," "Adjustment bureau," or "Department of claims," were among the terms favored, and every effort was made to minimize the fact that the company ever received such a thing as a protest from a patron.

Times change and so do customs. We do not like the word complaint any better than you do, but we are frank to admit that in a business as large as ours some mistakes will happen and some imperfections occur. We know that you realize this and will consider the MANNER in which we rectify errors, RATHER THAN THE ERROR ITSELF.

We guard against defects and strive to prevent them to the best of our ability. When things go wrong with the gas service we prefer to have you tell us immediately and give us a chance to straighten them out instead of cherishing a grudge against us and telling your neighbors about it.

An overcharge or a delayed connection may be due to no conscious fault of ours, but the spirit in which we correct the mistake is the criterion by which you should judge our professed determination to render good service.

Our employes are instructed to be as polite and willing to repair grievances as the management itself, and we believe, as a body, that they are. If, however, one makes a slip and temporarily forgets our duties to the public, you cannot possibly regret it any more than we do.

San Francisco Gas and Electric Company

Copyright, 1909.

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487 R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and New York
Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

Del Monte Dog Show

It is certainly very "toppy" to see one's dogs showing themselves off before the social fabric of a big State like California, with all the proud modesty of acknowledged worth and draped with a bit of blue ribbon, testifying excellence "ne plus ultra." But truth to tell, the annual exhibition held last Saturday at Del Monte under the auspices of the Ladies' Kennel Association, proved to be but the excuse for the exhibition of as fine a gathering of California femmes as the summer sun of 1909 ever beamed upon. And this is not disparaging the eligiblity of the doggies to the blue ribbons, either. Talk about your fascinating, irritating, irresistible, money-melting pastimes in the curriculum of refined sport. A dog show occupies a premier position. The gods of Chance and Good Luck must first be propitiated and after that comes the accessories—and it's the accessories that figure up. Not only must doggie be pedigreed but

Photo, Webster

MRS. ROLAND OLIVER

One of the most attractive matrons of Oakland's smart set.

to make a real killing winning at the show, the whole family, including doggie's nurse, must be outfitted. In other words, to make one's debut in genuine Class-A style at a show like that at Del Monte, one must have motors, maids, valets, chic, style, action—"the hang and the how" of things—otherwise the blue ribbon remains but a bit of silly string. There has probably never been a dog show at Del Monte or in the State, that quite measured up to last week's annual event. In the first place, a more picturesque setting for a parade of the aristocrats could not be imagined. The show was in the gardens, with the sky for a roof with the rose hedges, the magnolias, cedars and palms forming the sides of an irregular amphitheatre. The dogs were staked out on the lawn, this being a capital substitute for the stuffy cages with their yelping, unhappy howling canines usually to be found in the average winter dog show. With this to form the framing for the society show, the moving pictures went merrily on all of Friday and Saturday, the climax coming Saturday night when the cups were awarded. There were scores of handsome cups and if anyone was overlooked, it was an accident. The scene in the big lobby of the hotel on Saturday night was typically Californian, presenting a picture of odd animation that would have immortalized any artist could he have perpetuated it on canvas. All the women and girls were attired for the ball to follow the awarding of the prizes and some stunningly handsome gowns were worn. Most of the women had their pets with them. The sight of a handsome woman like Mrs. W. S. Heller, for instance, grabbing in one arm a fluffy bit of a dog and

Photo, H. Dirie Smith

MISS LUCY KING

The brilliant and attractive daughter of Mr and Mrs. Joseph King. Her marriage to Laurence (Larry) Harris, the well known clubman, will take place September 8. The above picture was taken when Miss King was bridesmaid at the De Young-Cameron wedding last winter.

in the other a trophy fully as big as the black and white Japanese spaniel that won the honors, leisurely walking to the ball room to show off her prizes to her friends, many of whom also carried their pets in their arms, was something decidely out of the ordinary.

Some Exhibitors

Mrs. Timothy Hopkins, whose arrival at the Hotel Del Monte occasioned some amused comment, her friends wondering what was signified by the signature, "Mrs.

Vogel's
MAKERS OF
LADIES' GOWNS AND FANCY COSTUMES
418 SUTTER ST., Near STOCKTON

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

Timothy Hopkins and valet," was an interested exhibitor and spectator at the show. Mrs. Hopkins is going in for French bull dogs this year and had some classy pets of this fashionable breed, and on their account, she was able to carry off one of the many handsome loving cups distributed Saturday night. Mrs. Florence Porter Pfingst, who by the way has just returned from Alaska, so amazingly improved in health that her friends remarked about her rosiness, had a tiny brown Pomeranian hardly half as big as a fashionable muff. Like so many of the exhibitors, Mrs. Pfingst contributed a silver trophy, hers being for the best wire-haired fox terrier. Dr. H. C. Brown, who has been a fancier for a long time, walked away with the prize. Burlingame girls and matrons took the keenest interest in the show. Miss Lydia Hopkins and her pretty cousin, Miss Florence Hopkins, were among the blue ribboners. Mrs. James Athearn Folger's two daughters, Miss Evelyn and Miss Genevieve Cunningham, had some prize-winning Airdales. Mrs. Charles Lathrop had several fine French bull dogs that were much admired. Some disappointment was expressed that Miss Jennie Crocker did not show her fine Boston and French bull terriers, but owing to Miss Crocker's inability to be at the show, the dogs were not shown, although they had been entered. Burlingame is not a whit laggard in its devotion to the dog aristocrats, for any number of the pedigreed canines had their own maids, whose sole duties seemed to consist in grooming the pets, taking them for a stroll and otherwise coaxing the ennuied creatures into amiability and keeping them looking as silky and trim as their mistresses. Although officially a dog show, the annual event was in reality quite as much of a dress parade. The spaciousness, the summery weather and the pretty environments coaxed forth as fine a fashion exhibition as one could wish for. All the dainty lingerie and summery togs shown in the smart shops of the city, the mere sight of which often makes one shiver in the wintry summer weather here, seemed precisely at the right place there. White was the predominating color, many of the girls being togged in white from head to foot, the only bit of color being in the gay parasols or in the picture hats worn by the smart dressers.

The Pope Dance

The dance which Mrs. George Pope gave last week in honor of Miss Ethel Crocker, the young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Crocker, was by far the most elaborate and brilliant affair of the summer season. Mrs. Pope is noted for her lavish hospitality. Every detail was in keeping and perfect from the countless lanterns along the driveway approaching the house, to the windows of the long veranda outlined and festooned with garlands of rose-colored geraniums tied with bows of a pale shade of satin ribbon. The magnificent ball room was decorated with pink holly hocks and hydrangeas intermingled with ferns. The scene was one of striking and unusual beauty. Many society people gave dinner parties on that evening, among them being Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Crocker, Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. S. Knight, Mr. and Mrs. Mountford Wilson. Mrs. Pope extended invitations not only to the extremely youthful but also to belles and beaux of many seasons, and a number of intimate friends. Mrs. Pope was formerly Miss Edith Taylor, eldest daughter of Mrs. and the late W. T. Taylor. George Pope is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Andrew J. Pope. Mr. Pope Sr. belonged to the well know firm of Pope & Talbot, the lumber men. George Pope inherited the vast wealth of his mother, father, and his late sister, Mrs. Frank, formerly Florence Pope. The fortune was divided between him and Mrs. D. T. Murphy, formerly Miss Mamie Pope, the only surviving members of the Pope family. As Mrs. Murphy has no children it is of course expected her own vast wealth will go to the children of George Pope of whom she is said to be very fond.

A Society Query

Query: Will Mrs. Charles O. Alexander manage the Colonial balls next winter? A while ago, it was an even bet that she would. Lately, according to critics whose remarks are said by some to be inspired by envy, the odds have been against her about a hundred to one, the score or more of Burlingame matrons back of her in this venture on the heretofore undisputed domain of Ned Greenway, being very much confused about the matter themselves. For one thing, Mrs. Alexander, in her desire to outbedazzle the Greenwayites, and furthermore to launch her own prestige, splurged so splendiferously that she managed to saddle her board, or list of patronesses, with a good-sized deficit. This is quite the contrary of Greenway's management, for the Czar of

MRS. CHARLES J. HUSE

Formerly Miss Juanita Wells of this city. She is here from Chicago, and is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Wells. Mrs. Huse will return to her Eastern home next week. The above picture is a Bushnell photograph of a miniature painted by Rosa Hooper Plotner.

San Francisco's smart society has always managed his dances so they netted him something more substantial than the will-o'-the-wisp luminance of social prestige. In fact, our friend E. M., during the twenty-nine years of his regnancy, has arranged his dances so that they eventually became regular coupon-bearing affairs, all for the welfare of little Edward. Years ago, when Greenway started out to manage his dances, he was much more adroit than the present aspirant to the throne. Like Mrs. Alexander, Greenway also had his list of patronesses, gradually reducing the number from year to year until finally his organization had grown so strong under his management that he no longer had to lean upon his sponsors. In the beginning, Greenway was wise enough to remain modestly in the background, allowing all the glory to shine on his patronesses alone. Had Mrs. Alexander followed some such plan instead of attempt-

THE BONNET SHOP
Importers of REAL PARISIAN MILLINERY
121 GEARY STREET
Our Specialty, Strictly High Class Tailored Hats at Popular Prices
NOBLE

REMOVAL NOTICE
On September 1, 1909
S. KRAMER
LADIES' TAILOR
Formerly of 218 Powell Street
Latterly at Post and Gough Streets
Desires to announce his removal to
101 GEARY ST., Cor. GRANT AVE.
ABOVE THE PARAGON

ing to launch herself in a single bound, her sponsors would have backed her liberally for the first few seasons and eventually she, too, would have been able to become a coupon clipper. But 'tis a difficult task to balance thrift with social ambition. Greenway has succeeded at a task requiring infinite finessing, patience, tact, geniality and absolute fair and square dealing. To some extent, social prestige is a purchaseable commodity, something like the honors that kings confer on their favored subjects. If a king can confer knighthood on a man because of his ability to brew a pleasant flavor of ale, why surely with equal equity a social leader may lift to passing fame the name of any good, worthy citizen or citizeness who chances to have the price to pay for the keenest of all sports—Society with a BIG "S."

The Du Bois Trouble

A great deal of sympathy is felt for both Mrs. Emily Du Bois and her daughter, Miss Hannah, who has caused so much unpleasant notoriety to the family. Mrs. Du Bois is the widow of the late Dr. Du Bois who left his family very comfortably well off. They have a fine ranch in Lake County. Mrs. Du Bois is a member of the Colonial Dame Society and her daughters move in the ultra smart set here. Miss Emily Du Bois last year caused a flutter in society by declaring her intention of eschewing society and becoming a trained nurse. Last winter the Du Bois family occupied an attractive apartment at the Hillcrest where they did much entertaining. A brother of the late Dr. Du Bois married one of Mr. Litchenberg's daughters of San Rafael. All move in our first circles here and across the bay. Miss Hannah Du Bois was an inmate two or three years ago of the Livermore Sanatorium. Patients who were there at the time remember her extremely nervous condition. She has now brought suit against her mother for $50,000 damages for alleged imprisonment in Dr. Gardiner's Sanatorium, where she was recently treated on account of another nervous break down. The family consists of three daughters, Misses Hannah, Helen and Emily Du Bois and one son, Ernest. Mrs. Du Bois and her daughters have been spending the summer in Sausalito where they are at present. Mrs. Du Bois has taken no steps to refute the charges of her daughter, treating them with dignified silence.

Tea at the Chalet

Mrs. Parker, wife of Captain Parker, U. S. N., who recently returned to her old home in this city from Manila, has been the object of much entertaining. The Misses Heath made Mrs. Parker and her daughter, Miss Margaret, the guests of honor at a tea given at "The Chalet," a beach tea it was appropriately named. It proved one of the most delightful of affairs. The day being perfect guests enjoyed sitting on the broad porch, after which refreshments were served at tables beautifully decorated with every color of sweet peas. About twelve guests were present. Mrs. Parker was formerly Miss Minnie McPherson of this city. She belongs to one of the most exclusive Southern families here. The Chalet is fast becoming the fad among our exclusives. Many teas there are scheduled for the next few weeks. Some of the young girls are planning to take their guitars and mandolins out there. Thus far none of the sterner sex has been invited but I hear it is not unlikely that on the next moonlight night a jolly evening affair will take place at the Chalet.

COOK'S TOURS
Are the Best for Independent or Escorted Travel
AROUND THE WORLD
Parties leave Westward August 24, September 15, October 5 and 19th; Eastward November 6, December 9 and June 8. Highest class, various routes, best of everything. Seventy Tours to Europe. Tickets everywhere, Traveler's checks, hotel coupons, information. Let us make reservations now for your fall tour. No charge for service.
THOS. COOK & SON
32 POWELL STREET SAN FRANCISCO
Offices at Yokohama, Hongkong, Colombo, Calcutta, Bombay, etc.

A Crushed Graduate

Does the sweet girl graduate know everything, or will the years bring even greater wisdom? I was much amused over a little by-play of words between one of our most attractive navy matrons and a debutante of the coming winter season. The debutante was no less a person than attractive little Amy Bowles of Oakland whose social bow this last winter was postponed at the last minute and a year at a New York fashionable school substituted in its place. At an informal tea the other day some historical personage was brought into the conversation and Amy inadvertently located the lady a hundred years out of date. The navy matron came to the rescue. "My dear," she said, "she lived a whole century later," mentioning the date. There was silence a moment, then the demure little debutante said, in a tone of surprise, "Why, Mrs. ————, you know more history than I do, don't you?" "Of course I do," was the prompt reply as visions of the rigorous convent training received in her youth rose to the lady's mind, "but you must remember, my dear, that I learned it in a better place."

Engagement Rumored

The tongues of rumor and gossip are flying thick and fast over whether or not Miss Gussie Foute has pledged herself to Arthur Fennimore. For a time, there were two in the running, young Loring Pickering being an aspirant for the hand of the Titian-haired beauty. Miss Foute will not yet admit the engagement, although some of her intimates declare that she confided the news to them as a dead secret. Having weighed what I have heard I feel safe in predicting that the announcement will come soon.

To Wed Army Man

At a prettily appointed tea given by Mrs. C. H. Huffman at her beautiful home on Broadway on Saturday afternoon the engagement of her daughter, Miss Genevieve, to Lieut. Mathew C. Bristol, U. S. A., was announced. Lieutenant Bristol is with the Third Cavalry now stationed at Fort Sam Houston where Miss Huffman's sister, Mercedes, who married Lieut. George E. Nedson, U. S. A., is also stationed. The father of the prospective bride, the late C. H. Huffman, was one of the wealthy men of Merced where the family formerly resided and after whom Mrs. Nelson was named. An elder sister, Miss Carrie Huffman, and two sons complete this interesting family. No date is set for the wedding.

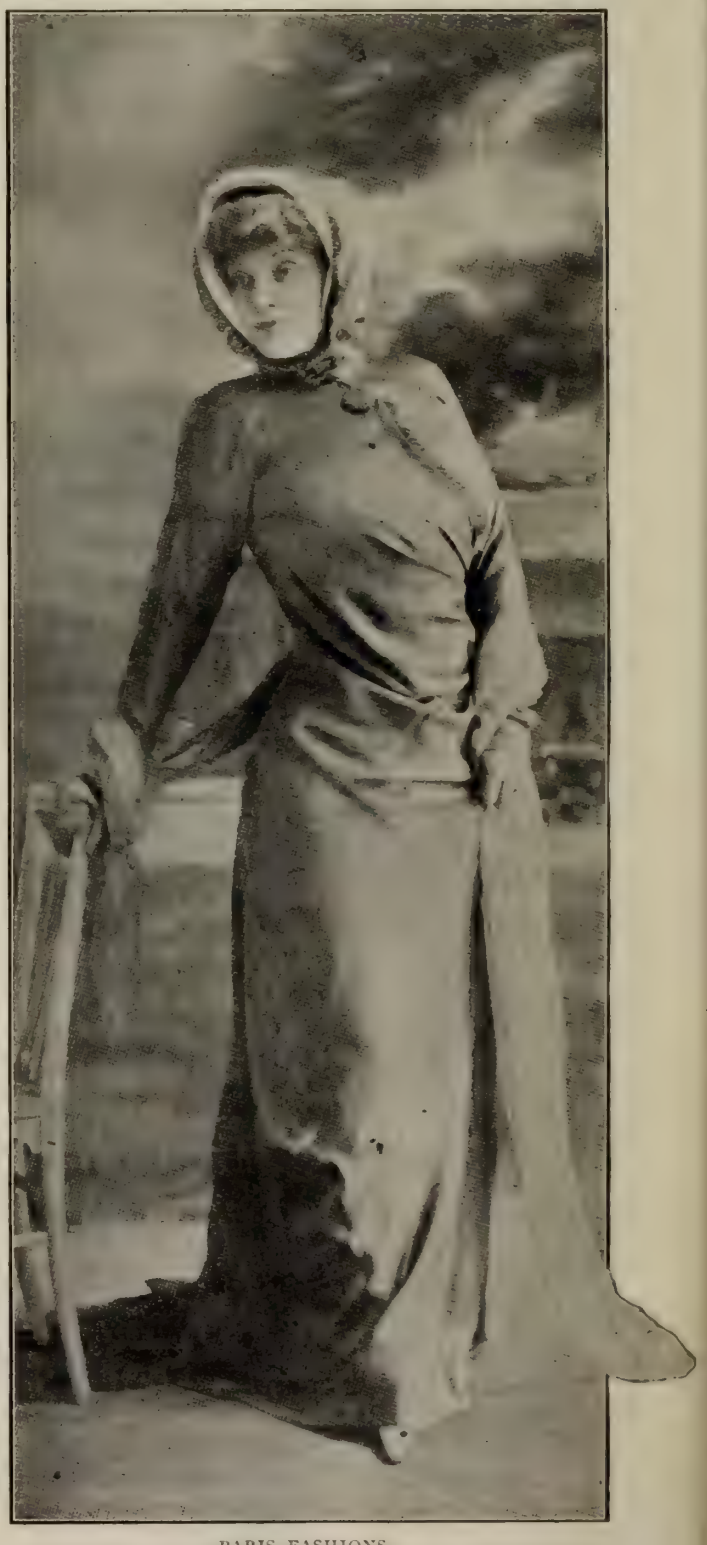
A Spreckels Heiress

A little girl made her debut in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Spreckels on Monday of this week, she being the first to come in for a claim of the Spreckels millions in that branch of the family. Since coming to California about a year or less ago, the Adolph Spreckels have been living at Sausalito. The marriage of Adolph Spreckels and Miss Alma de Bretville, a Marin County girl, occasioned much surprise when it took place in Philadelphia less than a year and a half ago. Everyone looked upon Adolph as a confirmed bachelor, he having for years resisted all the blandishments of ambitious

"CINCINNATI"
80 Days
$325 to $1775
ORIENT CRUISE
Leave N. Y.
Jan. 29, 1910
20th Annual Cruise. Finest trip of its kind.
20 ports visited. Absolutely first-class throughout.
Join the select California party on this most interesting cruise
Handsomely illustrated pamphlet sent free
HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE
PHONE KEARNY 2946
160 POWELL STREET (NEAR ELLIS ST.) SAN FRANCISCO

mammas who had been carrying on campaigns in behalf of their daughters. While in Paris on their honeymoon, Mrs. Spreckels was introduced to a certain coterie of Californians among the American colony, Mrs. Philip Smith being her sponsor. Mrs. Smith, by the bye, is a sister of Mrs. California Newton and Mrs. Thomas Morffew, and is quite a leader among the Americans.

Engagement a Surprise



An engagement which comes as a pleasant surprise to their many friends is that of Miss May Nipigon Renison, the attractive daughter of Rev. Robert Renison, Rector of St. Mark's Church of Los Angeles, to Herbert C. Montgomery, the prominent attorney of the firm of Scribner & Montgomery. Miss Renison comes from a family of divines, her father and three brothers having been missionaries in the Hudson Bay District. Miss Renison was the first white child born on Lake Nipigon, Hudson Bay District, hence her middle name. Rev. Robert Renison Jr., a brother, has accepted a call to St. Paul's Episcopal Church here and will arrive this month, and her brother William Thomas Renison of St. John's Episcopal Church of Stockton married Miss Maye Foulkes, daughter of the late Dr. John Foulkes, in this city last November. He and Mrs. Renison are at present stopping in Sausalito where he is occupying the pulpit of Christ Episcopal Church while Rev. Wm Maxwell, the pastor of Sausalito, has taken his pulpits in Stockton. Mrs. W. T. Renison has been the motif of much entertaining during her brief visit, and is entertaining many of her intimate friends this week at Rev. W. Maxwell's attractive cottage in Sausalito. This is the first opportunity Mrs. Renison's friends have had to see her since her wedding last winter. The prospective bride is a young woman of striking appearance, a brilliant scholar and a general favorite in exclusive circles here. All arrangements for the wedding have not been completed, but it will take place in St. Paul's Church early in September. The bride's father will perform the ceremony.

Merry Auto Party

One of the most delightful affairs recently given was the motor trip in their handsome new auto which Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Coryell gave when they took a party of friends to Lick Observatory. Among those in the party were Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Coryell, Mr. and Mrs. George Sterling, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Plotner and Bishop De Silva. The party left San Jose at 5 p. m., took dinner at Smith's Landing and arrived at the Observatory a couple of hours later. Professor William Hammond Wright, who is an uncle of Mrs. Plotner, extended the courtesies of the place to the visitors. Mrs. Plotner was formerly Miss Rosa Hooper, daughter of the late Major W. B. Hooper, and a grand-daughter of the late Judge Selden S. Wright.

Golden Wedding Celebrated

One of the most brilliant of recent affairs was that given by Mr. and Mrs. George Cosmo Morgan, the parents of Percy and Cosmo Morgan Jr., when they celebrated their golden wedding at their magnificent country home at Mountain View. The cards of invitation were works of art, beautifully engraved in gold letters. A large number of guests were bidden to luncheon at 1:30 p. m. while later in the afternoon people from all the surrounding country called to pay their respects. Many handsome golden wedding gifts were displayed. The Morgans are building a beautiful new house and on this account their friends sent many contributions to their new home. Cosmo Morgan Jr. married Miss Ella Jennings. Percy Morgan and wife have just returned from abroad. Mrs. Percy Morgan was formerly Miss Daisy Ainsworth of Piedmont.

PARIS FASHIONS

Madame Rejane, the actress, wearing an automobile coat of the latest style.

The Millar System of Beauty Culture

(INC.)

MME. ADELE MILLAR, President

Second Floor, Moss Building

GRANT AVE. AND GEARY ST.

Entrance 117 Grant Avenue

Telephones, Douglas 5095 and Home C-1537

Pupils taken for night school. Every branch of Facial Massage, Hair Dressing and Manicuring taught

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 56 Kearny street.

Oakland Betrothal

An interesting piece of news which comes from across the bay is that of the engagement of Miss Sevilla Hayden, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Hayden, to Clarence Shuey. Both belong to Oakland's exclusive set. Mr. Shuey is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Shuey of Piedmont. He is a graduate of the university and is practicing law in this city. Miss Hayden is one of the most attractive girls in the younger set and a general favorite. No date has been set for the wedding. Mrs. Hayden recently gave an enjoyable tea at her home in honor of Mrs. Reginald Foster of New York and Miss Mary Hawley of New Jersey, guests of the Haydens. It was on this occasion the engagement was announced.

Celebrates 79th Birthday

Mrs. John F. Foulkes celebrated her 79th birthday on Thursday of last week by a tea given at her home on Spruce street. A huge cake with 79 candles was the source of much merriment on the part of the many guests who gathered to wish Mrs. Foulkes the compliments of the day. The house was beautifully decorated, there being many beautiful floral offerings from friends. Mrs. J. Mora Moss and Mrs. William T. Renison assisted their mother in receiving. Guests from all around the bay called during the afternoon.

San Rafael Girl Betrothed

One of the engagements of the week in San Rafael is that of Miss Sara Louise Lunny, daughter of Mrs. Lunny, to Charles Frederick Lohse, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lohse of Ygnacio valley. The Lohse family belong to old Californians prominent in Contra Costa county. Dr. John Lohse, a brother of the prospective groom, last year married Miss Marion Walsh, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Walsh of Piedmont. They are now traveling abroad. Miss Lunny is a graduate of the University of California. She is a handsome girl and a general favorite. No date has been set for the wedding.

The Newest Cuirass

Observers of the passing whims of fashions, which reveal themselves in the smart teas and bridge parties that are the order of the day at the St. Francis, have noted that the cuirass has suddenly become a fitted garment of silk elastic, smooth as a glove from neck to wrist and hip line. Sashes worn with the cuirass gown of the Moyen age are fastened so that their flat folds lie close upon the lower edge of the cuirass, while the bow, tied to the right of the center back, falls among the lower pleats of the skirt. The outline of the Watteau pleat grows almost a familiar sight. It is belted in or allowed to fall loosely, according to the gown and the occasion. The fichu of Marie Antoinette folds around the shoulders, forms a sleeve, crosses in front and ties at the back, concealing much of the figure.

Excellent Paintings Exhibited

Hugo V. Pederson, the Danish artist who for eighteen months past has been painting steadily in the studio of Charles Dickman in the latter's bungalow at New Monterey, consented last week to the hanging of a group of his pictures painted from sketches of Oriental life as found by himself in India and Japan. There are fourteen canvases in the group. The two larger ones are "Mother and Daughter" and "Benares, the Holy City." The smaller ones include various interesting Indian and Japanese types, and two are of Danish fishermen. They were hung Saturday on the south wall of the Del Monte gallery, and are attracting much attention, having added a new note to the fall exhibit.

Successful Concert

The concert at Ebell Hall, Oakland, on Thursday, August 19, given under the direction of Hermann Genss, by him and other artists of The California Conservatory of Music was a successful musical event. The rendition of the interesting program by artists such as Hermann Genss, Hans Koenig, Chas. Bulotti, Miss Grace Brown, Miss Seta Stewart and Miss Myrtle Wood was above criticism. However, to Hermann Genss went the palm of the evening by the masterful playing of his celebrated composition, "Night Song," given as an additional number besides others. The large audience applauded enthusiastically.

The Grape Festival

Society is astir getting ready for the grape festival to be held at Aetna Springs on September 9. One of the features of the barn dance in the evening will be a "Merry Widow" dance, in which the girls, gowned in green and red, will carry lighted lanterns on the ends of sticks. Some of the costumes to be worn, as well as the prizes to be given, are now on exhibition at the White House.

In the Social Spotlight.

Miss Marguerite Butters of Piedmont is at present the guest of her step-brother, J. Paulding Edwards and his wife, at their attractive home in Chico.

Mrs. Frank Havens and Mrs. Harry Maxwell of Oakland are enjoying a tour abroad. They were recently heard from in Paris. They will return to New York about September. Mrs. Havens will spend the balance of the summer at Sag Harbor.

Mrs. George C. Boardman and her grand-daughter, Miss Dora Winn, have arrived in New York on their way home from Europe. They will soon return to San Francisco. Miss Winn will be one of the interesting members of the younger set this winter. As usual she will entertain extensively.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Clark, nee Tobin, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Driscoll, left during the week in the Clark's

MRS. J. COUGHLAN CO.
Removed to
101 GEARY ST., Cor. GRANT AVE.
Mezzanine Floor

CHAS. M. PLUM & CO.
Are Now Located At 318-324 Sutter Street
Just Above Grant Avenue
Your Inspection Is Invited Of Their New and Enlarged Displays Of Carpets, Furniture
Oriental and Domestic Rugs
Draperies, Upholsteries
Wall Papers, Etc.
Prices Reasonable, Consistent With Quality
THE OLDEST CARPET AND FURNITURE HOUSE IN SAN FRANCISCO—ESTABLISHED 1850

private car for Montana on a hunting trip. Both Mrs. Clark and Mrs. Driscoll are proud of their well earned reputations as athletic women, Mrs. Driscoll especially is noted as a great pedestrian.

Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Judah and their daughter, Miss Christene, are comfortably settled at the Kellogg Apartments for the season.

Mr. and Mrs. L. N. Holm, Miss Hazel and Dion Holm have returned to town after having spent the past few weeks at Tahoe Tavern.

Mirza Ali-Kuli Khan, the Imperial Perisan Consul at Washington, D. C., who is spending the summer with his wife and children at Carmel-by-the-Sea, will give a lecture entitled "The New Born Persia" at Hotel Del Monte on the evening of September 2d.

James S. Osborne, Manager of the Fidelity Mutual Life Ins. Co., left Thursday over the Santa Fe for the East. He will attend the annual agency convention of the company at Atlantic City, N. J., and will be absent about a month.

Mr. and Mrs. Clayton H. Garvey and Chas. B. Rhodes of Pasadena are at Del Monte for several weeks. They shipped their motor car ahead of them.

Mrs. J. A. Folger, Miss Cunningham, Miss M. G. Cunningham, Master Cunningham and J. A. Folger Jr. of Woodwide, San Mateo County, reached Del Monte in their motor car on the 19th. They were joined later by J. Athearn Folger and will remain during the golf tournament.

The youngest Major General in His Majesty's service has been in San Francisco for the past week awaiting the sailing of the Siberia which will bear him out to India to join his command. This is Major General R. G. Broadwood who is accompanied by Mrs. Broadwood and his aide, R. C. Heathcote. Major General Broadwood has the distinction of having served as personal aide to King Edward VII, and also of having been decorated for gallant conduct in the service. During his stay in San Francisco General Broadwood made his home at the Fairmont.

Mr. and Mrs. William M. Thornton of Helena, Montana, have been guests at the St. Francis. William Thornton is the son of the late Judge J. D. Thornton and brother of Crittenden Thornton, the attorney. Mrs. Wm. M. Thornton will be remembered as Miss Ella Hensley, daughter of the late Major Hensley of San Jose. The Thornton family is one of the oldest and most prominent here. Much informal entertaining took place in honor of the visiting guests who left for their home on Sunday.

About five hundred people attended a reception given Tuesday evening in the Colonial Ball Room of the Hotel St. Francis to Bishop O'Connell, who recently arrived here from the East to assume his duties in the local diocese. The bishop, who is one of the most scholarly men in the Roman Catholic clergy of America, has made himself very popular in San Francisco; and society has expressed its liking for him in many pleasant ways.

Mrs. Henry Schmiedell entertained Mrs. R. J. Woods, Miss Woods, Mrs. Charles Rollo Peters and Charles Rollo Peters Jr. to dinner at Hotel Del Monte on Saturday evening.

Recent arrivals at Aetna Springs were Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. John J. Deane, Mrs. A. Dunann, Mr. Chas. de Young, Mrs. Spencer C. Buckbee, Mr. Alfred T. Moss, Miss Delia F. Moss, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Harrub, Mr. Albert Farr, Mr. and Mrs. J. Hall Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Harrington, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. H. Ward, Mr. and Mrs. Mackinder, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. F. Grant, Miss Taylor, Miss Nettie Pelton, Miss Anna Pelton.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Goodloe have returned from an enjoyable visit to Washington, D. C., and taken an apartment on Pacific avenue for the winter.

Mrs. A. M. Easton, who has been ill for some time at the St. Francis, has improved so much during the past week that her grand-daughter, Miss Jennie Crocker, and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Martin, who have been with her during the trying stages of her illness, felt safe in leaving for Burlingame last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Marcus Wolf announce the engagement of their daughter Myrtle to Leon Block of Cleveland, Ohio. A reception will be held on Sunday evening from 2 to 5 o'clock at 1334 McAllister street.

Mr. and Mrs. Taylor of Menlo Park and Mr. and Mrs. Tobin of Burlingame motored to Aetna Springs a few days ago.

Templeton Crocker and Duane Hopkins arrived at the St. Francis last week after a two months' trip through the East and Europe. They were met by Mr. and Mrs. Walter Martin and Miss Jennie Crocker, who came up from the country to greet the returning travelers.

Society folk from Los Angeles have been in evidence in San Francisco the past week. At the Fairmont the register looked like a part of the Blue Book of the Southern city. Among those who have been here the past week are former Governor Henry T. Gage, Mrs. Gage and two daughters, Mrs. R. C. Gillis, Miss Gillis, Miss Dorothy Gillis, Raymond T. Frisbie, J. F. Millspaugh, all of Los Angeles, and Arthur H. Fleming and Miss Fleming of Pasadena.

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8103, Dept. No. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of BERTHA MARKS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Rose Marks, the Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of BERTHA MARKS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executrix, at the office of C. H. Oatman, room 516 Balboa Building, corner Second and Market streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of BERTHA MARKS, deceased.

ROSE MARKS,
Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of Bertha Marks, deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 7th, 1909.

ARTHUR L. LEVINSKY, Attorney for said Executrix,
Stockton, California.

8-7-5

NECTAR OF THE GODS

NECTAR OF THE GODS

LIQUEUR

PÈRES CHARTREUX

GREEN AND YELLOW

FOR CENTURIES THE GRAND FINALE TO THE WORLD'S BEST DINNERS

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafes, Batjer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y., Sole Agents for United States.

The Anglo & London Paris National Bank

Of San Francisco

Successor of The London Paris National Bank of San Francisco, The Anglo-California Bank, Limited.

Northeast Cor. Pine and Sansome Sts., San Francisco

Sig. Greenebaum, Pres.; I. Steinhart, Chairman of Finance Committee; H. Fleishhacker, V.-Pres. and Man.; Jos. Friedlander, V.-Pres.; C. F. Hunt, V.-Pres.; R. Altschul, Cashier; A. Hochstein, Asst. Cashier; F. E. Beck, Asst. Cashier.

Capital $4,000,000.00

Surplus and Undivided Profits..... 1,500,000.00

We offer our customers every facility consistent with good banking and invite new accounts.

ASK FOR

BLACK AND WHITE

SCOTCH WHISKEY

IT IS THE BEST

NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

Stage

Attractive Drama of Southland

The play is to some extent what the actors make it; and in the hands of some of them "Cameo Kirby" at the Van Ness would be plain melodrama. It would need but a little ranting on the part of the hero, a little sobbing by the heroine, and an injection of horse-play into the comedian's work, to make the play a regular old Morosco thriller. But in the hands of Dustin Farnum and the others of his company "Cameo Kirby" is a brisk and in some parts very beautiful drama of the Southland —the Southland of before the war, with its leisure, its courtliness, its careless life. The author, Booth Tarkington, has gone far enough back to allow opportunities for picturesque costumings. The time of the play being 1832, the men appear in beruffled dress and in gay colors, while the women wear some quaint gowns that remind one of the steel engravings in the earliest fashion magazines. Cameo Kirby, gambler, hero of the piece, has won the Randolph plantation from its owner, who commits suicide. That Kirby did this with the intention of returning the property to save Randolph from ruin at the hands of another gambler is not known at first, and the real villain poses for a time as the hero until he is killed by Kirby, who in order to save himself pretends to be the dead man, Colonel Moreau. His attempt to escape from a mob leads him into the Randolph home and there he meets and loves Adele, the daughter of the house. The discovery of his identity at the end of the third act makes a stirring climax. Of course everything is cleared up in the fourth act, which is rather slow, and Kirby goes away with the understanding that after he has been absent a year, and has lived down his past, he shall return and claim Adele. As Kirby, Dustin Farnum does a wonderfully effective piece of work. He invests the somewhat swashbuckling role with a fine swagger when necessary, and makes love most convincingly. Farnum's stage presence is exceptionally good. He has the face and figure that adapt themselves to hero parts, and a full, resonant voice that is equally effective whether employed in denunciation, defiance or wooing. He has a true sense of dramatic values, avoiding all temptations to indulge in mock heroics. May Buckley plays Adele and makes of her a thoroughly sweet and winning character. Piquant of face, slight of figure, gentle-voiced, she is more than ordinarily attractive in this part, the only fault to be found with her being a slight exaggeration of the Southern accent. The only ones who do not err in this regard are Farnum and McKee Rankin, the stage veteran who plays Larkin Bunce. Rankin has in this role created a distinct stage character. He plays the part in a most unctuous comedy vein, and in no iota of his work can there be detected a false note. It is one of the best characterizations of many years, and shows Rankin's great versatility. The supporting company is good. Special mention must be made of little Donald Gallaher, who plays "General," the boy of the piece. He is a clever youngster, with all the stage wisdom of a seasoned player.

Ovation to Alcazar Stars

I did not know that there was so much enthusiasm in the whole town as was displayed at the Alcazar Theatre on Monday night when Evelyn Vaughan and Will R. Walling reappeared after an absence of several weeks. To Miss Vaughan especially was tribute paid, a cyclone of applause greeting her at the end of the third act, while something like a carload of flowers was carried up the aisles by perspiring ushers. Miss Vaughan's work in the third act merited approval. It was a well sustained, most admirably balanced effort, carried out with the finish that betrays the true artist. Throughout the rest of the play—which was Charles Klein's "The Lion and the Mouse"—Miss Vaughan showed competency at all times, and now and then evidences of more than usual talent. But when she leaned across the table at that third act climax and in a tense voice quivering with scorn and passion told John Ryder what she thought of him, she showed the stuff that the big stars of the theatrical firmament are made of. "The Lion and the Mouse" has been seen here before and its plot is familiar to most theatregoers. Suffice to say that a girl outwits the world's richest man, who is trying to ruin her father for political purposes. The plot is ingenious although at times it overlaps credulity, and no point made by the muck-raking ten cent magazines has been overlooked by the author in drawing the picture of the merciless millionaire—plainly a portrait of John D. Rockefeller. Will R. Walling plays this part with great skill and discrimination. It is a difficult role, one that inspires no sympathy on the part of the audience; but Walling conquers by his excellent acting. Never was villain so applauded as he. In fact, every mummer in the company received his or her full meed of approval, and in most cases deserved at least a measure of it—for if no one less than a Bernhardt could possible merit the hysterical approval that the Alcazarites shower upon their favorites. Helen Yarborough did a very good piece of work as the servant girl. Grace Travers is a newcomer and as Kate Roberts established herself by playing her part with piquancy and charm. Augustus Phillips, the leading man, may be a very good actor, but he did not choose to show anything beyond commonplaceness in the part of Jefferson Ryder, playing the role with aggravating lack of force and fire. The minor parts are well taken.

CARRIE WEBER

"The Girl from Rector's" at the Garrick Theatre.

—W. J. W.

The "Girl" to Come

New York is sending her pet theatrical attraction to San Francisco. Her redoubtable "Girl from Rector's" over which her amusement public raved so much all last season is to be seen at the Garrick Theatre, starting a two weeks' engagement a week from tomorrow night.

This "Girl" comes to us with somewhat more of a reputation than most of the so-called New York successes, many of which are absolute strangers to Broadway. All last year record after record was cast aside at Weber's Music Hall, where "The Girl from Rector's held nightly receptions. The farce is by Paul M. Potter, remembered as the adapter of Du Maurier's "Trilby" and it is claimed that Potter has struck a most comic vein in his handling of the French story of Pierre Veber. Under its original title of "Loute" the farce ran for over one thousand nights in Paris, and was done in German in both Berlin and Vienna for long runs. It is based on the strange theory that married men often lead double lives, and that the good, pious husband, is often the gay Lothario of the night life. At any rate the central figure, the "Girl" is a dashing widow from Battle Creek, Michigan, who finds the night life on Broadway attractive. During the first week of the production at the Garrick, special matinees will be given Monday and Thursday, and the regular matinees Saturday and Sunday. Seats will be ready Wednesday morning at the Garrick ticket office.

SYDNEY AYRES

Who plays Romeo in "Romeo and Juliet" at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, next week.

A Notable Play

After a run which lasted for more than one year at the fashionable Hackett Theatre, New York, the Messrs. Shubert will bring the entire production and cast of "The Witching Hour" which is headed by John Mason, to the Valencia Theatre, for the two weeks starting this Sunday evening, August 29. Every critic in New York considered "The Witching Hour" to be the best play that Augustus Thomas has ever written. During its long run in the metropolis the theatre was packed to its utmost capacity at every performance. The author of this delightful four act drama (it is not a comedy), has succeeded in writing what is considered by some to be the long awaited great American play. In order to enjoy the distinction of being such a composition, it must embody, aside from its subject matter, the treatment that will create for it the commendation of the public that lasts not for one day or a month but for years. The dean of dramatic critics of America, William Winter, in language plain and perspicuous, declares "The Witching Hour" to be "the play of the century." Mr. Thomas has taken for the motive of his play the all absorbing subject of telepathy and dynamic thought and weaved it into a story that holds the attention of the playgoer from the very first line until the final curtain. Without attempting to teach, "The Witching Hour" dissipates certain prejudices that have obtained for years and years, and shows clearly that preconceived ideas born of superstitious fancies have no logical standing. Every character in "The Witching Hour" is as clear cut as a cameo and with the aid of a company of artists of established reputation Mr. Thomas has been enabled to more easily make his bid for the position of the greatest American dramatist. In selecting John Mason as the star the Messrs. Shubert have displayed the shrewd acumen so necessary to success in the theatrical business and have advanced one of America's most worthy actors to a position he should have had, by reason of his talents, many years ago. The cast includes all of the New York favorites.

Willard Success Revived

Although the recent productions at the American Theatre have been of excellent standard, the announcement for next week gives evidence of being the best drama that the company has given this season. Beginning Sunday afternoon the American players will present for the first time in stock "The Professor's Love Story," the play in which that eminent actor, E. S. Willard, starred a few years ago, scoring one of the biggest hits of his tour in San Francisco at the old Columbia Theatre. It is by James M. Barrie, author of "The Little Minister," the play which helped to make Maude Adams famous, that delightful story of the fairies, "Peter Pan" and numerous other successes. "The Professor's Love Story" deals with a scientist who is in love with his stenographer and the infatuation so deeply effects him that his moods are contingent upon her presence. When she is near him he fairly exudes contentment but when she is away from him he is sullen and absent minded. The pretty part of the story is the fact that the stenographer is conscious of the professor's love and, while she is not indifferent to it, she does not reveal her feelings. The professor's sister, who has had an unfortunate love affair, does her utmost to discourage the scientist and with others trying to win him the duel is an interesting one. The professor's unconsciousness of his love for the pretty secretary and the final discovery of it are truly pathetic. This piece has been one of the features of Frank Bacon's repertoire for some seasons.

LEILA McINTYRE

The dainty and clever musical comedy star who will appear in "The Quakeress" next week at the Orpheum.

"Romeo and Juliet" at Ye Liberty

What should prove a most attractive offering to theatregoers across the bay next week is the presentation of "Romeo and Juliet" announced by the Bishop players for the week commencing Monday evening. At first hand one might imagine that a Shakespearean revival is rather a pretentious undertaking for a stock company playing at popular prices and be somewhat doubtful of the manner in which the many changes of scenes could be handled with but a week's preparation, but when it is remembered that the use of the big revolving stage with which the theatre is equipped makes it comparatively easy to mount a play of this nature and without a great deal of additional expense, one can readily see how the Ye Liberty management can offer such a production without an increase in price. With Sydney Ayres as Romeo and Florence Oakley as Juliet, the cast to appear will certainly be well headed, and each of the other characters will be played by an actor or actress of experience. Scenically, the production will be equal to any ever offered of the piece around the bay, and as it has not been seen in Oakland for many years it should be well received. "Romeo and Juliet" will have the usual run of one week, with matinees on Saturday and Sunday only. Commencing on Labor Day matinee, "The Lion and the Mouse" will be presented.

Blanche Bates Coming

Dustin Farnum and one of the greatest supporting companies seen in San Francisco in half a dozen years appear to fine advantage in the Booth Tarkington play, "Cameo Kirby," at the Van Ness Theatre. To just what advantage they appear is best noted by the great number of curtain calls greeting every act and few productions of late can show as strong a record in this respect. Farnum won instant favor in his productions of "The Virginian" and "The Squaw Man" but as the Mississippi River gambler in the Tarkington play he eclipses all his former artistic efforts. The second and last week of the engagement opens Monday night. The final performance will be given Sunday night, September 5. There will be a matinee Saturday. David Belasco will present Blanche Bates at the Van Ness Theatre for two weeks commencing Monday night, September 6, in her latest and greatest success, "The Fighting Hope." The play comes here after an entire season in New York City and Miss Bates will be supported by her metropolitan cast. The play is in three acts and deals with modern conditions in New York. It tells a story intense and appealing in its development. The advance sale of seats opens Thursday.

SCENE FROM "THE WITCHING HOUR"

Augustus Thomas' greatest play, at the Valencia Theatre.

"The Lion and the Mouse" Continues

That there would be a second week of "The Lion and the Mouse" at the Alcazar was assured by the play's initial performance there last Monday night, for never in the history of the Sutter street home of drama was there a more enthusiastic audience. While the reappearance of Evelyn Vaughan and Will R. Walling and the Alcazar debut of Grace Travers had much to do with creating the enthusiasm, it was the play itself and the way in which it was interpreted that gripped and held the interest of the people in front after the personal ovations had been given and acknowledged, and everyone who witnessed it went forth to praise. So, as in the case of its predecessor, "The Squaw Man," a fortnight's run of "The Lion and the Mouse" was guaranteed ere the final curtain fell during its first presentation. It is announced that the coming week will positively be the last one of "The Lion and the Mouse," as a contract that cannot be profitably canceled demands that "The Taming of Helen" be presented on Monday evening, September 6th.

Orpheum Offerings

The Orpheum bill for next week will have as its foremost feature John Hyams and Leila McIntyre, well known musical comedy stars, in a new vehicle called "The Quakeress," which is said by Eastern writers to be a remarkable comedy of great cleverness and to afford them the best vaudeville opportunity they have yet had. Miss McIntyre has in Priscilla Parker, the Quakeress, a role which fits her to a nicety while Mr. Hyams is merely called upon to personate himself in his habit as he lives which he does amusingly and agreeably. The little play teems with bright witticisms and is interpersed with catchy and diverting songs. George W. Cunningham and Herman Marion will present an "Acrobatic Talkfest." It is all this peculiar title implies combining acrobatic comedy, singing, dancing and amusing quips. The character comedian appears in a grotesque costume and indulges in sensational acrobatic stunts and affords a striking contrast to his partner who in ordinary street attire performs his portion of the act, a feature of which is rapid and telling repartee. Rose Royal will introduce her famous Arabian posing horse Chesterfield. This beautiful white steed is made the subject of a series of pictures including "The Dead Soldier," "The Wounded Horse," and "The Dead Charger." Miss Catherine Hayes and Miss Sabel Johnson, heavyweight comediennes who have already distinguished themselves in many American comic operas will appear in a new travesty called "A Dream of Baby Days" in which by means of a novel transformation they revert to the days of their childhood without reducing their avoirdupois. Imagine a two hundred pound Buster Brown and some idea can be gained of the fun provided. Next week will be the last of Joseph Hart's Bathing Girls, the Thalia Quartette, Carson and Willard, and of George Auger, the tallest actor in the world and his company in the tremendously successful fairy tale "Jack the Giant Killer." A particularly interesting series of motion pictures will be an appropriate ending to a delightful entertainment.

WILL R. WALLING

Who has made a tremendous hit as John Burkett Ryder, the "money king," in "The Lion and the Mouse" at the Alcazar Theatre.

Champion Pugilist at Chutes

The most unusual attraction offered New Chutes patrons since the opening of the popular Filmore street park will be put on this Sunday afternoon and evening when Jack Johnson, champion heavy weight pugilist of the world, will be presented in boxing bouts. Few of the big fighters have been the subject of more notoriety than that accorded Johnson and the announcement that he is to be seen at the Chutes in two three-round exhibitions has been received with no little interest. The matches will be given free of charge from the bandstand. Bob Armstrong, a well know local boxer, will be the sparing partner. Special arrangements have been made to handle the crowds. In the days of the old Chutes, boxing matches were one of the features and Sunday's exhibition promises to be reminiscent of that period. The usual bill of free, open-air attractions will be in nowise curtailed because of the added exhibition. Marino, the powerful German athlete who has created so much comment during the past week with his wonderful power of endurance, will again permit himself to be run over, afternoon and evening, by a 70 horsepower automobile. The machine, which passes completely over the performer's body, is loaded with seven passengers and weighs two tons. Another of the recently arrived performers who has created wondering and thrilled attention with his act, is Le Roy, who slides hundreds of feet through the air suspended by his teeth. The wire along which this dare-devil makes his mad dash is stretched from the top of the scenic railway entirely across the Chutes grounds. At night the search-lights are used to illuminate the act which makes it doubly attractive. The Royal Marine band, under the direction of the boy conductor, Master Humbert, is the best that has yet been presented by the Chutes management. The march and two-step offerings are particularly brilliant. Concerts will be played afternoon and night. Additional entertainment will be furnished by Towers, in his high dives; by Demon, the La Forge Comedy trio with songs and dances; and open-air motion pictures. For the children there will be the elephants with their penchant for peanuts and the endless views of the panoramascope.

Orpheum's New Venture

A cable message received at the New York headquarters of the Orpheum theatres, from Martin Beck, contains the important information that the general manager of this circuit is meeting with splendid success in Europe and that an arrangement will be consumated there before his return which will practically give these theatres the absolute control of the market abroad so far as the important vaudeville acts are concerned. Both Morris Meyerfeld, the company's president, and Mr. Beck are now in Berlin where they are conferring with Director Steiner of the Wintergarden, Ben Tieber, of the Vienna Apollo, Charles Aumont of Paris, E. K. Tichy of Prague, H. B. Marinelli, W. E. Passpart and Dirtctor Thurin of the Apollo in St. Petersburg, representing all the leading music halls of the continent. These foreign impressarios are eager to form a working agreement or interchange of acts with the Allied Vaudeville Interests of America, and Mr. Beck and his associates have been at work on some such co-operative agreement for nearly two years. Those acts and artists working in harmony with the big vaudeville circuits here would thereby be able to secure three seasons continuous bookings embracing a trans-continental tour and would never play any one territory so often that their offering would lose its novelty.

E. B. COURVOISIER

The well known Art Dealer and Frame Maker announces to the public the opening of his new store at 431 Sutter street between Stockton and Powell.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgr. Phone Market 500

The Leading Playhouse
Tonight, Sunday Night and All Next Week, Matinee Saturday Only
DUSTIN FARNUM
In the Brilliant Play of Romance and Love
CAMEO KIRBY
A Distinguished Company in Support
September 6 Blanche Bates in "The Fighting Hope."

VALENCIA THEATRE Valencia Street, near Thirteenth Phone Market 17

Starting Sunday Evening, August 29, Matinees Wednesday and Saturday
Two Weeks Only
S. S. and Lee Shubert's Most Pretentious Theatric Offering
JOHN MASON in Augustus Thomas' Greatest Play
THE WITCHING HOUR
Precisely Original New York Cast and Production.
Seats on Sale at the Box Office and the Emporium.

The Garrick Former Orpheum ELLIS AT FILLMORE Direction of Will L. Greenbaum

Season opens Sunday Evening, Sept. 5th

THE GIRL FROM RECTOR'S
A Spicy, Funny Farce by Paul Potter
(Adapted from the French of Pierre Veber)
Prices: Lower Floor, 75c, $1.00 and a few rows $1.50. Balcony, 75c, 50c, 25c.
Seats Ready Wednesday at 9 a. m.

AMERICAN THEATRE Market St., nr. Seventh Phone Market 381 for good seats

Commencing Sunday Matinee, August 29th,
That Quaint Comedian FRANK BACON
And the American Players in THE PROFESSOR'S LOVE STORY
By J. M. Barrie
Author of "Peter Pan" and "The Little Minister."

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Cor. Sutter and Steiner Class "A" Building Phone West 1400

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.
Monday, August 30, Starts the Second and Final Week of Charles Klein's Great Play
THE LION AND THE MOUSE
Its First Production in Stock
Prices—Nights, 25c to $1.00. Matinees, 25c to 50c.
Matinee Saturday and Sunday.

NEW ORPHEUM O'Farrell Street, between Stockton and Powell Phone Douglas 70

Safest and Most Magnificent Theatre in America
Week Beginning This Sunday Afternoon—Matinee Every Day
ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE
JOHN HYAMS and LEILA McINTYRE in the Quaint Offering "The Quakeress"; GEORGE W. CUNNINGHAM and HERMAN MARION; ROSE ROYAL and Her Famous Arabian Posing Horse CHESTERFIELD; CATHERINE HAYES and SABEL JOHNSON; JOSEPH HART'S BATHING GIRLS with Glenwood White and Pearl Hunt; CARSON and WILLARD; THALIA QUARTETTE; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES. Last Week—Tremendous Hit, GEORGE AUGER, the Tallest Actor in the World and His Players in "Jack the Giant Killer."
Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE Oakland, Cal. Direction H. W. Bishop

Week of Monday, August 30th, Every Evening
Matinees Saturday and Sunday
BISHOP'S PLAYERS in an Elaborate Production of ROMEO AND JULIET
Notable Cast of Favorites.
All Performance 25c and 50c. No Higher.
Labor Day Matinee—"The Lion and the Mouse."

NEW CHUTES Fillmore, Eddy, Turk and Webster Open Morning, Afternoon and Night

THIS SUNDAY ONLY
The Highest Priced Free Attraction Ever Presented in the West
JACK JOHNSON
The World's Champion Heavy Weight Champion in Two Three-Round Boxing Bouts
And the Great Marino; Dare Devil Le Roy; Towers; Demon; Master Humbert; Royal Marine Band; La Forge Comedy Trio; Open Air Motion Pictures and 10—Other Big Features—10.
TAKE THE JOLLY JOY JAUNT

The Well-Dressed Man

What to Wear, When and Where

Written exclusively for Town Talk by J. M. JACOBI

For the benefit of those men who have neither the time nor inclination to study the art of Dressing correctly, we will publish a series of weekly Fashion Chats.

STYLES FOR MEN

It is in London more than in any other part of Europe that the styles for men originate, while surprising as the statement may seem, it is in Vienna not in Paris that are originated the fashions for women that are accepted all over the world. America however tries to and does improve on these styles; converting them into clever and practical ideas for its own use. That this exchange of ideas is beneficial to all concerned is shown in an interview I had with a fashionable London shopkeeper who deals in men's furnishings.

"Americans," he said, "are very often of service to this country (England) in the way of bringing over occasional clever ideas in men's furnishings. These are copied by the most progressive shopkeepers, and it is not long until they become the style."

He says that the idea of having everything in men's attire match was taken to London by Americans, and soon became very popular, so that instead of selling single articles, the dealers sold sets of things, the hose, tie and kerchief matching with the shirt embodying the same color scheme. This clever idea he said helped the furnishing business along, and not only did it benefit the retailer but also the wearer for it gave him better style.

Of course there is such a thing as carrying this color scheme too far, and it looks just as bad to have a brown suit, brown shirt, brown soxs, brown hat and brown shoes as to have the colors run riot.

Probably the greatest sight seen abroad by the writer was at the Ascot races. About the middle of June London is overrun by fashionables and tourists from all over the world, and unless one secures room in a hotel weeks ahead it is utterly impossible to find quarters. Some of the hotels like the Cecil and the Savoy have as many as 500 people on their waiting lists. After having located I attended the Ascot races and found there the most select and aristocratic gathering I have ever seen. Royalty was in attendance, and I gained a good idea of the popularity of King Edward VII. It was an exhibition of rare beauty and style in women's costuming, only it was a great pity that owing to the enormous crowds the gowns did not have a proper setting. But I have never seen such traffic before. New York in comparison seemed like a pigmy.

England is the home of fine woolens, and while there I visited some of the best model woolen mills in the world. The making of the yarns, the preparation of the looms, the combing and spinning and dyeing of the wools, the weaving of the cloth and finally its shipment after careful examination combine to make a most interesting sight. America is a large buyer of English woolens, Scotch tweeds and Irish homespuns. A collection made by the writer of the finest homespun is marked by clearness of color, and oddity of design, which, combined with its own native odor, makes it a most interest fabric. For general wear, use and style, this cloth cannot be equalled.

Fall suitings will mostly be gray in colors, but brown will be seen occasionally. While the sack or lounge suit will always be predominant, the Colonial Frock, or Strand, as it is called in England, seems to be quite a favorite.

Fancy waistcoats will find a place in the well dressed man's wardrobe this fall. They should be cut very high.

Trousers are inclined to be a modified peg-top again, with a large hem at the bottom.

Neckwear the coming season will be of black and white, blue and white and steel gray. For ultra-fashionable wear the fine pure dye knitted silk scarf is still in vogue. Scarfs novel and chic can be found in Paris, Berlin, and particularly in Vienna, where one can find the richest designs and quality of silk.

THE KING'S OVERCOAT

The overcoat shown here is a favorite with King Edward VII. The picture was taken at Epsom races, where the king was photographed surrounded by members of his suite.

However, the work and shape in these scarfs can in no way be compared with what is found in this country. Switzerland also weaves beautiful silk for neckwear, but mostly in the cheaper grades. The English silks for neckwear (Spittalfields) are of splendid quality but a little heavy and dull of pattern. In hose Germany has the cheaper and France the finer grades.

All in all, the writer has come to the conclusion that English fashions are very good for Englishmen.

Four Great Transcontinental Trains

OVERLAND LIMITED
Electric-lighted, daily between San Francisco, Denver and Chicago.

CHICAGO-PORTLAND SPECIAL
Electric-lighted, three days between Portland and Chicago.

LOS ANGELES LIMITED
Electric-lighted, daily train between Los Angeles and Chicago.

CHINA & JAPAN FAST MAIL
Daily between San Francisco, Los Angeles, Portland and Chicago.

THE NORTH-WESTERN LINE
UNION PACIFIC OVERLAND

The only double track automatic safety signal line between the Missouri River and Chicago.

All agents sell tickets via The Chicago, Union Pacific & North Western Line.

R. R. RITCHIE
General Agent Pacific Coast
878 Market Street
San Francisco

C. A. THURSTON
General Agent
605 South Spring Street
Los Angeles

R. V. HOLDER
General Agent
102 Third Street
Portland

W. B. KNISKERN, Passenger Traffic Manager
Chicago & North Western Ry., Chicago, Ill.

W 1095

Witchcraft in England

(Continued from Page 9.)

endeavors to obtain some part of his body or something actually connected with him, such as hairs from the head or beard, nail parings or a drop of blood. In some parts of England a girl forsaken by her lover is advised to obtain a lock of his hair and boil it; while it simmers he will have no peace.

Some two years ago a London newspaper mentioned the case of an Essex man entering a hairdresser's and requesting the barber to procure for him a piece of a certain customer's hair. When asked the reason for this curious demand he said that the customer had injured him and he wished to work a spell against him.

All over England hair, nail parings and teeth are burned, the excuse being "it is for luck," but really it is a survival of the custom of allowing no parts of the body to remain for others to utilize. In some districts it is believed that even the imprint of a person's foot has acquired virtue through the contact with his body.

AT LONG BEACH SANITARIUM, LONG BEACH, CAL.

The ancient Saxon's sacred tree was the ash, and there still exists on Richmond Hill, barely ten miles from London, an ash tree which is even now used in folk medicine. Weakly children must be carried nine times around the tree and at such a time in the morning that the sun rises during the ceremony.

When Great Britain was Christianized the missionaries annexed the sanctity of the fairy wells; and thus we find wells and trees named after certain saints and the therapeutic value attributed to the latter, whereas the holiness of the wells and the efficacy were in most cases pre-Christian in origin. Needless to say an implicit faith in the healing power of these wells exists even to the present day. During a visit to a well the person in need of relief hung a strip of his clothing, or even a whole garment, on the tree over the well, the mere contact being sufficient to cure him.

Many of the Irish wells have most interesting legends connected with them. There is a well in North Ireland the water of which, according to the natives, will not boil, however much it is heated; but unfortunately they will not allow anybody to test the truth of this statement, and it is hardly discreet to make the attempt.

Many of these wells are lined with white stones, and it is quite common to find therein a large fish, generally a chub. This is the guardian spirit of the well, and the person who sees it on May eve (May Day being the great Neolithic festival) has luck for a year.

According to a local legend a certain man who apparently was not possessed of a fear of the spirit caught the fish in one of these wells and put him on the gridiron for supper. When he turned round to procure a fork with which to prod it, the fish immediately jumped off the fire and hurried back to its home, where it is still shown with the gridiron scars on its side.

Another case of this type of magic is that in which an image is constructed resembling the person on whom the evil is to be worked and magical processes gone through which affect the person represented. The last example of this is the corp-creagh, or clay corpse, which custom is common in Ross-shire.

A clay image is made of the person whose hurt is desired, and, thorns being stuck all over it, it is placed in a running stream; as the image is wasted away by the running water the victim also wastes, and the more pins and thorns are stuck in the more the victim suffers. Should a wayfarer discover the corp-creagh the spell is broken and the patient recovers.

In Argyllshire a long incantation was repeated as the pins and thorns were inserted, running, "As you waste away so may X—— waste away, and as this wounds you so may it wound X——." When it was desired that the patient should die a lingering death the pins were not allowed to touch the region of the heart.

A curious romance attaches to the resin known as dragon's blood. It is mostly used by girls who, forsaken by their lovers, try to win back their affections. A small quantity of the resin is wrapped in paper and thrown on the fire while the following couplet is repeated:

May he no pleasure or profit see
Till he comes back again to me.

Another method much used by women to attract the man of their choice is to mix together dragon's blood, sulphur, quicksilver and saltpetre, and then throw the mixture on the fire with the usual incantation. In the north of England it is openly sold in considerable quantities for magical purposes.

Many of these processes may be worked or employed by the lay people themselves, but the professional enchanter is, the writers of the article find, by no means extinct. There are still plenty of old "wise women" in rural parts who for a few pence are prepared to cure warts, remove spells and prepare more or less innocent love potions. Only a few years ago in Ireland a woman was burned by her neighbors to make her confess that she had cast the evil eye on their cattle.

PURE MILK FOR BABY

Sanitary milk production was first started by Gail Borden in the early 50s. The best systems today are largely based on his methods, but none are so thorough and so rigidly enforced as the Borden system. For over fifty years the Eagle Brand Condensed Milk has proved its claim as the best food for infants.

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

Eureka Stoves and Ranges
Kitchen Utensils
Hotel Kitchen Outfits a Specialty
"Alaska" and "Opal" Refrigerators
Mantels, Grates, Tiles

NOW LOCATED AT 557-563 MARKET ST., opp. Junction Sutter and Sansome Sts.

PHONE DOUGLAS 4640

Beauty and Health Talk

By MME. ADELE MILLAR, Beauty Specialist of San Francisco

THE MAKE-UP OF AN UP-TO-DATE WOMAN

So much has been written about the make-up such as powder, and paint, commonly called rouge, also bleaches commonly called bichlorides, and electrolysis, sometimes substituted temporarily by some depilatories, that it seems, like politics, religion and love, a never ending subject.

Now and then, I find a woman who with great pride tells me that she has never used powder, and then I feel that I should say she was lucky or that I should congratulate her, but conscientiously, I can not do it. Powder really is just as much a necessity as soap and water. No woman would go with a dirty face to any function, or into business life, and no woman should go any where with a shiny or greasy looking skin. It is true not every one knows how to use the much coveted powder and beloved rouge with discrimination, and if it shows too plainly, it would be far better not to use it at all.

To give you any receipt as to good powders would seem useless, as there are so many good powders on the market, not only imported powders, but many local ones, which may be recommended, especially since the passing of the Pure Food and Drug Act, June 30, 1906.

Rouge should be put on the most prominent part of the cheek bone, and worked down over the cheek towards the ear, and then the rabbit foot may be passed over the lobe of the ear, after which a soft silk cloth, or a little cotton batten should be used to blend the powder and rouge together.

The make-up for evenings is not such a tell-tale as during day-light, and the less rouge that is applied during the day, the better the appearance of the up-to-date woman. The vitality of the body is also much greater during the day than during the evening hours, or at night, and nature can be assisted a little after sun-down. It goes without saying that no powder should be applied on a dry or dusty face, that the face should be gently rubbed with a good skin food, or face cream, and as gently wiped off leaving only a foundation for the powder, but showing no trace of grease.

A very good formula for creams, which is sure to keep indefinitely on account of the mineral ingredients, and which does not become rancid upon exposure to light and heat, as is the case when animal products are used, is as follows:

Ceresin	3	drams
Paraffin	2½	drams
Oil Mineral Alb.	14	drams
Sodli Biborat	8	drams
Aq. Rosae fort	5	drams

M. ft. Ungt.
Sig. Cold Cream.

Cream without grease for massaging would really be preposterous for the skin should not be pulled nor torn, but petted and patted, and gently massaged until it absorbs as much of the cream as possible. You cannot rub all wrinkles out with just one rub. It takes so many, many little rubs, light and quick and patient ones. Here is a good formula for cream to cleanse and help eradicate wrinkles:

R. Skimmed Milk	1 gallon
Ac. Boric	1 ounce
Ac. Hydrochlor	1 ounce
Ol. Bitter Almonds	20 drops
Ol. Rose Geran	20 drops
Ol. Amyg. Dulc.	4 drams

Sol. Carmine Q. S.
Sig. Cold Cream (?) for Massage.

If any lady should write to me as to what to use and how to use it, I will give personal and special attention, and in strict confidence to letters addressed to the Beauty Department of "Town Talk."

Talk on Beauty and Health will be continued in our next issue.

A Novelist's Pipes

A recently published interview with the famous novelist and dramatist contains the following paragraph, from which it would seem that Mr. Barrie is more attentive than ever to "My Lady Nicotine": "I spent exactly sixty-five minutes with the great dramatist. When I entered he was smoking a calabash pipe of generous proportions. He smoked it out in a purposeful way and laid it on the mantelpiece to cool. Then he felt in his right coat pocket and produced a handsome briar. This he loaded and lit. When it was done he laid it on the shelf and took out a second briar from another pocket. He smoked it out, and then assuring himself that the calabash was cool again went back to it. He smoked three and a half pipes within the hour and finished up with a cigarette."

Chalmers-Detroit "30"

The beginning and the end car.

In the beginning the initial price is slightly higher, in the end the upkeep and after expense is much less.

"Anybody can cut prices but it takes brain to make a better article."
(Elbert Hubbard.)

Buying a good car is only one step in the right direction.

BUT

Buying a good car from the most reliable dealers on the Pacific Coast is your absolute assurance of satisfaction.

The Pioneer Automobile Company is the largest concern west of Chicago giving its undivided attention to the sale of automobiles. Ten years in business assures our stability and perpetuates our guarantees. Our business motto is "Right or Made Right."

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

901 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

Oakland San Francisco Fresno

LOW RATES
TO
ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION

FOR ROUND TRIP TICKETS

FROM

San Francisco	$32.50
Sacramento	32.50
Lathrop	32.50
Stockton	32.50
Tracy	32.50
Suisun	32.50
Davis	32.50
Napa	32.75
Santa Rosa	33.60
Calistoga	33.95

Greatly reduced rates from other points in California. Tickets sold daily May 25 to September 30, and cover two months' trip going and coming via the famous

SHASTA ROUTE
OF THE
SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Stopovers going and coming. Many other routes at slightly higher rates for you to select from.

Write or call on our nearest agent for full details of service, etc., or address

FLOOD BUILDING FOR INFORMATION

GIERSBERGER WINES

The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.

THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY

Phone Oakland 2510 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

The Incubator

(Continued from Page 10.)

During the next few weeks Herr Mainlaender lived only for his incubator. Every five minutes he would look at the thermometer, screw the lamp up or down, regulate the temperature, fill up the boiler, draw off water or turn the eggs around. On the fifth day he took them out one by one and examined them with transverse illumination.

"If a dark fibrillar nucleus appears in the centre, that means that the germs are all right," he explained to Fraulein Tipps.

But nothing appeared at all, and the eggs remained absolutely non-transparent, every one of them, although he turned the lamp as high as it would go and adjusted the reflector with the greatest care. "The illuminator is no good, or the shells are too thick," he said, replacing the eggs in the incubator.

"Provided nothing has happened to them," objected Fraulein Tipps sententiously.

"That is out of the question altogether," he said reproachfully. "The best living hen cannot possibly hatch as uniformly as my machine."

He had only a condescending smile for her when his housekeeper a few days later informed him triumphantly that her chickens had been hatched.

"How many have you got?" he inquired.

"There are seven!"

"An unlucky number! Do you see now how unreliable this manner of hatching eggs really is? Seven out of twelve, indeed! I shall obtain at least ninety per cent."

"If my hen had not been disturbed by the excitement over the silly incubator, she would have hatched more eggs, I am sure," objected Fraulein Tipps in defense of her pet.

"Never mind! In ten days my own chickens will be coming along."

"I do not believe they will," said the spinster, shaking her head.

Herr Mainlaender, of course, had to have a look at the Minorca chickens, which were huddled under the hen like a nest full of yellow and green canaries, answering with a shrill peep to the clucking of the mother.

"I am really rather pleased that there are only a few of them," he said to the housekeeper. "The old hen will thus be able to take charge of my chickens along with her own."

However, this proposal did not meet with a cordial reception. The lady went as far as to suggest that he might buy a mother ostrich for his giant chicks. Her little pets must not suffer, no indeed, and she would certainly not consent to loan him her Cochin China hen.

"Well, I suppose I shall have to play hen myself, then," said Herr Mainlaender. "That is quite feasible with a little patience and attention."

From that day on he divided his time between the incubator and the chicken-coop. He stayed for hours together by the side of the hen, endeavoring to imitate her clucking as faithfully as possible.

At last the morning came when Herr Mainlaender announced at breakfast that the chickens could be expected to arrive that very day.

"I bet there will be no chickens today," insisted the spinster.

Herr Mainlaender waxed quite angry: "You just wait and see! You act as if you would be pleased if nothing materialized!"

She made him positively nervous by coming every hour with the sarcastic question as to the number of chickens that had already arrived upon the scene. At last he got thoroughly out of patience, and as soon as dinner was over he sent her to the next town with an errand, in order to get rid of her for some time. Fraulein Tipps went readily enough, for she was sure to be back in time for the chickens.

Later in the afternoon she returned triumphantly. Herr Mainlaender met her in the front garden, with a puzzled expression on his face, so that the spinster could hardly keep from laughing as she asked: "Well, have the chickens come?"

He nodded. "Yes, some have arrived."

"Really?" Fraulein Tipps was dumfounded. The full dozen?"

"No, no, only seven," he admitted hesitatingly. "There is something very peculiar about it. I cannot account for it otherwise, except that something must have happened to the eggs."

"Why, what could possibly have happened to them?" asked the housekeeper. "The incubator probably is no good. Is it permitted to have a look at the giant chickens?"

"Why certainly, come along. They are still in the incubator, so as not to get cold."

He led the way to the hen-house, accompanied by Fraulein Tipps, and opened the panel of the incubator. She positively gasped in wonderment, for upon the graveled floor lay some egg shells and—seven properly trussed and trimmed little broilers, cooked to a turn!

"I would like to know what happened to those eggs," resumed Herr Mainlaender thoughtfully. "They must have been boiled by mistake. Of course, boiled eggs could not be expected to hatch anything but broiled chickens!"

The startled spinster screamed hysterically and rushed off to the chicken-coop. There she found the Cochin China hen with ruffled plumes, anxiously clucking for her nestlings—a feathered Niobe!

The housekeeper made furiously for her room, slamming the door behind her, but she was not quick enough to escape the sarcastic comments of her master: "You cannot deny the excellence of this incubator of mine, after it has actually hatched a set of hard-boiled eggs, can you?"

TO THE ENJOYMENT

OF ALL THE SEASON'S SPORTS—BAT AND BALL, BOAT AND OAR, SPRINTING AND TRACK-RACING, THE CHASE, THE RACE COURSE, RIDING, SWIMMING, BATHING, BALTIMORE

HUNTER

RYE

CONTRIBUTES DELIGHT, CHEER, COMFORT AND STRENGTH. THE BEST STIMULANT FOR EMERGENCIES AND THE MOST PERFECT AND PUREST WHISKEY FOR HEALTH AND RECUPERATION.

HENRY CAMPE & CO., INC.,
Distributors for California and Nevada
San Francisco, Cal.

Auto Notes

Frank Maskey, the well-known local confectioner who has been on a hunting and fishing trip in Humboldt County with his Studebaker touring car for the past several weeks is again home, having returned a few days ago. Maskey was much enthused over the manner in which his Studebaker had performed and stated that he would never go hunting or fishing without it. "A good motor car is a boon to the thoroughbred sportsman," said Maskey.

P. L. McMullen of Oakland made a record breaking run from Oakland to Boulder Creek over Bear Creek last week. With a load of eight people and seven suit cases Mr. McMullen's bix six-cylinder Thomas made the run in three hours.

Charles Hexter, accompanied by Mrs. Hexter, their son, and a driver, has just arrived in this city from Marysville. The party are on their way in their Chalmers thirty to Southern California, where they expect to spend some time touring. They will leave Thursday evening for Santa Cruz and Del Monte. From there it is the intention to drive to Los Angeles and after spending sometime in that section return in the same manner. Mr. Hexter has done a great deal of touring recently and is loud in his praises of the automobile as a means of travel.

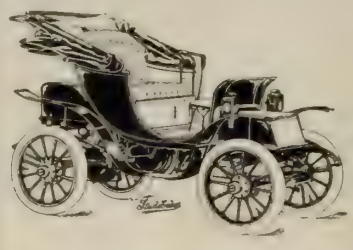
At the two days meet at Fort Erie track, Buffalo, N. Y., Louis Chevrolet, driving a Buick "40," won six events, all in which he was eligible to enter, and including the 100-mile free-for-all. He again defeated a field composed of cars of the highest power and price, among them being the famous 120 horsepower Benz racing car with Barney Oldfield at the wheel. This is the same car that was driven by Hemmery in the Savannah Grand Prix race, and had not been defeated once during the whole season until its meeting with Chevrolet in his stock Buick "40." At this meet Chevrolet covered five miles from a standing start in 4 minutes and 48 seconds, and again lowered the world's competition track record for fifty miles, by thirteen seconds.

Another message from Hugo A. Taussig, the California automobilist who is touring Europe, has been received by Calvin C. Eib of the Pioneer Automobile Company. On August 11th the party were at Bettws-y-Coed and Mr. Taussig writes as follows: "Have been and are enjoying dandy roads, and beautiful country. The 'Thomas' takes to it all nicely. Fourteen miles to the gallon."

William Lunt who is well known in the automobile world, has joined the selling force of the Pioneer Automobile Company.

"Automobile traffic to Lake Tahoe has been unusually heavy during the past week," writes H. W. Smith Jr., the Studebaker agent at Sacramento. "Scores of machines from other points have passed through this city en route to the lake and dozens of local cars have made the run several times, half a dozen of our own cars having made the round trip no less than a dozen times. With the possible exception of the tour to the Yosemite, no more beautiful trip can be found in the State, than that over the State road from Placerville to the lake. The road is in fairly good shape from Placerville to the lake for a mountain road. Part of the way above Placerville it is sprinkled. The worst stretch is between Folsom and Placerville. The fact that the roads between this city and Stockton have been practically impassable this year has kept many motorists from the city and the southern part of the State from making the lake run."

George E. Fulmer, the cashier of the Studebaker automobile company of South Bend, Ind., accompanied by Mrs. Fulmer, arrived in this city yesterday. Fulmer is on an inspection tour of the Studebaker branches. He says the industry all over the country is phenomenal in its proportions and that next year more machines will be sold than have been in the preceding two years. The Fulmers will leave for the North on Monday, the 23rd.



Three carloads of the new Studebaker electric automobiles were received a few days ago by the Studebaker Bros. Several of the machines are of the new Electric Coupe type and besides being of exceedingly graceful lines, the doors are fitted with yale locks. This permits the passengers leaving wraps and other articles in the car while shopping or visiting with no fear of not finding them when returning. The other models are of the Victoria Phaeton type.

In order to correct an erroneous impression among some dealers and buyers who are interested in automobiles, Chester N. Weaver, manager of the Studebaker Bros. has issued a statement regarding the coming output of Studebaker-Flanders "20's" and Studebaker E-M-F "30's." Briefly, this is: "The new Studebaker-Flanders '20' is not designed to take the place of the Studebaker E-M-F '30' which has proven so popular during the past year. The Studebaker concern will put on the Studebaker-Flanders '20,' the Studebaker E-M-F '30' and the Studebaker-Flanders '40.' About 25,000 of the Studebaker-Flanders '20,' 15,000 of the Stude-baker E-M-F '30' and 1,200 of the Studebaker-Garfords will be the year's output."

The Pioneer Automobile Company reports the following sales: T. G. Hewer, Thomas Flyer; G. I. Harris, Fresno, Hudson; Chalmers-Detroit cars; F. W. Kern, Chalmers-Detroit thirty; William W. Slater, Chalmers-Detroit thirty; Bert Dingley, Modesto, Chalmers-Detroit thirty; Tom Minturn, Fresno, Thomas Flyer.

A Domestic Eye Remedy

Compounded by Experienced Physicians. Conforms to Pure Food and Drugs Law. Wins Friends Wherever Used. Ask Druggists for Murine Eye Remedy. Try Murine in Your Eyes. You Will Like Murine. Try it in Baby's Eyes. It Soothes.

The Society Belle

to whom delightful independence appeals and who appreciates refinement with a degree of luxury and unquestioned elegance, cannot resist the new

STUDEBAKER ELECTRIC

Its daintiness of appointment captures her instantly. It is a fitting complement to her cultured tastes. Besides, its simplicity of operation and control makes it safer to drive than a horse. It travels as fast as any woman cares to go; is always clean and inviting and is practically proof against accidents.

Victoria-Phaetons and Coupes for immediate delivery

Fremont at Mission — Studebaker — Phone Douglas 3000

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of Jules E. de ST. DENIS, also Called JULES St. DENIS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executor and Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of JULES E. de ST. DENIS, also called JULES ST. DENIS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executor and Executrix at the office of A. Comte Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of JULES E. de ST. DENIS, also called JULES ST. DENIS, deceased.

WILLIAM C. KEWIN, Executor.
JULIE HEILBRON, Executrix.

Of the Last Will and Testament of Jules E. de St. Dennis, also called Jules St. Denis, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 25th, 1909.

A. COMTE, JR., Attorney for Executors,
333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal

8-28-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8100, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate and Guardianship of FRANK VIERHUS, an Incompetent Minor.

CLARENCE CLAUDE VIERHUS, guardian of the person and estate of Frank Vierhus, an incompetent minor, having filed his petition herein, praying for an order of sale of the interest in the real estate of said incompetent minor for the purposes therein set forth, and an order of this Court having been made, setting the hearing of said petition on Wednesday, the eighth day of September, 1909, and it appearing to the Court that said order should be set aside; it is therefore ordered that the said order of this Court made on the 24th day of August, 1909, setting the hearing of said petition for Wednesday, the eighth day of September, A. D. 1909, be and the same is hereby set aside.

It is further ordered by this Court that all persons interested in the estate of said incompetent minor appear before the said Superior Court on Monday, the 20th day of September, 1909, in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10 of said Superior Court, at room 601, Grant Building, corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in said City and County of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said guardian of said incompetent minor to sell the interest of the real estate of said minor, at private sale; and that a copy of this order be published for three weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Done in open Court this 25th day of August, A. D. 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Aug. 25, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By H. G. Benedict, Deputy Clerk. 8-28-4

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8101, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate and Guardianship of PHILIP ARTHUR VIERHUS, a Minor.

S. TRAVIS KENYON, guardian of the person and estate of Philip Arthur Vierhus, a minor, having filed his petition herein, praying for an order of sale of the interest in the real estate of said minor for the purposes therein set forth, and an order of this Court having been made, setting the hearing of said petition on Wednesday, the eighth day of September, 1909, and it appearing to the Court that said order should be set aside; it is therefore ordered that the said order of this Court made on the 24th day of August, 1909, setting the hearing of said petition for Wednesday, the eighth day of September, A. D. 1909, be and the same is hereby set aside.

It is further ordered by this Court that all persons interested in the estate of said minor appear before the said Superior Court on Monday, the 20th day of September, 1909, in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10 of said Superior Court, at room 601, Grant Building, corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the said City and County, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said guardian of said minor to sell the interest of the real estate of said minor, at private sale; and that a copy of this order be published for three weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Done in open Court this 25th day of August, A. D. 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Aug. 25, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By H. G. Benedict, Deputy Clerk. 8-28-4

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17318, Dept. No. 4.

KATE E. BOYANTON, sometimes known as KATE E. BOYNTON, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Kate E. Boyanton, sometimes known as Kate E. Boynton, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Eddy Street distant One hundred and twenty (120) feet easterly from the easterly line of Scott Street; running thence easterly along said northerly line of Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet and to the westerly line of Farren Avenue; thence at right angles northerly and along said westerly line of Farren Avenue Seventy-five (75) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet; and thence at right angles southerly Seventy-five (75) feet to the place of beginning. Being a portion of Block No. 431, Western Addition.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that the title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 29th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 2622, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of INDIA MASTERS, Deceased.

J. R. Pringle, the Administrator of the Estate of INDIA MASTERS, deceased, having filed his petition herein, duly verified, praying for an order of sale of the real estate of said decedent for the purposes therein set forth,

It is therefore ordered by the said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the Superior Court on Wednesday, the 22nd day of September, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10, Probate, of said Superior Court, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said J. R. Pringle, Administrator, to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary.

And that a copy of this order be published four successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

And it is further ordered that the manner in which publication of this order shall be made shall be once a week for four successive weeks in said Town Talk, and that the number of publications during the above mentioned period shall be reduced accordingly.

Dated, August 13, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

OLNEY, PRINGLE & MANNON, Attorneys for Administrator,
1236 Merchants Exchange Bldg., San Francisco, Cal. 8-21-5

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17244.

HANNAH EMERY, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Hannah Emery, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Van Ness Avenue, distant eighty (80) feet northerly from the northwesterly corner of Van Ness Avenue, and Turk Street, running thence northerly and along the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches; thence at right angles southerly and parallel with Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles easterly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches to the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue and place of beginning; being a portion of Block Seventy-nine (79) Western Addition;

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: NONE.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Esq., Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market St., San Francisco. 7-10-10.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17750, Dept. No. 5.

EVA NATHAN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of EVA NATHAN, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Jones Street, distant thereon Southerly ninety (90) feet from the Southerly line of Pacific Street, running thence Southerly and along said line of Jones Street forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty seven (137) feet, six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet, six (6) inches to said line of Jones Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of fifty vara lot number Eight Hundred and Sixty-one (861) of the City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit: for judgment establishing and quieting said plaintiff's title to all said real property as the owner thereof in fee simple, and determining all adverse claims thereto, and ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, and for such other and further relief as may be just and proper in the premises, under and pursuant to the provisions of the Act of the Legislature of California entitled, "An Act to provide for the establishment and quieting of title to real property in case of loss and destruction of public records," approved June 16, 1906, and the Act of the said Legislature, amending the same, approved March 6, 1909.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 2nd day of July, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

(Seal) By M. P. BRUTON, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk, a newspaper, on the 17th day of July, A. D. 1909.

DEVOTO & RICHARDSON, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
Foxcroft Building, San Francisco.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of HENRIETTA ECKHARDT, Deceased—No. 8187, Dept. 10, Probate.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executor of the Last Will and Testament of HENRIETTA ECKHARDT, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said executor at Room 609 Union Trust Building, at the northeasterly corner of Montgomery and Post Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said place the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of HENRIETTA ECKHARDT, deceased.

ROBERT J. ECKHARDT,
Executor of the Last Will and Testament of Henrietta Eckhardt, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 21, 1909.

CHARLES S. WHEELER, Attorney for Executor,
609 Union Trust Building, San Francisco, Cal. 8-21-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of BERTHA MARKS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Rose Marks, the Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of BERTHA MARKS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executrix, at the office of C. H. Oatman, room 516 Balboa Building, corner Second and Market streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of BERTHA MARKS, deceased.

ROSE MARKS,
Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of Bertha Marks, deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 7th, 1909.

ARTHUR L. LEVINSKY, Attorney for said Executrix,
Stockton, California. 8-7-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of ROBERT FRANCIS SPEAR, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Mary J. Spear, executrix of the last will and testament of ROBERT FRANCIS SPEAR, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Mary J. Spear at the office of Ira S. Lillick, Esq., No. 524 Kohl Building, on the northeast corner of California Street and Montgomery Street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Robert Francis Spear, deceased.

MARY J. SPEAR,
Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of Robert Francis Spear, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 6, 1909.

IRA S. LILLICK, Attorney for Petitioner,
524 Kohl Building, San Francisco, Cal. 8-14-5

Student of the Human Comedy—Where is the sense of humor located?

Professor—In the sole.

Mrs. D. A. R.—Yes, my great-great-grandsire fell at Bunker Hill.

Wagg—Ice or banana peel?

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Yards and Planing Mills—6th and Channel Streets

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No.17271.

WELLS, RUSSELL & COMPANY, (a Corporation), Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest, in or Lien Upon, the Real Property herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Wells, Russell & Company, (a Corporation), plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows

First Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northwesterly line of Natoma Street, formerly Everett Street, distant two hundred (200) feet southwesterly from the intersection of the southwesterly line of Third Street with said line of Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches; thence at a right angle northwesterly eighty (80) feet; thence northeasterly parallel with Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches and thence at a right angle southeasterly eighty (80) feet to the place of beginning; being a portion of the 100 vara Lot No. 34.

Second Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Fourteenth Avenue, distant one hundred and fifty (150) feet westerly from the northwesterly corner of Fourteenth Avenue and P Street; thence westerly along said line of Fourteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet; thence at a right angle northerly two hundred (200) feet to Thirteenth Avenue; thence at a right angle easterly along the south line of Thirteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet, and thence at a right angle southerly two hundred (200) feet to the place of beginning; being a part of the O'Neill and Haley Tract, as per map on file in the Recorder's Office of said City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that its title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover its costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June A. D. 1909.

By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attorneys for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17438, Dept. No. 12.

GEORGE J. MARTIN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of George J. Martin, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue distant thereon one hundred (100) feet northerly from the northerly line of C Street, running thence northerly along said westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue, twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angle westerly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angle southerly, twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angle easterly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue and the point of commencement. Being a part of Outside Land Block No. 379.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that his title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 30th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
German Savings & Loan Society (a Corporation)	530 California Street, San Francisco, Cal.
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of JOHN W. FARREN, also known as JOHN W. FARREN, Jr., Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned administratrix of the estate of JOHN W. FARREN, also known as JOHN W. FARREN, Jr., deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said administratrix at the office of her attorney, Neal Power, Esq., Room 545, Mills Building, Northeast corner of Montgomery and Bush Streets, San Francisco, Cal., which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of JOHN W. FARREN, also known as JOHN W. FARREN, Jr., deceased.

MARY A. FARREN,

Administratrix of the Estate of John W. Farren, also known as John W. Farren, Jr., Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, July 31st, 1909.

NEAL POWER, Attorney for Administratrix,
Room 545 Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal. 7-31-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 18016.

MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of .California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this Summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

PARCEL NUMBER ONE

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Green Street, distant thereon one hundred and seventeen (117) feet and seven and one-fifth (7 1-5) inches Easterly from the Easterly line of Franklin Street; running thence Easterly and along said Northerly line of Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly and parallel to Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches to the said Northerly line of Green Street and point of commencement.

Being a part of Western Addition Block No. 96.

PARCEL NUMBER TWO

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of "C" Street, distant thereon thirty-two (32) feet and six (6) inches Westerly from the Westerly line of Twenty-fifth (25th) Avenue; running thence Westerly along said Northerly line of "C" Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 356.

PARCEL NUMBER THREE

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of "T" Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the point of beginning.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 1153.

PARCEL NUMBER FOUR

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue, distant two hundred and twenty-five (225) feet Southerly from the Southeasterly corner of "A" Street and Twenty-first Avenue; running thence Southerly along the said Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the place of beginning. The same being a portion of Outside Lands Block Number Three Hundred and Three (303).

PARCEL NUMBER FIVE

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Larkin Street, distant thereon seventy-seven (77) feet and six (6) inches Northerly from the corner formed by the intersection of said Easterly line of Larkin Street with the Northerly line of Union Street, running thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Larkin Street, twenty (20) feet; thence at right angles Easterly sixty (60) feet to the Westerly line of Moore Street; thence at right angles Southerly along said line of Moore Street twenty (20) feet; and thence at right angles Westerly sixty (60) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot No. 1393.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, title, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 26th day of July A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 31st day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., San Francisco, Cal. 7-31-10

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No, 3835, Dept. No. 10.

In the Matters of the Estate of BYRON J. TAYLOR, Deceased.

Avy A. Holdgate, formerly Avy A. Kitto, the Administratrix of the estate of BYRON J. TAYLOR, deceased, having heretofore presented to the Court and filed with the Clerk thereof her verified petition, praying for an order of this Court authorizing, empowering and directing her to sell certain real property in said petition particularly described, belonging to the estate of said deceased, and it appearing to the Court that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real property in said petition described to pay the debts, expenses and charges of administration and that it is for the advantage, benefit and best interest of the estate and those interested therein that said real estate be sold,

It is hereby ordered that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased be and they are hereby directed to appear before the above entitled Court, Department No. 10 thereof, at its Courtroom, situate in the Grant Building, at the corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on Wednesday, the 22nd day of September, 1909, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, then and there to show cause, if any you have, why an order should not be granted to said administratrix for the sale of all of said real estate.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order to show cause be published in Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation, printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, once a week for four successive weeks.

Dated, August 17, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

H. M. OWENS, Attorney for Administratrix,
Mechanics Savings Bank Building, San Francisco, Cal. 8-21-5

Louis Crepaux
(Member of Paris Grand Opera)
Has removed to his new studio,
Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.
Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger
PIANOFORTE PLAYING
924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.
For appointments phone Merritt 2845
Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Donald Maclean
SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske
STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge
ATTORNEY AT LAW
CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO
Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan
ATTORNEY AT LAW
CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor
Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty
ATTORNEYS AT LAW and
PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY
MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.
Rooms 626 and 630

HENRY P. TRICOU
NOTARY PUBLIC
508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711
Residence 852 Grove St. Phone Park 1870

MOVED
Gladding, McBean & Co.
CLAY PRODUCTS
Office
311-317 CROCKER BUILDING
Warehouse
147-151 MINNA STREET
Between New Montgomery and Third
San Francisco, Cal.

W. D. Fennimore J. W. Davis A. R. Fennimore

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store at 181 Post Street, near Grant Avenue.

Irish Bulls

Michael Macdonagh says that Ireland's bulls are still as numerous as her snakes are not. Mr. Macdonagh was over on the Emerald Isle not long ago, trying to do for Ireland what Dean Ramsay's "Reminiscences" did for Scotland. In his "Irish Life and Character" (Thomas Whittaker) he tells about the first Irishman he met there. He was a hairdresser in Kingstown.

As I was leaving, the man tried to induce me to buy a bottle of hair-wash. "What sort of stuff is it?" I asked. "Oh, it's grand stuff," he replied. "It's a sort of multum in parvo—the less you take of it, the better."

Then Mr. Macdonagh proves himself no true son of Erin by explaining what the barber really meant. A few days later, the writer was walking with a friend over the Wicklow Mountains, where they met a "character."

"Well, Mick," said my friend, "I've heard some queer stories about your doings lately." "Och, don't believe thim, surr," replied Mick. "Sure, half the lies tould about me by the naybours isn't true."

The following notice Mr. Macdonagh saw posted in a pleasure-boat on the Suir:

"The chairs in the cabin are for the ladies. Gentlemen are requested not to make use of them till the ladies are seated."

And this he clipt from a Kingstown newspaper:

"James O'Mahony, Wine and Spirit Merchant, Kingstown, has still on his hands a small quantity of the whisky which was drunk by the Duke of York while in Dublin."

The turning off of bulls seems indeed to be infectious from Irish air. Englishmen succumb to it when on the island. Witness the annual report of the commissioners of national education, where this information appears over their august signatures:

"The female teachers were instructed in plain cooking. They had, in fact, to go through the process of cooking themselves in turn."

Cleaning the Stage

"We hope," said the spokesman of the committee, to enlist your support in favor of a clean stage!"

"You have it," responded the theatrical manager, heartily. "Why, almost every one of my plays opens with a girl dusting everything in sight."

Must Wait a While

"What are the Christian names of that young couple next door?"

"We shan't be able to find out till next week. They've just been married, and he calls her Birdie, and she calls him Pettie!"

What Did He Mean?

The Major—"I saved that rose you gave me last week, Miss Antique; for though it is withered it still reminds me of you!"

Miss Antique—"Sir!"

The Idea

Norah (after watering the lawn)—"Missus, do you hang up your hose?"

Mistress—"Certainly, not, Norah; we always pay cash!"

$550.00 Will buy the best 88-note Player on the market
CROWN AND CONCORD PIANOS
10-inch Disc Records, 25 Cents
PETER BACIGALUPI & SONS,
Phonographs and Pianos
941 Market St. Opposite Mason St.
Open Saturday Evenings.

The German Savings and Loan Society
(Member of the Associated Savings Bank of S. F.)
526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,504,498.68
Deposits June 30, 1908	$36,793,234.04
Total Assets	$39,435,681.38

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

RICHMOND DISTRICT BRANCH, 432 Clement Street, between 5th and 6th Avenues. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. W. C. Heyer, Manager.

Qualified

"The one thing we demand from our employes," said the head of the office force, "is correctness in figures."

The applicant smoothed her hipless skirt complacently.

"I have never had any complaints on that score," she replied, with a glance of assurance.

The Superiority

The superiority of man to nature is continually illustrated. Nature needs an immense quantity of quills to make a goose with, but a man can make a goose of himself with one.

60 YEARS' EXPERIENCE
PATENTS
TRADE MARKS
DESIGNS
COPYRIGHTS &C.
Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain our opinion free whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. HANDBOOK on Patents sent free. Oldest agency for securing patents.
Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice, without charge, in the Scientific American.
A handsomely illustrated weekly. Largest circulation of any scientific journal. Terms, $3 a year; four months, $1. Sold by all newsdealers.
MUNN & Co. 361 Broadway, New York
Branch Office, 625 F St., Washington, D. C.

MAYERLE'S GERMAN EYE WATER
By Mail 65c

Mayerle's German Eyewater
Highly Recommended for
Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids.
NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN
Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes, relieves the strain, and preserve the sight.
GEORGE MAYERLE
Granduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 960 Market street, opposite Hale's. Phone Franklin 3279.

¶ Nothing can be more refreshing these warm summer days than a glass of cool Weinhard's Portland Beer.

¶ It's brewed from the best Bavarian hops and Oregon barley. It is not only nutricious but exhilirating.

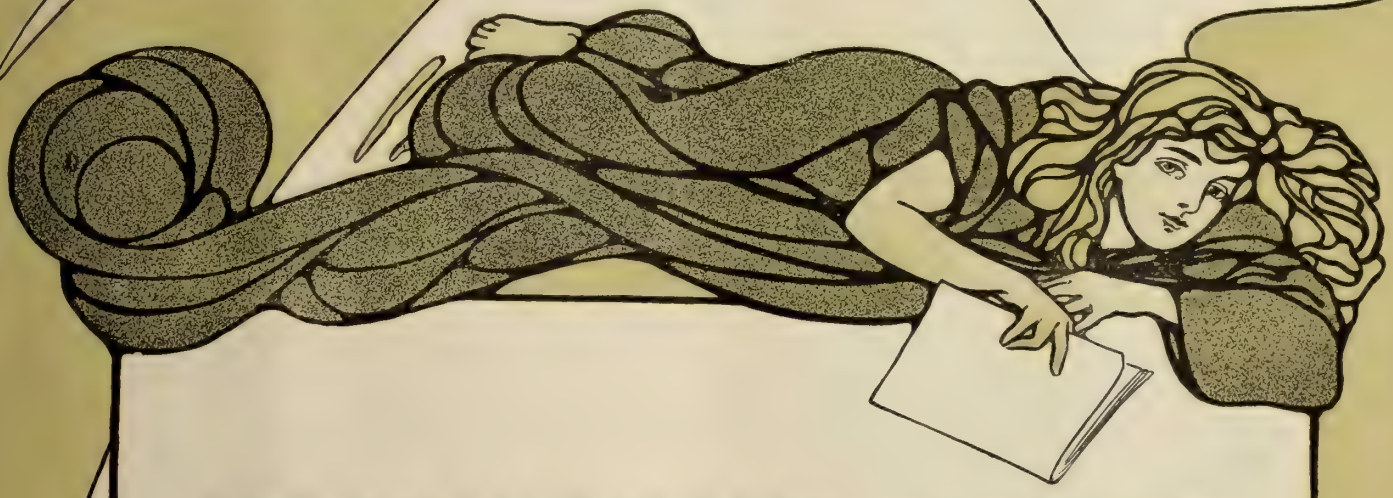
¶ Try it at lunch or dinner.

WEINHARD

PORTLAND BEER

SAN FRANCISCO AGENCY

HENRY WEINHARD BREWERY



1255 HARRISON STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

TELEPHONE MARKET 1803

Vol. XVII. No. 888. SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 4, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

RICHMOND COAL

IMPORTED SOLELY BY

James and Alex'r Brown

Owners of the Pelaw Main and Richmond Collieries; also Richmond Vale Colliery, Newcastle, N. S. W., Australia

Represented by Wm. Smellie

IF your dealer cannot supply you with genuine Richmond Coal, kindly communicate with us, or Pacific Coast Coal Co., Merchants' Exchange Building. Please note that all other advertisements claiming to sell you Richmond Coal are not authorized by us. They haven't got the goods.

JAMES AND ALEX'R BROWN
334 RUSS BUILDING, MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Sole Wholesale Distributors

PACIFIC COAST COAL CO.

Beale Street Bunkers San Francisco

SUMMER RESORTS

THE VENDOME SAN JOSE

Is the ideal objective point for the motorist. The accommodations are complete and the ride from either side of the bay is delightful. This hotel is unsurpassed in the West for the beauty of its environment and for those qualities which contribute to ease and comfort. H. W. LAKE, Manager.

THE PERRY HOTEL

Madison St. and Boren Ave.
SEATTLE, WASH.

Every Modern Convenience—Absolutely Fire Proof
European Plan, The Highest Grade

Under new management, centrally located and commanding a view of the Olympics, Cascade Mountains, Mount Rainier and Puget Sound.

J. S. McTERNAN, Manager

BYRON HOT SPRINGS

One of the world's most curative springs, 2½ hours from San Francisco; one of California's best hotels and a delightful place for rest and recreation. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, James Flood Building, any S. P. Agent, or Peck-Judah, 789 Market St., San Francisco, or 553 S. Spring St., Los Angeles, or address manager, Byron Hot Springs, California.

HOTEL WASHINGTON

J. M. LUX, MANAGER

SEATTLE, WASH.

A magnificent modern structure involving over One Million and a Half Dollars. Conducted on Most liberal ideas of Experience. Its appointments and service cannot be excelled in the United States. The management cordially invites your patronage.

HOTEL CUMBERLAND

Broadway at 54th Street

NEW YORK

Near 50th St. Subway Station and 53d St. Elevated

Ideal Location,
Near Theatres, Shops, and
Central Park

New and Fireproof

Strictly First Class in Every Respect

Rates Reasonable
$2.50 with bath, and up.

All Hardwood Floors and
Oriental Rugs

10 Minutes' Walk to 20 Theatres

Excellent Restaurant Prices Moderate

Send for Booklet

HARRY P. STIMSON,
formerly with Hotel Imperial

R. J. BINGHAM,
formerly with Hotel Woodward

HOTEL WASHINGTON ANNEX

SEATTLE, WASH.

Best Rooms Best Service

Strictly First-Class

J. H. DAVIS - - - - - Proprietor

YOSEMITE

SENTINEL HOTEL Open the Year Round; Steam Heated; Electric Lighted.

CAMP YOSEMITE Electric Lighted; Opened May 1st; the Largest Hotel-Camp on the Coast.

Under One Management. For Rates, Reservations or other information, address J. B. COOK, Proprietor, Yosemite, Cal.

HOTEL ARGONAUT

Society of California Pioneers Building

FOURTH STREET NEAR MARKET San Francisco CENTRE OF THE CITY

Catering to Family and Commercial Trade

400 Rooms $1.00 per day and up Dining room seats 500 guests

Special 50c Luncheon from 11:30 to 2 p. m.

Weekly and monthly rates on application. Free bus meets all trains and steamers.

Telephone Douglas 3393 EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager

SUMMER RESORTS

Hotel and Grounds

Plan to spend your vacation and your week-end outings at

HOTEL DEL MONTE

during

The Annual Month of Sports---August 15 to September 15th

Annual Dog Show — Annual Golf Tournament
First State Bridge Whist Congress — Annual Tennis Tournament
Opening of Pebble Beach Lodge

Make your plans to be there. Write for rates and reservations to-day to H. R. WARNER, Manager.

NAPA SODA SPRINGS HOTEL

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

California's famous mountain spa, only 50 miles from San Francisco. The nearest watering place and summer resort to the city. 1,000 feet elevation, overlooking 25 miles of beautiful Napa Valley. For terms address Manager Napa Soda Springs Hotel, Napa County, Cal.

Boca Hotel and Annex

TRUCKEE RIVER

Address CHAS. GARRISON, BOCA, CAL.

FALLEN LEAF LODGE

LAKE TAHOE, CAL.

New home-like resort at the head of Fallen Leaf Lake; five miles south of Lake Tahoe. Centrally situated in the grandest part of the Lake Tahoe Scenic Wonderland. Rates $14.00 per week and upward. HARRY WHITCOMB, Manager, Fallen Leaf, Lake Tahoe, Cal.

GILROY HOT SPRINGS

Only four hours from San Francisco; delightful stage ride over the best kept mountain road in California. Unsurpassed table, health-giving waters, telephone, postoffice. Rates $12 to $17.50 a week; baths free. Trains leave Third and Townsend streets at 9 a. m. Direct stage connection. See Peck-Judah, 789 Market street.

W. J. McDONALD, Proprietor.

HOTEL WESTMINSTER

LOS ANGELES, CAL. Fourth and Main Sts.

AMERICAN PLAN, Reopened.
Rates per day, $2.50 Rooms without Bath
Rooms with Bath, $3.00, $3.50 and $4.00.

EUROPEAN PLAN.
$1.00 per day and up.
With bath, $1.50 and up

F. O. JOHNSON, Proprietor

ROSS McMAHON AWNING AND TENT CO.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

Tents, Awnings, Hammocks, Bags and Covers

Phone Kearny 2030 — 403 BATTERY STREET

The grape cure season at

ÆTNA SPRINGS

will commence on September 9th with a

GRAPE FESTIVAL

a unique celebration, in costume, following the traditions of the annual feasts in the vineyard sections of the various European countries. Write for information to

LEN. D. OWENS, Proprietor,
Aetna Springs, Napa Co., Cal.

PARAISO SPRINGS

MONTEREY CO., CAL.

The most accessible of all resorts; a delightful terminal for an automobile trip. Take 8 a. m. train from Third and Townsend; you arrive at spring 1 p. m. for lunch. Natural hot soda and sulphur plunge and tub baths, 104 to 116 degrees, for rheumatism, malaria and all stomach troubles. Iron and arsenic waters. Altitude 1400 feet. H. H. McGOWAN, Proprietor.

PINE LODGE

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

In the mountains by the sea. Surroundings perfect for rest and recreation. Trout stream, boating, bathing. Home garden of berries and vegetables. New hotel and cottages, modern conveniences. Two miles from Santa Cruz. Rates $9.00 per week and upwards. For particulars address PINE LODGE, Santa Cruz, Cal.

TAKE TAMALPAIS TRIP

and breathe good air.

Half a mile high in two hours' time. No other trip like it.

Via Sausalito Ferry, Foot of Market Street

HOTEL VICTORIA

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Manager

N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton

CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL

Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine. Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.

American and European Plan.

Leading Hotels and Resorts

LONG BEACH SANITARIUM

LONG BEACH, CALIF.

Battle Creek Sanitarium Methods

A splendidly equipped QUIET, REFINED and MODERN medical and surgical Institution BY-THE-SEA, where the sick, run down or work-tired may go and know that they will receive the very best of care and attention at reasonable rates. Gentlemen and Lady Physicians. Graduate nurses only. Climate exceptionally fine. Cool in summer, warm and dry in winter. Descriptive Booklet mailed FREE. W. RAY SIMPSON, Manager.

Long Distance Phones in Every Room

YE ALPINE TAVERN

Beautiful Mountain Resort on Mt. Love

Just a mile above the sea. American plan $3.00 per day, $15 per week. Choice of rooms in hotel or cottages. Spend a vacation 5,000 feet above the sea, among great pines and oaks. For information, D. A. Munger, General Agent, Pacific Electric R. R., Los Angeles, or office.

HOTEL ALEXANDRIA

LOS ANGELES

IN SAFETY, SERVICE
AND SANITATION

HAS TAKEN ITS PLACE
AMONG THE BEST HOTELS

A. C. BILICKE, President
S. J. WHITMORE, Vice-Pres. and Gen. Mgr. JOS. REICHL, Asst. Mgr

HOTEL DEL CORONADO

CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. Power boats from the Hotel meet passengers from the North on the arrival of the Pacific Coast S. S. Co. steamers. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, 334 S. Spring St., Los Angeles.

THE FORUM CAFE

O A K L A N D

Now under the management of

MR. GUSTAV MANN

THE ANGELUS

LOS ANGELES

One of California's Best Hotels
Centrally located; street cars direct to hotel.
Rates $1.50 per Day Up

HOTEL HARCOURT

Formerly the Nordhoff.

SUTTER AND LARKIN STREETS

AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN

A Elegantly Furnished Modern Home. Phone Franklin 2100

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

CAMERAS

Kodaks, Developing, Printing, Supplies, Etc.

"Don't take a vacation unless you take pictures as you go along"

462-464 THIRTEENTH STREET, Between Broadway and Washington

SMITH BROS. STATIONERS OAKLAND

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, September 4, 1909. No. 888.

A CHAPEL IN THE WOODS

This unique temple of worship is situated on the shore of Lake Tahoe within a stone's throw of the Tahoe Tavern. The chancel is fashioned of rough logs and stones and all the rest is God's handiwork, the worshipers sitting beneath the blue canopy among the fragrant pines. It is called the Church of the Transfiguration. The pastor is the Rev. C. N. Lathrop of this city.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor.
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION: One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.
Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.
The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.
For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.
Los Angeles office, 427 South Main Street.
Seattle office, 804 Third Avenue.
We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

The Taft Policy

More than anything else that has happened of late the controversy between the admirers of Gifford Pinchot and Secretary Ballinger has signalized the difference in temperament and conviction between the present dispensation at Washington and its predecessor. The attitude of Mr. Taft through it all was in marked contrast to what the attitude of Mr. Roosevelt would have been in similar circumstances. It is needless to say that Mr. Roosevelt would have uttered himself vociferously to the delight and encouragement of the lusty-lunged politicians who have been affecting a profound concern for the welfare of countless thousands of the plain people yet unborn and an invincible determination to retard the encroachments of ambitious empire builders animated by an iniquitous eagerness to develop the resources of the country. Mr. Taft took the matter with philosophic calmness, saying nothing more than that he was resolved to see that there should be no violation of the law. Evidently he saw no occasion for excitement, no legitimate pretext for a perfervid pronunciamento. His affirmation of intention to enforce the law denotes in itself a difference of sentiment between this Administration and that of Mr. Roosevelt to whom the law was a big stick to be used in the discretion of the Chief Magistrate to reward his friends and to punish his enemies, to advance his personal interests and to destroy any man who dared to question the wisdom of "my policies."

Roosevelt Reformers

If, under this Administration, Mr. Gifford Pinchot is not an anachronism, his friends, to say the least, are out of harmony with the current keynote of public policy at Washington. These noisy gentlemen are reformers of the Rooseveltian type, a type that is distinguished for its sequestration from the sentiments of generosity and charity and for its tendency to smother opposition with obloquy. Reformers of this type have one ruling canon: "Whoever does not agree with us is corrupt." This amiable maxim they repeat in every form of dulness, and vary in every attitude of malignity. It is the sum and substance of all their arguments. As soon as they learned that Secretary Ballinger was not in accord with Mr. Gifford Pinchot they resolved to overwhelm the cabinet officer with mean insinuations designed to lower him in public esteem; and at once they had the sympathy and co-operation of the perverts of journalism, who, indulging the delusion that they can command the confidence of the mob by vituperating everything that savors ever so faintly of dishonesty, are ever on the alert for reputations to shatter. We are pleased to observe that reformers and journalists of this ugly and repulsive type are receiving no encouragement from Washington. While Mr. Taft has proclaimed and reiterated his devotion to the policies of Mr. Roosevelt, apparently he does not conceive that to carry on the policy of holding dishonest capital in check it is necessary to retard the development of our national resources, or to stimulate the tendency to suspicion and distrust, or to fan the drab passion of envy. Honest, conscientious reformers, however, ought not to view the President's attitude with alarm. On the contrary they should applaud him for the dignified stand he has taken. Pursuing the policy which appears to be the mainspring of his conduct he may in time abate the prejudice against reformers which has been spreading under the misapprehension that muckraking and reforming are synonymous. Reformers have fallen into disrepute because the most conspicuous of the latter day tribe, though, like Jonathan Wilde, very liberal of honest professions, have made it evident that they regard hypocrisy as the chief of the virtues. There is nothing quite so abominable as the lust of political power when it is found under the garb of civic patriotism. The world hates snarling, vindictive, cruel reformers, but the modest, unobtrusive zeal for the improvement of social and political conditions which fills the heart with charity and makes a man gentle to his neighbor and severe to himself is an object of universal love and admiration.

Opposition to La Follette

It seems more than probable that the ranks of the insurgents in the United States Senate will be lessened at the next election by the retirement of Robert La Follette of Wisconsin, who is meeting with strong opposition. His constituents have apparently discovered what others have realized for a long time—that La Follette is a blatant demagogue, who, masking himself under the guise of a great and abiding love for the people, has had really but one object in view, his own political advancement. La Follette saw that his greatest opportunity lay in being a rebel, and a rebel he has been for years. His nature being destructive rather than constructive, he has opposed his own party in every move that it has made, and his protesting voice has been heard in the Senate on all occasions. Any measure that was put forward by senators other than members of his clique was the signal for vicious and generally ill-founded attacks. This course was successful for some time, and La Follette gained for himself public attention that savored more of notoriety than fame, a fact that he lacked the discrimination to observe. Narrow-mindedness and total lack of discrimination are the abiding characteristics of La Follette and his kind. To them all corporations are bad, all poor men are monuments of civic and business virtue. For a railway company to ask for a franchise is a monstrous thing in their eyes—of what use is a franchise except as an instrument with which further to fetter and rob the dear plain people? It may open a new stretch of country, which thereby will become inhabited by farmers who will attain prosperity through the raising of various products. That would be all right in the eyes of La Follette and his followers but for the fact that in hauling the product of the farm the railways will make money—and money is the root of all evil except in the hands of the poor. Does a great tract of timber need cutting, or beds of coal need mining, with employment for thousands of people? Immediately up rises La Follette with a shriek, declaring that the coal barons and the lumber barons are seeking the exploitation of the public—and all the Follettians join in the howling chorus. It is hard to tell what they want, for they offer no solution of existing problems. They are obstructionists in every sense, and have done vast harm by their constant throttling of enterprise. Can their dear poor people get together and build railroads and furnish the capital for the cutting of timber and the mining of coal? And if they did so, what else would they be but money barons, oppressors of the poor, despoilers of the commonwealth? Nothing will satisfy these demagogues, and the only way to end their pernicious activities is to retire them to private life. This, it seems, is what the people of Wisconsin propose to do in the case of La Follette. It will be a good example, one well worth following by other afflicted communities.

The Unsophisticated Multitude

With the Portola festival approaching we should be blithely expectant of the sound of Oberon's magic whistle, the melodious producer of laughter and merriment, but the indications are that we are destined to give ear instead to the winding of Alecto's sullen horn. The Hon. Francis J. Heney, the pride and hope of our uplifters, is coming back, pregnant with encomiums on his patriotism and self-sacrifice, to heat the public mind once more, "to make loud wail and invoke with passionate clamor the silent heavens." Like Joseph Surface this perennial little agitator is a man of fine sentiments, and it was to be expected that he should go before the people in the coming campaign with a vote-compelling shibboleth breathing some noble and lofty principle conclusive of a soul animated by the very highest ideals. He will not disappoint his friends and admirers. For his motto he has adopted the beautiful sentiment, "Equality before the law," and from this it is to be inferred that the campaign for district attorney is to be conducted on the theory that the election of Mr. Roosevelt's thrifty protege is essential to the impartial administration of justice in this distracted and wicked city. We are of the opinion that it will be interesting as well as instructive to watch developments. In this connection we confess a profound curiosity as to the potentialities of the pharisaism in which Mr. Heney's pretensions and the hopes of his vindictive masters are rooted. Is it possible for Mr. Heney to revive his popularity? We assume of course that he has ceased to be the pampered darling of the mob. More than a year ago we thought we observed that the period of apotheosis had passed. On the part of the people, the fever, the crisis, its abatement, the convalescence and recovery—all these stages—were noted. Now the question is whether after the exorcism, after disillusionment and disenchantment the multitude are immune from a second affliction. We have no hesitation in admitting that we are in doubt, being decidedly sceptical with reference to the intelligence of the dear people. Conscientiously we dissent from the opinion that all the people cannot be fooled all the time. God may temper the wind to the shorn lamb, but the unsophisticated multitude, which, like the individual "never is but always to be blest," he permits to roll darkling down the torrent of its fate. If Mr. Heney fails to revive his popularity with preposterous assertions regarding his self-sacrificing devotion to mankind and appeals to prejudices and passions it will not be on account of the shrewdness of the people but because they have come to the conclusion that the cabal which he represents for office expenses is hurting business. It has become apparent that the rascals whose unclean work Mr. Heney has been doing have put a blight on this city, and there are eloquent indications of resentment in the public mind, but we doubt whether the people have even a faint conception of the enormities that have been committed in the name of justice or whether they are in the slightest degree concerned about the men that have suffered injustice at the hands of Heney and his masters. We suspect that hostility to the iniquitous Spreckels-Phelan cabal in this city today is grounded mainly in selfishness. Very little of it, so far as we have been able to observe, is inspired by just indignation or by a sense of the meanness and cruelty that have been exhibited in defiance of the most sacred principles of our government. San Francisco has been tormented for more than two years by vindictive canting hypocrits who have been affecting a deep interest in the city's moral welfare and a gnawing eagerness to purify our politics and our government, and all the while the shallowness of their pretensions ought to have been apparent even to men of the feeblest perceptive faculty, but all the while they have been tolerated and indulged, and to this day there are men and women of more than ordinary intelligence who are actually engaged in clamoring for public support of the nefarious enterprise. These deluded ones, who are trying to shape public opinion, have been permitted by Providence to see nothing more than that the ostensible object of the prosecution is to punish rich men accused of crime. The object in their opinion glorifies the endeavor. That the whole enterprise, even though admitting that it was holy in its inception, has been irretrievably damned by the vicious means employed to achieve the end is something immeasurably beyond their ken. As we have said these deluded ones are persons of more than ordinary intelligence. In the circumstances why should we expect the swinish multitude to be immune from a second affliction?

Graft in the Park

Now comes the news that the taxpayers of this city have lost large sums of money through the carelessness and negligence of the Park Commissioners. An accountant has discovered that the Commission has paid one bill five times, that no records have been kept of the receipt of materials at the park, that there has been duplication in many of the demands presented for payment and that there has been grafting in supplies furnished by firms patronized by the Administration. This news has been printed in the daily papers, but without comment. It has excited no indignation, not even astonishment. Apparently it is assumed that in connection with the administration of municipal affairs there must be more or less graft and that to complain or protest would be to exhibit a puerile and unreasonable spirit. But we have been laboring under the delusion that our stern and uncompromising moral uplifters had aroused a strong public sentiment against graft, and were even now engaged in inculcating beautiful precepts calculated to deter the wicked from corrupting susceptible public officials. We were sensible of the fact that by some mysterious, inexplicable and inexorable rule the barom-

The Hub
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

WE HAVE MEN'S CLOTHES HERE THAT NO OTHER SHOP CAN EQUAL. VERY SUPERIOR QUALITIES, THE HEIGHT OF TAILORS' ART. WE ARE SHOWING THIS SEASON NINETEEN DIFFERENT MODELS. GOOD SMART DRESSERS KNOW THE CLASS OF CLOTHES WE KEEP. WE DRESS YOU WITH SCIENCE. PUT YOURSELF IN OUR CARE.

We Put Only One Grade of Workmanship

The Hub
Chas Keilus & Co.
San Francisco.

In Every Garment That Bears This Label.

"Our qualities" the highest, "our makes" the best. Taking these two facts into consideration, you'll find our prices hinge on quality. We do business exclusively on merit. Our overcoats, suits and trousers this fall contain carefully selected patterns and exclusive. Better garments than ours can't be produced. This being an exclusive men's clothes shop, you have choice of an extraordinary assortment and you're fitted in a genuine men's clothes shop.

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

cter of municipal expenses rises in equal pace with the improvement of the moral atmosphere, but at the same time we supposed that while all public officials had been taught to expect leniency in the event of their yielding to temptation there was a strong and almost invincible prejudice against all loathsome higher-ups by whom temptation is dispensed. It is therefore somewhat surprising to us that there should be no horrendous outcry against the villains who have debauched the Park Commission. Notwithstanding the palliation of grave misconduct in other departments, we expected a storm of indignation when we heard of pilfering in the park. On the tip-toe of expectancy, not even a gentle zephyr has come out of the cave of public emotion to apprise us that the reformers are vigilant and reproachful. It has not even been deemed advisable to demand an explanation of the delinquent officials, one of whom is the Hon. James D. Phelan, famous as the Mayor who "hefted" the sacks in the halcyon past when under his very nose thousands of dollars were stolen out of the city treasury.

The Fan

She thought: "What a dear, kind, thoughtful man!
He knew that I needed a new, lace fan,
And with what good taste, he has picked it out!
He's a man of sentiment—no doubt."

And she thought: "When he comes to-night, I guess,
He will feel repaid, with the fond caress
I feel in my heart, for his tender thought.
I think I can do, as a widow ought."

But the odors of Araby floated by,
As a certain something caught her eye.
It was written small and her smile grew forced,
'Twas the name of the wife whom he divorced.

—Ruth Moselle Mould.

Perspective Impressions

The operation was not on Harriman, but on Wall street.

The despatches say that clouds of revolution again loom over Central America. The "again" is superfluous.

One thousand men are busy harvesting beets in the Sacramento Valley, and more are needed, while San Francisco is full of dead beats who claim that they cannot get work.

At a Madrid bull-fight on Sunday, a matador was fatally hooked, a woman spectator was stabbed to death by a jealous rival, and there was a riot that resulted in broken heads. The bull was getting along nicely at last accounts.

Japan has sent a special commissioner to this country to study irrigation. He should keep away from the prohibition States.

Maxine Elliott has become one of the favorites of King Edward VII. But for his divorce Nat Goodwin might have been court jester by now.

Heney will be given a warm reception when he arrives in San Francisco tonight. The frost will come in November.

A Salt Lake couple died from eating apple dumplings in the making of which arsenic instead of baking powder had been inadvertently used. Another substitution that demands the attention of Dr. Wiley.

PINCHOT'S IDEA OF FOREST RESERVES

—Detroit Times

THE SALVATIONISTS

—Boston Traveler

A Note on Ambrose Bierce

By Michael Williams

Editor's Note: Two weeks ago Town Talk referred to an article in the London New Age regarding Ambrose Bierce, and commented on the ignorance of some English writers regarding this American essayist, calling attention to the fact that Bierce was famous in London years ago. Michael Williams, of Carmel, has sent to the New Age a letter on the subject of which the following is a copy:

To the Editor of The New Age, London, England:

Who is Ambrose Bierce? asks Jacob Tonson. Answers, more or less complete, have come from several quarters. If I, too, advance a reply it is not because I am animated by a desire to achieve a synthesis on the subject proposed by Mr. Tonson; no! for on the contrary, I very much hope to see the discussion continue, and I throw in my contribution merely as a stimulant. Nothing connected with "The New Age" has so excited me, and so pleased me, bar my discovery of this journal, as its re-discovery of Ambrose Bierce, man of courage, writer of genius. I pray that the symposium excited by Mr. Tonson may go on until the New Age has instilled in members of the Fourth Estate everywhere the knowledge that Ambrose Bierce and his work are matters of prime importance.

It is rather more a certainty than a probability that the text of the first communication of mine to appear in this journal, "A Letter From America," has not been memorized by its readers, so that I may be permitted to remind them that in that communication I instanced Ambrose Bierce as one of the exceedingly few writers of America whose opinions are not only worth while but are expressed beautifully; also I uttered my conviction that America's chief need at present is for writers of Bierce's authenticity as artists. Furthermore, in that self-same letter, I offered to serve as a detached reporter of the campaign of the worldwide war of Humanity against the powers of darkness which is being waged in America, and to send from the front despatches concerned with its important phases. It is peculiarly appropriate that the first report I am moved to make should be concerned with Ambrose Bierce.

The New Age is an organ of Socialism. I am a Socialist writer. If there is one word that more than any other word appears to have the power of stirring Bierce's wrath it is the word "Socialism." Yet I believe that this great artist's work must necessarily appeal to and be of more value to Socialists than to any other class. It is immediately necessary for me to add, however, that when I speak of Socialism I am speaking not of more or less commendable efforts to feed the poor and raise the lowly according to the gospel of Marx, but am speaking, as the writer of "Unedited Opinions" once spoke in this journal, of the attempt like that of Lucifer's to make heaven of hell. Wherefore, the qualities demanded of Socialists are pre-eminently intellectual and spiritual. Again quoting from "Unedited Opinions," I say that Socialists more than any other class should be intellectually honest, should purge as with hyssop their minds with humor, and wash their souls in the waters of the spring of beauty. That writer, then, who, like Ambrose Bierce, is a philosopher, a wit, and an artist, must needs be of high value to all Socialists, especially when, as in this case, he turns his philosophy against what he deems their errors, sharpening his strokes with his wit, and stamping his phrases with the true coinage mark of beauty so that they must remain permanently in circulation. The further value given to Bierce's work by the circumstance that it and its author are American will be obvious to all who have an adequate knowledge of the enormous need for such work and such men in this country.

Ambrose Bierce is an American by family descent, birth, and life of service to his country. He was born in Ohio. He fought throughout the Civil War, enlisting as a private and emerging as a major. He has been fighting ever since with his pen. I have spoken of him above as man of courage and writer of genius. I might also say that the mission of his genius as a writer has been the distillation of his courage as a man into shapes of literature to enhearten his fellowmen. But I do not say that such was or is Bierce's conscious aim. He would be as likely to trade upon or make literary parade of his high-souled bravery as a pure woman would be to trade upon or make parade of her chastity. Yet I discern personal courage as the very soul of all this writer's work in poetry, philosophy, fiction, satire, and every form of journalism during nearly half a century. That which he deems true will be maintain though the heavens fall.

For example, he has consistently maintained his integrity as a literary artist, forging out of the finest steel of the language a style that has been a weapon at once of defence and offence, to assault Philistia and guard the gates of Art. Consequently, unto Bierce as unto Poe, Whitman, Thoreau and other artists and fighters for truth there has been meted out neglect, misunderstanding, and the hatred of little and vulgar souls. The first American edition of his book of short stories which contains "A Horseman in the Sky," "An Occurrence at Owl Creek Bridge," "An Inhabitant of Carcosa," and other masterpieces of imaginative prose, bears the following significant note:

"Denied existence by the chief publishing houses of the country, this book owes itself to Mr. E. L. G. Steele, merchant, of this city. In attesting Mr. Steele's faith in his judgment and his friend, it will serve its author's main and best ambition."

I cannot stop at this time to inquire further into the reasons which make the fate of an authentic literary artist in America a lot of such singular hardship, luminously as the case of Ambrose Bierce would illustrate and direct such an inquiry, and supremely useful as that inquiry would be, for I have neither time nor means at present for such work. I can but deal with the case of Bierce on one of its sides, wherefore it is fortunate that this particular aspect is so important, namely, the influence of Ambrose Bierce as a literary artist.

George Sterling—true poet of a lofty strain—who is proud to name Bierce his master and to whom, together with Herman Scheffauer, his friends and pupils, Bierce dedicated his volume of poems, "Shapes of Clay"—once said to me that he considered a man's attitude toward Ambrose Bierce a criterion, in many respects, of that man's spiritual character. It is quite possible to make out a case that would throw just aspersion on Bierce's value as a political prophet, and upon the permanent value of his satirical writings, and his vituperative works, and the too-great bulk of his critical examinations and moth-pin mountings of literary ephemerae; but a denial of Bierce's high rank as a creative artist in poetry and prose, in any circumstance of anger against the artist or displeasure with him, convicts him who denies of blindness, or littleness of spiritual insight.

Why, my friends, it is almost unanimously the habit, even among a large number of professed admirers of Ambrose Bierce, here in America, to consider him as first of all a pessimistic cynic. Yet there is no writer of to-

(Continued on Page 34.)

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

The Herb of Truth

By Fritz Von Ostini (From the German)

"John," said the wife of the privy councilor, "take this diamond necklace to the court jeweler and ask him to set a couple of new stones in the middle. And then send Lena in to me."

John left the room and in a moment Lena entered.

"Lena, you are robbing me!" thundered the mistress of the house. "Last night there were still three slices of sausage on the platter when it was sent into the kitchen, and now there are but two. Where is the third one?"

"I don't know," said Lena, blushing. "I certainly have not taken it.

"You lie, you impudent hussy. And as lying is a habit that I cannot abide, you are dismissed—you may thank your stars if I give you a character."

Lena left the room crying bitterly. She had really not taken the slice of sausage. And in her distress she ran to her fairy godmother and told her what had occurred.

"Just wait!" said the fairy. "I have been waiting for an opportunity to pay her out. Now listen, and do what I tell you: the next time there is a full moon go into the woods and hunt for the Herb of Truth—Veritas intolerabilis. It grows between the daisy and the bittersweet. The next time your mistress gives a dinner put some of this herb into the sauce. It is not poisonous, but it doesn't agree with some folks."

On the day following full moon there was a party at the privy councilor's, and it was a brilliant affair. The clever Dr. Herbert Schultze was there—he of the attractive blond beard, a man so popular that he averaged eleven dinner and nine luncheon invitations each week. Then there was the fabulously rich financier, Knallmaier, who had to wear a dress coat that was too large for him because there was not room enough to hang all his decorations on a coat that really fitted him. The celebrated Lieutenant Bolko von Querwitz was present. It was said that every time the lieutenant went promenading the sound of broken hearts in his wake was like the noise of rapid-fire guns. Professor Senfgeber, the famous esthete, was there—his father's uncle was said to have known one of Goethe's servants personally—and his fame was almost as bottomless as his thirst. He paid for every dinner by toasting his hostess. Then there was the pretty little Countess Seden with her blond, innocent Madonna head, whose specialty it was to pose as an uncorrupted soul in most risque company; and next to her sat the old merchant, Nierstein, with his fine, venerable features and his cleverly matched toupet. Of artistically important folk there were Professor Behnish, to whom Germany owed the designing of an epoch-making door latch; the poetess, Irene Schnirps, who had written "The Justification of Voluptuousness"; and the baritone, Klossmann, who was always invited because he invariably became intoxicated and was then very amusing. And there were a few more present in uniform, civil attire and satin frocks—all of them of the elite.

The conversation sputtered with brilliancy. Herbert Schultze sat next to the hostess, who induced him to accept three helpings of caviar. And after each one he uttered a bon mot. Querwitz made love to his neighbor until she grew sentimental, while Professor Senfgeber ate until he perspired.

Finally the roast came. It was something exquisitely exotic; a New Holland duck garnished with its own eggs. A heavenly sauce was served with it; besides Madeira, it contained some of the Herb of Truth which Lena had added. The effect of this upon the company was extraordinary. The hostess began by addressing the delightful Herbert.

"Listen, my dear doctor," she interjected in the midst of a most loving remark, "you are gorging yourself with a dinner that is costing me sixty marks a plate, without the wine. And in comparison to this cost the quality of your jokes is ridiculously bad. Why in the world do I ask such a perfumed glutton to dinner?"

"My dear woman," was the answer, "the most disreputable rogue is far too good for your society. Such a lot of impossible parvenus I have never before met anywhere; and your own husband is a notorious cutthroat who has just escaped prison by the merest chance!"

The councilor had heard the latter part of this remark, and yelled across the table: "What does that scoundrel with his fake title of doctor dare to say? Only yesterday he borrowed five hundred marks from me. You always have to count the silver after a dinner that he has attended."

The pretty Frau Liebmann, who sat at Schultze's left, consoled him by saying: "Don't mind the jests of these plebeians, sweetheart. Tomorrow at three o'clock I will be at home for you again, and then I will make up for all the insults you have had to bear tonight!"

"What a shameless creature!" suddenly shrilled the piquant Frau van der Schnecken to her vis-a-vis. "What have you to do with the charming Herbert? I have an affair with him—I gave him his gold cigarette case."

"He belongs to me," piped one of the other women.

"And to me, too," came from still another.

"Yes, but I've known him longer than anyone else," declared Frau Liebmann. And her husband, the general consul of the Republic of Liberia, thundered:

"My wife is right—I've known about it for three years; but I've never dared say anything—the fellow shoots like the devil!"

Lieutenant Querwitz had just asked the daughter of the hostess to become his wife, and he was explaining: "I have debts amounting to ninety thousand marks, and must either pay up or discard my uniform. But after I have married you I expect to begin my gay life all over again. Then I will buy a coupe for that chic little Mlle. Harrison."

From all sides of the board the company attacked one another. No one seemed surprised that the most impossible and unheard-of things were voiced, but each one grew enraged.

"Is it true, Klossmann, that you beat your wife?" asked an opulent blonde of the baritone.

"Only when I am drunk; but then, I'm always drunk. It is a great pleasure to beat women, and, madame, if I had you at home I would maul you so that you would whine and adore me."

Dr. Senfgeber, purple with overeating, rapped for attention, and began to toast his hostess. "Ladies and gentlemen—if I may apply these terms to the assembled company, for as I look about this noble circle, I cannot, even with the best of intentions, discover any decent people present. All those I see are either spongers or braggarts—and there are some present who belong to both categories. Among these we must include our host and hostess. But we must admit that even though they count the cost of every morsel we put into our mouths, they, at least, are liberal in the feed they provide. So we will enjoy what is given us and not question the manner in which the money was earned that provides it. Nor will we take any account of the fact that our hostess is a vulgar woman with a very shady reputation. Let us drink to her health instead. That costs nothing and looks well. Let us drink to her!"

A murderous tumult arose. The host threw a Bordeaux bottle at the professor, but struck Frau Grunstein.

MAISON DORÉE HOTEL AND RESTAURANT
151-157 ELLIS ST., ABOVE POWELL
Phone Ex. Douglas 1040, Connecting All Departments
THE GOURMETS FAVORITE PLACE TO DINE
Also Mercantile Lunch at reasonable rates.

The women tore one another's hair, their husbands intervened, and the baritone began to beat his neighbor. In his rage Knallmaier poured the sauce over the shoulders of the poetess. There was yelling, and shrieking, breaking of glasses, smashing of plates, applause, cries for help and laughter—a perfect Witches' Sabbath. Bells were rung, and telephone calls were sent for the ambulance, the police, the surgeon and the lawyer.

And suddenly the spell of the Herb of Truth gave way. The men and women of the company faced each other in disordered attire and wished that the earth might open to swallow them. They did not know how it had all come about.

And it was only the result of the fact that for five minutes each one had truthfully said exactly what he had thought.

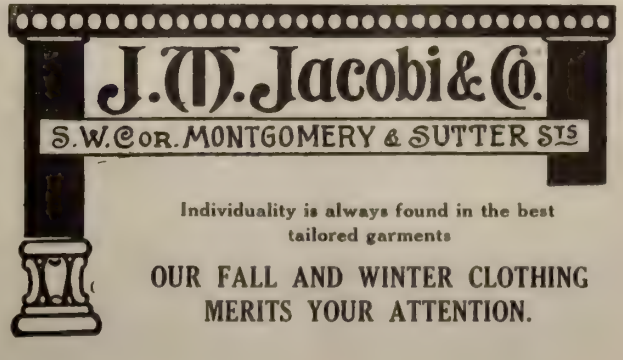
The Spectator

Music in Fetters

When music, heavenly maid, was young, there were no unions to hamper her—no one to say whether she should play eight hours a day or four, or to forbid her getting up in the middle of the night and strumming her lyre to her heart's content. Orpheus twanged his lute when and where he pleased, and there was no one to make the price for him; he could charge above or below the scale (no pun intended) just as he pleased. Pan could pipe unhindered without any walking delegate piping him off (pun deliberately perpetrated) to see what price was paid him for his work. But if these two could come to earth today—the poets insist that they are really here—they would find their freedom greatly hampered by the musicians' union, which would compel them to join its ranks or cease their strains. Joaquin S. Wanrell, a local singer and musician, will bear me out in what I have said. Not that Wanrell is either a Pan or an Orpheus—but he is having a taste of such troubles as I have said would fall to their lot. Wanrell is getting up a big Spanish concert for the Portola Festival week—a most ambitious affair, with a band, an orchestra, with singers and dancers, and with Spanish music hitherto unheard here. And in making his arrangements he has run afoul of the red tape of the musicians' union. One feature of Wanrell's concert is to be an orchestra composed entirely of mandolin and guitar players. There are to be forty of them if he can get that number. But there are only half a dozen or so players of those instruments among the members of the musicians' union. What would seem to be the obvious course for Wanrell to pursue, keeping in his mind the fact that he must not offend the union? Why, hire all the union men he could get and then go among the amateurs for additions to his ranks. He broached the subject to the union, and the reply was long in coming. There were consultations, and the matter was referred from one committee to another, the festival project meanwhile hanging fire. At last Wanrell got permission to employ amateurs, but it was stipulated that they should be strictly amateurs. The union reserved the right to forbid the employment of any professionals who did not belong to the union. It is a disgraceful thing, I say, that any attempt at artistic expression should be hampered by the rules and whims of a union—for the rules amount to little more than whims, so readily and easily can they be changed. There is of course no criticism of the action of the union in granting Wanrell permission to hire amateurs—the monstrous thing is that he should have to ask permission. What a free country this is, when the consummation of any musical event, of low class or high, depends upon the favor of a lot of four dollar a day fiddlers and horn blowers!

A Song and Dance Contest for Office

Persons of not more than average power of discernment ought to be able to extract a lot of fun out of the municipal campaign of this year of our Lord. They need but watch the contest over the Public Administrator's office, which has already resolved itself into a vaudeville show. The principal performers are "Billy" Hynes, the comic singer, famous as an expounder of Almanac jokes, and Joseph Kelleher, the Irish tailor and distinguished exponent of Celtic dances. Each has been a headliner at many an amateur entertainment, but Hynes is much the more experienced artist having been on the amateur circuit for more than a quarter of a century, while Kelleher is comparatively a new comer. In the field of politics Kelleher is absolutely a novice, but he has taken to the game like a duck to water, and he has loads of confidence. "Hynes sang himself into the job," he says, "and I'll dance him out of it." In these words the Irish tailor has epitomized the program of the political show. He will endeavor to demonstrate his qualifications for the job in a whirlwind series of Irish reels and breakdowns, and Hynes will do his utmost to vindicate his ability as an administrator of the estates of the friendless dead by reciting Joe Miller and vocalizing from one end of his repertoire to the other. So we are assured of a continuous performance throughout the campaign, one that will abound in old jokes and new steps. Kelleher is said to have a tireless pair of legs and his friends predict that he will go the distance; but in the Hynes' camp there is some uneasiness as "Billy" sometimes goes lame in the vocal chords. No effort is being spared, however, to avert disaster. Tommy Hickey and Eustace Cullinan, the lawyers that batten on his office, are in constant attendance, keeping him well blanketed and supplied with cough drops. The defeat of Hynes would be a severe blow to Hickey and Cullinan. The office of Public Administrator is the price of their loyalty to the Democratic organization, and it supplies them with about all the law practice they have, which isn't enough to keep Cullinan working at it, so he hires himself out to the Boughten Bulletin under contract to supply venom to its editorial columns. A set of circumstances that explains why the Bulletin is Hynes's backer and booster.



"John, this firm is advertising dresses 75 per cent off; what does that mean?"

"Bathing-suits."

Wheeler's Withdrawal

Why Charley Wheeler withdrew from the Spreckels will contest is a question that has puzzled many gentlemen who believe that the solution of it will throw some light on the strategic plans of the campaign that is to be conducted in the interest of Rudolph and his brother Gus. I am told that Mr. Wheeler's explanation of his withdrawal is that he hates family feuds and knowing that in the course of the Spreckels contest there is bound to be generated the most repulsive of human passions he deemed it prudent to hold himself aloof. Singularly enough this explanation has caused no visible subsidence of speculation. Conjecture is still fully as spirited as though the distinguished attorney had never spoken. Credulity, though equipped with as many ears as fame has tongues, has been deaf to the outpouring of Mr. Wheeler's inner conscience, a circumstance that can be accounted for only on the theory that it is remembered that the reluctance which the attorney now affects was nowhere in evidence some years ago when the most shocking and unnatural of all the feuds that embittered the members of the Spreckels family was raging in the courts of this State. Nobody seems inclined to credit Mr. Wheeler with having had a rush of sentimentality to the head to the disadvantage of his pocket. Despite his solemn asseveration it has been suggested that perhaps he demanded too large a fee, but this suggestion has not been taken seriously by the unsophisticated. In the opinion of certain wiseacres who are versed in the ways that are ingenious of some of our eminent practitioners at the bar the withdrawal of Mr. Wheeler from the Spreckels contest is in the nature of a tactical manoeuvre designed to strengthen the position of Rudolph and Gus Spreckels. What John D. Spreckels thinks about it I have not heard, but it is known that the proprietor of the Call is very busy these days mending his fences. Singularly enough as between him and Rudolph in the contest over their father's estate there is very little room for partisan spirit. To the general it appears to be a case of dog eat dog and not much difference in the quality of the meat.

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 56 Kearny street.

"Who was Ananias, pa?"
"He was the first weather clerk, my son."

An Editor's Logic

He who has the truth to defend has no need of sophistries to effect persuasion, a fact that ought to be conclusive as to the state of mind responsible for the arguments presented almost daily in the Boughten Bulletin in defense of the Hon. F. J. Heney. Rioting in gratuitous assertion the editor exercises perfect freedom in logic, putting what imbecilities he pleases in the mouths of his adversaries and shrieking in triumph when he has refuted them. Nor is he always logical, for sometimes his line of argument is something like this: Because Judge Lawlor was a fiend for olives before he went on the bench, he will have a keen taste for sour grapes when his term expires. Such is his facility in this style of logic he can prove that because Editor Crothers always prays before he sins he doesn't keep his soul in his breeches, and reasoning by what he conceives to be analogy he can reach the conclusion without sweating a hair that Older and Phelan are as true to each other as either one is to himself. The other day this subtle logician called attention to the fact that a citizen, charged with stealing a public street, by way of defense pronounced his accuser a bigamist. This incident furnished an illustration of the absurdity of the charges that have been made against Heney and Spreckels. Even though they were as unscrupulous as they have been described, says the gleeful editor, "it is not clear that the attacks on them are a vindication of the men who bribed the supervisors." Thus does the brilliant polemic smother his adversaries with derision. Thus does this charming moralist affect without scruple the belief that the charges that have been made against Heney and Spreckels are immaterial and irrelevant. Far be it from this ponderous humorist to apprehend that it is the duty of the State to see that the machinery of the law is not put into the hands of unscrupulous persons for the gratification of private revenge. If Francis J. Heney is a crook he should not be permitted to occupy a juridical position in this city, and it is eminently proper for men accused of crime to object to being prosecuted by him. There are many ways by which an unscrupulous prosecuting attorney might obtain the conviction of an innocent man; as many as the ways by which he has obtained the indictment of men whom he knows to be innocent of crime.

Amateur Journalism

As one of the Examiner's oldest subscribers I rise with the utmost deference and profoundest sorrow to voice in anguished tones a protest against the loose, not to say amateurish, methods of journalism which so strikingly evidence the degenerate state of the monarch of the dailies. My faith in the Examiner I have thought well nigh invincible, but of late I feel that it is petering out. Mr. Hearst's invertebrate policy of conciliation is proving a severe tax on my forbearance. I have been patient in the hope that Ella Wheeler Wilcox's munificent patron would some day regain his courage and utter himself without caring a tinker's imprecation how many fanatics he offended. His timid affectation of impartial attitude toward local matters of paramount interest has been to some extent a source of amusement, but not so the ways that are amateurish of some of his employees. At this moment I have in mind the awful mess that his staff made of the Monterey flood story. The Examiner contained four separately headed accounts of that disaster, each of which was in the main a repetition of the others. In other words the flood was made a pretext for a deluge of words through which I waded with much labor and with expectations that were disappointed. Special correspondents and associated press correspondents told the same story, presented the same facts, the same harrowing details, and a great deal of space was wasted in presenting all the reports in full instead of extracting from each the information that was not common to all. But the space that was wasted concerns me less than the time I wasted in perusing the repetitions of Mr. Hearst's correspondents.

Our Mayor's English

Another illusion shattered, another delusion gone, another hero toppled from his throne! Heretofore our mayor has inspired us with a thrill of pride in one regard at least. Scholar and poet, he knew the English language and the uses thereof—so we fondly thought. Carping critics have found fault with the mayor's misrule of the city, with his subservience to the ruling powers

J. C. WILSON
BROKER
Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills, Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

Santa Fe
NEW TRAIN
Via the Santa Fe to Chicago via Kansas City
EAST
Leave San Francisco daily 7:15 a. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m. This is in addition to our two other trains leaving San Francisco and Oakland 8:00 and 10:00 p. m. Also New Train to Fresno. Leaving San Francisco 4:00 p. m.; Leave Oakland 4:05 p. m. This in addition to our THREE other trains leaving San Francisco daily at 7:15 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m.
For detail information phone or call on Jas. B. Duffy, 673 Market Street, San Francisco
T. Love, Market Street Ferry Depot, San Francisco
J. J. Warner, 1112 Broadway, Oakland

of our civic and political life, but we have always been able to make answer thereto, "You ought to hear him sling English." And now the terrible fact is revealed that English needs not only a sling but bandages and lotions after hizzoner has crippled it. The tragedy of revealtion occurred on the occasion of a banquet that was given one day last week to a number of visiting Congressmen. The mayor made a speech in which he uttered a remarkable sentence, of which the following is a shorthand report: "We stand here seated upon a bay whose physical proportions are greater than any like body of water." Of course the mayor spoke in metaphor. When he said "we" he meant himself and the assembled Congressmen; and as they were seated while he stood it is obvious that it was perfectly proper for him to say "While we stand here seated." "I stand here upon this beautiful bay while you are seated upon the same bay," the mayor might have said. But there would have been too much circumlocution in that. Better to speak somewhat in symbols—especially if by so doing the mayor shortened his speech. As to being "seated upon the bay," the picture of our pursy little mayor in such a position so arouses my risibilities as to benumb utterly my critical faculty. We will pass on to the next gem that the mayor launched at his terrified auditors: "It is exceedingly pleasant on this very pleasant occasion that we have the ladies here with us, without whom man never would have been and ought never to have been born." (Wait until I send for the typewriter repairer.) I will not try to defend that, as I tried, for the honor of the city, to defend the other phrase. I throw up my hands, acknowledging that it is beyond my sophistry. It speaks for itself—it shrieks aloud, in fact, and in appealing tones says, "I am not responsible—the mayor evolved me."

The Mayor Does Politics

Badinage is all right in dealing with our mayor's little flirtations with the English language; but nothing short of denunciation is due him for the latest exploit of his political genius—the removal of two city employes who had been for many years with the school department and the filling of one of the vacancies with John Foley, erstwhile bodyguard of Francis J. Heney. William Ross and C. Berry Peterson, employes of the school department, were removed by the Board of Education last week—of course with the mayor's consent or at his instigation. No reason was given but it is not far to seek when the fact is known that Foley is the benefactor. It is a plain case of practical politics. Spreckels, Phelan and Heney pull the strings and their puppet, the mayor, dances. Why Foley should be rewarded is somewhat of a puzzle. Even as a bodyguard he has never displayed efficiency. It was while Foley was on the job that Morris Haas fired a bullet into special prosecutor Heney's jaw. It will be remembered that one of the slogans of the mayor's campaign was his promise to remove nobody from office without cause—that is, unless incompetency or misconduct were shown. No charges were brought in the case of either of the two men removed. As Taylor is not running for office again it would seem that he does politics of the disreputable sort for the pure love of the game.

A Mournful Squaw

In the midst of a grove of pines on the shore of Lake Tahoe, I made the acquaintance last week of a curious specimen of womanhood, a big, fat, swart Washoe squaw, saturnine of countenance, her features immobile, but her piercing black eyes beaming with shrewdness and intelligence. I made the lady's acquaintance without the formality of an introduction. She neither repelled my advances nor gave me the slightest encouragement, but addressed the camera in my hand with a look of interrogation as if half divining the desire that lurked in my heart. Asked permission to take her picture she grunted, looked me over and informed me that her price was ten dollars. I intimated that I thought the price was exorbitant. She shrugged her shoulders in a way that indicated that what I thought was a matter of absolute indifference to her; and as I learned subsequently it was. Indeed she wished me to understand that she was offering herself at a bargain realizing that she was not so handsome as in former days. I assured her that she was extremely handsome, but she was not to be seduced by artful flattery. "No," she said, in a mournful tone, "me no handsome now; I cly all the time; I cly every night. My son, he die; his little boy he have no father. I cly for my son; so I no handsome." And she really looked as though she were in great distress. Later on I got better acquainted with this interesting squaw, and I learned that it was not her son that she mourned, but her son-in-law who was hanged in Carson a few months ago for the murder of his wife—her daughter. I also learned that the big squaw was a famous character, for she was none other than Dat-So-La-Lee, the "Queen of Indian Basket Weavers."

DAT-SO-LA-LEE, THE FAMOUS BASKET WEAVER.

The Last of Her Tribe

Experts have pronounced Dat-So-La-Lee the greatest weaver in the history of basketry. Twenty-two years

VINTINE
MADE BY BROOKS
A tonic for men and women---will cure chronic constipation
Your druggist will get it—price, $1.00

VICTOR-VICTROLA
The New $125 Kind
¶ Several weeks ago we announced the new $125 VICTOR-VICTROLA on sale. It created a furore.
¶ The VICTOR-VICTROLA has no horn and has a sounding board like a piano. The tone is remarkably sweet. The vocal reproduction is so natural that it can not be distinguished from the original. ITS VOLUME IS ITS GREATEST WONDER. It is very artistic and can be lifted about like the usual talking machine.
¶ The regular VICTOR-VICTROLA sells for $200, but the $125 style exactly resembles it. The only great difference is that it has no record cabinet below. THE WONDER VOLUME AND REMARKABLY NATURAL TONE ARE THERE.
Easy Terms if Desired
Sherman Clay & Co.
Steinway and Other Pianos Player Pianos of All Grades Victor Talking Machines
Kearny and Sutter Streets, San Francisco Fourteenth and Clay Sts., Oakland ago she was discovered by a collector of Indian baskets in Carson City by whom she had been employed to do housework. She showed him a specimen of her work and he at once realized that he had found a great artist. The man was the founder of the famous Emporium collection, recognized everywhere as the finest baskets in the world. At the time of her discovery Dat-So-La-Lee was forty-eight years of age. In twenty-two years she has made but forty-one baskets, some of which are valued at over one thousand dollars. Basket-making is slow work. The squaw gathers her own materials from roots, limbs and barks of trees after many days of tramping, searching and digging. In the springtime she trudges over the mountains to dig the roots of the bracken from the inner stock of which she makes her black thread. In the summer she gathers the bark of the redbud out of which she makes her red thread, and in the fall when all the sap has receded she gathers the long straight boughs of the willow for her white weaving threads and foundation sticks. She prepares her materials with her teeth and finger nails, and rolls each variety of strands into balls and stores them away to be cured and seasoned for next year's work. It usually takes her a whole year to weave one basket. This Indian woman now lives under the protection of the Emporium collectors by whom all her work is handled. Her baskets are remarkable not only for the skill evidenced in the weaving, but more particularly for the symbolism of the ornamentation. She is the last of the great weavers of a tribe that attained a higher perfection than any other in the art of basketry, and she knows her worth. She loves Mammon, but she has a consuming passion for gambling, and when she isn't weaving a basket she's playing for high stakes.

Wife—"A tree, you know, gets new clothes every spring—hat, parasol, everything!"

Husband—"Yes, darling, and makes them all itself."

A Notable Sonnet

"The Carmel Whirl," the little paper recently issued at Carmel-by-the-Sea under the auspices of the writers and artists who make their homes there, did literature a real service by printing a hitherto unpublished poem by Nora May French, the gifted girl who took her own life a year or more ago. She was one of the truest poets that ever sang in California. Her sensitiveness to the beauties of nature was shown in nearly everything that she wrote. The bend of the long grass in the wind, the driving of the rain, the fragrance of tree and flower, evoked from her beautiful and impassioned measures. She had a rare facility in imagery, a delicate touch in the shading of words and phrases. She left a number of unpublished poems, but none more beautiful than the sonnet printed in the Whirl—"To One A-Marrying":

"Aye, pluck the jonquil when the May's a-wing,
Or please you with a rose upon the breast,
Or find a violet chosen from the rest
To match your mood with blue caprice of Spring;
Give windy vines a tendril less to swing—
Why, what's a flower? A day's delight at best,
A perfume loved, a faded petal pressed,
A whimsey for an hour's remembering.

"But wondrous careful must he draw the rose
From jealous earth who seeks to set anew
Deep root, young leafage with a gardener's art—
To plant it queen of all his garden close,
And make his varying fancy wind and dew,
Cloud, rain and sunshine for one woman's heart."

INVITATIONS MONOGRAMS CRESTS
VISITING CARD PLATES ENGRAVED

ROBERTSON

UNION SQUARE SAN FRANCISCO

Just before she took the fatal draught Nora May French penned "Ave Atque Vale," which has been published before, but is worth reprinting many times, as a fine picture is worth renewed visits. It is as follows:

"It gathers where the moody sky is bending
It stirs the air along familiar ways—
A sigh for strange things dear forever ending,
For beauty shrinking in these alien days.

"Now nothing is the same, old visions move me.
I wander silent through the waning land,
And find, for youth and little leaves to love me,
The old, old lichen crumbling in my hand.

"What shifting films of distance fold you, blind you,
This windy eve of dreams I cannot tell:
I know they grope through some strange mists to find you,
These hands that give you Greeting and Farewell."

After the Play Censor

British playwrights and novelists are after the censor of plays with a sharp stick, a London correspondent tells me, and have brought the matter before parliament with a view to having the office of weeder-out of the drama abolished. A committee of members of both houses of parliament has been taking evidence. It consists of Lord Gorrell, the Earl of Plymouth, Lord Newton, Lord Willoughby de Broke (the name suggests an heiress-hunter), Col. Lockwood, A. E. W. Mason, the novelist, R. Harcourt, the playwright, and H. Law. Mr. Redford, the unhappy censor, was questioned at great length as to his conception of his duties, regarding which he appeared to be considerably muddled. It was shown that he had forbidden some plays and had permitted the production of others obviously more objectionable. From his answers it appeared that he had a somewhat haphazard method, the main thing being to kill off at least some of the plays submitted to him, as a demonstration that he was on the job. The censor said that scriptural plays are strictly under the ban, and when questioned as to "Everyman" said that he understood that it was not a modern play, the manuscript having been found in an old cathedral. The same applied to Shakespearean plays—in fact to any drama not written during his occupancy of the office. Just why the censor thinks that

BOOKS

At bargain prices while moving to my new store at GRANT AVENUE and SUTTER STREET

Every book marked in plain figures. Sets reduced all the way from 30 to 60 per cent of published prices. Books slightly damaged to one-fifth of regular prices. Here are a few special bargains:

Taine's English Literature
4 volumes published at $6.00. Removal price, $2.15 per set

Nelson's Encyclopedia
12 volumes, regular $48. Slightly soiled; per set $14.80.

Lincoln's Life and Works
4 volumes, regular $5.00. Removal price, per set, $2.10.

Bryce's Commonwealth
2 volumes, regular $4.00. Removal price $1.60 a set.

Dicken's, Oxford Edition
Regular price $25.00. Special 20 volumes $12.00.

All 75 cent books and many regular $1.50 novels 45 cents down to 34 cents; three for $1.00.

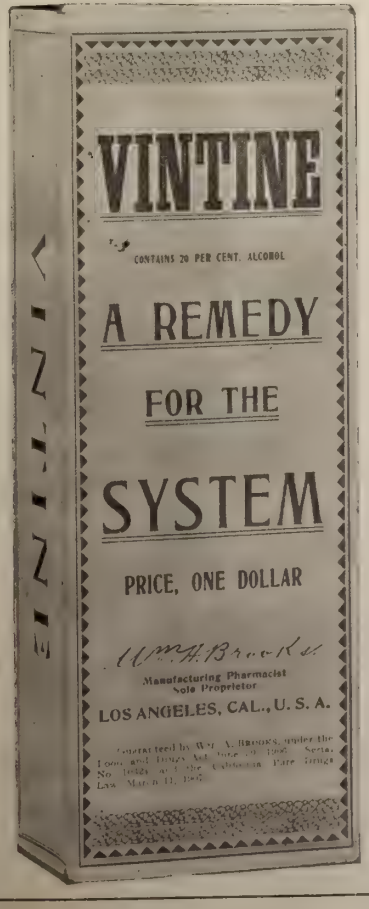
Send for free list of Specials. Watch Monday's Bulletin.

JOHN J. NEWBEGIN
240 MARKET STREET
After October at SUTTER STREET, above GRANT AVENUE

the public will be contaminated more by a new play than by an old one is not very lucidly explained; nor why he permits contamination to be spread by foreign plays, which are vouchsafed more latitude than the domestic ones—a sort of overdeveloped free trade.

Shaw as a Witness

George Bernard Shaw, attired in his famous ginger-colored suit, was a witness, and proved both entertaining and illuminative. He described himself as a professional writer of immoral plays—using the word immoral as he understood it, which, as is usual with Shaw, he failed to make intelligible. But anyway he said that the censor had no comprehension of the meaning of the word, as had been demonstrated by the suppression of his own drama, "Mrs. Warren's Profession." He told of the reception it received in New York, the news that the play had been forbidden in London creating a desire on the part of the Americans to see it. Shaw described, with great relish, how, after the performers had been arrested in New York, the judge before whom they were brought confessed the bitter disappointment that he experienced in reading the play, which wasn't half as naughty as he expected. The consensus of opinion among those who testified before the committee was that the censorship was a nuisance and a hindrance to art. Henry James wrote lengthy and involved sentences against the idea, pronouncing himself, as nearly as could be ascertained, against a censor. So did James Barrie. H. G. Wells said that it was because of the censorship that he had never turned his attention to the writing of plays. The censor left the committee room a very bewildered person, but still measurably uplifted by a sense of his own importance. He is an important person, truly—but not a useful one—and it seems likely that his occupation will soon be gone. The English play-going public seems to be revolting against the idea that the drama should be dealt out to them according to the whims and ideas of any one man.



"Do you take this woman for better or worse?"
"I do, jedge. But I hopes we kin kinder strike an average."

Veiled Peril

How easily an innocent married man may become entangled with a beautiful woman (state of blessedness, whether single or double, discreetly hidden by seen but unheard kids), was impressed upon me by a humorous incident or accident which happened the other evening on one of the United Railroad's $7000 public carriages. Returning in due season, as is my wont, to the bosom of my family; I had (just my luck!) given up my cosy corner to a man in petticoats minus their usual politeness, when in flutters unmistakable femininity fittingly attired. Her eye lights upon a married man of my, but not of her, acquaintance. Forthwith he is upon his feet, hat in hand. As she sidles past him towards the vacated seat, my lady's veil becomes unaccountably entangled with one of the many buttons of his Chesterfield. On the part of the lady at least, it is plain to be seen that rude separation is a thing not to be thought of. As pretty a bit of comedy as one could well wish to see is their mingling of fingers, faces and blushes in numberless vain attempts at disentanglement. Such sweet sorrow was their parting that it set the disgruntled car asmiling. Fortunately for the man in the case, his son—who was with him—had not yet arrived at years of discretion, but was of the loquacious age that rides unfarely. Else had I trembled for the foundations of society. As to me, being all by my lonely, 'tis earthquakey to think of the close call I'd had.

Yellow Peril

Just as innocent, but worse appearing, was the entanglement of a married woman with a Chinaman, which I once witnessed by hearsay from the lady's very own lips (in the presence of my own lady, be it understood). 'Twas in the dear old ante-fire days of dummy street-cars. A stranger to the city, the woman in the case wished to visit Chinatown; so, taking a cue from a Chinaman seated on the dummy beside her—whose uneasiness seemed to her to indicate the proximity of Dupont street—she got off at Kearny. The conductor had already given two bells when, to her consternation, she found herself entangled with that characteristic hirsute de-

"ABOUT VINTINE"

The absolutely greatest remedy for the Nervous and Muscular System extant—for men, women, or children. Made from the Original prescription as used by the late J. A. Albertson, M. D., Emeritus professor of the Hahnemann Medical College of San Francisco, one of the leading physicians on the Pacific Coast, with whom the manufacturer was associated many years.

Ventine will rapidly restore the entire system to its normal function and activity—but it must not be classed as a patent medicine—it is a legitimate medical compound prepared by licensed pharmacists and must not be compared with anything of a like nature. One bottle generally answers the purpose—but three bottles will produce more permanent results. Half sick people will appreciate its immediate effects by giving them new tone and courage. Ventine can be classed as a great national want, owing to the strenuous life the modern life entails.

Price One Dollar.

Manufactured and Guaranteed by

WM. A. BROOKS

Sole Manufacturer and Proprietor

LOS ANGELES, CAL., U. S. A.

LANGLEY & MICHAELS CO., Sole Agents 50-60 First St., San Francisco

pendency which your true son of China will lose only with his head. As it befell, her Chinaman did indeed lose his head, sticking bodily to the dummy with a courage worthy of a better cause, and, for his pains, came as near being Americanized as possible. The dummy laughed aloud and the car was already under way when the stringer with true feminine tact extricated herself from her scandalous position and averted an imminent tragedy.

Military Peril

But the most inexplicably inextricable entanglement it has ever been my good fortune to behold was that of a beauteous young misanthrope with an Apollo-like lieutenant of her late majesty's Life-Guards. The lovely woman in this case had an incredible aversion to men. Protesting a trifle too much, she would reiterate that men were "dweadful cweatuwes cweated God only knew why." Nathless, she must needs attend a fancy dress ball at Portsmouth, as "a young lady of Verona," that is to say, a thinly disguised Juliet; the reason of her choice of character being that her loosed hair would sweep the parquet floor as she waltzed. Such was her hair that, but for the sequel, she might safely have gone as the Countess Godiva afoot. Dancing she adored, its only drawback being that it denied her the pleasure of keeping man at arm's length. So lightly did she dance, however, so fairylike a creature was she, that she impressed upon her partner the fancy that he was in fact dancing with his arm full, not of girl, but of nothingness, of palpitating impalpability. Hating men as she did, or said, she ever made a point of choosing for her partner sexless old age, so-called second childhood. How then came it about that in the dizzy mazes of the valse the catch of the evening, beautiful as Absalom's self, was caught by the hair, and that hair not his but hers—"wound, wound and wound the dweadful cweatuwe's bwass buttons!" Cupid only knows. Not by one golden strand only was she bound to him, but by strands so innumerable that God alone could count them. It was the most hopeless entanglement that I have ever seen or ever hope to see. The "young lady of Verona" wept disconsolate, and tore her own hair out by the roots—all in vain—the while the "dweadful cweatuwe" in full regimentals bore the ordeal like an officer and gentleman. The band was heard to cease; the ballroom stood agape. Looking on, a poetical youth, I was reminded of these words of warning:

> Of all the subtle snares
> That take men unawares,
> The worst are woman's hairs.

Since then more than once has the writer been caught with a single hair on his coat. The saddest part of the whole story is that, after all, that rare pale misanthropic Margaret died unmarried, died in her sin of omission, nor ever made one single man unhappy.

Knicker—"Johnny does just what he is told."
Bocker—"He will grow up to be a Congressman."

Marble Hall Dreams

Suffragettically speaking, it seems to the casual spectator of the moving picture that women who would pay two and a half a foot for standing room only to hear Annie Shaw spellbind them in the marble halls of Mrs. Belmont would be somewhat out of place in the more republican halls of legislation, whereinto entree is free as salvation, without money and without price, for all men save the spellbinder. That master of satire, Ambrose Bierce, was once moved to thank whatever gods there be for sparing him the spectacle of the yawping pack of free and equal born Americans that awhile back "dogged the heels of a disreputable little Frenchman who is a count by courtesy only and those of an English duke who was quietly attending to his business of making a living by being a married man." The sight of so many equal women parting with their man-earned five dollars to see themselves hearing Dr. Shaw in Mrs. Belmont's

BROMO-SELTZER

CURES

HEADACHES

10¢, 25¢, 50¢, & $1.00 Bottles.

Co-Operation

We think we are justified in asking the co-operation of the public to the extent of holding toward us a friendly spirit in considering our problems and dealing with personal and municipal questions which affect us.

The co-operation we desire is not the kind that would perform our work for us or lift our responsibilities from our shoulders. Rather it is the same appreciation and encouragement which is accorded any worthy commercial enterprise whose labor and ambitions help to make the city great.

A city cannot get along without utilities, nor can the utilities exist without the city. They are mutually dependent. A gas company that does not do its utmost towards developing its city is working against its own best interests; likewise, a community which fails to co-operate with an EFFICIENT public service company sacrifices its own welfare.

On this point the Railroad Commission of Wisconsin, an absolutely disinterested body, has said: "The relations between the cities and the utilities operating therein should be harmonious. There must be co-operation rather than agitation. . . . . No one, it would seem, has anything to gain by the financial failure of public service corporations which are conducted and operated under ordinary or normal conditions.

"Losses to such plants are, in the end, likely to result in both public and private injuries. It usually means poorer or depreciated service, which of itself is a very important item. Even if it should enable cities to acquire title to their utility plants at comparatively low cost, such acquisition is not likely to prove a popular one in the long run."

San Francisco Gas and Electric Company

Copyright, 1909

California Conservatory of Music

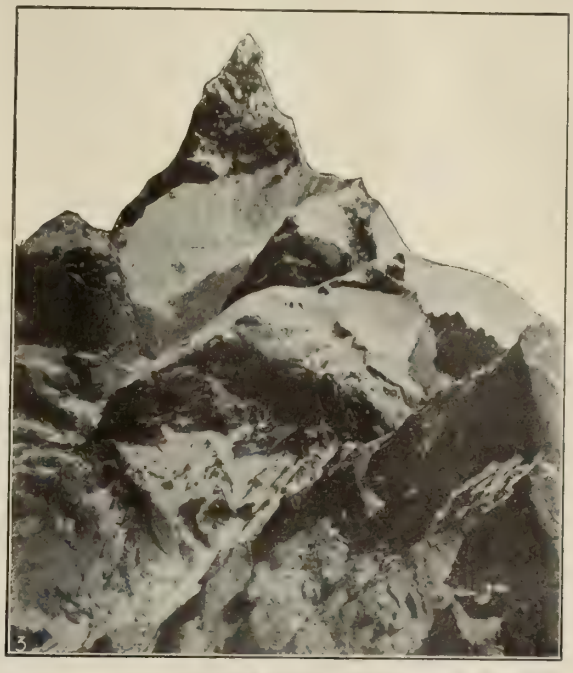
Is now located in its new magnificent building

147 PRESIDIO AVENUE

Between Jackson and Washington Streets

marble halls is enough to make the bitterest enemies of sexless, senseless, and colorless suffrage weep tears of joy, and its best friends laugh with the wrong side of their mouths. The typical suffragette being a misfit man, woman suffrage looks to be a psychological, if not physical, impossibility—albeit gynecocracy, gynocracy, and gynarchy—all three—man in private is born to suffer as the sparks fly sideways.

"I would like to help you, my poor man, but I haven't much work to give you."



"That'll suit me down to the ground, ma'am, I don't want much."

Perilous Mountain Climbing

To people who like mountain climbing, the pictures here presented showing some hitherto unclimbed peaks in the Himalayas will prove of especial interest. In that vast accumulation of mountain ranges, the highest in the world, there are many unexplored peaks that tower into the upper distance as did those wonderful heights which Kim and the old priest climbed. Covered with perpetual snow, accessible only after perilous and ardous journeys, they invite the attacks of explorers who delight in conquering such obstacles. One of the most memorable of expeditions into the Himalayas has recently been made by Dr. Hunter Workman and his wife, Mrs. Bullock Workman, who in the past eleven years have taken five journeys into that forbidding country. They were not out for records in the way of conquering great heights, but to explore the great glaciers of Hispar and Biafo, situated in the Karakoram range and across the Indus in the North of Kashmir, near the frontier of Tibet. To reach this country, which is almost a virgin field for the traveler, an arduous journey of six weeks is necessary. Starting from the coast one must cross extremely hot valleys, and mountains as high as Mt. Blanc. Some of the rivers, which are fearful torrents flowing through deep chasms, are to be crossed only on frail rope bridges which sway and swing threateningly in the wind, and where a single misstep means certain death. Then great glaciers must be traversed before the real mountain climbing can begin. All provisions and necessaries have to be carried, about 200 coolies being employed at this task. Mrs. Workman climbed one peak which rose to a height of 21,350 feet. She christened it Watershed Peak. She and her husband and the caravan of coolies were on the ice 56 days without once stepping on earth.

The Governor's Hobby

Governor Gillett's enthusiasm for good roads is rapidly spreading over the State. From the day that he was inducted into office Governor Gillett has been voicing the sentiment at every opportunity that nothing could be more conducive to the development of this State than good roads. He made this sentiment the keynote of his inaugural address, and by perseverance in his pet propaganda he has succeeded in concentrating public attention on the importance of increasing the facilities for rendering the centres of commerce accessible to the producers of the wealth of the State. The Governor has called attention to the fact that it is entirely owing to the lack of these facilities that comparatively little has been done toward the development of some sections of the State, and incidentally he has succeeded in persuading the officials of some of the interior counties that it is

IN THE HIMALAYAS

Telephotograph of a 21,000 rock peak rising high above the Lak branch of the Hispar Glacier.

ON A ROPE BRIDGE

In the Himalayas some of the bridges to be crossed are of the flimsiest description. Made of rope they hang high over swift torrents, swaying in the lightest breath of wind. In the above picture is shown a porter who has lost his nerve while carrying a traveler who did not dare to be taken across unless blindfolded.

greatly to their interest to build good roads, not only because of the benefits that will immediately accrue to the residents of those counties but because population increases in proportion to the inducements that are offered. The effect of the gubernatorial propaganda has been felt in Shasta County, which is one of the richest counties in the State. In this county there are several toll roads. Now Governor Gillett is in favor of turning all toll roads into public highways. He thinks it a shame that in this State, in this year of our Lord, a citizen should have to pay for the privilege of hauling the products of his farm to market. I hear that the officials of Shasta County have come to the same opinion. The chairman of the Board of Supervisors of Shasta County is Colonel Fred Hurst of the Governor's staff, one of the most enterprising and popular citizens of the northern section of the State. In Shasta County the judgment of Colonel Hurst and his colleagues on the Board in matters of public policy is final. The people have absolute confidence in their business ability as well as in their integrity. Considering the relations between the Governor and the Colonel I am of the opinion that Shasta County will soon set an example for the rest of the State and that toll roads will be a thing of the past.

Edward's Magic Presence

Carlsbad has lost prestige among the fashionable herd. For the toning up of the aristocratic kidney or the plutocratic liver there are no waters quite so efficacious as those of Marienbad. Into the waters of that spa has been infused the magic of royalty, and the hotels at Carlsbad are almost empty. Yet Marienbad is not of recent discovery. It was there that Goethe sojourned when he wrote "The Wanderer's Night Song"; Richard Wagner sojourned there long before he succeeded in revolutionizing music; Chopin played and fell in love with a Polish girl there early in the last century, and many Kings and Queens dipped in the mud baths there long before Rex Edward ascended England's throne. But to Edward the doctors of Marienbad, who have grown prosperous of late, are indebted for the copious flow of golden ducats to their capacious coffers. These doctors, a correspondent informs me, were languishing for lack of patients when King Edward resolved upon giving Carlsbad and Homburg the cold shoulder, and since then on the heels of royalty have thronged ladies and gentlemen with money to burn from all parts of the world. This year the King is having a high old time at Marienbad, drinking the waters and basking in the splendor of Maxine Elliott's radiant smiles. With the beautiful Maxine at Marienbad is Mrs. Graham of Santa Barbara, who will return home loaded with the prodigious distinction of having played golf with England's fat and festive ruler.

To Attend Mining Congress

Linking more Strongly together the bonds that unite California and Nevada, the commercial bodies of the city are again evincing the potency of the get-together spirit in working up interest in this State in the approaching sessions of the American Mining Congress which are to be held at Goldfield commencing September 27. The California Promotion Committee started the ball rolling at the recent meeting of its Reception Committee at luncheon. J. F. Callbreath Jr., executive secretary of the American Mining Congress, was a special guest at the meeting. Some of the big problems in connection with the mining industry were touched upon, for instance the need for a Federal department of mining. The interest California has in the coming Congress and the desire of the State to help Nevada make it a most successful one were touched upon, and the California Miners' Association, through President W. C. Ralston, came to the fore to lend its co-operation.

MOVES DOWN TOWN

S. Kramer, the well known ladies tailor, before the fire at 218 Powell street and since at 1398 Post street, has again moved down town, and is now located at 101 Geary street. Mr. Kramer, who has been in the ladies tailoring business for many years, and has established an enviable reputation, will be glad to welcome new and old patrons at his present location.

SUNBURN

with its unpleasant and painful effects is quickly relieved by Pond's Extract—the cooling, healing and refreshing antiseptic.

A toilet necessity during warm weather.

The Standard for 60 Years

Sold only in bottles—never in bulk
Substitutes are always disappointing

Lamont, Corliss & Co., Sole Agents, New York

LOW RATES
TO
ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION
FOR ROUND TRIP TICKETS
FROM

San Francisco	$32.50
Sacramento	32.50
Lathrop	32.50
Stockton	32.50
Tracy	32.50
Suisun	32.50
Davis	32.50
Napa	32.75
Santa Rosa	33.60
Calistoga	33.95

Greatly reduced rates from other points in California. Tickets sold daily May 25 to September 30, and cover two months' trip going and coming via the famous

SHASTA ROUTE
OF THE
SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Stopovers going and coming. Many other routes at slightly higher rates for you to select from.

Write or call on our nearest agent for full details of service, etc., or address

FLOOD BUILDING FOR INFORMATION

A Particular Store for Particular People

TRADE MARK — Quality — McLean's — Service — 1158-1168 SUTTER ST. SAN FRANCISCO

PHONE FRANKLIN 2810

"OLIVE BRAND"

The perfection of Olive Oil—no rank smell or taste so frequent in some other brands. The highest quality of Olive Oil has also the most delicate flavor

Small	bottle	$ .25	$2.75 dozen.
Medium	"	.50	5.50 dozen.
½-Gal.	Can	1.75
1-Gal.	Can	3.25

L. D. McLEAN CO.
IMPORTERS AND GROCERS
1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy.

Wheat: All grains have shown considerable hardness the past week. With speculators following cash houses wheat had been sold to a stand-still. The rally Saturday was imminent, and largely the result of short covering. The lift in September followed an advance of a cent in the cash market. With August drawing to a close, and cash wheat 101 at Chicago, the leading shorts followed the bidding. December followed in sympathy. As usual with a change in prices the gossipers exploited features that they have been ignoring and gave a bullish tinge to the outlook. The large winter wheat movement has not increased supplies and in some sections there is a hoarding of red winter wheat of contract grade. Southern mills are entering the market as expected. Nebraska winter wheat has been running to Minneapolis to supply exhausted stocks of spring wheat. The latter is only temporary and will cease in the next ten days when the spring wheat comes in volume. There is no general rush of millers in the winter region. In the spring section some competition for the new wheat will develop, but will be of short duration. The crop indications are for 40,000,000 in excess of last year. Canada will have at least 20,000,000 more, allowing for smaller carry-over; there are 40,000,000 bushels more in the surplus than last year, with Europe making no effort to secure any. In the two months of the new crop year, Europe has taken 18,000,000 mostly in flour against 28,000,000 in the same period last year. Russia is still a heavy shipper. On any view, the outlook is not yet favorable to an upward swing, and wheat is a sale on all advances. Damage to corn has continued. The Texas crop is made with 40 per cent of exception, Oklahoma is made with half a yield. Early corn in Kansas, lower Missouri is made at a loss of 15 per cent. Late corn in these States and in Nebraska, Iowa, is badly hit. Heavy rains may restore some of the loss, but short crops in these States are evident. We will not have much more corn than last year. The Southwest will not be an early shipper as in other years, and it looks prudent to buy corn on all weakness. The oats crop is good in quantity and quality, the prices far below a parity with corn, and it will rise with corn.

Cotton: It is argued that spinners are always in the market for contracts below 12½ cents and that no material decline below 12 cents need be feared as long as a respectable proportion of the consuming trade remains in its present attitude of friendliness to the prevailing price level. This theory received corroboration by sales of 26,000 bales in Liverpool in two days, and one of them a half holiday. A batch of cables from the English market reported better business in Manchester; with accumulation of manufactured stocks steadily being absorbed by the trade and a shortage of raw material in spinners' hands becoming pronounced. The American markets quickly responded to these stimulating influences and were strong at the week-end closing at the top. Reports that offers of New Orleans exporters to buy cotton in Texas brought out quotations but no cotton, helped to stiffen the bullish backbone. In other respects the situation remains unchanged. The farmers' attitude is still the unknown quantity to be reckoned with, and the successful cotton spinner will be the man who includes mind reading among his other accomplishments, but the impression is growing that the producer will prove a reluctant seller under twelve cents. If this be confirmed, the upward trend of prices will receive further impetus. It is true that before long the movement will assume larger proportions, but it will likely be well into September before sufficient quantities of new cotton will arrive to have any effect, but we are much inclined to the opinion that the prevailing expectation of an important decline may not materialize on schedule time to please the bears. Business conditions throughout the world are such that spinners cannot long remain out of the market, and in all likelihood they will become free and eager buyers as soon as cotton arrives in sufficient quantities to supply their needs.

Stocks: Wall Street has had the name of Harriman on every door since he sailed from Cherborg. His arrival in New York and his arrival at Arden was double leaded in the papers; all kinds of conjectures were in the air. Upon his arrival at Arden, holders of Harriman's securities became panic stricken throwing overboard their securities regardless of price. The bears joined in the downward march resulting in creating a very large short-interest in the market. When the shorts started to cover their commitments they found the market with small offerings resulting in a rally of eight dollars per share in Union Pacific and three to four dollars advance in the rest of the list. Many are of the opinion that bankers joined together to support the market through the Harriman crisis putting the market in control of a prominent operator who handled it with great generalship. As soon as the stocks bought at the decline last week are sold out no doubt another will be seen. Investors will hardly consider Union Pacific upon a 4¾ per cent basis as being attractive. The whole market would be more healthy should values get a fair set-back. The crop movement period is at hand and will test the supply and demand for funds shortly. It is a time when caution must be exercised in taking on new commitments. Buying on good declines will be the safest.

The Anglo & London Paris National Bank

Of San Francisco

Successor of The London Paris National Bank of San Francisco, The Anglo-California Bank, Limited.

Northeast Cor. Pine and Sansome Sts., San Francisco

Sig. Greenebaum, Pres.; I. Steinhart, Chairman of Finance Committee; H. Fleishhacker, V.-Pres. and Man.; Jos. Friedlander, V.-Pres.; C. F. Hunt, V.-Pres.; R. Altschul, Cashier; A. Hochstein, Asst. Cashier; F. E. Beck, Asst. Cashier.

Capital $4,000,000.00

Surplus and Undivided Profits..... 1,500,000.00

We offer our customers every facility consistent with good banking and invite new accounts.

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487 R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.

THE PIONEER HOUSE

BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and New York

Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

SEPTEMBER

AT

LAKE TAHOE

One of the most delightful months in the year --- Excellent trout fishing

Annual meeting of California Game and Fish Protective Association at

TAHOE TAVERN

Commencing Monday, September 13th. Low round trip rates from all points.

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

Golf at Del Monte

As proof par excellence of the prosperity that is rampant on this rim of the continent—and this notwithstanding all that the chronic grouches aver—nothing could be more absolutely convincing than the Del Monte tournament of athletics, now in progress. The big hotel is filled beyond its capacity, the doublings-up reminding one of a national political convention. And the smaller hotels at Pacific Grove tell the same story. Unless reservations are made away ahead, one can't get into the fashionable caravansary with a gimlet. And talk about your style and fashion. Why there's nothing to compare with Del Monte this week on this side of Newport. In fact, one of the army women who is a guest here, and who has been all over the world many times, tells me that she's never seen the match of Del Monte anywhere. Naturally, golf predominates. Only a few of the real leaders in society were actual participants, anything so strenuous as a championship contest creating too much of a ruffling-up of the blase calm which is the fashionable pose. But they were all there, immaculate and irreproachable in gowns that would have delighted "Butterfly" Harrison Fisher and the other delineators of the fashionables of today. Most of the girls and young matrons wear short skirted linen gowns on the links, with white pumps and silken hosiery of some pretty tint. The gowns look simple enough, with their heavy hand-embroidery, but the price is nothing simple, for most of those togs are convent-made, and cost like fun. Mrs. Martin Chase, a chic little woman from Los Angeles, has been dubbed "Madame Rainbow" by her friends among the experts, for every time she appears on the links it is with a different band of silk about her sailor, with silken hosiery of an exact tint to match. She was one of the best players among the women. In fact, all of the Los Angeles women played in fine form. The two Havermeyer girls, Miss Ethel and Miss Vera, who are at Del Monte as the guests of the E. B. Stones from the other side of the bay, seemed immensely popular, not only among those in the tournament but at the dances and other affairs that are crowded in between times. Both play a good game. Mr. and Mrs. James L. Flood have the next largest suite to the Crockers, they having eleven rooms for the accommodation of their household and their friends. The Floods gave themselves up to the out-door sports, seeming to enjoy themselves in a blithe, wholesome way, quite indifferent to the continuous fashion show which kept some of the women busy all day, robing and unrobing for the different hours. Mrs. Flood always dresses very simply for the street and other public occasions, but she makes up for it at balls. She is said to be the only woman in San Francisco society who wears her diamonds with care-free indifference, as if they were paste—and by the way, she is also one of the very

Photo, Genthe MISS SUZANNE KIRKPATRICK

Whose engagement to Allan Macdonald was recently announced.

Photo, Maurer MRS. HAROLD HAVENS

One of the leaders of social life in Oakland.

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

COOK'S TOURS
Are the Best for Independent or Escorted Travel
AROUND THE WORLD
Parties leave Westward September 15, October 5 and 19th; Eastward November 6, December 9 and June 8. Highest class, various routes, best of everything. Seventy Tours to Europe. Tickets everywhere, Traveler's checks, hotel coupons, information. Let us make reservations now for your fall tour. No charge for service.
THOS. COOK & SON
32 POWELL STREET SAN FRANCISCO
Offices at Yokohama, Hongkong, Colombo, Calcutta, Bombay, etc.

few who never wear imitations of any sort. Neither does she have a raft of detectives dogging her steps to protect her from real or imaginary thieves. The only conspicuous or costly thing that Mrs. Flood wore with the simple linen shirt-waist suits that she donned during the Del Monte gaieties, was a beautiful filigree gold belt of some queer foreign make.

Pebble Beach Lodge Opened

The informal opening of Pebble Beach Lodge, near Del Monte, which took place last Saturday, was an occasion of unusual gaiety. The Lodge is a unique building, situated at Pebble Beach on the Seventeen Mile Drive, and erected by the owners of Del Monte. The opening was celebrated by an elaborate dinner given by E. M. Greenway to San Francisco society people who are attending the golf tournament, and by a breakfast given by Mrs. W. H. Crocker. Mrs. Crocker took her guests by automobile to Pebble Beach early in the morning. Among those who attended the breakfast were Mr. and Mrs. Truxton Beale, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Pope, Mr. and Mrs. James A. Folger, Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Baker, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Lilley, Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Eyre, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Eyre, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Tubbs, Edward M. Greenway, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Eastland, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Grant, Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Hopkins, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Donahue, Mr. and Mrs. Mountford Wilson, Miss Ethel Crocker and a number of her friends. The Lodge is built of great pine logs taken from the neighboring forest. Its assembly hall is thirty by seventy-five feet in size, besides which there are dining and grill rooms, reception and dressing rooms. More than 160 tons of granite was used in the two immense fireplaces, one of which is at either end of the great assembly room. The Lodge is on a knoll facing Pebble Beach, and from its veranda a view of Pt. Lobos, and Carmel and Pescadero bays may be obtained. It is intended as a general assemblage and resting place not only for the guests at Del Monte but for the people of Pebble Beach. The picture shown on the opposite page is the first of the Lodge that has been published.

Photo, Genthe

MRS. ELEANOR CREASON

Who is to marry Dr. William A. Duncan, U. S. A.

STOP GRAY HAIR

With Mrs. NETTIE HARRISON'S 4-DAY HAIR COLOR. It is the only entirely successful and satisfactory preparation for the purpose. Simple—Harmless—Certain. Sold for 20 years, recommended and used with satisfaction by thousands. Contains no lead, sulphur or other harmful ingredient. It never fails. $1.00. At druggists, or direct, charges paid. Mrs. NETTIE HARRISON CO., SAN FRANCISCO.

Mrs. Carolan's Gown

For stunning sartorial consummate and concentrate style there was no one quite in it at Pebble Beach with Mrs. Francis Carolan who has grown or rather shrunken into positively sylph-like proportions until you'd think her clothes grew on her, like the wrappings of leaves to the saplings. And no one was more aware of all this than Harriet Pullman Carolan herself, for her posings Sunday afternoon on the veranda added very muchly to the minor gayety of the Sabbath. Frankie was there too, bowing now to the right and then to the left but not creating any great disturbance in the atmosphere, for when the missus is about, it is really all the excitement the family can stand. But speaking of Mrs. Carolan's gown: like Mirza Ali Kuli Khan, it is also of the Oriental variety. To be exact, it is a speckled cream foulard with dots all over it like a guinea feather, with a two-foot band of Persian printed silk forming a tunic and extending in broad band down the middle of the back and away into the long train. Stunning, very much, and afforded a good sight for the natives. But 'twas the hat that took the honors. Sounds simple enough, being nothing but an enormous leghorn, cocked up on one side, with a swirl of ostrich feathers shading from black to coffee color. Under it Mrs. Carolan perambulated and refreshed the eye o' man—and woman.

MISS DOROTHY DRAPER

Regarding whose engagement conflicting rumors are afloat.

Ethel Crocker Popular

Naturally, everyone was buzzing about Ethel Crocker, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Crocker. What a gay winter it will be when she makes her debut. She is a pretty, olive-tinted girl—a real beauty. She resembles her mother very much. When Mrs. Crocker, who was one of the Sperrys, went to school at Mills College, they used to say she was like a bit of Bizet music made flesh. One of her dinner gowns is a cream satin crepe, made with a tunic, fringed heavily, that suggests a Parisian Carmen. Mrs. Crocker makes a fad of hats, and there wasn't a time that she appeared in the rotunda or veranda of the hotel, at the beach or in the dining room, that she wore the same hat. And the odd thing is that none of them are particularly stunning or individual, although all are of modest, quiet elegance. Mrs. Crocker, Mrs. George Pope and Mrs. Joe Grant were much together—in fact, they seemed to lead the gayety at Del Monte. Clever trio they are, too, always doing the right thing at the right time, and none of them belongs to that type of spectacular-gowned women who make copy for the Sunday supplement.

Sidney Ashe Married

I hear from a New York correspondent that Algernon Sidney Ashe, brother of Porter and Gaston Ashe of this city, was married at Salisbury, Connecticut, last Sunday to Miss Katherine S. Johnson, daughter of the late Rev. Dr. William Allen Johnson. Miss Johnson belongs to a family of which was born the first white child in the State of New York. Sidney Ashe is well known here, but has been absent for a number of years. I well remember when Sidney saved for the Ashe family the mare Geraldine, one of the most famous horses of the day. Porter Ashe and Tom Williams, the racing man, who had been very intimate friends, had a falling out. Ashe was in Williams' debt, and the latter had an attachment issued for Geraldine. Before the sheriff could seize her, Sidney Ashe, then a lad, got wind of what was going on. Saddling and mounting Geraldine, he rode her away, hotly pursued on horseback by some of Williams' men. But Geraldine kept up her reputation for speed, and outdistancing the others got beyond the county boundary and out of the reach of the sheriff. Williams never got her. Sidney Ashe was in a cavalry company during the Spanish war, then dropped from sight. The last I had heard of him previous to his marriage was when he took charge of the Iggorote camp at Coney Island. He gained a lot of fame by making our little brown brethren celebrate July the fourth in the most patriotic manner.

Tallants Going East

Mrs. John D. Tallant and her son, Jack, who have been visiting relatives in this city, will leave for New York on September 8. Jack Tallant will resume his studies at Columbia College. Miss Elsie Tallant, who has been visiting friends at Atlantic City during her mother's absence in California, will join her mother upon the latter's arrival in New York and they will visit various watering places during the summer. Mrs. George H. Hellmann will accompany her sister, Mrs. Tallant, to New York. She goes to visit her little daughter, Katherine, who has been passing the last year with Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hellmann in the East. Frederick Hellmann is the well known mining man now located in New York City. Formerly he was manager of the celebrated Rand mines of South Africa, being associated with John Hayes Hammond. Mrs. George Hellmann will visit relatives in Washington and Boston before she returns to California about November 1.

A Gay Skipper

Gray Skipwith, who does not disdain the distinction of being the Apollo Belvedere of the navy, has returned after an absence of a couple of years, and all the girls are wild with delight. Although Gray bears the title of lieutenant-commander, he is a person of such pulchritude that he is quite sufficient unto himself, without the title. Skipwith was commander of the Albatross, the celebrated boat that makes unique voyages to out-of-the-way places, cruising in the interest of the scientists connected with the Smithsonian Institute and also the local universities and the Academy of Sciences. Skipwith is a scientist also—a social scientist, specializing on femmes jeunes. During Commander Skipwith's former sojourn opposite Sausalito, the belles in the summer colony had a merry time of it, for no one was more liberal with automobiles and launches than the debonair Gray. And somehow, when the girls went paddling in those placid waters, their boats had a most ungovernable trick of circumnavigating about the Albatross in many a narrowing detour until finally they would come alongside the Albatross, drawn by irresistible force, willy nilly.

PEBBLE BEACH LODGE

The picturesque building put up on the Seventeen Mile Drive by the owners of Del Monte.

Lieutenant Skipwith is a Southerner in looks, speech and action, a professional beau, for there are always at least a half dozen girls wild about him; but true to his name, he skips about jauntily, apparently heart-whole and fancy free. Not a man in the navy has been reputed to be engaged to more girls than the gay Gray, and when he left these parts two years ago, no one dreamed that he would return here a bachelor. His commission has been extended four years, so he will in all probability be included in the coming winter's gaieties precisely where he left off two years ago.

A Disputed Denial

Now that Miss Elsa Draper and her father, Colonel T. Waln-Morgan Draper, are en route from Paris with Miss Elsa's wedding finery, Miss Dorothy Draper's friends are wondering if she will acknowledge to them her engagement to "Patsy" Donovan, the handsome ensign and one of the best catches in the navy set. Miss Dorothy confided the secret of her engagement to friends in New York, but they thought it too good to keep, so the news was sent back here to relatives of the New Yorkers. Just why Miss Dorothy should treat California friends with such niggardliness, withholding from them the happiness of sending their congratulations, no one knows, unless it is that she prefers to defer the announcement until after the arrival home of her sister and father. She has been persistently denying the rumors of the engagement, but since her Long Island confidante took several Californiennes into the secret, the match is generally credited. Moreover, "Patsy" Donovan is Miss Dorothy's shadow, being most devoted to her. The Drapers have always been proud of the distinction conferred on the paternal name by the military title. Draper pere went to the Philippines from Denver, Colorado, as captain of a company of engineers, but when the men arrived on the islands, peace had been declared, thus robbing the men of all opportunity to prove their gallantry. However, Draper was not to be thus cheated by fate, and on his return to Denver he took the title of Colonel as compensation for his disappointment at not seeing actual service, an ambition inspired by his connection with the militia in several States.

Army Favorite Betrothed

An engagement which has caused a great flutter in army circles is that of Miss Belle Clements to Jefferson Lamar McGehee. The wedding will take place in Alabama on September 8. Miss Clements is the beautiful sister of Mrs. Sterling Price Adams, wife of Captain Adams of the 14th Cavalry. Captain and Mrs. Adams are at the Presidio, where Miss Clements was their guest last year. Parenthetically, it is to be regretted that Captain and Mrs. Adams leave with the 14th Cavalry for Manila early in November. Miss Clements was the belle of the army post and general regret was expressed when she left for her home in the South a few months ago. Even her most intimate friends did not then know of an existing or prospective engagement. After the wedding the young couple will make their home in the South.

Unexpected Engagement

An engagement, the news of which will come as a surprise, is that of Mrs. Eleanor Creason and Dr. William A. Duncan of the Medical Corps, U. S. A. Mrs. Creason is well known in the army set. She spent a greater portion of last winter with Mrs. Paul Beck, wife of Captain Beck, U. S. A., who was stationed at the Presidio, attending all the Presidio hops and making herself a general favorite in army circles. Mrs. Creason was formerly Miss O'Harnet. She is a decided brunette exceedingly

VOGEL—THE LADIES TAILOR

Takes pleasure in announcing the opening of his downtown establishment at 418 Sutter street where one will find the newest materials of imported and domestic patterns of high quality, and the latest approved styles from the leading fashion centers of the world. A cordial invitation is extended by Mr. Vogel to call and inspect his new place and goods.

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
UNION SQUARE

An institution which seeks to add its share to the sum of new ideas that are continually improving hotel service.

Under the management of JAMES WOODS

FAIRMONT HOTEL

Applications for permanent apartments for the coming season should be made with the manager at once.

Under management of the PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

TECHAU TAVERN
Cor. Eddy and Powell Sts.
CAFE AND LADIES' GRILL
Rigo and his Gypsy Orchestra
Concerts Daily during Shopping Hours
From 3:30 to 5:00 p. m. and from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m., 10:30 to 1:00 a. m.
Private Dining Booths and Banquet Rooms on Mezzanine Floor. Entrance—No. 4 Eddy Street
Under the management of A. C. MORRISSON

TAIT-ZINKAND CAFE
168-178 O'FARRELL STREET
(Opposite the Orpheum)
OPEN FOR BUSINESS
We are prepared to cater for outside Parties, Weddings, Breakfasts, Balls, Luncheons, etc., in the city and bay counties. Menus and prices submitted on request.
TEL. DOUGLAS 560 JOHN TAIT, Manager

HOTEL NORMANDIE
SUTTER AND GOUGH STREETS
A comfortable, high order, uptown hotel, now under the management of THOS. H. SHEDDEN, Formerly Manager of St. Dunstan's.

TOWNSEND'S
CALIFORNIA GLACÈ FRUITS AND CANDIES
27 Years in Palace Hotel Building
All Orders Given Prompt Attention at
46 MARKET STREET
Phone Douglas 4814
Factory, 117 SAN JOSE AVE. Phone Mission 378
On Sept. 15th we open a new store at 755 Market St.
Also at News Stands of the Fairmont and St. Francis Hotels bright and vivacious. She has made her home for some time with her sister, Mrs. Biglow, wife of Dr. C. Biglow of Berkeley. The wedding will take place about September 15. The exact date is not known as Dr. Duncan is awaiting orders for transfer to his new station. However, all is in readiness for the ceremony. The wedding will take place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. W. Hoff Cook on Commonwealth avenue. It will be a pink wedding. As Captain Duncan comes from a prominent family of Virginia the honeymoon will be spent in the Old South with his relatives.

Well Known Woman Dies

Mrs. Lawson Adams Sr. passed away at the Merrit Hospital in Oakland last week. The Adams home was on Bush street in this city. The family belonged to the old Bush street set which included such well known people as General and Mrs. Charles G. Hooker, both now passed away; also Mrs. William Norris and her daughter, Mrs. Horace Davis. Mrs. Adams left three sons. One, Larry Adams Jr. married one of the pretty Curtis girls of Oakland. Miss Ella Adams died several years ago. Mrs. Knowles of Massachusetts is also a daughter. Since the fire Mrs. Adams had made her home at the Berkeley Inn. She greatly missed her old circle of friends most of whom had passed away. Mr. Adams died about six years ago. Mrs. Adams was a beautiful, witty and interesting woman.

Stork Visits Gibsons

Letters from New York to friends here during the week announced the birth of a daughter to Mr. and Mrs. Gibson, formerly Grace Llewellyn Jones of this city. The wedding of Miss Jones and the New York lawyer in this city last winter was one of the most brilliant events of the season. Mrs. Gibson, when Miss Grace Llewellyn Jones, distinguished herself by her magnificent performance of "Phedre" in French at the Greek Theatre and also in the title role of a German play. The little daughter has been christened Charlotte, after Mrs. Gibson's mother. Among Californians at the christening were Mrs. Jones and Jere Burk, mother and uncle of Mrs. Gibson, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Norris and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Norris, formerly Kathleen Thompson.

To Wed in Manila

Miss Catherine Searle, the pretty fiancee of Ensign George Laird of the U. S. S. Cleveland, will leave on September 3 for Manila, where her wedding will take place on October 7. Miss Louise Hardiman, who sailed a few months ago for the Orient, will be the bride's maid while a brother officer of Ensign Laird will serve as best man. After the wedding the couple will go to Hongkong on a visit to relatives of the bride. It is a matter of regret to the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Searle that the wedding of their daughter will take place so far from home but owing to navy orders it is impossible for the groom to come to California. Miss Searle, I am told, will sail with many valuable tokens from her numerous friends here who have generously remembered her. She will reside in Manila for some time.

Brilliant Dance

Another brilliant dance of the summer season will be that of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Crocker for their daughter, Miss Ethel. Invitations have recently been issued. The affair takes place on Friday evening, September 10, at the beautiful home of the Crockers in Burlingame.

Would Wed Our Queen

The latest aspirant for the hand of "Queen" Virgilia Bogue, I'm told, is Carlo Barron, the young artist and portrait painter who decorated the interior of the City of Paris. As sometimes happens with young artists his work is not especially lucrative and at present he is inspector for the telephone company. There are those who affirm that Carlo Barron is of royal birth and that he is here "incog." However, he is sincere in his admiration of Miss Virgilia Bogue and makes no attempt to conceal his feelings.

The Youngs Coming

It will be pleasant news to their many friends to hear that Captain Haldimand P. Young, U. S. A., and his wife, formerly Miss Marie Voorhies, will arrive in the city about November 1. Captain Young has been appointed the assistant to Colonel Von Shraeder, U. S. A.

A Propagandist From the South

Martha S. Gielow, one of the leading propagandists of the Southern Industrial Educational Association is now visiting this State and she may be heard before long in this city. Mrs. Gielow is a woman of international reputation both as a lecturer and an interpreter of plantation folk-lore, and it would be surprising were the local Daughters of the Confederacy to neglect the opportunity to introduce her to the people of this city under the auspices of their organization. The object of the propaganda which she represents is deserving of the warmest encouragement. While philanthropists have spent vast sums of money in ameliorating the condition of the negroes of the South very little has been done for the benefit of the poor white children of the mountain and remote rural districts. It is the purpose of the Southern Educational Association to provide means for the industrial education of these children, and Mrs. Gielow is voicing in their behalf an appeal to the philanthropy and patriotism of the people of the whole country. She is a gifted woman and possesses rare skill and charm as an interpreter of plantation folk-lore. She recently gave one of her monologue entertainments at Tahoe Tavern during the course of which she both convulsed her auditors with laughter and melted them to tears.

SIGHTS IN BERLIN STREETS

Effect of the draughty wind that comes up through the sidewalk ventilators as the underground train passes. From a photograph.

Sequoians to Dance

The Sequoia Club, it is said, intends to give a full dress ball in the very near future. The dance will take place at the Cliff House. The date has not yet been decided upon.

Coming Concerts

The directors of the California Conservatory of Music will offer to the musical public the opportunity to enjoy several chamber concerts, instrumental and vocal. The programs will be composed of all styles of music, and will also contain compositions of local composers. The artists of the California Conservatory of Music will participate in the rendition of these programs. In the first half of the season, three concerts will take place, the first or Friday, September 10th, 8:15 p. m., the second on Friday, October 8th, 8:15 p. m., the third on Friday, November 12th, 8:15 p. m. They will take place at the hall of the Conservatory Building. The price for the series of three concerts is $1.50; for the single concert $1.00.

In the Social Spotlight

Mr. E. W. Hopkins and Miss Hopkins of Menlo Park, entertaining Miss Kenney, motored to Aetna Springs, where they spent the week end.

Edward Ehrhorn and his sister, Miss Marie, sailed on Monday for Honolulu. Mr. Ehrhorn has accepted a position in the government employ and will make his home in the island for the next two years.

Mrs. Cushing and her daughters, Miss Agnes and Miss Lucy, have taken an apartment at the Kellogg for the winter. Miss Angelica Harrison will be their guest during the next few months.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Van Renssalaer of Philadelphia are at the Fairmont. They are of the famous old Van Renssalaer family which is among the very best known as well as the oldest in the United States. Mrs. Van Renssalaer was one of the Drexels of Philadelphia. Mrs. Richard H. Leigh also of Philadelphia accompanies them.

Miss Edna Lissack left for New York on last Saturday after a pleasant visit to her father and sisters. Miss Lissack has made a great name for herself as a designer.

President and Mrs. Benjamin Ide Wheeler will leave in September for Berlin. They will be away three months.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Risdon Meade came down from Byron Springs to attend the dance at the Presidio last week. They chaperoned Miss Gussie Foute and Miss Ruth Sadler.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph M. Masten have been the guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Bengervin in Petaluma for the week end.

Dr. Arnold Genthe has been stopping at the Miramar, Santa Barbara. He will return to town this week.

Miss Elizabeth Gentry of Kansas City is visiting her sister, Mrs. Edward Noble, at her home on Webster street.

Miss Callaghan of Los Altos, the well known artist, was hostess at a delightful tea during the week at her pretty country home. Guests from all the surrounding towns were present.

Mrs. Frank Findley (Rose Miller) formerly of Sausalito, now of Boston, arrived last week from the East and is visiting her relatives in Sausalito. She will remain several months in California.

Mrs. Jesse M. Godley was hostess at an enjoyable tea during the week at her home in Sausalito.

Mrs. Uriel Sebree was among the recent arrivals from the North, and is at the Fairmont. After a few days in the city Mrs. Sebree will leave for San Diego where she will remain until the forepart of September. As Admiral Sebree will soon sail for the Orient in command of the Pacific fleet Mrs. Sebree will probably sail on one of the liners and join him at Manila or in China.

The Misses Harriet and Marion Stone, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Stone of Oakland, have gone to New York where they will spend the next year at a finishing school. They were extensively entertained before leaving.

Vogel's
MAKERS OF
LADIES' GOWNS AND FANCY COSTUMES
418 SUTTER ST., Near STOCKTON

MRS. J. COUGHLAN CO.
Removed to
101 GEARY ST., Cor. GRANT AVE.
Mezzanine Floor

S. KRAMER
LADIES' TAILOR
101 GEARY ST., Cor. GRANT AVE.
ABOVE THE PARAGON

THE BONNET SHOP
Importers of REAL PARISIAN MILLINERY
121 GEARY STREET
Our Specialty, Strictly High Class Tailored Hats at Popular Prices
NOBLE

Olga
Paris Millinery and Waists
Fall Opening of Imported Hats, Bonnets and Waists
Tuesday and Wednesday, September 7th and 8th
237 POST STREET, NEAR GRANT AVENUE

Dinan
Importer of Fine Millinery
Phone Douglas 1246
150 Geary Street, Opp. City of Paris

ANNOUNCEMENT
H. KRAMER
LADIES' TAILOR
Formerly 20 Sansome Street and 1795 Sutter Street
Announces the arrival of a most select and varied line of imported models and materials for fall.
Now located at 117 GRANT AVENUE
No Branch Stores
PHONE KEARNY 4960

RAY LEVIN
247 POWELL ST., NEAR GEARY ST.
Phone Kearny 1619
SMART MILLINERY
MOURNING HATS A SPECIALTY

Cook
FINE MILLINERY
1803 FILLMORE STREET AT SUTTER

Thomas Hooper, the brother of the late Major W. B. Hooper, who has been visiting his nephews, George Warren Hooper and Joseph Hooper, will soon leave for his home in Davenport, Ohio.

The Laurel Court tea room of the Fairmont presents a brilliant scene these afternoons and makes one realize that the summer is at an end and that people are coming back to the city again. Every afternoon finds a hundred or more maids and matrons taking tea in the beautiful court which with its pleasing outdoor effect, soft colors and lights is an ideal place for such affairs. The example of the Fairmont in opening this afternoon tea service was quickly followed by the others and now nearly every hotel of any size or pretensions on the coast has its afternoon tea.

The return of society people to town is evidenced more and more at luncheons in the St. Francis. The other afternoon Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Grant entertained Mrs. Samuel Knight and E. D. Reylard. Mrs. Jack Spreckels was with Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Tobin. Raymond Armsby had as his guests Mrs. Thomas Eastland and Miss Virginia Jolliffe. Mr. and Mrs. George McNear had a cozy table, as did also Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Rathbone, while with Mr. and Mrs. George Cameron was Charles de Young.

Arrivals at Aetna Springs from San Francisco were Mrs. Edwin R. Dimond, Miss R. M. Newton, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph S. Tobin, Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Taylor, Mr. E. W. Hopkins, Miss Keeney, Miss Hopkins, Mrs. Oscar F. Long, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene G. Davis, and Mr. Chas. W. Sutro.

The management of the Hotel Vendome at San Jose gave a dance for the guests and friends on Saturday evening. It was a highly successful social affair.

Afternoon teas are becoming quite the fad at the Cliff House. On almost any week-day afternoon the dining room is well filled with society people. Mrs. Bervin entertained a party of friends at lunch in the Red Room Tuesday. After luncheon the afternoon was spent at bridge.

One of the pretty informal teas given in the White and Gold Room at the Hotel St. Francis during the week was presided over by Miss Marie Churchill in compliment to Miss Sevilla Hayden, whose engagement to Clarence Shuey was announced a fortnight ago. The bride-elect is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Brace Hayden of Oakland.

After a successful season, Castle Crags was closed Tuesday with a card party held in one of the cottages. Mrs. H. K. Defendorf, daughter of Mrs. W. F. Morris, was hostess. There were ten tables of bridge, and refreshments were served to some fifty guests. H. K. Defendorf last week captured the angling honors by catching the largest fish of the season. It was thirty-six inches long and weighed fifteen pounds.

Arrivals at Byron Hot Springs from San Francisco were Dr. M. B. Mooslin and wife, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Buck and son, B. Hall, Mrs. G. B. Strachan, W. A. Ogston, Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Hunter, Mr. and Mrs. Beach Dean, Percy L. Henderson, R. E. Mulcahy, Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Starr, Mrs. Quarre, L. Snider, Mrs. J. G. Brady and child, F. T. Martens, G. Ratte and party, Mrs. E. C. Dake, Mrs. O. F. Giffin, Frank McQuade, Mrs. W. Hefron, Emil and Oscar Juddell, F. P. Sheldon, Miss Helen Kleinmann, Mrs. S. Graham, L. N. Brandoin, C. J. Ristow, C. A. Fitch, A. L. Harlow, Mrs. Frank Walterstein, Father J. F. Nuget, Very Rev. W. Canon White, L. Campa, Dr. and Mrs. Giannini, and L. Scatena.

By a rather queer coincidence in names Milo Porter of Los Angeles and Santa Barbara sold the Van Nuys Hotel of Los Angeles to E. L. Potter of Florida. This Mr. Potter who is a hotel man of reputation and fame in his own State has been the guest of the Fairmont for the past week. Accompanying Mr. Potter are Mrs. E. L. Potter, Miss Helen Potter and Miss Potter.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Z. Blakeman have given up their house in this city and will in future reside on a farm in Sonoma County which they have recently purchased. Miss Innes Keeney and her mother, Mrs. Charles McIntosh McKeeney, will be their guests until the Keeneys leave for the East in October. In the meantime Miss Innes is planning some gay times for her friends. She will give many week-end parties.

I. Magnin & Co.
INCORPORATED

First Showing of Correct Models

LADIES', MISSES' AND GIRLS' TAILORED SUITS AND COATS FOR AUTUMN, 1909

Moderate Prices European Style and Materials

GRANT AVENUE AND GEARY STREET

We own and offer any part of
(Subject to sale)
300,000 PRESIDIO & FERRIES R. R. CO.
First Mortgage 5% BONDS

SUTRO & COMPANY
412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO
Particulars on request

GO EAST!

Low Rate Tickets Sold

SALE DATES

September 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 15, 1909

Other rates and dates to various points in effect during October, 1909

SOME RATES

Omaha	$ 60.00	New Orleans . .	$ 67.50
Council Bluffs . . .	60.00	Washington . . .	107.50
St. Louis	67.50	New York . . .	108.50
Chicago	72.50	Boston	110.50

Tickets good until October 31, 1909. Some cases longer.
Choice of routes. Stopovers. Write agents for details.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC Ticket Offices FLOOD BUILDING MARKET STREET FERRY DEPOT 13th and FRANKLIN STS., OAKLAND

Stage

"The Witching Hour"

The Shuberts have made good with the first attraction sent to us. "The Witching Hour," on at the Valencia Theatre this week and next, may be classed among the few really great modern plays. It is an amazing drama, excellently told, strong in its construction, weird, almost bizarre in its plot, and thrilling in its climaxes. Its author, Augustus Thomas, has taken as his basic idea telepathy, with a dash of Christian Science and hypnotism. The result is a drama that engenders astonishment. There is no half-hearted support of the theories that the author advances, no room left for speculation as to what he believes; he is a frank propagandist, impressing upon his audience his absolute faith in thought transference. And so skillful is the company in advancing his ideas that one forgets for a moment that he is witnessing a stage performance, but feels rather as though present at a demonstration of telepathy. A gambler is the hero, as in "Cameo Kirby"—and as in that play murder occurs in the first act. The slayer is a youth, Clay Whipple, who, driven to frenzy when annoyed by a drunken acquaintance, strikes him with a heavy paper-cutter, killing him. The deed is inspired by the flashing before his eyes of a jewelled scarf-pin, a cats-eye, a stone to which he has an inherited aversion. After Whipple has been convicted of murder and sentenced to death, his mother, looking through old letters, finds one sent to her own mother more than forty years before by a boy lover who in the play is Justice Prentice of the United States Supreme Court. The letter reveals her mother's aversion to the cat's eye—an aversion which was transmitted to her and to her son. Armed with this letter she goes to the Justice while an appeal against the conviction of Clay is pending before the court of which Prentice is a member. Her pleading results in a new trial in which the letter is introduced in evidence, and an acquittal follows. This is the main thread of the story, which tells also of Clay Whipple's successful wooing of Viola Campbell, who is sought by Frank Hardmuth, assistant district attorney. It is he who prosecutes Whipple with vigor and venom. Then comes the expose of Hardmuth at the hands of Jack Brookfield, the gambler, who publishes the fact that Hardmuth was the instigator of the assassination of a former governor of the State—Kentucky. There is a love affair also between Brookfield and Whipple's widowed mother. Into all these ramifications of the play telepathy enters. It is through mind-influence that Brookfield sways the jury. By the same means he brings Hardmuth into subjection when the latter threatens him with death. He cures Whipple of his aversion to the jewel and his hatred of Hardmuth by the same means, and altogether is transformed into a missionary proclaiming to his associates the power of the will to conquer trouble. As Brookfield, John Mason gives a presentation almost without a flaw. Mason is entirely new to San Francisco audiences, who have a just grievance against the fates that have kept him away from us so long. He is like John Drew in some respects, lacking to a certain degree Drew's suavity, but excelling him in the virility which permeates his every move and voice-inflection. There is a touch also of Nat Goodwin about him; and it is hard to tell which is the better in either comedy or pathos. Brookfield does superb emotional work when the news of the jury's favorable verdict is brought; he gives a perfect picture of a strong man almost overcome at the reaction from a great strain. And in the scene with Mrs. Whipple, when he tells her of the love for her that never left him, he is all tenderness without a trace of sentimentality about him—thoroughly manly in fact, and "game" as a gambler should be. Mason has a most pleasing presence, a voice of fine quality, and an absolutely sure sense of the value of tone and inflection. His comedy touch is delightful. It is a pleasure to say that he is well supported, the only weak member in the cast being Clinton Preston, who impersonates Clay Whipple. Amelia Gardner as Mrs. Whipple is most attractive. She is thoroughly feminine, with the wisdom that maturity brings. She simulates well the touch of sorrow that overshadows all her lighter moods. Her emotional work is notable, especially in the scene where she is rejoined by her boy. Justice Prentice is played by Russ Whytal, and little fault is to be found with his work, which in the main merits the highest praise. There is a fine distinction about this portrayal of the white-haired old justice. Where he shrinks back in horror, as he would at sacrilege, from an apparent attempt to influence his decision, he is the embodiment of dignity, and his voice rings with honest resentment. He fails somewhat in the tender passages, leaning toward bathos now and then—but these are minor faults that are almost completely overshadowed by the excellence of his work as a whole. Much of the comedy of the play is furnished by Edward See as Lew Ellinger, a gambler who sees no virtue in reform. He has a breezy way with him, and an altogether captivating manner of gravely uttering unconsciously humorous remarks. Of the other members of the company it may be noted that Charlotte Ives is most attractive as Viola Campbell, the niece of Brookfield and the fiancee of Whipple, playing her part with sweetly girlish charm. Good work is done by Albert Andrus as Hardmuth, and an excellent drunken characterization is furnished by Preston Crewe, who appears on the stage only long enough to be killed. W. H. Sadler as the newspaper man is somewhat of a libel on the average reporter, who is a decent individual, despite the impression that the usual stage characterization gives of him. It is worth while remarking that the play ends happily despite its psychology—an assurance that is needed, so accustomed are we to the unhappy or tangled endings of the drama given us by Ibsen, Shaw and other exponents of domestic and social problems. To be sure, the cloud of tragedy with which the play opens—the taking of human life—is never quite dissipated, although that end is worked toward by Brookfield in his little sermon to his associates—his admonition to be brave despite all trouble, to consider the future rather than the past. But that it ends happily is not the chief merit of "The Witching Hour." It is a play full of good lines, keen epigrams and genuine literary merit—a play that one would enjoy reading. —W. J. W.

BLANCHE BATES

Who appears in "The Fighting Hope" at the Van Ness Theatre.

Blanche Bates at the Van Ness

David Belasco will present Blanche Bates at the Van Ness Theatre for a two weeks' engagement beginning Monday, September 6, with matinees on Saturdays, and Admission Day, Thursday, September 9, in "The Fighting Hope," a modern American drama in three acts by W. J. Hurlbut. This is surely an event of exceptional interest, for Miss Bates is foremost among the emotional actresses on the American stage today and she comes here in a play that was the notable dramatic hit of the past year in New York where it was played for over three hundred performances. In addition the production is made by David Belasco, which means much in itself.

MARIE TOWER
In "The Girl from Rector's" at the Garrick Theatre.

In the past Miss Bates has been identified with such plays as "The Darling of the Gods" and "The Girl of the Golden West." The new play, "The Fighting Hope" is quite different. It is in every sense a modern play dealing with modern American conditions and in it Miss Bates appears upon the stage for the first time, as a star, in a modern costume. The play is in three acts with the scenes laid in the library of a country home on the Hudson River near Ossining, New York. The central character is Anna Granger, the wife of an embezzling cashier of a New York trust company who has been convicted and imprisoned. She believes him innocent and with the object of exonerating the father of her children she enters the employ of Burton Temple, the president of the trust company, whom many believe to be the real culprit. In time Anna Granger learns that there is no question of her husband's guilt. In the month that she has spent in Temple's house, he has fallen in love with her and with the knowledge of her husband's perfidy her feeling of hatred for Temple undergoes a change. It is only at the very end of the last act that the intensely dramatic situations are cleared up. The company provided by Mr. Belasco for Miss Bates' support is exceptionally capable. It includes Milton Sills, John W. Cope, Wedgwood Nowell, and Loretta Wells. "The Fighting Hope" in addition to being of timely interest is described as a play of unusual force and the central character, Anna Granger, is admirably suited to Miss Bates' personality.

E. B. COURVOISIER

The well known Art Dealer and Frame Maker announces to the public the opening of his new store at 431 Sutter street between Stockton and Powell.

At the Garrick Theatre

What promises to be the most interesting theatrical event of the coming season, is the re-opening of the Garrick Theatre on Ellis street near Fillmore (formerly the Orpheum) tomorrow night, with the sensational farce "The Girl from Rector's." From the reports on this work of Paul M. Potter, that have preceeded it, we are led to expect much from this play. In New York, it is said, people simply went wild over it, and clippings from newspapers all along its western route indicate that the favorable sentiment earned in the metropolis, is duplicated throughout the land. Paul Potter, who is also the author of the dramatic version of "Trilby" has made a free translation of Pierre Veber's farce "Loute." He has retained all the essential features of its action and its dialogue but has Americanized the locale, the action of his version occurring in Battle Creek, Michigan, and in New York. It is promised there is not a dull second in the unfolding of the plot. One screamingly funny episode follows another, keeping its auditors in a constant state of laughter. Carrie Weber, who is cast as the "Girl" is particularly fascinating as the Grass Widow, who decides to "do" Broadway in the absence of "hubby."

ANNA REVERE
The dainty comedienne who will begin an engagement at the Orpheum this Sunday afternoon.

and William Sellery, as the returning husband, is especially entertaining in his ludicrously humorous character. The Three Sisters Pendleton, during the action of the play are seen in their whirlwind Madcap dances, which are said to border on the sensational. "The Girl" stays at the Garrick for two weeks. Special matinees are announced for Labor Day and Admission Day, and regular Saturday and Sunday matinees will be the rule during the coming season there. The box office is now open, and incidentally the treasurer of the house has been kept quite busy selling tickets since last Wednesday. The prosperity of the "Girl" here is already assured.

Phillips in Favorite Role

Starting with a matinee Monday, the Alcazar's offering for the week will be Richard Harding Davis' three-act comedy, "The Taming of Helen," which was last presented in San Francisco about eight years ago by a company of which Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin were the leaders. Since then it has served to win New York's favoritism for Augustus Phillips. In the cast with him will be the full strength of the Alcazar company and a number of extra people. It is all about the struggles of an American dramatist, Philip Carroll (Mr. Phillips), to get one of his works presented in London. He is reduced to penury and feeling much discouraged when Marian Cavendish (Bessie Barriscale), a young actress, persuades a prominent manager to produce the play, and to her is assigned the principal character. Another actress, Mrs. Evian, also perceives merit in it and persuades her backer, the Marquis of Woodcote, to offer a price for it, but Carroll refuses to sell and thereby incurs the enmity of both those people. In the meantime there has come to London an American girl, Helen Cabot (Miss Vaugham), to whom Carroll was much devoted in New York, but her sudden acquisition of wealth and the whirl of London society have so turned her head that she engages herself to marry the Marquis of Woodcote. Realizing that her treatment of the struggling author has not been exactly fair, she tries to ease her conscience by imagining him to be as fickle as herself, and thus the situation exists when the third act opens. The scene is the greenroom of the theatre in which Carroll's play is being given its premiere, and the first act has just been concluded when Helen enters to bid the author good-by, as she is about to return to New York. At the same moment Marian, exuberant over Carroll's and her own success, impulsively embraces him and the incident is witnessed by Helen, who leaves him a note of congratulation on his having won so clever a woman as the little actress. This note is found by Marian, who starts out to overtake Helen and remedy her blunder, and when the second act is called the leading woman is missing and cannot be found anywhere in the theatre. Consternation possesses all present, for it looks as if the play is about to be ruined, when Marian triumphantly dashes into the greenroom, accompanied by Helen, whom she caught just in the nick of time at the railway station. Explanations follow and all ends happily for the folk deserving happiness. In the third act most of the people wear colonial costumery, Miss Barriscale appearing as a boy, and the scene is said to be the most faithful illustration of real life behind the footlights that ever has been presented. It is needless to say that the staging will be more than adequate. There will be an extra matinee Thursday.

RIDING THE PONIES AT THE NEW CHUTES

Telepathy Mad

"The Witching Hour," one of the greatest American plays ever written, with John Mason and the original New York cast and production, will begin its second and last week at the Valencia Theatre this Sunday evening, with matinees Monday, Labor Day, Thursday, Admission Day, and Saturday. Never before, in the amusement annals of San Francisco, have a play and production created such a profound impression among all classes of theatregoers and furnished the principal topic of conversation in home and clubs. San Francisco, like New York, where "The Witching Hour" ran for a year and a half, has been made mildly mad telepathically by this strange play, and pschyological students have found in Mr. Thomas' drama unlimited material to sustain their scientific claims concerning telepathy. "The Witching Hour" could easily run a month in this city, but other bookings prevent and Saturday night will see its last presentation here. "Going Some," Broadway's latest laughing sensation and another Shubert success, will be the next attraction at the Valencia Theatre.

Orpheum Offerings

The Orpheum announces for next week another splendid vaudeville program. It will be headed with a musical sketch by George Spink, the author of "Bill Simmons." Its producer is Jesse L. Lasky and it is heralded as one of vaudeville's most attractive and pretentious offerings. The story is based on a recent incident at a swagger country club in the vicinity of New York and it exhibits society folk at their gambols. Numerous specialties are introduced in an unusual and clever manner. There are thirteen people in the cast including a double mixed quartette, in which are four stunning typical Lasky show girls. There are thirty-six changes of costume in the act and the four girls in it manage between them to wear thirty of the most costly and modish hats. Dick Gardner and Anna Revers will indulge in an act that is appropriately styled "Real Variety." They are a clever and versatile couple who are always popular with the public and their offering this season is considered to be by far their best. Luciano Lucca, the man

TAXICABS
(Genuine RENAULT Cars)
PACIFIC TAXIMETER CAB COMPANY
Solicits your patronage of its equipment of imported Renault Taxicabs and will show its appreciation by prompt and reliable service. * * * * *
TELEPHONE
FRANKLIN 4848
Private Exchange connecting all Departments
MAIN STATION AND GENERAL OFFICES, 1355-1363 BUSH STREET
FAY C. BEAL, General Manager.

with two voices, will be heard next week. It is wonderful how easily this artist reaches the highest soprano notes and executes the most difficult variations. An instant later he is heard singing in a delightful baritone voice. The love scene from Puccini's "Tosca," "The Coppelia Waltz" from the ballet of that name and the famous duet between Count Luna and Leonora in "Il Trovatore" are included in his program. This is Signor Lucca's first tour of America. The Arlington Four, "The Singing and Dancing Messenger Boys," consisting of Messers. Leever, Lee, Manny and Roberts, will be a feature of the coming program. They contribute one of the best acts of its kind in vaudeville. The holdovers will be Rose Royal and her beautiful Arabian Posing horse Chesterfield, George W. Cunningham and Herman Marion, Catherine Hayes and Sabel Johnson in "A Dream of Baby Days," and of those delightful comedians, John Hyams and Leila McIntyre, in their great success "The Quakeress." A novel and interesting series of Orpheum motion pictures will terminate one of the best bills in the annals of vaudeville.

"The Lion and the Mouse" at Ye Liberty

The holiday offering at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, will be "The Lion and the Mouse," which the Bishop players will give for the first time across the bay at popular prices. The play is such a widely known one and has always been interpreted by such splendid road companies that the Ye Liberty management are exerting every effort to make their production one that will do the great play full justice. For it is a great play, a play full of vital force—of red blood and impetuous aggression as the theme it touches upon—present day finance and social life. The Liberty's reputation for the manner in which its productions are mounted gives promise of an exceptionally strong and well balanced performance. Florence Oakley should handle the role of Shirley Rossmore very nicely, and Sydney Ayres should be manly and convincing as Jefferson Ryder. E. L. Bennison has been loaned by the Alcazar management for the great character of John Burkett Ryder, the richest man in the world, and with George Friend, Henry Shumer, Robert Harrison, George Webster, William Wolbert, Robert Lawler, Walter Whipple, Edith Lyle, Laura Hudson, Mrs. Gleason and Bessie Sankey in the remainder of the important roles a splendid performance should result. The run of "The Lion and the Mouse" at Ye Liberty is limited to one week only, but there will be matinees on Monday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday. "Pierre of the Plains," taken from Sir Gilbert Parker's story, "Pierre and his People," is in preparation to follow.

Pugilist at Chutes

Al Kaufman, the man who is soon to meet Jack Johnson for the world's championship in heavyweight honors, will be the featured attraction at the New Chutes this Sunday. The exhibitions given by Johnson at the Fillmore street amusement park last Sunday drew such tremendous crowds that the management immediately made arrangements to present the second party in the coming Admission Day battle. Kaufman will be seen in two three-round bouts to be given afternoon and night from the Chutes bandstand. He will have Joe Willis as his opponent and, like Johnson, the big blacksmith will make a speech. This will be Kaufman's only public appearance prior to being seen in the arena at Colma next Thursday. In addition to the fistic exhibition many new free acts will be put on at the Chutes Sunday. Marino, the big German athlete whose pastime consists in having a seventy horsepower automobile bump the bumps over his back will terminate this engagement with an added sensation. Heretofore seven passengers have occupied the car which traverses his body. Sunday there will be ten occupants in the automobile. Le Roy will be seen for the last times in his journey across the grounds suspended by his teeth from an aerial wire and Master Herbert and his Royal Marine Band will play their farewell concerts. The musical programs will be composed entirely of popular melodies including the new "Chutes Carnival March," written by the boy conductor, and which was given for the first time during the confetti carnival last Friday evening. Beginning next Monday

SCENE FROM "THE WITCHING HOUR"

Now creating such a sensation at the Valencia Theatre.

[illegible] California State Band will occupy the Chutes music stand. Towers, the high diver; Demon, the fiery rider, the song and dance comedians and open-air motion pictures will be other features on Sunday's free bill.

In the Limelight

Following Blanche Bates at the Van Ness Theatre will be seen the Brady-Grismer production of the comedy, "A Gentleman from Mississippi," which is now in the second year of its run in New York City.

It is announced that during the Blanche Bates engagement at the Van Ness Theatre the curtain will rise at 8:20 evenings and 2:15 at the matinees.

George M. Cohan and his father, mother and sister will head the big production of "A Yankee Prince" to be seen at the Van Ness Theatre in November. Cohan has not been seen here

HOWARD HICKMAN
At the Orpheum Theatre

[illegible] half a dozen years and his appearance in his latest and greatest success should be an event of great note in the local theatrical world.

From present indications the new Columbia Theatre will open about the holidays. It will be an event in the history of San Francisco to be noted among the most important occurrences since the fire.

Mabel Wilbur, after touring the Pacific Coast as Sonio in "The Merry Widow," returned to New York last week to join the Eastern company being organized for the Viennese operetta. The new "Merry Widow" company began its season with four performances at Asbury Park, beginning August 25.

A new thing in bare legs on the stage was sprung on New York's first nighters at "The Florist Shop" when Lionel Walsh, in the role of the bashful husband, was seized by his doting Aunt Mirandy and his nervous wife and given a boiling water foot bath in plain view of the audience. It provoked a scream of laughter, and is only one of the many surprises invented by [illegible] in staging this latest farce success from Vienna.

DR. MATILDA A. FEELEY
is now located at 1700 Sutter Street. Diseases of women and children. Hours 2 to 4 and 7 to 8 p. m.

VAN NESS THEATRE
Cor. Van Ness and Grove
Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgr.
Phone Market 500
Two Weeks, Beginning Monday, September 6th.
Special Holiday Matinee Thursday, September 9. Regular Matinee Saturday
David Belasco Presents BLANCHE BATES in Her Greatest Success
THE FIGHTING HOPE
By W. J. Hurlbut.
One Year at the Belasco Stuyvesant Theatre, New York
Evenings at 8:20. Matinees at 2:15

VALENCIA THEATRE
Valencia Street, near Thirteenth
Phone Market 17
Starting This Sunday Evening, September 5th
Matinees Monday, Thursday and Saturday
Second and Last Week of S. S. and Lee Shubert's Most Pretentious Theatric Offering, JOHN MASON, in Augustus Thomas' Greatest Play
THE WITCHING HOUR
Precisely Original New York Cast and Production.
Seats on Sale at the Box Office and the Emporium.
Next—"Going Some"

The Garrick
Former Orpheum
ELLIS AT FILLMORE
DIRECTION OF WILL L. GREENBAUM
Starting tomorrow night
Two Weeks. Matinees Labor Day, Admission Day, Saturdays, Sundays
The Sensational Farce
THE GIRL FROM RECTOR'S
Direct from Weber's Music Hall, New York
Prices: Lower Floor, 75c, $1.00 and a few rows $1.50. Balcony, 75c, 50c, 25c.
Seats Now Selling

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE
Cor. Sutter and Steiner
Class 'A' Building
Phone West 1400
BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.
Week Commencing with Matinee Monday, September 6th.
Richard Harding Davis' Charming Comedy
THE TAMING OF HELEN
All the Alcazar Favorites in the Cast
Prices—Nights, 25c to $1.00. Matinees, 25c to 50c.
Matinee Saturday and Sunday. Extra Admission Day Matinee, Thursday.

NEW ORPHEUM
O'Farrell Street, between Stockton and Powell
Phone Douglas 70
Safest and Most Magnificent Theatre in America
Week Beginning This Sunday Afternoon—Matinee Every Day
ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE
AT THE COUNTRY CLUB, a Musical Sketch by Geo. Spink, Author of "Bill Simmons"; GARDNER and REVERE; SIG. LUCIANO LUCCA; ARLINGTON FOUR; ROSE ROYAL and Her Famous Arabian Posing Horse; CHESTERFIELD, CUNNINGHAM and MARION; CATHERINE HAYES and SABEL JOHNSON; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES; Last Week—Great Success, JOHN HYAMS and LEILA McINTYRE in the Quaint Comedietta "The Quakeress."
Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE
Oakland, Cal.
Direction H. W. Bishop
Commencing Labor Day Matinee
The BISHOP PLAYERS in the Greatest American Play of the Century
THE LION AND THE MOUSE
Matinees Monday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.
Same Popular Prices—25c and 50c. Entire House. All Performances
Next—"Pierre of the Plains."

NEW CHUTES
Fillmore, Eddy, Turk and Webster
Open Morning, Afternoon and Night
THIS SUNDAY ONLY
Free, Afternoon and Night
AL KAUFMAN
The Man Who Will Meet Jack Johnson to Decide the World's Heavyweight Championship, Will be Presented in Two Three Round Boxing Bouts
10 OTHER BIG FREE ACTS 10
Beginning Next Monday CALIFORNIA STATE BAND,
3 GREAT SMILE-ETTES 3
TAKE THE JOLLY JOY JAUNT

ASK FOR
BLACK AND WHITE
SCOTCH WHISKEY
IT IS THE BEST
NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

The Well-Dressed Man

What to Wear, When and Where

Written exclusively for Town Talk by J. M. JACOBI

For the benefit of those men who have neither the time nor inclination to study the art of Dressing correctly, we will publish a series of weekly Fashion Chats.

Fashion Pointers

September is welcomed equally by the tailor and the patron. The patron after a short or long vacation is happy to be able to put on something new and clean, for there is nothing as hard on one's clothes as a summer vacation. The tailor is happy because he is about to open up a new season with new goods and novelties which tempt the men who wish to dress in style. September therefore with all its newcomers in stylish woolens claims first attention in the tailoring world. As we are on the eve of good times, it is but natural that everybody will prepare himself by properly dressing.

How to Dress Properly

To go into detail about individual styles would hardly interest our readers, for one's tailor knows or should know the intricate arts and parts of that. But the essential is that no garment should be obtrusive or unduly noticeable, either in cut or design of cloth, but on the contrary there should be refinement in the lines of the garments as well as in the pattern selected for the suit. This, coupled with the character the tailor is able to put into a suit, makes the wearer look smart and right and causes him to regard his tailor with a grateful feeling, which usually results in his recommendation to others. Last, but not least, we cannot lay enough stress on the quality of workmanship as well as the texture and richness of the cloth. They all play very essential parts. One should never display false economy by setting a limit on a suit, better buy fewer suits and pay more for each one. That is the principle followed in New York, and we claim New York has the best dressed men.

Fabrics and Designs

The prevailing shades for the coming season are principally grey, from a steel to a cambridge, little checks mottled or very fine stripe effects. It is very important to keep away from bold stripe effect or large checks. We will also find in grey pretty shepherd and all-over tweed effects, called Bannockburn, and a few herring bones. The London smoke also is very pretty, but it might have a clear effect. Grey without doubt will be the reigning shade for this season; but of course no man can have a complete wardrobe without one blue serge suit in it. For the man, however, who wants to look different or who always is ahead of style the shade is brown, either nut or coffee colors. There are other mixtures very pretty but these are only to be found in the rough clothes such as cheviots or tweeds, and deserve special notice; for although they have not the lasting qualities of worsted they do not show dust and look more negligee which in some dressers' minds is an advantage as they prefer that to looking dressy and sleek. For overcoating the variety is enormous and it depends a great deal upon the purpose for which one wishes a coat. For dress any dark vicuna or unfinished worsted; for promenade a light or medium dark tweed; for auto a plait back; for rain, coviet or a new material called the corring. There are a great many materials and it just depends on how many overcoats one can stand. However, if one wants only what is absolutely necessary a medium or dark grey overcoat and a rain coat will do. The latter can be secured ready to wear better and at a greater economy. Such is the case also with the auto or storm coat for the only thing necessary for this great coat is to have it drop properly and fit around the neck and shoulders. Dress suits and Tuxedos we will cover in another issue. Herewith, however, we present a cut of a handsome new cutaway suit suitable for receptions or weddings. It is from the English May Fair Fashion sheet.

MORNING COAT

Suitable for receptions and weddings.

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA
Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets
A General Banking Business Transacted
CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

W. W. MONTAGUE & CO.

Eureka Stoves and Ranges
Kitchen Utensils
Hotel Kitchen Outfits a Specialty
"Alaska" and "Opal" Refrigerators
Mantels, Grates, Tiles

NOW LOCATED AT 557-563 MARKET ST., opp. Junction Sutter and Sansome Sts.
PHONE DOUGLAS 4640

A Note on Ambrose Bierce

(Continued from Page 9.)

day whose announced ideal is a higher, more optimistic, or more truly idealistic one. Read the concluding stanzas of his "Invocation," addressing Liberty:

"Lo! here upon the world's extreme
We stand with lifted arms and dare
By thine eternal name to swear
Our country, which so fair we deem—

"Upon whose hills, a bannered throng,
The spirits of the sun display
Their flashing lances day by day
And hear the sea's pacific song—

"Shall be so ruled in right and grace
That men shall say: 'O, drive afield
The lawless eagle from the shield,
And call an angel to the place!'"

Like most men—or so, at any rate, the case seems to me—I judge things from the point of view of self; and I know that I, a writer, believing in Art, also believing in the rule of Angels rather than of eagles, have found Ambrose Bierce a constant inspiration. I number him, with Philip Hale, and James Huneker, among those American writers who exert the most helpful influence on younger American artists. As creator, as a man of imagination, he has no living equal in this land.

As a very young man, how assiduously I searched in this country for literary and idealistic masters; how few I found worthy of my reverence! Like most young men, I instinctively sought guidance; for while it is true that young men make up the great number of volunteers in the ranks of all bodies of revolutionists, yet young men seldom lead revolutions; or, at any rate, seldom make the best leaders. We turn naturally toward elder men, expecting from them worthy leadership. We are inclined to think that older men must, passing through experiences such as are tormenting and trying us, have emerged with greater breadth of vision, sound wisdom, expertness in handling practical tools, yet likewise with unimpaired enthusiasm—and how often are we disappointed; yes, and betrayed how more than seldom! We forget that deadening conservatism, that loss of courage, of hope, which time brings; the fatigue of body and of soul.

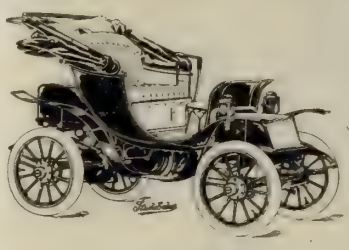
There is a bodily disease that comes with advanced age—the very disease of age itself—which is termed arterial sclerosis, or hardening of the arteries. A rush of blood through such hardened arteries is dangerous in the extreme, it is apt to rupture them and produce death. There is a similar disease of the soul, attacking all but the really puissant spirits; a spiritual sclerosis; a hardening and a thinning of the fibres of the soul. Timidity is the mark of such sufferers.

Thus it comes to pass that while men who have lived and worked through many years should naturally be our wisest men, our real leaders—capable, strong, and efficient; trustworthy to youth—the reverse is most often the case. Of one hundred writers, for example, who in the United States begin their careers by striking honest and future-building notes, at least ninety soon sell themselves in the market places.

Throughout a long life of unremitting work Ambrose Bierce has been true to Art. The Goddess hath not left him unrewarded. He has shaped certain works of an imperishable beauty. His name is now by a few, and in years to come shall be by many, young writers spoken with reverence.

Hail, Bierce! we who are about to live salute thee!

Arrivals at the Summer Resorts



Registrations at Hotel Del Monte for week ending August 29, from San Francisco were E. M. Greenway, F. B. Peterson, Miss Cora Jane Flood and maid, I. W. Van Zant, Miss Isabelle I. Haderle, Mrs. Ellen Haderle, Patrick Calhoun Jr., Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Garritt, Miss Helen Garritt, Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Whitney, Miss J. F. Stone and maid, H. W. Price, Geo. W. Calhoun, Geo. A. French, John Bleck, Mrs. F. W. Van Sicklen, Miss D. Van Sicklen, Horace Van Sicklen, F. D. Van Sicklen, H. H. Torrey, Thad C. Bell and wife, Mr. and Mrs. B. G. McDougall, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Sample, Mrs. Geo. Field, C. D. Whyte, R. M. Eyre, J. Anderson, and Miss Henshaw and maid.

San Francisco arrivals at Hotel Del Coronado were C. T. Hanson, W. H. Levy, Jos. L. Lengfeld, Mr. and Mrs. T. M. O. Powers, W. A. Brown, A. L. Gilbert, J. E. De Young, Mrs. J. Roseweig, and C. S. Goodheart.

Recent arrivals at The Tavern of Tamalpais from San Francisco were Mrs. E. D. Baldwin, Frank W. Gale, Miss Rennie, Mrs. Wm. Rennie, Walter B. Bundschu, Edith Harper, R. K. Gregory and wife, Wm. H. Hildebrandt and wife, Mrs. R. H. Harvey, Miss A. L. Libby, A. Satter, Miss M. Satter, Ella E. Mathews, and Mary L. Powell.

A Domestic Eye Remedy

Compounded by Experienced Physicians. Conforms to Pure Food and Drugs Law. Wins Friends Wherever Used. Ask Druggists for Murine Eye Remedy. Try Murine in Your Eyes You Will Like Murine. Try it in Baby's Eyes. It Soothes.

The Society Belle

to whom delightful independence appeals and who appreciates refinement with a degree of luxury and unquestioned elegance, cannot resist the new

STUDEBAKER ELECTRIC

Its daintiness of appointment captures her instantly. It is a fitting complement to her cultured tastes. Besides, its simplicity of operation and control makes it safer to drive than a horse. It travels as fast as any woman cares to go; is always clean and inviting and is practically proof against accidents.

Victoria-Phaetons and Coupes for immediate delivery

Fremont at Mission

Studebaker

Phone Douglas 3000

GIERSBERGER WINES

The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.

THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY

Phone Oakland 2510 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of WILLIAM H. NOLAN, Deceased—No.8259—Dept. 10.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administratrix of the estate of WILLIAM H. NOLAN, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administratrix at the office of Messrs. Breen & Kelly, Attorneys at Law and Attorneys for said Administratrix, at their office, Rooms 1109-1110 Humboldt Bank Building, No. 785 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of WILLIAM H. NOLAN, deceased.

MARGARET M. NOLAN,
Administratrix of the Estate of William H. Nolan, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 31, 1909.

BREEN & KELLY, Attorneys for Administratrix,
Humboldt Bank Building, San Francisco, Cal. 9-4-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL PROPERTY SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 3762 N. S., Dept. 10, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of MICHAEL DUFFY, Deceased.

JOSEPH A. STULZ, Administrator of the estate of MICHAEL DUFFY, deceased, having presented his petition herein, duly verified, praying for an order of the sale of the whole of the real estate of said deceased, or so much or such parts thereof as said Court shall judge necessary or beneficial for the reasons and purposes in said petition mentioned and set forth.

And such petition having been filed, it is now ordered by said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Court on Tuesday, the 5th day of October, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the courtroom of Department 10 of said Superior Court in the Grant Building, on the southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administrator to sell the whole or so much of the real estate of said decedent as may be necessary.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated, San Francisco, this 25th day of August, A. D., 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Aug. 25, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By H. G. Benedict, Deputy Clerk.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Attorney for Administrator,
Mills Buildings, San Francisco, Cal. 9-4-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of Jules E. de ST. DENIS, also Called JULES St. DENIS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executor and Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of JULES E. de ST. DENIS, also called JULES ST. DENIS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executor and Executrix at the office of A. Comte Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of JULES E. de ST. DENIS, also called JULES ST. DENIS, deceased.

WILLIAM C. KEWIN, Executor,
JULIE HEILBRON, Executrix,
Of the Last Will and Testament of Jules E. de St. Dennis, also called Jules St. Denis, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 25th, 1909.

A. COMTE, JR., Attorney for Executors,
333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. 8-28-5

Auto Notes

G. E. Karstons of Los Angeles, accompanied by Mrs. Karstons, arrived in San Francisco from the Southern metropolis, in his little Buick "White Streak," after a most pleasant run up the coast. Karstons says that a puncture caused his one stop, not a single adjustment being necessary. He left Salinas at nine o'clock in the forenoon and reached Oakland at two twenty-five in the afternoon, after considerable delay caused by taking a wrong road between Salinas and San Juan. Karstons boasts that while his trip figures a little over six hundred miles, his gasoline consumption was just twenty-eight gallons, or about twenty-one and a half miles to the gallon.

That there are a great many motorists driving their cars from all points to Seattle this year, but that most of them would forego the pleasure were they correctly informed on the road conditions before starting, is the assertion of M. W. Levy, the well-known San Franciscan who recently returned from the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, having driven to Seattle and return in his famous touring-sleeping Studebaker "40." "While I made the run to Seattle in six days and eight hours, running time, my trip was fraught with a big element of danger at times, on account of the terrible road conditions in places and the sharp turns and exceedingly steep grades. I put in some time on the way up fishing and hunting, otherwise I should have made better time; but the trip is to say the least a hard one and one that I would advise all motorists to get definite information on before starting out. Between Hornbrook and Colestein Springs, about the Oregon line, I found the grade so steep and the condition of the road in general so bad for automobiling that we were compelled to put in several hours in constructing a road over which we could take the car. Cow Hollow is another treacherous place for the motorist. Briefly, anyone contemplating the run should be cautioned against the down grade from Redding to Pitt River. It is full of sharp turns and steep grades. Wolf Creek is marshy, rutty and full of gullies. Castle Rock, where the Heney accident occurred, is also a bad place and driving along there cannot be done too carefully."

Arthur Van Valin, the well known automobile racing driver has joined the sales force of Studebaker Brothers. Van Valin is one of the best known automobile men on the coast, and has to his credit a number of records, made not only out West, but at the Brighton Beach Track.

Two chassis models will be manufactured by the Chalmers-Detroit Motor Company for 1910. Various bodies to suit every taste will be furnished to fit the "30" chassis, while the "40" chassis will be fitted with touring car, pony tonneau and roadster type bodies. The "30" chassis will have a motor 4 inches by 4½ inches, an increase of one-half inch over the bore of the 1909 cars. The oil pump has been placed in a more accessible position. The crank shaft is still mounted on two ball bearings. The large inlet valve mounted in the heads of the cylinders, which has been a feature of the Chalmers-Detroit "30" since its inception, is one of the causes which have enabled the motor to develop such remarkably high power on so small a piston displacement. The circulating positive feed oiling system is retained in practically its original form. The Chalmers-Detroit constructon of inlet manifold castings in one piece with water jacket side plates is a special feature this year at least. Perhaps the most striking feature to the casual observer is the size of the exhaust manifold and piping to muffler, this combined with large exhaust valves being used to eliminate all back pressure and to clear the cylinders promptly of burned gases. The multiple disc clutch for 1909 has been so successful that it has been retained exactly as it was. The transmission is in a unit with the motor and clutch. Three speeds and reverse are provided with a selective arrangement. The bearings throughout are annular ball. The gears are made of chrome vanadium steel, and treated with the greatest care. The teeth are all heavy pitch and the gears arranged in as compact a manner as possible in order to keep the shafts short. The general appearance of the car has been improved by lengthening the wheel base and body. The hood has been raised and lengthened to conform to the increased size of the car. The wheel base is 115 inches as against 110 inches last year, the tread remaining standard, though a 60 inch tread will be optional on cars going to the South. The Chalmers-Detroit "40" model will incorporate very few changes mechanically from last year's construction, although the wheel base has been greatly lengthened and the touring body enlarged to make room for seven passengers.

In the recent automobile races held in Philadelphia on August 12th last, the Studebaker E-M-F "30" captured the first prize in both events in which it was entered. The first was for ten miles over one-half mile track for cars under $1,600; time, 14 minutes 23 seconds. The second was in a ten mile free-for-all; time, 14 minutes 10 seconds.

One of the most pleasant automobile runs about the city and suburbs of Los Angeles, according to H. A. Lord, the Studebaker agent at Los Angeles, is the Redondo trip via Gardena. The roads, according to Lord are in excellent shape. Lord advises the autoists to avoid the Ingleside route, as the roads that way are comparatively in bad shape.

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Yards and Planing Mills 6th and Channel Streets

Choose Your Oil As You Would Your Car

Imperfect lubrication causes more trouble, more expense, more breakdowns than anything else about your car. There'll be no carbon deposit to foul the cylinders and spark-plugs, no friction, no oil-troubles if you get

ZEROLENE

Auto-Lubricating Oil

You can count on perfect lubrication at all times, under all conditions, entire freedom from trouble with carbon deposits, and increased power from your engine.

Zerolene is made in one grade only, for all types of cylinders and bearings. Produced in only one place in the world. Put up in sealed cans with patent spout that cannot be refilled. Also in barrels for garage trade. Sold by dealers everywhere. Write for booklet, "21,000 Miles with Zerolene," Free.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(Incorporated)

Chalmers-Detroit "30"

The beginning and the end car.

In the beginning the initial price is slightly higher, in the end the upkeep and after expense is much less.

"Anybody can cut prices but it takes brain to make a better article."
(Elbert Hubbard.)

Buying a good car is only one step in the right direction.

BUT

Buying a good car from the most reliable dealers on the Pacific Coast is your absolute assurance of satisfaction.

The Pioneer Automobile Company is the largest concern west of Chicago giving its undivided attention to the sale of automobiles. Ten years in business assures our stability and perpetuates our guarantees. Our business motto is "Right or Made Right."

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

901 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

Oakland San Francisco Fresno

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco. No. 8103, Dept. No. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of BERTHA MARKS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Rose Marks, the Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of BERTHA MARKS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executrix, at the office of C. H. Oatman, room 516 Balboa Building, corner Second and Market streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of BERTHA MARKS, deceased.

ROSE MARKS,
Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of Bertha Marks, deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 7th, 1909.

ARTHUR L. LEVINSKY, Attorney for said Executrix,
Stockton, California. 8-7-5

Letters

A Novel Worth While

Every now and then, just as the pessimistic cynics declare that literature has gone to the bow-wows, and fiction is written solely and altogether with a view to amusing school girls and culturines, somebody comes along with a real book which, though it may not be "art" is brimful of life and long and leisurely enough to give deliberate readers a chance to make the acquaintance of the characters and contemplate in the events something more than an athletic stunt of a quick "hop, skip, jump and over." "A Certain Rich Man" by William Allen White comes under this head. The action begins away back in the days of the Kansas-Missouri feuds and the Free Soil party, when the hero was a barefoot boy of ten years playing Indians in the cottonwoods of pioneer Kansas, and continues to the present day of swollen fortunes, congressional investigations and muckraking magazines. Though apparently localized in the western city, the characters and circumstances are typical of the whole United States. John Barclay was of New England stock. His grandfather was a traditional hard-fisted merchant who amassed a fortune in his generation. The faculty of acquisitiveness appears to have skipped the father, whose idiosyncracy was abolition, and who, journeying westward to swell the throng of free-soilers in Kansas, was killed in a camp fracas as a result of an impassioned speech on his pet hobby, and the mother, herself an enthusiast, instead of returning to the east, continued her journey, and supported herself and the boy by such labor as fell to her hands. John Barclay was barely ten years old when the Civil War broke out. He was too young to enlist, but with some of his companions he managed to stow away in the wagons which accompanied the volunteers from Sycamore Ridge, and saw something of the first days of the conflict ere there was opportunity to return him safely to his mother's arms. But patriotism was not his strong point. Even as a child he displayed the characteristics of a shrewd trader, and whatever came into his hands he clung to. When the war was over and the older men returned to their homes and families John Barclay had already laid the foundation of his fortune, and he was clever enough to attach to himself as business allies those whose military record as well as their social position would be of use to him. Selfish and unscrupulous, he was invariably successful because to him the end always justified the means. He could argue most convincingly of the "greater good," and the greater good was always the amassing of more wealth for himself. Barclay was clever enough, too, never to commit the wrong deed himself. He suggested, subtly or openly, and his partners and colleagues carried out the scheme, often swept off their feet and not realizing until it was too late, to what an extent they had been overborne. Thus, when General Hendricks, president of the Sycamore Ridge Bank and partner of Barclay in one of his schemes, loaned money until the bank was a mere shell liable to collapse at any moment—when out of the paltry ten thousand dollars in cash left in its vaults, over nine thousand were due for taxes—it was Barclay's idea that the tax receipt be balanced by a check, and when, later on, there was imminent danger of investigation, the check be made good by a forged note, and when the old general, worried into an early grave by the knowledge of his crime, was succeeded by his son, it was Robert who carried the forged document forward until circumstances gave him, in turn, the opportunity to even matters by still another forgery on the books of the county treasurer. Robert Hendricks, kept in the east, attending to that end of the business of the partnership by the strict orders of Barclay, was separated from the girl of his choice, Mollie Culpepper, and Mollie was herself capitalized and made in a way one of the assets of Barclay's business. Virtually she was sold for fifteen thousand dollars badly needed to tide over a crisis. When the farmers, after the disastrous grasshopper raid on their crops, were starving and penniless, it was Hendricks and Culpepper who actually sold the mortgages cinched from them, but it was Barclay who introduced the ambiguous clause by which the land was actually sold where the owners believed that it was only leased. So, from the time that the barefooted urchin drove sharp bargains in marbles until he traded in congressmen and judges of the United States Supreme Court, he was always "legal" himself, whatever he forced others to be, and even his worst dupes admired his smartness. John Barclay is a fine example of the sort of self-made man who has been held up to American youth as a paragon to be imitated, but before the end of his career we see him under investigation for adulterating the products of his mills and giving short weight in his sealed packages. The muckraker and the yellow journalist fall foul of him, and the people begin to doubt whether his stone bridges, monuments, donations to charity and education and other beneficences are, after all, a substitute for a pure water supply and other such essentials which it has been in his power to withhold. Mrs. Barclay, the mother of the hero, lives through the story, and is, at all times, secretly grieved over the money-madness of her son, but excuses it as being in his blood. One wonders a bit whether she could not have eradicated at least a part of the tendency if she had begun betimes, and used her influence to dissuade him from always securing the decided advantage in his infant "swaps." This particular trust magnate, having stood upon the highest pinnacle of "success," is brought to a realization of his iniquities, and voluntarily and deliberately sets to work to restore all his ill-gotten gains and destroy his paper fortune. It is a prophetic hint of what is presumed to be a hastening of the millennium, but after all, there is something to be said in favor of enduring the ills we have. There is a quality in some strains of blood which makes for domineering in one direction or another. The Puritans undertook to regulate the religious beliefs and observances of their world. For the next few generations their descendants seized upon political government as their ancestors had upon religion. Later on it was finance and should they be diverted from that, it may be that they will arrogate to themselves the field of literature and art. Indeed there are already signs of that, for every woman who achieves notoriety makes a bee line for the stage door, and here we have Evelyn Thaw devoting herself to sculpture, while the mother-in-law has already issued her version of the unsavory family mess, Alice, the ex-countess of Yarmouth, is about to launch forth, and a twenty-five thousand dollar "studio" is in course of preparation for the chief figure of the muddle in order that he may too produce books worthy of his wealth. There is much more to "A Certain Rich Man" than a biography of a single character, for we have a brief glimpse of the stirring scenes of the border warfare, as well as something of the county seat strife once almost a favorite diversion of the west. Philemon Ward, enthusiast, visionary, and perpetual candidate, is another type, and Colonel Culpepper impractical, generous, as short-sighted as he was well meaning, is a familiar figure, while Bemis, starting his career as a horse thief and being "useful" and safer to have with than against one in politics, rising to the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States could be recognized in every State west of the Mississippi river. Adrian P. Brownwell is the type of a newspaper editor who has become obsolete, but time was when his kind flourished in every small community. In fact, "A Certain Rich Man" is a panorama of the country, more especially the middle west, from 1860 to date. The class of readers who limit their books to approximately three hundred pages of large type with plenty of love making and athletics will find little of interest in these four hundred and more pages of leisurely narrative and character unfolding, with an infinity of digression and detail. It recalls the other days when people who cared for books took time to read them by the light of a good kerosene lamp instead of taking a hasty glimpse under an electric bulb, and it is decidedly and pre-eminently worth while Macmillans are the publishers

---

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY MORTGAGE SHOULD NOT BE RENEWED

In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California—No. 7168, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of CHARLOTTE F. CLARKE, Deceased.

Upon reading and filing the petition of Charles G. Lyman, executor of the last will and testament of CHARLOTTE F. CLARKE, deceased,

It is ordered that all persons interested in said estate be and appear in this Court in Department 10 thereof, in the Grant Building, on the southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, San Francisco, on Thursday, the 7th day of October, 1909, at the hour of ten o'clock a. m. of said day, then and there to show cause, if any they have why the said Charles G. Lyman as such executor should not join with Edith A. E. Lyman, E. K. Clarke, also known as Edward K. Clarke, also known as Edward Kane Clarke, and Charlotte H. Wright, in making, executing and delivering to Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, a corporation, a promissory note or notes in writing, in the sum of $40,422.27, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum, likewise joining the three said last named persons in making, executing and delivering to the said Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, a corporation, a mortgage as security for said promissory note or notes, upon the following described real estate, situate lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California:

Commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the southerly line of Post Street with the easterly line of Jones Street, running thence southerly and along said easterly line of Jones Street sixty (60) feet; thence at right angles easterly and along the northerly line of Cottage Place seventy (70) feet, six (6) inches; thence at a right angle northerly sixty (60) feet; thence at a right angle westerly along said southerly line of Jones Street seventy (70) feet, six (6) inches to the point of commencement; being a part of Fifty Vara Block No. 223.

Reference is hereby made to the petition on file herein for further particulars.

It is further ordered that this order be published once a week for four successive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper of general circulation in said City and County.

Dated this 30th day of August, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

MASTICK & PARTRIDGE, Attorneys for Executor, Foxcroft Building, 68 Post St., San Francisco, Cal. 9-4-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 24635.

JENNIE OXTOBY, Plaintiff,
vs.
JAMES W. OXTOBY, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City of and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send greeting to James W. Oxtoby, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and county; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant on the ground of defendant's extreme cruelty; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 11th day of August, A. D. 1909. By L. J. Welch, Deputy Clerk.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

WEINMANN, WOOD & CUNHA, Attorneys for Plaintiff. 9-4-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17750, Dept. No. 5.

EVA NATHAN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of EVA NATHAN, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Jones Street, distant thereon Southerly ninety (90) feet from the Southerly line of Pacific Street, running thence Southerly and along said line of Jones Street forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty seven (137) feet, six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet, six (6) inches to said line of Jones Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of fifty vara lot number Eight Hundred and Sixty-one (861) of the City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit: for judgment establishing and quieting said plaintiff's title to all said real property as the owner thereof in fee simple, and determining all adverse claims thereto, and ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, and for such other and further relief as may be just and proper in the premises, under and pursuant to the provisions of the Act of the Legislature of California entitled, "An Act to provide for the establishment and quieting of title to real property in case of loss and destruction of public records," approved June 16, 1906, and the Act of the said Legislature, amending the same, approved March 6, 1909.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 2nd day of July, A. D. 1909.

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
(Seal) By M. P. BRUTON, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk, a newspaper, on the 17th day of July, A. D. 1909.

DEVOTO & RICHARDSON, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
Foxcroft Building, San Francisco.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8100, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate and Guardianship of FRANK VIERHUS, an Incompetent Minor.

CLARENCE CLAUDE VIERHUS, guardian of the person and estate of Frank Vierhus, an incompetent minor, having filed his petition herein, praying for an order of sale of the interest in the real estate of said incompetent minor for the purposes therein set forth, and an order of this Court having been made, setting the hearing of said petition on Wednesday, the eighth day of September, 1909, and it appearing to the Court that said order should be set aside; it is therefore ordered that the said order of this Court made on the 24th day of August, 1909, setting the hearing of said petition for Wednesday, the eighth day of September, A. D. 1909, be and the same is hereby set aside.

It is further ordered by this Court that all persons interested in the estate of said incompetent minor appear before the said Superior Court on Monday, the 20th day of September, 1909, in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10 of said Superior Court, at room 601, Grant Building, corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in said City and County of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said guardian of said incompetent minor to sell the interest of the real estate of said minor, at private sale; and that a copy of this order be published for three weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Done in open Court this 25th day of August, A. D. 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Aug. 25, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By H. G. Benedict, Deputy Clerk. 8-28-4

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17244.

HANNAH EMERY, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Hannah Emery, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Van Ness Avenue, distant eighty (80) feet northerly from the northwesterly corner of Van Ness Avenue, and Turk Street, running thence northerly and along the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches; thence at right angles southerly and parallel with Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles easterly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches to the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue and place of beginning; being a portion of Block Seventy-nine (79) Western Addition;

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June, A. D. 1909.

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
(Seal)

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: NONE.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Esq., Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market St., San Francisco. 7-10-10.

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17318, Dept. No. 4.

KATE E. BOYANTON, sometimes known as KATE E. BOYNTON, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Kate E. Boyanton, sometimes known as Kate E. Boynton, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Eddy Street distant One hundred and twenty (120) feet easterly from the easterly line of Scott Street; running thence easterly along said northerly line of Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet and to the westerly line of Farren Avenue; thence at right angles northerly and along said westerly line of Farren Avenue Seventy-five (75) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet; and thence at right angles southerly Seventy-five (75) feet to the place of beginning. Being a portion of Block No. 431, Western Addition.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that the title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 29th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of HENRIETTA ECKHARDT, Deceased—No. 8187, Dept. 10, Probate.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executor of the Last Will and Testament of HENRIETTA ECKHARDT, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said executor at Room 609 Union Trust Building, at the northeasterly corner of Montgomery and Post Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said place the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of HENRIETTA ECKHARDT, deceased.

ROBERT J. ECKHARDT,
Executor of the Last Will and Testament of Henrietta Eckhardt, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 21, 1909.

CHARLES S. WHEELER, Attorney for Executor,
609 Union Trust Building, San Francisco, Cal. 8-21-5

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17438, Dept. No. 12.

GEORGE J. MARTIN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of George J. Martin, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue distant thereon one hundred (100) feet northerly from the northerly line of C Street, running thence northerly along said westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue, twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angle westerly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angle southerly, twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angle easterly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue and the point of commencement. Being a part of Outside Land Block No. 379.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that his title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 30th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
German Savings & Loan Society (a Corporation)	530 California Street, San Francisco, Cal.
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

First Girl (looking at statue of the Venus de Milo)—"What terribly thick waists girls must have had in those days!"

Second Girl—"Yes, but perhaps the gentlemen's arms were longer."

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No.17271.

WELLS, RUSSELL & COMPANY, (a Corporation); Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest, in or Lien Upon, the Real Property herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Wells, Russell & Company, (a Corporation), plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows

First Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northwesterly line of Natoma Street, formerly Everett Street, distant two hundred (200) feet southwesterly from the intersection of the southwesterly line of Third Street with said line of Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches; thence at a right angle northwesterly eighty (80) feet; thence northeasterly parallel with Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches and thence at a right angle southeasterly eighty (80) feet to the place of beginning; being a portion of the 100 vara Lot No. 34.

Second Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Fourteenth Avenue, distant one hundred and fifty (150) feet westerly from the northwesterly corner of Fourteenth Avenue and P Street; thence westerly along said line of Fourteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet; thence at a right angle northerly two hundred (200) feet to Thirteenth Avenue; thence at a right angle easterly along the south line of Thirteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet, and thence at a right angle southerly two hundred (200) feet to the place of beginning; being a part of the O'Neill and Haley Tract, as per map on file in the Recorder's Office of said City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that its title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover its costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June A, D, 1909. By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attorneys for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 2622, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of INDIA MASTERS, Deceased.

J. R. Pringle, the Administrator of the Estate of INDIA MASTERS, deceased, having filed his petition herein, duly verified, praying for an order of sale of the real estate of said decedent for the purposes therein set forth,

It is therefore ordered by the said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the Superior Court on Wednesday, the 22nd day of September, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10, Probate, of said Superior Court, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said J. R. Pringle, Administrator, to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary.

And that a copy of this order be published four successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

And it is further ordered that the manner in which publication of this order shall be made shall be once a week for four successive weeks in said Town Talk, and that the number of publications during the above mentioned period shall be reduced accordingly.

Dated, August 13, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge

OLNEY, PRINGLE & MANNON, Attorneys for Administrator,
1236 Merchants Exchange Bldg., San Francisco, Cal. 8-21-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8101, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate and Guardianship of PHILIP ARTHUR VIERHUS, a Minor.

S. TRAVIS KENYON, guardian of the person and estate of Philip Arthur Vierhus, a minor, having filed his petition herein, praying for an order of sale of the interest in the real estate of said minor for the purposes therein set forth, and an order of this Court having been made, setting the hearing of said petition on Wednesday, the eighth day of September, 1909, and it appearing to the Court that said order should be set aside; it is therefore ordered that the said order of this Court made on the 24th day of August, 1909, setting the hearing of said petition for Wednesday, the eighth day of September, A. D. 1909, be and the same is hereby set aside.

It is further ordered by this Court that all persons interested in the estate of said minor appear before the said Superior Court on Monday, the 20th day of September, 1909, in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10 of said Superior Court, at room 601, Grant Building, corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the said City and County, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said guardian of said minor to sell the interest of the real estate of said minor, at private sale; and that a copy of this order be published for three weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Done in open Court this 25th day of August, A. D. 1909.
THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Aug. 25, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By H. G. Benedict, Deputy Clerk. 8-28-4

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of ROBERT FRANCIS SPEAR, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Mary J. Spear, executrix of the last will and testament of ROBERT FRANCIS SPEAR, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Mary J. Spear at the office of Ira S. Lillick, Esq., No. 524 Kohl Building, on the northeast corner of California Street and Montgomery Street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Robert Francis Spear, deceased.

MARY J. SPEAR,
Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of Robert Francis Spear, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 6, 1909.

IRA S. LILLICK, Attorney for Petitioner,
524 Kohl Building, San Francisco, Cal. 8-14-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 18016.

MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this Summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

PARCEL NUMBER ONE

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Green Street, distant thereon one hundred and seventeen (117) feet and seven and one-fifth (7 1-5) inches Easterly from the Easterly line of Franklin Street; running thence Easterly and along said Northerly line of Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly and parallel to Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches to the said Northerly line of Green Street and point of commencement.

Being a part of Western Addition Block No. 96.

PARCEL NUMBER TWO

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of "C" Street, distant thereon thirty-two (32) feet and six (6) inches Westerly from the Westerly line of Twenty-fifth (25th) Avenue; running thence Westerly along said Northerly line of "C" Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 356.

PARCEL NUMBER THREE

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of "T" Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the point of beginning.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 1153.

PARCEL NUMBER FOUR

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue, distant two hundred and twenty-five (225) feet Southerly from the Southeasterly corner of "A" Street and Twenty-first Avenue; running thence Southerly along the said Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the place of beginning. The same being a portion of Outside Lands Block Number Three Hundred and Three (303).

PARCEL NUMBER FIVE

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Larkin Street, distant thereon seventy-seven (77) feet and six (6) inches Northerly from the corner formed by the intersection of said Easterly line of Larkin Street with the Northerly line of Union Street, running thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Larkin Street, twenty (20) feet; thence at right angles Easterly sixty (60) feet to the Westerly line of Moore Street; thence at right angles Southerly along said line of Moore Street twenty (20) feet; and thence at right angles Westerly sixty (60) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot No. 1393.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, title, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 26th day of July A. D. 1909.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 31st day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., San Francisco, Cal. 7-31-10

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 3835, Dept. No. 10.

In the Matters of the Estate of BYRON J. TAYLOR, Deceased.

Avy A. Holdgate, formerly Avy A. Kitto, the Administratrix of the estate of BYRON J. TAYLOR, deceased, having heretofore presented to the Court and filed with the Clerk thereof her verified petition, praying for an order of this Court authorizing, empowering and directing her to sell certain real property in said petition particularly described, belonging to the estate of said deceased, and it appearing to the Court that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real property in said petition described to pay the debts, expenses and charges of administration and that it is for the advantage, benefit and best interest of the estate and those interested therein that said real estate be sold,

It is hereby ordered that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased be and they are hereby directed to appear before the above entitled Court, Department No. 10 thereof, at its Courtroom, situate in the Grant Building, at the corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on Wednesday, the 22nd day of September, 1909, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, then and there to show cause, if any you have, why an order should not be granted to said administratrix for the sale of all of said real estate.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order to show cause be published in Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation, printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, once a week for four successive weeks.

Dated, August 17, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

H. M. OWENS, Attorney for Administratrix,
Mechanics Savings Bank Building, San Francisco, Cal. 8-21-5

Louis Crepaux
(Member of Paris Grand Opera)
Has removed to his new studio,
Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.
Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger
PIANOFORTE PLAYING
924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.
For appointments phone Merritt 2845
Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Donald Maclean
SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske
STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge
ATTORNEY AT LAW
CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO
Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan
ATTORNEY AT LAW
CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor
Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty
ATTORNEYS AT LAW and
PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY
MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.
Rooms 626 and 630

HENRY P. TRICOU
NOTARY PUBLIC
508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711
Residence 852 Grove St. Phone Park 1870

MOVED
Gladding, McBean & Co.
CLAY PRODUCTS
Office
311-317 CROCKER BUILDING
Warehouse
147-151 MINNA STREET
Between New Montgomery and Third
San Francisco, Cal.

W. D. Fennimore J. W. Davis A. R. Fennimore

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store at 181 Post Street, near Grant Avenue.

Sayings of Disraeli

If a man does not take his wife to church the chances are that sooner or later he will be obliged to follow her thither.

Adam in paradise must have slept very peacefully—until he had the misfortune to lose his rib.

Marriage is much like a spacious bird cage set in a garden on a winter day. The ins would be out and the outs would be in.

Love, like a fire, is liable to be extinguished by overmuch stirring.

A good woman wearies a man; a bad one worries him.

It is often not until a woman feels she is too old to be loved by man that she seeks to be loved by God.

Man is substantive; woman is an adjective.

The two most difficult things are to paint a picture on running water, and to convince a woman who does not wish to be convinced.

Man sometimes calls a woman a goddess, but he would not love her if she were one. This fact, doubtless, accounts for the partiality which was shown by the sons of God for the daughters of men in the antediluvian period. The daughters of God must have been a trifle too ethereal.

It does not speak well for the fairer sex that as a rule he best succeeds among women who has the lowest opinion of them.

It is perhaps extraordinary that more marriages do not turn out unhappily, since the woman generally marries to get into the world, while the man marries to get out of it.

A woman may not have a religion, yet she always has a duty.

A man will return rather to her who has deceived him than to her whom he has deceived.

It is well to remember that a woman's eyes and ears are not at the same side of the head.

If a woman were by nature what she tries to make herself by art she would be dreadfully discontented.

What Men Have Said About Women

A woman who writes commits two sins: She increases the number of books and decreases the number of women.—Alphonse Karr.

What women would do if they could not cry nobody knows. What poor, defenseless creatures they would be.—Douglas Jerrold.

Juliet was a fool to kill herself, for in three months she'd have married again and been glad to be quit of Romeo.—Charles Buxton.

Women are much more alike than men They have, in truth, but two passions, vanity and love, and these are their universal characteristics.—Lord Chesterfield.

Do not allow your daughter to be taught letters by a man, though he be St. Paul or St. Frances of Assisi. The saints are in heaven.—Bishop Signori

It is not the mediocrity of women's education which makes their weakness; it is their weakness which necessarily causes their mediocrity.—De Maistre.

If a word spoken in time is worth one piece of money, silence in its time is worth two.

$550.00 Will buy the best 88-note Player on the market
CROWN AND CONCORD PIANOS
10-inch Disc Records, 25 Cents
PETER BACIGALUPI & SONS,
Phonographs and Pianos
941 Market St. Opposite Mason St.
Open Saturday Evenings.

The German Savings and Loan Society
(Member of the Associated Savings Bank of S. F.)
526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,504,498.68
Deposits June 30, 1908	$36,793,234.04
Total Assets	$39,435,681.38

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

RICHMOND DISTRICT BRANCH, 432 Clement Street between 5th and 6th Avenues. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. W. C. Heyer, Manager.

Proverbs from the Talmud.

No man is impatient with his creditors.

Truth is heavy; therefore few care to carry it.

The soldiers fight and the kings are heroes.

If thou tellest thy secret to three persons ten know it.

Commit a sin twice and it will not seem to thee a crime.

The camel desired horns and his ears were taken from him.

A single light answers as well for a hundred men as for one.

Two pieces of coin in one bag make more noise than a hundred.

Thy friend has a friend, and thy friend's friend has a friend; be discreet

60 YEARS' EXPERIENCE
PATENTS
TRADE MARKS
DESIGNS
COPYRIGHTS &C.
Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain our opinion free whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. HANDBOOK on Patents sent free. Oldest agency for securing patents.
Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice, without charge, in the Scientific American.
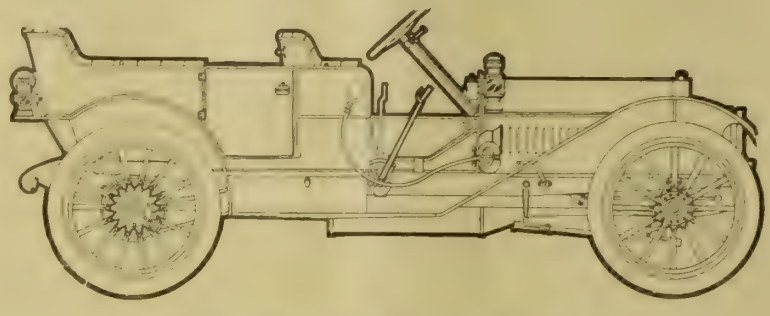
A handsomely illustrated weekly. Largest circulation of any scientific journal. Terms, $3 a year; four months, $1. Sold by all newsdealers.
MUNN & Co. 361 Broadway, New York
Branch Office, 625 F St., Washington, D. C.



MAYERLE'S GERMAN EYE WATER
By Mail 65c

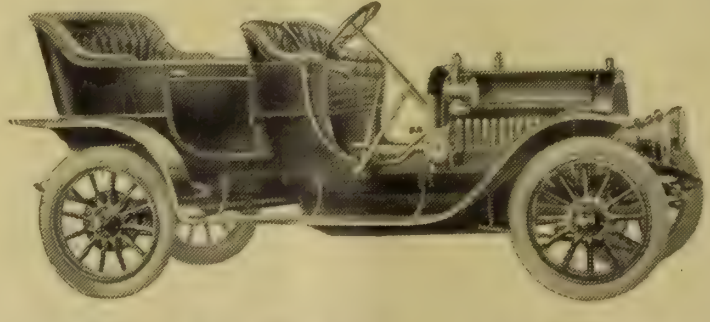
Mayerle's German Eyewater
Highly Recommended for
Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching, Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids.
NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN
Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes, relieves the strain, and preserve the sight.
GEORGE MAYERLE
Graduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 960 Market street, opposite Hale's. Phone Franklin 3279.

1910 OLDSMOBILES

HAVE ARRIVED

More money cannot buy a better car

"Oldsmobile" Trademark of automobile reliability



OLDSMOBILE LIMITED

Six Cylinder, Sixty Horsepower, Four Speed Selective Transmission, 42-inch Jinriksha Wheels. $4800 f. o. b. San Francisco. The car you will surely buy if sufficiently exacting.

BUICK "WHITE STREAK"

"The Runabout That's Talked About." $1150 f. o. b. San Francisco.

Some cars of some makes win sometimes

But all Buicks win all the time

BUICK "40"

Winner of Cobe Trophy (Western Vanderbilt), Lookout Mountain Hill Climb, Prest-o-Lite and G. & J. Trophies, Indianapolis, and every big speed and hill-climbing event in the United States and Canada this year. $1900 f. o. b. San Francisco.

HOWARD AUTOMOBILE COMPANY

523-533 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

Phone Market 1536 SAN FRANCISCO

Vol. XVII. No. 889. SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 11, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

SAN FRANCISCO TOWN TALK

LATEST FALL STYLES

IN

LADIES' KNIT COATS

NOW ON EXHIBITION AT

HEADQUARTERS FOR KNIT GOODS

Gantner & Mattern Co.

No. 1751

No. 8618

Striking, novel effects just from our mill
These deserve your earliest attention

Note the Two-Toned garment, No. 1751, Hand Knit Box Coat. Also in solid colors.
No. 1728 illustrates the fleecy, shaggy pure Llama Wool; tailor finish, double breasted, auto length. Also in a shorter size.
Our extra heavy wool knit, 46-inch Auto and Street Coats are shown in No. 8618; these embody the highest Knit Art. In any color.
Observe No. 1438 for one of our best and very pronounced Knit Garments. Newest fancy stitch; in white, cardinal and other colors.

No. 1438

WE ARE KNITTERS

Of Every Kind of UNDERWEAR

FOR MAN, WOMAN AND CHILD

OUR HOSIERY

Abounds in values and novelties. Every style, fabric, color, outsizes, opera lengths, etc.

WE ARE COMPLETE OUFITTERS

For Bathing, Gym, Athletic and all Outdoor Sports

No. 1728

Gantner & Mattern Co.
KNITTERS

Cor. POST AND GRANT AVE. SAN FRANCISCO

SUMMER RESORTS

THE VENDOME SAN JOSE

Is the ideal objective point for the motorist. The accommodations are complete and the ride from either side of the bay is delightful. This hotel is unsurpassed in the West for the beauty of its environment and for those qualities which contribute to ease and comfort. H. W. LAKE, Manager.

THE PERRY HOTEL

Madison St. and Boren Ave.
SEATTLE, WASH.

Every Modern Convenience—Absolutely Fire Proof
European Plan, The Highest Grade

Under new management, centrally located and commanding a view of the Olympics, Cascade Mountains, Mount Rainier and Puget Sound.

J. S. McTERNAN, Manager

BYRON
HOT SPRINGS

One of the world's most curative springs, 2½ hours from San Francisco; one of California's best hotels and a delightful place for rest and recreation. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, James Flood Building, any S. P. Agent, or Peck-Judah, 789 Market St., San Francisco, or 553 S. Spring St., Los Angeles, or address manager, Byron Hot Springs, California.

HOTEL WASHINGTON

J. M. LUX, MANAGER

SEATTLE, WASH.

A magnificent modern structure involving over One Million and a Half Dollars. Conducted on Most liberal ideas of Experience. Its appointments and service cannot be excelled in the United States. The management cordially invites your patronage.

HOTEL CUMBERLAND

Broadway at 54th Street

NEW YORK

Near 50th St. Subway Station and 53d St. Elevated

Ideal Location,
Near Theatres, Shops, and
Central Park

New and Fireproof

Strictly First Class in Every Respect

Rates Reasonable
$2.50 with bath, and up.

All Hardwood Floors and
Oriental Rugs

10 Minutes' Walk to 20 Theatres

Excellent Restaurant Prices Moderate

Send for Booklet

HARRY P. STIMSON,
formerly with Hotel Imperial

R. J. BINGHAM,
formerly with Hotel Woodward

HOTEL WASHINGTON ANNEX

SEATTLE, WASH.

Best Rooms Best Service

Strictly First-Class

J. H. DAVIS - - - - - Proprietor

YOSEMITE

SENTINEL HOTEL Open the Year Round; Steam Heated; Electric Lighted.

CAMP YOSEMITE Electric Lighted; Opened May 1st; the Largest Hotel-Camp on the Coast.

Under One Management. For Rates, Reservations or other information, address J. B. COOK, Proprietor, Yosemite, Cal.

HOTEL ARGONAUT

Society of California Pioneers Building

FOURTH STREET NEAR MARKET — San Francisco — CENTRE OF THE CITY

Catering to Family and Commercial Trade

400 Rooms $1.00 per day and up Dining room seats 500 guests

Special 50c Luncheon from 11:30 to 2 p. m.

Weekly and monthly rates on application. Free bus meets all trains and steamers.

Telephone Douglas 3393 EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager

SUMMER RESORTS

Hotel and Grounds

Plan to spend your vacation and your week-end outings at

HOTEL DEL MONTE

during

The Annual Month of Sports---August 15 to September 15th

Annual Dog Show — Annual Golf Tournament
First State Bridge Whist Congress — Annual Tennis Tournament
Opening of Pebble Beach Lodge

Make your plans to be there. Write for rates and reservations to-day to H. R. WARNER, Manager.

NAPA SODA SPRINGS HOTEL

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

California's famous mountain spa, only 50 miles from San Francisco. The nearest watering place and summer resort to the city. 1,000 feet elevation, overlooking 25 miles of beautiful Napa Valley. For terms address Manager Napa Soda Springs Hotel, Napa County, Cal.

Boca Hotel and Annex

TRUCKEE RIVER

Address CHAS. GARRISON, BOCA, CAL.

FALLEN LEAF LODGE

LAKE TAHOE, CAL.

New home-like resort at the head of Fallen Leaf Lake; five miles south of Lake Tahoe. Centrally situated in the grandest part of the Lake Tahoe Scenic Wonderland. Rates $14.00 per week and upward. HARRY WHITCOMB, Manager, Fallen Leaf, Lake Tahoe, Cal.

GILROY HOT SPRINGS

Only four hours from San Francisco; delightful stage ride over the best kept mountain road in California. Unsurpassed table, health-giving waters, telephone, postoffice. Rates $12 to $17.50 a week; baths free. Trains leave Third and Townsend streets at 9 a. m. Direct stage connection. See Peck-Judah, 789 Market street.

W. J. McDONALD, Proprietor.

HOTEL WESTMINSTER

LOS ANGELES, CAL. Fourth and Main Sts.

AMERICAN PLAN, Reopened.
Rates per day, $2.50 Rooms without Bath
Rooms with Bath, $3.00, $3.50 and $4.00.

EUROPEAN PLAN.
$1.00 per day and up.
With bath, $1.50 and up

F. O. JOHNSON, Proprietor

ROSS McMAHON AWNING AND TENT CO.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

Tents, Awnings, Hammocks, Bags and Covers

Phone Kearny 2030 — 403 BATTERY STREET

The grape cure season at

ÆTNA SPRINGS

will commence on September 9th with a

GRAPE FESTIVAL

a unique celebration, in costume, following the traditions of the annual feasts in the vineyard sections of the various European countries. Write for information to

LEN. D. OWENS, Proprietor,
Aetna Springs, Napa Co., Cal.

PARAISO SPRINGS

MONTEREY CO., CAL.

The most accessible of all resorts; a delightful terminal for an automobile trip. Take 8 a. m. train from Third and Townsend; you arrive at spring 1 p. m. for lunch. Natural hot soda and sulphur plunge and tub baths, 104 to 116 degrees, for rheumatism, malaria and all stomach troubles. Iron and arsenic waters. Altitude 1400 feet. H. H. McGOWAN, Proprietor.

PINE LODGE

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

In the mountains by the sea. Surroundings perfect for rest and recreation. Trout stream, boating, bathing. Home garden of berries and vegetables. New hotel and cottages, modern conveniences. Two miles from Santa Cruz. Rates $9.00 per week and upwards. For particulars address PINE LODGE, Santa Cruz, Cal.

TAKE TAMALPAIS TRIP

and breathe good air.

Half a mile high in two hours' time. No other trip like it.

Via Sausalito Ferry, Foot of Market Street

HOTEL VICTORIA

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Manager

N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton

CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL

Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine. Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.

American and European Plan.

Leading Hotels and Resorts

LONG BEACH SANITARIUM

LONG BEACH, CALIF.

Battle Creek Sanitarium Methods

A splendidly equipped QUIET, REFINED and MODERN medical and surgical Institution BY-THE-SEA, where the sick, run down or work-tired may go and know that they will receive the very best of care and attention at reasonable rates. Gentlemen and Lady Physicians. Graduate nurses only. Climate exceptionally fine. Cool in summer, warm and dry in winter. Descriptive Booklet mailed FREE. W. RAY SIMPSON, Manager.

Long Distance Phones in Every Room

YE ALPINE TAVERN

Beautiful Mountain Resort on Mt. Love

Just a mile above the sea. American plan $3.00 per day, $15 per week. Choice of rooms in hotel or cottages. Spend a vacation 5,000 feet above the sea, among great pines and oaks. For information, D. A. Munger, General Agent, Pacific Electric R. R., Los Angeles, or office.

HOTEL ALEXANDRIA

LOS ANGELES

IN SAFETY, SERVICE
AND SANITATION

HAS TAKEN ITS PLACE
AMONG THE BEST HOTELS

A. C. BILICKE, President
S. J. WHITMORE, Vice-Pres. and Gen. Mgr. JOS. REICHL, Asst. Mgr.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO

CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. Power boats from the Hotel meet passengers from the North on the arrival of the Pacific Coast S. S. Co. steamers. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, 334 S. Spring St., Los Angeles.

THE FORUM CAFE

O A K L A N D

Now under the management of

MR. GUSTAV MANN

THE ANGELUS

LOS ANGELES

One of California's Best Hotels
Centrally located; street cars direct to hotel.

Rates $1.50 per Day Up

HOTEL HARCOURT

Formerly the Nordhoff.

SUTTER AND LARKIN STREETS

AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN

An Elegantly Furnished Modern Home. Phone Franklin 2100

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

CAMERAS

Kodaks, Developing, Printing, Supplies, Etc.

"Don't take a vacation unless you take pictures as you go along"

462-464 THIRTEENTH STREET, Between Broadway and Washington

SMITH BROS. STATIONERS OAKLAND

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, September 11, 1909. No. 889.

M. ROGER SOMMER

This aviator has made a remarkable record in one respect—the short time it took him to become proficient. On July 4 he saw a French aeroplane for sale and bought it, taking a short flight the same day. On July 5 he was in the air for thirty minutes. The weather was bad for the following week, but on July 14 he made a long cross-country flight in France. On July 17 he took another thirty minute flight, and flew 1 hour and 4 minutes the following day, 1 hour and 50 minutes on August 1, and on August 7 beat the Wilbur Wright record of 2 hours and 20 minutes by staying in the air for 2 hours and 27 minutes. The picture illustrates the heaviness of the aeroplane, which many imagine to be a very flimsy affair.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor.
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION—One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.

The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.

For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.

Los Angeles office, 427 South Main Street.

Seattle office, 804 Third Avenue.

We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

The Conquest of the Pole

In the annals of civilization there is no brighter page than that which records the history of Arctic exploration and discovery. Among the most heroic and praiseworthy exploits of the Anglo-Saxon race are those of the men who braved unknown dangers and risked their lives in the siege of the Arctic ice and night to enlarge the store of human knowledge. Of the sacrifices inspired by that noble incentive, which this country has made, she may well be proud, and justly may she boast of the valuable results achieved in the interest of science even before either the gallant Cook or the persistent Peary undertook the conquest of the Polar citadel. At this writing the world stands amazed at the news brought back from the North by these two daring explorers both of whom claim to have attained the object of their quest. It is to be hoped that the claims of both may be verified and that the glory of neither shall be dimmed by a display of the temper which mutual friends have indulged. At this writing we are not informed as to what they accomplished of scientific value by their dash to the Pole, but to conceive that their triumph holds nothing more than sentimental interest is absurd. They have at least marked out paths for others; and unquestionably the Arctic area still presents many and important problems for solution which are bound to engage the attention of intrepid explorers. Within the Arctic circle are 3,000,000 square miles most of which are yet to be examined and charted. We are yet to acquaint ourselves with the greater part of that vast expanse from the sea north of Behring Strait and the Coast of Alaska right over to the northern coast of Greenland and Grinnell Land. We must yet obtain the most accurate observations in the North Polar Sea, extending over months and years, under the extreme conditions that there present themselves; we must let learn of the variations of the atmospheric temperature, of the winds, of precipitation; we must have a thorough knowledge of the temperature of the Polar Sea, of its salinity, its gas, its currents, its flora and fauna, in all latitudes and in all localities. There is yet to be investigation of the magnetic currents in these northern regions; of the force of gravity at different points and of geological conditions through which may be acquired a deeper insight into the history of our earth. So we see that it is a mistake to suppose that the reaching of the Pole was the chief end of Arctic exploration. The most important problems of Arctic research still remain to be solved, and they will not cease to lay claim upon our efforts. To Dr. Cook belongs perhaps the credit of having scored an important point, but perhaps it is of much less importance than the achievements of Lieutenant Peary who twice penetrated more than half the distance from the Arctic circle to the Pole, breaking down the wall of terror which surrounded this great field, opening it to the practical work of those who will follow, and revolutionizing popular opinion regarding Arctic navigation.

Still Striving for Perfection

A new experiment in local self-government is now being conducted in Des Moines, the capital of Iowa, and the people of that city, after a year's experience, have come to the conclusion that they are blessed with an ideal system of government. The principle of the new system is that of the so-called Galveston Plan which has given satisfaction for some years. The responsibility of administering the affairs of Des Moines is placed on a governing board of five men elected at large, without regard to wards, sectional lines or party politics. To this governing board is given large and important powers; in fact, it has all the authority, powers and duties formerly had by the various boards, committees and officials of the old system. The theory upon which the plan was adopted was that power and responsibility should be centralized in a small body of men; and to prevent the abuse of this power a safeguard was devised in the form of that amusing appeal to the gullibility of the dear people, the initiative, the referendum and the recall. The difference between this system and the one under which we of this city are governed is in the main numerical. The freeholders that framed our Charter were of the opinion that centralization of power and responsibility was precisely and solely what was needed to achieve perfection in government, but they were enamored of the monarchical principle. One man should have all the power, they said, because then the people would be extremely cautious in the selection of their ruler, and the choice of the people, conscious of the great weight of responsibility placed upon him, would render the best service of which he was capable. To these convictions the freeholders were so ardently attached that they could not conceive of an honest difference of opinion on the subject. In their judgment it was a matter that could not reasonably be brought into the field of intellectual speculation. Like the advocates of the direct primary they regarded all persons that differed with them as the subservient tools of special interest. There was no room for argument; no occasion for anything but denunciation of the new idea in municipal government. Since that period in our history experience has shattered a whole Pantheon of political idols. The natural goodness of man under the weight of great responsibility has gone the way of the divine right of Kings. As to the innate sagacity of the people, that ancient delusion which has been dissipated thousands of times since the world began, but which the people are always to be flattered into embracing, is once more doing duty in the service of artful demagogues. Perhaps the Des Moines plan with its governing board of five will accelerate the Millennium, but let us not enthuse until it has been fairly tested. We must confess that we are sceptical. We cannot get the notion out of our head that God never intended that we should be perfectly happy on this earth.

The Pursuit of Bradbury

Once more the law has been signally upheld and enforced. Stern and rigorous justice has been done; the penitentiary gates have closed upon William Bradbury, and the turnkey stalks behind, much to the gratification of the moralists of the daily press, who have kept close watch on the infirm and despised old man ever since misfortunes began to crowd upon him. They were resolved either that an example should be made of him, or, in the event of his baffling the prosecuting officers of the State and going unwhipped of justice that the multitude should be summoned with all the righteous efficacy of honest indignation to witness the impotency of the law as administered in this republication stronghold of a corrupt and arrogant plutocracy. Every move that was made in behalf of the old man was recorded in the daily prints by the self-constituted watch-dogs of justice, and the interest of the plain people was never permitted to slacken for a moment. At a very early stage of the proceedings the sheriff was made to understand that the eyes of the plain people were upon him, and like a sensible politician he assumed an aspect of severity and took pains to make it evident that it would be vain for the old man to expect any favors from him. When Governor Gillett granted Bradbury a reprieve pending the consideration of a petition for the prisoner's pardon, that most immaculate of all moralists, the morning organ of the Spreckels family, raged and stormed as though the ark containing our birthright were tottering. The Call threatened to consign the Governor to endless infamy, or at the very least to sacrifice him to grinning scorn; but with the denial of Bradbury's petition the Spreckels organ relaxed its aspect of fire-eyed fury, and rejoiced moderately in the triumph of justice. Then came the tragic spectacle of the parting of the aged capitalist and his faithful, heartbroken wife; and the big dailies, sensible of the news value of this touching scene assigned reporters to the pleasant task of obtruding upon the old couple in the hour of their deep affliction. The parting over, the reporters tracked the old man to the very door of his cell and recorded the emotions he expressed as he staggered beneath the sudden, overwhelming realization of the horror of his fate. And this is journalism of the American type! Is it not enough to make one shudder? We shall doubtless be reminded that Bradbury was convicted of a felony and told that he deserves the punishment he is undergoing. As to whether he deserves the punishment or not we are by no means certain. That he is a very disagreeable old man we very well know, and were he younger we should have no sympathy for him. His career has been a sordid one. An illiterate, coarse-grained, stubborn individual, it is much to his discredit that in matters affecting his purse he has dealt far from decently with his fellow man. Nevertheless we cannot help deploring the fact that it has seemed that the pursuit of him by the press and others has been inspired not so much with honest indignation at his misconduct as with the sinister purpose of stimulating prejudice in the heart of the mob against the class that he represents.

Warped Womanhood

Not long ago in this city a poor mother, helpless in the fell clutch of Circumstance, daily swallowing more insults than bread, took her courage in her hands and, having first carefully bathed it and dressed it in its little best, blew out the brains of her baby. Which done, she drank poison, and was by society, with infinitely cruel pains, nursed back to living death, to the end of punishing her according to law for infanticide. Now, the deliberate taking of the life one has given is, next to the taking of the life that has given one life, held—and justly—to be the most heinous of murders. And yet, if that child-slaughter by her whose case we here consider was done of malice aforethought, we have indeed missed our guess. For her babe she foresaw, if we understand her aright, no life other in kind than was her own, that is to say, existence insufferable. Which, then, in the sight of just men and of angels of mercy, was the kindlier hand, that which blew out the as yet blissfully ignorant brains of the babe, or that which snatched the woefully wise mother from the sorry sleep of a suicide's grave? Indubitably complex was the mother's motive, more complex still that of organized society, but which, think you, on the whole the tenderer? Make you inferences from this simple fact: Sick and in prison languishes the infanticide pending her trial, and of the less stern sex none save one. Maud Younger, has visited her. Is she a stranger so alien as not possibly to be taken into the heart? a monster so inhuman as to be outside the pale of human pity? Or is it not possible that that lonely final laving of baby limbs was purgatory enough to wash away not only the poor soul's own sins but, vicariously, a few—the few—of her more fortunate sisters'? God only knows.

Murder Under the Microscope

Child-murder is, speaking roughly, of two kinds, positive and negative, murder after birth, murder before birth, and murder before conception. The hand of the sweet mother who is without sin in this respect may safely be trusted not to fling any stone at our desperate infanticide, or else to fling it with a woman's aim, so as to strike, or hit, the father, or some impertinent bystander. But the hand that would fain rule the world without rocking the cradle—it we, for our part, would not trust with ever so small a self-righteous flint. It's aim is only too true!—too true to be good for what ails the infanticide and would-be taker-off of self; in short, too masculine. Doubtless there be who hold that under the more efficient and beneficent regime of the suffragette, whom a child could call father, its mother could in turn call husband, and that invariably, nor ever need to suffer hunger, or insult, or temptation to take her babe or herself off. Holders of such incredible heresies we ask to ponder upon the momentous fact that of the many negative child-murderesses under this less efficient and more malevolent regime of ours, are not a few who call, every unnatural one of them, a kindly and well-to-do and philoprogenitive man husband, and naught but a poodle chick or child.

Kindness Conspicuous by its Absence

Laws are perforce heartless. Can women make them and yet run no risk of unmaking themselves? Already the so-called woman suffrage movement has two sins to answer for: It (to borrow an idea from Alphonse Karr) increases the number of politicians and decreases the number of women. Heartless as is the law of man,

The Hub.
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

YOU GET GOOD MEN'S CLOTHES IN THIS EXCLUSIVE MEN'S SHOP. OUR STOCK REPRESENTS THE SEVEN BEST KNOWN MAKERS, WHO MAKE CLOTHES OF CLASS, AND FOR THIS EXCLUSIVE SHOP. THEY DON'T AVIATE ELSEWHERE. CAN'T PULL THE WOOL OVER THE EYES OF SMART DRESSERS. THEY WANT TAILORED CLOTHES.

THIS LABEL REPRESENTS

The Hub
Chas Keilus & Co.
San Francisco.

Atterbury System, Brokaw Bros.
Alfred Benjamin & Co., Ely Meyer & M. C. Simon,
Adler-Rochester, Levy Bros.' Co.
Paragon Trousers.

"We know better" than to handle clothes of makers having a department store reputation. The weakest spot in "department hasheries" is evident in their men's clothing section. All the page advertisements in the world can't produce good clothes from waning makers. It's the "Tiffany quality of men's clothes" can only be had in exclusive shops like ours. The proof of the pudding is in chewing the string.

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

it, to our certain knowledge, leaves more than one loophole unestopped whereby the womankind of this city might have legitimately crept into prison, to the praiseworthy end of standing between its necessary heartlessness and the sore need of the infanticide in question for that gentler-sex compassion which is nowadays in danger of being voted out of existence. Though the infanticide be indeed least of His little ones, what scriptural authority have women for leaving her in prison unvisited? Meanwhile they are either for visiting the polls where their stay would be, not a visit but a visitation, or for purifying our morals by gratifying the vindictiveness of unconscionable scoundrels.

A Jealous Educator

Chancellor Strong of the University of Kansas has declared war against correspondence schools because they entice more dollars out of that perennially bleeding State than the taxpayers pay for the maintenance of the public school system. This stern champion of home talent should assuage himself. Something should be done to awaken him to the realization that a consuming thirst for education is raging in this country and that correspondence schools are great public benefactors that are striving to assist State institutions in mitigating the poignant pangs that torment the parched populace. Who cares how much money is spent in dispensing scholastic refreshment? Is it not set forth in the Articles of National Faith that knowledge obtained from books more than compensates for any possible material loss? Instead of complaining of the drain that has been put on the wealth of Kansas by correspondence schools Chancellor Strong should be pointing with pride to the rage for intellectual development in that progressive and prosperous State. The correspondence school is a great institution, as peculiarly American as the lunch counter and the original get-rich-quick scheme. It generously promises to do everything with lightning speed for everyone. It marks out royal roads to every conceivable goal of culture or intellectual achievement. There is no art or science that cannot be taught by mail; no mechanical trade or polite profession that cannot be made accessible to ambitious youth by a correspondence school. Instruction is offered in drawing, painting, sculpture, piano-tuning, proof-reading, civil engineering and hundreds of other things the mastery of which was once supposed to entail years of study and practical experience. From the prospectus of a correspondence school we infer that the deaf may be taught to tune pianos, the armless to hew stone, while no preliminary preparation or intellectual bent is required to master the art of short-story writing. Nor does the correspondence school need any aid from philanthropists. Thanks to the passion for knowledge that rages among the American people the correspondence school is self-supporting. This is more than can be said for Chancellor Strong's university.

Perspective Impressions

Taft's record shot at golf dwindles to insignificance compared to the hot shot that Roosevelt used to launch.

King Alfonso now wears a full beard. Probably going to beard the anarchists in their stronghold.

The latest fad in the East is to have trained nurses for pet dogs. An announcement of a raise in the rent of padded cells may be expected at any time.

"Equality before the law—it is a good sentiment," says Francis J. Heney. Then why does he attempt to destroy it?

A Japanese editor who has been traveling in this country complains that the American wives are more expensive than the Oriental variety. American husbands are perfectly willing to pay the difference.

A number of Holy Rollers have been arrested for dancing undraped in the streets in the southern end of town. New York theatrical managers please wire.

The Portola illuminations will be the most elaborate ever seen in this city. And it is safe to predict that some of our citizens will become conspiciously lit up on the festive occasion.

WHICH HERE IT BE, WHICH SHALL IT BE? I LOOKED AT BILL, BILL LOOKED AT ME"

—Morris in the Spokane Spokesman-Review

CHEERING NEWS FROM HOME, OR [illegible]

—Dart in the Denver Times.

The Flying Machine

Possibilities of Aerial Navigation in the Future—Commuting by Dirigible and Aeroplane—Rafts for Safety Stations in Mid-Ocean

By W. J. Weymouth

That the airship has a future has been established beyond question; what that future will develop is largely a matter of speculation. The airship is so young, its limitations under its present development are so great, its possibilities under the evolution that may come are so manifold, that what seems safe to predict for ten years from now may be merely fantasy; and by the same token what seems fantasy may become a certainty. For a few years past the comic papers have printed pictures of the flying machines overcrowding the atmosphere. And at Rheims last week there were on several occasions more than half a dozen aeroplanes circling over the grounds at the same time, while thousands of people grew nearly delirious with excitement. These machines, with their wings outspread, with their motors buzzing uncannily, darted hither and thither, made sharp turns, and behaved for all the world like a flock of swallows. Is that so greatly different from what the prophetic illustrators—men of imagination—have pictured for our amusement? It is enough to make Darius Green arise from his grave. Of course he was only an imaginary Darius and he has no grave to arise from; but this fictional character at whom the poet made fun because he tried to fly was a symbol of the progressive spirit that often provokes ridicule. But whereas the author of "Darius Green and his Flying Machine" wrote in a spirit of scoffing levity, the artists for the most part have mixed prophecy with their ink. When they drew pictures of airship stations on top of skyscrapers, with landing and starting platforms, they believed—most of them, at least—that such things might come to pass. And they will. You and I may live to see the day when such stations will be on top of the Mills Building, the Merchants' Exchange, and other great structures of the town. The commuters who in a decade or so will soar back and forth across the bay in aeroplanes must have some place to land—and that they will commute by air is just about as sure as the fact that you are reading this. The common ordinary commuter will no doubt come with many others in a dirigible— which compares to an aeroplane as a bluejay does to a swallow—but the more wealthy and pretentious trans-bay resident will have his own machine, with which he will come from Oakland, Alameda or Berkeley in ten minutes—if it isn't too foggy. This may appear at first glance to come under the head of fantasy; yet if Bleriot can fly across the English Channel in an aeroplane who shall say that the ordinary citizen will not be able, a few years hence, to cross San Francisco Bay by the same means? All that is needed is increased perfection, and that is coming every day. In three days' automobiling at Indinapolis recently there were seven fatalities—no one has been killed at Rheims, and there was but one minor accident. So it seems that aeroplanes are more safe than other vehicles of transportation. To be sure, it will be different when they become plentiful; then look out—or up—for what tumbles from above; no man's head will be safe, nor his roof, nor anything that can be harmed by the impact of human beings, twisted machinery and other debris falling from great heights. It may come to pass that we shall have to stretch a net over the world to keep things from dropping on us. Festive picnickers in a dirigible, heaving empty beer bottles overboard now and then, would be a source of danger and terror. A restaurant pie, hurtling down from a height of a thousand feet would cause great havoc; and who would want to be cracked over the head with a hard-boiled egg coming from an altitude equal to that of Mt. Tamalpais? Danger will abide in the upper regions, and our necks will become twisted through our habit of trying simultaneously to observe the course of our footsteps and keep track of what is hovering between heaven and earth. We shall become a nation of wrynecks—or an extinct race through nervous prostration.

Seriously, though, the aeroplane does not ascend to great heights. Many of the flights are taken only fifty or one hundred feet above the earth. At Rheims one or two aviators have gone up several hundred feet, claiming that by so doing they avoided air currents. As a rule, however, one hundred feet will be high enough, especially when sailing across the open country. Of course, to fall that distance would jar one up considerably—but so does a railway collision or an automobile accident. There is no doubt that there will be automatic parachutes to be used in case the machinery should give out, as it is almost certain to do once in a while—if that is any consolation to you who contemplate aviation.

This bring us to one of the most important phases of aerial navigation—long flights between continents. It is reasonable to suppose that inside of a quarter of a century there will be much traffic by air between America and Europe and across the Pacific. As enough gasoline could not be carried for such a trip—at least, not under the present development—the machines would have to halt now and then. In that case it would be feasible to have landing stations in the ocean. Great rafts might be built with houses on board for the keepers, and hotels and restaurants as well as other places of refreshment—no need there of a liquor license. These rafts could be kept in place—that is, within a comparatively small area—by the use of powerful tugs. One at each of the four corners could attend to that. It is approximately 3,000 miles across the Atlantic. A raft every three hundred miles would mean only ten along any given route of travel. They would be a necessity outside of their utility as landing stations. Each could be equipped with wireless, and when the "C. D. Q." signal flashed through the air from an aeroplane in distress, a tug could go to the rescue. To be sure, it would be too late sometimes—but under the present system people are drowned at sea, and there is no reason to suppose that there will be any more fatalities under the future methods than under the present. And if there were—more people are killed by railways than suffered death by stage-coach. Death always collects added toll from increased rapidity or facility in travel. It is a penalty we pay for being in a hurry.

How about criminals? Will we be able to pursue them with the same measure of success as attends thief taking now—although that, it must be confessed, isn't great. The officers of the law will have their work cut out for them. There will be a new hazardous occupation—aerial policing. But thieving will be a far more dangerous profession then, which may tend to decrease the number of people engaged in it. There is something distressing in the thought of being winged, like a duck, high in the air, and coming down with a flop. The boldest burglar would shrink somewhat from it. Yet the escape of thieves will be well guarded. When a criminal is known to be abroad in the air, wireless messages will sizzle through the atmosphere all over the land. Officers will be on the watch. The fugitive will have to land somewhere to get gasoline or provisions—then will officer O'Toole nab him, snap handcuffs

(Continued on Page 34.)

J. C. WILSON
BROKER
Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office. Mills, Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

The Lady on the Coin

By Leo Larguier (From the French)

My faithless friend Laurent Delmont was allowing me to applaud alone the last act of the play to which I had brought him on this first-night. He had risen and was gazing at the crowd. Really it was a marvelous sight. If a militant anarchist had desired vengeance upon the fortunate in this world, he would only have needed to throw a bomb into the orchestra pit to destroy at one blow the flower of celebrity, elegance and wealth.

The President of the Republic was clapping his hands near the stage. The boxes looked like flower baskets, with bouquets of fair ladies in low-necked gowns and shimmering with diamonds. Beautiful arms rested upon the velvet balustrades. In the pit below trembled the silvered heads of a few old masters whom we had venerated at the university as the equals of the gods. An illustrious artist, a step in front of us, was arranging a mantle of white fur about the shoulders of his daughter. Crosses of the Legion of Honor, decorations of all sorts, sparkled on the uniforms, and leaning back in his seat was a tall, bald old man with closely-shaven face, who was none other than John D. Rockefeller, the oil king, who was spending a few days in Paris.

Laurent took me by the arm. On the stage, the curtain had risen again, revealing in the midst of regal scenery the most illustrious actress in the world, bending under the divine and sonorous breeze of applause. So many hands moving at the extremities of black sleeves and bare arms made the hall seem filled with fluttering wings of captive birds.

We rose to leave and followed the brilliant throng, fearing at each moment that our feet would encroach upon the thick, undulating waves of those velvet and satin trains. At the door of the theatre, a man still young despite his gray hair bowed to us. Laurent grasped his hand, exchanged a few commonplaces with him, and then carried me away to sup in one of those superb restaurants where people go after the play. While the table was being set, my friend said to me:

"Did you notice the young fellow I spoke to a few moments ago? Well, that was Jean de Pommeuse. I had not seen him for two years. He has inherited a fortune and is back in Paris. I suppose you are familiar with the extraordinary history of the boy. He has gone through three fortunes already and has been talked about a good deal. He is a curious fellow."

The waiter served us a roseate meat under an amber jelly that trembled slightly and reflected dimly the flames of the candles that illuminated our table.

Laurent continued:

"Yes, a very curious fellow, a complex nature which combines the cynicism of the high liver with the sentimentality of the young poet. Just note this for instance; this young man who at the age of twenty-five had already experienced the most startling adventures and led an almost scandalous life, this man famous for his follies, was in love with a poor girl who died. Indeed it was because of that great love, or rather that extravagant dream, that he committed at the gaming table a crime that was almost infamous and at the same time quite innocent, as you shall see.

"One winter's night, at the hour when the rag-pickers start to work, Jean de Pommeuse was still seated at the roulette table in one of the great clubs to which he belonged.

"He had been losing for a long time and his ill-luck would not change. Then he lost his last money, the last of the third fortune which he had scattered to the four winds in Paris, Monte Carlo, London and Vienna. Bank notes flew from his hands like the leaves that the wind finds under benches and carries no one knows where. He has told me himself how he became discouraged and stared at the fatal cards, the knaves, the crowned and bearded kings, the queens of Hebrew pedigree, whose smiles are so sweet to the winners and so cruel to the losers. He examined a chaplet of bleeding hearts, one solitary red heart in the middle of an ivory card, and all these emblems took on a new meaning of which he had been before unconscious. Staggering, he rose and left the table. He went to the buffet and ordered an orangeade. There was left just one golden louis in a little chain purse. Should he risk this too? Should he with this bit of gold once more tempt Fortune who had disowned him and basely betrayed him? He hesitated. Then he decided that there were too many memories attached to the coin and that he would never risk it.

"He was in the grip of the fever, however, and he felt that win he must. Regardless of everything, he returned to the gaming room and going to a different table, leaned over the back of a chair, and placed his louis on one of the colors.

"The croupier stretched his hand toward the wheel and with a short: 'Stakes closed,' set it in motion. The wheel turned briskly and the flexible bar hummed as it touched the little pins.

"It stopped—Jean de Pommeuse had lost again!

"Then, in the presence of the players who thought that he had gone mad, for he had long been known as a man of honor, he leaned over, picked up his louis, and struggling with the employees, left his fur coat in their hands and fled. That was the last they saw of him."

With the utmost care, Laurent Delmont filled my glass from a dusty bottle lying in an osier basket, like a mortar upon its carriage, and resumed:

"Don't you understand? It is perfectly simple. I shall explain. The only being that Jean de Pommeuse could have loved was a girl whom he had met at a sculptor's studio. She was a model, and her mother went everywhere with her. She posed only for the head and bust. Poverty had brought her, after the death of her father, to this honest calling. I shall show you her portrait presently. You probably have a few copies in your pocket now."

I understood less and less as he proceeded. How could I have in my pocket several portraits of a woman whose name I did not know and whose face I had never seen?

My friend explained:

"I was saying a while ago that she posed for sculptors, and only for the head and bust. It seems that a masterpiece resulted. She had the childish grace of a little girl, the freshness of a young woman and the robust serenity of a woman. She possessed all charms, and I cannot describe her wonderful eyes. I never saw her but once, and then she almost dazzled me. The sculptor took but the outline of that adorable face, and the picture gives but an imperfect idea of the model."

He took from his pocket a gold louis.

"See, this profile of the Republic is hers, for hers was the face from which it was made.

"The sculptor paid for her three sittings with the first coin that was stamped with her image, and Jean de Pommeuse being present begged the girl to exchange the shining coin for another which he offered. He desired it as a souvenir. Valentine laughed, and accepted the bargain. Six months later, Jean was going to marry her, when she died.

"Do you understand now? That last louis which had remained in his purse on the night when he was ruined was the one that his fiancee had given him, and that is why he hesitated to play it, and stole it after he had lost it."

It was late and we had finished our supper. Laurent threw on the table-cloth a piece of gold, and before the waiter took it I had time to see that upon it also was the pure profile of Valentine, the lady on the coin, with the belaureled cap; the figure of the French Republic.

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 56 Kearny street.

The Spectator

The Latest Discovery

Long sought, the North Pole has at length been discovered—to be nothing more nor less than a flag-pole, and thereon fluttering in the frozen breeze the inevitable stars and stripes. Blessed be exploration! Now atop the pole the redoubtable eagle screameth every which way, south, east and west, breaking into smithereens the white silence all-unbroken since the beginning wherein was the Word. Getting wind of the aeroplane, the geographical pole has yielded to the "inevitable" aforesaid and allowed itself to be tagged, after an unconscionably long and costly game of hide and seek; wherefore for the moment 'tis It. Though, unlike Paderewski, no magnetic Pole, it none the less has had considerable attraction for men of iron nerves. Singularly ferrugineous nerves has your true native of this bracing climate. 'Twas a Yankee braved the innumerous deadly kissing bug, marching boldly up to the red mouth of destruction's self. 'Twas a Yankee dared the depths of the sea and, from the very jaws of death, bobbed up serenely. 'Twas a Yankee showed his tail feathers to the French aviators; and last and most a Yankee it was into whose nervy hands the ghostly pole gave itself up. Wherefore, flutter, Stars and Stripes; scream, Eagle! We, U. S. & Co., are the People.

The Controversy

Tinged with sadness, however, is our exultation even while our tongue grows wanton in our felicitations of dear old Uncle Sam; for out of the mists of uncertainty which shroud the deeds that have been done in the Far North have come one of the most tormenting and odious of the passions. No sooner had we begun to do homage to the first candidate for fame emerged from the ice fields than the jealous leer malign of envy presaged the opening of a controversy as bitter and as scandalous as that which was preciptated by the destruction of Cervera's fleet. There is some satisfaction in feeling assured that to the United States belongs the credit of the discovery of the Pole, but most humilating will it be to find that either a Cook or a Peary has been guilty of imposture; and equally humiliating will it be if either proves himself to be capable of adopting the dog in the manger policy. Regarding Peary's claims there is no room for doubt, since he was accompanied by trustworthy witnesses who must have gathered ample data and irrefragable proof. As to Cook's claims it is most unjust to form an unfavorable judgment pending scientific inquiry; and surely it seems like betraying a most unreasonably sceptical spirit to scoff at the story of a man of his character, especially after he has succeeded in persuading experts of vast experience in Arctic exploration. Dr. Cook may be the monumental liar of the age, but if so there are several scientific gents in Denmark who, in the matter of asininity, are of the same imposing proportions.

Arctic Exploration

Considering the interest that Polar exploration has excited during several centuries and especially since the first-half of the nineteenth century it is remarkable how meagre is the printed history thereof and how little is known beyond the circle of Geographical Society enthusiasts of the exploits of the intrepid navigators who braved the dangers of the Frozen North. At brief intervals during more than four centuries new and extensive regions have been explored and added to the map of the world, new forms of life have been studied in their subterraneous retreats, new depths of science have been sounded and new laws developed connecting the physics of our globe with agencies in daily operation throughout the planetary system to which we belong. Though Sebastian Cabot made a voyage to the Arctic regions as early as 1498 no persistent efforts were made to explore them until 1527 when King Henry VIII was prevailed upon by Mr. Robert Thorne, a merchant of Bristol, to make an effort to discover new lands in the Far North. He addressed a letter to the King in which he assured him that it would be an easy matter to sail to the Pole, adding, "it is cleere that from thence foorth the seas and landes are as temperate as in these partes, and that then it may be at the will and pleasure of the marriners to choose whether they will sayle by the coastes that be colde, temperate or hotte." Henry was also advised that "if from Newfoundlands the sea be navigable there is no doubt but sayling Northward and passing the Pole, descending the Equinoctiall line we shall hit these islands (the Spice islands), and it should be a much shorter way than the Spaniards or the Portingalls have."

Fruitless Expeditions

These representations had weight with the King. In 1527 "two faire ships" were sent out and were lost. In 1536 one Master Hore, "a man of goodly stature, great courage and given to the study of cosmographie," sailed on the same quest and came to grief. Some of the voyagers returned with dark tales of cannibalism and other horrors. The next expedition was that of Sir Hugh Willoughby. Its object was to discover a passage along the northern sea-board of Asia, the first of a series of brave attempts to force that ice-bound passage. The ships were found by Russian fishermen. The crews had been frozen to death. About this time Englishmen were pondering over the likelihood of a passage to Catbay by the north-west. The first person to attempt the discovery of it was Martin Frobisher, who left England on his voyage in 1576 and returned a year later after experiencing much hardship and suffering without having discovered anything of importance.

Franklin's Discovery

A north-west passage was discovered by Sir John Franklin who sailed on his third Arctic expedition in H. M. ships Erebus and Terror on May 19, 1845. His last letters were from the Whalefish Islands, dated July 12, 1845. His protracted absence caused intense anxiety and many expeditions were sent from England and this country in search of him. Relics of the party were found in 1853 by Dr. Rae, and in 1859 a Lieutenant Hobson found at Point Victory near Cape Victoria a tin case containing a paper signed by Captain Fitzjames of the Franklin expedition which certified that the ships

MAISON DORÉE HOTEL AND RESTAURANT
151-157 ELLIS ST., ABOVE POWELL
Phone Ex. Douglas 1040, Connecting All Departments
THE GOURMETS FAVORITE PLACE TO DINE
Also Mercantile Lunch, at reasonable rates.

J.M. Jacobi & Co.
S.W. COR. MONTGOMERY & SUTTER STS
Individuality is always found in the best tailored garments
OUR FALL AND WINTER CLOTHING MERITS YOUR ATTENTION.

Erebus and Terror were deserted April 22, 1848, in latitude 78 degrees and longitude 98 degrees, and that Sir John died June 11, 1847. Perhaps the most thrilling of all the stories of the Frozen North is that written by Dr. Elisha Kent Kane, U. S. N., who made three trips to the Arctic in search of Sir John Franklin, and who was so long absent on his third voyage that our Government sent an expedition in search of him. Dr. Kane sailed from New York on his third voyage on May 30, 1853. He spent two winters near Etah, and was eventually obliged to desert his ship and travel over the ice to Upernavik where he obtained relief from the Danish authorities.

Kane and His Dogs

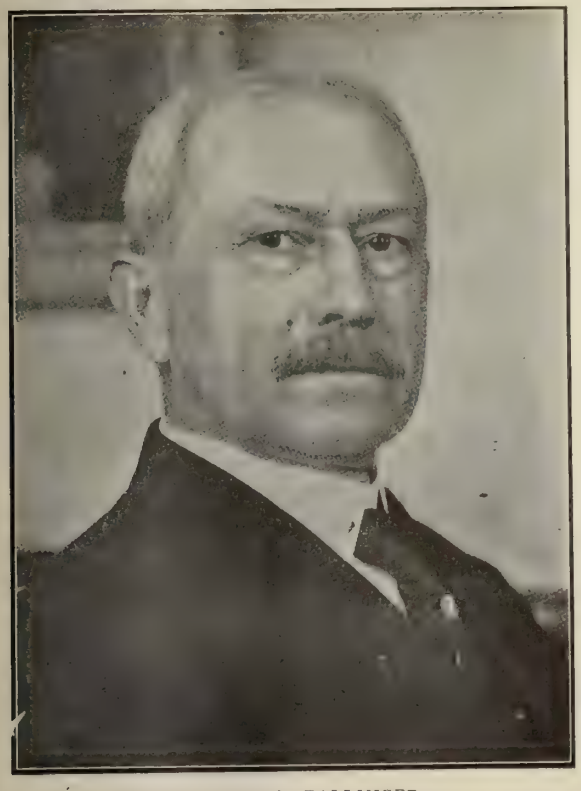
In the days of Dr. Kane's expedition to the Arctic in search of Sir John Franklin explorers being much more poorly equipped than those of the present day the hardships they endured were much more severe, and problems which they found difficult of solution are no longer regarded as problems at all. For example, while lying in Refuge Harbor in his first summer in the Arctic Dr. Kane had great difficulty in procuring food for his pack of fifty dogs. Two bears lasted them only eight days. One day fifty walruses made their appearance, but not one was killed because the balls from the guns then in use would not penetrate their hides, and the men could not get within harpoon distance of them. Dr. Kane observed that the darkness of the long winter nights had a fatal influence upon his dogs. A disease, which he considered clearly mental, affected to such a degree the mouse-colored leaders of his Newfoundland team, that for a fortnight they were doctored and "nursed like babies." They ate and slept well, and were strong; but an epileptic attack was followed by true lunacy. They barked frenziedly at nothing, walked anxiously in curved lines, at one time in moody silence at another starting off howling, as if pursued, and running up and down for hours. They generally died with symptoms resembling lock-jaw, in less than thirty-six hours. Three splendid Newfoundlanders, and thirty-five Esquimau dogs thus perished, and only six of the whole pack survived.

In the Lee of An Iceberg

Inasmuch as Dr. Cook's statement about the number of miles that he was able to travel in a day has been deemed incredible it is interesting to observe that according to Dr. Kane on one of his journeys in a sled he averaged twenty miles a day for five days, encountering the while the usual difficulties of crossing fissures, wading through broken ice and surmounting bergs. One evening they encamped under the lee of some icebergs, and within hearing of the grand artillery of the great glacier of Humboldt, which they had approached ten days before. The floe on which they had pitched their tent consisted of recent ice, and the party, who were too tired to seek a safer resting-place, had hardly gone to sleep, when, with a crack like that of a gigantic whip, the ice opened directly beneath them. Thus roused, in intense darkness and biting cold, they gathered together their tent and sleeping-furs, lashed them upon the sledge, and rushed from the rocking platform which bore them, amid the repeated intonations of the bursting ice. Selecting a flat piece of ice, they placed their sledge upon it, and, with the help of tent-poles and cooking-utensils, they paddled to the old and firm ice which clung to the bases of the nearest icebergs.

A Thrilling Chapter

In the spring of his second year in the Arctic Dr. Kane sent out an advance party to deposit a relief cargo of provisions at a distance of ten days' journey from his ship. The story of the experience of this party forms one of the most thrilling chapters in the book. After they had been out ten days, as the cold had been severe, their return was expected with some anxiety. At midnight of the twelfth day three of the men returned to the brig. They were swollen, haggard and hardly able to speak. They had left four of their companions on the ice, lying frozen and disabled, in order to bring back the news. A heavy gale from the north had broken up the party, and the snow was drifting heavily around them. Tom Hickey, an Irishman, generously remained to feed and attend them. In this emergency Dr. Kane saw that every moment was precious, and, with his usual energy, set off with a relief party of nine, taking with him one named Ohlsen who was almost dying, but who was the only person who could guide them to the locality of the sufferers. He was sewed up in a fur bag, his legs wrapped in dog skins, and strapped on a small sledge, which they dragged after them. As soon as they began to move, Ohlsen, who had been fifty hours without rest, fell asleep, and awoke with unequivocal symptoms of insanity. He had lost the bearing of the icebergs, and there was no longer any hope of local landmarks. The sledge was therefore abandoned, and the parties dispersed in search of footprints. The fear of separation, however, brought them back into groups, and whether from shattered nerves, or the action of the cold, the men were singularly affected. Two of the strongest were seized with trembling fits and short breath, and Dr. Kane himself fainted twice on the snow. Having been nearly eighteen hours without food or water, the appearance of a sledge track raised their hopes. Footprints at last appeared, and brought them in view of a small American flag fluttering on a hummock. It marked the camp of their disabled companions. When Dr. Kane crawled into the tent he was received "with a burst of welcome from the poor fellows stretched on their backs." They told him they were sure he would come. At that time the thermometer stood 75 degrees below freezing point. They were now fifteen souls, and with a tent which could only hold eight, one-half kept themselves from freezing by walking outside while the others slept within. After each got two hours' sleep they prepared for their journey. The sick were carefully sewed up in reindeer skins and placed in a half-reclining posture, on a bed of doubled-up buffalo bags. Thus embaled among skins and blankets, they were lashed to the sledge by frost-bitten fingers, and, repeating a brief prayer, the party set out on their retreat.



Back to the Brig

Notwithstanding its weight of 1100 pounds, and the rough paths it had to traverse, the sledge performed its

We Own and Offer
INVESTMENT BONDS
Of Unquestionable Security, Netting 4¼ to 6¼ per cent
Requests for Information Gladly and Promptly Attended to
SUTRO & COMPANY
412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO
List on Request

Santa Fe
NEW TRAIN
Via the Santa Fe to Chicago via Kansas City
EAST
Leave San Francisco daily 7:15 a. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m. This is in addition to our two other trains leaving San Francisco and Oakland 8:00 and 10:00 p. m. Also New Train to Fresno. Leaving San Francisco 4:00 p. m.; Leave Oakland 4:05 p. m. This in addition to our THREE other trains leaving San Francisco daily at 7:15 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m. Leave Oakland 7:45 a. m., 8:00 p. m., 10:00 p. m.
For detail information phone or call on Jas. B. Duffy, 673 Market Street, San Francisco
T. Love, Market Street Ferry Depot, San Francisco
J. J. Warner, 1112 Broadway, Oakland part well, and the men dragged it nobly along, till they were within nine miles of the tent which they had left the day before. At this time they were all suddenly seized with an alarming failure of their energies. Two of the stoutest begged permission to sleep; another was nearly stiff under a drift; a third stood bolt upright, with his eyes closed, and hardly able to articulate; a fourth threw himself on the snow and refused to rise. None of them complained of cold. It was in vain that Dr. Kane "wrestled, boxed, ran, argued, jeered, or reprimanded." It became necessary to halt. The tent was pitched; their hands could not strike a fire. Their whisky had frozen beneath all the men's coverings, and

RICHARD A. BALLINGER

Secretary of the Interior, who has made himself a national figure through his controversy with Gifford Pinchot over the handling of forest reserves.

they were obliged to dispense with food or water. In this emergency the sick, and as many as it would hold, were crammed into the tent, and Dr. Kane, with William Godfrey who volunteered to accompany him, set off to the half-way tent to thaw some ice and pemmican before the rest arrived on foot. They kept themselves awake by imposing on each other a continued articulation of words; but neither of them was in his right senses, though they both remembered seeing a bear treating very unceremoniously their tent, and what it contained. On reaching it, they found their buffalo robes and pemmican in the snow; crept into their rein-deer sleeping-bags without speaking, and had an intense sleep of three hours. When Dr. Kane awoke, a mass of his beard was frozen to the buffalo skin, and Godfrey was obliged to cut him out with his pack-knife. The rest of the party having arrived, and received such refreshments as could be given, they again set out on their dreary journey. Their strength again failed them. Obliged to eat snow, their mouths swelled, and were unable to articulate. An involuntary sleep again overtook them; they fell half sleeping on the snow. Dr. Kane made one man wake him at the end of every three minutes, and he felt such benefit from the experiment that he timed the men in the same way. Seated on the runners of the sledge they fell asleep instantly, and were forced awake when the three minutes were expired. Invigorated by brandy, served out in tablespoonfuls, and dragging the wounded men instinctively behind them, they reached the ship in a state of debility and delirium. A generous diet, however, morphine, and friction restored several of the party. One was afflicted with blindness; two others had part of their feet amputated; and two valuable lives were sacrificed in this disastrous journey; the one from lockjaw, and the other from erysipelas round his amputated stump.

The Doctor—"Nonsense! You haven't got a cancer. Booze is what ails you. You must stop drinking at once."

The Souse—"Gee! Is it that serious? Why, Doc, I thought it was some simple thing that could be helped by an operation."

The Heney Fiasco

There was much to disappoint the friends of good government in "the event of the evening." I allude of course to the illustrious evening of the Hon. Francis J. Heney's return to the scene of those glorious triumphs which never have been, but always are to be, achieved. As the laborious attempt to work up a "demonstration" possessing all the elements of an ovation and big with the illusion of a spontaneous tribute to the mighty genius and noble virtue of Mr. Spreckels' kept prosecutor was not crowned with anything that approximated success, there has been much criticism of the zealous and faithful gentlemen who had charge of the enterprise. With this criticism, I hasten to assure the gentlemen, I am not at all in sympathy. To me it seems absurd to hold the managers of the hippodrome responsible for the heart-breaking fiasco. They must not be supposed to be endowed with supernatural powers. As a matter of fact these boomlet blowers exercised a great deal of ingenuity and no little strategy in their efforts to whet public interest and shock the mob out of its apathy. For weeks before the visitation they were perspiring in the cause of civic patriotism, and no means of filliping public interest was neglected. Meetings were held under the auspices of one of the auxiliaries of the Spreckels-Phelan cabal, and frenetic females and ladylike preachers who love to bask in the limelight were given the cherished opportunity to emit sparks of eloquence. All the tin-horn lawyers and noisy parasites on the elastic Spreckels' leg were for weeks hymning praises of the coming hero. With their serviceable tongues they tried to lash us to the borderlands of hysteria. The subsidized organs were intent upon thrilling us with pungent paragraphs; now exhorting us with chidings and reproaches; now enticing us with soothing dreams and castles in the

INVITATIONS MONOGRAMS CRESTS
VISITING CARD PLATES ENGRAVED

ROBERTSON

UNION SQUARE SAN FRANCISCO

Exchange Your Old Piano
FOR A PLAYER PIANO

¶ Why keep a dead Piano in your home when you can trade it to us as part payment on one that every member of the family can play? We will allow you whatever your piano is worth, and you may pay the difference in easy monthly payments, if desired.

¶ We have new player pianos from $575 up.

Sherman Clay & Co.

Steinway and Other Pianos Player Pianos of All Grades Victor Talking Machines
Kearny and Sutter Streets, San Francisco Fourteenth and Clay Sts., Oakland air, but the miracle was beyond them. With their fingers on the public pulse the managers of the affair realized as the time approached that it would be disastrous to attempt a triumphal entry. They feared that the chorus of hisses, which was a feature of the old Roman triumphs, would drown the shouts of acclamation. They did not dare to hire Dreamland Pavilion; so a theatre with a seating capacity of a thousand was rented and it was filled with the retainers of the prosecution; and fully half of those present were ladies who may some day be permitted to vote.

The Result of Failure

Mr. Heney himself is reported to be disappointed at the reception, for the irascible prosecutor, be it known, affects to be blissfully unconscious of the rapid waning of his popularity. If Mr. Heney doesn't realize that his triumphal car has broken down he is duller witted than I ever supposed. As nothing succeeds like success, so nothing fails like failure. Mr. Heney has become as commonplace as a nine days' wonder on the morning of the tenth. The darling of the mob when promise was young, like a certain archon of Athens, he became too famous and succumbed to the perils of an embarrassment of glory. It is wise to avoid the ways that lead to excessive, unearned reputation. Slowly, like the rosy beams of morning light, it has been stealing on us, the fact that Heney has not made good; that he has done much pointing to himself with pride leaving us to conjecture in vain as to the justification; in short, that he is nothing more than an insufferable egoist. Trotted out tomorrow as a counter-attraction in competition with a five-legged calf or a two-headed nightingale, Mr. Heney would prove a frost. The world goes out to greet the conqueror with shouts and flowers, but the acclamations of the mob are not for him whose performances are entirely of the tongue.

Character in Issue

Mr. Heney wishes it to be understood that his only purpose in becoming a candidate for District Attorney is to enforce the principle of equality before the law, but he has not yet explained upon what theory he expects the people to assume that he has become an apostate to the creed which designates higher-ups as the only persons deserving of prosecution. Of course I do not mean to insinuate that Mr. Heney is a canting hypocrite. Doubtless he is sincere in affirming his veneration for one of the most sacred of the fundamental principles of our government, but actions often belie the strongest convictions. He only is a hypocrite who professes what he does not believe. Mr. Heney believes in equality before the law, but he cannot give force and effect to that sentiment because as the servile instrument of his master's vindictiveness he has already granted immunity to some of the most degraded crooks that ever polluted a government or demoralized a community. But this is not the only reason why I am opposed to the election of Mr. Heney. Even though the graft prosecution were a thing of the past I should still be opposed to Mr. Heney, for I do not think that he is a man to be entrusted with the duties of so important an office as that of district attorney. His supporters tell us that it is illogical to make his character an issue in the graft cases. However numerous the arguments and sophistries they can bring to bear in support of this proposition it certainly cannot be contended that his character is not in issue in this campaign. Two years ago Mr. Heney deemed it unnecessary to reply to the questions that were asked with reference to a certain mysterious receipt for $30,000 which was said to bear his signature. Surely as a candidate for district attorney he does not still insist upon referring the matter to Mr. William J. Dingee. If Mr. Heney deems himself worthy of the confidence of the people he will not rest his case on a reply by proxy.

"Is your husband all you thought he was?"
"Just about. But he doesn't come close to being all he thought he was."

The Family Row

Carrying the war into Africa appears to be the principle on which Rudolph and Gus Spreckels have resolved to deal with John D. and Adolph. The old family feud is warming up again much to the amusement of the man in the street who feels very much like exclaiming,

Lay on, Macduff
And damned be him that first cries "Hold, enough!"

Since the vindictiveness that ferments in the Spreckels blood must have some object upon which to vent itself it ought to be gratifying to society at large to see the members of the family tearing at one another like the proverbial Kilkenny cats. It may not be an edifying spectacle, but it is at least conducive to public interest. So more power to both sides, say I, from my coign of vantage in the upper air whence I survey the unnatural squabble with philosophic calm and flawless impartiality. So far Rudolph and Gus seem to have much the better of the contest. As executors of their father's will they have the inside track, and if they succeed in ventilating the affairs of the Oceanic Steamship Company they will not displease the ex-stockholders. They also have an advantage through the political power which they hold. This power John D. Spreckels hopes to extinguish. He has already been trying to mend his fences. The vague assurance has been given out that there is to be no more criticism of the courts in the Call, but there is considerable scepticism regarding John D.'s influence as the nominal proprietor of that flabby journal. Rumor hath it that the men to whom he leased it entered into some sort of compact with Rudolph under which that

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA
Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets
A General Banking Business Transacted
CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

Good Things to Eat
Are made with good ingredients.
All that is good in milk is contained in BORDEN'S
PIONEER BRAND
EVAPORATED MILK
(Unsweetened)
Send for Recipe Book
Borden's Condensed Milk Co.
"Leaders of Quality"
NEW YORK
Est. 1857

gentleman agreed to pay the monthly deficit pending the graft prosecution. Young Jack Spreckels insists, however, that his father has control, but the wise ones argue that if such were the case the Call would not be boosting Heney for District Attorney, since John D. is not insensible of the fact that with Heney on the job, Rudolph, who already has two judges, will be more strongly entrenched than ever.

Illustrators Return

Two San Francisco illustrators who have been meeting with success in the East are home on short vacations —L. Maynard Dixon and Adolph Triedler. Dixon first began to attract local attention some ten years ago by his work on the daily papers. He went in for desert and cowboy scenes, spending much time in the Southwestern country in search of atmosphere. Besides newspaper and magazine illustration he did considerable painting in which he showed great skill, especially in his depiction of Indians. Dixon went East some five or six years ago, and although he did not have an easy time at first he has now a reputation that is ample compensation for all his struggles. His work has improved wonderfully during the past two or three years, and now is eagerly sought by the Eastern magazines. He came here from the Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana where he has been adding to his knowledge of aborigines. Triedler, too, has been finding favor with the Eastern publishers, his name appearing on several magazine covers. He has also done some high-class advertising work, capturing one automobile poster in competition with some of the best illustrators of the East. As these two come back after having in a measure made their mark, Ed Borein leaves for New York, where he will enter the lists as an aspirant for magazine honors. Borein, like Dixon, makes a specialty of cattle country scenes, and has done some very meritorious work.

A Satirical Letter

A belated story that does not lose any of its merit because it happened some time ago, comes to me regarding "Bob" Ritchie, a former San Francisco newspaper man who, when last I heard of him, was on the New York Sun. Ritchie was married after he went East, and wrote to a San Francisco friend informing him of the event. The friend, who is a poor correspondent, did not answer the letter for something more than a year, then wrote warmly congratulating Ritchie. The latter sent in return a letter that was bristling with sarcasm, and in which this passage occurred: "I am now the father of a son. When you write do not so far forget the lapse of time as to send him a christening cup instead of a shaving mug."

He—"You don't know how nervous I was when I proposed to you."

She—"And you don't know how nervous I was until you did so."

Noteworthy Music

That in the writing of the St. Patrick of Tara music Wallace A. Sabin has at last come to his own, done himself proud, poetic justice, or what you will, is the unaminous verdict of at least twelve of his peers—if peer he have—who all so said to me, to my unbounded astonishment—not that I did not expect great things of Wallace A., but that I hardly expected music could be written locally so as to soothe the savage breasts of such as can not compose themselves, when listening to the compositions of the too near to be dear. Lions, musical no less than literary, are natural knockers and as a rule brazen, and when they speak of another's compositions as they would that the other should speak of theirs, the conversion to Christianity is nothing short of miraculous. That there is little or no better written American music than Mr. Sabin's Overture to St. Patrick is the expert opinion of Mr. Arthur Farwell, of Indian music fame. Mr. Farwell is the representative of the Musical Press of the cultured East and makes it his business to go to and fro and up and down the land with ears open for what is noteworthy. Wallace Sabin is said to have written an overture deserving of rendition by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Than which what more could possibly be said without going out of all geographical metes and bounds?

Unrest in Cuba

A correspondent in Havana who is in close touch with political conditions there sends me news that points to an overthrow if not a complete dissolution of the present government. While some are optimistic enough to believe that the present unrest will mean nothing more than the ousting of the president and the succession of the vice-president to the higher office, there are many people who do not hesitate to express their belief that American intervention and control will soon be resumed. A very prominent man, my correspondent states, offered to bet five hundred dollars to one hundred that the American flag would be hoisted in Cuba before December of this year. "We will eat our Thanksgiving dinner under the Stars and Stripes," he said. The recent reorganization of the Liberal party into one body, with the vice-president of the Republic as chairman is looked upon as a significant demonstration of the latter official's political aspirations. The vice-president in a newspaper article states that the situation will have to be handled very diplomatically, or there will be an explosion; and "La Discusion," a leading newspaper of Havana, asks, "Who is going to fire the bomb?" intimating that the official's prediction of a rumpus indicates knowledge that he should not possess. Meanwhile it is rumored that the president will call an extra session of

BEST TAXICABS
BLUE PANEL CARS
ROY M. PIKE, PRES
PHONE MARKET 600
THE TAXI COMPANY
911 Golden Gate Ave.
LUXURIOUS CHALMERS-DETROIT
30 H. P. MOTORS
"TAKE A TAXICO"

Huylr's
NUTRIO NUTRITIOUS
NEW-NUT-TRIO
NUT CHOCOLATE
THE MOST UNIQUE, DELICIOUS AND PERFECT ACHIEVEMENT IN CHOCOLATE MANUFACTURE THREE DISTINCT NUT CHOCOLATES IN ONE CAKE.
ALMOND-FILBERT-PEANUT
A CHOCOLATE TO SUIT ALL TASTES.
MADE BY Huylr's NEW YORK

the legislature in order to request a vacation, as his health is broken, and he wishes to take a journey to the States. From there, it is said, his resignation will be sent in. "One thing is certain," says my correspondent, "something will have to be done soon to relieve the situation, as the country is full of idle people, and no work of any kind is being done, and the result is that in some outlying provinces the negroes are committing depredations and getting the country worked up into a very excitable state. The treasury is empty." Politics recently brought about a shooting scrape in Havana, the editor of "Politica Comica" being shot through the hand by the postmaster general, who winged the newspaper man because of a cartoon which reflected on the president in referring very pointedly to some rather scandalous affairs that were alleged to have taken place at the presidents summer home, "Cayo Cristo." As a result of the shooting and of the gossip that led to it, two or three families have been broken up. Several of the highest officials of the government are not on speaking terms with each other—in fact, are just about on shooting terms.

Some of the Causes

A writer in "La Discusion" of Havana lays to the American government the trouble that now prevails in Cuba. He says that the United States in helping to overthrow the existing government in 1906 destroyed social discipline and set an example in the way of flouting authority that has been followed with disastrous results. "Did they (Governor Magoon and others) not set aside all law and precedent by satisfying the demands of the revolutionists, by paying them salaries all the time they were rebelling against their regular constituted government?" asks the correspondent of "La Discusion." "Was it not Mr. Magoon," he asks, "who first began to distribute the funds of the public treasury to satisfy the bullying spirit of these same people? Was not all this done in an ignorant and agitated country under the seal of the United States? If positions of trust had been placed under the charge of capable and law abiding citizens, of whom there are plenty in Havana, the rebellion of August, 1906, would have been subdued by the patriotic and conservative party, and then we would not have had present conditions, the work of Mr. Magoon and Mr. Taft—conditions for which a portion of the American press unjustly blames the Cuban people, who are not the authors, but the victims." So, altogether, the Cubans seem to be having a hard time governing themselves. We were lucky once in getting them off our hands, but if present indications are borne out we may have to administer their affairs once more.

A—"When I was in the East I met with many begging dervishes."

B—"I thought they called them howling dervishes."

A—"That's what they become when you don't give them anything."

Maoris Give Their Yell

The Maoris from New Zealand who were detained here for some weeks by the immigration officials on the suspicion that they had trachoma, have arrived safely in New York, where they joined some of their fellows on exhibition at the Hippodrome. When they got to Gotham there was such a demonstration as has never before been seen in this country, according to a New York correspondent who witnessed their arrival. They were met at the Grand Central Station by a lot of sophisticated Maoris who have been in New York for some time. The reception party arrived in a rubberneck wagon, and impatiently awaited the appearance of the visitors. It was when the latter emerged from the station that the fun commenced— although it was not fun for the Maoris, but part of their regular ceremony. When the newcomers hove in sight, the others stood up in the rubberneck wagon, and there issued from their throats a noise like this:

Ka Mate Ka Mate
Kaora Kaora
Ka Mati Ka Mati
Kaora Kaora
Tini Te Tangata Po Hura Hura
Nana Tiki Nini Faka
Whiti Te Ra
Hupani Hupani
Kupani Kupani
Whiti Te Ra

The Maoris on the sidewalk listened in solemn delight until the cry ended, and then they answered in kind, their big voices bellowing out sonorously, and drawing the attention of people a block distant. Not only did they give the yell, but they accompanied it by a weird dance, the while brandishing spears and battleaxes in a most terrifying manner. Then they climbed into the wagon, where a further ceremony took place—the rubbing of noses. Men and women alike performed the nasal salute, after which the wagon chugged away, full of happy Maoris, and leaving behind it several hundred astounded spectators.

Hewlett on Himself

In a recent interview Maurice Hewlett tells most interestingly of the psychological basis of his medieval romances—those colorful tales of life in Italy during the middle ages which have won for him no small degree of fame. He disputes the theory held by many that the people of medieval times acted the same as, thought the same as, and were fundamentally and essentially like, the people of today. "I want you to remember just one thing," says Hewlett, "and that alone will show how

GIERSBERGER WINES

The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.

THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY

Phone Oakland 2510 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

Competition

Although competition in municipal utilities formerly was considered as desirable, from the standpoint of public policy, as competition in the ordinary lines of trade and industry, foremost economists of today unite in declaring that such utilities can be better and more cheaply conducted in the form of restricted monopolies.

One of the highest authorities on questions of this kind is Milo R. Maltbie, who is a member of the Public Service Commission of New York City. Mr. Maltbie is in no sense a defender of corporations and his record shows frequent affiliations with notable civic and industrial reforms.

On the subject of the inevitable tendency of utilities toward monopoly, Commissioner Maltbie says:

"In the first place competition means economic waste. The multiplication of pipes, wires, tracks and other fixtures in the streets means an increased financial outlay upon which interest and dividends must be earned. One company can supply a given service at almost one-fifth of the expense for distribution that five companies must charge. Competition also means inconvenience and injury to the public."

"Monopoly" is a word that has made the way of the honest utility company very hard. The trouble comes from the thoughtless conclusion that because monopoly is bad in the ordinary lines of manufacturing, merchandizing and the purveying of foodstuffs, it is bad in municipal utilities. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The first named are engaged in producing and selling products. A gas company is engaged in producing and selling SERVICE, and the character of the service means that the heaviest item of expense is in the distributing or delivery system.

ONE distributing system can serve a territory much easier and about half as cheaply as TWO distributing systems covering the same ground.

San Francisco Gas and Electric Company

Copyright, 1909.

different their mode of thought must have been. I refer to their familiarity with death, which is a point of view absolutely unknown to us. They could not open a door, they could scarcely walk along a street without seeing a dead body. A man separated from his friends and in half an hour one or the other dies in a tavern brawl, or stabbed in a dusky street, in a quarrel defending a woman's honor. Don't you see what a difference that must have made? Life must have been lived quicker, vitality must have been nearer the surface. Then take the religious influence. They had the fear of the future before them then. They had Christianity which we haven't; we have only churches. They lived surrounded by mysteries and governed by them. We claim to have swept them all aside. Whether we have or not, life is not apparently controlled as it was at that time by a belief in them." It is easier to understand, after reading the foregoing, the wonderful art which Hewlett employs in creating such distinctive characters in his romances—he does it by analysis of what people would do under given conditions, by studying the mental effect that certain surroundings and beliefs would have on them. He contradicts the prevalent theory that he is saturated in the literature of the time of which he writes. He says that he has few books on medieval habits and customs. He reads history in order to gain a correct background, then lets his luxuriant imagination work out the characters and incidents of his poems, as he calls them, insisting that they are not novels. "The novel is distinguished from the poem," he says, "in that the novel is concerned with what happens, the poem with the way things happen."

Ardent Love Making

That some of Hewlett's prose comes very near being poetry in the generally accepted sense is borne out by the great love scene from "The Duchess of Nona," one of the "Little Novels of Italy." I do not know a more ardent love passage in the English language than the following in which the secretary pours out his passion for the Duchess: "'What! When I throb for your footfall, or when I lean swooning to the wall for the scent of your hair as you pass; when I urge against your chamber door that I may feed upon the sound of your breath, or hunt for broken bread under your table that I may grow drunk on what your fingers have touched! When I go raving at night, weeping by day, with a knife in my heart, tears that scald my eyes! When, with these pains to endure, these perils to skirt, these heights to fly, you will speak to me, touch me, breathe upon me, tempt me to greet you with pressing of the lips—ah, heaven and hell! it is overmuch. I would be an honest man, look you. I have a master to serve, I bid you remember. It is true enough that I love you out of all measure; there is no sin in what I cannot help; but misery there is, by our Savior. The sin is gaping all about me, itching here, aching there, gnawing and groping without cease, or stint, or allay. Yes, yes, I know this is true—God help me! I love you deplorably, but I will not touch you. You are the ever-blessed thing to me; but I will make you the ever-abhorred thing, anathema maranatha. I love you, I worship you, I adore you; you are my saint, my church, my altar, my soul's peculiar food; you shall be my devil, his hell, his cauldron, my venomous offense. And all this you shall be that I may love you yet more, yet incomprehensibly more, and (withal) live honest. I will hate you because I adore you. Ah! and I will prove whether by hating you most of all I cannot drown myself in love.' He threw himself out of her reach and rocked with hidden face." Maidens all, do you not wish that men loved so deeply and expressed their love so gorgeously today?—for it is nothing less than gorgeous, this language of Hewlett's; nothing less than a page of glowing and pulsating color.

The Passing of a Dramatist

Clyde Fitch, whose death from an operation for appendicitis occurred in France this week, was one of the most fertile of American playwrights. He was not a man, however, of great literary talent, being more of a mechanician than in artist, a builder of situations rather than a moulder of dramatic forms. Like Pinero and Belasco he had a genius for contriving expedients. One of this playwright's abominations was the manager who thinks he can rewrite a play. Once at a rehearsal where he was constantly annoyed by inane suggestions the manager remarked: "Now Mr. Fitch, here's a good place for a lot of witty speeches." Fitch glared at him and then made the counter suggestion, "As, for instance?" Needless to say the witty speeches were not forthcoming on such short notice. As a commentary on a play offered to him by a young and unknown playwright, he wrote: "I like your play; I thought it promising, but in the first act you imitated Ibsen, in the second you imitated Pinero and in the third and fourth you imitated Barrie. This will never do. Imitation in art is always bad. It suggests the shabby man who, as he sipped his glass of beer, looked in a mirror and muttered to himself: 'Here I am wearing a railroad president's shoes, the trousers of a senator, the hat of a millionaire banker, the vest of a Newport society leader and an ambassador's coat, and yet, in spite of it all, I look like a tramp.'" Of a certain comedy which failed dismally Fitch remarked that the incoherency of it reminded him of a conversation between two dramatists. "My one act play was returned to me this morning," said the first playwright. "So was mine," said the second. "Splendid," cried the other. "I'll tell you what we'll do. We'll turn them both into a two-act play."

"Let me see—didn't you tell me to remind you to get something when we got to town?"

"I believe I did."

"What was it?"

The Bones of Buddha

I will confess that when the announcement was made that the bones of Buddha had been found in Asia I was not stirred in any perceptible degree, not being a Buddhist myself, and numbering none of that cult among my intimate acquaintances. But I am rather glad now that these mouldering remains of the great and venerated one were found, for they gave G. K. Chesterton, the English essayist, an excuse for one of his best efforts. Chesterton has of late ceased being a paradoxist, and rather inclines to being somewhat of a moralist. There is a touch of mysticism and of calm and settled belief in

TAXICABS
(Genuine RENAULT Cars)
PACIFIC TAXIMETER CAB COMPANY
Solicits your patronage of its equipment of imported Renault Taxicabs and will show its appreciation by prompt and reliable service.
TELEPHONE
FRANKLIN 4848
Private Exchange connecting all Departments
MAIN STATION AND GENERAL OFFICES, 1355-1363 BUSH STREET
FAY C. BEAL, General Manager.

J. Magnin & Co.
INCORPORATED
Dainty Babywear
We are showing in a wide range of quality and prices
Infants Long and Short Coats Long Slips Wrappers
Sacques Barrow Coats Caps Bonnets Mittens
Bootees Soft Kid Shoes Cariage Robes Crib Clothes
Toilet Requisites Nursery Baskets Furnishings
GRANT AVENUE AND GEARY STREET

miracle and tradition, in his later work. He has no patience with the people who doubt that these are Buddha's bones, and uses their discovery as a text for predicting that the reality of William Tell, King Arthur, Robin Hood and others in whose identity most of us have ceased to believe will be established. Chesterton's argument is that whatever is popular belief must be true. "Tradition was for some time considered by European historians as the positive enemy of history," he writes. "They said that fables had their origin among the ignorant, which, put in plain words, means that if everybody in a village says that the squire is drowned in the horsepond, he must be somewhere else." He argues that the very fact that legend and tradition exist is proof that there is truth at the basis. He clearly defines the line between fairy-tales and traditions, pointing out that while the former have always been handed down with literal exactness, the latter are subject to constant change. He says on that point: "A fable is a thing that men make up because it is not true; a legend is a thing that men vaguely cling to because it is true. A tradition is always vague and dim because it is the truth. A fairy-tale is always exact and clear because it is fictitious. There are hundreds of tales of King Arthur or of Robin Hood; and you may mix them up as wildly as you will, because the men probably did exist at some time, and lived vague and varied human lives. But if you tell the tale of 'Puss in Boots' to a child, you will soon discover that there is only one tale that you are allowed to tell. Fable is fiction which cannot be too sharp and clear; legend is memory which can hardly be too mixed and mellow. Now that science is at last beginning to attach decent importance to the mere memory of mankind, we shall not necessarily find the site of Bois Dormant or be troubled with the personal society of Rumplestiltskin. But I shall feel very much surprised if Tell does not return in triumph into Switzerland and Arthur into England." The average man looks on superstition as a bar to accuracy in the matter of relics, but not so Chesterton, who nearly always takes a contrary and generally a sane attitude. To him superstition is the very thing that makes for the autheniticity of relics. He says: "In the face of all reason the skeptics say that such relics (of Buddha) are probably deceptive and unreal, because their adorers are superstitious. But even if they are superstitious, that is all the more reason for supposing that their relics are not unreal. The skeptics talk as if, to a Buddhist monk, one bone would be as good as another. But it is exactly because one bone is not as good as another that he troubles to have relics at all. 'Are these bones really the bones of Buddha?' may be an interesting question to a scientist, but it is a practical question to a Buddhist. In such a case a devotee will be as realistic as possible; nay, he will be as skeptical as possible. The more he is fanatical the less he will be credulous. There is, therefore, not the smallest difficulty in supposing that the actual bones of Buddha would be verified, set apart, and protected with as much scientific care as can be applied to anything in this world; more care than goes to the keeping of a first folio of Shakespeare or a stuffed Great Auk in a museum, or a palimpsest or a trade secret or an unparalleled meteoric stone."

As to Fortune Telling

Writing of superstition and tradition suggests fortune telling, and brings to mind a rather amazing story that I heard the other day—a story that happens to be true in every detail. A young woman of my acquaintance, wife of a mining man who is developing a mine in one of the Northern counties, went to a fortune teller who was a stranger to her. The soothsayer, after sitting in a brown study for a time, at last said: "The cable is rotten, and is liable to break any time." "What cable?" asked the visitor. "I do not know," was the reply, "but I think it is in a mine." After she had thought the thing over for a day or two, the young wife became alarmed enough to risk her husband's laughing at her, and wrote telling him of the warning she had received. Before her letter had

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
UNION SQUARE
An institution which seeks to add its share to the sum of new ideas that are continually improving hotel service.
Under the management of JAMES WOODS

FAIRMONT HOTEL
Applications for permanent apartments for the coming season should be made with the manager at once.
Under management of the PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

TECHAU TAVERN
Cor. Eddy and Powell Sts.
CAFE AND LADIES' GRILL
Rigo and his Gypsy Orchestra
Concerts Daily during Shopping Hours
From 3:30 to 5:00 p. m. and from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m.; 10:30 to 1:00 a. m
Private Dining Booths and Banquet Rooms on Mezzanine Floor. Entrance—No. 4 Eddy Street
Under the management of A. C. MORRISSON

TAIT-ZINKAND CAFE
168-178 O'FARRELL STREET
(Opposite the Orpheum)
OPEN FOR BUSINESS
We are prepared to cater for outside Parties, Weddings, Breakfasts, Balls, Luncheons, etc., in the city and bay counties. Menus and prices submitted on request.
TEL. DOUGLAS 560 JOHN TAIT, Manager

HOTEL NORMANDIE
SUTTER AND GOUGH STREETS
A comfortable, high order, uptown hotel, now under the management of THOS. H. SHEDDEN, Formerly Manager of St. Dunstan's.

TOWNSEND'S
CALIFORNIA GLACÉ FRUITS AND CANDIES
27 Years in Palace Hotel Building
All Orders Given Prompt Attention at
46 MARKET STREET
Phone Douglas 4814
Factory, 117 SAN JOSE AVE. Phone Mission 378
On Sept. 15th we open a new store at 755 Market St.
Also at News Stands of the Fairmont and St. Francis Hotels time to reach its destination she received one from her husband stating that the cable in the mine shaft had broken, letting the bucket drop with three men in it and injuring one of them severely. By a comparison of time it was found that the accident occurred about two hours after the fortune-teller predicted it. Now I am giving you this story for what it is worth. Had I the skill of Chesterton I might be able to convince you of the absolute reasonableness of it.

She (on their wedding trip)—Tom, what's that long white streak on the ground over near our hotel.
He—Great heavens! That's probably our bill!

A Contemptible Play

When my associate, the dramatic critic, asked me to go to "The Girl from Rector's" with him, I demurred. It was not from an excess of Puritanism, for I am not endowed with that undesirable attribute. I saw the "Blue Mouse," the naughty, frisky production that was here several weeks ago, and was so far from being displeased with it that I went again; and I have seen others of like nature which, while they may not be just the thing for the adolescent, can do the mature no harm—on the contrary, they do good through affording a laugh and relaxation. But I was already somewhat familiar with "The Girl from Rector's," having read Eastern reviews of it—and, by the way, I saw lines quoted in Eastern journals that were expurgated before the play was brought out here, which indicates that New York stomachs are stronger than ours. In addition to this long-distance acquaintance, I had formed something of an estimate of the play through what the critics of the daily press had written of it; so altogether, I had no desire to go. But the dramatic critic, evidently wanting moral support, insisted that I accompany him, which I did; and I am sorry. The principal feeling engendered in me by witnessing the performance was contempt—and the bulk of that feeling was for Paul M. Potter, the adapter, who turned his talent to such libidinous work. The play has been popular in the East, and has brought him many dollars—dirty dollars, which smear the fingers and foul the pockets and leave a trail of nastiness behind them. For the people in the company there could be only the pity that is felt for the scavenger or for any person compelled to earn a living by an unclean occupation. And the people in the audience—they formed a psychological problem not easy of solution. There were young women there with young men—sweethearts evidently. Is it conceivable that, unless their appearances were misleading, they could look each other in the face after leaving the theatre? I saw gray-haired women there—women who should have been preparing for the grave that yawns so near instead of cackling at the coarse smut that the show furnishes. In a box was a man with his family, his wife and two daughters in their early teens. The girls flushed at some of the things they heard and saw, and looked inquiringly at their parents, who were too busy observing the play to pay any attention to the daughters they should have guarded against such contamination. But the most striking thing of all took place at the beginning of the third act, when the curtain went up after a shorter interval than usual. Outside the door were a large number of people, men and callow boys, who had gone out to smoke and discuss the play between the acts. There was a sudden cry, "The curtain is going up!" Then came a stampede. There couldn't have been a greater rush if some one had yelled "Murder!" They fought each other to get in, jamming and pushing through the doorways, where the ticket-takers struggled to hold the mob in check. And while they scrambled for an entrance and for their seats their eyes were on the stage, their ears extended, for fear they should miss any fragment of lewdness. It was a disgusting sight—a disheartening spectacle in which it was impossible to find an iota of amusement. This was on Monday night, and it would seem that adverse criticisms in five daily papers had but served to advertise the nauseous production. A touch of hypocrisy on the part of some of the critics was in a measure responsible for that. In horrified phrases that told of great shocks to their sensitive minds they proclaimed the play immoral, which to some is synonymous with calling it attractive. Disabuse yourself of that idea. The piece is repulsive to anyone who has a mind that is at all clean. If you are not of that class, the reading of what I have written will not keep you away.

A LITTLE ICEBERG

FLOATING ROUND IN THE LIQUID DEPTHS OF A HIGH BALL MADE OF -

HUNTER
BALTIMORE
RYE

STRONGLY SUGGESTS HOW TO KEEP COOL IN WARM WEATHER

HENRY CAMPE & CO., INC.,
Distributors for California and Nevada
San Francisco, Cal.

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

ASK FOR
BLACK AND WHITE
SCOTCH WHISKEY
IT IS THE BEST
NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

California Conservatory of Music

Is now located in its new magnificent building
147 PRESIDIO AVENUE
Between Jackson and Washington Streets

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy.

Wheat: Wheat has shown little price change in the week. The decline was halted by rains delaying threshing in the spring region, and expected check in receipts. World influences were unchanged. Europe shows no interest in our wheat, and disparages samples thus far received, in contrasting them with the quality of grain coming from Russia and the Danube. Liverpool reports offerings of Manitoba wheat at better rates than New York, Baltimore and Chicago. We can safely eliminate Europe from our wheat market. Cash prices remain firm and this is the underlying strength of wheat. The Texas and Oklahoma millers have been buying above the market in Southern Kansas and prices have turned shipments away from the East. The receipts in the Northwest have been of the usual volume at this period but depleted stocks have thus far absorbed receipts. In the coming week these receipts will show more largely and will begin to show in the visible. This rush of wheat in years when Europe has been supplied from other regions has forced down prices. Threshing returns are now indicating 50,000,000 bushels more spring wheat than last year. The final figures will show at least 40,000,000 more. The Goverment report next week should disclose a harvest condition around 88. The outlook favors a slowly drifting market to a lower level, but no sharp drop can be expected until the visible supply increases.

Cotton: Speculation in cotton for future delivery has been on the whole of only moderate proportions but prices much of the time have shown an upward tendency, owing to bad crop reports, from unofficial sources early in the week and the unprecedentedly low condition given by the Government on Thursday. Various private reports put the condition at from 64.1 to 68.7, but the Government report exceeded them all in bullishness, giving it at 63.7 against 71.9 last month showing a deterioration during August of 8.2 per cent. The September condition given this year is the lowest ever known and contrasts with 76.1 last year, 72.7 in 1907, 77.3 in 1906 and 72.1 in 1905. Crops exceeding 13½ million bales were raised in 1906, '07, '08 and'09, with September conditions ranging from 76.1 to 77.3. This year's condition is so far below these figures that a decreased crop is very generally expected, some claiming that it cannot exceed 10,000,000 to 10,250,000. It is supposed that the effect of the bad crop reports would have been much greater but for a number of things. In the first place a large visible supply has been brought over into the new season. Some spinners, too, are supposed to be pretty well supplied. Before long, under the stimulus of existing prices, it is believed by not a few that the crop movement will be of liberal volume. The question is whether spinners will buy with freedom. They complain in some cases that raw cotton has advanced more rapidly in price than cotton goods. Moreover, speculation has lagged. The outside public is indifferent. Prices have recently advanced about four dollars a bale and some think a reaction in any case is due. Some of the crop news, especially from the Atlantic States, has been favorable. Many believe that the yield in that section will be much larger than was at one time expected and that with the liberal surplus carried over from last year it will largely offset any deficiency in the Southwest. Spinners for time being at least, are buying rather sparingly. Weather reports were of continued dry and hot weather west of the Mississippi river, while from the east of Missouri river as well complaints of drought were received.

Stocks: That Wall street securities are uncertain at the present time goes without saying. On Friday Union Pacific together with the entire list closed very strong, showing every evidence of stability only to open on Tuesday morning from $3 to $5 per share lower, chiefly caused by the seriousness of Mr. Harriman's condition which had taken a turn for the worse during the period between Friday and Tuesday. The Britishers began selling in the London market Saturday resulting in a bad decline. We will admit the future is all that could be anticipated; nothing brighter could be looked for, yet there are so many things that can happen and can come from a clear sky that caution would and should assert itself for a few weeks, at least until the channel of finances has shown its course more clearly. At heart I am bullish regarding the future trend of security values but I have always found it unwise to expect appreciation in values at this season of the year on account of money conditions. Our balance of trade with foreign countries and our Federal finances are not on the right side of the ledger. These conditions will right themselves but considerable hedging will have to be done before this result can be brought about. The one favorable condition is the great income of our railroads every one of which is taxed to its utmost capacity, to take care of present traffic. I believe those who will look on for a short period will be able to take advantage of a bargain day.

THE FLORAL TOKEN

"I thank you for the flowers you sent," she said,
And then she pouted, blushed, and drooped her head.
"Forgive me for the words I spoke last night,
Your flowers have sweetly proved that you were right."

And then I took her hand within my own
And I forgave her—called her all my own;
But as we wandered through the lamp-lit bowers
I wondered who had really sent the flowers!

UNION LUMBER COMPANY
Redwood and Pine Lumber
Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, etc.
CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
Yards and Planing Mills—6th and Channel Streets

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487
R. E. MULCAHY, Manager
E. F. HUTTON & CO.
THE PIONEER HOUSE
BROKERS
Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade
490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO
Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL
Two Private Wires to Chicago and New York
Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Heroic Possibilities of Pessimism

By Jean Lahor

If life seems gloomy and evil to us, it none the less bears on its surface splendors which attract and intoxicate us, and which will always do so. Even the thought that we must die should give more intensity to our sensations and sentiments, as we often see in the case of poor dying mortals who look for the last time on the light, the beauty of the earth, the sea and the sky, the dazzling magic of the evening, all the truly enchanted spectacles of certain hours, so soon to vanish forever for them. Thus, far from discouraging one from life, pessimism only excites those who love to love more; those who struggle to struggle more; those who enjoy with their brains and minds to multiply and exalt all these energies; because, in this moment of life which is granted us, it is necessary, if such a thing be possible, to attain an infinity of love, of dreams, of thoughts, as a diamond condenses in itself the light, or a drop of water all the infinite beauty and glory of the sky.

For our individual life so mean, so narrow, so miserable, it becomes more and more a duty to substitute the grand life of the race; thus we again find our hope or illusion of an immortality, for we can indefinitely enlarge our ephemeral existence, multiplying our life, our soul, our powers by the life, the soul, all the powers of the race in which we exist and which exists in us, which is our ego without limit. But the joys with which the pessimist enriches his own soul are not without sorrows, since he feels in himself all the suffering of other beings, so that nothing human, nothing living is indifferent to him. This very exact view and horror of the evil inspire in him the passion of the good, and the pessimist alone, perhaps, has this passion, which nothing arrests or discourages; for the optimist, being satisfied, what does he wish to change in himself or in the world? which seems to him the best of all possible worlds.

The pessimist, on the contrary, finding evil universal, wishes to struggle against it, saddened by universal suffering, desires to diminish, console, heal it; he sees all the impurity and bestiality which dwell in us; he knows to what a depth brutality, imbecility, baseness and human dullness may sink, and it is on this account that he desires something else; that he requires and demands a new humanity. Pity, however, sometimes seizes him, when he remembers from what man has come and how he has struggled to free himself from the original dirt, the ancient slime; but seeing what he has already gained, the pessimist hopes, believes, knows that man will do still more, and this is his ardent wish.

He recalls the prophecy of Prometheus; he, also, the Titan, was the victim of Zeus, as we all are of a nature less often good than bad; he was also surrounded by jealous and malicious powers; but the Titan said to Zeus: "I will not obey thee; thou hast wished man to be feeble and naked, mean and vile, equal to the brutes; I will clothe him with power; I will arm him with intelligence and courage; I will give him the light of life, the fire of heaven; all the magical secrets which make thy power, I will resist, and make him resist all natural fatalities. Thou hast put into his heart, as in those of the beasts and serpents, his brothers' egotism and hate; I will create their pity, sympathy, love; thou hast desired discord and war between all people, by that need, which torments them without end, of nourishing the stomach; I will put an end to discord and war; thou hast created them and often refused them the little necessary to nourish them; I will vanquish famine and also sickness and death, and one day man will respond to the hardness and iniquity of thy laws by an absolute ideal of justice and good."

And man, by his own power, of himself, slowly, through the miracles of selection, art and will-power has been able to realize the sublime promises of the Titan. Now, shall we allow these conquests to perish? A nobility has been formed during the centuries, an aristocracy in this miserable and vile humanity. Yes, the ideal imposes itself on us today and obliges us as it is necessary, obligatory, since distinction has been made between man and the brute, to be man, brute no longer. Now that ideal comports with justice, entire justice; that is to say, the continual sacrifice of some of our interests or our needs to the general interest or need, and we here reconstruct the idea which is the essence of every lofty religion, the idea of sacrifice.

Noblesse oblige. This is the motto of pessimism, at least as we understand it. Through his exact view of man, the pessimist, in recognizing evil, has created a religion of justice; in being moved by the griefs of others, has created the sublime religion, from which will come the justice of the future, the great religion of pity. Pessimism, then, appeals to all who work and battle for the conquest of a higher life; to the scholars, who pursue the true, and, applying their knowledge, triumph over natural fatalities, subjugate nature, create as does she, and will soon vanquish death, or at least put an end to what I call unnecessary death; it appeals to artists and to poets, who, amid the ugliness and vulgarity of things, create an ideal universe of visions and pure forms; who are the conscious voice of numberless unconscious and mute souls, and, by their sublime works, nobly translate anguish in face of the enigma of the world; finally, and above all, it appeals to heroes and saints, who have reached so high a state of humanity that they will give their life for all, losing it in the general life, feeling that the individual is only grand, only strong, only lasting, when he makes his life and soul one with that of his country or humanity, participating in this manner in the larger existence, in the longer duration and possibilities of his country or humanity.

The Anglo & London Paris National Bank

Of San Francisco

Successor of The London Paris National Bank of San Francisco, The Anglo-California Bank, Limited.

Northeast Cor. Pine and Sansome Sts., San Francisco

Sig. Greenebaum, Pres.; I. Steinhart, Chairman of Finance Committee; H. Fleishhacker, V.-Pres. and Man.; Jos. Friedlander, V.-Pres.; C. F. Hunt, V.-Pres.; R. Altschul, Cashier; A. Hochstein, Asst. Cashier; F. E. Beck, Asst. Cashier.

Capital $4,000,000.00

Surplus and Undivided Profits..... 1,500,000.00

We offer our customers every facility consistent with good banking and invite new accounts.

LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST

DIAMONDS AND GEMS

BALDWIN JEWELRY CO.

1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

Society Vaudeville Performance

The all absorbing subject of conversation from Marin County to Burlingame and Menlo is the vaudeville entertainment which takes place this (Saturday) evening at the Fair Oaks club house. A stage will be erected in the open air, with the audience seated at tables on the brilliantly lighted lawn. Clever amateurs will be in the cast. The affair is expected to surpass anything ever yet attempted by local society people. Mrs. Frederick McNear (Georgie Hopkins), and H. McDonald Spencer are the managers. Williard Barton Jr. is doing the drilling. Rehearsals have been taking place in the St. Francis ball room. Mrs. George Cadwalader and Mrs. Willard Drown have been assisting with the musical portion of the program. Paul Steindorf and orchestra will furnish the music. Those who will take part are Mrs. Fred. W. McNear, Arthur Hooper, Willard

Photo, Scharz

MRS. C. L. BATES, JR.

A prominent young society matron of Oakland.

Barton, Mrs. J. Tobin, Ralph McCormack, M. Lowry, Harold Bingham, DuVal Moore, Rudolph Bertheau, Gale Anderton, Roy Pike, Mary Keeney, Vera Hevermeyer, Alexandra Hamilton, Amy Bowles, Florence Hopkins, Mrs. Baldwin Wood, Mrs. H. McDonald Spenser, Jeanne Gallwey, Marjorie Josselyn, Jennie Crocker, Mrs. Percy Moore, Merritt Reed, Mrs. Kimball, Frank Hooper, H. McDonald Spenser, Mrs. Worthington Ames, Frank Owen, and Vail Bakewell.

Wedded in Club Building

The rafters of California Club hall, where the petticoated intellectuals among the elite hold forth, have looked down on many a unique, picturesque gathering, but for simple, simon-pure prettiness, the Asher-Newman wedding last Saturday certainly is entitled to a strand of blue ribbon for first place superiority. The hall, which is built in cosy bungalow style, full of corners and nooks somehow just fitting into a wedding scheme, was all a mass of white and yellow that blended perfectly with the brown and golden tints of the interior decorations. There were chrysanthemums, golden rod, oak leaves tinted to red and yellow, and large double sunflowers, while the big horseshoe table was all a mass of lilies of the valley and orchids. It must have taken the flower harvest from more than one garden to produce the result. The bride, Miss Bertha Asher, is the daughter of Mr. Maurice Asher, a well known attorney, and Mrs. Asher, the latter being at the head of the Jewish charities of San Francisco. The daughter is a Hamlin School girl, finishing off with the University of California and much travel over the country. She had a bevy of pretty maids attending her, all of them dressed to carry out the white and yellow color scheme, their frocks of gold covered with embroidered white chiffon being convent made. Alfred Newman, who captured the chic little Californienne, is a university man—a graduate of the Berkeley school and one of the big universities abroad. He is a physician, connected with one of the local hospitals in some superior capacity. The girls in the bridal procession were Miss Gene Newman, Miss Charlotte Goldstein, Miss Pearl Abrams, Miss Stella Shirexk, Miss Gene Fisher, Miss Claire Rosenberg and Miss Hazel Beatus. The Rev. D. J. Nieto performed the ceremony.

Photo, H. Cecil Stone

MRS. MABEL HOPKINS QUINN

A young matron, a member of the well known Hopkins family, who is noted for her beautiful face and figure.

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

VINTINE
MADE BY BROOKS
A tonic for men and women---will cure chronic constipation
Your druggist will get it—price, $1.00

Society Helps Orphanage

One can find nothing but the highest praise for the efforts of Miss Jennie Crocker and Templeton Crocker who on Tuesday, saw the completion of a monument to the memory of their parents which will endure even after the bricks out of which it is made have fallen to ruin. The Armitage Orphanage at San Mateo, the dedication of which drew a large gathering of the Burlingame and San Mateo set together, is in many ways a unique institution. It houses over two hundred boys who are educated and trained to occupy some useful place in life. The men at the head of it, Bishop William Ford Nichols, Rev. William A. Brewer, William H. Crocker, Mountford S. Wilson, E. Duplessis Beylard, Henry T. Scott, Perry Eyre, Francis J. Carolan, Rev. A. B. Chinn, Rev. J. A. Emery and Rev. N. B. W. Gallwey, have a substantial idea of what such a school ought to be and they are carrying it out in a way to bring about good results. One never hears about it—for like most good deeds, this work is done so quietly, so unostentatiously that the normal scheme of affairs is not sufficiently disturbed to get into gossip's mouth. Balls, dinners, theatre parties and such like fol-de-rols of life seem but a proper and justifiable measure of blitheness when one has also some serious business to focus upon. There isn't a girl in society who is more liberal with her fun than Miss Crocker. In town, never a day passes that she hasn't a bunch of girls surrounding her at her table at luncheon or dinner, for her hospitality is genuine congeniality, but if that were all to life, certainly its insipidity would pall. Often the critical world misjudges. Precious few women—even of the most extreme society type—are content with a program of dress and entertainment. If they are, it is soon to the sanatorium, with a life-sized case of nervous prostration to nurse, for their portion. While Miss Crocker and her brother put up the $150,000 for the orphanage, a number of other Burlingame women help along the good cause. Some of them are Mrs. William B. Tevis, Mrs. James L. Flood, Mrs. Henry T. Scott, Mrs. Beylard, Mrs. Joseph Crockett, Mrs. George A. Pope, Mrs. George W. Gibbs, Miss Sallie Maynard, Mrs. Joseph Grant, Mrs. Carolan, Mrs. B. F. LeWarne and Mrs. Mountford Wilson.

A Unique Wedding

A wedding of unusual interest will take place on Friday evening, September 10, at 8:30 at St. Paul's Church on California street, when Miss May Nipigon Renison, daughter of Rev. Robert Renison, becomes the bride of Herbert C. Montgomery. The ceremony will be doubly attractive in as much as four clergymen, all members of the Renison family, will assist at the wedding. Rev. Robert Renison Sr., father of the bride and rector of St. Mark's Church of Los Angeles, will perform the ceremony assisted by Rev. Robert Renison Jr., Rector of St. Paul's Church of this city and Rev. George Renison, while another brother, Rev. William Thomas Renison, Rector of St. John's Episcopal Church of Stockton, will give the bride into the keeping of the groom. The color scheme will be red and white. The bridal gown will be an elaborate creation of white silk trimmed with rare lace. The bride's bouquet will be lilies of the valley and white roses. Mrs. Arthur Musser, sister of the bride, will be the matron of honor. She will be gowned in a dainty mousseline de soi, over white silk, and will wear a large white leghorn hat and carry red carnations. The Bride's maids will be Miss Eleanor Montgomery, sister of the groom and Miss Rose Pendleton, dressed alike in white chiffon over white silk, wearing large white hats and carrying bouquets of red carnations. Mr. Carmel Martin of Monterey will be best man. The ushers will be Alexander Sherriffs and Casper Ornbaum, classmates of the groom at Ann Arbor. An informal reception will follow in the parlors of the church. After a wedding tour the couple will reside in Oakland where the groom is a member of the law firm of Scribner & Montgomery.

Keeps Her Little Secret

"She can have either of 'em any old time, just by saying the word, and both have scads of money, too," was the way two of last winter's buds topped off their little tea talk at the St. Francis the other afternoon, going on to tell me how Enid Gregg—slender as a sapling and pretty as can be, as she just passed our table—was being besieged by two of the best catches in town. But Miss Enid is too busy learning to sing "Ich Liebe Dich" to give away any little secret. She has the grand manner to a dot, too—the real hand-embroidered, convent-bred kind; sunshine and smiles, nice to everyone, and smart as can be—yet not too, too smart. That spoils any girl. But what other girl in San Francisco has a fine singing voice, can ripple her fingers over the keys to bring out sweet harmonies or run her own automobile if need be—

Photo, Brugnier & Tore

MISS ENID GREGG (left), MISS ELISE SCHULTZ (right)

A copy of this photograph, in the window of the photographers who took it, has attracted considerable attention. Some of the daily papers created amusement by referring to it as a photograph of Miss Enid Gregg and her mother.

even make her own pretty frocks if she had to, and give orders to the servants in two or three languages? Going some, isn't it?

Brilliant Dance Tonight

One of the most brilliant dances of the summer season will take places this (Saturday) evening at the Lagunitas Club when Miss Marie Louise Foster of Ross Valley and her cousin, Miss Mina Van Bergen, will entertain about one hundred of their friends. Guests from all around the bay have been invited. The Fosters will close their handsome home, "The Hacienda," in Ross Valley within a few weeks and as is their custom spend the winter with Mrs. Foster's mother on Pacific avenue, where Miss Foster and Miss Van Bergen will entertain extensively.

King-Harris Wedding

One of the interesting events of the week was the wedding on Wednesday evening of Miss Lucie King, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Libby King, to "Larry" Harris. The ceremony took place at nine o'clock at the residence of the bride's parents on Washington street. The bridal party was composed of Miss Edith Simpson as maid of honor and Miss Ethel Dean as bridesmaid. Joseph King Jr. attended as best man. The ushers were Robert Eyre, Percy King, George Fuller and Roy Pike. The wedding arrangements were dainty in the extreme but marked by simplicity in deference to the wishes of both bride and groom. Only relatives and intimate friends were invited. Many valuable gifts were received. The couple will reside in this city.

Mrs. Creason Luncheon Guest

Mrs. Charles Stewart made Mrs. Eleanor Creason the guest of honor at a luncheon on Tuesday. The affair was given in Chinatown at Yah Sue Fong's tea house, and the favors were Chinese. After luncheon much merriment was occasioned by fortune telling. Fifteen guests were present. Mrs. Creason's engagement to Dr. William A. Duncan, U. S. A., was announced in Town Talk last week.

Married in the East

From the East comes the news of the wedding of Miss Hess Pringle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Pringle, to William Morris Houghton, which took place on August 31 in Bowdoin, Maine. Charles Pringle, a brother, was best man, and Miss Nina Pringle was the bridesmaid. The groom is the son of Professor William Houghton of the faculty of Bowdoin College. The bride and groom will reside in the East.

Queen's Narrow Escape

All London is shuddering, a correspondent informs me, over an extremely narrow escape that Queen Alexandra had recently, the facts of which have just leaked out. The queen attended a charity bazaar, and was attracted to one booth by the sight of a small snake coiled around the wrist of a titled woman who was in charge. The queen asked to have the snake transferred to her own wrist, which was done, and for some time watched and admired its graceful writhings, then gave it back. When the bazaar was over, the snake was returned to its owner, a baronet with a liking for strange pets. Only a few evening's later the baronet, while attending the theatre, took the snake out of his pocket and let it coil around his wrist. Suddenly it sunk its fangs into him, and with a shout of terror he rushed out of the theatre and to the nearest drug store. The snake was of a venomous Brazilian type and the poison soon took effect. It was only by prompt treatment and constant care that his arm was saved. The snake disappeared during the excitement. Its fangs had been pulled once, but had evidently grown again.

EVERY WOMAN

Covets a fresh, smooth, satiny complexion, and what satisfaction and peace of mind its possession brings. The lines of age, worry and overwork are rendered well nigh powerless by Mrs. Nettie HARRISON'S LOLA MONTEZ CREME. A wonderful soother, healer and protector to a dry, contracted or chapped skin. It is Complexion Insurance. A Jar (3 months' treatment) 75 cents at all Druggists. To convince you of its remarkable power, I will send a free sample and "Beauty Book" on request. Mrs. NETTIE HARRISON, San Francisco.

Wedding Time Set

Society people will be interested to hear that Miss Suzanne Kirkpatrick's wedding to Allan Macdonald has been set for some time in January. It will be a large and brilliant affair.

To Ride With Troop

Mrs. Bane, wife of Lieutenant Thurman Harrison Bane, 14th Cavalry, U. S. A., arrived in town during the week in order to prepare quarters at the Presidio which she and her husband will occupy until the regiment sails for Manila on November 5. Mrs. Dichman, mother of Mrs. Bane, also arrived unexpectedly from abroad and on Saturday Mrs. Bane, Mrs. Dichman and Miss Marie Louise Bryant were guests at a luncheon on board the South Dakota given by Ensign Grattan Dichman, U. S. N., who sailed on Sunday with the Pacific Fleet. Mrs. Dichman returned to her country home in St. Helena on Sunday. Mrs. Bane will join Lieutenant Bane and his troop at Santa Clara and ride with them back to the Presidio. Mrs. Bane was greatly disappointed in not being able to ride all the way with the troops from Sequoia National Park. The trip was considered too strenuous for a woman, although Mrs. Bane was anxious to accomplish this feat.

Celebrates Eightieth Birthday

Edwin Danforth celebrated his eightieth birthday recently at his home on Broadway. Miss Fannie Danforth gave her father a tea on this occasion when she invited a large crowd of his old friends. A huge cake with 80 candles was cut, and a bouquet of 80 carnations was among the many presents received during the day.

Going East to Wed

Colonel Simpson, U. S. A., and his daughter, Miss Elizabeth (Peggy), will leave about September 20 for New London, Connecticut, where Miss Simpson's marriage to Lieutenant Harold Naylor, U. S. A., will take place on November 10 at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Valentine Chappell. After a wedding tour the bride and groom will return to the Presidio where Lieutenant Naylor is stationed. Colonel Simpson will return to the city immediately after the wedding.

Fashions for Dogs

In Paris, where children are so scarce as to cause the government great worry, attention is lavished on pet dogs. The outfits of clothing for these pampered beasts are growing more and more luxurious and elaborate—really, how could one dress a child and a dog too? When Fido accompanies his mistress on a holiday he must have a traveling cage of red or green or morocco leather, with a gilt meshwork side through which is revealed a comfortable white goatskin rug. There is a special "holdall" which contains the dog's dainty food, the toilet case (toothbrush, manicure set, hairbrush and comb, etc.), and a thick traveling cloak to pull over the ears and protect him from draughts. For hot days—the dog days, one might say—there are lighter coats. A tailor made suit is included in the outfit, as well as a leather coat to protect the animal from the rain. In each of these coats is a pocket for the tiny perfumed handkerchief without which no Parisian dog is fully equipped. Blue shading from sky blue to deep ultramarine is the fashionable dog's color this season, especially in the matter of collars. These are ornamented with cabochon turquoises, imitation rubies or pretty bits of enamel. A survival of medieval superstition directs this year that Fido shall be protected from the evil eye by lucky charms dangling from the collar, such as gold mistletoe twigs, shamrocks or scarabs. Lapdogs have enormous butterfly bows of velvet to match the color of their coats, and another favorite ribbon adornment is the bow a l'americaine, though why it is so called no one seems to know.

Bagnall and Boughton

Are showing a very choice assortment of millinery models in their new store at 215 Post street opposite Shreve's, Miss Bagnall having just returned from Paris with a complete selection of the new and correct fashions for the coming season.

In the Social Spotlight

Mrs. John D. Tallant and Mrs. Frederick W. Tallant spent the week-end at Lick Observatory as the guests of Professor and Mrs. William Hammond Wright. Professor Wright is a brother of Mrs. John D. Tallant who was formerly Eliza Wright.

Mrs. Sebree, wife of Admiral Uriel Sebree, who has gone to Honolulu where she will meet Admiral Sebree, will remain in the island only until the fleet sails for the Orient, when she will return to San Francisco and leave for New York. Later she will join friends and spend the winter in Egypt.

Colonel Harvey Weissinger of Louisville arrived at the St. Francis last week with his family. The Weissingers are among the most prominent people in the South and their arrival was a pleasant social event. The Colonel's daughter, who is the wife of Captain G. Stanley Tiffany, has sailed for the Orient.

Commodore Alexander McCracken (retired), left for his old home in Iowa during the week on a visit.

Mrs. Charles G. Hickox of Cleveland, Ohio, arrived in the city during the week. She is stopping at St. Francis. Mrs. Hickox was formerly Alice Chrystal.

The Count de Kerchove de Denterghem, who arrived at the St. Francis last week on a trip to Ghent, proved himself to be the most interesting passenger on the Chiyo Maru. The Count is a genius not only in organizing entertainments but in carrying them out in person, particularly if they be musical in character, and he made a decided hit on shipboard. The young Belgian nobleman's range of accomplishments includes the science of big game hunting and the equally sanguinary sport of speeding motor cars. He has been in the diplomatic service of his country, in Tokio, for some time.

Mrs. Charles Kohler of Stockton has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. Willis Davis on Scott street. Mrs. Anna L. Bauer made her sister, Mrs. Kohler, the guest of honor at a tea on Friday at her home on Pacific avenue when a reunion of old friends took place, and was greatly enjoyed.

Among the recent arrivals at Aetna Springs are the following: Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Morton, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Treat, Mr. Douglas McBryde, Mr. and Mrs. Bush Finnell, Master Philip S. Finnell, Mr. C. F. Runyon, Miss Martha S. Galloway, Mrs. F. H. Colburn, Miss Leah L. Levinson, Mr. and Mrs. Sol. E. Scheeline and son, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. W. Werlin, Mr. E. Bonnheim, Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Washburn, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Kincaid, Mr. Alfred Marsh, Miss E. Joseph, and Miss G. Joseph.

Among the recent arrivals at the Fairmont are Mr. and Mrs. Honore Palmer and family. Mr. Palmer is the son of Potter Palmer of Chicago and is noted as a prominent member of the body politic of Chicago as well as a leader of the smart set. The Palmers will be in San Francisco for a few days after which they will make a tour of the points of interest about the State.

Miss Caroline Sealy of Galveston, Texas, has joined her sister and mother at Del Monte.

Stockton is well represented at the Fairmont by Mrs. J. D. Peters and her charming daughter, Miss Anna, who was said by Charles Dana Gibson to be the most beautiful girl in California and who has the reputation of being the most popular girl among the navy men. Mr. Peter Musto and his daughters, Miss Florence and Miss Leonora, are also down for a few days' visit.

Among the recent avvirals at the Hotel Del Monte from San Francisco were Miss Cadwalader, R. A. Pabst, Chas. E. Wilson, Miss Huntington, Miss Eugenia B. Mabury, L. J. Holton, W. E. Schneider, Mrs. S. D. Freshman, A. E. Findley, A. Cardinet, R. Masson Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Arch MacKellog, Mrs. J. S. Potter, Mrs. Norman Rideout, Henry Shomberg, Mrs. Stafford H. Parker, H. K. Young, W. S. Duval, F. A. Lathe, Mrs. Kline, Simon Meyer, and Mrs. Louis Schwabacher.

CITY OF PARIS

ARRIVING DAILY

PLAIN MAN-TAILORED SUITS

In all the rich new dyes for

AUTUMN AND WINTER

STREET AND AUTOMOBILE COATS

A very carefully-made selection of the

MOST DISTINCTIVE SHADES

in the ultra fashionable

Tweeds, the Favored Cheviots and WIDE WALE DIAGONALS

(First Gallery)

SILK DEPARTMENT

We are now showing the very latest silks for the coming season, comprising

CACHEMIRE DE SOIE, CREPE METEOR, CHARMANTE and CHARMEUSE

In the new shades of Casserole, Campanile, Acajou, Bourgeon, Saule, Delft, Alizier, etc.

CHIFFON BROADCLOTH

The Popular Fabric for the Coming Season

Shown in the new shades of Copper, Mignonette, Artichoke, Burgundy, Walnut, Raisin, Chicory, Carob and Poussiere.

$1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50, $3.00 and $4.00 a Yard

PARISIAN TRIMMINGS

NEW ARRIVALS

in jet and beaded bands, fringes, ornaments and garnitures.

FREE LESSONS IN THE ART SECTION FOR EMBROIDERY

Geary and Stockton - - Union Square

Mrs. Brechemin, wife of Dr. Louis Brechemin Jr., U. S. A., will sail for home from Manila on November 5. Her sister Mrs. C. P. Nicholson of Cleveland, Ohio, was recently her guest. They will be remembered as the Misses Maud and Ruth Miller.

Mr. and Mrs. Lucius H. Allen, who have been spending the summer with the parents of Mrs. Allan in Menlo Park, have returned to their home on Washington street for the winter.

Mrs. Walter Albion Hewlett and her young son are here from Ann Arbor on a visit to her parents. Mrs. Hewlett was formerly Louise Reddington, whose wedding was a society event a couple of years ago.

Bronte M. Aikens has gone to Tonopah on legal business. While there he will be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. John Kirchen. Mr. Kirchen, his brother-in-law, is the manager of the Schwab mines in Tonopah.

Gordon Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank S. Johnson of San Rafael, leaves September 16 for the East where he will enter Groton Preparatory School for Harvard.

Mrs. Dulce Bolado Ashe has taken the Du Bois cottage in Sausalito for the winter.

Mrs. Henry F. Allen will leave this month for New York where she will spend the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Baldwin, who have been occupying the George Roe house in Ross Valley, will return to town on September 15. Mrs. George Roe will again take possession of her home for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Speiker, who have passed the summer at Ross Valley, will soon leave for a tour abroad. Their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. John S. Drum, will return to their home on Broadway about September 15, after passing the summer in Ross Valley at the Speiker home.

Mrs. Wakefield Baker will leave for the East next week accompanied by her two sons. Livingstone will enter Harvard while Wakefield will attend Taft's Preparatory School.

Mrs. Hotaling, who has spent the summer at the Hotaling bungalow, "Sleepy Hollow," will return to town the middle of the month.

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Dibblee, formerly Isabel Kittle, who have been passing the summer in Ross Valley, have purchased a home on California street and will spend the winter in town.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Belden and Miss Margaret Belden, who have been passing the summer in Ross Valley, will leave in October for New York where they will spend the winter.

Miss Duncan is here from the East on a visit to her sister, Mrs. Richard Girvin, formerly Pauline Duncan, whose marriage was a social event of last year. Mr. and Mrs. Girvin are living in San Rafael.

Mrs. Ansel Easton and her daughter, Miss Jane, will leave this month for a tour abroad. The handsome new home of the Eastons at Burlingame is just completed. They will be away several months.

Charles Belden and Stanley Page, when last heard from, had just completed a tour through Russia in an automobile. No other American machine had passed through Russia since the trip of the Thomas Flyer. These young California boys had the same chauffeur who had piloted the Thomas Flyer.

Mr. and Mrs. John Martin and Miss Frances Martin of Ross Valley will soon leave for the East where they will visit the Martin boys who are attending an Eastern college. Later in the season Mr. and Mrs. Martin and Miss Frances will sail for a tour abroad.

Mr. Frederick Tillman and Miss Agnes who are touring Scotland and Ireland, will return to the city in November.

Mrs. Jessie M. Godley recently gave a tea at her home in Sausalito in honor of the Misses Buckley, daughters of Dr. Buckley, who have been spending the summer at the Campbell home in that attractive burg.

Contrary to expectations Captain and Mrs. Haldimand P. Young will arrive on the Transport Thomas from Honolulu which is due this week. It was intended to return via Europe from Manila but army orders changed the route.

Mrs. Patton and her daughter, Miss Dorothy, are visiting in Stampford, Connecticut. Mrs. and Miss Patton are the mother and sister of Mrs. Jessie Patton Berry and Mrs. Leonard Chenery.

Mr. and Mrs. George Pope entertained a week-end house party on Saturday at their beautiful Burlingame home. The guests included several visitors to the recent golf tournament at Del Monte.

Dr. F. Dudley Tait and Mrs. Tait have returned from a four months' tour of Europe.

L. D. Torrey of this city has been a guest recently at the Hotel Del Coronado.

Mrs. Mountford Wilson leaves this week for New York. She will be accompanied by her son who will enter a school in the East. Mrs. Wilson's trip will extend only a few weeks.

Mrs. Remi Chabot has closed her summer home in St. Helena and returned to Oakland. Mrs. Chabot is president of the Fabiola Hospital, which association recently met in Oakland to plan for the winter's work.

Brigadier-General Geo. Rodney, U. S. A. (retired), and Mrs. Rodney are in town and are stopping at the Stewart General Rodney are into town and are stopping at the Stewart Hotel. General Rodney a few years ago was in command at the Presidio and for a short time in command of the Department of California. Since the fire they have made their home in Los Angeles.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Winchester of this city have taken the Sidney Smith house in San Rafael for the winter. Mrs. Philip Landsdale and her sister, Miss Sidney Smith, will leave for New York this month and later sail for a lengthy tour abroad.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Kairns left for the East during the week. They will be away several weeks.

Mrs. Louis F. Monteagle (formerly Daisy Paige), will arrive in New York this week on her way home from a tour abroad. Kenneth Monteagle will enter Taft's Prep School. Page Monteagle has arrived in Berkeley and resumed his studies. Mrs. Monteagle will return to San Francisco the middle of this month.

BAGNALL & BOUGHTON

SUCCESSORS TO E. E. CASWELL

Announce their removal to

215 POST STREET, Opposite Shreve's

PRELIMINARY OPENING

Choice Assortment of Parisian Millinery and Novelties

Philosophy of Life: From Oriental Sages

One common origin unites us all, but every wood does not give the perfume of the lignum aloes.—Arabic.

Like an earthen pot, a bad man is easily broken, and cannot readily be restored to his former situation; but a virtuous man, like a vase of gold, is broken with difficulty and easily repaired.—Hitopadesa.

Alas for him who is gone and hath done no good work? The trumpet of march has sounded, and his load was not bound on.—Persian.

In this thing one man is superior to another, he is better able to bear adversity and prosperity.—Philemon.

If thy garments be clean, and thy heart be foul, thou needest no key to the door of hell.—Sa'di.

As drops of bitter medicine, though minute, may have a salutary force, so words, though few and painful, uttered seasonably, may rouse the prostrate energies of those who meet misfortune with despondency.—Bharavi.

The fish dwell in the depths of the waters, and the eagles in the sides of heaven; the one, though high, may be reached with the arrow, and the other, though deep, with the hook; but the heart of man at a foot's distance cannot be known.—Burmese.

There are three things to beware of through life: when a man is young, let him beware of his appetites; when he is middle-aged, of his passions; and when old, of covetousness, especially.—Confucius.

The angel grows up in divine knowledge, the brute in savage ignorance, and the son of man stands hesitating between the two.—Persian.

Like a beautiful flower, full of color but without scent, are the fine but fruitless words of him who does not act accordingly.—Dhammapada.

A man cannot possess anything that is better than a good wife, or worse than a bad one.—Simonides.

Do not consider any vice as trivial, and therefore practice it; do not consider any virtue as unimportant, and therefore neglect it.—Metastasio.

Weak men gain their object when allied with strong associates; the brook reaches the ocean by the river's aid.—Magha.

There is nothing in the world which a resolute man, who exerts himself, cannot attain.—Somadeva.

If our inward griefs were written on our brows, how many who are envied now would be pitied. It would seem that they had their deadliest foe in their own breast, and their whole happiness would be reduced to mere seeming.—Metastasio.

There is no pleasure of life sprouting like a tree from one root but there is some pain joined to it; and, again, nature brings good out of evil.—Menander.

The doctrine that enters only into the ear is like the repast one takes in a dream.—Chinese.

A bad man, though raised to honor, always returns to his natural course, as a dog's tail, though warmed by the fire and rubbed with oil, retains its form.—Hitopadesa.

In youth a man is deluded by other ideas than those which delude him in middle life, and again in his decay he embraces other ideas.—Mahabharata.

As gold is tried by the furnace, and the baser metal shown, so the hollow-hearted friend is known by adversity.—Metastasio.

Scratch yourself with your own nails; always do your own business, and when you intend asking for a service go to a person who can appreciate your merit.—Arabic.

Rather skin a carcass for pay in the public streets than be idly dependent on charity.—Talmud.

We deliberate about the parcels of life, but not about life itself, and so we arrive all unawares at its different epochs, and have the trouble of beginning all again. And so finally we do not walk confidently towards death, but let death come suddenly upon us.—Seneca.

ANNOUNCEMENT

H. KRAMER

LADIES' TAILOR

Formerly 20 Sansome Street and 1795 Sutter Street

Announces the arrival of a most select and varied line of imported models and materials for fall.

Now located at 117 GRANT AVENUE

No Branch Stores PHONE KEARNY 4960

RAY LEVIN

247 POWELL ST., NEAR GEARY ST.

Phone Kearny 1619

SMART MILLINERY MOURNING HATS A SPECIALTY

Vogel's

MAKERS OF LADIES' GOWNS AND FANCY COSTUMES

418 SUTTER ST., Near STOCKTON

MRS. J. COUGHLAN CO.

Removed to

101 GEARY ST., Cor. GRANT AVE.

Mezzanine Floor

WITHAM

LADIES' HATTER

Now permanently located at

38 GEARY STREET NEXT GOLDEN PHEASANT

Dinan

Importer of Fine Millinery

Phone Douglas 1246 160 Geary Street, Opp. City of Paris

S. KRAMER

LADIES' TAILOR

101 GEARY ST., Cor. GRANT AVE.

ABOVE THE PARAGON

THE BONNET SHOP

Importers of REAL PARISIAN MILLINERY

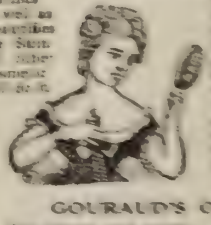
121 GEARY STREET

Our Specialty, Strictly High Class Tailored Hats at Popular Prices NOBLE

Cook

FINE MILLINERY 1803 FILLMORE STREET AT SUTTER

The Mirage



LIQUEUR
PÈRES CHARTREUX

The original and genuine Chartreuse has always been and still is made by the Carthusian Monks (Pères Chartreux), who, since their settlement from France, have been located at Tarragona, Spain, and although the old cellars and original equipment of the Monks have been destroyed by the Federal Courts of that country to be sold for monastic property of the Monks, these unscrupulous persons to nowadays known as "Liqueur Pères Chartreux."

All inquiries from Restaurants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafés
Bottled by [illegible], of Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Sole Agents for United States.

A SKIN OF BEAUTY IS A JOY FOREVER
DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S
ORIENTAL CREAM
OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER

Purifies as well as Beautifies the Skin. No other cosmetic will do it.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash and Skin Diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 40 years, 50 years has, and it is harmless we prove it. Ask for it and take no spurious article. Accept no counterfeit of similar name. The distinguished Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut-ton (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'Gouraud's Cream' as the least harmful of all the skin preparations."
For sale by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers.

GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL TOILET POWDER
For infants and adults. Exquisitely perfumed. Removes Skin Impurities, and renders Soft and Smooth as Velvet. Produces an Exquisite Complexion. Three Tints: White, Pink, Brunette. Price 50 Cents, by Mail.

GOURAUD'S POUDRE SUBTILE
Removes Superfluous Hair. Price $1.00, by mail.
FERD. T. HOPKINS, Prop'r, 37 Great Jones St., New York City

Stage

Blanche Bates in Brummagem

The most that can be said of "The Fighting Hope," the dramatic medium through which David Belasco is again exploiting the talents of Blanche Bates, is that it enables that brilliant actress to demonstrate that she can be sincere in a play that was conceived without sincerity. But the popular success of this play is not due entirely to the favor and fascination of the star. It is enjoyed for the story that it tells, so good a story that it was impossible for William J. Hurlbut, the author of it, to ruin it in the telling. Certainly it would be impossible for a playwright, given the same theme, to turn out a worse job than that which is so severely testing the capabilities of Blanche Bates at the Van Ness Theatre this week. Here is a play that deals with the determination of a wife and mother to prove the innocence of her husband who is serving a term of imprisonment in a penitentiary. Conceiving that the crime was committed by Burton Temple she obtains employment as a stenographer in his office in the hope of obtaining proof of his guilt. Meanwhile suspicion falls upon him, and he is indicted. Anticipating the prosecution he has employed detectives to search for proof of his innocence and they find a letter written by Robert Granger, the prisoner, which is conclusive of the fact that the guilty man is in the penitentiary. During the action of the play up to this point we see Burton Temple falling in love with his stenographer, of whose identity he has not the slightest suspicion, and we learn that she has no affection for her husband, but is striving to vindicate him for her children's sake. Up to this point Mr. Hurlbut handles his material satisfactorily, but at the close of the second act after introducing what is technically known as the catastrophe he begins to bungle, and thenceforward the little play creaks in every joint. He entertains us up to this point with a story that has much of human life in it, the life that is rich in deep organ tones and in the soft proclaim of silver lutes. He leads us up with admirable dexterity, with consummate ingenuity to a situation packed with the raw material of sensation, one that promises to tear at our susceptibilities, and then—he drops the curtain. Now one of the essentials of drama is suspense, and doubtless Mr. Hurlbut will tell us that he interrupted the sequence of events with the curtain for the purpose of fortifying his play with an important element, but this explanation is not to be accepted. The great catastrophe of the play is the burning of the letter that contains the proof of Robert Granger's guilt and Burton Temple's innocence. Mrs. Granger, acting the part of the spy in Temple's office, steals the letter and burns it. This is a good place to drop the curtain. By dropping it here the audience would be left in suspense, but the playwright has adopted a different plan. He introduces Burton Temple immediately after the burning of the letter and Burton Temple asks for the letter. Mrs. Granger is overcome with emotion and Temple summons the housekeeper to her assistance. Curtain. Then follows the third and last act, opening on a situation that is not materially different from the situation which closed the second act. The supposition is that acts are parts of a drama separated by an interval during which something of importance has happened. It is after an adjustment of conditions brought about in the preceding act that a new act opens, but there has been no adjustment of conditions between the second and third acts in "The Fighting Hope." The curtain served merely as an expedient to stretch a two-act play into three acts. Mr. Temple and Mrs. Granger virtually resume where they left off, only that he deferred his demand for the letter despite the great hurry that he was in to catch a train, and devoted a little time to offering his heart and hand to the heroine. Thereupon she told him of the burning of the letter. From this point action is fast and furious and the audience, which is not given time to catch its breath, is surely not able to ponder the inconsistencies and absurdities that whirl by with vertiginous rapidity. I have not the space to dwell on all of them, but I am constrained to cite by way of example the character of Mrs. Mason, a woman so scrupulous in the first act, so uncompromisingly prejudiced against wrongdoing or anything that savored of it, that she was on the point of throwing up her job as housekeeper for Burton Temple because he was suspected of crime. In the third act, though she knew of his innocence, she would not consent to give testimony for him. It might be argued that persons of this inconsistency of character are to be found in real life, in proof whereof the case of Professor Boke might be cited, but the drama deals only with what is rational. It is inartistic and unconvincing if illogical. Again: The testimony of Mrs. Mason was desired to corroborate Mrs. Granger with reference to the letter and the burning of it. Now Mrs. Mason had never seen the letter; nor had she seen Mrs. Granger burn it. Consequently she could give nothing but what was hearsay testimony, which is admissible nowhere but within the exclusive jurisdiction of Judge Dunne or his Honor Judge Lawlor. Why there should have been any haggling about this testimony when it would have been an easy matter to invent another letter as convincing as the one that was destroyed, or to contrive some other kind of proof, I am at a loss to suggest. Furthermore I cannot conceive why Mr. Hurlbut failed to bring his play to a satisfactory conclusion instead of leaving his hero under indictment and his heroine in statu quo. However, it is but just to record that notwithstanding the luxuriance of claptrap in this Hurlbut play it profoundly affected the audience of average citizens at the Van Ness Monday night and that Blanche Bates by her superb artistry exalted it into a region of highly concentrated human emotion. So far as she is concerned it was a night of distinct success. She played with subtlety and discretion. Given a most cordial reception when she made her appearance, she was immediately on her mettle, rose to the occasion and attained the approximate perfection possible to any talent in such a play. Her abstract conception of the role she adorns and enriches with an infinitude of detail and suggestion, exhibiting at a times a power that is tremendous. I hope to see her some day in a play on a level with her intelligence.

—Theodore Bonnet.

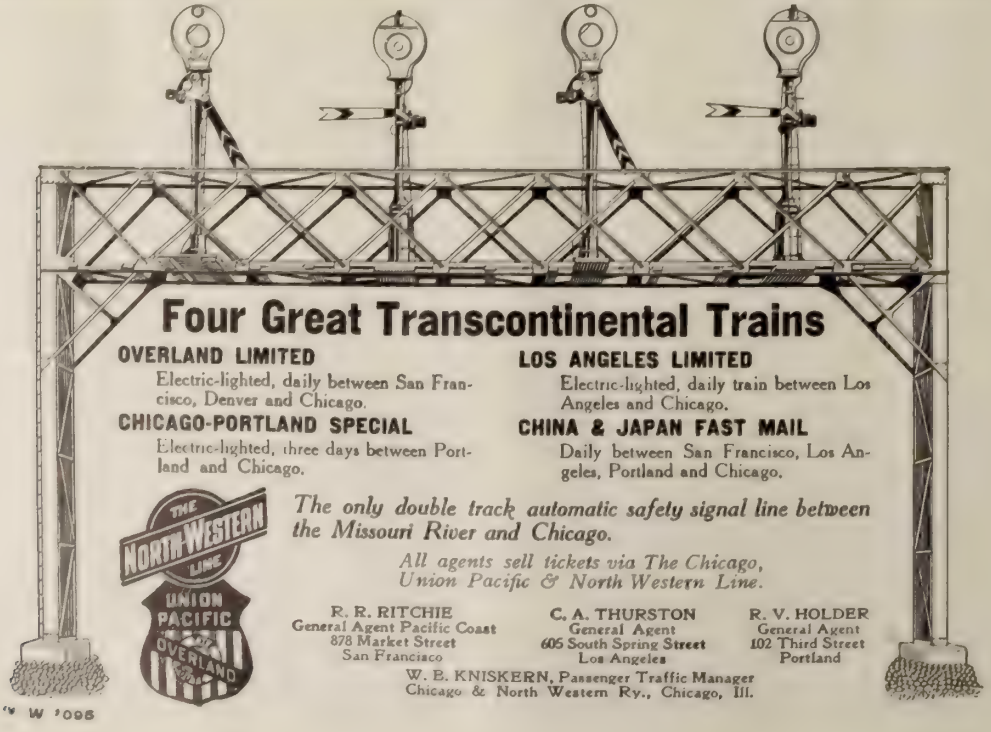
Barbary Coast Drama

The chief trouble with "The Girl from Rector's" on at the Garrick this week is that it lacks the proper environment. There should be sawdust on the floor; a cigarette should hang from the corner of the orchestra leader's mouth; the mingled smells of cheap tobacco and beer should assault the nostrils; and fadded drabs should circulate through the smoky haze importuning the auditors to buy them drinks. Never does a decent play find its way to the boards on the Barbary Coast; but in this instance a Barbary Coast play has a presentation in a respectable theatre. The play has no redeeming qualities—neither naghtiness nor cleverness marks its lines, situations, or its actors. The whole thing is a mess of cheap lewdness, based on the illicit relations of men and women. There is absolutely no excuse for it, and Paul M. Potter in adapting it could have had no other motive than pandering to the delights of the base-minded. As to the people who present it, they are no better than the play. Let us hope, for the credit of the theatrical profession, that the cheapness of the company results from the impossibility of finding men and women of ability who were willing to enact the stupid roles and to utter the worse than bar-room witticisms that this play furnishes.

—W. J. W.

DR. MATILDA A. FEELEY

Is now located at 1700 Sutter Street. Diseases of women and children. Hours 2 to 4 and 7 to 8 p. m.



At the Valencia

The last performances of Augustus Thomas' great play, "The Witching Hour," will be given at the Valencia Theatre this Saturday afternoon and evening. Sunday the house will be dark and on Monday evening, "Going Some," the New York Belasco Theatre success, which is the joint work of Paul Armstrong and Rex Beach, will begin a two weeks' engagement under the direction of the Shuberts. The story is that of a college "head yeller," J. Wallingford Speed, who visits the Flying Hart ranch, New Mexico, with his coach. There he meets Helen Blake, a Smith College girl, who is dearly fond of athletes. Being a side line cheerer, Speed quickly decides to pose as Yale's champion runner. Of course he knows nothing of the "past sorrow" of the cowboys of the Flying Heart ranch, the "sorrow" having been occasioned by the loss of a talking machine which they bet and lost on a foot race between one of their own men and the cook of the Centipede ranch. Speed makes his bluff so strong that the cowboys ask him to run against the fleet cook. He accepts because he has information that Culver Covington, the real Yale champion, is on his way to the ranch. Therefore, so Speed calculates, he can plead injury or something of the sort at the last moment and get Covington to run in his stead. When the latter arrives the hopes of the various characters go up and down, this barometric condition being one of the clever phases of the comedy, especially as Covington comes in on crutches. Speed realizes that his last chance is gone and so does his trainer and their dismay is increased when the cowboys announce that if the race is lost they must both forfeit their lives. This is low barometer for two. But the villain, a most humorous type, known as the Fresno Nightingale on account of his tendency to break into song, knows the real status of affairs, and it is a case of high barometer for him—especially as he also is after the girl. But Speed runs and wins and the fourth and final act finishes with the race—a most realistic stage picture. The cast, consisting of over twenty-five characters, selected and rehearsed by the authors, includes many celebrities who have received unstinted praise for their various characterizations. "Going Some" enjoyed an uninterrupted run of eight months at the Belasco Theatre, New York, and it will undoubtedly score heavily here. Matinees will be given on Wednesday and Saturday.

The powerful drama by Charles Klein, entitled "The Third Degree," is one of the early attractions for the Van Ness Theatre.

At the Alcazar

"The Great Divide," which is to be the Alcazar's offering the coming week, was written by William Vaughn Moody and first produced about three years ago, with Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin in the leading roles. For two seasons it was the most-talked-about play on the American stage, because of the perplexing question it produced and its excellence of dramatic treatment. To save her honor a woman of Puritan ancestry and training marries a man who is repulsive to her every ideal and whom she had never heard of until within the hour. Did she do right, or would it have been more consistent with her nature to prefer death to such a union? That is the interrogation conveyed by the play. There is no unanimity of answer. Its action opens in Southern Arizona, where Ruth Jordan dwells on her brother's isolated ranch. He is compelled to leave her there alone overnight, but so great is the loneliness of the place that she fears no intrusion until three men, types of what is worst in frontier masculine character, arrive and discover her unprotected condition. They force entrance to the house and decide to gamble for exclusive right to possess her. Then she takes the step that establishes the query for good men and women to ponder over. Realizing the horror of her position—what the outcome of the game would mean to herself—she offers to marry the least ruffianly of the trio if he will save her from the possibility of falling into the hands of either of his companions. His name is Stephen Ghent, a miner, and he bribes one of the men and is forced to fight and kill the other, being himself wounded in the arm. Ruth dresses the wound and fulfills her promise by marrying him. After the ceremony she accompanies him to his cabin in the mountains. When the second act opens they are living together. He has learned to love her with an honest love, for her gentleness and purity have resurrected in his heart the true manhood that had gradually been buried by his life in the wild places. But she has never forgiven herself for becoming his wife, and has devoted all her spare time to manufacturing Indian trinkets and selling them, her purpose being to restore to him the price he paid to secure her. When she has earned it she pays him and returns to her old home in Massachusetts. He follows her there and in a very effective scene persuades her to return to him, for after her release was purchased she discovered that she loved him. In the cast will be the cream of the Alcazar company, with Evelyn Vaughan as Ruth and Augustus Phillips as Ghent. Not the least charming phase of the play is the atmosphere of its first and second acts, and it is almost needless to say that the picturesqueness and realism of the Arizona wilderness will be vividly conveyed by the Alcazar's mechanical forces.

Last Week of Blanche Bates

Blanche Bates has made a great personal hit by her magnificent acting in the David Belasco production of "The Fighting Hope" at the Van Ness Theatre. The star is very popular here and her admirers have during the past week, been given a glimpse of the fine dramatic efforts with which she has conquered the east during the past few seasons. The final performance will be given Saturday night, September 18. "A Gentleman from Mississippi," the newest Brady-Grismer success, will be the next attraction at the Van Ness Theatre, opening there on Monday, September 20, for an engagement of two weeks. It is said to be the most successful American comedy of Washington life since "The Senator." The title role will be in the hands of James Lackaye. It is a pretty and merry story, prettily and merrily told, of the adventures in Washington, D. C., of a newly-elected United States Senator.

English Actor Coming

Following "The Girl from Rector's" which will be the bill at the Garrick until Saturday night, September 18, Harold Nelson, an actor and stage director of renown in London and the British Colonies, will appear, supported by his own company in Mr. Otis Skinner's dramatization of Robert Louis Stevenson's charming novel "Prince Otto." For several years Mr. Nelson has starred in this play which for three seasons was used by Mr. Skinner in addition to which the company gave Shakespearean repertoire with great success. Unfortunately the engagement at the Garrick is limited to one week so that the Stevenson work will be the only one in which Mr. Nelson will be seen. He hopes, however, to return next season for a longer stay. Before appearing in dramatic work Mr. Nelson was a singer of great repute and a member of the Royal Opera at Covent Garden, London, making his debut there at the same time that David Bispham did. In this country he is best known as a stage director and among the works he successfully produced was "The Walls of Jericho" for Kelcey and Shannon. Seats for this interesting play will be ready next Wednesday morning at the theatre box office.

Trial Scene at the Orpheum

The program to be presented at the Orpheum for the coming week is expected to prove particularly interesting and attractive. The chief novel feature will be Harrison Armstrong's one act play "Circumstantial Evidence" which has been one of the greatest sensations of the past theatrical season in the East. It will be presented by a company of twelve. The one scene contrived by the author shows the interior of a juryroom. Eleven out of twelve jurors have voted for the conviction of a man charged with murder. The twelfth has resisted all argument for more than twenty-four hours. He insists that the accused is innocent and he refuses to be swayed by any argument based upon the testimony. He admits that the weight of evidence is against the prisoner, still he is unshaken in his determination to vote for his acquittal. The eleven jurors weary of trying to win him over and they settle around a table to a game of poker. They assert the game will continue until all are unanimous. The twelfth juror sits aside, telling them he will never change his opinion. In an impassioned appeal he tears the evidence to pieces, finally convincing his associates of the defendant's innocence. Ed Wynn and Al Lee who will appear in "The Billiken Freshman" are original comedians. Mr. Wynn who personates the swagger college chap with loose high water trousers, brilliant vest and marvelous headgear, is while perhaps exaggerated nevertheless true to life, for he is a college graduate himself. Charles Montrell, the European juggler, will return after an absence of two years from this country. He is in a class by himself for skill and finesse and like Cinquevalli his juggling is enhanced by comedy effects obtained with the aid of his assistant, a little comedian with a black face who scrambles after articles Montrell tosses about, and breaks everything he catches or tries to catch. Rosa Crouch and George Welch, who are appropriately styled "That Lively Pair," will be an amusing feature of next week's bill. The sketch they present is of unusual merit, full of action and comedy throughout. It includes straight singing and dancing and witty dialogue. Their dancing, however, predominates and therefore is a feature of their offering. Next week will be the final one of Gardner and Revere, Signor Luciano Lucca, the Arlington Four and of that stunning musical hit "At the Country Club." As usual the performance will finish with a new series of Orpheum motion pictures.

ROSA CROUCH

The talented and versatile comedienne who will appear next week at the Orpheum.

Canadian Play at Ye Liberty

Monday evening next the Bishop players at Ye Liberty Theatre in Oakland will present for the first time in the West "Pierre of the Plains," the play adapted from Sir Gilbert Parker's celebrated stories of Canadian frontier life. The play is the work of Edgar Selwyn, and it was he who appeared as the star in the initial production given at the Hudson Theatre, New York, about

E. B. COURVOISIER

The well known Art Dealer and Frame Maker announces to the public the opening of his new store at 431 Sutter street between Stockton and Powell.

COOK'S TOURS

Are the Best for Independent or Escorted Travel

AROUND THE WORLD

Parties leave Westward September 15, October 5 and 19th; Eastward November 6, December 9 and June 8. Highest class, various routes, best of everything. Seventy Tours to Europe. Tickets everywhere, Traveler's checks, hotel coupons, information. Let us make reservations now for your fall tour. No charge for service.

THOS. COOK & SON

32 POWELL STREET SAN FRANCISCO

Offices at Yokohama, Hongkong, Colombo, Calcutta, Bombay, etc.

[illegible] Its success there was spontaneous and pronounced, all agreeing that Mr. Selwyn had turned out one of the strongest and most picturesque productions of many seasons. Sydney Ayres and Florence Oakley assume the leading roles.

New Chutes Attractions

New Chutes patrons will find many features to entertain them on the route of the "joy jaunt" this Sunday afternoon and evening. The many gymnastic turns and somersaults which contribute to the extensive repertoire of the famous Smiletta Trio of triple bar acrobats will be among the headline attractions. Besides there will be two splendid band concerts, fiery riders, high divers and the fun of the various "joy rides" with several brand-new fun devices added for good measure. The engagement of the Smiletta troupe began last Monday and the thousands of people who have watched them perform during the week agree that theirs is the finest gymnastic attraction yet offered at the Fillmore street resort. The double giant swings and the long-distance somersault and double twist executed by Victor Smiletta are feats entirely out of the ordinary. The troupe's apparatus has been rigged on the bandstand for Sunday's performances and the musicians will assist in the act. The comedy introduced makes the turn doubly interesting. Another Chutes attraction which opened its engagement during the week is the California State Band, a splendid organization under the direction of George W. Bennett. Its first Sunday programs will be composed of more than twenty selections made up almost entirely by popular compositions. A medley of up-to-date song hits will be the featured number. It will introduce "When 'Tis Moonlight, Mary Darling," "The Booker T.'s on Parade," "'Neath the Old Grape Arbor Shade," "Won't You Please Let Me Come Home," "I'm Trying So Hard to Leave," "Needles and Pins," "Somebody That I Know and You Know, Too," and "Tipperary."

Prize Monkey Coming

"Charles the First," the marvelous Chimpanzee who has set all Europe agog has been captured for America by Martin Beck and after a mysterious and hurried voyage across the Atlantic on the steamer Oceanic arrived in New York on Wednesday for a special tour of the important theatres of the Orpheum Circuit. This monkey, as is well known, is the original or first to present the form of entertainment which has been so widely copied since his success in England and on the Continent. The sensation created was so great that his trainer, Charles Judge, soon contracted for three years' consecutive bookings abroad, and this condition made it impossible for the American, Australian and South African managers to secure the most-talked-of animal in the world. Many imitations and "Copy Acts" were prepared by various other animal trainers, and some of these have already reached New York, but those who have seen these and the great original "Charles the First" say the performances are not to be compared. Just how Martin Beck who is still in Europe, succeeded in inveigling Mr. Judge to come to America with his precious simian, after all other offers had been refused, will probably never be known, although his lieutenants here say that the cost of obtaining releases from contracts already signed abroad represents a small fortune. At any rate San Francisco ere long will see the originator of the so-called "Monkey-Craze" in Europe.

In the Limelight

[illegible] Blanche Bates at the Van Ness Theatre will be [illegible] the Brady-Grismer production of "A Gentleman from Mississippi." It is said to be the best American comedy of Washington life since "The Senator."

Pauline Frederick is coming west with her production of "Love Watches" and will be here early next month. Charles Frohman's newest star made a big popular success here last season with John Drew in his production of "My Wife."

George M. Cohan will have in his support over one hundred people when he brings his newest comedy success, "A Yankee Prince," to the Van Ness Theatre in November. His other hit, "The Talk of New York" will be played by Victor Moore and a fine supporting cast.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove. Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgr. Phone Market 500

Second and Last Week Begins Monday. Matinee Saturday

DAVID BELASCO Presents

BLANCHE BATES

In Her Greatest Success

THE FIGHTING HOPE

By W. J. Hurlbut

September 9: "A GENTLEMAN FROM MISSISSIPPI"

VALENCIA THEATRE Valencia Street, near Thirteenth. Phone Market 17

This Saturday Afternoon and Evening, Last Times of John Mason in "The Witching Hour"

Two Weeks, Starting Monday Evening, September 13th

Matinees Wednesday and Saturday

Sam. S. and Lee Shubert (Inc.), Present

The Straight-Away Champion of Comedies

GOING SOME

A Play of College Men and Cowboys. By Paul Armstrong and Rex Beach

9 Months at the Belasco Theatre, New York

Reserved Seats: Evenings, 25c to 75c, on Sale at the Box Office and Emporium

GARRICK Ellis and Fillmore. Phone West 1194

Last Week, the Comedy Success, "The Girl from Rector's"

Starting, September 20th, the Eminent British Actor

HAROLD NELSON

In Otho Skinner's Dramatization of Robert Louis Stevenson's

PRINCE OTTO

Prices: 25c to $1.00. Seats Ready Wednesday

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Cor. Sutter and Steiner. Class 'A' Building. Phone West 1400

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.

Week Commencing Monday, September 13th.

Henry Miller's Universal Success

THE GREAT DIVIDE

By William Vaughn Moody

Prices—Nights, 25c to $1.00. Matinees, 25c to 50c.

Next: "Sweet Kitty Bellairs."

NEW ORPHEUM O'Farrell Street, between Stockton and Powell. Phone Douglas 70

Safest and Most Magnificent Theatre in America

Week Beginning This Sunday Afternoon—Matinee Every Day

ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE, an Intense Dramatic Playlet by Harrison Armstrong with a company of twelve. ED WYNN and AL. LEE, CHARLES MONTRELL, CROUCH and WELCH, GARDNER and REAVERE, LUCIANO LUCCA, ARLINGTON FOUR, NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES. Last Week Stunning Hit of the Musical Delight "AT THE COUNTRY CLUB"

Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE Oakland, Cal. Direction H. W. Bishop

Week Commencing Monday Evening, September 13th.

BISHOP PLAYERS Presenting for the First Time in the West

PIERRE OF THE PLAINS

Adapted from Sir Gilbert Parker's Celebrated Stories of Canadian Frontier Life

Same Popular Prices: 25c and 50c. Entire House. All Performances.

Matinees, Saturday and Sunday

NEW CHUTES Fillmore, Eddy, Turk and Webster

Open Morning, Afternoon and Night

Today, Sunday, and All Next Week

3—GREAT SMILETTAS—3

Premier Comedy Acrobats and Triple Bar Artists

CALIFORNIA STATE BAND

Concerts Every Afternoon and Evening

Other Great Attractions and Special Features for the Children

TAKE THE JOLLY JOY JAUNT

A Particular Store for Particular People

PHONE FRANKLIN 2810

"OLIVE BRAND"

The perfection of Olive Oil—no rank smell or taste so frequent in some other brands. The highest quality of Olive Oil has also the most delicate flavor.

Small	bottle	$ .25	$2.75 dozen.
Medium	"	.50	$5.50 dozen.
½-Gal	Can	1.75
1 Gal	Can	3.25

L. D. McLEAN CO.

IMPORTERS AND GROCERS

1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

The Well-Dressed Man

What to Wear, When and Where

Written exclusively for Town Talk by J. M. JACOBI

For the benefit of those men who have neither the time nor inclination to study the art of Dressing correctly, we will publish a series of weekly Fashion Chats.

Clothes of the Hour

How far reaching the effects of correct dress are, whether in the pursuance of one's vocation or at social functions, has been demonstrated at some time or other to every man. One goes to a cafe and to secure efficient service and proper attention will tip the steward or waiter. One does this to receive proper service. Now, in this hurly burly world one is always looking for service and recognition, and there are men and places where tipping is out of the question. The question now is, Why are some men served more quickly than others? Why do some men who are looking for an audience with some official, have the office boy take their card in ahead of those in waiting? Why when the same men enter a hotel does the bell boy grab their baggage first? Many a man has often asked himself these questions. It is not because they pay for it directly, but because outward appearance commands recognition.

FROM "MAYFAIR FASHIONS"

Sack Suit. Lapels as the designer chooses to make them. The coat has a tendency to be semi-fitting but no fulness over the hips. No slits or vents at the back unless it be with an extra long coat. Sleeves finished plain, cash pocket stitch hidden. Waistcoat cut fairly high. Trousers, straight to hang from hips. Sort of semi-peg, but bottoms not too narrow.

Suitable Dress

After the proper selection of one's tailor, clothier or haberdasher, it is not a bad idea to brush up a little and find out what is really worn by the multitude and what by the more fastidious or ultra fashionable ones, so that one may dress befitting one's station in life. A man of leisure and social inclinations must and should wear clothes different from those of the man who spends eight hours a day in an office.

Caste in Dress

If grey is a practical shade and the multitude will wear nothing but grey, you will find that the man of leisure wears blue or brown and gets away from the goods that everybody else wears. This plan works out in a like manner in the style and cut of garments. For instance, the sack is ever popular, but men who like to dress and look well will probably be seen oftener in a colonial frock or Strand, as the English call it.

Hosiery

The latest craze for the opening of fall in London is black and white whether it be a neat little embroidered flower or fleur de lis. Particularly strong are black hose with white clocks.

Cravats

As in hosiery the prevailing tone is black and white. Some beautiful fabrics in silk and satins show the new designs to a great advantage. The popular shape in silks is the narrow shoulder with flarring ends. In kitted scarfs the tapering four-in-hand shows up the best. Knitted ties in fine qualities will be very strong this season.

Frightened by Airships

German sportsmen have observed that airships terrify birds and wild animals to an extraordinary degree. When a flying machine is only barely distinguishable to the human eye as it appears on the horizon its approach is heralded by frightened birds, large and small, flying for shelter. The noise of the motors also agitates four footed game exceedingly, and as airships do not follow a rigid route animals cannot get used to them as they do to passing railway trains. It seems odd to see in the German papers complaints from hunting men about "good shots they have missed owing to an airship looming overhead."

The Anglo & London Paris National Bank

Of San Francisco

Successor of The London Paris National Bank of San Francisco, The Anglo-California Bank, Limited.

Northeast Cor. Pine and Sansome Sts., San Francisco

Sig. Greenebaum, Pres.; I. Steinhart, Chairman of Finance Committee; H. Fleishhacker, V.-Pres. and Man.; Jos. Friedlander, V.-Pres.; C. F. Hunt, V.-Pres.; R. Altschul, Cashier; A. Hochstein, Asst. Cashier; F. E. Beck, Asst. Cashier.

Capital $4,000,000.00

Surplus and Undivided Profits..... 1,500,000.00

We offer our customers every facility consistent with good banking and invite new accounts.

LOW RATES

TO

ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION

FOR ROUND TRIP TICKETS

FROM

San Francisco	$32.50
Sacramento	32.50
Lathrop	32.50
Stockton	32.50
Tracy	32.50
Suisun	32.50
Davis	32.50
Napa	32.75
Santa Rosa	33.60
Calistoga	33.95

Greatly reduced rates from other points in California. Tickets sold daily May 25 to September 30, and cover two months' trip going and coming via the famous

SHASTA ROUTE

OF THE

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Stopovers going and coming. Many other routes at slightly higher rates for you to select from.

Write or call on our nearest agent for full details of service, etc., or address

FLOOD BUILDING FOR INFORMATION

The Flying Machine

(Continued from Page 11.)

upon the wrists of him, throw the resistless bulk of him into his own patrol aeroplane, and scoot with him to headquarters. Believe me, thieves will not be any safer then than they are now. But there is a distinct danger—or hope, according to your political belief—that protection will be knocked out. It would take searchlights a mile apart all along the ocean shore and the Canadian border, to keep track of night-flying aeroplanes, and the smuggling of fine goods would be comparatively easy. Lumber and coal could not be sneaked through; but there would be little trouble in escaping duty on laces, diamonds, and other compact and valuable articles. Aldrich and Joe Cannon will be lucky if they die before such terrible things come to pass.

And what will become of our railway systems, with their fine rolling stock, their valuable tracks—and their franchises? Will the aeroplanes render them worthless? Not at all. The horse was to disappear with the advent of the automobile; but old Pomp still lives, and is looked upon as a valued member of the community. There was room for him, and there will be room for the railway. It may degenerate into a mere freight-carrier—but it will be necessary; so will vessels for the same purpose.

Did you ever try to imagine what the upper air will be like at night, with the buzzing of motors aloft, the play of lights, the darting hither and thither of dusky winged forms? The desire to live long enough to see such a thing is enough to drive thoughts of suicide out of the minds of the most despondent. Searchlights will shame the stars, and we will forget all our astronomy—the average man knows so much about it anyway. We of the city will seldom get a glimpse of the stars, and will have to go out into the country to study the heavens. Score another for the simply life of the future.

Lest all this should seem largely tinctured with nonsense, stop and reflect for a moment on what has happened in Europe last week. Curtiss, Latham, Bleriot, and others have gone through the air at a great speed, nearly a mile a minute being attained on occasion—the American, of course, winning the speed contest. More than one hundred miles at a time has been traveled without a descent to the earth to replenish the stock of gasoline. There has been no accident worthy of note—none at all that could be traced to imperfection in the machines. Aeroplanes have flown against the wind, in driving storms—they have demonstrated their practicability. And during the week Zepplin made several long flights in his dirigible. Why cannot other dirigibles be built right away for the carrying of passengers? Why cannot any man with the price of an aeroplane—and they are comparatively cheap—have one for his own use or amusement? If Latham can fly one hundred miles at Rheims, why cannot a resident of San Jose fly to San Francisco? These are really not questions of the future but of the present—of right now. See how the automobile has advanced in ten years. There is nothing to prevent the same progress in aeroplanes, which are month by month becoming more perfect. Materials will be lightened, more powerful engines put in without any increase in weight, propellers made more efficient, planes more certain of action. The aeroplane is here, and all hail to it!

Artificially Aged Wine

Those who pride themselves on being connoisseurs of the age and vintage of wines and spirits will have to subject their palates to another training if a process invented by Victor Dorn and described in the Electroechnischer Anzeiger of Berlin is generally adopted by the trade. The introduction of ozone, it seems, has a powerful effect on alcoholic liquids and ages them quickly. The French chemist Boussingault discovered that harsh young vintages became mellow and cleared themselves wonderfully under the influence of oxygen. Now it is found that ozone is an even more efficacious agent. By Dorn's process oxygen is introduced into the cask of wine or brandy by means of a pipe to which are attached wires connected with an induction machine which generates powerful sparks and thus converts into ozone the oxygen as it comes out of the pipe. The more alcohol is contained in the liquid the longer the treatment takes. Wines take from twenty to ninety minutes treatment at a session; spirits from two to six hours. The practical results have been surprising and no doubt gratifying to wine growers. A vinegary young claret worth wholesale from $12 to $15 a hectolitre was sold after the ozone treatment for $20, and a raw brandy from $25 to $37.50 a hectolitre after a week's ozonizing rose in value to $75 and even $100.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL PROPERTY SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 3762 N. S., Dept. 10, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of MICHAEL DUFFY, Deceased.

JOSEPH A. STULZ, Administrator of the estate of MICHAEL DUFFY, deceased, having presented his petition herein, duly verified, praying for an order of the sale of the whole of the real estate of said deceased, or so much or such parts thereof as said Court shall judge necessary or beneficial for the reasons and purposes in said petition mentioned and set forth.

And such petition having been filed, it is now ordered by said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Court on Tuesday, the 5th day of October, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the courtroom of Department 10 of said Superior Court in the Grant Building, on the southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administrator to sell the whole or so much of the real estate of said decedent as may be necessary.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated, San Francisco, this 25th day of August, A. D., 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Aug. 25, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By H. G. Benedict, Deputy Clerk.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Attorney for Administrator,
Mills Buildings, San Francisco, Cal. 9-4-5

GO EAST!

Low Rate Tickets Sold

SALE DATES

September 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 15, 1909

Other rates and dates to various points in effect during October, 1909

SOME RATES

Omaha	$ 60.00	New Orleans . .	$ 67.50
Council Bluffs . . .	60.00	Washington . . .	107.50
St. Louis	67.50	New York . . .	108.50
Chicago	72.50	Boston	110.50

Tickets good until October 31, 1909. Some cases longer.
Choice of routes. Stopovers. Write agents for details.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC Ticket Offices FLOOD BUILDING MARKET STREET FERRY DEPOT 13th and FRANKLIN STS., OAKLAND

Auto Notes

The Howard Automobile Company has received the first shipment of 1910 Oldsmobiles which are attracting much attention in automobile circles at the present time. The great advancement made in the 1910 models of the Oldsmobile is very marked, and the many refinements of this car, which has always enjoyed an enviable reputation for roadability and reliability, bring it up to the highest standard of automobile perfection attained by American manufacturers, and the Oldsmobile for 1910 must be ranked among the highest grade cars produced.

Dan Schellooe of Willows was in town a few days this week, having driven down in his new sixty horsepower Thomas Flyer. Mr. Schellooe is spending considerable time touring about the country, and has become quite a enthusiastic motorist.

Writing to the Studebaker Bros. from New Market, N. J., F. Percy Vail says: "I am pleased to note in this morning's papers that the Studebaker E-M-F '30' has fallen into strong and safe hands and also that we can soon buy a reliable car from good people at a fair price, viz.; Studebaker-Flanders '20' at $750. If I were in the market for a new car—would not hesitate to order one without seeing it. My Studebaker E-M-F '30' delivered to me on February 26 of this year, is running like a clock. No repairs so far—have never even had a spark plug out. Does nothing but just run and laugh at the hills—quiet as a mouse. No axe to grind—only wish to show my appreciation of an excellent product at an honest price."

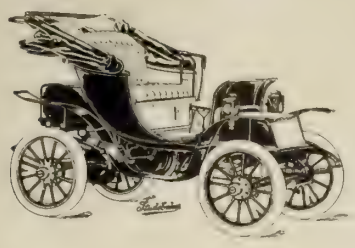
Martin Nye of Willows recently made a run in his Chalmers-Detroit "30" to Front Springs, where several days were spent with a party of friends, shooting doves.

Just what can be done with a high-class automobile was proven a few days ago at Nevada City, Cal. A transportation company, operating there, using a large six-cylinder car, found themselves suddenly unable to transport their passengers on account of the disabling of their car on one of the steep grades. E. B. Ely, who drives a Studebaker E-M-F "30" was prevailed upon to loan his car to the transportation company. The car made the round trip from Nevada City to Forest on schedule time, carrying four passengers up and five down without a hitch. The driver of the disabled six-cylinder car, after hearing of the splendid performances of the Studebaker E-M-F "30" said: "I am surprised beyond all expectations."

Jean Bemb who will be remembered first as expert for Chalmers-Detroit Motor Company is winning distinction in the East in the racing. The Pioneer Automobile Company has just received the following message: "Bemb wins Minneapolis Tribune Trophy and a Live Bear."

Two carloads of Buick "White Streaks" were received by the Howard Automobile Company on Monday, and three carloads of Model "16" Buicks were received on Tuesday. The latter is the same car which is being used by Chevrolet, Strang and Burman, and with which these daring drivers are winning all the great competition events in the country this season.

Among the California motorists who have visited the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition this season, is C. L. Donohue of Willows, who has just returned, having made the trip in his Chalmers-Detroit forty horsepower car. Although the trip was an unusually hard one, the only trouble experienced was two punctures, and this Mr. Donohue considers as remarkable when the road conditions are taken into consideration.



A. R. Mires, the Studebaker representative at Modesto, Cal., says that the high prices of farm products during the past few years have made the farmers of California among the kings of the earth, and that the farmers are now investing large sums of money in automobiles all through the valley, as the Record of Registration amply proves. The record of registration for motor vehicles at Sacramento for the month of June was 885 and for the previous month 938. Most of these licenses went to farmers throughout the San Joaquin Valley.

Norman DeVaux, for the past three years representative of the Auburn Motor Car Company, with headquarters in San Francisco, has severed his connection with that concern, and associated with F. W. Vogler, formerly engaged in the automobile business in Nevada, has taken the agency for Buick automobiles for the States of Oregon and Washington, through the Howard Automobile Company, who are distributors of Buicks and Oldsmobiles for the Pacific Coast. The new company is known as the "Northwest Buick Company" and has located its headquarters in Portland, Oregon, branches of which will be maintained in Seattle and Spokane, Wash. The Buick is not an experiment with DeVaux, he having been previously connected with the Buick factory for two years, and it will be remembered that DeVaux was one of the drivers of the "Continental Buick," the old two cylinder which in 1907 made the first trip from New York to San Francisco carrying four passengers, in 24 days' time, which would be considered remarkable even for the high priced and high powered cars of today.

The Pioneer Automobile Company reports the sale and delivery of the following cars: D. D. Carrier, Oroville, 40 horsepower Chalmers-Detroit; N. M. Nye, Chalmers-Detroit "30" runabout; F. E. Chandler, Vacaville, Chalmers "30"; S. M. Phillips & Co. of Sacramento, Chalmers "30"; E. T. Huffman, Clanie, 1910 Chalmers-Detroit "30"; John Tonningsen of San Francisco, a Chalmers-Detroit "30"; A. A. Capwell, Ferndale, Thomas Flyer.

A Domestic Eye Remedy

Compounded by Experienced Physicians. Conforms to Pure Food and Drugs Law. Wins Friends Wherever Used. Ask Druggists for Murine Eye Remedy. Try Murine in Your Eyes. You Will Like Murine. Try it in Baby's Eyes. It Soothes.

The Society Belle

to whom delightful independence appeals and who appreciates refinement with a degree of luxury and unquestioned elegance, cannot resist the new

STUDEBAKER ELECTRIC

Its daintiness of appointment captures her instantly. It is a fitting complement to her cultured tastes. Besides, its simplicity of operation and control makes it safer to drive than a horse. It travels as fast as any woman cares to go; is always clean and inviting and is practically proof against accidents.

Victoria-Phaetons and Coupes for immediate delivery

Fremont at Mission — Studebaker — Phone Douglas 3000

Chalmers-Detroit "30"

The beginning and the end car.

In the beginning the initial price is slightly higher, in the end the upkeep and after expense is much less.

"Anybody can cut prices but it takes brain to make a better article."
(Elbert Hubbard.)

Buying a good car is only one step in the right direction.

BUT

Buying a good car from the most reliable dealers on the Pacific Coast is your absolute assurance of satisfaction.

The Pioneer Automobile Company is the largest concern west of Chicago giving its undivided attention to the sale of automobiles. Ten years in business assures our stability and perpetuates our guarantees. Our business motto is "Right or Made Right."

PIONEER AUTOMOBILE CO.

901 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE

Oakland San Francisco Fresno

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of ALOISE GLESS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executor of the last will and Testament of ALOISE GLESS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executor at the law office of A. Comte Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of ALOISE GLESS, deceased.

JULES P. GLESS,
Executor of the last Will and Testament of Aloise Gless, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, September 11, 1909.

A. COMTE Jr., Attorney for Executor,
333 Kearny St., San Francisco, Cal.

9-11-5

Letters

A Tangled Romance

[illegible] McGrath might have chosen for a title-page quotation the once familiar lines of "Pinafore," "I mixed those babies up and never a soul knew it," for "The Goose Girl" in a story of very mixed and muddled identity. The action lies back in the days before the Franco-Prussian war and the unification of Germany. Two of the toy kingdoms adjoining each other are in a condition of suppressed enmity, and there is danger that the smouldering embers will burst into flame. Years before the opening of the tale the only child of the Grand Duke of Dricburg had been kidnapped. There was no assignable motive, since the infant was not held for ransom. She simply disappeared when out with her nurse, and not until sixteen years later was she discovered, ignorant of her identity, and earning her living as a chorus girl in a Dresden opera house. Of course the Princess Hildegarde was immediately restored to her proper social sphere, but, unfortunately, in those years of freedom from court surveillance, she had acquired democratic ideas which made her somewhat difficult to handle. For some reason it was suspected that the King of Jugendheit had been the instigator of the crime, and though no positive proof had ever been brought forward, no convincing disproof had cleared him. Likewise, the chancellor of the duchy was supposed to be involved, and a price put on his head. He disappeared as completely as the lost princess, leaving in his desk some letters that were compromising, if genuine. The little kingdom of Jugendheit has been governed by a regent pending the minority of its king, and now comes a proposal from this regent, who has been authorized by his nephew, the sovereign, to select for him a wife. To put an end to the ill feeling and the constant menace of warfare, he proposes for the Princess Hildegarde, and she, given to understand that she must accept her lot as a political pawn and consider the good of her country, consents. The king of Jugendheit is represented as on a hunting trip in Bavaria but as a matter of fact nobody knows just where he is. He has been brought up in simplicity, permitted to travel freely, and to be a man before being a prince. Before settling down to his hereditary duties he has begged for one more outing, and his unexplained absence is a serious matter for the regent and the ministry. No sooner has Hildegarde decided to accept his hand when he, hearing of the alliance arranged for him, refuses to be bound by the arrangement, with the usual result of state complications. Meanwhile there is the American Consul at Dreiberg, a rather hot-headed Irish-American, who has fallen in love with the Princess Hildegarde, but, unlike the usual run of stories where there is either the irresistible American heiress and the crown prince, or the wilful princess and the plain American, who proceed to defy court precedent, Carmichael knows he must not lift his eyes to royalty and Hildegarde, whether she would or not, does not lower herself to the common rank. All this while there is a young peasant girl, modest, beautiful and virtuous, who, a waif, taken in out of charity, still lives in Dreiberg and earns her support by herding geese, working in the vineyards and acting as extra waitress in the Black Eagle Inn. She has a lover, a young vintner from Bavaria, who is something of a mystery, as is a mountaineer who she met traveling afoot to Dreiberg, and who has, in turn, his own curiosity aroused by an ancient clock maker with a shop in the Adlerstrasse. Gretchen of course, is not likely to come into contact with the princess and never would have done so had it not been for the death of a poor woman whose last message was to leave her a note to be delivered in person. No one, of course, would think of comparing a common goose girl with a royal highness, and nothing would have happened if a rich American plumber had not arrived on the scene. He was the magician with the magic wand, and in the twinkling of an eye high and low changed places and everybody was somebody else, but who was which and why this was thus is the author's secret to be disclosed to readers only. Although "The Goose Girl" is meant only for a bit of light and diverting summer fluff, it is better than the majority of its class, and the villain of the piece, the moving spring of the whole action, is so carefully kept in the background that when his fine Italian hand is disclosed it comes as a real surprise. Illustrations are by Castaigne and the mechanical work of the publication goes to the credit of the Bobbs-Merrill Co. of Indianapolis

ORDER OF SALE OF CERTAN REAL ESTATE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

In the Matter of the Estate and Guardianship of JAMES HARRINGTON, Incompetent

It appearing to this Court from the petition this day presented and filed by Mary Harrington, the guardian of the person and estate of JAMES HARRINGTON, incompetent, praying for an order of sale of certain real estate belonging to said incomptent and that it is for the best interest of said incompetent and necessary that such real estate should be sold;

It is hereby ordered that the next of kin of the said incompetent and all persons interested in the said estate appear before this Court on Monday, the 11th day of October, 1909, at ten o'clock, at the Courtroom of this Court, in the Grant Building, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, then and there to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of such estate.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for at least three successive weeks before the said hearing in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated, September 2, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

HUGH O'NEILL, Attorney for Guardian,
Foxcroft Building, San Francisco, Cal. 9-11-4

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of WILLIAM H. NOLAN, Deceased—No.8259—Dept. 10.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administratrix of the estate of WILLIAM H. NOLAN, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administratrix at the office of Messrs. Breen & Kelly, Attorneys at Law and Attorneys for said Administratrix, at their office, Rooms 1109-1110 Humboldt Bank Building, No. 785 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of WILLIAM H. NOLAN, deceased.

MARGARET M. NOLAN,
Administratrix of the Estate of William H. Nolan, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 31, 1909.

BREEN & KELLY, Attorneys for Administratrix,
Humboldt Bank Building, San Francisco, Cal. 9-4-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of Jules E. de ST. DENIS, also Called JULES St. DENIS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executor and Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of JULES E. de ST. DENIS, also called JULES ST. DENIS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executor and Executrix at the office of A. Comte Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of JULES E. de ST. DENIS, also called JULES ST. DENIS, deceased.

WILLIAM C. KEWIN, Executor,
JULIE HEILBRON, Executrix,
Of the Last Will and Testament of Jules E. de St. Dennis, also called Jules St. Denis, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 25th, 1909.

A. COMTE, JR., Attorney for Executors,
333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. 8-28-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY MORTGAGE SHOULD NOT BE RENEWED

In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California—No. 7168, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of CHARLOTTE F. CLARKE, Deceased.

Upon reading and filing the petition of Charles G. Lyman, executor of the last will and testament of CHARLOTTE F. CLARKE, deceased,

It is ordered that all persons interested in said estate be and appear in this Court in Department 10 thereof, in the Grant Building, on the southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, San Francisco, on Thursday, the 7th day of October, 1909, at the hour of ten o'clock a. m. of said day, then and there to show cause, if any they have why the said Charles G. Lyman as such executor should not join with Edith A. E. Lyman, E. K. Clarke, also known as Edward K. Clarke, also known as Edward Kane Clarke, and Charlotte H. Wright, in making, executing and delivering to Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, a corporation, a promissory note or notes in writing, in the sum of $40,422.27, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum, likewise joining the three said last named persons in making, executing and delivering to the said Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, a corporation, a mortgage as security for said promissory note or notes, upon the following described real estate, situate lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California:

Commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the southerly line of Post Street with the easterly line of Jones Street, running thence southerly and along said easterly line of Jones Street sixty (60) feet; thence at right angles easterly and along the northerly line of Cottage Place seventy (70) feet, six (6) inches; thence at a right angle northerly sixty (60) feet; thence at a right angle westerly along said southerly line of Jones Street seventy (70) feet, six (6) inches to the point of commencement; being a part of Fifty Vara Block No. 223.

Reference is hereby made to the petition on file herein for further particulars.

It is further ordered that this order be published once a week for four successive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper of general circulation in said City and County.

Dated this 30th day of August, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

MASTICK & PARTRIDGE, Attorneys for Executor,
Foxcroft Building, 68 Post St., San Francisco, Cal. 9-4-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 24635.

JENNIE OXTOBY, Plaintiff,
vs.
JAMES W. OXTOBY, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City of and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send greeting to James W. Oxtoby, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and county; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant on the ground of defendant's extreme cruelty; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 11th day of August, A. D. 1909. By L. J. Welch, Deputy Clerk.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

WEINMANN, WOOD & CUNHA, Attorneys for Plaintiff. 9-4-10

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8103, Dept. No. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of BERTHA MARKS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Rose Marks, the Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of BERTHA MARKS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executrix, at the office of C. H. Oatman, room 516 Balboa Building, corner Second and Market streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of BERTHA MARKS, deceased.

ROSE MARKS,
Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of Bertha Marks, deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 7th, 1909.

ARTHUR L. LEVINSKY, Attorney for said Executrix,
Stockton, California. 8-7-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17750, Dept. No. 5.

EVA NATHAN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of EVA NATHAN, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Jones Street, distant thereon Southerly ninety (90) feet from the Southerly line of Pacific Street, running thence Southerly and along said line of Jones Street forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty seven (137) feet, six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet, six (6) inches to said line of Jones Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of fifty vara lot number Eight Hundred and Sixty-one (861) of the City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit: for judgment establishing and quieting said plaintiff's title to all said real property as the owner thereof in fee simple, and determining all adverse claims thereto, and ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, and for such other and further relief as may be just and proper in the premises, under and pursuant to the provisions of the Act of the Legislature of California entitled, "An Act to provide for the establishment and quieting of title to real property in case of loss and destruction of public records," approved June 16, 1906, and the Act of the said Legislature, amending the same, approved March 6, 1909.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 2nd day of July, A. D. 1909.

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

(Seal) By M. P. BRUTON, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk, a newspaper, on the 17th day of July, A. D. 1909.

DEVOTO & RICHARDSON, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
Foxcroft Building, San Francisco.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8100, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate and Guardianship of FRANK VIERHUS, an Incompetent Minor.

CLARENCE CLAUDE VIERHUS, guardian of the person and estate of Frank Vierhus, an incompetent minor, having filed his petition herein, praying for an order of sale of the interest in the real estate of said incompetent minor for the purposes therein set forth, and an order of this Court having been made, setting the hearing of said petition on Wednesday, the eighth day of September, 1909, and it appearing to the Court that said order should be set aside; it is therefore ordered that the said order of this Court made on the 24th day of August, 1909, setting the hearing of said petition for Wednesday, the eighth day of September, A. D. 1909, be and the same is hereby set aside.

It is further ordered by this Court that all persons interested in the estate of said incompetent minor appear before the said Superior Court on Monday, the 20th day of September, 1909, in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10 of said Superior Court, at room 601, Grant Building, corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in said City and County of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said guardian of said incompetent minor to sell the interest of the real estate of said minor, at private sale; and that a copy of this order be published for three weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Done in open Court this 25th day of August, A. D. 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Aug. 25, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By H. G. Benedict, Deputy Clerk. 8-28-4

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17244.

HANNAH EMERY, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Hannah Emery, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Van Ness Avenue, distant eighty (80) feet northerly from the northwesterly corner of Van Ness Avenue, and Turk Street, running thence northerly and along the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches; thence at right angles southerly and parallel with Van Ness Avenue forty (40) feet; thence at right angles easterly and parallel with Turk Street one hundred and nine (109) feet and nine (9) inches to the said westerly line of Van Ness Avenue and place of beginning; being a portion of Block Seventy-nine (79) Western Addition;

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June, A. D. 1909.

H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

(Seal)

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: NONE.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Esq., Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., 870 Market St., San Francisco. 7-10-10.

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17318, Dept. No. 4.

KATE E. BOYANTON, sometimes known as KATE E. BOYNTON, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Kate E. Boyanton, sometimes known as Kate E. Boynton, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Eddy Street distant One hundred and twenty (120) feet easterly from the easterly line of Scott Street; running thence easterly along said northerly line of Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet and to the westerly line of Farren Avenue; thence at right angles northerly and along said westerly line of Farren Avenue Seventy-five (75) feet; thence at right angles westerly and parallel with Eddy Street Sixty (60) feet; and thence at right angles southerly Seventy-five (75) feet to the place of beginning. Being a portion of Block No. 431, Western Addition.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that the title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 29th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of HENRIETTA ECKHARDT, Deceased—No. 8187, Dept. 10, Probate.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executor of the Last Will and Testament of HENRIETTA ECKHARDT, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said executor at Room 609 Union Trust Building, at the northeasterly corner of Montgomery and Post Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said place the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of HENRIETTA ECKHARDT, deceased.

ROBERT J. ECKHARDT,
Executor of the Last Will and Testament of Henrietta Eckhardt, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 21, 1909.

CHARLES S. WHEELER, Attorney for Executor,
609 Union Trust Building, San Francisco, Cal. 8-21-5

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 17438, Dept. No. 12.

GEORGE J. MARTIN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of George J. Martin, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue distant thereon one hundred (100) feet northerly from the northerly line of C Street, running thence northerly along said westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue, twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angle westerly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angle southerly, twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angle easterly, one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the westerly line of Second (2nd) Avenue and the point of commencement. Being a part of Outside Land Block No. 379.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute and in possession of said property; that his title to said property be established and quieted as against all persons; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 30th day of June, A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff:

Names	Addresses
German Savings & Loan Society (a Corporation)	530 California Street, San Francisco, Cal.
City and County of San Francisco (a Municipal Corporation)	San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. L. THOMPSON, Attorney for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

Young Wife—"This dish, dearest, is an original composition of my own."

Husband—"Well, I should rather, my pet, that you would cook after the old masters."

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No.17271.

WELLS, RUSSELL & COMPANY, (a Corporation), Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest, in or Lien Upon, the Real Property herein Described or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of Wells, Russell & Company, (a Corporation), plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows

First Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northwesterly line of Natoma Street, formerly Everett Street, distant two hundred (200) feet southwesterly from the intersection of the southwesterly line of Third Street with said line of Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches; thence at a right angle northwesterly eighty (80) feet; thence northeasterly parallel with Natoma Street forty-one (41) feet eight (8) inches and thence at a right angle southeasterly eighty (80) feet to the place of beginning; being a portion of the 100 vara Lot No. 34.

Second Parcel.—Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Fourteenth Avenue, distant one hundred and fifty (150) feet westerly from the northwesterly corner of Fourteenth Avenue and P Street; thence westerly along said line of Fourteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet; thence at a right angle northerly two hundred (200) feet to Thirteenth Avenue; thence at a right angle easterly along the south line of Thirteenth Avenue one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet, and thence at a right angle southerly two hundred (200) feet to the place of beginning; being a part of the O'Neill and Haley Tract, as per map on file in the Recorder's Office of said City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that its title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover its costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 28th day of June A. D. 1909. By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 10th day of July, A. D. 1909.

CAMPBELL, METSON, DREW, OATMAN & MACKENZIE,
Attorneys for Plaintiff. 7-10-10

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 2622, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of INDIA MASTERS, Deceased.

J. R. Pringle, the Administrator of the Estate of INDIA MASTERS, deceased, having filed his petition herein, duly verified, praying for an order of sale of the real estate of said decedent for the purposes therein set forth,

It is therefore ordered by the said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the Superior Court on Wednesday, the 22nd day of September, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10, Probate, of said Superior Court, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said J. R. Pringle, Administrator, to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary.

And that a copy of this order be published four successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

And it is further ordered that the manner in which publication of this order shall be made shall be once a week for four successive weeks in said Town Talk, and that the number of publications during the above mentioned period shall be reduced accordingly.

Dated, August 18, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

OLNEY, PRINGLE & MANNON, Attorneys for Administrator,
1236 Merchants Exchange Bldg., San Francisco, Cal. 8-21-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8101, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate and Guardianship of PHILIP ARTHUR VIERHUS, a Minor.

S. TRAVIS KENYON, guardian of the person and estate of Philip Arthur Vierhus, a minor, having filed his petition herein, praying for an order of sale of the interest in the real estate of said minor for the purposes therein set forth, and an order of this Court having been made, setting the hearing of said petition on Wednesday, the eighth day of September, 1909, and it appearing to the Court that said order should be set aside; it is therefore ordered that the said order of this Court made on the 24th day of August, 1909, setting the hearing of said petition for Wednesday, the eighth day of September, A. D. 1909, be and the same is hereby set aside.

It is further ordered by this Court that all persons interested in the estate of said minor appear before the said Superior Court on Monday, the 20th day of September, 1909, in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10 of said Superior Court, at room 601, Grant Building, corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the said City and County, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said guardian of said minor to sell the interest of the real estate of said minor, at private sale; and that a copy of this order be published for three weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Done in open Court this 25th day of August, A. D. 1909.
THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Aug. 25, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By H. G. Benedict, Deputy Clerk. 8-28-4

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of ROBERT FRANCIS SPEAR, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Mary J. Spear, executrix of the last will and testament of ROBERT FRANCIS SPEAR, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Mary J. Spear at the office of Ira S. Lillick, Esq., No. 524 Kohl Building, on the northeast corner of California Street and Montgomery Street, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of Robert Francis Spear, deceased.

MARY J. SPEAR,
Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of Robert Francis Spear, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 6, 1909.

IRA S. LILLICK, Attorney for Petitioner,
524 Kohl Building, San Francisco, Cal. 8-14-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 18016.

MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this Summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

PARCEL NUMBER ONE

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Green Street, distant thereon one hundred and seventeen (117) feet and seven and one-fifth (7 1-5) inches Easterly from the Easterly line of Franklin Street; running thence Easterly and along said Northerly line of Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly and parallel to Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches to the said Northerly line of Green Street and point of commencement.

Being a part of Western Addition Block No. 96.

PARCEL NUMBER TWO

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of "C" Street, distant thereon thirty-two (32) feet and six (6) inches Westerly from the Westerly line of Twenty-fifth (25th) Avenue; running thence Westerly along said Northerly line of "C" Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 356.

PARCEL NUMBER THREE

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of "T" Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the point of beginning.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 1153.

PARCEL NUMBER FOUR

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue, distant two hundred and twenty-five (225) feet Southerly from the Southeasterly corner of "A" Street and Twenty-first Avenue; running thence Southerly along the said Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the place of beginning. The same being a portion of Outside Lands Block Number Three Hundred and Three (303).

PARCEL NUMBER FIVE

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Larkin Street, distant thereon seventy-seven (77) feet and six (6) inches Northerly from the corner formed by the intersection of said Easterly line of Larkin Street with the Northerly line of Union Street, running thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Larkin Street, twenty (20) feet; thence at right angles Easterly sixty (60) feet to the Westerly line of Moore Street; thence at right angles Southerly along said line of Moore Street twenty (20) feet; and thence at right angles Westerly sixty (60) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot No. 1393.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, title, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 26th day of July A. D. 1909.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 31st day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., San Francisco, Cal. 7-31-10

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 3835, Dept. No. 10.

In the Matters of the Estate of BYRON J. TAYLOR, Deceased.

Avy A. Holdgate, formerly Avy A. Kitto, the Administratrix of the estate of BYRON J. TAYLOR, deceased, having heretofore presented to the Court and filed with the Clerk thereof her verified petition, praying for an order of this Court authorizing, empowering and directing her to sell certain real property in said petition particularly described, belonging to the estate of said deceased, and it appearing to the Court that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real property in said petition described to pay the debts, expenses and charges of administration and that it is for the advantage, benefit and best interest of the estate and those interested therein that said real estate be sold,

It is hereby ordered that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased be and they are hereby directed to appear before the above entitled Court, Department No. 10 thereof, at its Courtroom, situate in the Grant Building, at the corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on Wednesday, the 22nd day of September, 1909, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, then and there to show cause, if any you have, why an order should not be granted to said administratrix for the sale of all of said real estate.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order to show cause be published in Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation, printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, once a week for four successive weeks.

Dated, August 17, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

H. M. OWENS, Attorney for Administratrix,
Mechanics Savings Bank Building, San Francisco, Cal. 8-21-5

Louis Crepaux
(Member of Paris Grand Opera)
Has removed to his new studio,
Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.
Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger
PIANOFORTE PLAYING
924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.
For appointments phone Merritt 2845
Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Donald Maclean
SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske
STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge
ATTORNEY AT LAW
CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO
Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan
ATTORNEY AT LAW
CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor
Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty
ATTORNEYS AT LAW and
PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY
MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.
Rooms 626 and 630

HENRY P. TRICOU
NOTARY PUBLIC
508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711
Residence 852 Grove St. Phone Park 1870

MOVED
Gladding, McBean & Co.
CLAY PRODUCTS
Office
311-317 CROCKER BUILDING
Warehouse
147-151 MINNA STREET
Between New Montgomery and Third
San Francisco, Cal.

W. D. Fennimore J. W. Davis A. R. Fennimore

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store at 181 Post Street, near Grant Avenue.

PATRICK & CO.
RUBBER STAMPS
STENCILS, SEALS, SIGNS & ETC.
126 BUSH ST. SAN FRANCISCO

Favorite Books of Great Men

Shakespeare's favorite books were Montaigne and Plutarch's Lives.

Milton's favorites were Homer, Ovid and Euripides.

Charles James Fox considered Euripides especially helpful to a public speaker.

William Pitt took delight in Milton, especially the speech of Beliel before the powers of Pandemonium. Another favorite of his was Newton's Principia.

The Earl of Chatham read Barrow's Sermons so often that he could repeat them by heart.

Edmund Burke's companions were Demosthenes, Milton, Bolingbroke and Young's Night Thoughts.

Curran's favorite was Homer, which he read through once a year. Virgil was another of his favorites.

Dante's favorite was Virgil; Cornelle's, Lucan; Schiller's, Shakespeare; Gray's was Spencer while Coleridge admired Collins and Bowles. Dante was a favorite with most poets from Chaucer to Tennyson. Lord Brougham, Macaulay and Carlyle all admired him and Brougham advised the students of Glasgow that next to Demosthenes the study of Dante was the best preparation for eloquence in the pulpit or at the bar. Robert Hall found relief in Dante from the pains of spinal disease and Sir Sydney Smith found comfort in him for old age. Goethe's favorite was the Ethics of Spinoza in which he claimed to have found the peace and consolation he had found in no other work.

Barrow's favorite was St. Chrysostom, Bossuet's was Homer, and Bunyan's the old legend of Sir Bevis of Southampton.

One of the best prelates who ever sat on the bench in England, Dr. John Sharp, said: "The Bible and Shakespeare made me Archbishop of York."

The two books which most impressed John Wesley as a young man were the Imitation of Christ and Taylor's Holy Living and Holy Dying, but Wesley used to caution his young friends against reading. "Beware you be not swallowed up in books," was a favorite exhortation of his.

Coleridge was fond of the Life of Wesley, and claimed it was more often in his hands than any other of his "ragged regiment of books." "To this work and to the life of Richard Baxter I was wont to resort whenever sickness or languor made me feel the want of an old friend of whose company I could never tire."

De Quincey's favorite few were Donne, Chillingworth, Jeremy Taylor, Milton, South, Barrow, and Sir Thomas Browne. He described these seven as "a pleiad or constellation of seven golden stars such as, in their class no literature can match," and from which he would undertake to "build up an entire body of philosophy."

Frederick the Great of Prussia manifested his strong French leanings in his choice of books, Bayle, Rousseau, Voltaire, Rollin, Fleury, Malebranche and one English author, Locke, were his favorites. Bayle's Dictionary was his especial favorite and he thought so highly of it that he made an abridged translation into German.

Marshal Blucher's favorite was Klopstock's Messiah.

Napoleon Bonaparte's favorites were Ossian's poems and The Sorrows of Werther, but Napoleon's range of reading was very extensive, and included Homer, Virgil, Tasso, the novels of all countries, the history of all times, mathematics, legislation and theology. He detested what he called "the bombast and tinsel" of Voltaire.

The Duke of Wellington was also an extensive reader, having among his favorites Clarendon, Bishop Butler, Smith's Wealth of Nations, Hume, the Archduke Charles, Leslie and the Bible. He was interested in French and English memoirs, and when at Walmer had always within his reach the Bible, Book of Common Prayer, Taylor's Holy Living and Holy Dying and Caesar's Commentaries.

The pronoun "I" and the interjection "O" are never written without using a capital. Let "U" be added, and it signifies that the writer has got no capital at all.

$550.00 Will buy the best 88-note Player on the market
CROWN AND CONCORD PIANOS
10-inch Disc Records, 25 Cents
PETER BACIGALUPI & SONS,
Phonographs and Pianos
941 Market St. Opposite Mason St.
Open Saturday Evenings.

The German Savings and Loan Society
(Member of the Associated Savings Bank of S. F.)
526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,504,498.68
Deposits June 30, 1908	$36,793,234.04
Total Assets	$39,435,681.38

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

RICHMOND DISTRICT BRANCH, 432 Clement Street between 5th and 6th Avenues. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. W. C. Heyer, Manager.

60 YEARS' EXPERIENCE
PATENTS
TRADE MARKS
DESIGNS
COPYRIGHTS &C.
Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain our opinion free whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. HANDBOOK on Patents sent free. Oldest agency for securing patents.
Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice, without charge, in the Scientific American.
A handsomely illustrated weekly. Largest circulation of any scientific journal. Terms, $3 a year; four months, $1. Sold by all newsdealers.
MUNN & Co. 361 Broadway, New York
Branch Office, 625 F St., Washington, D. C.

MAYERLE'S GERMAN EYE WATER
By Mail 65c

Mayerle's German Eyewater
Highly Recommended for
Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids.
NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN
Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes, relieves the strain, and preserve the sight.
GEORGE MAYERLE
Graduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 960 Market Street, opposite Hale's. Phone Franklin 3279.

¶ Nothing can be more refreshing and appetizing than a glass of cool Weinhard's Portland Beer.

¶ It's brewed from the best Bavarian hops and Oregon barley. It is not only nutricious but exhilirating.

¶ Try it at lunch or dinner.

WEINHARD

PORTLAND BEER

SAN FRANCISCO AGENCY

HENRY WEINHARD BREWERY

TELEPHONE MARKET 1803

1255 HARRISON STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Vol. XVII. No. 890. SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 18, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

SAN FRANCISCO TOWN TALK

RICHMOND COAL

IMPORTED SOLELY BY

James and Alex'r Brown

Owners of the Pelaw Main and Richmond Collieries; also Richmond Vale Colliery, Newcastle, N. S. W., Australia

Represented by Wm. Smellie

IF your dealer cannot supply you with genuine Richmond Coal, kindly communicate with us, or Pacific Coast Coal Co., Merchants' Exchange Building. Please note that all other advertisements claiming to sell you Richmond Coal are not authorized by us. They haven't got the goods.

JAMES AND ALEX'R BROWN
334 RUSS BUILDING, MONTGOMERY STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

Sole Wholesale Distributors

PACIFIC COAST COAL CO.

Beale Street Bunkers San Francisco

Leading Hotels and Resorts

HOTEL ALEXANDRIA

LOS ANGELES

IN SAFETY, SERVICE
AND SANITATION

HAS TAKEN ITS PLACE
AMONG THE BEST HOTELS

A. C. BILICKE, President
S. J. WHITMORE, Vice-Pres. and Gen. Mgr. JOS. REICHL, Asst. Mgr.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO

CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. Power boats from the Hotel meet passengers from the North on the arrival of the Pacific Coast S. S. Co. steamers. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, 334 S. Spring St., Los Angeles.

THE PERRY HOTEL

Madison St. and Boren Ave.
SEATTLE, WASH.

Every Modern Convenience—Absolutely Fire Proof
European Plan, The Highest Grade

Under new management, centrally located and commanding a view of the Olympics, Cascade Mountains, Mount Rainier and Puget Sound.

J. S. McTERNAN, Manager

HOTEL WESTMINSTER

LOS ANGELES, CAL. Fourth and Main Sts.

AMERICAN PLAN, Reopened.

Rates per day, $2.50 Rooms without Bath
Rooms with Bath, $3.00, $3.50 and $4.00.

EUROPEAN PLAN.

$1.00 per day and up.
With bath, $1.50 and up

F. O. JOHNSON, Proprietor

THE ANGELUS

LOS ANGELES

One of California's Best Hotels
Centrally located; street cars direct to hotel.
Rates $1.50 per Day Up

HOTEL WASHINGTON

J. M. LUX, MANAGER

SEATTLE, WASH.

A magnificent modern structure involving over One Million and a Half Dollars. Conducted on Most liberal ideas of Experience. Its appointments and service cannot be excelled in the United States. The management cordially invites your patronage.

HOTEL WASHINGTON ANNEX

SEATTLE, WASH.

Best Rooms Best Service
Strictly First-Class

J. H. DAVIS - - - - - Proprietor

HOTEL CUMBERLAND

Broadway at 54th Street

NEW YORK

Near 50th St. Subway Station and 53d St. Elevated

Ideal Location,
Near Theatres, Shops, and
Central Park

New and Fireproof

Strictly First Class in Every Respect

Rates Reasonable
$2.50 with bath, and up.

All Hardwood Floors and
Oriental Rugs

10 Minutes' Walk to 20 Theatres

Excellent Restaurant Prices Moderate

Send for Booklet

HARRY P. STIMSON, formerly with Hotel Imperial
R. J. BINGHAM, formerly with Hotel Woodward

Leading Hotels and Resorts

The Grape Cure at

ÆTNA SPRINGS

includes the principal features of this pleasant and effective remedy as practiced at the various German and Austrian resorts.

For descriptive folder about the grape cure and information about this delightful resort and its famous mineral waters, address LEN D. OWENS, Prop., Aetna Springs, Napa Co., Cal.

HOTEL VICTORIA

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Manager

N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton

CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL

Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine. Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.

American and European Plan.

NAPA SODA SPRINGS HOTEL

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

California's famous mountain spa, only 50 miles from San Francisco. The nearest watering place and summer resort to the city. 1,000 feet elevation, overlooking 25 miles of beautiful Napa Valley. For terms address Manager Napa Soda Springs Hotel, Napa County, Cal.

HOTEL ARGONAUT

Society of California Pioneers Building

FOURTH STREET NEAR MARKET — San Francisco — CENTRE OF THE CITY

Catering to Family and Commercial Trade

400 Rooms $1.00 per day and up Dining room seats 500 guests

Special 50c Luncheon from 11:30 to 2 p. m.

Weekly and monthly rates on application. Free bus meets all trains and steamers.

Telephone Douglas 3393 EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager

YOSEMITE

SENTINEL HOTEL Open the Year Round; Steam Heated; Electric Lighted.

CAMP YOSEMITE Electric Lighted; Opened May 1st; the Largest Hotel-Camp on the Coast.

Under One Management. For Rates, Reservations or other information, address J. B. COOK, Proprietor, Yosemite, Cal.

HOTEL HARCOURT

Formerly the Nordhoff.

SUTTER AND LARKIN STREETS

AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN

An Elegantly Furnished Modern Home. Phone Franklin 2100

PARAISO SPRINGS

MONTEREY CO., CAL.

The most accessible of all resorts; a delightful terminal for an automobile trip. Take 8 a. m. train from Third and Townsend; you arrive at spring 1 p. m. for lunch. Natural hot soda and sulphur plunge and tub baths, 104 to 116 degrees, for rheumatism, malaria and all stomach troubles. Iron and arsenic waters. Altitude 1400 feet. H. H. McGOWAN, Proprietor.

HOTEL NORMANDIE

SUTTER AND GOUGH STREETS

A comfortable, high order, uptown hotel, now under the management of

THOS. H. SHEDDEN, Formerly Manager of St. Dunstan's.

GILROY HOT SPRINGS

Only four hours from San Francisco; delightful stage ride over the best kept mountain road in California. Unsurpassed table, health-giving waters, telephone, postoffice. Rates $12 to $17.50 a week; baths free. Trains leave Third and Townsend streets at 9 a. m. Direct stage connection. See Peck-Judah, 789 Market street.

W. J. McDONALD, Proprietor.

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

ROSS McMAHON AWNING AND TENT CO.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

Tents, Awnings, Hammocks, Bags and Covers

Phone Kearny 2030 403 BATTERY STREET

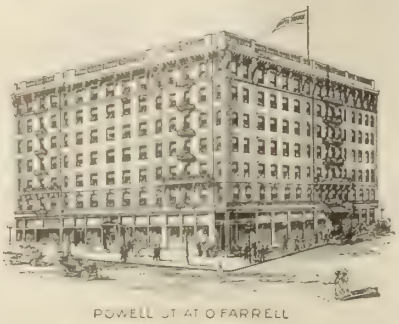
Boca Hotel and Annex

TRUCKEE RIVER

Address CHAS. GARRISON, BOCA, CAL.



CAMERAS Kodaks, Developing, Printing, Supplies, Etc.

"Don't take a vacation unless you take pictures as you go along"

462-464 THIRTEENTH STREET, Between Broadway and Washington

SMITH BROS. STATIONERS OAKLAND

Leading Hotels and Resorts

POWELL ST AT O'FARRELL

HOTEL MANX SAN FRANCISCO

Army and navy headquarters. Built, equipped and conducted to please the really critical. Every convenience known to latter day hotel keeping. Circulating ice water in each room.

Management of GUS C. LARM

Hotel and Grounds

Beginning Sunday, September 19th, the

DEL MONTE EXPRESS

The fast through train with parlor car

Will leave San Francisco at 2:00 p. m. daily

Instead of at 3:00 p. m. as heretofore, arriving at

HOTEL DEL MONTE

At 5:43 instead of 6:43 p. m., giving ample time to rest before dinner. H. R. WARNER, Manager

THE VENDOME SAN JOSE

Is the ideal objective point for the motorist. The accommodations are complete and the ride from either side of the bay is delightful. This hotel is unsurpassed in the West for the beauty of its environment and for those qualities which contribute to ease and comfort. H. W. LAKE, Manager.

LONG BEACH SANITARIUM

Battle Creek Sanitarium Methods LONG BEACH, CAL. Long Distance Phones in Every Room

A splendidly equipped QUIET, REFINED and MODERN medical and surgical Institution BY THE SEA, where the sick, run down or work-tired may go and know that they will receive the very best of care and attention at reasonable rates. Gentlemen and Lady Physicians. Graduate nurses only. Climate exceptionally fine. Cool in summer, warm and dry in winter. Descriptive Booklet mailed FREE. W. RAY SIMPSON, Manager.

YE ALPINE TAVERN

Beautiful Mountain Resort on Mt. Love

Just a mile above the sea. American plan $3.00 per day, $15 per week. Choice of rooms in hotel or cottages. Spend a vacation 5,000 feet above the sea, among great pines and oaks. For information, D. A. Munger, General Agent, Pacific Electric R. R., Los Angeles, or office.

BYRON HOT SPRINGS

One of the world's most curative springs, 2½ hours from San Francisco; one of California's best hotels and a delightful place for rest and recreation. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, James Flood Building, any S. P. Agent, or Peck-Judah, 789 Market St., San Francisco, or 553 S. Spring St., Los Angeles, or address manager, Byron Hot Springs, California.

TAKE TAMALPAIS TRIP

and breathe good air.

Half a mile high in two hours' time. No other trip like it.

Via Sausalito Ferry, Foot of Market Street

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, September 18, 1909. No. 890.

ROSARIO GUERRERO

The famous Spanish artiste who will appear next week in the musical pantomime "The Rose and The Dagger" at the Orpheum.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY

Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor.
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION—One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.

The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.

For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.

Los Angeles office, 427 South Main Street.
Seattle office, 804 Third Avenue.

We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

Edward H. Harriman

The eulogies of Edward H. Harriman that were uttered by friends and foes immediately upon the announcement of his death were inspired unquestionably by the sincerest admiration and respect. Even the newspapers in this instance were not constrained by considerations of delicacy and charity as they frequently are when death drops the curtain. The fact is that at the time of his death Mr. Harriman enjoyed a large measure of public esteem, a larger measure perhaps than was ever before won by a citizen in private life; and it is also a fact that he was profoundly mourned by a people in whom there is a lively appreciation of the rare qualities of mind and heart for which he was distinguished. Therefore, we say, the eloquent tributes that were paid to the character and genius of Edward H. Harriman were the expressions of heartfelt sentiments and in nowise of the nature of perfunctory panegyrics. We have nothing to add to what has been said with reference to Mr. Harriman's great achievements and the rare qualities to which he owed the dignity and success of his brilliant career, but we feel that this occasion should not be permitted to pass without allusion to the injustice that was done Mr. Harriman in his lifetime. Without designing to cast reproaches at those by whom abuse was heaped upon the railroad magnate we are constrained to suggest that it might be instructive and salutary to look back over the last few years of his life and ponder the remarkable vicissitudes, national in their scope, which affected his fortunes less deeply than his feelings. There is a most valuable lesson to be learned from the sad experience of Mr. Harriman, a lesson that is very old but always new, so true is human nature to its instincts. Many years ago Jeremy Bentham pointed out the danger of indulging men of power and position in their gratification of a sinister interest. It has been said that the greatest service rendered by Bentham to the philosophy of universal human nature was his illustration of what he termed interest begotten prejudice—the common tendency of man to make a duty and a virtue of following his self-interest. The idea that he dwelt upon was that there are many artifices by which men persuade themselves that they are not yielding to their selfish inclinations when they are and that any set of persons who mix much together and have a common interest are apt to make that common interest their standard of virtue. Harriman's career in its closing years presents a striking illustration of the danger of encouraging the very things against which Jeremy Bentham inveighed. Harriman was the victim of interest-begotten prejudice. Distinguished for active rather than passive qualities, he was one of those rare men that are fitted for making changes in the circumstances that surround them rather than for accommodating themselves to existing conditions, but the things that he did to accomplish his vast and beneficent designs had their natural growth under the shelter of fixed habits and firmly settled opinions. He was no innovator in his methods; only in the scope of his projects. But it happened that while he was wielding his magician's rod of steel to evoke "the sleeping energies of land and water," there was developing under the machinations of artful demagogues a sentiment against the very character of industrial enterprise to which he was devoting his talents; and it also happened that there were men possessed of political power who conceived it to be to their common interest, which they deemed the standard of virtue, to encourage and stimulate the new sentiment that was spreading over the country. It was in these circumstances that Edward H. Harriman had visited upon him the hostility of intrenched political power. Adjudged the archetype of all the plutocratic malefactors that infested the land, for four years he was held up to public execration and compelled to fight not only for his reputation but for his liberty; for so bitter was the vindictiveness of his pursuers that they purposed throwing him into jail, and to that end entered into conspiracy with unscrupulous sympathizers in this city. Throughout those trying times Edward H. Harriman comported himself with courage and dignity. He pleaded his case at the bar of public opinion, and he triumphed over his pursuers because of the sense of justice that abides in the heart of the American people.

Our Moral Tone

Notwithstanding the prodigious efforts that have been made to improve the moral tone of this city, to rouse what is known as the civic spirit and render wrongdoing in public life repugnant to the people, it is not necessarily symptomatic of a sceptical spirit to doubt that we have made appreciable progress toward the goal that is beloved of the righteous. Certain phenomena there are, and the records of certain occurrences decipherable even to those that run, which should give us pause though we were most heartily inclined to the fond notion that we have abandoned the odious ways of the unregenerate. After a careful analysis of the phenomena and occurrences to which we allude the question that presents itself is, Are the people of this enlightened city incapacitated from distinguishing what is right or are they more strongly inclined than ever to adhere to what is wrong? To be sure we are now governed by reformers, and to be sure our carking and insatiate uplifters have no complaint to make with reference to the administration of municipal affairs which they vouched for and which they gave us with the assistance of kind Providence; but whatever the correct answer to the question may be it is certainly not indulging in exaggeration to say that scandals are of more frequent occurrence under this dispensation than they were in the days of Ruef's ascendency; and certainly there is no evidence of a disposition on the part of the people to hold their servants to a strict accounting. We have seen the Board of Public Works, after winking at the violation of specifications, whitewashed in deference to the plea of one of the attorneys of the Spreckels staff, and we have heard no murmur of disapproval from the vigilant and vociferous press. We have seen another of the attorneys of the Spreckels staff obtain immunity for a bank wrecker, and we have seen another bank wrecker, under sentence of imprisonment, leave the State by consent of our rubber-stamp District Attorney and engage in high finance in New York; all of which, it is perhaps unnecessary to observe, is unprecedented in the curious annals of this eccentric State, and yet there has been no criticism, not even comment on the singularity of the happenings. But all the while the persons by whose bold ingenuity these incredible things were made possible have been howling about the difficulty of sending rich men to jail. If the canting hypocrisy of all this has been paralleled at any time in the United States, or any of its dependencies or non-contiguous territory it has not been brought to our notice. Nor is this all. It has been reported in the public prints that an expert accountant has found distinct traces of graft in Golden Gate Park, and there has been no comment; nobody has thought it even worth while to demand the names of the higher-ups. We have learned from the sworn testimony of an expert that Mayor Taylor, who pants for reform as the hart panteth for the waterbrook, has countenanced a violation of the charter by which larceny has been facilitated in the Treasurer's office. Yet the benign and bewhiskered poet, joyriding at the expense of a complaisant people in a blissful state of innocuous gullibility, betrays not the slightest concern and apparently he is in no immediate danger of being called upon to surrender the badge of honor which he has been wearing without the stamp of merit. We have but briefly recapitulated the scandals of this administration that have not been kept from public notice, and which we think are of sufficient volume to justify us in inquiring whether the complaisance of the public might not be regarded as evidence of the failure of the efforts that have been made to improve the moral tone of the community. We have said nothing of the effrontery of our uplifters in resorting to technicalities to prevent an investigation of crimes against the ballot alleged to have been committed in furtherance of the scheme to elect a private prosecutor to the district attorneyship; nor have we said anything of the more serious phase of the local situation which is presented by the many honest ladies and gentlemen who, despite abundant and shrieking evidence of the charlatanical character of the self-constituted coterie of uplifters by which the city is tormented, continue to aid and abet the nefarious schemes that pivot on the candidacy of Francis J. Heney; but these are matters which need only be touched upon to start a flood of thought in the minds of intelligent persons.

Wine in the Bible

The Rev. Lincoln Edwards, a New Jersey clergyman, has been citing scripture in support of the Prohibition propaganda. Which reminds us that it has been said that almost any doctrine can be extracted from the Bible, and that the assurance comes down to us from the days of Shakespeare that even Satan "can cite scripture for his purpose." For Prohibitionists there is no book to which moralists look for guidance that holds so little consolation as the Bible. It is true that the Apostle Paul, as the Rev. Lincoln Edwards has discovered, tells the Ephesians not to be drunken with wine, but it is hardly to be inferred from this wise injunction that the illustrious preacher was eligible to membership in the ranks of the Prohibitionists. It was Paul who advised Timothy to leave off water and drink wine for his stomach's sake. Drunkenness is nowhere advocated in the Bible, but the things that make men drunk are nowhere condemned; on the contrary they are recommended. From the Old Testament we learn it was Yayin, (the ordinary name used for wine) that made Noah drunk and the Ephraimites drunk; that it caused people to stumble in judgment and err in vision, making them forget their poverty and become noisy and sick, but yet the Israelites were ordered to offer Yayin to the Deity; and the Deity describes it as possessing a "sweet savor" for him. In the Psalms we are told that Yayin has been given to man to make his heart glad, and we find it represented as one of the choicest blessings which God reserves for his chosen people when restored to their own land. It has been said of the Old Testament that it is fragrant throughout with the aroma of the wine-cup. Patriarchs and Prophets drink wine, and they regard a shortage of the juice of the grape as one of the severest judgments pronounced by God upon disobedience. Nor is it to be inferred from the Old Testament that wine, though recommended as a means of making the heart glad, is not to be taken in draughts sufficiently copious to produce indecorous hilarity. Even in biblical days when a man's blood was warm he was not expected to sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster. When Joseph, one of the most revered of the antique types of virtue, entertained his brethren, they all got gloriously drunk, yet they are not reprehended for their conduct. And when we come down to the New Testament we find that Jesus, the exemplar, the model and pattern for human imitation, never took occasion to set an example of total abstinence. Yet he lived in an age when the evils of intoxication were much greater and more widespread than in this era. There were many things from which he advised and commanded men to abstain, but strong drink was not one of them. The first manifestation of his supernatural powers was the production of some hundred and twenty gallons of choice wine at a banquet; the last impressive act of his life was the ceremonial institution of the sacrament which involves the use of wine. Singularly enough there are many so-called Christians who are above all things Prohibitionists. For them wine has no significance. They revere the founder of the Christian religion, but apparently they are not aware that he directed his followers to keep the wine-presses going in his honor.

Dickens and His Readers

The merits and shortcomings of Charles Dickens are once more the subject of discussion, and as usual the admirers of the great novelist are in a mood to consign to boiling oil anybody who dissents from their judgment. While Dickens has many admirers among persons of the highest education the great bulk of his worshipers are of the class that conceives its opinions on any subject to be beyond dispute, and hence the fervor with which his cause is espoused whenever his position in the literary world is challenged. It was to this class that Dickens frankly appealed and by this class he will always be warmly esteemed. The current controversy is confined at present to New York where it was precipitated

The Hub
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

WE'VE ADVANCED ANOTHER STEP TOWARD CLOTHES PERFECTION. THE SMART MODELS WE SHOW FOR THIS FALL AND WINTER ARE EXCLUSIVE AND PLEASING TO THE OBSERVING DRESSER, THE MAKING AND THE FITTING AND "THE HOW" WE SELL CLOTHES HAVE MADE FOR US "REPUTATION." MAY BE WE'RE NOT PROUD OF IT.

THIS LABEL VOUCHES FOR THESE MAKERS

The Hub
Chas Keilus & Co.
San Francisco.

Atterbury System, Brokaw Bros.
Alfred Benjamin & Co., Ely Meyer & M. C. Simon,
Adler-Rochester, Levy Bros.' Co.
Paragon Trousers.

You don't have to grope in the dark when you buy clothes in this shop. You certainly get the best clothes brain that can be found from "the north to the south pole." Besides, we know how our clothes are made. There's lots of honor in making; ours are full of it. You couldn't leave this exclusive shop of ours unless you were fitted as perfectly as possible. We don't give "knockers" a chance to knock. That's what it means to trade in this exclusive shop.

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

by one Oliver Cram of Rochester, who asserts that Dickens "represents cockneyism and vulgarity"; that his vogue "was entirely due to the ignorance and bad taste of his readers," and that "Pickwick" is the only one of his books "that will be read in twenty years." Letters have been pouring into the Sun office ever since Cram gave utterance to these pedantic views, and he is receiving some pretty severe jolts, which unquestionably he deserves, his dogmatism being conclusive of the shallowness of his pretension to ripe scholarship. To hold that the popularity of Dickens is due to the ignorance and bad taste of his readers is quite as absurd as to pronounce him a flawless literary artist. It may be doubted whether since Shakespeare's time England has produced a greater elemental genius than the creator of "Pickwick," but that Dickens did not attain the highest perfection possible in the art which he mastered after his own fashion no person versed in the rudiments of that art will contend. A novel ought to conform to certain laws and present certain artistic qualities which have their close analogies in painting. As it is required of a picture that it conform to certain rules of composition, grouping, chiaroscuro and perspective, so in a novel it is essential that there be method, grace and unity in plot. Now Dickens did not comply with these requirements. Like all original genius he blazed his own path. A self-taught artist, he was not sensible of all the trammels of his art, but in his very freedom therefrom he rose to great heights, achieving effects that a more cultured man would never have attempted. But it is because he violated technique as Shakespeare violated it that he is not acceptable to the little pedants who fail to see that he succeeded in spite of his limitations because of the divine quality of his genius. Judged by the accepted standards of criticism Dickens has many faults; his plots are inartistic; his genesis of character is rude and unphilosophic; his writing lacks crystalline finish; he wanders from his story into unphilosophic homiletics; sometimes when sad he is maudlin; in short he abounds in imperfections of taste, method and manner. Nevertheless he produced immortal works. His plots may have been worked out inartisically, but by his wonderful creative power he peopled our memory with men and women to whom we are indebted for much mirth and pleasure. Dickens was essentially a creator of character. So was Shakespeare, so was Cervantes. Shakespeare borrowed his stories and employed them as settings for flesh and blood personages that will live forever. Dickens invented plots in which there is little harmony of conception, but they served as a background for Mrs. Gamp, for Dick Swiveller, for Mr. Pickwick, for Mark Tapley, for Little Nell, for Micawber, for Captain Cuttle and for all the others of our acquaintances in whose society we have mingled with great delight. That the creator of these people is to lose in time the reverence of all but the uneducated is a prediction that seems hardly worth considering. It is nearly seventy years since Dickens made his appearance as an author, and his popularity is far from being on the wane. In his lifetime it was said that he would not live as an English classic because as he dealt in accidental manifestations rather than in universal principles in the course of time the manners he depicted would be found only in a Dictionary of Antiquities. But today the leading critics of England are writing of him in terms of praise, and Dickens lovers who call themselves "Dickensians" are forming clubs and founding magazines in London for the accumulation and study of every kind of Dickens trifle. But a short time ago there was a controversy as to whether when Mr. Pickwick retired after his adventures to some village he ever sat under a certain tree which has been cut down. There has lately been issued a book of miscellaneous papers and plays and poems by Dickens and it has provoked much discussion. So it is evident that at this writing, at least, the creator of Pickwick is holding his own.

Brother Goose

Young Brother Hubbard
He went to the cupboard,
  And was not a little surprised,
The when he got there,
To find it quite bare,
  The contents thereof all Fletcherized.

—Harry Cowell.

RUBBERNECK

—New York World.

NO SIREE, HE WON'T BELIEVE IT UNTIL HE'S FROSTBITTEN

—Philadelphia Record.

Perspective Impressions

"Who hasn't got a button?" replaced the old question on Wednesday when the Native Daughters sallied forth to raise funds for the Portola Festival.

Nine of Burns' gumshoe men were on the Heney reception committee. How the rampant multitude doth dwindle!

To settle the matter let us try to persuade Teddy to go to the North Pole and stay there till he traps an African lion by way of prima facie evidence.

Mr. Hearst is so passionately clamoring for an income tax that doubtless his odious enemies will suspect him of having devised some way of beating it.

Peary says his rival is gaining fame on a cooked up story.

From the daily papers we learn that a club is preferred to knock-out drops by Barbary Coast saloon-keepers whenever the occasion arises for the separation of a ruraliste from his coin. By whom are these saloon-keepers "protected"—the higher-ups or the founders of the League of Justice?

The Southern part of the State is denouncing the State Board of Equalization, and has adopted as its slogan "No taxation without representation." The trouble with that section is that it has become so accustomed to representation without adequate taxation that its contemplation of a change produces intense anguish.

In Golden Gate Park

A Few Words in Appreciation of a San Francisco Attraction That Offers Manifold Advantages to Those Who Would Embrace Them—An Earnest Exhortation to go Forth and Rediscover Delights That You May Have Forgotten.

By Robert McTavish

I have a friend who says that if he had all things to choose from he would ask that he be given the freedom of Golden Gate Park, with the privilege of sleeping within its confines—peaceful sleep, without sheltering tent, beneath the trees—and of shooting game enough for his own use. "I would build myself a bower on Strawberry Hill," he said; "there I would hang my frying-pan, my stew-kettle, my coffee pot and my rod and gun that they might be kept from the damp of the fogs. Just outside the door I would make me a bed of boughs, and there I would sleep, to be awakened in the morning by the song of birds and the hum of the bees. And there"—

"You have been reading Yeats' 'Inisfree,'" I interrupted.

But to leave the friend out of the question, he having served as an introduction to what I want to say, what more charming existence could be imagined than the freedom of Golden Gate Park, the most beautiful in the United States? I will interrupt myself sufficiently to say that when I visited it last with a New York friend he tried to tell me that Central Park was six miles long. "It extends from fifty-ninth street to one hundred and tenth, does it not, and fifty-one blocks are not six miles, are they?" I asked him—which in itself was a great surprise, as I have never been in New York, and he, with Gothamite conceit, imagined that none but those who had trod the confines of Manhattan knew anything of it. Cornered, he acknowledged that Central Park was not really six miles long, but maintained that it "was pretty big," which I am willing to admit. But to say that it has one-half the charm of Golden Gate Park is as comparing an apple tree to a redwood.

What I have been trying to get at all this time, and am finally approaching, is the fact that all the people of San Francisco do not fully appreciate their park, and do not visit it half often enough. An occasional Sunday spent there seems to satisfy the average citizen, who wonders languidly around, listens to the band, inspects the museum and then goes home. While to go to Golden Park on Sunday is better than to remain away from it altogether, the best time to enjoy it is on a week day, when there are few people there, and there is as much room to move about as in a mountain forest. Then the birds seem to sing and the sun to shine for you alone—there is a prodigal display for you that unshared by a great multitude seems a beneficent luxury. It is then that you may wander undisturbed in the shady bypaths, stroll unjostled along the shores of the lake, or sit undisturbed in peaceful quiet viewing the ocean from the base of the cross that was erected to the memory of the chaplain who came to the Pacific Coast with Sir Francis Drake. (Faith, and it would take many chaplains to make that pirate's future life on the other side of the final river a peaceful one.)

The size of Golden Gate Park enables it to be a place of manifold attractions. You can meet the ferocious grizzly face to face in his cage, and watch him capering with an agility that is a constant surprise. You can see boys and men sailing their miniature boats on the lake. There are birds with which to scrape an acquaintance, and squirrels that will take food from your hands. You can watch Young America at his athletic sports in the recreation grounds, and Younger America—blessed toddlers—at the children's playground. That is worth the greater part of your time, the sight of the little ones at their childhood games. Even the birds are not more innocently or unconsciously happy than the children as they prattle and chatter at their play. Do not be too disappointed if they are a little indifferent to your advances. The green grass and the heaps of sand are more attractive to them than mere human beings, and they have not yet learned hypocrisy.

It is not because I imagine that you do not know of these attractions that I am telling you of them; it is because I know that some of you have forgotten them—and to forget the good things that beckon so close at hand is lamentably remiss. Half an hour's ride will take you to the Park from almost any part of town—some of you are so fortunate as to live within easy walking distance and will find it worth the time and trouble to walk there at dawn. This may mean early to bed and the sacrifice of a few chapters of a favorite or newly discovered book. But Nature has written more charming things than human beings can inscribe, and you will find her most eloquent just as the gray of dawn is creeping over the hills to the east. You will see and hear the birds at their awakening; the rabbits will let you walk near them as they furtively steal out to feed; the quail will clitter and cluck almost under your feet. And as day comes, and the trees and slopes are touched by the morning sun, you will feel in your heart such things as never come to one in city streets or within four confining walls. It is a pleasant place too as the evening falls—a place of deep and quiet peace, of sweet restfulness. It is a pleasant place always, a source of tranquil delights and invigorating enjoyment. We should all be thankful that we have it, and should neglect no opportunity to embrace the advantages it offers.

In Pride of Parenthood

By Leon Frapie (From the French)

At the age of thirty-six, he was a lonely bachelor without serious interest in anything and it was perhaps for that reason that Athanase de Glidoir became a hopeless hypochondriac. His tall and slender form was always draped with rectilinear elegance, but he had taken on the stolid expression and the glassy eyes of a maniac. The thought of suicide haunted him and he began to wander along the Seine, in the unfrequented quarters from the Place de la Concorde to Auteuil. Sometimes he descended to the water's edge and studied the surroundings with rapt attention. He had a little mustache, a long nose and angular chin and forehead, all of which made him look something like a melancholy heron. Three days in succession, he went to inspect a great iron fastened high up on the wall of the Jena bridge, a ring intended for the purposes of vessels. On the fourth day, at the mystic hour of twilight, he again made his way to the Seine, yielding to the irresistible impulse to hang himself to the mooring he had so carefully chosen.

He was approaching with uncertain gait, meanwhile congratulating himself upon the artistically prepared silken curtain-cord in his pocket, when suddenly in the distance a swaying shadow aroused his alarm—and not without reason. When he arrived at the bridge, he saw before him a man who apparently had just hung himself on that precious ring!

With the fury of a householder who has caught a burglar in the act, he leaped to the spot and cut the rope letting the man fall heavily on the paving below. Athanase loosened the rope and began to shake the fellow so brutally that his head resounded on the stones. Evidently that was the correct treatment, for the man opened his eyes and his mouth. He seemed to hear and understand, but the shock had temporarily paralyzed him.

Athanase, still on his knees, took advantage of this powerlessness, and folding his arms began a furious tirade:

"Haven't you any decency about you? What right have you to hang yourself on that ring that does not belong to you? Hang yourself at home if you have any sense of honesty or propriety! Do you think it is a pretty spectacle, a clean and appetizing sight; a big, black corpse swaying in the wind? A delicate woman or child might go by. At the very least you should have had the decency to wear a light suit like mine. That would announce from afar: 'Don't come near, a man has hung himself.'"

Athanase de Glidoir spoke with such furious volubility that little flecks of saliva fell from his mouth bespattering the prostrate wretch.

"Then, too, monsieur, if you had the slightest taste or imagination, you would have thrown yourself in the water. That is more modest and discreet. You really must be fond of ostentation, for you cannot say that you forgot the Seine or that it was too far away."

During this harangue, he had made up his mind to rid himself of the intruder, to regain possession of the desirable location and occupy the ring himself.

"What is your name?" he asked the man, who was now beginning to move his lips.

"Bagu."

"Bagu! No wonder! It is as elegant as you and your way of doing things."

Bagu, with his hollow cheeks, famished air and unkempt beard, was as threadbare as a workman whose resources have long since vanished.

"And why this suicide, will you tell me?"

"Poverty."

Athanase de Glidoir thrust forward his chin and displayed all his teeth with a rictus of stupefaction.

"Imbecile! No one commits suicide on account of poverty! Poverty is a motive for living, the best one and the only one. If you possess nothing, it is as though you were being born again each day. You have everything to enjoy, to desire, to conquer. The only logical cause of suicide is wealth—and for wealth there is no remedy. The rich man is a living corpse, he has missed his calling, he has logically reached the end of his rope—nothing more to desire or to discover. But at least you must have the excuse of loneliness?"

"No, I have children."

At this admission, Athanase came near slapping the fellow's face:

"Wretch! Villain! Beggar! Unnatural father! I ought to hang you again with my own hands! That is worse than stupidity! It is a monstrous crime for you to commit suicide. You belong to your children and duty commands you to struggle for them in every conceivable way and—and even as a last resort to commit crime in their behalf."

De Glidoir pronounced these last words as if he had found a remarkable inspiration. Now he no longer desired to hang himself, for the possibility of looking at the grotesque Bagu had looked, suddenly made him abandon the plan. The idea of death, however, persisted tenaciously.

It was then that in accordance with the astonishing cunning of the maniac, who coolly uses the most ingenious calculation to obtain his ends, he conceived the idea of getting Bagu to compass his death!

This decision, indeed, came as a deep satisfaction to the underlying aristocracy of his reasoning ego. It suited his propensity to have things done for him, his taste for dramatic endings and his strong tendency toward charity. Oui, ma foi, now that it occurred to him, he felt that he must arrange so that his death would benefit this pitiful Bagu.

He helped the latter to rise to his feet and brushed the dust off his clothes. Then putting his arm around him, he led him slowly away, encouraging him with gentle and persuasive words:

"Now listen to what I advise you to do. Make your way to the Rue de Prony, No. 208. There on the ground floor to the right lives an idler that is of no use to anybody. He goes to bed every evening at nine o'clock, drunk as a lord, leaving his key on the outside. Rob him and you will get enough to pay for your trouble, but the first thing to do is to cut the man's throat, for he is a brute, without charity for the needy, and besides keeping a revolver under his pillow has had all the bureau drawers wired with burglar alarms."

As the two came to an open bazaar, Athanase bought a great, murderous-looking clasp-knife.

"Take that with you," said he to Bagu.

The latter walked along and listened respectfully with the passively obedient expression of a somnambulist.

"Let's enter this cafe and get something to drink," said Athanase.

After the two had drunk several absinthes, they left the place and Athanase said:

"Now that you are keyed up to it, go ahead and don't hesitate. Think of your children."

While Bagu continued on his way afoot, Athanase hailed a carriage and drove rapidly to his apartment. Having unlocked the door, he left the key in the lock outside, undressed, took an opium pill, then turned down the lamp and went to bed.

(Continued on Page 34.)

INVITATIONS MONOGRAMS CRESTS
VISITING CARD PLATES ENGRAVED
ROBERTSON
UNION SQUARE SAN FRANCISCO

The Spectator

"Whiskers Joe" and "Fuzzy-Wuzzy"

The consensus of opinion in Mayor Taylor's official family with reference to Joe O'Connor's attack on School Superintendent Roncovieri is not to be printed in these columns, for reasons which, perhaps, it is unnecessary to explain. Suffice it that there are members of this family who are not in the habit of calling a spade by any other name, and who feel that Schoolmaster O'Connor has proved himself a very indiscreet individual with no sense of the ridiculous, without, indeed, sufficient sense to appreciate the wisdom compactly set forth in the proverb which affirms that persons who live in glass houses should not throw stones. O'Connor's official confreres say he ought to have known that his record was such that he could not afford to engage in a pelting match with Roncovieri. Than the school superintendent there is not a more efficient or zealous official in the whole city government; nor in the school department is there anybody imbued with greater enthusiasm; whereas O'Connor, who comes down to us from the days of Chris Buckley, which were one continuous heyday for the schoolmaster, has in more ways than one betrayed an inclination to look out for himself first and the school department later. This inclination he has evinced, according to Roncovieri, ever since his good friend Mayor Taylor appointed him school director. In this capacity he raised the salary of the Principal of the Mission Grammar School. This is the position he occupied before he became a school director, and it is the position to which he expects to return when his term of office is at an end. Other charges have been made by Mr. Roncovieri, but the one with reference to the raising of his own salary by indirection is the one that has agitated the schoolmaster's confreres. It is a charge, they say, that would embarrass Mayor Taylor very much were he as sensitive to matters affecting his reputation as to the beauties of nature and other things that supply the raw material of Homeric strains and lilting lyric lays. But Mayor Taylor, buried whiskers deep in his rhyming dictionary, is not to be torn from the rosy arms of his Muse and plunged into a cold-blooded prosaic investigation of one of his proteges, however grave the indictment, however clamorous the voice of conscience.

The Passing of Langdon

Some of District Attorney Langdon's warmest and most devoted friends have been soberly and seriously considering the advisability of celebrating him with appropriate ceremonies on the approaching occasion of his retirement from office. This is a project that should be taken in hand at once as it is already betraying symptoms of an early death from inanition. The fitting celebration of Mr. Langdon is a matter that concerns us all if we would vindicate the ways of the people to their friends. I have noticed of late an air of cold and chilling indifference in the attitude of the people toward the man who made the graft prosecution possible and who was once like Caesar with a multitude at his heels. Is it to be said of us that we are ungrateful? Perish the thought! Let it not be made possible for history even to hint that District Attorney Langdon fell the victim of a wise and salutary neglect. It is not to be supposed that the people have ceased to appreciate the talents and services of Mr. Langdon. The fact is that many of them are preoccupied with the glorious enterprise that has for its object the extension of Mr. Heney's lease of political life, while all the rest are getting ready for the Portola festivities; and in the mad excitement of the hour they have become unconscious of the fact that like the bubble on the fountain, the dew on the mountain, Mr. Langdon is soon to be gone forever from scenes through which ambition like the gleaming taper's light once adorned and cheered his blithesome way. Nevertheless the people should be chided for their neglect. Nay, they should be rebuked and reproached for the high but false hopes which once they stirred in Mr. Langdon's bosom. It was but a few years ago that him they escorted to the apex of a high mountain which towered above the valleys and acclivities of the State, casting its shadow from San Diego to Siskiyou, from the Sierras to the western verge, and, gladdening his eyes with the vast prospect that extended on all sides, they told him that to possess it all he had but to fall upon his knees and worship Rudolph. And verily he fell. For awhile thereafter they celebrated him, and they burned incense which to him was sweet and refreshing. Indeed, ever and anon, that he might not grow restless, impatient or recalcitrant in the background the while that others were deriving much glory from their activities, they sang his praises and they coddled him and they poured sweet nothings into his capacious ear. Thus were his emotions played upon through long and tedious months, but now that his tenure of office is petering out he is receiving scant attention. Apparently the people have permitted their affections to be alienated. It seems as if there is unanimous concurrence in the sentiment that the erstwhile darling of the mob should be permitted to take himself far from the madding crowd and devote his transcendent talents to the management of the estate that has come to him through marriage. There is nobody sufficiently intoxicated with gratitude to beg him stay and take another job. Like Mayor Taylor he reminds me now that he is about to be cast off of certain ladies that the decadent French poets sing about. And it is because of the lamentable metamorphosis that I heartily urge a fitting celebration of the wind-up of his political career. We ought to be able to express our feelings with enthusiasm.

"What, you're engaged? Where did you get acquainted with her?"

"At her wedding. We fell in love with each other there!"

When Honors Are Not Easy

Among such of us as blushingly bear in mind what unconscious humorists we Americans are on occasion, how much we freely and unwittingly contribute to the gaiety of the nations, it is become an open question whether Old Glory is the more honored or disgraced by its spectacular position, and the circumjacent to-do, in the vicinity of the North Pole. From the point of view of science, the immeasurably most important discovery of the age was that of the fact of evolution. Quite independently of one another Wallace and Darwin, in the

J. C. WILSON
BROKER
Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills Bldg. Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

J. M. Jacobi & Co.
S. W. COR. MONTGOMERY & SUTTER STS
Individuality is always found in the best tailored garments
OUR FALL AND WINTER CLOTHING MERITS YOUR ATTENTION.

course of their several explorations of relatively unknown scientific domains, became co-discoverers. It is highly improbable that each made the discovery on the self-same day; yet, instead of flinging billingsgate the one at the other, they agreed like the gentlemen and scholars they were to publish their monographs on the subject simultaneously. In the game of whisht they played honors were easy. The generous way in which Alfred Russell Wallace subsequently gave to Charles Darwin even more of the shared glory than was the latter's just due, proved the giver to be the moral equal, if not the scientific, of him who is regarded by many as the greatest man of the nineteenth century, the greatest humanitarian, even. The history of that nobly divided glory Peary and Cook would do well to read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest. Suppose Dr. Cook to have "handed the public a gold brick"—which is scarcely credible—is it love of the people or self-love which prompts Explorer Peary to enter into competition with Prosecutor Heney?

He—"Do you take me for a fool?"
She—"No; but my judgment is not infallible."

Rival Politicians Meet

George Hewlett, the young lawyer who is managing Charles Fickert's campaign, Rudolph Spreckels, who is managing the city at large, and Hiram Johnson, one of his lieutenants, met in a barber shop the other day in circumstances both amusing and embarrassing. Hewlett dropped in first, and after getting out of the barber's chair sat down to have his nails manicured. While this process was going on Spreckels and Johnson came in. The former sat down also to be manicured, there being two nail-polishers in the shop, while the faithful Johnson waited for him. Hewlett, deep in plans for Fickert's success, did not notice who sat beside him. Spreckels, thinking—let us draw a veil over his thoughts—did not notice by whom he sat. His nails were finished first, and he threw down a gold coin. The girl, who was either stupid or endowed with a great sense of humor, indicated Hewlett with a nod of her head and said, "Are you paying for both?" Then Spreckels looked at Hewlett, and Hewlett looked at Spreckels, and Johnson looked with considerable amusement at both of them. The two rivals shook hands with the cordiality often displayed by men who would rather give greeting of a different sort, and inquired solicitously each after the health of the other—but Spreckels paid only for himself.

A Daniel of the Bench

An entirely new principle of law is to be found in the bill of exceptions in the Ruef case, which will soon be taken up for consideration by the Court of Appeal. On this principle Judge Lawlor based one of the many remarkable rulings by which he caused the bar of the State to sit up and take notice. This particular ruling was made during the cross-examination of a witness by Henry Ach. The witness had given some testimony which was obviously so ridiculous that the attorney chortled before undertaking the discomfiture of him. Thereupon Judge Lawlor thus: "The examination of this witness is at an end." Attorney Ach in a tone of amazement protested that he had many questions to ask.

"I have made my ruling," said Judge Lawlor.

"On what ground did you base that ruling," asked the attorney.

"On the ground that you chuckled," said the learned and upright Daniel with the characteristic cold neutrality of an impartial judge.

MAISON DORÉE HOTEL AND RESTAURANT
151-157 ELLIS ST., ABOVE POWELL
Phone Ex. Douglas 1040, Connecting All Departments.
THE GOURMETS FAVORITE PLACE TO DINE
Also Mercantile Lunch at reasonable rates.

The Joy Company

A refreshing note of protest against the pessimistic lamentations of those disagreeable persons of low spirits and disappointed views who see nothing but the discouraging side of life, has been sounded by Williams Allen Wood. This gentleman is a member of the Indianapolis Bar. He has drawn up "Articles of Association of the Joy Company, Unlimited," the purpose of which is thus expressed in Article II:

The object of this association, in furtherance of the rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness and in the interest of good comradeship, is to promote the use of the easy chair, the stein, the soothing weed, and the story; by means of crackling logs in a broad fireplace, to incite to the geniality that knits closer the group of hearty talkers and contented listeners; to induce boisterous laughter, merry songs, lusty choruses, and strange, brave and romantic stories; to journey in the world of imagination and, though there be snow and storm outside, to wander in green forests, to gather the blossoms of the peach and hawthorn, to breathe the perfume of scented shrubs, to hear the night birds sing, the streamlets purl, the far-off harmony of piano and voice, to gaze on stars as thick as leaves of Vallombrosa, to have fond sweethearts, and to enjoy the lunarian rights and privileges of an Italian night in June; to enjoy all these rights and privileges in their seasons, to use such nicknames, terms of affection, handclasps and caresses as will promote good feeling and show the love and regard in which companions are held; to give words of praise and encouragement to one another, to assist one another in every way possible not inconsistent with our mutual strength and our personal sense of justice and to foster one another's confidence in the strength of manhood and one another's hope of living up to high deals and attaining high accomplishments; to preserve pleasant memories—the swimming pools and sand banks of our youth, the coasting hill of winter days, the Crusoes and Alices of Wonderland that whiled away our evenings, the games of ball and the athletic contests, the riding, hunting and fishing parties, the luring dances, the lyric thrills of first love, the poets that expressed for us the bright and happy colors of life and the beauties of crowded hours, and all those caressing or inspiring memories of larger experiences, deeper emotions, more vivid passions and more intellectual avocations that make life rich, colorful and epic in our maturity; to do all these things, and to do them before the world, so as to invite competition on the part of all mankind, that the profits of this association may be cumulative and perpetual.

The home office of this association is to be any place where "there are a sufficient number of good fellows to create warmth and delight by their presence."

Mrs. A.—Going through the burned district my hat caught a piece of scaffolding and my husband had to buy me another.
Mrs. B.—On what street is that scaffolding?

He Saw Maxime's

The supposition is that Maxime's is one of the gayest of the gay resorts of gay Paree, but according to Mr. Abrams of the Chutes company and also of Reno it's as uninspiriting as a church social or an afternoon tea. Mr. Abrams recently went to Paris to see whether that town was really worth while, and one evening he met his friends Joseph Gottlob of the Columbia Theatre and Louis Schwabacher. They were speculating as to where they should go for a little atmosphere and entertainment. Mr. Abrams promptly advised him to keep away from Maxime's, as it was not at all what it was reported to be. They looked at him in astonishment, and he repeated his assertion, adding by way of convincing testimony that he had been there to breakfast at 11 o'clock one day. He assured them that there was "nothing doing."

BEST TAXICABS
BLUE PANEL CARS
ROY M. PIKE, PRES.
PHONE MARKET 600
THE TAXI COMPANY
911 Golden Gate Ave.
LUXURIOUS CHALMERS-DETROIT
30 H. P. MOTORS
"TAKE A TAXICO"

A Rediscovered Poem

The following poem, "On Board the Derelict," was written by Young E. Allison, a newspaper man, and was published originally in the "Rubric," a Chicago magazine de luxe that failed because of its expensiveness:

Fifteen men on the Dead Man's chest!—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!
Drink and the devil had done for the rest—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!
The mate was fixed by the bos'n's pike,
The bos'n brained with a marlinspike,
And Cookey's throat was marked belike
It had been gripped
By fingers ten;
And there they lay,
All good dead men,
Like break o' day in a boozing ken—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!

Fifteen men of a whole ship's list—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!
Dead and bedamned—and the rest gone whist!—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!
The skipper lay with his nob in gore,
Where the scullion's axe his check had shore—
And the scullion he was stabbed times four.
And there they lay
And the soggy skies
Dripped ceaselessly
In upstaring eyes
At murk sunset and at foul sunrise—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!

Fifteen men of 'em stiff and stark—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!
Ten of the crew had the murder mark—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!
'Twas a cutlass swipe or an ounce of lead,
Or a yawning hole in a battered head—
And the scuppers glut with a rotting red.
But there they lay—
Aye, damn my eyes!—
Their lookouts clapped
On paradise—
Their souls bound just the contra'wise—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!

Fifteen men of 'em good and true—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!
Every man Jack could ha' sailed with Old Pew—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!
There was chest on chest full of Spanish gold,
With a ton of plate in the middle hold,
And the cabins riot of loot untold.
And they lay there
That had took the plum,
With sightless glare
And with lips struck dumb,
While we shared all by the rule of thumb—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!

More was seen through the stern-light screen—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!
Chartings undoubt where a woman had been—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!
A flimsy shift on a bunker cot,
With a dirk-slot sheer through the bosom spot,
And the lace stiff-dry in a purplish blot.
Or was she wench . . .
Or some shuddering maid? . . .
She dared the knife—
And she took the blade—
By God! She was stuff for a plucky jade!—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!

Fifteen men on the Dead Man's chest—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!
Drink and the devil had done for the rest—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!
We wrapped 'em all in a mains'l tight
With twice ten turns of a hawser's bight,
And we heaved 'em over and out of sight.
With a yo-heave-ho!
And a fare-you-well!
And a sullen plunge
In the sullen swell—
Ten fathom-lengths of the road to hell—
Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum!

VINTINE
MADE BY BROOKS
A tonic for men and women---will cure chronic constipation
Your druggist will get it—price, $1.00

Inspired by Treasure Island

The first four lines of the first stanza are to be found in Stevenson's "Treasure Island." Stevenson alludes to them as part of a song popular among sailors, but it is believed that they were written by the novelist as nobody has ever run across the song. Taking these four lines for the thread of his narrative Allison produced the foregoing brutal but fascinating lyric saturated with a wild, piractical spirit that sets the pulse a-hammering.

"Thar's a sign up there, daddy, what says: 'Don't blow out the gas.'"

"Well, who blowed it out? I jest hit it a lick with my britches an' I hain't seen nothin' er it sence."

When Hetch-Hetchy Comes to Town

A piece of news of prodigious importance touching matters of vital interest to the people of this city was published by the Examiner the other day and given such prominence that it must have attracted some attention, but singularly enough nothing has occurred since to indicate that it had set the town agog. On the contrary the indications are that it was speedily consigned to the limbo of oblivion. The news to which I refer was about a mammoth system of street railroads which has been constructed on paper by engineers under the profoundly wise direction of some of the alert and practical members of our Board of Supervisors. From the Examiner I learn that the system is designed to supply us with municipally owned street railroads as fast as the franchises of roads now in operation expire. According to the plans that have been put on paper with laborious minuteness of detail we are to have rapid transit through a tube in Market street, and we are to have surface roads running everywhere and nowhere, and all of them are to be operated by power harnessed in Hetch-Hetchy and brought to San Francisco by no less a magician than the ineradicable Marsdon Manson, who has been engineering at the public crib ever since he received his diploma. Surely this is news of absorbing interest. Why then have the people failed to exult over the glad tidings? Are they unable to appreciate the enterprise and energy, the foresight and forethought of the practical gentlemen who have planned this gigantic material blessing? I hope not. Also do I hope that the apparent indifference of the people is not due to lack of faith in their zealous servants. Scoffers there doubtless are who will not view this prodigious undertaking seriously; who will intimate that as we have repeatedly refused to run the Geary street road on the municipal ownership plan, it savors of opera bouffe to anticipate a complete change of sentiment in the distant future; but the scoffer is a disagreeable person and always in the minority. Let it not be supposed that our Supervisors are rainbow-chasers, or that they are merely vindicating their devotion to the public welfare for the purposes of the current campaign. The only rainbow with which

Exchange Your Old Piano
FOR A PLAYER PIANO

¶ Why keep a dead Piano in your home when you can trade it to us as part payment on one that every member of the family can play? We will allow you whatever your piano is worth, and you may pay the difference in easy monthly payments, if desired.

¶ We have new player pianos from $575 up.

Sherman Clay & Co.

Steinway and Other Pianos Player Pianos of All Grades Victor Talking Machines
Kearny and Sutter Streets, San Francisco Fourteenth and Clay Sts., Oakland they have any concern is the one that "tints tomorrow with prophetic ray." They are gifted with the power of vaticination, and it is no trouble for them to predict just what public sentiment will be at brief intervals during the next twenty-five years. They already know that Marsdon Manson will be on the job until the last franchise expires, and as fully prepared as he is now to extract trolley juice from the eternal snows of the complaisant Sierras.

Thad Welch's Paintings

To one who knows Marin County and has a love for her beautiful landscape, the paintings by Thad Welch now on exhibition at Gump's will have a double appeal. They faithfully portray the hills and mountains of Marin— and they are art of the highest class. No better realism is done on the coast than comes from Thad Welch's brush, and he has few superiors anywhere as an absolutely faithful portrayer of out of doors. The impressionists may quarrel with his fidelity to nature, but their criticism will be lost in the chorus of admiration that goes up for the manner in which Welch shows sunshine on softly rounded hills, shadows in the hollows, fog driving in from the sea—and the sea itself, stretching away in perfect perspective or beating against the rocks. While there may be a division of opinion as to which is the best of seventeen canvases shown, none can dispute that the one showing the artist's cabin in Steep Ravine, is a notable piece of work. Welch has been away from Steep Ravine for several years, but it was in that cabin by the tumbling brook that he lived when he first began to attract attention with his work; and it may be the association that has caused him to put such tender care into this picture. As to myself I may be a little prejudiced in favor of it because once, many years ago, I had the honor of being a guest there for half an hour. I was tramping alone to Willow Camp, and not being familiar with the trail stopped at the cabin to inquire my way. Welch and his good wife made me come in and rest, and refreshed me with luscious fruit and clear cold water from the brook that ran past the door. It is in this picture that Welch is shown at his best as a painter of sunshine and shadow. He glorifies the walls of the simple one storied shanty by the manner in which he bathes it in sunshine—you cannot believe that it is paint which gives that luminous glow and produces those soft, transparent, dusky shadows. Flowering vines clamber all over the cabin, and behind it tower the wooded hills, while the stream patters along in front. The whole thing is absolute realism glorified by love of the subject and of the task. Of the other paintings, one of the best is "Misty Morning," in which cattle are shown standing in a pond. The hills in the background are seen through a mist that actually looks cold and wet. There is not a picture in the collection with which any serious fault can be found, and each one has some quality that makes it stand out conspicuously.

The Friend—What are you sitting by that running water for?
The Poet—Leave me! I am writing an "Ode on Niagara Falls."

No Visible Airs

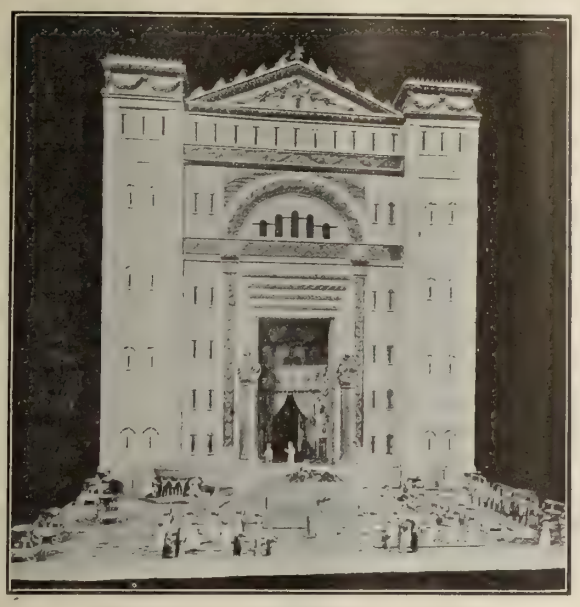
Be it known to music-lovers this side the bay that Oakland boasts—though not half enough—a young violinist of no little distinction, namely, Signor Antonio de Grassi. Wouldn't you like to hear about him? Italian, as I have already stated, he is a musician born and bred. At Milan, where he graduated in violin, composition, and piano, he had the same composition teacher as had Puccini and Leoncavallo; after which he went to Leipsig and studied with the great Jadassohn, now dead. Despite all which, his head is longer than his hair, and his is the sense of humor that saves from even the suspicion of affectation. About him is none of the airs of your visibly virtuoso, who, like the innumerous wunderkind, should be seen rather than heard. Good to see, better to hear, such airs as Antonio de Grassi has are the magnificent Russian Airs of Wieniasky and the dainty Air de Ballet by Adamowsky, and the like, and these he has at his fingers' ends. Sane, man and musician both, he saves the inevitable touch of fantasy which all great talent possesses, the better to express it musically on occasion in, say, an exquisite fantasie by the Bohemian composer, Drdla. Having now heard, as I hope, not half enough, about Signor de Grassi, wouldn't you like to hear him, in effect, unaffectedly, a musician? Very well, hear him you may and his airs—that is to say, two of his own compositions, not to mention those of the other composers which he has at his fingers' ends—in Oakland, on next Friday afternoon (24th). It is worth any music-lover's while to cross the bay to hear and see a violinist of note who has no airs to see but only airs to hear. The concert will be given in Ye Liberty Playhouse. Fred Maurer will be at the piano.

Doubly Honored Abroad

Unlike the prophet, the musician is not without honor in his own country. Accordingly, Signor de Grassi received the flattering offer to be the solo violinist at the wedding of the King of Italy. Owing to the death of the Czar's brother the Court being in mourning, all festivities were called off and the young musician of course prevented accepting this high honor. Signor de Grassi married a charming and talented California girl, Miss Winifred June Morgan, a few months ago. They met while she was pursuing her musical studies abroad. It will be remembered that when as Miss Morgan she was returning home from abroad she was mistaken for the daughter of J. Pierpont Morgan and was besieged by reporters. The mistake was laughable at first but became a serious affair and she had to call for protection before reaching her home in Oakland.

The Fatal Thirteenth

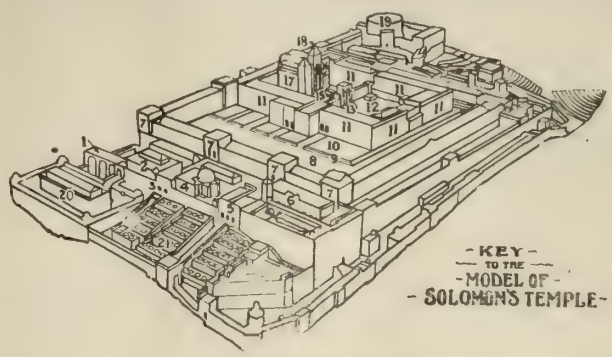
The subject of psychic phenomena was under discussion the other day when Earl Rogers, the Los Angeles attorney, who doesn't believe in omens or presentiments and isn't at all superstitious, related a curious chain of circumstances in connection with the killing of his chauffeur, William Barrington, in Golden Gate Park. Three days before the fatality Rogers asked Barrington how many accidents he had been in. "Twelve," said the chauffeur. The day before the accident Barrington drove Miss Rogers to St. Mary's Cathedral, and as she was about to enter the church he asked if he might accompany her. She had no objection. As they were ascending the stairs the chauffeur remarked that although he had been brought up in the Catholic faith he had not been to confession in nine years. He added that he had been seized with an impulse to make his confession, and he did so that day. The number of the automobile in which Barrington met his death was 13,639. The glass bearing the number was broken, and when Rogers went to



CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA
Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets
A General Banking Business Transacted
CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

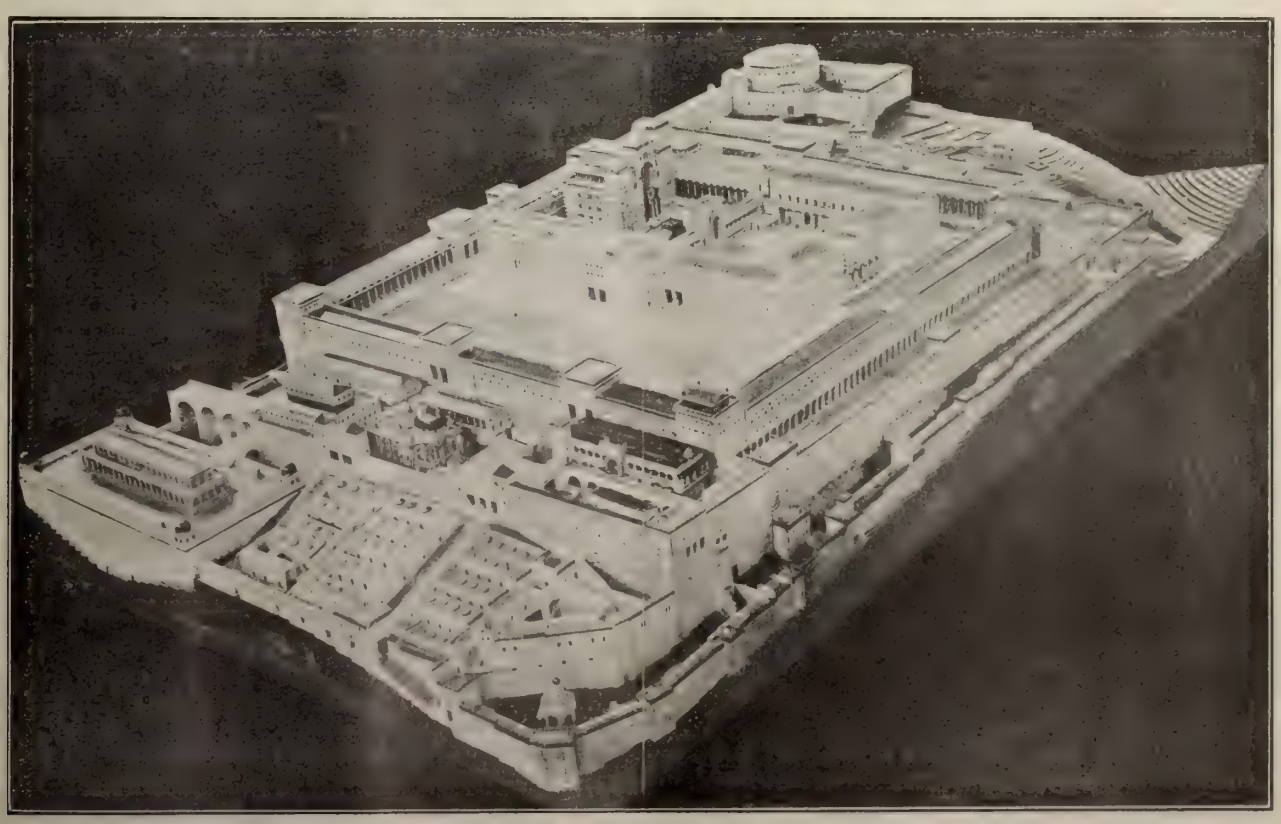
J. Magnin & Co.
INCORPORATED
Dainty Babywear
We are showing in a wide range of quality and prices
Infants Long and Short Coats Long Slips Wrappers
Sacques Barrow Coats Caps Bonnets Mittens
Bootees Soft Kid Shoes Carriage Robes Crib Clothes
Toilet Requisites Nursery Baskets Furnishings
GRANT AVENUE AND GEARY STREET

the scene of the accident he found one piece, with "13" on it and another piece with "39" which is three times thirteen. Barrington was killed on the twenty-sixth of the month which is twice thirteen. So there you are.



To Rebuild Solomon's Temple

That the Free Masons of the world shall rebuild Solomon's Temple on its original site in Jerusalem is a suggestion that comes from Boston. The idea is overwhelming in its stupendousness, and fascinates through the sentiment involved. It appeals especially to Masons, this idea of restoring the great temple built by the man who is supposed to have founded Masonry. As to the cost, it would be enormous. It is estimated that the cost for labor at $1.25 per day per man would bring the total for building up to something like $250,000,000 which does not include furnishings or the cost of material. It would be a task for this and succeeding generations to undertake. Besides the cost, there is another obstacle. The site of the temple is now occupied by the Harem-esh-Shereef (the Noble Sanctuary) which to the Moslems is only less sacred than Mecca and Medina, for it is believed to cover the rock that is regarded by them as the center of the earth, the place from which Mahomet started when he visited Heaven. Despite these difficulties, a move has been made in Boston to incorporate a company to take the matter in hand.



HOLY HOUSE AND COURT OF PRIESTS

This represents the exterior of the holy house of King Solomon's Temple, and shows the porch of the priests. The two great pillars, Jachin and Boaz, are at either side of the doorway. In the court may be seen the great altar of brass with the steps leading to it. On the left of the court is the "molten sea," which stood on twelve brazen oxen. In the court are a number of lavers, which were each on a brass base, and capable of being moved from place to place. They are used in washing the animals to be sacrificed. The priests are depicted playing on psalteries and harps.

EXPLANATORY KEY

This diagram enables one to study the different interesting features of the temple: 1—Bridge crossing Tyropoeon Valley; 2—House of the forest of Lebanon; 3—Double passage; 4—Judgment hall, in which was the throne of the king; 5—Triple passage; 6—King's palace; 7—Outer temple porches with gates running around all sides and forming a square; 8—Outer court, or court of the Gentiles; 9—Twelve steps leading to (10) terrace with openings between the posts, and inscriptions that no Gentiles should pass them; 11—Building with three wings and three stories high; 12—Middle court; 13—Fifteen steps to the high gate. On the steps the "Psalms of Degrees" (Psalms 120-134) were recited; 14—The high gate; 15—The inner court, divided into the court of the Israelites and the court of the Priests. Only the court of priests can be seen in the picture. In the center is the great brazen altar of burnt offerings; 16—The two pillars, Jachin and Boaz, in front of the porch; 17—The temple proper. In this was the Holy of Holies, a cubical building. In it stood the Ark of the Covenant and the Cherubim. In the holy place stood the altar of incense, the tables of shewbread, the sevenfold candlestick, all made of gold; 18—Middle tower; 19—The house of Millo; 20—Part of the palace; 21—Stables, as conjectured by some authorities, or more probably stalls for animals to be used as burnt offerings.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE

This is a photograph of a model made by the late Dr. Schick, who constructed them after long and exhausive research. The model is now in Jerusalem. The site of Solomon's Temple covered about 25 acres of ground. By taking this fact into consideration, one may gain some idea from the photograph of the stupendous size of the buildings.

Anecdotes of Sperry

Rear-Admiral Charles S. Sperry, who commanded the big fleet after it left San Francisco on its way around the rest of the world, was retired on September 1 at the age of 72 years, and after having been in the navy for forty-seven years. A naval man has been telling me some anecdotes of this aged fighting man, who is well known in San Francisco. It was as head of the Naval War College at Newport, Rhode Island, that Sperry shone conspicuously. He displayed a vigorous and somewhat contentious mind, and somewhat of an impatience with empty forms. But he had been there only a few days when he demonstrated that he knew how to deal with recalcitrants and maintain his dignity. The first conference that was held after he became president was attended by five admirals all of whom were Sperry's superiors in rank, and they were disposed to be very patronizing to him. None of them knew the methods of the college, but they clearly indicated that nothing would be easier to learn. Various committees on international law, tactics and strategy were appointed, and it happened that the five admirals were named for one committee. Scorning any assistance or hints from Sperry as to their duties they went to their room to dash off the answers. Before long, however, they sent for Sperry. "Ah, Sperry," one of them said, "Tell us how you go about these things? What are we to do?" Very meekly Sperry answered, "That is for you to decide, sir. The war college wishes to get the benefit of your vast experience. We youngsters would not presume to instruct the admirals of the service; we wish only to be instructed." In selecting officers for the Naval War College, Sperry had eliminated authors as much as possible. The institution is a very discreet one, and it is desired that no information be given out. "I'll have no ink-slingers here," Sperry declared. He has a particular aversion for fads of all kinds, and will not allow simplified spelling to appear in any of the papers issued by him. He is of slender build, weighing only 130 pounds, and is sallow of complexion, with black hair turning gray over the ears. He has piercing black eyes.

"Would you like to hear a secret involving Mrs. Nextdoor in a dreadful scandal?"

"Yes, oh yes! Tell it to me!"

"I don't know any such secret. You have certainly got a mean disposition."

Hawaiians Watch Cuba

According to Will J. Cooper, publicity man for the Promotion Committee of Hawaii, who was here last week on his way to Honolulu from Seattle, where he has spent several months at the Exposition, the people of Hawaii are watching with intense interest the developments in Cuba. Cooper, who had read what my Havana correspondent said last week with regard to the probable overthrow of the Cuban government, said that the information was in line with what had been learned in Honolulu, which receives more news from the West Indies than we do. The reason for this is the fact that if Cuba were annexed, great harm would be done to the sugar industry of Hawaii, as sugar coming in free from Cuba reaches a market at far less expense than the same article shipped from Honolulu. On this account, so Cooper informs me, many Hawaiians have visited Cuba, presumably investing in land there with the idea of raising sugar if the island comes under Uncle Sam's wing. Of course the buying of such lands is somewhat a matter of speculation, for annexation may never take place. But the Hawaiians are said to be so confident that it will that they are willing to risk their money. According to gossip that is prevalent in Honolulu, there are a number of Americans in Cuba who are doing their best to raise trouble in order that the present government may be overthrown. That Hawaiians have any hand in such plots Mr. Cooper would not for a moment admit—even the possibility. In fact, he says that there is no absolute certainty that they have bought lands in Cuba; but many of them have journeyed to that island within the past year, and that investment was their object is generally believed.

Why Hawaii is Retarded

One thing that attracts Hawaiian sugar planters to Cuba is that the latter place is better adapted to sugar raising than is Hawaii. The prevailing impression is that the Hawaiian Islands are especially prolific in sugar cane, but Cooper informs me that such is not altogether the case. While the sugar output is large and to a great extent profitable, more money could be made in other pursuits. The sugar planters have been very slow in recognizing and admitting this, but they are gradually coming to see that there is a greater profit in raising other products than in the sugar industry. In fact, in Cooper's opinion the islands have been greatly retarded in their development by sugar, and will forge ahead far more rapidly with the planting of crops to which the soil is better adapted. He tells me that, as one would naturally suppose, tropical fruits can be grown there in the greatest profusion, yet they are not produced to

EUGENE KORN
THE HATTER
15 KEARNY ST. AT GEARY
"MILLER" N. Y. AGENCY JOHN B. STETSON AGENCY

Unmatched Transcontinental Comfort

Santa Fe

3 trains a day

Chicago---Kansas City and East

Overland Express
Leave San Francisco 7:15 a. m. Oakland 7:40 a. m.

Eastern Express
Leave San Francisco and Oakland 10:00 p. m.

California Limited
Leave San Francisco and Oakland 8:00 p. m.

The only line under one management San Francisco to Chicago, thus insuring uniformtty of service.
Our employes are courteous.
Our equipment built by Pullman.
Meal service managed by Fred Harvey.
Our scenery not alone interesting but unique.
Stopovers permitted at Grand Canyon and Petrified Forest.
Would be glad to arrange your trip.

JAS. B. DUFFY, 673 Market St., San Francisco
T. LOVE, Market St. Ferry Depot, San Francisco J. J. WARNER, 1112 Broadway, Oakland

any appreciable extent, although the profit to be made from them is now being recognized. Pineapples, for instance, grow to perfection all through the Hawaiian Islands, and have become second to sugar as an export. They were well advertised at the Seattle Exposition, particular attention being paid to keeping their merits before the public. Cotton grows well in the islands, and tobacco raising promises to be a very valuable industry. An idea of its possibilities may be gained from the fact that Jared Smith, for ten years in charge of the United States Experimental Station at Honolulu, gave up his position in order to grow the fragrant leaf. This experimental station, I am told, has been a great factor in developing the resources of the islands.

The Plantation Strikes

Cooper told me many interesting things about the strike of the Japanese sugar plantation laborers in the islands—the strike which was recently terminated by the laborers going back to work under the original conditions, while two of the leaders were sent to jail on the charge of conspiracy. This strike Cooper tells me had its inception in the brains of two or three Japanese, counterparts of the American labor leaders. None of them had ever done a day's work, yet they expressed the greatest concern for the welfare of the plantation toilers. The principal agitator was a half-caste who went by the name of Frank Makino. His mother was a Japanese and his father an Englishman named Higinbotham. Makino was editor of an extremely yellow and anarchistic paper, through the columns of which he did his best to incite trouble, and succeeded to such a degree that finally he was sentenced to a three months' term in jail. As has happened in San Francisco more than once, there were many of the laborers who did not want to strike, but through the shriekings of Makino's paper, "Jiji," and the importunities of the leaders, they were led on to disaster. The object of the conspirators was to get complete control of the Japanese laborers and use the power to their own advantage. Their failure was signal and gratifying.

A Japanese Martyr

One of Makino's principal opponents was M. Sheba, an Americanized Japanese who was editor of "Shimpo." Through the columns of his paper Sheba fought the machinations of Makino and his crowd, and finally was nearly stabbed to death. This attempted assassination was the direct result of the editorials that appeared in "Jiji," where "removal" of Sheba was openly advocated. In his fight against the agitators Sheba lost a great part of his fortune, his paper being boycotted. Yet he persisted in declaring that the laborers were being hoodwinked by the Makino gang. He advocated higher wages for the men, but maintained that any point they gained under such leadership as had been foisted upon them would be in the end a loss. Cooper describes Sheba to me as one of the most charming and cultured men he ever met. He has a fine English education, and a profound knowledge of our literature. He has been fighting a losing fight so far in Honolulu, but with the defeat and imprisonment of the strike leaders he is expected to gradually regain lost ground.

TAXICABS
(Genuine RENAULT Cars)
PACIFIC TAXIMETER CAB COMPANY
Solicits your patronage of its equipment of imported Renault Taxicabs and will show its appreciation by prompt and reliable service.
TELEPHONE
FRANKLIN 4848
Private Exchange connecting all Departments
MAIN STATION AND GENERAL OFFICES, 1355-1363 BUSH STREET
FAY C. BEAL, General Manager.

Americanized Chinese

One of the most remarkable things that Cooper told me was in regard to the Americanization of the second generation of the Chinese in Honolulu. The young Chinese who have been reared in Honolulu are among the most desirable citizens of the islands, he asserts. They are exceedingly bright in school, averaging better than the whites, and are well fitted for business life. Many of them occupy positions of great trust in banks and commercial institutions, and the utmost confidence is placed in them. They are not only good in their studies but in athletics, being very proficient in baseball and football. They are described as being intensely patriotic Americans.

The director of a matrimonial agency says the young girls ask only: "Who is he?"
The young widows: "What is his position?"
The old widows: "Where is he?"

Digs Indians for Profit

Down in Costa Rica there is an American, one Dr. Carter, who makes a living—and a good one—at about the queerest occupation that ever came to my notice. Instead of helping people on their way to the grave, as some of the medical men do, he resurrects them with great profit. This may bring up visions of a medical school and a dissecting room; but the people that the doctor exhumes are far beyond the scalpel—too long buried, some of them, to be even good skeletons. To get to the point, Dr. Carter has a concession from the Costa Rican government to dig into the graves of Indians long since buried, and get therefrom the gold ornaments and trinkets that were interred with them. The Indians of Costa Rica are civilized enough now to know that gold is more valuable to a live man than a dead one; but in centuries gone by the yellow metal was regarded by the Indians as merely a beautiful material capable of being worked into artistic forms. They made of it little im-

Concerning Rates

During the last twenty years one of the very few necessities which has DECREASED in price is GAS SERVICE. The GENERAL COST OF LIVING HAS NEARLY DOUBLED but the gas consumer is paying less for the service we render than ever before, and he is getting better service.

It is fully as much to our interest to make the lowest possible rates as it is to yours.

Two principal factors have enabled the steady decrease in the prices of gas service. One is somewhat cheaper production brought about by invention and devolpment, and the other is greatly INCREASED CONSUMPTION OF GAS.

Twenty years ago the gas range business was in its infancy. Today more than half the total commercial gas used is burned in the kitchen. Gas stoves did not become popular until gas service rates began to fall.

The more service we can sell the cheaper becomes the unit cost of production and distribution. We know far better than critics that the arduous pursuit of this policy is the only one that permits us to exist. We are very well satisfied to continue along these lines.

The cheaper we can afford service the more gas will be consumed, and the greater will become the stability of our business. No legislation or competition can make this any clearer or more imperative.

The problem of the gas manager is the same problem which the retail merchant is forever trying to solve—to increase the volume of his output by following the only certain rule to accomplish it; by decreasing the margin of profit per sale.

We know well that unless we can cover our territory and induce the majority of possible customers to buy our service, it will be only a question of time until a rival enters the field and takes the business we have failed to secure and our own besides.

San Francisco Gas and Electric Company

Copyright, 1909.

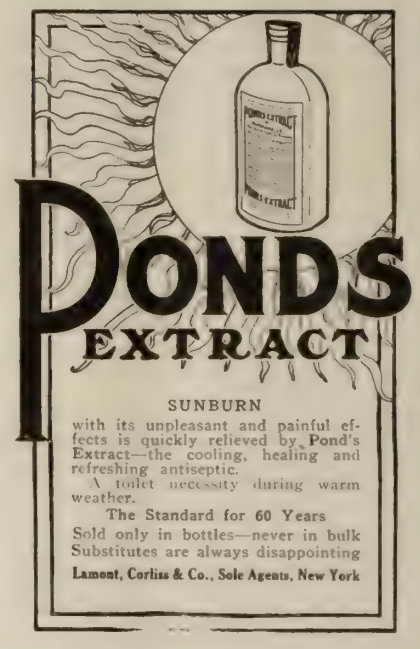
ages in the shape of man, these effigies being large or small according to the rank of the person with whom they were buried. So Dr. Carter goes into the ancient burying grounds, pokes around among the graves, scatters fragments of skeletons here and there, and pans out the dirt for the golden ornaments, trinkets and images it may contain. He took $1,400 worth from one grave—proof of the old saying that a dead Indian is the only good Indian. This sounds like a chapter from O. Henry's "Cabbages and Kings," the only difference being that while O. Henry's stories are figments of his fertile imagination, this one of mine happens to be absolutely true.

The Love of the Improbable

Some weeks ago, as mentioned in Town Talk, the venerable Stead, retailer of the marvelous at wholesale rates, told us in his own pictorial way the diabolic history of one Hetare, princess of the blood—evidently bad—apostate priestess of Amen-Ra, most malignant of mummies, and all the hair-raising and money-raising rest of it, and how death or dire disaster befell the impious who dared to look crooked at her unaccountably empty casket, or to write her up, or down, and that in next to no time after the looking or writing. For a school girl to cut a dare-devil caper forninst the apparently void mummy-case was to be cut down in the flower of her youth without time to repent her of her impiety. From the lifeless hand of him who dared report the doings of the direful Egyptian fell the impious pen. Now, nothing daunted, the special-articlist must needs retell us the ghastly story illustrated by the most transparent possible of spook pictures, the taking of which, as we are informed and don't believe, meant spookdom for the foolhardy camera man. Weeks ago my own impious self laughed her to scorn and here I laughingly am alive and kicking at the credulity of a day of dangerously little learning. Modest as is ever my point of view, I should be disposed to think that my security lay in my obscurity were it not for the fact that Mr. Stead's shining light still burns with undiminished brightness, with never the suspicion of a flicker. To cap the climax of absurdity, the British Museum, no less, is negative authority for the authenticity of the reported malevolent miracles, for it has seen fit to put Hetare out of doing harm's way. Accordingly, with added security, I may do her poetic injustice, as follows:

Though truth be oftimes rummy,
This most malignant mummy,
However well attested,
For one, I cannot tummy;
Yet, swallowed whole, I, dummy,
Duck stories have digested.

The Bride—"Oh, darling, our honeymoon was just the loveliest ever."



The Groom—"It certainly was, dearest."

The Bride—"And I have only one regret—I may never have the pleasure of going through another."

International Bureau's Building

My friend John Barrett, who has held so many offices that he has lost track of them himself, and who is now director of the International Bureau of American Republics, will occupy, about November 15, the magnificent new building being erected in Washington for the bureau mentioned. The building is the fruit of the efforts of twenty-one nations, and is to be truly magnificent. Exclusive of furnishings and fittings it will cost $1,000,000, three-fourths of the sum being contributed by Andrew Carnegie, who sees visions of peace through the construction of this great conference home. The building occupies five acres of space, at Potomac Park and Seventeenth street, and is a few hundred feet south of the Corcoran Art Gallery. It has two stories and a basement, and is made of marble and granite, nearly all of

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 56 Kearny street.

The Anglo & London Paris National Bank
Of San Francisco
Successor of The London Paris National Bank of San Francisco, The Anglo-California Bank, Limited.
Northeast Cor. Pine and Sansome Sts., San Francisco
Sig. Greenebaum, Pres.; I. Steinhart, Chairman of Finance Committee; H. Fleishhacker, V.-Pres. and Man.; Jos. Friedlander, V.-Pres.; C. F. Hunt, V.-Pres.; R. Altschul, Cashier; A. Hochstein, Asst. Cashier; F. E. Beck, Asst. Cashier.
Capital $4,000,000.00
Surplus and Undivided Profits..... 1,500,000.00
We offer our customers every facility consistent with good banking and invite new accounts.

TOWNSEND'S
CALIFORNIA GLACÈ FRUITS AND CANDIES
27 Years in Palace Hotel Building
All Orders Given Prompt Attention at
46 MARKET STREET
Phone Douglas 4814
Factory, 117 SAN JOSE AVE. Phone Mission 378
On Sept. 15th we open a new store at 755 Market St.
Also at News Stands of the Fairmont and St. Francis Hotels

Milo
Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.
This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.
THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

GIERSBERGER WINES
The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.
THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY
Phone Oakland 2510 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

which is from North and South America. The wide-eaved roof is a marvel, as part of it is on rollers, and can be moved to one side, leaving uncovered a central court or patio, in which will be many trees and plants from both continents. The ceiling in fresco will present historical scenes. At the front will be a gigantic statue of George Washington, saying farewell to his troops, and another showing the meeting between Bolivar and San Martin, both famous South American liberators. The main room will be known as the "Hall of the Ambassadors," and there all official deliberations on the part of the representatives of the twenty-one governments will be held. Historical scenes are painted on the ceiling of this room. Special attention is being given to the Columbus Memorial Library, which already contains several volumes in English, French, Portuguese and Spanish. Director Barrett, who knows more about South America than most of its inhabitants do, is the seventh executive officer of the Bureau, which has been in existence since 1899, when the first International Conference of American Republics was held. It was presided over by James G. Blaine, then Secretary of State. The association is a voluntary one, and its members are to be found from the Great Lakes to Cape Horn.

Royalty in Moving Pictures

Emperor Francis Joseph is a great old sport. I use the word "old" advisedly, for this ruler of Austria is more than eighty, yet according to what a correspondent in Vienna tells me, he is as ardent a huntsman as he ever was, and recently gave proof of his enthusiasm by consenting to pose—or rather to display his activity—for some moving pictures of chamois hunting. The actors in the scenes were the Emperor; his son-in-law, Prince Leopold, of Bavaria; his grand-son, Prince George, of Bavaria; Prince Dietrichstein, Count Paar; Count Uxrull, Captain of the Imperial Guards; Dr. Rerzle, the Emperor's body physician; Baron Zeilitzsch and Count Hoyas. Of course, all the actors behaved as they do ordinarily on a chamois hunt, except that the Emperor occupied the centre of the stage more than usual. The first pictures of the series showed the Emperor entering his carriage outside the gates of his villa, then driving away, the guests, all in picturesque Austrian hunting costumes, following in carriages. Then the party was shown traveling by railway along the valley of the Traun, and later ascending the mountains in small carriages especially built for that purpose. When the way became so steep that the carriages could not be used, the hunters mounted horses, Francis Joseph riding his favorite animal, Andreal, with the jaunty air of a young officer. The next series of pictures were fullest of action and, naturally, the most difficult to take. The Emperor stood ready to shoot; the beaters drove a big chamois buck within range of his rifle; the Emperor, a splendid shot, brought down the buck with his first bullet. Then the Emperor let several chamois pass within close range but, like the good sportsman he is, did not shoot at them for they were young and small. But he needed only one shot at each to kill two more big bucks. Many other chamois passed at a greater distance, but still within range of the photographic instruments; the film displays no less than fifty of the beautiful, sure-footed animals, running over the hills. The last of the pictures show the party's return and the proud display of the game killed. So the world will soon have an opportunity to see a life-like production of an imperial hunt near Ischl, one of the most exclusive courts of Europe.

Be Good to the Boys

The Youths' Directory, for the benefit of which appeals are now being made to the generosity of the people of this city, is an institution deserving of the most liberal support. There are few, if any, nobler aims in life than the one which is pursued through the medium of the Youths' Directory. Here is an institution dedicated to the moral and mental improvement of homeless boys; to the shelter of which are brought youngsters

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
UNION SQUARE
An institution which seeks to add its share to the sum of new ideas that are continually improving hotel service.
Under the management of JAMES WOODS

FAIRMONT HOTEL
LAUREL COURT
The ideal place in which to take
AFTERNOON TEA
Under management of the PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

TECHAU TAVERN
Cor. Eddy and Powell Sts.
CAFE AND LADIES' GRILL
Rigo and his Gypsy Orchestra
Concerts Daily during Shopping Hours
From 3:30 to 5:00 p. m. and from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m.; 10:30 to 1:00 a. m.
Private Dining Booths and Banquet Rooms on Mezzanine Floor. Entrance—No. 4 Eddy Street
Under the management of A. C. MORRISSON

TAIT-ZINKAND CAFE
168-178 O'FARRELL STREET
(Opposite the Orpheum)
OPEN FOR BUSINESS
We are prepared to cater for outside Parties, Weddings, Breakfasts, Balls, Luncheons, etc., in the city and bay counties. Menus and prices submitted on request.
TEL. DOUGLAS 560 JOHN TAIT, Manager

THE FORUM CAFE
OAKLAND
Now under the management of
MR. GUSTAV MANN

ASK FOR
BLACK AND WHITE
SCOTCH WHISKEY
IT IS THE BEST
NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

who have lost their parents, or who are otherwise so situated that were they not given the protection and care which the Youths' Directory provides, would, in many instances, suffer absolute neglect. Aside from the purely humane and benevolent purposes of such an institution it deserves well of the community for the services which it renders to the State itself in moulding the material for citizenship. And the Youths' Directory is conducted on the very broadest principles. It is nonsectarian and is under the management of the Rev. D. O. Crowley, to whom the training of boys is a labor of love which he has devoted himself to with the greatest enthusiasm. We shall be abundantly reminded of the fact that this Saturday is "Tag-day" for the Youths' Directory. Let us resolve to take aboard a large supply of tags. And when the tickets are circulated for the vaudeville entertainment which some society ladies are going to give at the St. Francis, Saturday evening, October 2, for the benefit of the Youths' Directory let us loosen up again.

The Satirical Sun

The New York Sun is a master of satire, and it displays that quality to the best of advantage in dealing with the reformers who would make people good by statute, as witness the following:

"To the Legislature assembled in extraordinary session on his call Governor Hughes on June 8, 1908, addressed a special message in which he made two interesting and significant statements, which we quote:

"'Racetrack gambling exists not because it is hidden or elusive but as an organized business shielded by legislative discrimination. * * * The question is neither as to sport nor as to horse breeding, but as to the enforcement of the constitutional provision in its application to a plainly preventable evil, the continuance of which outrages the moral sentiment of the State and does violence to our respect for law and order.'

"Three days later the Legislature passed the Agnew-Hart bill, which abolished forever by statute the 'plainly preventable evil' of racetrack gambling, and the Governor then made the further public announcement:

"'I am deeply gratified at the result. It is a victory for law and order the importance of which cannot be overestimated.'

"We take the following extract from the news columns of the Evening Post of Monday night, in which is described a portion of the happenings at the recent Futurity:

"'Betting occupied the greater share of attention, however, the early part of the afternoon. The grounds were placarded with posters in large type saying that bookmaking or gambling in any form was prohibited and giving the text of the law passed by the Legislature last year. The notice was signed by the secretary of the Jockey Club.

"'In the big railroad-station-like structure which the Jockey Club provides to shelter the 'prohibited' practices the bookmakers were on hand early. They carried large bundles of bills between their fingers and recorded bets just as of yore, their clients handing them money as fast as they could take it. One after another came the clever young man who has read 'past performances' and thinks he has picked a winner, the seedy looking person who has a system, the man with the inside tip from the owners, the prosperous looking middle aged man who can afford to lose, and the obliging man who is merely acting as messenger for the women in the stand.'

"One further quotation, this time from the editorial columns of the Evening Post, seems to us significant on the situation:

"'Governor Hughes is now in the field explaining and urging his plan for the reform of party government. His speech at Syracuse last night was applauded throughout by a large audience.'

"We shall be forgiven, we trust, if we fall back upon the familiar interrogation:

"'But what good came of it at last?'
Quoth little Peterkin.
'Why, that I cannot tell,' said he;
'But 'twas a famous victory.'"

FRED MAURER

TEACHER OF PIANO AND HARMONY

Accompanist — Coaching Singers and Violinists

1321 SUTTER STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

PHONE FRANKLIN 2143

Berkeley address, 1726 LE ROY AVENUE. Phone Berkeley 539.
Will be at the studio on Mondays

A Wine Debate

The committee appointed to handle the reception to President Taft has not yet solved the wine problem. Some of the members are in favor of a high tariff vintage from foreign shores, while others are eloquent advocates of home products. As President Taft isn't drinking wine these days it will not make any difference to him what brand is supplied, but this circumstance has not been taken into consideration by the committee. The boosters of foreign bubble water insist that it is the only liquid fit to drink, and the retort has been flung at them that their taste is confined to their purse. Every day the contest waxes warmer, and on the side of the California wine makers there is much indignation. They say it is about time for Californians to wake up and realize that the California juice of the grape is good enough for anybody, and they have been pointing with pride to the fact that at a recent banquet experts pronounced the new Portola sparkling wine fit for any president or king.

He—Pardon me, madame, I didn't see you.
The Fat Lady—How kind of you to say so!

Pebble Beach Lodge Now Open

The informal opening of Pebble Beach Lodge, during the golf tournament recently held at Del Monte, was the means of bringing it into its well deserved popularity at a single bound. The Lodge was thus given official recognition by those prominent in the social life of San Francisco, and it is the scene of numerous pleasant parties each day. Being situated at Pebble Beach, on the Seventeen Mile Drive, with numerous other new roads radiating from it, an hour's stop makes a delightful break in the "round the drive trip." The Lodge is a unique and delightful place, built log cabin style of great logs cut from the surrounding forest. Its great hall reminds one of the hall of Quedal Castle with its high roof, its huge stone fireplaces, large enough to roast a whole ox, its heavy bolt studded doors and massive beams. The fireplaces are the joy of all who see them. They are built of granite, and more than 160 tons of this was used in their construction. They extend from the floor to the roof, and are pronounced the most artistic of any on the coast. A broad veranda extends across the front of the club. Here, on pleasant days, one may lunch "al fresco," with the blue bay stretching away in the foreground and Point Lobos filling the sky-line for background. Pebble Beach Lodge was erected as a convenience to Pebble Beach residents, as well as a place of resort for travelers. The new subdivision of Pebble Beach is laid out about it in a charming manner, and a great deal of interest in it has been aroused.

ILLUSIONS

Go stand at night upon an ocean craft
And watch the folds of its imperial train
Catching in fleecy foam a thousand glows—
A miracle of fire unquenched by sea.
There, in bewildering turbulence of change,
Whirls the whole firmament, till as you gaze,
All else unseen, it is as heaven itself
Had lost its poise, and each unanchored star
In phantom haste flees to the horizon line.
What dupes we are of the deceiving eye!
How many a light men wonderingly acclaim
Is but the phosphor of the path Life makes
With its own motion, while above, forgot,
Sweep on serene the old unenvious stars!

—Robert Johnson.

The Citizens' Alliance of San Francisco, 920 Merchants Exchange Building, calls the attention of the public to their Free Labor Bureaus located at No. 170 Turk St., San Francisco, and 804 Broadway, Oakland. All classes of male help furnished absolutely free both to employer and employee.

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy.

Stocks: The past week has been one to be remembered for some time to come by Wall Street. The death of Edward H. Harriman was a great blow to the street regardless of the balloon parade in values following his death. The whole financial machinery was put behind the market. Those who were daring enough to sell stocks they did not own were badly handled, and paid the penalty. The advance from 193 1-4 to 210 7-8 in Union Pacific was rapid and carried with it the warning of danger to those who might later venture on the short side. From the action of Union Pacific for the past two or three days, it would seem that the short interest has been covered. The general market outside of the Harrimans was fairly steady. The bank statement issued on Saturday shows the withdrawal of funds for crop moving purposes. The monetary condition is the keynote to the situation at present; unless all signs are wrong, we will see a tightening of money shortly. I can't see anything to buy stocks on at present but would not be surprised to see a general declining market for the next two months, when funds will return to New York for market purposes. Those who will await an opportune time will be well paid for their patience.

Cotton: Speculation in cotton for future delivery has been on the whole of only moderate proportions, but prices much of the time have shown a declining tendency, owing to the unprecedentedly large movement of new cotton to the market and the publication of the first installment of a series of ten reports by the United States Bureau of the Census, which showed practically as much cotton to have been ginned the first two weeks of this season as was ginned last year; 377,552 bales against 397,924 last year and 200,287 bales in 1907, when January cotton in New York after selling at 12.70 on the 8th of September declined to a basis of 9 3-4 by the first of November. The slight response to the Agricultural Department's very bullish condition report is accounted for by a number of things. In the first place, a large visible supply has been brought over into the new season. Spinners, too, are supposed to be pretty well supplied. Under the stimulus of existing prices, it is believed by not a few that the crop movement will continue of large volume, and the question arises as to whether spinners will buy with freedom. For the time being at least, they are buying rather sparingly, and the farmer is pressing his cotton for sale as fast as it can be harvested in an effort to secure present high prices. We think the logical position now is on the bear side and would advise sales on all bulges until the rush season is over.

Wheat: Wheat turned sharply with the Government report, the reduction of ten million bushels in the estimate spring wheat figures. While generally expected it served as an impetus to short covering, but the deeper reason was the strength in corn, and the professional trader relying upon a sympathetic movement helped along the short coverings. Russia's preliminary crop estimate with only twenty million bushels increase against the trade estimate of 75 million gave additional bullish coloring. The September bull crowd led the advance. Shorts have been largely crowded out and the market has again become top heavy. There has been no immediate reflection of foreign strength, and bids are farther out of range, with higher prices. As much of the wheat now coming from Russia is last year's Siberian crop, there is no prospect of these shipments falling off materially, nor any prospect of purchases here. The Canadian crop is coming forward and there will be at most twenty million more for export from that country, making a total exportable surplus of both countries 65,000,000 greater than last year. This exportable surplus will ultimately make the price. The prospect is for a larger winter wheat acreage than last year and this will be another bearish factor. The wheat is a sale on this advance.

Knicker—"Who does the baby look like?"
Bocker—"They are going to blame it on the richest relative."

THE CITY PIPED FOR SELTZER

It is not easy to imagine a whole city piped over-night for a continuous supply of sparkling seltzer that will be on tap behind its bars and in its restaurants, hotels, homes, etc. But it is not far from the fact. And the city water company is not to have a competitor but an ally. Lest the mind conjure with the thought of millions in new pipes let it be explained that a San Franciscan has prefected a new seltzer siphon that when affixed to a counter or bar and hooked on by small leaders to the water supply and a cylinder of gas delivers a continuous flow of seltzer. And this is not a pipe dream! A number of city business men yesterday manipulated the new perpetual siphon and drew glass after glass of bubbling seltzer from a city water main.

The idea of making city water pipes do double service by substituting them for drivers, wagons, horses, bottles and machinery of the seltzer companies is so novel and revolutionary that the mere thought of it seems absurd. But the device is here and is silently and continuously doing its work and it takes no prophetic eye to see that the carting around of seltzer in bottles will soon be a memory only. There is no machinery and the entire device can be put in a suit case with room to spare. A number of local business men have organized a company for the promotion of the new system and negotiations for territorial rights in several directions are already under consideration. Plans are also maturing looking to the formation of a strong local concern to put the new seltzer taps behind the counters and in the homes of this city.

WELLS FARGO NEVADA NATIONAL BANK
OF SAN FRANCISCO
No. 4 MONTGOMERY STREET

Capital, Surplus and Undivided Profits.....$10,895,991.18
Deposits 23,345,021.88
Cash and Sight Exchange..... 10,560,579.91

OFFICERS—Isaias W. Hellman, President; I. W. Hellman, Jr., Vice-President; F. L. Lipman, Vice-President; Frank B. King, Cashier; George Grant, Asst. Cashier; W. McGavin, Asst. Cashier; E. L. Jacobs, Asst. Cashier.

DIRECTORS—Isaias W. Hellman, Leon Sloss, C. De Guigne, Percy T. Morgan, Dudley Evans, I. W. Hellman, Jr., Wm. Haas, Wm. F. Herrin, F. W. Van Sicklen, James L. Flood, H. E. Law, J. Henry Meyer, Chas. J. Deering, and F. L. Lipman.

Customers of this Bank are offered every facility consistent with prudent banking. New accounts are invited.

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487 R. E. MULCAHY, Manager

E. F. HUTTON & CO.
THE PIONEER HOUSE
BROKERS

Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade

490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO
Branch, ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Two Private Wires to Chicago and New York
Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

Vaudeville at Menlo

It was a night typically characteristic of California summer time—consequently all the women and girls in the cast and among the audience of the vaudeville at the Menlo Golf and Country Club on Saturday, wore the filmiest of gossamery gowns, over which most of them wore fur coats to the ankles—certainly an odd combination, and one that would be seen nowhere else but in whimsical California. And such regal furs as they were—handsome enough and costly enough to inspire even a queen with envy. As for the crowd that motored from all parts of the Peninsula, it was certainly all that could be desired, judged either by the standards of Monsieur Worth, Messrs. Dun & Bradstreet or by the inflexible authorities of the Social Register. Even David Belasco himself might have been satisfied more than amply by some of the numbers on the program of the evening's vaudeville performance. It was the most complete gathering of San Francisco's millionaire society set that has been together in many a moon and the entertainment was an artistic, a sartorial, a social and a financial success. Can one surpass such a combination? Mrs. Frederick W. McNear, who was the good angel of the undertaking—and a prettier, more amazingly daring and chic angel could not be imagined—put the Menlo Golf and Country Club on the map as it never was before. She was on the committee, she was in the cast, she danced and she sang—it was "twinkle, twinkle little star," so far as she was concerned, all evening. Her gown in the singing numbers was as chic and Frenchily French as if designed for Anna Held herself, and Mrs. McNear simply revelled in it. The skirt was a mass of fluffy ruffles shading from pale pink to rose, slightly more than knee length, with rose red hosiery and rose red satin slippers with huge twinkling buckles that sparkled like twin Kohinoors. But it was the hat that would have caused galloping excitement had it been worn where the public could have feasted itself on the sight. It was a Lady Mary Montagu sort of an affair, the kind one sees on the ladies in the pictures by Sir Joshua Reynolds and that school of painter chaps who "did" the beauties and belles of the last century. It was of cartwheel dimension, set on the head at a bewitchingly rakish angle, all tied down with jaunty pink tulle bows; and it was of pink satin, encircled with gorgeous red and pink roses. Mrs. McNear also introduced a new way of wearing diamond dog collars. Instead of clamping hers about the neck—a style that everyone admits is perfectly hideous—she wore her handsome diamond band stretched across her bodice, while about the throat was a string of pearls. Numerous other bits of jewelry twinkled over the bodice, and when she sang, with all the lights turned out, the mass of sparklers twinkled back at the stars above—a mighty fine sight.

MISS ETHEL DEAN

Who was bridesmaid at the King-Harris wedding last week.

Photo. H. Lievre Smith.

MISS EDITH SIMPSON

Maid of honor at the King-Harris wedding last week. The costume shown in the photograph is the one Miss Simpson wore as bridesmaid at the De Young-Cameron wedding.

About the Show

But to get back to the show itself. Every one of the prettiest and cleverest girls in society was in it, for Mrs. McNear was too fastidious a connoisseur to permit any plain ones to mar her show. And the way they romped and frolicked and joshed and laughted their way through it, simply compelled everyone to exceed the speed limit in applauding. And the way they bombarded every number with bouquets! Nowhere else but down Burlingame way, where everyone has stacks of glass houses where they raise orchids and camellias and such-like rare and choice blossoms, could they do such things, for the posies were brought by the automobile load—that is a fact.

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

Willard Barton in New Role

The main room of the club house was used for a "green room" and the stage was adjacent to the club house, connecting with it by a screened-in corridor. The audience was seated about scores of little tables on the canvas-covered lawn, and here a fine supper was served at midnight or thereabouts—no one cared about the time, for next day was Sunday, and 'Change didn't open until Monday. Willard Barton was Mrs. McNear's principal ally and confederate, and there isn't a thing that dear, jolly boy can't do—even if he is fat, he's just the handiest, cleverest, niftiest all-around sort, especially at a vaudeville. Why the way that fellow went ahead making up the girls for their parts—well, he could make a bud beauty even out of Bernhardt. In the manipulation of the rouge pot, the make-up grease, the blues, blacks, pinks

MISS ETHYL GRAHAM

A bud of the near future. She is the talented daughter of Judge and Mrs. Thomas F. Graham.

and so on, he is an artist, achieving the most wonderful improvements on the very face of nature itself. Billy did all of the make-up work, being the only man allowed in the green room, but he easily earned the price of admission, for after he painted the girls, he "did up" the faces for the men. The lights, you know, were of the real stage variety, requiring a great deal of make-up, else one would look ghastly. Last of all, Billy did his own face up to look more cherubic than ever. Somehow, I don't know why, but every time I meet Willard Barton, tra-la-la—I am reminded of a cherished nursery rhyme of my youth. It used to accompany a picture of a fat little round-faced tot who was giving milk out of a bottle to a large, roly-poly pussy:

"I like my cat to be quite fat—
Our tastes agree.
I feed him just the very same
As they feed me."

California Conservatory of Music

Is now located in its new magnificent building

147 PRESIDIO AVENUE

Between Jackson and Washington Streets

I hope Willard won't feel hurt, for I'm really as fond of him as everyone else is—and that is saying a whole lot.

Allan Dunn a Martyr to the Cause

Allan Dunn, who did one of the cleverest things of the evening—simply acting himself—for Allan is a chap of such ultra-fine polish that all he has to do is step on the stage and be Allan Dunn, and the audience at once sits up to take notice—had the misfortune to break his wrist just before going on. A little thing like a few fractured bones would not prevent Allan from being the debonnair elegante that he is. Noblesse oblige. Wouldn't the garden variety of the genus homo have howled and o-o-o-h-h-ed with the hurt of it and made his apologies and nursed his ache? But Allan is game as they make 'em. He simply bound his broken wrist, laughing, then insisted on going on with his role the same as if nothing in the world had happened. McDonald Spencer, who was stage director, had a clever take-off, "At the Menlo Country Club," which Vail Bakewell sang, with everybody joining in on the chorus in regular hallelujah manner, everyone whooping it up in capital style. Spencer is one of the best of the amateur actors among the men, and in the farce, "The Joke," an episode that might have happened in town any afternoon or evening, being characteristically San Franciscan, he kept the audience howling with his slow drolleries, that is to say, if an audience so aristocratic may be said to do anything so gallery-godlike as to howl.

MISS EFFIE GILLETT

Daughter of Governor James N. Gillett. She has recently returned from a vacation in Humboldt County.

Girls and Gowns

I never saw Jennie Crocker look prettier than she did that night—and not a day over sweet sixteen on account of the make-up and the dress. Too bad that paint is outlawed for everyday use when the sun is shining. The girls all wore short skirties of pleated white chiffon, with enormous sashes of red, with big white picture hats with rose wreaths, and their hair fluffed way out. They looked like a lot of dolls or school girls out on a lark. Pretty Jeanne Gallois was dressed the same as Miss Crocker, the one an absolute blonde and the other a Spanishy-looking brunette, a picturesque contrast. Another stunning good looker was Miss Vera Havemeyer. She has been out here visiting her sister, Mrs. A. L. Stone, and not a visiting girl has had a better time of it than the tall, sylph-like Vera and her sister. They belong to the Chicago family of Havemeyers—the sugar family—and everyone is hoping that they will come back very soon, for a more likeable pair of girls haven't been here in a long time. Miss Havemeyer, who is very tall and willowy, with a complexion like a rain-washed rose, blonde as a Gretchen, sang several songs, acquitting herself with much credit. Both of the girls are as smart as can be. They golf, play tennis, swim, ride, and think nothing of handling the ribbons in driving four-in-hand, besides which they can play, sing, and best of all, they do all these things as if doing 'em was nothing to speak of at all. They have loads and loads of money, but that is purely incidental—at least, you'd think so if you knew the girls, for they are as unaffected and sweet as if they weren't heiresses at all.

Dinner Parties

Every one of the big homes entertained house parties over the week end. The James L. Floods gave a big dinner before the entertainment, coming in rather late with their guests. Mrs. Flood has adopted a new style of coiffure which makes her look ten years younger and a downright beauty. She wears her blonde hair parted straight in the middle, curled rather careless like, and coiled in a bun low on the head, very Englishy. She, as well as all the women in her party, came gowned in the most exquisite of dinner gowns. Hers was a light blue chiffon, brocaded all over, made rather simply. It accentuated her fair coloring. Mrs. Joe Grant came with Mrs. Flood, wearing an ermine coat that came to the ankles—a stunning thing, trimmed with finest lace and made in flawless style. Speaking of handsome furs worn, Mrs. Henry T. Scott wore a sealskin circular cape that reached to the ground—a regal looking affair, immensely becoming to Mrs. Scott's queenly style. There were any number of these elegant fur wraps worn—sable, ermine, and chinchilla great coats were as plentiful as if they were bargain counter affairs.

Mrs. Flood's Dinner

Mrs. Flood's dinner guests were Mr. and Mrs. Joe Grant, Mr. and Mrs. Henry T. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Pope, Mr. and Mrs. William Babcock, Mr. and Mrs. Mountford S. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. George Howard, Miss Jennie Flood and E. W. Hopkins. Mr. and Mrs. Will Taylor, who have a handsome home in that part of the country, had a large house party. The Gus Taylors had their place quite filled. Mr. and Mrs. McNear had nearly all of the girls and young men in the cast. Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Coryell, who have one of the handsomest places at Fair Oaks, entertained in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Fraser Douglas. Mrs. Coryell, looking pretty as a picture, was busy all afternoon, assisting with the decorations, most of them coming from the Coryell place. Both of the Coryells have a passion for flowers, and it was just a short while ago that Mr. Coryell paid $30,000 for a shipment of orchids that had been gathered for him from all parts of the world.

STOP GRAY HAIR

With Mrs. NETTIE HARRISON'S 4-DAY HAIR COLOR. It is the only entirely successful and satisfactory preparation for the purpose. Simple—Harmless—Certain. Sold for 20 years, recommended and used with satisfaction by thousands. Contains no lead, sulphur or other harmful ingredient. It never fails. $1.00. At druggists, or direct, charges paid. Mrs. NETTIE HARRISON CO., SAN FRANCISCO.

To Be Repeated

This vaudeville performance will be repeated in San Francisco within two weeks for the benefit of the library for the blind, which was founded some years ago by Mrs. Josephine de Greayer, who is now Mrs. Rowan, wife of Major Andrew Rowan of the army. It was because the founder had a brother who was blind that she conceived the idea of this library, and she gave it a great deal of her attention. Recently some of the patronesses decided to give a benefit performance of some kind to raise funds for it. When those who organized and took part in the vaudeville entertainment at Menlo heard of the proposed benefit, they immediately volunteered to give a repetition of Saturday evening's successful affair. The details of the benefit have not yet been arranged, but the fact that these clever amateurs are to have a hand in it should assure complete success and be the means of raising a large sum for the library.

Betrothal that Surprises

An engagement which will come as a genuine surprise to their many friends is that of Miss Ruth Baldwin Chewning, daughter of William Montgomery Chewning of this city, to Frederick Malcolm Eaton of Boston. The groom to be is a graduate of the Boston Institute of Technology and at present is the chemist of the People's Water Company of Oakland. Miss Chewning is a very attractive girl, tall and graceful, with pronounced brunette coloring. She bears the distinction of being an unusually well read and well informed young girl for one of her years. Her father, William Chewning, belongs to one of the prominent Southern families of old Virginia. Since his arrival in San Francisco a few years ago he has held a position of trust with Wells Fargo Express Company. He is a relative of the late John W. Valentine. His late wife was the beautiful and attractive Mary Baldwin, daughter of the late well-known capitalist, William Baldwin of Mexico. Miss Chewning has been the constant companion of her father since her mother's death and as Mr. Chewning is a close student and reader Miss Chewning has enjoyed unusual advantages. She belongs to that interesting little coterie which includes Mrs. St. George Holden, Mrs. Edward Torney, Mrs. Caldwell Turner, and Miss Marion Wright, whose engagement to Harry Campbell of Sausalito was announced a few months ago. Miss Chewning has set the date of her wedding for Wednesday afternoon, October 6, at 4 o'clock. It will be a quiet home wedding at the residence of her father on Broadway street. She will be unattended and only the most intimate friends will be invited. The future residence of the young couple will be at 2839 Broderick street.

Some Family History

Miss Mary Corbet, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Burke Corbet, whose engagement to Lewis Edward Hanchett was announced a few days ago, is a graduate of Stanford '04. Her eldest sister, Miss Helen, was married last year to Alexander Curlett, and Miss Mary served as bridesmaid. Mr. Hanchett is a widower with two children. His wife was Miss Lucy Upson of Sacramento, a daughter of Ashel Upson. Her mother was Miss Addie Hubbard, one of the elite of Sacramento early day society. Other members of this family are Mrs. Charles Belden of Ross Valley, an aunt, who was formerly Miss Fannie Hubbard, and Mrs. George Williams of Washington, D. C., formerly beautiful Nealie Upson of Sacramento, a sister of the late Mrs. Hanchett's father. Mr. Hanchett is prominent in railroad circles, is a member of the Bohemian Club, and was formerly the head of the San Jose Electric Railroad. The family lived in San Jose many years ago. His two sisters, who were noted for their beauty, have both passed away. One was Mrs. George Crocker, who previous to her marriage to George Crocker, was Mrs. Alexander Rutherford. Annie Hanchett married J. B. Wright. After her death he married Miss Laura Clarke, the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Clarke of Sacramento, who is now a widow. The youngest sister, Jennie Hanchett, married Edgar Carroll, the brother of Mrs. C. O. Alexander and Mrs. Mountford Wilson and Mrs. Adolph Schell of Sacramento. The wedding will take place in the fall.

Manuscript neatly typewritten, three cents per folio. Letters 10 cents a page. 299 Monadnock Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Where Society Gathers

Last week one of the younger matrons prominent in social circles tersely dubbed the Laurel Court of the Fairmont the "Reunion Club," "because," said she, "every one who has been away comes here to see who has come back and to talk over the things they have done during the summer." The Laurel Court has an enviable place in the social life of San Francisco. Travelers from many lands have stopped and admired the gatherings of smartly gowned and beautiful maids and matrons who make this their afternoon rendezvous. In this place not only has the Fairmont but the whole city a place of which they can be justly proud. For the Laurel Court, with its cool, refreshing and restful coloring, its soft daylight filtering through the stained glass windows, the dainty tables and gleaming service, and its bevy of beauty, is without counterpart in any hotel in the world. Here as in every other part of the Fairmont one breathes the air of indescribable elegance of quiet and peace and repose such as one expects in the homes of the well bred. Among those recently observed at tea there were Miss Jeanne Gallois and a party of friends, Miss Anna Peters, Mrs. Robert Hayes Smith, Miss Jennie Blair, Mrs. George Latour, the Misses Musto of Stockton, Miss Maye Coburn, Miss De Young, Miss Jolliffe and freinds.

Marion Churchill's Ear-Rings

That demure, eyes-down-cast, coy little coquette, Marion Churchill, created a genuine thrill of concentrated admiration Saturday afternoon at the St. Francis, for not a man or woman in the tea room but was aware that Miss Marion has achieved the limits of Parisian daring by wearing a pair of ear-rings fully three or more inches in length—leastaways, they dingle-dangled from Miss Marion's pretty pink ears to way below her shoulders and several were heard to speculate how in goodness-gracious the girl kept them on, for they were made of heavy material—a long, brownish-red striped agate, with a grill-work of gold about them. They were perfectly fascinating and startling, but the brown eyes of Miss Marion, as all-seeing as those of any little mouse, looked graceful indifference. As usual, Miss Churchill was with Miss Angela Coyle, and each of them was with a chap from Uncle Sam's service. No wonder the swellest girls in town are so daffy over the army and navy men. Fact is—just ask any of the girls—they are the only men who have time or inclination to express those little acts of gallantry that every woman dotes upon. Marion Churchill is going to be one of the belles this winter, providing—but there, I promised I wouldn't tell. The orchid trade certainly gets a generous boosting every time Miss Churchill goes out. But the chandelier prism style of ear-rings certainly eclipses even an armful of orchids.

Two Engagements Announced

From Sausalito comes the news of the engagements of the two daughters of Mrs. Henry Johnson of Brooklyn, N. Y, who are at present visiting in Sausalito. Miss Amy Johnson has announced her engagement to Frank Perry, son of Richard Perry of Sausalito. The wedding will take place on October 4, at 5 p. m., Christ Church, Sausalito. Mr. Perry is a mining man. Miss Perry, sister of the groom to be, recently gave a tea at her home, "The Crest," Sausalito, in honor of the prospective brides. Equally interesting is the engagement of Miss Margaret Johnson to Gustav Reents, who is connected with the International Banking Corporation of this city. The wedding will not take place until next year. Immediately after the Johnson-Perry wedding Mrs. Johnson and her two daughters, Miss Margaret and Miss Edith, will leave for their home in New York. Much quiet entertaining is being done in honor of the prospective brides.

Society Dances by Candle Light

The dance given at the Lagunitas Club by Miss Nina Van Bergen and her cousin, Miss Marie Louise Foster, was one of the most brilliant of the season, even though the lights were dim. It has been a long, long while since society people had to dance by candle-light; yet they were forced to do this very primitive thing at the dance in question, as the electric lights all over Marin County went out for three hours just after dark. When they suddenly winked out, and it was realized that it

COOK'S TOURS
Are the Best for Independent or Escorted Travel
AROUND THE WORLD
Parties leave Westward October 5 and 19th; Eastward November 6, December 9 and January 8. Highest class, various routes, best of everything. Seventy Tours to Europe. Tickets everywhere. Traveler's checks, hotel coupons, information. Let us make reservations now for your fall tour. No charge for service.
THOS. COOK & SON
32 POWELL STREET SAN FRANCISCO
Offices at Yokohama, Hongkong, Colombo, Calcutta, Bombay, etc.

The White House
WE HAVE OPENED A DEPARTMENT FOR HIGH CLASS
WOMEN'S TAILORING
WHICH WILL BE UNDER THE PERSONAL SUPERVISION OF ALEXANDER TANZILLO
Late Head Cutter and Fitter for Geo. H. Everall, Fifth Ave., New York
A COMPLETE STOCK OF SPECIALLY SELECTED IMPORTED MATERIALS FOR THIS DEPARTMENT IS NOW ON EXHIBITION IN THE DRESS GOODS SECTION, INCLUDING CHEVIOTS, CHIFFON BROADCLOTHS, TWEEDS, ENGLISH REDFERNS, DIAGONALS, SERGES, HOMESPUNS AND MANNISH MIXTURES.
Raphael Weill & Co. Inc.
SUTTER, GRANT AVE. AND POST STS.

might be hours before they would shine again, foraging parties were sent out for candles. As each automobile would arrive with its load, the girls would be welcomed and the boys told to go out and scour the country for candles. Some of them rebelled, pointing out that for strolling purposes the grounds need not be lighted—and that for that matter a dance might be conducted very comfortably in the dark; but they were overruled, and sped away on their errands. Every store within miles of the club was depleted of its stock of candles, for an immense number were needed, not only in the house but in the grounds, where electric light bulbs had been hung all through the shrubbery. Beer-bottles—empty ones—were used as candle-sticks, and the arranging of these as well as the novelty of the situation appealed more strongly to the young people than a regularly conducted affair would have done.

Wedding Date Set

The marriage of Miss Alice Boggs, daughter of the late Senator John Boggs of Colusa to Charles Dutton of Berkeley, will take place in December. Although Miss Boggs has a comfortable fortune in her own name. Mr. Dutton, I am told, is quite independent though his his musical ability, receiving large fees for teaching. He possesses one of the most attractive studios in Berkeley and his Sunday evening concerts are attended by not only the lovers of music but Berkeley's and Oakland's ultra-smart set.

Artist-Suitor Disappears

The sudden disappearance of Carlo Baron, the artist who has been so open in his admiration of Miss Virgilia Bogue, queen-elect of the Portola Festival, has caused no little speculation among the set to which both belong. Some say that Baron left the city last week for his old home in Italy, and others hint that our queen-to-be was cruelly cold to this impassioned painter who knelt at her throne. At any rate Baron has left us, for a time at least. His idea may be that absence makes the heart grow fonder.

Consuelo is Obdurate

Consuelo, Duchess of Marlborough, absolutely refuses to be reconciled to her husband, a London correspondent writes me. She has plenty of the stubborness of the house of Vanderbilt, and having made up her mind to live apart from her titled husband she is immovable. Her own family and the duke's have tried every means of persuasion without effect, and even King Edward has been unable to move her. In fact, it is said that she and Marlborough are farther apart than ever, and that as a consequence Consuelo is happier than at any time since she went to England. She is entirely different from Anna Gould, who married de Sagan mainly to hold her social position. The Duchess of Marlborough is received everywhere but at court, and is barred from all functions where she would meet the king and queen. She manages though to forego royal society without pining away, and has a good enough time elsewhere. Recently she has been visiting young Lord and Lady Curzon, and is now in Scotland with Mrs. Jack Astor.

Establishes Studio Here

Frederick Maurer, the pianist, has established a studio on this side of the bay, 1321 Sutter street. He will be there on Mondays hereafter. His telephone number is Franklin 2143. His Berkeley address is 1726 Le Roy avenue, telephone Berkeley 539. Mr. Maurer is one of the best teachers and accompanists in the West, and the fact that he will devote some of his energies to work on this side of the bay will be a source of satisfaction to music-lovers.

PEBBLE BEACH LODGE

Interior of the new and picturesque building recently erected on the seventeen mile drive near Del Monte.

New Del Monte Train

The important announcement, which is made for the first time today (Saturday), concerning the change of leaving time of the Del Monte express, means much to those who spend the week-end at Hotel Del Monte. The Southern Pacific Company has arranged to start the Del Monte express from San Francisco at 2 o'clock instead of at 3:00 as heretofore. This means that the travelers will arrive at Del Monte at 5:43 instead of 6:43, giving ample time to dress or rest before dinner. Because of this added convenience, it is expected that a great many people who have stayed at home because of the hour at which they would arrive at the hotel, will take advantage of the low rates and other opportunities to enjoy the week-end at this delightful resort. The Del Monte is a fast through train, with parlor car, direct to Hotel Del Monte. It makes but few stops and provides a most delightful journey through the beautiful country of the Peninsula and the Santa Clara Valley.

In the Social Spotlight

With the dog show at San Mateo on Thursday evening, Miss Ethel Crocker's dance on Friday, and the Cafe Chantant on Saturday evening the last days of the summer season have been unusually brilliant and gay.

Miss Lillias Wheeler, the charming young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Wheeler, will soon return East and resume her studies at Vassar. Another charming California girl who will also return to Vassar is Miss Henrietta Blanding, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Blanding.

Mrs. Louis Brechemin Jr., wife of Dr. Brechemin, U. S. A., surprised her friends by arriving quite unexpectedly on the transport Thomas on last Saturday. She had contemplated leaving Manila on the November transport.

Mrs. Barcley Henley Sr. was hostess recently at a luncheon at her home on Green street. About ten ladies enjoyed her hospitality. Miss Guinette Henley recently returned to her home after an enjoyable visit to friends at the Peninsula Hotel.

The following are among the recent San Francisco arrivals at Hotel del Coronado: George E. Pickett, Major, U. S. A., Mrs. Pickett, J. C. Adams, L. S. Wood, F. T. Osgood, C. E. DeCamp, H. L. Sale, Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Goldberg, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Lich, and W. M. O'Shaughnessy.

A number of distinguished Germans have just arrived at the St. Francis from Berlin. Among them are Dr. W. Westphal, Dr. P. Pringsheim, F. W. de Jealum, Mrs. Eyre and Miss Eyre.

Miss Leola Spofford Stone has gone on a visit to relatives in Portland, Seattle and Tacoma.

The following San Franciscans were guests recently at the Hotel Del Monte: Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Hale and son, Mr. and Mrs. I. M. Green, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Sander, Frank B. Peterson, Lattin J. Holton, Geo. J. James, Mr. and Mrs. L. Hartler and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Francis F. Knort and son, Mrs. C. K. Sutro, Miss Sutro, Mrs. McGlashan, Mr. and Mrs. E. Lynch, Mr. and Mrs. A. Tann, and M. C. Taylor.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Stoval have returned from a fishing trip on Eel River. They spent last Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. J. Wyatt Oates in Santa Rosa. They made the trip in their touring car. Mr. and Mrs. Stoval will spend the winter with Mrs. J. L. Martel, the mother of Mrs. Stoval, at her home on Buchanan street.

In connection with the idea of a roof garden, which is being considered as a feature of the Hotel St. Francis, when the Post Street annex is completed, a very novel notion is being discussed—that of an ice machine which will create a veritable iceberg for the purpose of cooling the air on warm days. This feature is used successfully in the most fashionable hotel of the East, but it seems hardly necessary in San Francisco, whose summer temperature ranges from being delightfully cool to feeling rather chilly, and where one may enjoy the panorama of bay and mountain from the St. Francis any day in the year, with perfect comfort. It is, however, interesting as a novelty.

Among the recent arrivals at The Tavern of Tamalpais from San Francisco were H. R. Judah and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Woods, Miss Kate Swyney, F. N. Swyney, J. C. Pennie, A. J. Harlan and wife, Jack Hafner, Miss Anita Spamer, Miss Gissie Spamer. Mrs. C. W. Spamer, Elizabeth R. Betts, Gus. H. Kilborn and wife, Ray Kilborn, Dan Lowry Jr., Mrs. E. Chamberlain, W Allen Taylor, F. W. Farrar and wife, G. S. Wilson, A. W. Smily and wife, and J. Wilson Barrett.

The Misses Morrison of San Jose who have been guests at the Fairmont for a few days past gave an informal tea to a large number of friends on Monday. Among them were Mrs. Thomas Q. Ashburn who has just returned from an extended visit East; Capt. Ashburn, Mrs. Beede, Mrs. Baldwin, Judge and Mrs. Weller, General Smith, Dr. Bruce Foulkes. Another large tea was that given by Mrs. H. A. Harrison in honor of her sister, Mrs. G. G. Hickok of Cleveland, who is staying at the Fairmont. Her guests included Mrs. C. G. Hickok, Mrs. C. A. Foute, Mrs. E. Probert, Mrs. Dillon, Mrs. Simpson, Miss Augusta Foute, Miss Simpson, Miss Pratt, Miss Johnston, and Miss Elizabeth Zane.

Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Mead entertained a large house party during the past holiday week in their cottage at Byron Hot Springs. Among their guests were Col. and Mrs. F. Von Schrader, U. S. A., their son, their daughter, Miss Henrietta Von Schrader, Miss Anna Peters and Frank de Lisle.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Vail have taken apartments for the winter at the Van Ness on Van Ness avenue.

PARISIAN FASHIONS

Gown of green silk, with designs in pink and green

Congressman Duncan E. McKinlay, Hon. Frank Coombs, Mr. Andrea Sbarboro, Mr. Chas. Bundschu and Mrs. Frona Wait Colburn were at Aetna Springs during the Vintage Festival. They were among the principal speakers at the banquet.

Miss Lucy Gwin Coleman and Miss Lutie Collier were recently the guests of Miss Beth Livermore at the beautiful country home of Mr. and Mrs. Horatio Livermore.

Mr. and Mrs. Homer Bickel with their young son will leave for a tour abroad early in September.

Mrs. T. C. Deane has gone to Willits on a visit to her son, Dr. Tennison Deane Jr.

Miss Ethel Deane leaves this week for the East. She postponed her trip in order to be the bridesmaid for her friend, Mrs. Laurence Harris (Lucy King.) Mrs. Flora Magee will return to town late in October from her ranch where she has spent the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Wilshire will leave on October 1 for Los Angeles where they will pass the winter for the benefit of Mr. Wilshire's health which has been very poor. The Wilshire home has been rented to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, whose pretty daughter, Miss Maud, will entertain extensively.

It will be pleasing news to their many friends to hear that Mrs. William H. Mills and her two interesting daughters, the Misses Ardella and Elizabeth, who have been abroad for several months, will return to California this winter. Mrs. Mills' health is greatly improved.

Dr. and Mrs. Henry Stevens Kiersted have taken apartments for the winter at the Hillcrest, where she will entertain extensively. Mr. and Mrs. Peter McBean, the parents of Mrs. Kiersted, are at the Fairmont. Mr. and Mrs. Athole McBean have returned from their wedding tour and are at present visiting the parents of Mrs. McBean, Mr. and Mrs. William Mayo Newhall, at the Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

A delightful tea was given this week by Mrs. Ingles, formerly Miss Mary Page, at her home on Octavia street. The guests were mostly members of the old Southern set here.

Mrs. Safford K. Colby has gone to Tonopah on a visit of several weeks. She will be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. John Kirchen. Mrs. Kirchen was formerly Miss Florence Livingstone of this city.

Miss Ellen O. Sullivan left for Los Angeles on Monday on a visit to her sister, Mrs. Patrick Boland. She will be away several weeks.

Among the San Franciscans who have recently been guests at Aetna Springs are Ernest Peixotto, Mrs. Edson F. Adams, Mrs. Geo. H. Wheaton, Edson F. Adams, Miss Ellita Adams, Miss Elizabeth Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Hamilton, Mrs. Thos. Eastland, W. W. Carson, M. F. Worren, Miss Kate Beaver, Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Scott, H. F. Seiler, G. O. Comstock, and Mrs. R. J. Davis

Miss Innis Keeney has definitely set her departure for the East for October 1. She will return late in the winter to California.

Judge and Mrs. Erskine Ross arrived from the East during the week from their wedding tour and later left for Seattle where the Judge will attend court. Mrs. Ross was formerly Mrs. Hancock, the wealthiest woman in Los Angeles County.

Mr. and Mrs. Adelbert Adams Blackmer, formerly Enid Cunningham, have returned from their wedding tour and are now settled in their pretty home, 2556 Buena Vista avenue, Berkeley. Mrs. Blackmer will be at home after September 15.

Mrs. Howard Huntington, who has been visiting her mother-in-law, Mrs. Mary Huntington in Piedmont, has returned to her home in Southern California. An elaborate tea was given previous to her departure. Guests from all around the bay were bidden.

The Misses Ruth and Dorothy Boericki entertained Miss Ruth Waterhouse of Belvedere during the week at their summer cottage in Mill Valley.

Miss Ethel Valentine of Oakland recently entertained a jolly party of congenial friends who had spent the summer together at Alta.

Mrs. Samuel Bell McKee recently presided over a beautifully appointed luncheon at her attractive home in Vernon Heights, Oakland. The afternoon was brought to a close after an interesting game of bridge.

Miss Sevilla Hayden, whose engagement to Clarence Shuey was recently announced, has been the motif of a great deal ot entertaining both in this city and Oakland. Mrs. William de Fremery gave a luncheon last week in her honor at her home in Oakland.

Mrs. Jack Harron was the hostess Wednesday evening at an elaborate dinner at her home on Vallejo street given in honor of Frank Unger, who is visiting his old friends in this city.

Mrs. Anna Bliss Rucker was hostess at a delightful luncheon on Wednesday at her home on Franklin street in honor of Mrs. Richard Rising of Berkley. It was a reunion of several old and intimate friends.

Mrs. Clinton E. Worden, who lives at Del Monte with her mother, Mrs. A. N. Towne, has bought Thomas Hill's painting, "The Brook," which has been on exhibition in the Del Monte Art Gallery. The picture shows a three-bordened stream, brilliantly lighted by sunshine. A fisherman stands plying his gentle craft in the waters.

ANNOUNCEMENT

H. KRAMER

LADIES' TAILOR

Formerly 20 Sansome Street and 1795 Sutter Street

Announces the arrival of a most select and varied line of imported models and materials for fall.

Now located at 117 GRANT AVENUE

No Branch Stores PHONE KEARNY 4960

RAY LEVIN

247 POWELL ST., NEAR GEARY ST.

Phone Kearny 1619

SMART MILLINERY MOURNING HATS A SPECIALTY

Vogel's

MAKERS OF LADIES' GOWNS AND FANCY COSTUMES

418 SUTTER ST., Near STOCKTON

MRS. J. COUGHLAN CO.

Removed to

101 GEARY ST., Cor. GRANT AVE.

Mezzanine Floor

Dinan

Importer of Fine Millinery

Phone Douglas 1246 160 Geary Street, Opp. City of Paris

S. KRAMER

LADIES' TAILOR

101 GEARY ST., Cor. GRANT AVE.

ABOVE THE PARAGON

THE BONNET SHOP

Importers of REAL PARISIAN MILLINERY

121 GEARY STREET

Our Specialty, Strictly High Class Tailored Hats at Popular Prices NOBLE

Cook

FINE MILLINERY 1803 FILLMORE STREET AT SUTTER

A SKIN OF BEAUTY IS A JOY FOREVER

DR. T. FELIX GOURAUD'S

ORIENTAL CREAM

OR MAGICAL BEAUTIFIER

Purifies as well as Beautifies the Skin. No other cosmetic will do it.

Removes Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Moth Patches, Rash and Skin Diseases, and every blemish on beauty, and defies detection. It has stood the test of 60 years; no other has, and it is so harmless we taste it to be sure it is properly made. Accept no counterfeit of similar name. The distinguished Dr. L. A. Sayre said to a lady of the haut-on (a patient): "As you ladies will use them, I recommend 'Gouraud's Cream' as the least harmful of all the skin preparations."

For sale by all Druggists and Fancy Goods Dealers.

GOURAUD'S ORIENTAL TOILET POWDER

For intants and adults. Exquisitely perfumed. Relieves Skin Irritation, cures Sunburn and renders an excellent complexion. Price 25 Cents, by Mail.

GOURAUD'S POUDRE SUBTILE

Removes Superfluous Hair. Price $1.00, by mail

FERD. T. HOPKINS, Prop'r, 37 Great Jones St., New York City.

Odd Things in the World

The Bible contains no word of more than six syllables.

Kybosh is not slang but a trade word amongst architectural sculptors, who use it as both noun and verb. Kybosh is Portland cement, and "to kybosh" is to throw with blowpipe or brush the dark dust into the recesses of carved stone work so that the shadows may be intensified and the general effect of the ornament augmented. The accumulation of dust on statuary helps its appearance, and what time does to old work "kybosh" does in a few minutes for the new.

No trade secrets are more carefully guarded than the methods of manufacturing shoe laces. The braiding process is the main bone of contention, being the most intricate part of the work. There are no automatic shoe lace making machines on the market in this country or abroad, and in order to insure protection against spies different parts of the machine are wrought or cast at various distant points, whence they are shipped to headquarters and put together. The utmost care is used in assembling the parts and the artisans are sworn to secrecy.

The first free library was established in 1637, and the first incarnation of it still exists. A clergyman at Wemborne, in England, presented two hundred and forty tomes to his parishioners. The books were fastened by chains three feet long, sufficient to permit their being transferred from the shelves to reading desks below them. Some of the books are of such value today, owing to their rarety that the chains would be justified on that account. Amongst them are the original volumes of Sir Walter Raleigh's History of the World and the "Breeches Bible."

Constantinople has been besieged more often than any other city in the world—twenty-three times; twice by the ancient Greeks; three times by the Roman emperors; once each by the Latins, the Persians, the Avares and the Schlaves, and by one of its dethroned sovereigns, Michael Paleologus; again by Byzantine rebels; twice by the Bulgarians; three times by the Turks, and seven times by the Arabs. It was taken but six times—by Alcibiades; the Roman emperors, Septemus Severus and Constantine; the Doge Dandolo and Count Baldwin; Michael Paleologus, and Mohammed II.

Longford, the "castle" of Lord Radnor, in England, is built on a triangle with a tower at each corner, said to symbolize the Trinity. The late lord, who died in 1890, made it a custom to bow three times daily to these towers, but he carried the secret of his actions to the grave with him; but his successor has discovered an old family legend:

"Owner of Longford, where e're ye be,
Turn and bow with bends full three,
And call on the name of the Trinitie,
Or castle and lands will pass from thee."

The Swedes exorcise disease by putting the clippings of nails into an eggshell and casting the offering to the winds.

Creep down stairs head foremost on hands and knees to ward off illness.

To defeat a rival in a contest of the affections secure his photograph and bury it.

Put milk in your tea before sugar and you lose your sweetheart.

DR. MATILDA A. FEELEY

Is now located at 1700 Sutter Street. Diseases of women and children. Hours 2 to 4 and 7 to 8 p. m.

BROMO-SELTZER

CURES

HEADACHES

10¢, 25¢, 50¢, & $1.00 Bottles.

LOW RATES

TO

ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION

FOR ROUND TRIP TICKETS

FROM

San Francisco	$32.50
Sacramento	32.50
Lathrop	32.50
Stockton	32.50
Tracy	32.50
Suisun	32.50
Davis	32.50
Napa	32.75
Santa Rosa	33.60
Calistoga	33.95

Greatly reduced rates from other points in California. Tickets sold daily May 25 to September 30, and cover two months' trip going and coming via the famous

SHASTA ROUTE

OF THE

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Stopovers going and coming. Many other routes at slightly higher rates for you to select from.

Write or call on our nearest agent for full details of service, etc., or address

FLOOD BUILDING FOR INFORMATION

We Own and Offer

INVESTMENT BONDS

Of Unquestionable Security, Netting 4¼ to 6¼ per cent

Requests for Information Gladly and Promptly Attended to

SUTRO & COMPANY

412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO

List on Request

Stage

Good Farce at Valencia

One of the cleverest farce comedies that has been seen in San Francisco in a long time is on at the Valencia Theatre this week. It would seem that the authors, Paul Armstrong and Rex Beach, might have selected a better title than the rather cheap and tawdry "Going Some." But the title does not detract from the fun of the play, which is a brisk and amusing four act affair, full of unexpected complications, and with a plot that keeps the audience guessing until the last moment. The "Flying Heart" cattle ranch is the location, and the opening scene reveals the fact that the cowboys are mourning the loss not only of their money but of their phonograph, both of which they had staked on the fleetness of their cook, who had been defeated in a foot-race by the cook of the "Centipede" ranch. J. Wallingford Speed arrives at the ranch, and in order to win the affections of a girl who is there announces himself as a footracer. Instantly the cowboys arrange another race and Speed agrees to win back all they lost. But Speed can't run, and when he discovers that the cowboys are in deadly earnest he is in all sorts of a bad fix. His only hope is in the expected arrival of Culver Covington, of Yale, whom he hopes to induce to act as substitute for him. Just as the cowboys are beginning to suspect that Speed is no runner, Covington arrives—on crutches. How Speed extricated himself from the mess is worth going to the Valencia to see. The company that presents the play is very good indeed so far as the men are concerned, but the women in the cast do not show any marked ability. Frank Charlton carries off the honors of the performance as Stover, leader of the cowboys. He does fine character work, and his voice and stage manner indicate that he can play far bigger and more serious parts. He gives a well-balanced performance, successfully avoiding the opportunities that are afforded by his lines to exaggerate the role. Next to him comes Willis Browne, who as Willie, the spectacled cowboy who speaks in a soft voice and kills on slight provocation—on none at all when he becomes real bloodthirsty—furnishes a large part of the comedy. Browne does some very clever work of the near-burlesque order. James Spottswood as Speed reveals himself a very brisk, chipper, up-to-date young man with a ready wit and a quick tongue. He is a success as the thoroughly sophisticated youth, except that in the occasional moments when things look serious for him he continues to be a comedian. Unctuous comedy work is done by Eugene O'Rourke, impersonator of the trainer, "Larry" Glass, who as Speed's trainer shares the later's danger of harm at the hands of the cowboys. Frank Wunderlee is satisfactory as Berkeley Fresno, the fat glee club singer, Speed's rival in love. The women who have roles are Jane Salisbury, Genevieve Cliffe, Bertha Kriegoff and Adelaide Matthews. They play well enough to keep from spoiling the work of the others.

—W. J. W.

English Star at Garrick

At the Garrick Theatre tomorrow afternoon, Harold Nelson, a distinguished British actor, who is well and popularly known throughout the East, and particularly in the Canadian provinces, will make his first Western appearance in Robert Louis Stevenson's stirring military drama, "Prince Otto." Mr. Nelson is highly spoken of as an actor of careful, painstaking manner, one who grows upon his auditors with his every appearance on the stage. Finely built, handsome, dashing, he possesses all the attributes that go to making up the successful artist of the stage. "Prince Otto" was dramatized by Otis Skinner from the Stevenson novel for his own use, and it is said that Nelson's portrayal of the youthful heir-apparent to the throne of the principality of Kronfield, bears a striking resemblance to the masterful interpretation of Mr. Skinner himself. As an added evidence of the versatility of Nelson as an actor, George Bernard Shaw's wonderful psychological drama "Candida" will be given on Thursday and Saturday afternoons, with Nelson as the dreamy poet Marchbanks. Nelson was the stage director of the Mary Shaw production of "Candida" in New York, and is familiar with all the moods of the strange character. There is a marked contrast between the dashing prince and the gloomy poet, and it is a severe test of an actor's ability to have him portray both in one week. From advance reports of Nelson's ability, we are led to expect a most interesting dramatic festival at the Garrick next week. Seats for both plays will be ready Wednesday.

"A Gentleman From Mississippi"

"One solid year in New York" is a familiar slogan of theatrical managers who send a play on the road. As a rule, it indicates anything from a run of one week in New York City, in some semi-urban playhouse, to a run of at the most six months, in the height of the season. This is not to say that no play runs a whole year in New York; for the last six or seven seasons have developed a number of twelve-month hits. "The Merry Widow" was one; "The Man of the Hour" was another; "A Gentleman from Mississippi," which is to be acted here next Monday night, September 25, in the Van Ness Theatre, is a third. As to the last-named, it is far from being through in New York even yet. From September to mid-June in the Bijou Theatre and all summer in the beautiful Aerial Gardens, on top of the New Amsterdam Theatre, did not give New York theatregoers enough of this delightful comedy, so that the number of performances it eventually will have had in New York is not to be computed now. This comedy of Washington life is the joint work of Harrison Rhodes, the novelist, and Thomas A. Wise, the actor. As a production, it is the venture of William A. Brady and Joseph R. Grismer, two producers whose past offerings to the public of this community have been of a kind to inspire popular assurance of the quality of anything they may ever offer here. It is a pretty and merry story, prettily and merrily told, of the adventures in Washington, D. C., of a newly-elected United States Senator. His ignorance of the game, social and official, as it is played at the capital make him a shining mark for the wiles of the unscrupulous; and he owes his eventual extrication from the toils in which his own verdancy has entangled him to the shrewdness and alert wit of a young newspaper reporter, who is in love with one of the Senator's two beautiful daughters. The Messrs. Brady and Grismer send to this city a company of high class players for the interpretation of "A Gentleman from Mississippi." Every man and woman of the cast has been through the New York City run of the brilliant comedy. James Lackaye will be seen in the title role.

HAROLD NELSON

The English actor who will appear in "Prince Otto" at the Garrick Theatre.

DOWN THE CHUTES AT THE NEW CHUTES.

At the Alcazar

"The Great Divide" will run a second week in the Alcazar, commencing next Monday evening, and there is no lack of reasons for believing that the play's magnetism will tax the theatre's seating capacity until the final performance. Every person who has witnessed it is serving to advertise its excellence. The general verdict is that in every detail of acting and staging it eclipses the original production, although the price of seeing it is fifty per cent less. Assuredly its atmospheric charm leaves no room for improvement. Evelyn Vaughan's versatile artistry is given new demonstration in her portrayal of Ruth Jordan. It is difficult to identify in the repentant soul-racked New England girl the same actress who made of Sweet Kitty Bellairs such a picture of piquancy. Augustus Phillips, too, is nicely fitted in "The Great Divide," his Stephen Ghent being as striking an example of histrionism as was Jim Carston in "The Squaw Man." Bessie Barriscale, Adele Belgarde, Will R. Walling, Louis Bennison, Charles Dow Clark—in brief, the cream of the Alcazar company—are well bestowed in William Vaughn Moody's play. But so great is the play that mediocre acting would be required to spoil its interpretation. Dealing with a psychological problem that is kept constantly in view without being obstrusive, the plot marches directly onward through a series of as interesting situations as ever were conceived. Yet it is devoid of the melodramatic trickery that is supposed to be essential to the proper atmosphering of a play of the West. In the first and second acts the very life of Southern Arizona is reflected in the characters and scenery, and the transition to the New England home in which the last act is unfolded serves to give emphasis to the element of contrast. It is announced by the Alcazar management that there is no possibility of "The Great Divide" being retained a third week, as a contract calling for the presentation of "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" Monday after next cannot profitably be ignored.

"Going Some" Still Going

This Sunday night will begin the second and final week of "Going Some," that most interesting comedy of college men and cowboys, at the Valencia Theatre. It is altogether within the bounds of reason to say that "Going Some" has made one of the most substantial comedy hits ever scored in San Francisco. There is fun galore in this combination of glee, the joint effort of Paul Armstrong and Rex Beach, and large and satisfied audiences are departing from the Valencia after every performance spreading the news broadcast that the entertainment is fully up to the standard established by the Shuberts. Nothing like "Going Some" has ever been seen before in this city and it provides entertainment more than worth while. Corinne, in "Mlle. Mischief," a Viennese operetta, with 85 people in the company will follow "Going Some" at the Valencia.

JAMES LACKAYE

In the title role of "The Gentleman from Mississippi" at the Van Ness.

Pantomimist at Orpheum

Rosario Guerrero, one of the three most famous of pantomimic artists, whose vogue encompasses the globe, will appear next week at the Orpheum. It is three years since she was last in America and since that time she has been presenting ballet and pantomime with immense success in the chief European capitals. For this tour, Guerrero will with the assistance of Signor Paglieri present that wonderful little story without words, "The Rose and the Dagger" with its exquisite musical accompaniment and varied emotions. An entertaining feature of the new bill will be Tom Waters, one of the best of American comedians. He is favorably known as a comic opera star, having successfully appeared in "Comin' Thro' the Rye" and "The Mayor of Laughland." His engagement on the Orpheum circuit must of necessity be brief for he shortly departs for London where he is under contract to appear in the leading music halls. Waters' performance includes his original piano pastime, songs, dances, story and mimicry. Murray and Mack, the celebrated Irish comedian and farce comedy stars, will contribute "A Harlem Argument," in which during their present vaudeville season, they have met with great success. A novel and somewhat sensational act will be presented by Spaulding and Riego, comedy trapeze performers who go through all sorts of daring feats as well as a series of difficult somersaults on a specially contrived springboard. Next week will conclude the engagements of Ed Wynn and Al Lee, Charles Montrell, the marvelous juggler, and Rosa Crouch and George Welch. It will also be the last of Harrison Armstrong's original and intense one act drama, "Circumstantial Evidence," which has created quite a furore and is undoubtedly the present theatrical sensation. According to custom the performance will terminate with a new series of imported motion pictures.

"Charley's Aunt" at Ye Liberty

Next week the Bishop players at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, will revive that perennial laugh provoker, "Charley's Aunt," beyond doubt the greatest farce-comedy ever written. There is not a country where the English language is spoken that does not have "Charley's Aunt" at least once a year, and no farce-comedy can claim the great successes of this one. Yet it is interesting to know that the author, Brandon Thomas, held it for a year before submitting it to the London managers, and it was another year before any of them would consent to bringing it out. It was finally played only as a last resort; and everyone connected with its initial production predicted failure for the piece. The result is now history. "Charley's Aunt" holds several world's records and still commands a higher royalty than is asked for most of the recent New York successes. The Liberty players are splendidly adapted for this style of entertainment, and as farce-comedy has always been popular with the trans-bay playgoers next week should be a profitable one for the Liberty. George Friend will assume the principal comedy role, and will be assisted in the funmaking by all of the favorites of the company.

New Chutes Attractions

A free nickelodeon, or, as someone has suggested, a nickellessodeon, will be the feature at the New Chutes this Sunday. The cozy little theatre will be finished tomorrow and will be thrown open as one of the many free entertainments offered by the management of the Fillmore street amusement park. The show-house will have a capacity of four hundred and the performances will be continuous. The latest motion pictures will be presented and vocalists will introduce illustrated songs. Another new attraction on Sunday's open-air bill will be the Arnold Duo of Australian gymnasts. Lavail, the dainty little lady of numerous costumes and aerial ability, will enter upon her second and last week tomorrow. Her work on the Roman rings is exceptionally clever. The Smiletta Trio of comedy acrobats will be seen for the last time Sunday. The California State Band is unquestionably the most popular of the several bands heard at the Chutes. The band will give concerts tonight and Sunday afternoon and evening. Wallace, the big lion of the old Chutes Zoo fame, will be on exhibition Sunday.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove. Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgr. Phone Market 500

Two Weeks, Beginning Monday September 20. First Time Here
Nightly, Including Sunday. Matinee Saturday
Brady and Grismer Announce
A GENTLEMAN FROM MISSISSIPPI
A Comedy of Washington Life by Rhodes and Wise
One Entire Year in New York City.

VALENCIA THEATRE Valencia Street, near Thirteenth. Phone Market 17

This Saturday Matinee and All Next Week, Including Wednesday Matinee
The Biggest Laugh in Years!
Sam. S. and Lee Shubert (Inc.), Present
GOING SOME
A Comedy of College Men and Cowboys.
Reserved Seats from $1.50 to 50c, on Sale at the Box Office and Emporium.
Commencing Sunday Night, September 26, Corinne, in "Mlle. Mischief."

GARRICK Ellis and Fillmore. Phone West 1194

Week Beginning Tomorrow (Sunday) Matinee September 19th
First Western Appearance of the Noted British Star
HAROLD NELSON
Sunday Matinee and Every Night During the Week
PRINCE OTTO
Otis Skinner's Dramatization of Robert Louis Stevenson's Novel.
SPECIAL—Thursday and Saturday Matinees Only, Harold Nelson in "CANDIDA," Geo. Bernard Shaw's Psychological Drama.
Prices: 25c to $1.00. Seats on Sale.
September 26—"A Knight for a Day."

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Cor. Sutter and Steiner. Class 'A' Building. Phone West 1400

BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.
Monday Evening, September 20, Starts the Second and Last Week of Henry Miller's Recent Successful Vehicle
THE GREAT DIVIDE
By William Vaughn Moody
Prices—Nights, 25c to $1.00. Matinees, 25c to 50c.
Matinee Saturday and Sunday.

NEW ORPHEUM O'Farrell Street, between Stockton and Powell. Phone Douglas 70

Safest and Most Magnificent Theatre in America
Week Beginning This Sunday Afternoon—Matinee Every Day
ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE
ROSARIO GUERRERO, Assisted by Sig. L. Paglieri in the Musical Pantomime "THE ROSE AND THE DAGGER"; TOM WATERS (One Week Only) in His Original Piano Pastime, Song, Dance, and Mimicry; MURRAY and MACK; SPAULDING and RIEGO; WYNN and LEE; CHARLES MONTRELL; CROUCH and WELCH; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES. Last Week—Great Sensation, "CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE" with a company of twelve
Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays): 10c, 25c, 50c.

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE Oakland, Cal. Direction H. W. Bishop

Week of Monday, September 20th, Every Evening,
A Great Comedy Cast in
CHARLEY'S AUNT
The Best Farce-Comedy Ever Written.
Same Popular Prices: 25c and 50c. Entire House. All Performances.
Next—"The Prince Chap."

NEW CHUTES Fillmore, Eddy, Turk and Webster. Open Morning, Afternoon and Night

The Frolics of 1909 Just Opened
THE NICKELLESSODEON
Free Motion Picture and Illustrated Song Theatre
ARNOLDE FAMILY, Australian Trapeze Wizards.
ELLA LAVAIL, the Pretty Parisian Aerialist.
SMILETTA TRIO, Last Appearance This Sunday.
WALLACE, the Largest Lion in Captivity.

The Well-Dressed Man

What to Wear, When and Where

Written exclusively for Town Talk by J. M. JACOBI

For the benefit of those men who have neither the time nor inclination to study the art of Dressing correctly, we will publish a series of weekly Fashion Chats.

CLOTHES OF THE HOUR

The following are the correct details for men's clothing on different occasions as decided upon by competent authorities:

FORMAL EVENING DRESS

Receptions, Formal Dinner, Dance and Theatre After 6 p. m. Where Ladies are Present

Overcoat—Opera cape, fur lined coat, Chesterfield, black or Oxford preferable; colors, not permissible.
Coat—Dress coat, with either peaked lapels or shawl roll, silk faced.
Waistcoat—White, single-breasted, linen, drill, pique or silk, moonstone or mother-of-pearl buttons.
Trousers—Matching the coat, outseam braid or braid and soutache trimmed.
Shirts and Cuffs—White, plain or pique.
Collar—Poke.
Cravat—White tie of pique, linen or fine cambric.
Gloves—White glace kid with self-stitching.
Jewelry—Pearl, mother-of-pearl, moonstone, studs and links.
Hat—Silk, opera at theatre.
Footwear—Patent leather or black suede pumps; patent leather with cloth uppers.
Hose—Black silk or lisle, plain or self-clocked.

INFORMAL EVENING DRESS

Home Dinner, Stag and Club

Overcoat—Chesterfield, fur lined Raglan, "Bryn Mawr," Paddock, or "Orby." Black or Oxford preferable; colors permissible.
Coat—Dinner coat with either peaked lapels or shawl roll; black or Oxford silk faced.
Waistcoat—Matching coat, of fancy silk, black, gray or evening tints, single-breasted, plain or fancy buttons.
Trousers—Matching coat, with plain outseam.
Shirts and Cuffs—White, plain or pleated.
Collar—Fold or wing.
Cravat—Black or gray silk tie, matching waistcoat.
Gloves—Gray suede, or mocha, reindeer, chamois or tan.
Jewelry—Studs and links, gold or semi-precious stones.
Hat—Tuxedo, derby, or alpine.
Footwear—Calfskin or patent button or pumps of gunmetal leather.
Hose—Black silk or lisle, either plain or with self clocks.

Official Receptions

Same as day weddings except double-breasted frock coat with silk hat.

Weddings—The Groom

The groom is not permitted the wearing of the cutaway, which privilege is accorded to the ushers and guests.

FORMAL AND INFORMAL DAY DRESS

Weddings, Receptions, Church, Calls and Matinee Before 6 p. m.

Overcoat—Fur lined Chesterfield, Raglan, "Bryn Mawn." Paddock or "Orby." Black or Oxford preferable; colors permissible.
Coat—Double-breasted frock or cutaway. The use of the latter is increasing.
Trousers—Worsted or cheviot, in gray, dark or light stripes. Same as coat with cutaway permissible.
Waistcoat—White with frock and either white or matching coat with cutaway.
Shirt and Cuffs—White, plain or pleated.
Collars—Poke or wing with frock; wing or fold with cutaway.
Cravat—Ascot or once-over with frock; once-over or four-in-hand with cutaway, black and white or matching gloves if desired.
Gloves—Pearl suede or pale tan suede or cocha.
Jewelry—Gold links and studs, preferable plain; pearl or gold scarfpin.
Hat—Silk with frock, silk or derby with cutaway.
Footwear—Calfskin or patent leather button.

Business Wear

Overcoat—Chesterfield, ulster, Raglan, or novelty coats.
Coat—English walking, cutaway or sack. The cutaway is worn more by professional men.
Waistcoat—Same as coat or fancy, single-breasted.
Trousers—Same as coat or of striped worsted or cassimere when used with a black cutaway.
Shirt and Cuffs—Plain or fancy, stiff bosom or pleated.
Collar—Fold or wing.
Cravat—Four-in-hand or imperial.
Gloves—Chamois, suede or silk matching or harmonizing with hat or overcoat or of a neutral shade.
Jewelry—Gold or semi-precious stones in scarfpin, studs and links. Watchguard.
Hat—Derby or alpine.
Footwear—Black or russet, high buttons or lace.
Hose—Optional.

Next week a guide to correct clothing for riding, golf, autoing, etc., will be given.

E. B. COURVOISIER

The well known Art Dealer and Frame Maker announces to the public the opening of his new store at 431 Sutter street between Stockton and Powell.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF

THE

Anglo & London Paris National Bank

OF SAN FRANCISCO

AT THE CLOSE OF BUSINESS, SEPTEMBER 1, 1909

RESOURCES

Loans and Discounts	$15,204,026.48
U. S. Bonds	2,110,000.00
Premium on U. S. Bonds	21,350.00
Other Bonds and Securities	1,282,229.90
Other Assets	37,113,58
Customers' Liability on Letters of Credit	941,224.01
Cash and Sight Exchange	10,547,938.03
	$30,143,882.00

LIABILITIES

Capital Stock	$ 4,000,000.00
Surplus and Undivided Profits	1,505,094.58
Circulation	1,950,000.00
Letters of Credit, Domestic and Foreign	941,224.01
Deposits	21,747,563.41
	$30,143,882.00

OFFICERS

SIG. GREENEBAUM ..... President
H. FLEISHHACKER ..... V. P. and Manager
ALDEN ANDERSON ..... V. P. and Secretary
JOS. FRIEDLANDER ..... Vice-President
C. F. HUNT ..... Vice-President
R. ALTSCHUL ..... Cashier
A. HOCHSTEIN ..... Assistant Cashier
F. E. BECK ..... Assistant Cashier
I. STEINHART ..... Chairman of Finance Committee

A Particular Store for Particular People

PHONE FRANKLIN 2810

BEECH-NUT BACON

Beech-Nut Bacon appeals to the housewife, because it can be used in such a variety of ways. The "Beech-Nut Brand" Bacon has a distinctive flavor, just the right proportion of fat and lean meat, and is sliced thinner and more uniform than you can do it by hand. When next ordering groceries include a jar.

35c each...$3.75 doz...3 for $1.00.

L. D. McLEAN CO.

IMPORTERS AND GROCERS

1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Yards and Planing Mills—6th and Channel Streets

In Pride of Parenthood

(Continued from Page 10.)

Unfortunately a feverish excitement took possession of him and at the end of a half hour he was so completely awake that he heard the door of his apartment open.

Then suddenly his madness left him and he was seized with an ardent love of life and a great attachment for his worldly treasures. He leaped to a sitting posture in his bed, and when Bagu had crept to the threshold of the bed-chamber, he cried to him:

"Stop! It is I. Do you recognize me? A while ago I thought I would like to die and it suited me to have you commit murder and robbery with me for the victim. Well now! I have changed my mind. Go away!"

Bagu only turned up the lamp and advanced firmly. The absinthe taken into his famishing stomach had produced a powerful effect. He was pallid, erect, sinister and solemn, as his voice resounded sententiously:

"I recognize you all right, but that will not keep me from carving out your liver."

"What! what!" choked Glidoir. "I have changed my mind."

"Oho!" said Bagu with a grin. "Do you suppose a murderer waits for the consent of his victim?"

Then, picking up a chair, he sat down near the bed like a methodical surgeon. He took out the knife calmly and without haste.

Glidoir drew the cover up around his neck and trembling with fright, he stammered:

"Well, then, I authorize you to steal a little—but not too much—"

"I prefer to carve out your liver first," said Bagu with the cool and logical obstinacy of the drunkard. "If I don't do that, you will plug at me with your revolver, or perhaps you will call for help."

The eyes of Athanase were sticking out of his head and his teeth were chattering.

"You will never find the money. Let me get up and help you."

"I'm not so simple as you think. There is time enough and I can search all night if necessary."

The great clasp-knife was now open and ready.

"But listen, my poor friend," gasped Glidoir in agony. "You are about to commit a horrible crime."

Bagu eyed him severely as he mechanically toyed with the glittering knife. Then, with the authority of a superior person speaking to an ignorant fellow-creature, he gravely repeated the very words which Athanase had used to induce him to commit the crime:

"Monsieur, I possess nothing and it is as though I were being born again each day. I have everything to enjoy, to desire, to conquer—"

Glidoir made a horrible grimace that was intended for a caressing smile:

"Come, come now, Bagu. I am a good friends of yours."

"You? You are a brute, without charity for the needy, an idler that is of no use to anybody."

"Come now. Take my gold watch there on the mantel and be satisfied."

With the hand that held the knife Bagu made a gesture of great dignity:

"I am not an unnatural father. I have children and duty commands me to struggle for them in every conceivable way and even—"

Glidoir began to sob:

"But you know I saved your life. This is base ingratitude."

Bagu made another gesture of offended dignity:

"Monsieur, I feel that I am doing you a service. Being rich, you have no reason for existing, you have reached the end of your rope; nothing more to desire or discover. Now don't howl so loud. I am not going to let you suffer long, thanks to the skill I have gained by carving ducks."

As he spoke these words, Bagu briskly whetted the blade on his trouser leg. Then he started to rise for the operation.

Wild with fear, not realizing what he was saying, Athanase cried out in a heart-rendering tone as though it was absolutely necessary for him to know before he died:

"And—and your children! Are they girls or boys?"

Bagu settled back in his chair, but began to roll up the sleeve of his right arm ready for business:

"Two girls—Marie and Jeanne."

Athanase bleated idiotically:

"Girls are much gentler than boys—"

"Yes, much gentler!" interrupted Bagu severely, as he passed the knife over his trouser-leg two or three times more.

"And I have always been so fond of children," bellowed Glidoir, staring himself cross-eyed at the knife as though his visitor were about to butcher a few cherubs.

Bagu nodded his head in approbation:

"I have the picture of my little girls here in by pocket. I took it along to kiss before I hung myself—"

"Oh do show it to me," begged Glidoir, his lips trembling like those of a hungry baby.

"Here it is," said Bagu, drawing a post-card photograph from the outside pocket of his coat.

Athanase seized it and uttered the tearful laugh of an insane man:

"Ah! Ah! You said Marie and Jeanne. Then the older one is Marie. But little Jeanne must be a clever creature, isn't she?"

"She certainly is. She can tell you the capital of each province, if you ask her—"

"I should be glad to try it—with a geography, for my memory is not reliable."

"That's the way it is with me. I have to use the book."

"Ah! resumed Glidoir foaming at the mouth. "I don't seem to tire of looking at them. They are just the kind of children I love."

Bagu scratched his thigh with the knife and smiled faintly, finding his companion's enthusiasm quite natural.

GO EAST!

Low Rate Tickets Sold

SALE DATES

September 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 15, 1909

Other rates and dates to various points in effect during October, 1909

SOME RATES

Omaha	$ 60.00	New Orleans . .	$ 67.50
Council Bluffs . . .	60.00	Washington . . .	107.50
St. Louis	67.50	New York . . .	108.50
Chicago	72.50	Boston	110.50

Tickets good until October 31, 1909. Some cases longer.
Choice of routes. Stopovers. Write agents for details.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Ticket Offices
FLOOD BUILDING
MARKET STREET FERRY DEPOT
13th and FRANKLIN STS., OAKLAND

"Ah! If you would only let me keep this photograph, I should be so proud of it," supplicated Glidoir with all the eagerness of a collector who has found a new treasure.

Bagu's smile broadened. He was willing. Indeed he would be proud to give the portrait of his little girls to this gentleman. Then, like a flash, his expression changed. With mouth wide open, he paused as though hypnotized by a colossal difficulty. He looked alternately at his knife and at Athanase. How could he give a present to a corpse?

"I should be glad to give it to you, but I don't see—" he began with genuine embarrassment, brought to halt before the insoluble problem.

"Ah, I see the difficulty," said Glidoir. Then, leaving Bagu to his own thoughts, he returned to the contemplation of the photograph:

"Never in my life have I seen children whose faces so interested me. Ah, that sweet little Marie—and Jeanne, the cunning little thing—"

He went on rapturously with his eulogy; while Bagu assumed a beatific paternal smile that periodically yielded to the expression of uncertainty. What was he to do? Should he give the portrait or use the knife? Then he expressed himself:

"You never saw a pair of little girls like that; no, of course not!"

Then again he studied the knife in his hand. What was he to do? Should he kill this gentleman and rob him? Why yes, that was what he ought to do. But then how could he renounce this admiration that he craved, this praise-worthy admiration of his children?

Finally vanity triumphed, the vanity of preserving this fashionable admirer of his little girls and the pride in feeling that their portrait would be displayed on the mantel of this aristocratic abode.

"All right, you may have the photograph," said he in a burst of generosity, at the same time closing the knife and thrusting it in his side pocket. He rose from the chair with the patronizing air of a visitor who is leavng after having conferred a favor.

"Ah! I am really overwhelmed at your kindness," said Glidoir ceremoniously. "I am deeply obliged to you, and if I am ever able to return the favor—"

"Don't mention it," said Bagu waving his hand majestically in token of refusal. Then, to cut short all formality, he strode quickly to the door. To be the father of two such charming little girls at once rendered him the equal of the aristocrat who admired them and forced him to assume a noble demeanor.

He had forgotten the possibility of taking the least object of value; his poverty was forgotten and all reality became negligible. He was infinitely rich in the halo of paternity that encircled his brow.

He strode away, his shoulders squared back under the greasy coat; repeating to himself the parting dialogue; the ceremonious politeness with which the gentleman had expressed his gratitude for the gift of the portrait,—and his own response (with that majestic gesture; which astonished those whom he met):

"Don't mention it—"

Darling Little Willie

Little Willie was missed by his mother one day for some time, and when he reappeared she asked:

"Where have you been, my pet?"

"Playing postman," replied her "pet." "I gave a letter to all the houses in our road. Real letters, too."

"Where on earth did you get them?" questioned his mother, in amusement.

"They were those old ones in your wardrobe drawer, tied up with ribbon," was the innocent reply.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY REALTY SHOULD NOT BE MORTGAGED

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 5577, New Series, Dept. 10, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of ANASTASIA FEELEY, Deceased.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Executor of the Last Will and Testament of ANASTASIA FEELEY, deceased, having filed herein his verified petition for an order authorizing, empowering and directing him, as such Executor, to mortgage certain real property belonging to the estate of said deceased, which real property is described as follows, to-wit:

An undivided one-half interest and all other right, title or interest which said estate now has or may hereafter acquire in and to that certain lot, piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and described as follows, to-wit:

Commencing at a point on the Southerly line of Twenty-second Street, distant thereon One Hundred and Twenty-five (125) feet Westerly from the corner formed by the intersection of the Westerly line of Bryant Avenue, or Street, with the said Southerly line of Twenty-second Street; running thence Westerly and along the said Southerly line of Twenty-second Street Twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Southerly and parallel with Bryant Avenue, or Street, One Hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly and parallel with Twenty-second Street Twenty-five (25) feet, and thence at right angles Northerly and parallel with Bryant Avenue, or Street, One Hundred (100) feet to the Southerly line of Twenty-second Street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of Mission Block Number One Hundred and Forty-seven (147).

It is hereby ordered that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Superior Court on Tuesday, the 19th day of October, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the courtroom of Department 10 of said Superior Court, in the Grant Building, on the Southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why the real property herein described, or some part thereof, should not be mortgaged for the amount mentioned in said petition, to-wit, the sum of Eight Hundred and Fifty ($850.00) Dollars, or such lesser amount as to the Court or Judge shall seem meet; and reference for further particulars is hereby made to the said petition on file herein.

Dated, September 15, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Sep. 15, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By E. G. Wilson, Deputy Clerk.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Attorney at Law,
Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal. 9-18-5

One Oil for All Engines

Don't be confused by the conflicting claims and uncertain performances of oils that are "made especially" for different types of cars and engines or to meet different conditions. There's one oil that gives perfect lubrication in all types of engines under all conditions. Ask for

ZEROLENE Auto Lubricating Oil

The only oil that is really non-carbonizing, so pure, free and clear that it feeds regularly under all conditions of heat or cold. Made in the one grade only, which never varies—produced in only one place in the world—sold only under the name Zerolene.

Put up in cans with patent spout, that cannot be refilled—also in barrels for garage trade. Sold by dealers everywhere. Write for booklet "21,000 Miles with Zerolene." Free.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(Incorporated)

PIONEER

Automobile Co.

Booking orders for early delivery on 1910 Model Hudson Runabouts, Chalmers-Detroit 30's and 40's and all types of Thomas Flyers. Sample Cars will be on exhibition at our salesrooms within three weeks from date.

901 GOLDEN GATE AVE., SAN FRANCISCO

188 Twelfth St., Oakland 1222 I Street, Fresno

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8275, New Series, Dept. No. 9, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of LILLIAN T. SCOTT, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Mary Lamasney and Mrs. C. M. Haley, Executrices of the last will and testament of the above named Lillian T. Scott, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice, (which first publication occurs on the 18th day of September, 1909), to the said Mary Lamasney and Mrs. C. M. Haley, executrices of the last will and testament of said Lillian T. Scott, deceased, at the office of John J. Barrett, room 1255 Flood Building, number 870 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of said Lillian T. Scott, deceased.

MARY LAMASNEY,
MRS. C. M. HALEY,
Executrices of the Last Will and Testament of said Lillian T. Scott, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, California, September 18, 1909.

MASTICK & PARTRIDGE, and JOHN J. BARRETT,
Attorneys for said Executrices,
Rooms 1255-1257 Flood Building, San Francisco, Cal. 9-18-5

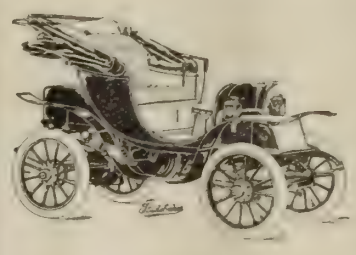
Auto Notes

Word has just been received by J. H. Eagal, manager of the Automobile Department of Studebaker Bros., that W. H. Gramling, at the head of a large investment company of Butte, Mont., has just completed a trip in his Studebaker E-M-F "30" from Butte to Salt Lake City. The trip was remarkable, inasmuch as the roads are said to be in very bad shape, most of them being over mountainous passes and filled up with large boulders and treacherous chuck-holes. Four days were consumed in making the run. Gramling wires that not a single mechanical adjustment was necessary on the entire trip.

C. H. Geer of Modesto was among the motorists from the interior of the State who came to San Francisco to witness the races at Tanforan Sunday. Mr. Geer drove down in his Thomas Flyer, returning by way of Santa Cruz and Del Monte.

P. J. Jeffries had demonstrated the Hudson to some prospects Sunday, and after closing the deal was on the way down town with his customers. The route lay over the Sutter street hill and Jeffries was leading a big machine up the grade and in the meantime showing his people how he could keep ahead and use but half an inch of throttle. So absorbed was he that he didn't see the special policeman until the latter was snapping his stop-watch. Owing to the fact that Jeffries was doing a new stunt with the car, the speed was within the law by a wide margin—but to think of the luck of some people.

E. G. Tuman, the lumber man of Oakland, has just returned from an extended trip through the northwest, in his sixty horse-power Thomas Flyer. Mr. Tuman was accompanied by Mrs. Tuman, their children, and R. S. Luther who drove. The party visited most of the timber lands between here, Medford, Ore., and Ashland, in all traveling some 1200 to 1500 miles. The roads in Northern California were found to be exceptionally good. In Oregon, however, they were worse until the Siskiyou Mountains were past, when the going was more comfortable. From Medford, Mr. Tuman with a party of friends visited Crater Lake. Leaving Medford at 7:30 in the morning, they landed on the rim of Crater Lake at 2:15 the same afternoon. On the way up twenty minutes were lost in helping a loaded team up Pumice Hill, fifteen minutes for lunch at Union Creek and twelve minutes in replacing a punctured tire, a loss of forty-seven minutes. This is the quickest time ever made between these points and no effort was made to break the record. The driver was confident that he could make the trip in five hours. Most of the varnish on the sides of the car was scraped off by coming in contact with the brush by the roadside, but aside from that the car was in excellent shape on its return.



A party consisting of H. S. Stevinson, A. J. Stevinson and George Russell have just arrived in this city, having driven from Newman in a Chalmers-Detroit "30." This car has been in use about four months and in that time has run 5000 miles and has given no trouble whatever.

A. C. Wheelock, the Fresno "Booster" and automobile enthusiast, to use his own expression, "literally blew into town Saturday.." "I came up the west side of the valley," said Wheelock, "in the worst sandstorm that could be imagined, and then we made the two hundred and twelve miles in a little over ten hours including stops for breakfast and lunch. The best way to go to Fresno now is by way of Livermore, Tracy, Los Banos, and Mendota. Although we are still up against a bad raisin situation down there we have more orders for 1910 Chalmers-Detroit, Thomas and Hudson cars than we can fill in the next three months." Wheelock takes back a 1910 Chalmers "30" for Ewing & McDaniel of this city who will use the car to show their customers over the valley.

Roscoe C. Haskett of the Lord Motor Car Company of Los Angeles, the Studebaker agents of Southern California, and a party of friends have just returned from a trip into Mexico in the former's Studebaker E-M-F "30." It was a history making tour as the car was sent over roads which had never before been traversed by a motor car, the intention of the autoists being to reach a point in Lower California never before visited by an automobile. Leaving Los Angeles Haskett drove by way of the coast route to San Diego. The party then crossed the bay to Coronado and made the hotel the starting point of the second day's journey. Down the backbone of the peninsula to Tia Juana the little Studebaker was driven. After passing Ensenada the autoist struck out across what appeared to be a barren waste, with merely a narrow trail to guide them. Into the sage brush and cactus land where there is little water and scarcely any vegetation other than the sage brush the car was driven on its tour of exploration. Touring in Lower California, says Hackett, is enjoyable and inexpensive. There are few stiff grades, plenty of interesting country and lots of game to be seen. On account of dusty roads in places the motorists were obliged to jog along rather slowly at times. Few inhabitants were met. The return trip to Los Angeles was made by the inland route through Escondido and Elsinore. Riverside was one of the stopping points, also Redlands and the surrounding country. Haskett says that during the entire trip the car's performance was highly satisfactory, not one mechanical adjustment being made.

A Domestic Eye Remedy

Compounded by Experienced Physicians. Conforms to Pure Food and Drugs Law. Wins Friends Wherever Used. Ask Druggists for Murine Eye Remedy. Try Murine in Your Eyes. You Will Like Murine. Try it in Baby's Eyes. It Soothes.

The Society Belle

to whom delightful independence appeals and who appreciates refinement with a degree of luxury and unquestioned elegance, cannot resist the new

STUDEBAKER ELECTRIC

Its daintiness of appointment captures her instantly. It is a fitting complement to her cultured tastes. Besides, its simplicity of operation and control makes it safer to drive than a horse. It travels as fast as any woman cares to go; is always clean and inviting and is practically proof against accidents.

Victoria-Phaetons and Coupes for immediate delivery

Fremont at Mission

Studebaker

Phone Douglas 3000

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY REALTY SHOULD NOT BE MORTGAGED

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 4975, New Series, Dept. 10, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of PIERCE FEELEY, Deceased.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Administrator of the Estate of PIERCE FEELEY, deceased, having filed herein his verified petition for an order authorizing, empowering and directing him, as such Administrator, to mortgage certain real property belonging to the estate of said deceased, which real property is described as follows, to-wit:

An undivided one-half interest in the following described lot, piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to-wit:

Commencing at a point on the Southerly line of Twenty-second Street, distant thereon One Hundred and Twenty-five (125) feet Westerly from the corner formed by the intersection of the Westerly line of Bryant Avenue, or Street, with the said Southerly line of Twenty-second Street; running thence Westerly and along the said Southerly line of Twenty-second Street Twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Southerly and parallel with Bryant Avenue, or Street, One Hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly and parallel with Twenty-second Street Twenty-five (25) feet, and thence at right angles Northerly and parallel with Bryant Avenue, or Street, One Hundred (100) feet to the Southerly line of Twenty-second Street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of Mission Block Number One Hundred and Forty-seven (147).

It is hereby ordered that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Superior Court on Tuesday, the 19th day of October, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the courtroom of Department 10 of said Superior Court, in the Grant Building, on the Southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why the real property herein described, or some part thereof, should not be mortgaged for the amount mentioned in said petition, to-wit, the sum of Three Hundred and Fifty ($350.00) Dollars, or such lesser amount as to the Court or Judge shall seem meet; and reference for further particulars is hereby made to the said petition on file herein.

Dated, September 15, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Sep. 15, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By E. G. Wilson, Deputy Clerk.

EDWARD I. LYNCH, Attorney at Law,
Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal. 9-18-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of MARIE EMMA LA FAILLE, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the estate of MARIE EMMA LA FAILLE, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator at his office No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of MARIE EMMA LA FAILLE, deceased. A. COMTE, JR.,

Administrator of the Estate of Marie Emma La Faille, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, September 18, 1909.

A. COMTE, JR., Attorney for Estate,
333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. 9-18-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8276, New Series, Dept. No. 9, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of WILLIAM RYAN, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Thomas P. Ryan, executor of the last will and testament of the above named William Ryan, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice (which first publication occurs on the 18th day of September, 1909), to the said Thomas P. Ryan, executor of the last will and testament of said William Ryan, deceased, at the office of John J. Barrett, room 1255 Flood Building, number 870 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of said William Ryan, deceased.

THOMAS P. RYAN,
Executor of the Last Will and Testament of William Ryan, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, California, September 18, 1909.

JOHN J. BARRETT, and FRANK I. BARRETT,
Attorneys for said Executor.
Flood Building, San Francisco, California. 9-18-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8100, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate and Guardianship of FRANK VIERHUS, an Incompetent Minor.

CLARENCE CLAUDE VIERHUS, guardian of the person and estate of Frank Vierhus, an incompetent minor, having filed his petition herein, praying for an order of sale of the interest in the real estate of said incompetent minor for the purposes therein set forth, and an order of this Court having been made, setting the hearing of said petition on Wednesday, the eighth day of September, 1909, and it appearing to the Court that said order should be set aside; it is therefore ordered that the said order of this Court made on the 24th day of August, 1909, setting the hearing of said petition for Wednesday, the eighth day of September, A. D. 1909, be and the same is hereby set aside.

It is further ordered by this Court that all persons interested in the estate of said incompetent minor appear before the said Superior Court on Monday, the 20th day of September, 1909, in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10 of said Superior Court, at room 601, Grant Building, corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in said City and County of San Francisco, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said guardian of said incompetent minor to sell the interest of the real estate of said minor, at private sale; and that a copy of this order be published for three weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Done in open Court this 25th day of August, A. D. 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Aug. 25, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By H. G. Benedict, Deputy Clerk. 8-28-4

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8103, Dept. No. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of BERTHA MARKS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Rose Marks, the Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of BERTHA MARKS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executrix, at the office of C. H. Oatman, room 516 Balboa Building, corner Second and Market streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of BERTHA MARKS, deceased.

ROSE MARKS,

Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of Bertha Marks, deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 7th, 1909.

ARTHUR L. LEVINSKY, Attorney for said Executrix,
Stockton, California. 8-7-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL PROPERTY SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 3762 N. S., Dept. 10, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of MICHAEL DUFFY, Deceased.

JOSEPH A. STULZ, Administrator of the estate of MICHAEL DUFFY, deceased, having presented his petition herein, duly verified, praying for an order of the sale of the whole of the real estate of said deceased, or so much or such parts thereof as said Court shall judge necessary or beneficial for the reasons and purposes in said petition mentioned and set forth.

And such petition having been filed, it is now ordered by said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Court on Tuesday, the 5th day of October, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the courtroom of Department 10 of said Superior Court in the Grant Building, on the southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administrator to sell the whole or so much of the real estate of said decedent as may be necessary.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated, San Francisco, this 25th day of August, A. D., 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Aug. 25, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By H. G. Benedict, Deputy Clerk.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Attorney for Administrator,
Mills Buildings, San Francisco, Cal. 9-4-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of ALOISE GLESS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executor of the last will and Testament of ALOISE GLESS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executor at the law office of A. Comte Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of ALOISE GLESS, deceased.

JULES P. GLESS,

Executor of the last Will and Testament of Aloise Gless, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, September 11, 1909.

A. COMTE Jr., Attorney for Executor,
333 Kearny St., San Francisco, Cal. 9-11-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of HENRIETTA ECKHARDT, Deceased—No. 8187, Dept. 10, Probate.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executor of the Last Will and Testament of HENRIETTA ECKHARDT, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said executor at Room 609 Union Trust Building, at the northeasterly corner of Montgomery and Post Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, which said place the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of HENRIETTA ECKHARDT, deceased.

ROBERT J. ECKHARDT,

Executor of the Last Will and Testament of Henrietta Eckhardt, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 21, 1909.

CHARLES S. WHEELER, Attorney for Executor,
609 Union Trust Building, San Francisco, Cal. 8-21-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of WILLIAM H. NOLAN, Deceased—No.8259—Dept. 10.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administratrix of the estate of WILLIAM H. NOLAN, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administratrix at the office of Messrs. Breen & Kelly, Attorneys at Law and Attorneys for said Administratrix, at their office, Rooms 1109-1110 Humboldt Bank Building, No. 785 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of WILLIAM H. NOLAN, deceased.

MARGARET M. NOLAN,

Administratrix of the Estate of William H. Nolan, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 31, 1909.

BREEN & KELLY, Attorneys for Administratrix,
Humboldt Bank Building, San Francisco, Cal. 9-4-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 24635.

JENNIE OXTOBY, Plaintiff,

vs.

JAMES W. OXTOBY, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send greeting to James W. Oxtoby, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and county; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant on the ground of defendant's extreme cruelty; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 11th day of August, A. D. 1909. By L. J. Welch, Deputy Clerk.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

WEINMANN, WOOD & CUNHA, Attorneys for Plaintiff. 9-4-10

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of Jules E. de ST. DENIS, also Called JULES St. DENIS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executor and Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of JULES E. de ST. DENIS, also called JULES ST. DENIS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executor and Executrix at the office of A. Comte Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of JULES E. de ST. DENIS, also called JULES ST. DENIS, deceased.

WILLIAM C. KEWIN, Executor,
JULIE HEILBRON, Executrix,

Of the Last Will and Testament of Jules E. de St. Dennis, also called Jules St. Denis, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 25th, 1909.

A. COMTE, JR., Attorney for Executors,
333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. 8-28-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY MORTGAGE SHOULD NOT BE RENEWED

In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California—No. 7168, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of CHARLOTTE F. CLARKE, Deceased.

Upon reading and filing the petition of Charles G. Lyman, executor of the last will and testament of CHARLOTTE F. CLARKE, deceased,

It is ordered that all persons interested in said estate be and appear in this Court in Department 10 thereof, in the Grant Building, on the southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, San Francisco, on Thursday, the 7th day of October, 1909, at the hour of ten o'clock a. m. of said day, then and there to show cause, if any they have why the said Charles G. Lyman as such executor should not join with Edith A. E. Lyman, E. K. Clarke, also known as Edward K. Clarke, also known as Edward Kane Clarke, and Charlotte H. Wright, in making, executing and delivering to Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, a corporation, a promissory note or notes in writing, in the sum of $40,422.27, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum, likewise joining the three said last named persons in making, executing and delivering to the said Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, a corporation, a mortgage as security for said promissory note or notes, upon the following described real estate, situate lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California:

Commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the southerly line of Post Street with the easterly line of Jones Street, running thence southerly and along said easterly line of Jones Street sixty (60) feet; thence at right angles easterly and along the northerly line of Cottage Place seventy (70) feet, six (6) inches; thence at a right angle northerly sixty (60) feet; thence at a right angle westerly along said southerly line of Jones Street seventy (70) feet, six (6) inches to the point of commencement; being a part of Fifty Vara Block No. 223.

Reference is hereby made to the petition on file herein for further particulars.

It is further ordered that this order be published once a week for four successive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper of general circulation in said City and County.

Dated this 30th day of August, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

MASTICK & PARTRIDGE, Attorneys for Executor,
Foxcroft Building, 68 Post St., San Francisco, Cal. 9-4-5

LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST

DIAMONDS AND GEMS

BALDWIN JEWELRY CO.

1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 2622, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of INDIA MASTERS, Deceased.

J. R. Pringle, the Administrator of the Estate of INDIA MASTERS, deceased, having filed his petition herein, duly verified, praying for an order of sale of the real estate of said decedent for the purposes therein set forth,

It is therefore ordered by the said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the Superior Court on Wednesday, the 22nd day of September, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10, Probate, of said Superior Court, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said J. R. Pringle, Administrator, to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased as shall be necessary.

And that a copy of this order be published four successive weeks in Town Talk, a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

And it is further ordered that the manner in which publication of this order shall be made shall be once a week for four successive weeks in said Town Talk, and that the number of publications during the above mentioned period shall be reduced accordingly.

Dated, August 13, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

OLNEY, PRINGLE & MANNON, Attorneys for Administrator,
1236 Merchants Exchange Bldg., San Francisco, Cal. 8-21-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8101, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate and Guardianship of PHILIP ARTHUR VIERHUS, a Minor.

S. TRAVIS KENYON, guardian of the person and estate of Philip Arthur Vierhus, a minor, having filed his petition herein, praying for an order of sale of the interest in the real estate of said minor for the purposes therein set forth, and an order of this Court having been made, setting the hearing of said petition on Wednesday, the eighth day of September, 1909, and it appearing to the Court that said order should be set aside; it is therefore ordered that the said order of this Court made on the 24th day of August, 1909, setting the hearing of said petition for Wednesday, the eighth day of September, A. D. 1909, be and the same is hereby set aside.

It is further ordered by this Court that all persons interested in the estate of said minor appear before the said Superior Court on Monday, the 20th day of September, 1909, in the forenoon of said day, at the Courtroom of Department No. 10 of said Superior Court, at room 601, Grant Building, corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the said City and County, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said guardian of said minor to sell the interest of the real estate of said minor, at private sale; and that a copy of this order be published for three weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in said City and County.

Done in open Court this 25th day of August, A. D. 1909.
THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Aug. 25, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By H. G. Benedict, Deputy Clerk. 8-28-4

ORDER OF SALE OF CERTAN REAL ESTATE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

In the Matter of the Estate and Guardianship of JAMES HARRINGTON, Incompetent.

It appearing to this Court from the petition this day presented and filed by Mary Harrington, the guardian of the person and estate of JAMES HARRINGTON, incompetent, praying for an order of sale of certain real estate belonging to said incompetent and that it is for the best interest of said incompetent and necessary that such real estate should be sold;

It is hereby ordered that the next of kin of the said incompetent and all persons interested in the said estate appear before this Court on Monday, the 11th day of October, 1909, at ten o'clock, at the Courtroom of this Court, in the Grant Building, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, then and there to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of such estate.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for at least three successive weeks before the said hearing in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated, September 2, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

HUGH O'NEILL, Attorney for Guardian,
Foxcroft Building, San Francisco, Cal. 9-11-4

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 17750, Dept. No. 5.

EVA NATHAN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of EVA NATHAN, plaintiff, filed with the clerk of the above entitled Court and City and County, within three months after the first publication of this summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situated in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Jones Street, distant thereon Southerly ninety (90) feet from the Southerly line of Pacific Street, running thence Southerly and along said line of Jones Street forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and thirty seven (137) feet, six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly forty (40) feet, eight and one-eighth (8⅛) inches; thence at right angles easterly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet, six (6) inches to said line of Jones Street and point of commencement.

Being a portion of fifty vara lot number Eight Hundred and Sixty-one (861) of the City and County of San Francisco.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit: for judgment establishing and quieting said plaintiff's title to all said real property as the owner thereof in fee simple, and determining all adverse claims thereto, and ascertaining and determining all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property and every part thereof, and for such other and further relief as may be just and proper in the premises, under and pursuant to the provisions of the Act of the Legislature of California entitled, "An Act to provide for the establishment and quieting of title to real property in case of loss and destruction of public records," approved June 16, 1906, and the Act of the said Legislature, amending the same, approved March 6, 1909.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court this 2nd day of July, A. D. 1909. H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
(Seal) By M. P. BRUTON, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this summons was made in Town Talk, a newspaper, on the 17th day of July, A. D. 1909.

DEVOTO & RICHARDSON, Attorneys for Plaintiff,
Foxcroft Building, San Francisco.

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 18016.

MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, Plaintiff,

vs.

All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this Summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

PARCEL NUMBER ONE

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Green Street, distant thereon one hundred and seventeen (117) feet and seven and one-fifth (7 1-5) inches Easterly from the Easterly line of Franklin Street; running thence Easterly and along said Northerly line of Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly and parallel to Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches to the said Northerly line of Green Street and point of commencement.

Being a part of Western Addition Block No. 96.

PARCEL NUMBER TWO

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of "C" Street, distant thereon thirty-two (32) feet and six (6) inches Westerly from the Westerly line of Twenty-fifth (25th) Avenue; running thence Westerly along said Northerly line of "C" Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 356.

PARCEL NUMBER THREE

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of "T" Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the point of beginning.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 1153.

PARCEL NUMBER FOUR

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue, distant two hundred and twenty-five (225) feet Southerly from the Southeasterly corner of "A" Street and Twenty-first Avenue; running thence Southerly along the said Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the place of beginning. The same being a portion of Outside Lands Block Number Three Hundred and Three (303).

PARCEL NUMBER FIVE

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Larkin Street, distant thereon seventy-seven (77) feet and six (6) inches Northerly from the corner formed by the intersection of said Easterly line of Larkin Street with the Northerly line of Union Street, running thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Larkin Street, twenty (20) feet; thence at right angles Easterly sixty (60) feet to the Westerly line of Moore Street; thence at right angles Southerly along said line of Moore Street twenty (20) feet; and thence at right angles Westerly sixty (60) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot No. 1393.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, title, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 26th day of July A. D. 1909.
(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 31st day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., San Francisco, Cal. 7-31-10

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY ORDER FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No, 3835, Dept. No. 10.

In the Matters of the Estate of BYRON J. TAYLOR, Deceased.

Avy A. Holdgate, formerly Avy A. Kitto, the Administratrix of the estate of BYRON J. TAYLOR, deceased, having heretofore presented to the Court and filed with the Clerk thereof her verified petition, praying for an order of this Court authorizing, empowering and directing her to sell certain real property in said petition particularly described, belonging to the estate of said deceased, and it appearing to the Court that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real property in said petition described to pay the debts, expenses and charges of administration and that it is for the advantage, benefit and best interest of the estate and those interested therein that said real estate be sold,

It is hereby ordered that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased be and they are hereby directed to appear before the above entitled Court, Department No. 10 thereof, at its Courtroom, situate in the Grant Building, at the corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on Wednesday, the 22nd day of September, 1909, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, then and there to show cause, if any you have, why an order should not be granted to said administratrix for the sale of all of said real estate.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order to show cause be published in Town Talk, a newspaper of general circulation, printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, once a week for four successive weeks.

Dated, August 17, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

H. M. OWENS, Attorney for Administratrix,
Mechanics Savings Bank Building, San Francisco, Cal. 8-21-5

Louis Crepaux
(Member of Paris Grand Opera)
Has removed to his new studio,
Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.
Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street.

Emil Steinegger
PIANOFORTE PLAYING
924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.
For appointments phone Merritt 2845
Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Donald Maclean
SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske
STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge
ATTORNEY AT LAW
CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO
Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan
ATTORNEY AT LAW
CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor
Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty
ATTORNEYS AT LAW and
PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY
MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.
Rooms 626 and 630

HENRY P. TRICOU
NOTARY PUBLIC
508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711
Residence 852 Grove St. Phone Park 1870

MOVED
Gladding, McBean & Co.
CLAY PRODUCTS
Office
311-317 CROCKER BUILDING
Warehouse
147-151 MINNA STREET
Between New Montgomery and Third
San Francisco, Cal.
W. D. Fennimore J. W. Davis A. R. Fennimore

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store at 181 Post Street, near Grant Avenue.

Deaths of English Rulers

William the Conquerer died from the effects of drink and his own violent passions.

William Rufus died the death of the stag he hunted.

Henry I died of gluttony.

Henry II died of a broken heart, the result of the ill-conduct of his children.

Richard Coeur-dé-Lion died of a wound from an arrow.

John is said to have died of chagrin, which has been interpreted as a euphemism for a dose of hellebore.

Henry III is credited with having died a natural death; something unusual for a monarch of his time.

Edward I also is said to have died of a "natural sickness."

Edward II was barbarously murdered by ruffians in the employ of his wife and her paramour.

Edward III died of dotage.

Richard II died of starvation.

Henry IV died of "fits caused by uneasiness," and uneasiness was a common complaint in palaces.

Henry V died "prematurely of a painful affliction," a courtly term for the getting rid of a king.

Henry VI died in prison by means known then only to his jailer and now only to heaven.

Edward V was strangled in the tower by his uncle, Richard III.

Richard III was killed in battle.

Henry VII wasted away as a miser should.

Henry VIII died of carbuncles, fat and fury.

Edward VI died of consumption.

Queen Mary is said to have died of a broken heart.

Queen Elizabeth is said to have died of melancholy after having sacrificed Essex to his enemies.

James I died of drinking and the effects of a loose life.

Charles I died on the scaffold.

Charles II died suddenly, probably of apoplexy.

William III died of the effect of the stumbling of his horse, but was consumptive.

Queen Anne died of dropsy.

George I died of drunkenness, politely called apoplexy by the court physicians.

George II died of rupture of the heart, called by the periodicals of the day "a visitation of God."

George III died as he had lived, a madman.

George IV died of gluttony and drunkenness.

"George the first was always reckoned
Vile, but viler George the Second,
And what mortal ever heard
Any good of George the Third?
When from earth the Fourth descended,
God be praised, the Georges ended!"

—Landor.

In Narrow Quarters

For many years old Colonel Lee resided in Ninth Street, New York, near the Hotel St. Denis. He is still remembered by hundreds of New Yorkers for his bright manner and happy, apt remarks.

When the project for erecting an equestrian statue to General Washington in Union Square was proposed, Colonel Lee was intrusted with one of the subscription papers for circulation. Shortly after receiving it he approached a well-known citizen and asked for a subscription. But the citizen declined to subscribe, stating in a rather pompous manner:

"I do not consider, sir, that there is any necessity for a monument to Mr. Washington. His fame is undying; it is enshrined in the hearts of his countrymen."

"Is he enshrined in your heart?" softly inquired the colonel.

"He is, sir."

"Well, all I have to say," retorted Colonel Lee, "is that he is in a tight place."

Beggar—Hum. So Le Figaro says there's a strike in a soap factory? Are there really people who are interested in that?

$550.00 Will buy the best 88-note Player on the market
CROWN AND CONCORD PIANOS
10-inch Disc Records, 25 Cents
PETER BACIGALUPI & SONS,
Phonographs and Pianos
941 Market St. Opposite Mason St.
Open Saturday Evenings.

The German Savings and Loan Society
(Member of the Associated Savings Bank of S. F.)
526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,504,498.68
Deposits June 30, 1908	$36,793,234.04
Total Assets	$39,435,681.38

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

RICHMOND DISTRICT BRANCH, 432 Clement Street between 5th and 6th Avenues. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. W. C. Heyer, Manager.

60 YEARS' EXPERIENCE
PATENTS
TRADE MARKS
DESIGNS
COPYRIGHTS &C.
Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain our opinion free whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. HANDBOOK on Patents sent free. Oldest agency for securing patents.
Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice, without charge, in the Scientific American.
A handsomely illustrated weekly. Largest circulation of any scientific journal. Terms, $3 a year; four months, $1. Sold by all newsdealers.
MUNN & Co. 361 Broadway, New York
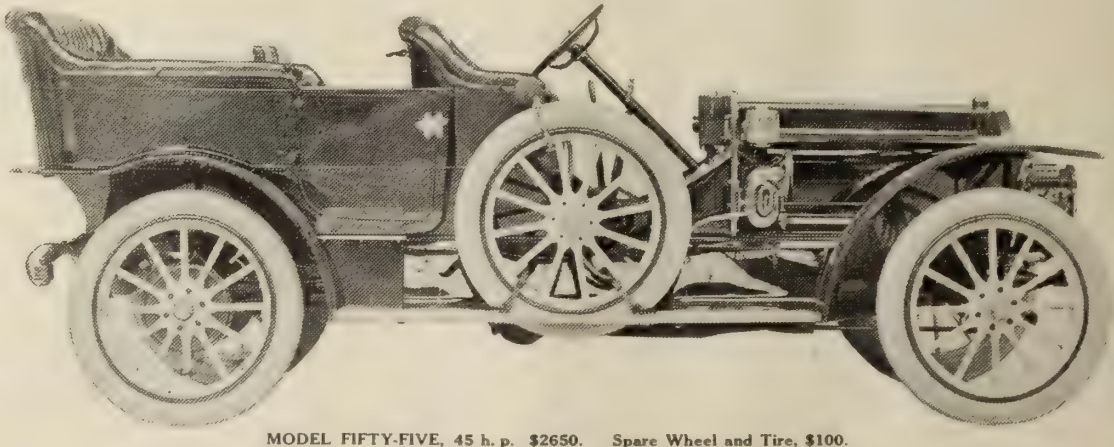
Branch Office, 625 F St., Washington, D. C.

MAYERLE'S GERMAN EYE WATER
By Mail 65c



Mayerle's German Eyewater
Highly Recommended for
Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids.
NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN
Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes, relieves the strain, and preserve the sight.
GEORGE MAYERLE
Graduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America; 960 Market street, opposite Hale's. Phone Franklin 3279.

THOMAS B. JEFFERY

The most successful automobile builder in the United States, during the season of 1910 will devote the entire facilities of his wonderful to the production of standard size 4-cylinder cars. This action has become necessary in order to meet the extraordinary demand for 1910 Rambler cars created by the phenomenal satisfaction which owners have obtained from 1908 and 1909 cars.

FACTORY—THE LARGEST IN THE WORLD

MODEL FIFTY-FIVE, 45 h. p. $2650. Spare Wheel and Tire, $100.

1910 Rambler cars will not differ materially in their mechanical construction from the 1908 and 1909 models because two years' use has developed no weak points, but details, finish and comfort have been added in making the 1910 car the most desirable regardless of price. One quality in all models.

Model Fifty-three, 5 passenger, 34-36 h. p. - - - $2000
Model Fifty-four, 5 or 4 passenger, 45-50 h. p. - - $2400
Model Fifty-five, 7 passenger, 45-50 h. p. - - - $2650

These cars will be the sensation of the Automobile Show. Compare our specifications with other cars.

THOMAS B. JEFFERY & COMPANY

117-125 VALENCIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

HOME OFFICE AND FACTORY, KENOSHA, WIS.

Vol. XVII. No. 891. SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 25, 1909. PRICE, 10 CENTS

SAN FRANCISCO TOWN TALK

Drink Sparkling

CLYSMIC

"King of Table Waters"

Use CLYSMIC in your Highballs

THE JOHNSON-LOCKE MERCANTILE CO.
SOLE AGENTS SAN FRANCISCO

Leading Hotels and Resorts

HOTEL ALEXANDRIA

LOS ANGELES

IN SAFETY, SERVICE
AND SANITATION

HAS TAKEN ITS PLACE
AMONG THE BEST HOTELS

A. C. BILICKE, President
S. J. WHITMORE, Vice-Pres. and Gen. Mgr. JOS. REICHL, Asst. Mgr.

HOTEL DEL CORONADO

CORONADO, CAL.

Coronado is essentially an Hotel of quiet elegance. It has the most equable climate of which any knowledge exists. Hotel Del Coronado has unique facilities for out-of-door recreation. Polo, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and motoring on good roads. Rates $4 per day upward. Power boats from the Hotel meet passengers from the North on the arrival of the Pacific Coast S. S. Co. steamers. For special information apply to MORGAN ROSS, Manager, Coronado, or H. F. NORCROSS, representative, 334 S. Spring St., Los Angeles.

THE PERRY HOTEL

Madison St. and Boren Ave.
SEATTLE, WASH.

Every Modern Convenience—Absolutely Fire Proof
European Plan, The Highest Grade

Under new management, centrally located and commanding a view of the Olympics, Cascade Mountains, Mount Rainier and Puget Sound.

J. S. McTERNAN, Manager

HOTEL WESTMINSTER

LOS ANGELES, CAL. Fourth and Main Sts.

AMERICAN PLAN, Reopened.

Rates per day, $2.50 Rooms without Bath
Rooms with Bath, $3.00, $3.50 and $4.00.

EUROPEAN PLAN.

$1.00 per day and up.
With bath, $1.50 and up

F. O. JOHNSON, Proprietor

HOTEL WASHINGTON

J. M. LUX, MANAGER

SEATTLE, WASH.

A magnificent modern structure involving over One Million and a Half Dollars. Conducted on Most liberal ideas of Experience. Its appointments and service cannot be excelled in the United States. The management cordially invites your patronage.

THE ANGELUS

LOS ANGELES

One of California's Best Hotels
Centrally located; street cars direct to hotel.

Rates $1.50 per Day Up

HOTEL CUMBERLAND

Broadway at 54th Street

NEW YORK

Near 50th St. Subway Station and 53d St. Elevated

Ideal Location,
Near Theatres, Shops, and
Central Park

New and Fireproof

Strictly First Class in Every Respect

Rates Reasonable
$2.50 with bath, and up.

All Hardwood Floors and
Oriental Rugs

10 Minutes' Walk to 20 Theatres

Excellent Restaurant Prices Moderate

Send for Booklet

HARRY P. STIMSON, formerly with Hotel Imperial
R. J. BINGHAM, formerly with Hotel Woodward

HOTEL WASHINGTON ANNEX

SEATTLE, WASH.

Best Rooms Best Service
Strictly First-Class

J. H. DAVIS - - - - - - Proprietor

Leading Hotels and Resorts

NAPA SODA SPRINGS HOTEL

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

California's famous mountain spa, only 50 miles from San Francisco. The nearest watering place and summer resort to the city. 1,000 feet elevation, overlooking 25 miles of beautiful Napa Valley. For terms address Manager Napa Soda Springs Hotel, Napa County, Cal.

YOSEMITE

SENTINEL HOTEL Open the Year Round; Steam Heated; Electric Lighted.

CAMP YOSEMITE Electric Lighted; Opened May 1st; the Largest Hotel-Camp on the Coast.

Under One Management. For Rates, Reservations or other information, address J. B. COOK, Proprietor, Yosemite, Cal.

PARAISO SPRINGS

MONTEREY CO., CAL.

The most accessible of all resorts; a delightful terminal for an automobile trip. Take 8 a. m. train from Third and Townsend; you arrive at spring 1 p. m. for lunch. Natural hot soda and sulphur plunge and tub baths, 104 to 116 degrees, for rheumatism, malaria and all stomach troubles. Iron and arsenic waters. Altitude 1400 feet. H. H. McGOWAN, Proprietor.

GILROY HOT SPRINGS

Only four hours from San Francisco; delightful stage ride over the best kept mountain road in California. Unsurpassed table, health-giving waters, telephone, postoffice. Rates $12 to $17.50 a week; baths free. Trains leave Third and Townsend streets at 9 a. m. Direct stage connection. See Peck-Judah, 789 Market street.

W. J. McDONALD, Proprietor.

Boca Hotel and Annex

TRUCKEE RIVER

Address CHAS. GARRISON, BOCA, CAL.

HOTEL ARGONAUT

Society of California Pioneers Building

FOURTH STREET NEAR MARKET — San Francisco — CENTRE OF THE CITY

Catering to Family and Commercial Trade

400 Rooms $1.00 per day and up Dining room seats 500 guests

Special 50c Luncheon from 11:30 to 2 p. m.

Weekly and monthly rates on application. Free bus meets all trains and steamers.

Telephone Douglas 3393 EDWARD ROLKIN, Manager

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS

UNION SQUARE

Individuality in equipment and service

Under the management of JAMES WOODS

FAIRMONT HOTEL

LAUREL COURT

The ideal place in which to take

AFTERNOON TEA

Under management of the PALACE HOTEL COMPANY

HOTEL VICTORIA

MRS. W. F. MORRIS, Manager

N. E. cor. Bush and Stockton

CENTRALLY LOCATED .·. A MODERN AND UP-TO-DATE FAMILY HOTEL

Sun in every room. Elaborate furnishings. Excellent cuisine. Large lobby and reception room. Grill room. Dining room.

American and European Plan.

HOTEL HARCOURT

Formerly the Nordhoff.

SUTTER AND LARKIN STREETS

AMERICAN AND EUROPEAN PLAN

An Elegantly Furnished Modern Home. Phone Franklin 2100

CAMERAS Kodaks, Developing, Printing, Supplies, Etc.

"Don't take a vacation unless you take pictures as you go along"

462-464 THIRTEENTH STREET, Between Broadway and Washington

SMITH BROS. STATIONERS OAKLAND

Leading Hotels and Resorts

POWELL ST AT O'FARRELL

HOTEL MANX SAN FRANCISCO

Army and navy headquarters. Built, equipped and conducted to please the really critical. Every convenience known to latter day hotel keeping. Circulating ice water in each room.

Management of GUS C. LARM

Hotel and Grounds

PEBBLE BEACH LODGE

A most unique and interesting place of entertainment and refreshment in California now open. Situated at Pebble Beach on the world-famous Seventeen Mile Drive, Easily reached from

HOTEL DEL MONTE

THE VENDOME SAN JOSE

Is the ideal objective point for the motorist. The accommodations are complete and the ride from either side of the bay is delightful. This hotel is unsurpassed in the West for the beauty of its environment and for those qualities which contribute to ease and comfort. H. W. LAKE, Manager.

LONG BEACH SANITARIUM

Battle Creek Sanitarium Methods — LONG BEACH, CAL. — Long Distance Phones in Every Room

A splendidly equipped QUIET, REFINED and MODERN medical and surgical Institution BY THE SEA, where the sick, run down or worktired may go and know that they will receive the very best of care and attention at reasonable rates. Gentlemen and Lady Physicians. Graduate nurses only. Climate exceptionally fine. Cool in summer, warm and dry in winter. Descriptive Booklet mailed FREE. W. RAY SIMPSON, Manager.

YE ALPINE TAVERN

Beautiful Mountain Resort on Mt. Love

Just a mile above the sea. American plan $3.00 per day, $15 per week. Choice of rooms in hotel or cottages. Spend a vacation 5,000 feet above the sea, among great pines and oaks. For information, D. A. Munger, General Agent, Pacific Electric R. R., Los Angeles, or office.

BYRON HOT SPRINGS

One of the world's most curative springs, 2½ hours from San Francisco; one of California's best hotels and a delightful place for rest and recreation. See Southern Pacific Information Bureau, James Flood Building, any S. P. Agent, or Peck-Judah, 789 Market St., San Francisco, or 553 S. Spring St., Los Angeles, or address manager, Byron Hot Springs, California.

TAKE TAMALPAIS TRIP

and breathe good air.

Half a mile high in two hours' time. No other trip like it.

Via Sausalito Ferry, Foot of Market Street

TOWN TALK

THE PACIFIC WEEKLY

Vol. XVII. San Francisco, September 25, 1909. No. 891.

FARMAN IN HIS LONG FLIGHT

The chief event of the great aviation meeting at Rheims was the Grand Prix de la Champagne, for length of flight. Mr. Farman's victory was somewhat unexpected, as during the week he had not performed any very notable feats. But on the Friday, the last day but one of the meeting, he flew a distance of 118 miles in 3 hours 15 minutes, thus breaking all previous records for time and distance in a heavier than air machine. It was dark for some time before Mr. Farman ended his long flight, and his biplane was invisible to the spectators. When he alighted near the grand stand at a quarter to eight the crowd greeted him with immense enthusiasm; but he was so exhausted and cold after being so long in the air that he could not say a word, and nearly fell as he stepped out of his seat. The value of the Grand Prix was $10,000.

TOWN TALK

Published Weekly by
TOWN TALK PUBLISHING COMPANY

Theodore F. Bonnet.....Editor.
Ralph A. Grover.....Manager
88 First St., cor. Mission, San Francisco. Telephone Douglas 2612.

SUBSCRIPTION—One Year, in advance, $4.00; six months, $2.25; three months, $1.30; single copies, 10 cents. Foreign subscriptions (countries in Postal Union), $5.00 per year. For sale by all Newsdealers.

Entered at the San Francisco Post Office as second-class matter.

The Trade in San Francisco supplied direct by us. Outside of San Francisco by the San Francisco News Co.

For foreign and local advertising rates address 88 First Street, San Francisco.

Los Angeles office, 427 South Main Street.

Seattle office, 804 Third Avenue.

We decline to return or to enter into correspondence as to rejected communications; and to this rule we can make no exception. Manuscripts not acknowledged within four weeks are rejected.

The Taft Letter

President Taft's letter in vindication of Secretary Ballinger is the most important State paper that has come out of Washington since Colonel Roosevelt betook himself to Africa. It is important for reasons that are grounded in political ethics and morality. No intelligent man can help seeing that the most pressing of the duties which have devolved on our highest officials is that of deciding what ought to be their attitude toward the laws of their country. This for the reason that as within a very recent period of our history the law having been subordinated to personal caprice there has not been that reverence for the law which experts in the science of government have deemed essential to the security of a nation. Mr. Taft, we are pleased to report, has placed himself squarely on record in favor of enforcing the law. Of course it is only the expected that has happened, but it is none the less gratifying. As a lawyer Mr. Taft knows that personal caprice, however honest, however disinterested, is not a desirable substitute for the law, and he might reasonably have been expected to bring the ship of State back to its old moorings for the purpose of taking a fresh start. It might also have been expected that there would be dissatisfaction with him for affirming his devotion to the law, for certain leaders of thought and moulders of public opinion have come to regard the law with disfavor because the law does not recognize majorities. These zealous agitators have resented Mr. Taft's attitude. They realize that his determination to uphold the law and to revive reverence for the law means that he is not to be accessible to the kind of public clamor which it is the delight of muckrakers and masked socialists to excite. Hoping to bring him at once into disfavor they have brought against him the awful charge of having abandoned the policies of his predecessor. Of course the accusation is not well founded. We are as certain as it is possible to be with reference to anything Rooseveltian that the Mighty Hunter will not endorse the views of those of his friends who imply by their animadversions on the President's conduct that it was one of "My Policies" to subordinate the law to expediency. As a matter of fact Mr. Roosevelt, it must be confessed, never stood in awe of the law. With him the Big Stick was paramount. Sometimes he suspended the operation of the law, notably in the interest of organized labor, which he exempted from the unpleasant requirements of the statute regulating interstate commerce, the very same requirements, by the bye, with which he demanded compliance on the part of the despised magnates of all our transportation companies. In other words Mr. Roosevelt invoked the majesty of the law whenever its violators were few in number and unpopular and suspended the operation of the law when the exigencies of politics appealed to his discretion. But Mr. Roosevelt never publicly affirmed his faith in Government by Executive; nor did he ever embody in "My Policies" the principle that was implied in his refusal in violation of his sworn duty, in the Buck's Stove and Danbury Hatters' cases, to set the wheels of justice in motion. It is well known that Mr. Roosevelt had no faith in the Constitution of the United States, for he openly advocated the repudiation of that instrument by penalizing any railroad which ventured to question in the courts the unconstitutionality of an employers' liability bill, but never did he frankly enunciate a policy in favor of substituting Executive caprice for the old-fashioned organic law of this weather-beaten but still solid and intact Union. So, we say, it is as unfair to Mr. Roosevelt as to Mr. Taft to interpret the President's letter in vindication of Mr. Ballinger as an expression in repudiation of the great tribune's policies.

Disgruntled Muckrakers

President Taft's letter derives no small measure of importance from the circumstance that it was read with the keenest dissatisfaction by certain pestiferous politicians and mob-coddling journalists whose principal occupation in life is the cultivation of a hard and condemnatory spirit toward their fellow men. To these men that delight in shadowing forth the downfall of statesmen whose manhood revolts at the practice of demagogic arts, President Taft's letter is formal notice that from him they must not expect encouragement. For weeks prior to the exoneration of Mr. Ballinger these so-called reformers had been assuring the dear old gullible public that they were in possession of conclusive proof of the Secretary's awful wickedness. Congenitally inclined to attribute to men unworthy motives and to detect them in delinquencies, they were doubtless honest in their views with reference to Mr. Ballinger. He had been accused by a Roosevelt reformer; ergo, he was guilty. This is their favorite style of argument. And it is characteristic of them that even after it has been shown that they have been most unjust to Secretary Ballinger they should scoff at the proof of his innocence and adhere to the suspicions which they now know were generated through misrepresentation. The journalists and venomous reformers who have been wallowing in scurrilities and bespattering the character of Secretary Ballinger with the emanations of their spleen, must not be expected to relent or retreat. They are too fond of the weapons of calumny to set them aside even temporarily. These gentlemen are typical of the species of reformer that has been propagating with wonderful rapidity under the fostering influence of the muckraking propaganda. In their eagerness to vindicate their unswerving devotion to their fellow citizens they are ever prone on the spur of the moment to indulge their susceptible feelings to the utmost lest by stopping to inquire and examine they might find there is no justification for them. And once started on a campaign of villification they smother the admonitions of reason at every turn with the thick vapor of their inexhaustible spite.

The Glavis Indictment

From President Taft's letter we learn that all the hullabaloo with which the anti-Ballinger muckrakers have been rending the empyrean had its origin in the hostility of one L. R. Glavis, chief of the field division of the General Land Office with headquarters at Seattle. It appears that this little rogue, the tool evidently of a bigger one whose identity is not hard to conjecture, undertook to discredit Secretary Ballinger in the eyes of the public with an artful assemblage of half-truths and an unscrupulous suppression of whole ones. With considerable cunning he clothed his charges in damning insinuations and vague abstractions. "With so small a web as this will I catch so great a fly as Cassio" was doubtless the burden of the Glavis soliloquy as he formulated his Machiavellian indictment. President Taft has pointed out that Glavis sought to have the inference drawn that while Mr. Ballinger was acting as Commissioner of the General Land Office in the Roosevelt administration he came into the possession of facts which made it improper for him to accept private employment after his resignation. The President declares that he has ascertained that such an inference is absolutely unjustifiable, and he presents the facts, an abundance of them, by which he was led to this conclusion. Furthermore he assures us, and the assurance is based in a measure on personal experience, that Mr. Ballinger in all the transactions mentioned by Glavis acted with the most scrupulous discretion. From all the circumstances which he presents the innocence of his secretary is as obvious as the conclusion that Glavis is a scoundrel is imperative.

Pardee the Prevaricator

After disposing of Glavis the President takes up the Hon. George C. Pardee, the friend of Gifford Pinchot, who acted as the mouthpiece of the Chief Forester at the Irrigation Convention for the purpose of questioning the integrity of Mr. Ballinger and exposing him to obloquy. Though Pardee is pretty well known in this State as the Tartuffe of politics; though he is no longer taken seriously here, having come to be recognized as nothing more than a hypocritical statesman without a job, a political sorehead without a salary, a mountebank without subconsciousness, abroad he has some prestige. It is known of him that he once enjoyed the confidence of the people of California; and as it is not known that to retain the office of Governor he was guilty of practices so contemptible that they challenge credulity, he has the power to give some impetus to slander. For this reason President Taft paid him the tribute of his consideration. And a scarifying tribute it was. According to President Taft the cruel imputations that fell from Pardee's foaming lips were absolutely unfounded. Every statement uttered by Pardee, the President tells, us, was a falsehood. Not one filing has been attempted on any of the water power sites which, according to Pardee, had been lost to the people of the United States through the machinations of Mr. Ballinger. No private water power companies have been permitted, as alleged by Pardee, to obtain vested interests in any of the lands which were withdrawn from settlement by the last administration. The only lands restored to the public domain by Secretary Ballinger are lands upon which there are no water power sites. Two distinct charges were made by Pardee and both, President Taft tells us, were grounded in falsehood. In conclusion the President says that the action of his secretary with reference to a contract by his predecessor designed for the conservation of Indian forests, which has been pointed to as indicative of his purpose to block the general plan of conservation, was made necessary by a ruling of the Comptroller, "which ruling is final and without appeal even to the President." Now certainly there is no equivocation in the President's letter; nor is there any lack of facts to support his decision. He has made the exoneration of his secretary clear and emphatic enough to satisfy any intelligent, unbiassed person. He has done more than that; he has branded the secretary's accusers as liars of the first magnitude. With striking felicity in the presentation of his facts, in language precise and never vague, in close and unerring exposition he has not only refuted and confounded Mr. Ballinger's enemies but he has proved them guilty of an astonishing prodigality of misstatement, a shameful exuberance of mendacity. Naturally they are chagrined, but far be it from them to confess the error of their ways. Incorrigible in their infamy, it is far more agreeable to men of their nature to emulate the cuttle-fish. We find the Examiner, for example, turning its batteries of prevarication from Secretary Ballinger to President Taft. According to the disingenuous Examiner Mr. Taft's clear and simple statement of facts is "a very good technical showing," a "generous coat of whitewash." The gallant author of these characterizations disputes not a single statement in the whole of the President's letter, but insists that Mr. Ballinger has been acting "from other motives than the public good." In the editorial columns of the canting journal of which that great moralist John D. Spreckels is not ashamed to confess proprietorship, we find more of the same kind of brazen calumny. Mr. Ballinger was vindicated, according to the Call, by a technical construction of the letter of the law, and notwithstanding what the President has said, notwithstanding the array of facts in corroboration of what he has said, the West, we are soberly assured by the humorless Call, is unconvinced. The supposition is, we infer from the Call, that President Taft has lied about Glavis, and at any rate Gifford Pinchot is a gentleman and a zealous, honest public servant. As for Pardee—well neither the Call nor the Examiner had the courage to defend that picturesque pariah of the political domain.

Oregon Disillusioned

Sad and disheartening news comes to the champions of the direct primary from Oregon where, after five years of actual trial, it is proposed to return to the old-fashioned convention system. We are frequently told that no State or community which has adopted the direct primary law has ever consented to its repeal, but it now appears that for the purpose of accuracy this assertion should be amended. From several States that have had actual experience testimony has come of the utter failure of the direct primary to approximate expectations, but nothing more emphatic has been said on the subject than this, which recently appeared in the Portland Oregonian:

"When Oregon adopted the direct primary, five years

The Hub.
CHAS. KEILUS & CO
EXCLUSIVE
HIGH GRADE CLOTHIERS

No Branch Stores—No Agents.

IN THIS SMART CLOTHES SHOP WE WATCH ALL MINOR DETAILS TO PROMOTE CLOTHES SCIENCE. OUR CLOTHS, STYLES AND MAKES ARE SUPERIOR AND MODERN. WE REMOVE THE IMPRESSION THAT ALL CLOTHES ARE ALIKE. OURS ARE CUT INDIVIDUALLY; NOT FIVE OR SIX AT A TIME, SUCH AS YOU GET ELSEWHERE.

THIS IS THE CLOTHES TALENT OUR LABEL ENDORSES:

The Hub
Chas Keilus & Co.
San Francisco.

Atterbury System, Brokaw Bros.
Alfred Benjamin & Co., Ely Meyer & M. C. Simon,
Adler-Rochester, Levy Bros.' Co.
Paragon Trousers.

Our clothes are tailored in such a manner so that you can have your ideas carried out. It's unreasonable to expect high grade clothes made in sweat shops, where the slogan is "Volume." Naturally, stores looking for "volume" ignore class. They must handle clothes prepared for "volume." "We carry the best ready-made clothes produced." We have come to the conclusion long, long ago that "steerage" and "first class clothes" don't mingle. We don't "slip" our trade any "steerage clothes."

JEWELERS' BUILDING
Post Street, Near Kearny, San Francisco.

ago, a lot of idealists declaimed this State in the lead of the 'progressive' movement. They little imagined that Oregon in a brief time would lead the way to restoration of the convention or assembly. The City of Portland did this last election, forced to it by office filling failures of the 'wide open,' unguided primary. The State as a whole will do the same next spring, and the people will sanction the middle course method between the old time convention and new fangled primary, just as the voters of Portland have done to their satisfaction.'

The Oregonian adds that the direct primary makes for party disruption and political anarchy, and that wherever it has been tried it has proved a failure. The direct primary has not yet had a fair trial in San Francisco. It is too early for us to give testimony as to its merits and demerits, but we can truthfully say that grave doubts of its efficacy have arisen in the minds of men who once regarded it as a means of extinguishing most of the evils from which it is generally believed that we are suffering.

Sir Rob Joy, N. G.

(Of the New Order of Auto-Nobility)

Put down, Recording Angel, pride!
  Note well, O Watcher, the disdain
Of those that in their autos ride
  For us that walk! Vile scorn, and vain!
The auto—clearly 'tis implied—
  Is not upon the aero-plane.

Full oft, or e'er he won the cup,
  With Rob of motor-car renown
I've shared right friendly bit and sup.
  Best hearted man was he in town;
Cried all his fellow burghers up.
  Now ruthlessly he runs them down.

In dear long-dead pedestrian days
  Was none so well beloved as he;
No passerby but sang his praise;
  Whole nurseries nestled on his knee.
Now goes he his avoided ways
  In odor most unsavory.

Goes on, regardless of the slain,
  In devil-rig, the devil-dare!
Ill winds that blow nobody gain
  He raises; dust, not crust, I share.
White Death before him rides amain;
  Beside him ever sits Black Care.

—Harry Cowell.

Perspective Impressions

Heney's continued silence seems almost too good to be true.

The Hon. George C. Pardee enjoys the distinction of being the first person elected to membership in President Taft's Ananias Club.

Fashion has decreed that the bean-pole shape for women shall be abolished. Maybe it's all right—but one cannot help sharing Hamlet's fear of flying to ills we know not of.

A Cleveland brewer permitted his wife to go to prison rather than make good $500 that she had stolen. There are some who condemn him, but those who lack personal acquaintance with the lady should withhold judgment.

President Taft was met by several prominent Japanese at Minneapolis, and gave them warm words of greeting. Shrieks of anguish from the Asiastic Exclusion League!

Roosevelt killed his first elephant in Africa last week. Better success than he had in trying to kill off the Republican party's symbolic pachyderm.

Foreign automobiles going into France must pay a tax. And here angry farmers put tacks in the roads for them.

An attorney practicing in Alaska has been disbarred for eighteen months because he said a judge was dominated by a ring and was not on the square. He should locate in San Francisco where he can make such attacks on the judiciary with impunity.

THE TAFT IDEA

ernment ...
Policies" the pr...

—New York World

HE'S OFF!

—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Peary A Controversialist

Explorer's Trouble With Captain Sverdrup Over Violation of Arctic Ethics Is Recalled—Peary's Great Work in Discovering That Greenland Was the Largest Island in the World.

By Francis Wells

Controversy and publicly ventilated pique over a violation of what may be termed Arctic ethics, are not new things to Robert Peary. Many years ago he had a wordy war with Captain Sverdrup, the explorer who discovered a considerable number of islands in the Parry Archipelago. In 1899, shortly after Peary had read a paper before the American Geographical Society in which he outlined his plans for reaching the Pole, Sverdrup sailed for the Arctic on Nansen's famous ship, the Fram, with the North Pole his aim and object. He did not find it because of a series of unfortunate circumstances. Peary was indignant, and wrote Sverdrup a letter in which he censured him for his attempt to take advantage of his (Peary's) work and knowledge. To the lay mind it is not exactly clear that Sverdrup was an offender, any more than would be a physician who followed along the lines of another doctor who was trying to discover a cure for an epidemic. Exploration is in the interests of science, and it would seem that any scientist would rejoice in the success of another, and would be willing to lend him all the aid possible. But Peary, then just becoming famous, appeared desirous of forming a North Pole Trust, composed exclusively of himself; and his controversy with Cook indicates that he has not abandoned the idea.

It was in 1888 that Peary first attracted attention to himself through an account of his Greenland explorations that he read before the American Geographical Society. The lecture was printed in full in some of the newspapers, and a copy happened to fall under the eye of an official of the Philadelphia Academy of Science. Struck with the explorer's vivid account of his sledge journey in Iceland, the member in question invited Peary to lecture before the society. The man and his talk kindled interest in himself and his plans. The Philadelphia society did a great deal to make Peary known, and when he started on his first expedition, the total cost of which was $6,000, half of that sum was supplied by his new friends in the Quaker City. This journey made Peary famous, for one result of it was to prove that Greenland was an island, the largest in the world. Many years ago "Petermann's Mitteilungen" contained an article by its editor, the great Dr. Petermann, giving his reasons for believing that Greenland was of almost continental extent, stretching probably across the Pole and down the other side to the neighborhood of Asia. This same publication was the first to announce that Peary had proved that Greenland was an island—a very large island, to be sure, for it is nearly three and a half times as large as France.

He was not searching for the Pole when he surveyed more than 600 miles of coast line along the shores of North Greenland and 300 miles of coasts along the northern shores of Grant Land. When he was seeking to find the true outlines of Greenland he traveled 2,600 miles over the ice cap of the interior. His journeys on this tremendous ice mass were four or five times as long as those of all the other explorers of its surface. He has reached the Pole, but this achievement will never dwarf the value of his great pioneer services to geography in other directions.

Contrary to other explorers' views, Peary believed that Esquimaux could be used to advantage in exploratory work, and his late success with their aid has proved the correctness of his views.

"There are a dozen men among the handful of Smith Sound natives," he says, "upon whom I can depend to do anything. Sledging up Smith Sound last spring I said to a party of men I was leaving behind: 'You know there are musk oxen back there. Go and kill some of them and bring the meat here on sledges and cache it for me. When I come back I shall need some fresh meat and I shall expect to find it here.'"

The meat was there when Peary returned. After he got back to Camp Peary he thought it was highly desirable to take home with him a couple of live musk oxen. He said to some of the Esquimaux:

"There are plenty of musk oxen over there," indicating a place that was about sixty-five miles away. "The grass is green there now and you will find them grazing. I want two live musk ox calves. I expect you to go there and capture them in any way that you please and to bring them to me safe and sound. I know you will not injure them in any way."

The men started with their sledges and in due time reappeared with two fat calves in perfect condition. They had carried the little animals on their sledges, cutting grass on the route for their provender, keeping them in their tent at night safe from dogs and wolves, and on the last stage of the journey home, when they were crossing ice, where vegetation did not flourish, they fed the calves with grass which they had packed into their kamiks, or boots. This was the first stage of Peary's experiment, thus far successful, in the introduction of musk oxen into this country.

More than once Peary has used his faithful natives as mail carriers to deliver letters from his northern camps to whaling vessels far south, which in the course of time have taken them to Dundee, Scotland, to be mailed to their destination in this country. One of these Esquimau mail carriers brought the only news from Peary that reached this country in a year.

People generally have little idea of the tremendous amount of physical exertion that the Peary parties have expended in these channels. In one season, for example, Peary cached 10,000 pounds of provisions at fifty mile intervals along the 250 miles of the channels in spite of the terrible confusion and obstruction of the ice masses choking these narrow waterways.

Peary has never had the slightest faith in the practicability of aerial navigation in the polar regions. It is doubtful if even now, with all the wonderful progress that has been made in aeronautics, he has changed his view on this question. He has always thought it would scarcely be possible to keep a balloon afloat even for a few days in the higher latitudes, and he has often given this illustration in support of his opinion:

When he was sledging on the inland ice of Greenland, a mile and a half above sea level, he usually found that any poles that were stuck upright in the snow when he crawled into his sleeping bag would be covered with a thick layer of hoar frost on the windward side by the time he arose. Peary believed that the effect of such a coating spread over the large area of cloth in a balloon would be entirely to destroy the buoyancy of the airship. It would be interesting to have his views of the new aeroplane as a means of polar transportation.

Rudolph Barth, watchmaker and jeweler, now permanently located at 56 Kearny street.

BEST TAXICABS
BLUE PANEL CARS
PHONE MARKET 600
ROY M. PIKE, PRES.
THE TAXI COMPANY
911 Golden Gate Ave.
LUXURIOUS CHALMERS-DETROIT
30 H. P. MOTORS
"TAKE A TAXICO"

Jacques and Francine

By Henri Murger (Translated from "Vie de Boheme")

I knew Jacques, the sculptor, in the hospital, where I was myself detained by a prolonged illness. Mlle. Francine had been Jacques' sole and only sweetheart; he did not, however, die old, for he was scarcely twenty-three years of age. This love story was told to me by Jacques himself when he was No. 14 and I No. 16 of the Ward Saint-Victoire—an ugly spot in which to die.

Jacques and Francine had met in a house in the Rue de la Tour d'Auvergne, where they had both taken lodgings in the same April quarter. The artist and the young girl were a whole week before they entered into those neighborly relations into which dwellers on the same floor are almost always forced; yet, without having ever exchanged a word, they already knew one another. Francine knew that her neighbor was a poor devil of an artist, and Jacques had heard that his neighbor was a little dressmaker, who had left her family to escape the unkind treatment of her stepmother. She performed miracles of economy to make both ends meet, as it is called; and as she had never known any pleasures, she did not covet them. This is how it came about that they broke through the restraint of the partition wall. One evening in the month of April Jacques returned home worn out with fatigue, having fasted since the morning, and intensely sad with that vague sadness which has no exact cause, which comes over us anywhere, at any time—a sort of apoplexy of the heart, to which those unfortunate beings who live alone are particularly subject. Jacques, feeling stifled in his narrow cell, opened the window to breathe a little. The evening was fine, and the setting sun was displaying its melancholy enchantments on the hills of Montmarte. Jacques remained pensively at his casement, listening to the winged choir of springtime harmonies singing in the quiet of eve, and that increased his sadness. Seeing a croaking raven fly before him, he thought of the time when ravens brought bread to Elijah; and he said to himself that ravens are not so charitable now. Then, able to endure this no longer, he closed the window, drew the curtain, and, since he had no money to buy oil for his lamp, he lighted a candle of resin that he had brought back with him from an excursion to the Grande Chartreuse. Growing sadder and sadder, he filled his pipe.

"Fortunately I have still tobacco enough to hide the pistol," he muttered, and began to smoke.

My friend Jacques must have been very sad that evening to think of hiding the pistol. It was his last resource in extreme cases, and it was generally successful. This is how it was done; Jacques smoked tobacco on which he had poured a few drops of laudanum, and he smoked until the cloud of smoke from his pipe had become so thick as to hide from him all the objects in the little room, and especially a pistol that hung on the wall. It needed some ten pipes to do this. When the pistol had become quite invisible, it almost always happened that the smoke and the laudanum combined sent Jacques to sleep; and it happened just as often that his sadness left him on the threshold of his dreams.

But this evening he had used up his tobacco, the pistol was completely hidden, and still Jacques was grievously sad. This evening Mlle. Francine, on the contrary, was particularly cheerful on returning home; and there was no cause for her cheerfulness any more than for Jacques' sadness. Hers was the sort of gaiety that drops from heaven, and that God puts into good hearts. Thus Mlle. Francine was in a joyous humor, and she sang as she mounted the staircase. But just as she was about to open her door, a gust of wind from the open landing-window extinguished her light.

"Dear me, how tiresome!" exclaimed the girl: "Now I shall have to go down and up six flights of stairs again."

Then, perceiving a light beneath Jacques' door, an impulse of laziness, combined with a feeling of curiosity, suggested to her to go and beg a light of the artist. "It is a service that neighbors render one another daily," thought she, "and cannot be misconstrued." She therefore gave two little taps at Jacques' door, which he opened, a little surprised at this late visit. But hardly had she made a step into the room, when the smoke with which it was filled suffocated her; and, without being able to speak a word, she fell fainting into a chair, and let her candle and key fall to the ground. It was midnight, and every one in the house was fast asleep. Jacques did not think it advisable to call for help, for he feared to bring his neighbor into an uncomfortable situation. He therefore merely opened the window to let in a little fresh air; and when he had thrown a few drops of water into the young girl's face, he saw her open her eyes and gradually come to herself.

When, at the end of five minutes, she had entirely recovered consciousness, Francine explained her motive for having come to the artist, and apologized for what had happened.

"Now I am well again," added she, "I can return to my own room."

And he had already opened the door before she perceived that she had forgotten to light her candle, and had not the key of her room.

"Silly that I am," said she, applying her candle to the resin-taper. "I came in here to fetch a light, and I was going away without it."

But at that very moment the draught in the room, caused by the open door and window, suddenly put out the light.

"One might think it was done on purpose," said Francine. "Forgive me, sir, for all the trouble I am giving you; and be so good as to strike a light, so that I may find my key."

"Certainly, mademoiselle," answered Jacques, as he felt about for his matches.

He very soon found them; but a strange idea crossed his mind. He slipped the matches into his pocket, exclaiming,

"Alas, mademoiselle, here is a new difficulty. I have not a single match by me; I used the last when I came in."

"This is an audaciously well-planned artifice," thought he.

"Dear, dear!" exclaimed Francine. "I could easily get back to my room without a light; the room is not so large that I could lose my way in it. But I must have my key. I beg you, help me to look for it; it must be on the floor."

"Let us look, mademoiselle," said Jacques.

And there were they both in the dark hunting for the object of their search; but, as though they were both guided by the same instinct, it happened that during this search their hands, which were feeling about in the same place, met each other ten times a minute. And as they were both equally clumsy, they did not find the key.

"The moon, which is now hidden by the clouds, shines full on my room," said Jacques. "Let us wait a little; presently it may illuminate our search."

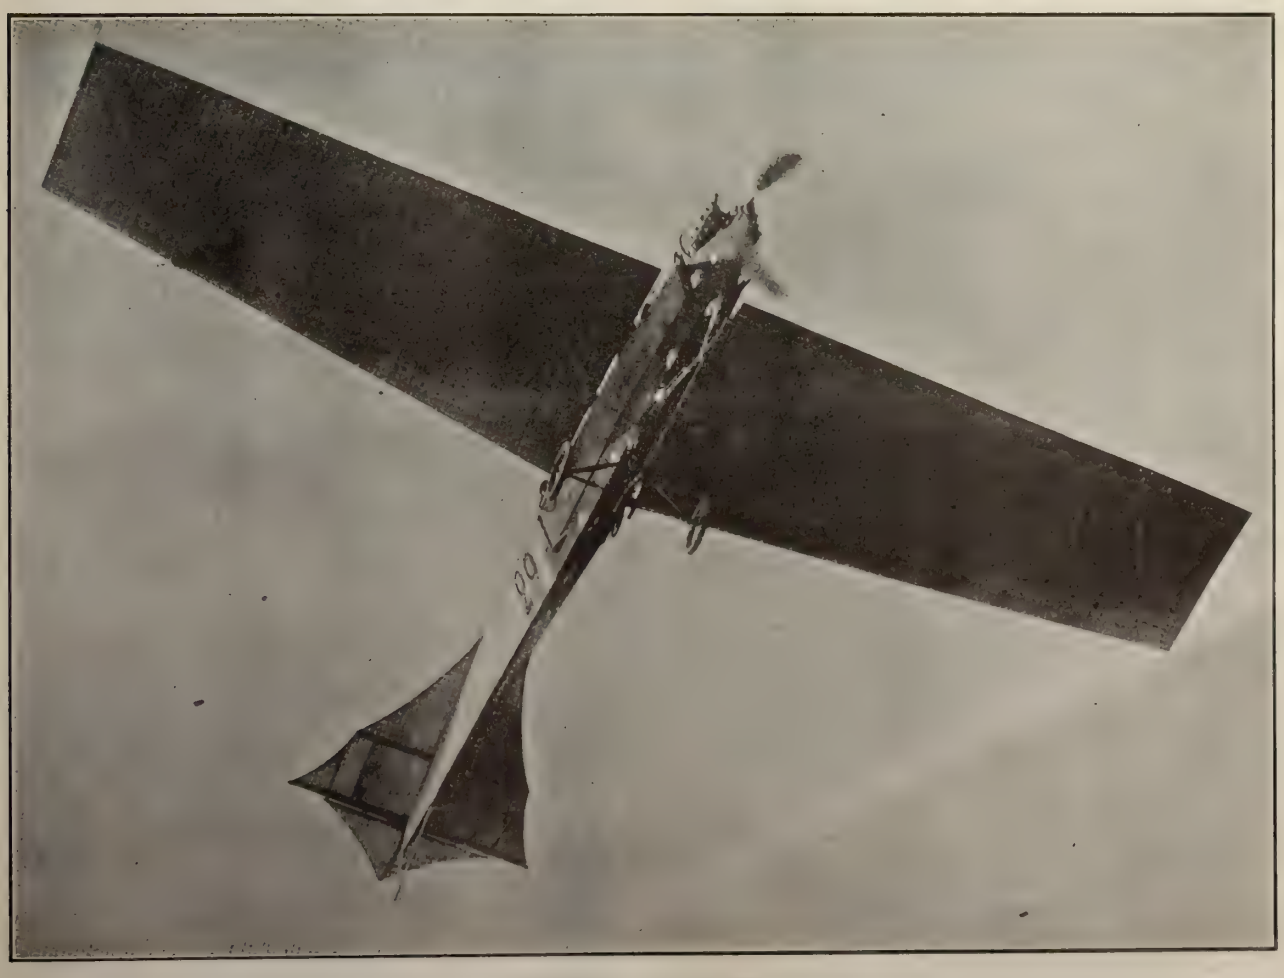
And so, while they awaited the rising of the moon, they began to chat. A chat in the midst of darkness, in a narrow chamber, on a spring night; a chat, which, at first frivolous and insignificant, gradually touches on the

(Continued on Page 34.)

INVITATIONS MONOGRAMS CRESTS
VISITING CARD PLATES ENGRAVED
ROBERTSON
UNION SQUARE · SAN FRANCISCO

The Ghost of a Chance

By Harry Cowell



Money-making no less than love-making hath its "It might have beens." With sad insistence, the ghost of the chance of a life-time haunts the twilight hours of him whose sun hath set; to vanish—let us hope—at midnight, or ever the cock crow. 'Send that we take not with us into the kingdom against entering which the rich man's chances are as a camel to a needle's eye the regretful "If." If our eye had seen and our hand grasped that main chance then flesh and blood, would not we be rich men now, and stout, and our chances of heaven exceeding slim? Those who never had the ghost of a chance to haunt them withal are apt to be purse-proud spirits; and no one, if my memory also serves me right, struts past St. Peter. If I read the difficult camel passage aright, needs must we divest ourselves not only of our riches but also of our "if only's" before we thread, so to speak, our way into the many-mansioned city where, as it were base, the here-precious metal is trodden under foot.

With not a few of us, I take it, the ghosts of chances long since lost and dead and gone are familiar, if dispiriting spirits. A gambler of my human-document acquaintance, with hair white as the ghost of a chance, a sorry wretch who bids fair to become ere long a really truly dead game sport, is wont to tell me with tears in his voice how he was given Bright Skies for a good thing, and how, his skies having for years been dark as the given horse, the hunch in the name fairly haunted him. But yet—come forth, O monstrous malefactor!—no killing was made. It is ancient history how Bright Skies rolled home unbacked at 500-1, and that in California! No killing was made, and so the ghost walks and talks incessantly. If my gambler had only taken the hunch, he would now be on easy street, "la rue d' or" of this world.

In like vein, an ex-miner, now a goldsmith, working in the precious metal found of others, never tires of telling how once, where Silence reigns white and frozen, his Chance smiled into his very face, like Maud Muller into that of the judge, and might have been his for the taking. Specifically, he had failed to recognize as platinum a modest-looking metal that sought to hide itself under the scant gold at the bottom of his pan. Though the modesty of the metal was a dead give-away, this poor judge of better-than-virgin-gold forewent his claim, and, alas! lived to tell and retell his tale of the ghost of a chance. Among goldless miners, tales of such might-have-been "hants" are as the hairs of the eyebrows they are told to raise.

Third and most charming, the broker broke—dead broke—has it how his Chance on her knees (it being leap-year) begged him to buy, for very Charity's sake, if for naught else, Telephone stock, then being sold for next to nothing. Pretty, as a picture, she looked. Sorely was he tempted. Yet in those days he didn't take any stock in looks. "If only," etc.

Enough of these insubstantial retold only-too-true tales of mine. Winter, summer, spring, or fall, any time between sundown and the witching hour, you may substantiate them for yourself; that is, if you are minded to forgather with failures and lend sympathetic ears. For the name of such obsessing spirits as are here made palpable is Legion, and there are yet Gadarene swine unchoked of the deep.

LATHAM'S "ANTOINETTE"

This illustration shows the most bird-like machine of them all; seen from below. The photograph was taken during the Gordon Bennett cup contest at Rheims.

The Spectator

The Mayor at His Best

The Bar Association held a symposium last week which would have been very dull, not to say jejune, had it not been for the presence of our loquacious friend Mayor Taylor. Fuzzy-Wuzzy was in fine fettle and well satisfied with himself, having managed to give his tangled locks and complicated whiskers a more tousled appearance than usual. The Mayor, be it known, believes that a wild and woolly appearance is indicative of the artistic temperament, and consequently he affects the coiffure rampant and the beard rampageous. At the symposium he had realized his ideal and he was a sight, or in other words a study of the disheveled. His artistic temperament was expressed in a symphony of far-flung locks and disordered whiskers. But it was not by his picturesque appearance only that the Mayor relieved the tedium of the occasion. He addressed his fellow-members of the bar and a few absent-minded judges on the subject of the courts, and he said among other things that a great deal of harm had been done through unjust criticism. He deprecated the querulousness of attorneys who are not good losers, but he seemed to be totally oblivious of the presence of the Hon. Francis J. Heney to whom the sentiment must have been somewhat distasteful. Rambling on, the Mayor said other things in which Mr. Heney doubtless acquiesced. For example, he said that the courts should abhor technicalities and that they should administer the law in strict accordance with their ideas of justice; to that end they should even legislate without seeming to do so. This sentiment provoked a general exchange of glances. Chief Justice Beatty acted as though he did not believe the testimony of his ears, but he said nothing. It must have staggered him somewhat, however, to hear so distinguished a moralist as Mayor Taylor, uttering such immoral views on the administration of justice.

Osculatory Blanche Bates

The guests who were in the cafe of the St. Francis during the noon hour one day recently, saw a most interesting incident, with two prominent stage people the central figures. One of them was John Mason, who created a sensation as the reformed gambler in "The Witching Hour" at the Valencia, and the other was our own beloved Blanche Bates. Miss Bates was the first to enter in company with three women friends. She was in the midst of her meal when Mason came in and took a seat near by. Miss Bates saw him, and with an exclamation of delight ran over and kissed him. It was not a little peck that she gave him but a good, hearty, resounding smack that caused people to sit up and take notice. Women who adore matinee idols envied the actress, while the stage-struck ones of the other sex envied Mason his privilege.

A Gambler Off as Well as On

While witnessing a performance of "The Witching Hour" I idly wondered what Mason's private views on gambling might be. I do not know yet, but I have discovered what his practices are. Mason will take a chance on anything, but he is especially devoted to that alluring dice game known as "craps," which you may see newsboys playing in obscure alleys when the police are not around. At the theatre Mason generally has a crap game going between acts or when he is not on the stage. "Fade you for a quarter" is his uusal form of challenge, but he will play for bigger stakes if the occasion offers. While at the Valencia he had a lot of interesting sessions with the stage hands, and on one occasion he became so absorbed as to fail to hear the call-boy's warning. His ears were attuned to nothing but "Come you seven—O, you little Joe—come big Phoebe—come on, you seven!" The consequence was that the stage had to wait five minutes for him; and what is worse, he lost three dollars.

Cholly Softhed—"Say, Mr. Killtime, I-er-love your daughter and want to marry her. Is there any insanity in your family?"
Mr. Killtime—"No, young man, there's not, an' moreover, there ain't er-goin' t' be!"

Their Subtle Ways

The opinion is widespread in this city that owing to their habitual untruthfulness our daily newspapers wield no influence in political campaigns. Holders of this opinion point to the case of Eugene Schmitz, who was thrice elected Mayor despite the opposition of a united press, as proof that the people are not swayed by the exhortations of the discredited dailies, but the testimony of Schmitz's experience is not conclusive. The fiddler's success was due to a multitude of potent and unusual factors which the newspapers could not overcome. The influence of our dailies is of a most subtle nature. They sway public opinion not by logical process, not by arguments and sophistries in support of the propositions which they advance, but by wholesale misrepresentation. Not editorially always, but mainly through the local columns in which they distort news to suit their purpose, do they persuade their gullible readers. The fact is that our daily newspapers are absolutely unscrupulous. Of the truth of this one may be easily convinced by reading any two of them that are on opposite sides of any question. Not in this way, however, is an adequate conception to be had of the skill that has been attained in the practice of the fine art of duplicity by the palladiums of our liberty. One must pay the closest attention to every-day occurrences, and with critical eye read all the newspapers from top to bottom, headlines and between the lines to appreciate the ingenuity with which news is colored and the skill with which it is manufactured to justify plausible editorial comment.

They're Not Worth While

Is it not a matter of some significance that not one San Francisco daily paper is in the list of notable journals prepared by the Associated Press? Each year the Associated Press directors decide which twenty-five papers in the United States are of sufficient importance to be quoted. Many things are considered. Not only is the literary quality of editorials a factor, but the record of the paper for consistency and for honesty is weighed. And in the weighing the San Francisco daily press has been found sadly lacking. In eight years there has not

MAISON DORÉE HOTEL AND RESTAURANT
151-157 ELLIS ST., ABOVE POWELL
Phone Ex. Douglas 1040, Connecting All Departments.
THE GOURMETS FAVORITE PLACE TO DINE
Also Mercantile Lunch at reasonable rates.

J.M. Jacobi & Co.
S.W. COR. MONTGOMERY & SUTTER STS
Individuality is always found in the best tailored garments
OUR FALL AND WINTER CLOTHING MERITS YOUR ATTENTION.

appeared in the list of twenty-five papers the name of a single local daily. The Portland Oregonian is among the notable ones selected, so is the Los Angeles Times. The Atchison Globe is another. Yet our own dailies, despite their oracular airs and affectation of superior virtue are not considered worthy of mention. It is not to be wondered at that they exert little influence nationally when in most cases they are like weathercocks, with no settled policy, with no well-defined purpose, with no consistency of principle and with the manner of the fishwife but without colorful verbiage.

An Example of Journalistic Prevarication

Let us take for a commonplace but instructive example of latter day journalistic method in San Francisco the ingenious efforts of the Call and Bulletin to influence action in the case of Secretary Ballinger. Just before the appearance of the President's letter in vindication of that gentleman the Call and Bulletin published what purported to be news from Washington to the effect that the evidence of Mr. Ballinger's turpitude was overwhelming and that he would have to get out of the Cabinet. Apparently, according to the Phelan-Spreckels journals, there was no hope for Ballinger. For days they were as busy as bird dogs on Ballinger's trail, hounding him as they had hounded poor Biggy, relentlessly and ferociously. Even as late as the morning of the publication of the President's letter an editorial, which got into print before the news was received from Washington, was published by the Call, setting forth that the iniquitous Ballinger was doomed. The following day, to "make good," the Call termed the vindication of Ballinger a whitewashing and declared that he would probably resign in four or five months; and the Boughten Bulletin drooled a little more venom on the secretary's head. Now, it is to be learned from the Eastern papers, that in Washington there had never been any doubt as to the wind-up of the Ballinger-Pinchot controversy. On September 11 the New York papers published a dispatch from Washington containing these words, "The prevailing opinion in Washington is that Secretary Ballinger will be sustained in every particular."

A Prophecy

Gifford Pinchot, his friends assure us, will hold on to his job. Our experience of Mr. Pinchot's friends should cause us to regard their assurances with suspicion. We have observed that with them the wish is father to the thought. However, touching the future of Mr. Pinchot, I am not inclined to doubt that he cannot be humilitated into withdrawal from the public crib. He is a steadfast reformer, so passionately devoted to the interests of the dear people that he will stay on the job and subsist on the vulgar salary thereof for an indefinite period, if not till hell freezes and the sun refrigerates. No reformer who is true to his principles ever resigns. The tenacity of your genuine, pie-wagon reformer with both feet in the trough is like unto that of a bull-dog with the juicy clavicle of his helpless adversary between his powerful jaws. Ordinarily a heavy charge of dynamite will not dislodge a friend of the pee-pul once he gets on the payroll. Conscious as I am of the almost supernatural staying qualities of the true blue reformer, nevertheless I do not look forward to one continuous performance of the Hon. Gifford Pinchot. No seer, but yet as a prophet better than a raw hand, I will venture a prediction with reference to this redoubtable exponent of conservation, and it is this—that the bureau over which he presides will be transferred ere long from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of the Interior. In the event of the fulfillment of this prophecy, be patient, and you may hear something drop.

First Beggar—Times are getting worse.
Second Beggar—How do you know?
First Beggar—They offered me work today at five different places.

The Municipal Campaign

On October 1st the municipal campaign will be opened. No aggressive work is to be done by the job chasers until that date. All of them have agreed that between October 1st and the first Tuesday in November there will be ample time for them to disseminate the pleasing assurances of their fitness and fealty. Having agreed that a longer campaign would be entirely too expensive they are husbanding their resources, but they are not neglecting strategic expedients; as witness for example the steady and copious flow of news from the publicity department of the Board of Supervisors with reference to the great public utility projects that are coming to a head. In the fertile and massive brains that burden the shoulders of Jim Booth and Dan Murphy great schemes for the conservation of the public interests are developing daily. So we are told. These gentlemen have been advised to keep busy, since there appears to be an utter lack of appreciation of the virtues of some of our milk-white reformers. It is felt that something must be done to arouse the people from their apathy and persuade them that the future of the city depends on the Murphys and Booths of the present dispensation. Singularly enough the candidates of the Labor Party are every day becoming more elated over their prospects. It is said that not since Schmitz's first campaign have the union men been so firmly united as they are now or more enthusiastic in their determination to get control of the machinery of government. On the other hand there is absolutely no enthusiasm behind the other tickets. But of course a change may take place after October 1st.

What Wheeler Would Say

"When there is a great moral issue involved," said Benjamin Ide Wheeler, apropos the decision in the Schmitz case, "technicalities should be ignored." Unfortunately the illustrious moralist of Berkeley has temporarily withdrawn his presence hence and knows nothing of the things that are being done in his absence. For him let it be said, however, that were he here, his resonant and melodious voice would be lifted in protest against the conduct of our foremost civic patriots in the matter of the proceedings to obtain a recount of the ballots cast in the name of the dear old Democratic party at the recent primary election. The paradoxical position which these zealots in the cause of civic purity have assumed without a blush, has contributed in no small de-

J. C. WILSON
BROKER
Private Wire Chicago and New York
Member New York Stock Exchange, Chicago Board of Trade and Stock and Bond Exchange, San Francisco
LOCAL AND EASTERN STOCKS AND BONDS
Main Office, Mills, Bldg. - Tel. Kearny 482.
Branch Office, Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

Onr Easy Payment Plan for Buying a Piano
¶ Many people defer purchasing a piano for months, and even years, simply because it is not convenient to spare the cash to pay for it all at once.
¶ Our easy payment plan overcomes this obstacle. Any piano we carry, even the Steinway, may be bought on easy monthly payments.
¶ Upright pianos from $250 up.
¶ Grand pianos from $650 up.
¶ "Second hand" pianos all prices.
Sherman Clay & Co.
Steinway and Other Pianos Player Pianos of All Grades Victor Talking Machines
Kearny and Sutter Streets, San Francisco Fourteenth and Clay Sts., Oakland

gree to the amusement of those of us who have been blessed with a sense of humor, but a moralist so uniformly consistent in his devotion to the moralities as the Rev. Benjamin Ide Wheeler, despite his keen appreciation of everything that appeals to the sense of the ridiculous, would never permit his fancy to chuckle at what caused his noble heart to ache. What will the good Dr. Wheeler say when he hears that the noisiest of all incarnations of civic reform, the lustiest hero in the strife that we have been waging for political purity, erected a barrier of technicalities in the path of citizens who were engaged in the investigation of frauds against the ballot? It is not difficult to conjecture. Dr. Wheeler will say that as there can be conceived no crime more heinous under our form of government than that which has for its object the baffling of the will of the people, it must be regarded as outrageous for officers of the courts of the State to shield the perpetrators of such a crime.

Hearst's Latest Flop

The Hon. William R. Hearst, as everybody knows, is not of the same temperament as the Rev. Benjamin Ide Wheeler and therefore nobody is astonished at the great journalist's attitude toward the moral issue in the Heney-Fickert contest. With Dr. Wheeler it is a case of either "be what thou seemest or be what thou art." Mr. Hearst believes that consistency is the bugbear of little minds, and acting upon his convictions he is as variable as the winds and always alert to trim his sails to catch the propitious breeze. Dr. Wheeler is of the opinion that without consistency there is no moral strength; Mr. Hearst is of the opinion that consistency is fatal to opportunity, in this respect and in none other approximating a resemblance to Caesar. In New York a few years ago Mr. Hearst was howling his head off for a recount and vituperating Mayor McClellan, pouring column after column of characteristic abuse and venom on that official for availing himself of technicalities to prevent a recount of ballots which were alleged to have been subjected to fraudulent manipulation. Mr. Hearst declared that in the history of American politics there had occurred nothing quite so infamous as the acceptance of public office in the circumstances attending the induction of the man whose election he had challenged. Now it is apparent that Mr. Hearst has modified his views with respect to such matters. Being eager to prove that he is not opposed to the graft prosecution he has no comments to make on Heney's emulation of McClellan's example. To vindicate his friendship for the little band of fanatics who are intolerant of the truth, he freely lies for them. For example, in the Examiner of Saturday last appeared the headline "Fickert's Attorney Embarrasses Client." In the article of which this was the caption there was nothing to corroborate the statement that Fickert had been embarrassed. One of Fickert's attorneys had taken occasion to observe during his argument in the suit for a recount that if the recount could not be had his client might be defeated at the coming election. There was nothing indiscreet in this observation. If Fickert did not believe that the recount was of vital importance to him he would not have asked for it. He knows that if the election officers can be assured that it is not hazardous to commit frauds in behalf of Heney there is danger of his being counted out in November. But the Examiner reporter, to supply justification for the headline threw in this gratuitous statement: "Fickert appeared a trifle disturbed over this unlooked for admission on the part of his legal adviser." This was as sinister a piece of yellow journalism as was ever perpetrated by the Boughten Bulletin.

Chronology of the Heney Campaign

The argument of the Calhoun case, a speech of several hours duration, in which he launched his candidacy at the expense of the State, comparing himself to Jesus Christ, George Washington and Abraham Lincoln, not himself suffering by the comparison, but not reflecting upon the characters of the others more than was necessary for his purpose.

"The Stamp Act" of the Good Government League and of the Heney Club, repudiated and contemned by every decent citizen of San Francisco and the Call, but not, of course, repudiated by Mr. Heney.

A judicial opinion upon the Primary Law delivered by Heney from Seattle, to the effect that under the law he could not take the nomination of any party, and therefore would run for district attorney as an independent candidate.

His later surprising and gratifying discovery that he had been "counted in" to the Democratic nomination.

His prompt reversal of his Seattle judicial opinion and the conclusion that he would keep the Democratic nomination if he could hold it.

His refusal to join with Mr. Fickert in a friendly count of the ballots to determine which of the two was justly and honestly entitled to the Democratic nomination. When forced into court he resorted to every conceivable technicality to prevent a recount of the ballots, and despite his slogan of equality before the law determined to hold a nomination which nine voters out of ten in San Francisco believe was stolen for him. (In this connection note that the Bulletin the day after election conceded that Fickert had received the Democratic nomination.) And the campaign is not as yet fairly opened.

"How much do I owe you?"

"Well, let me see—well—I knew your father, so we'll call it fifty dollars."

"Gosh I'm glad you didn't know any of the other members of the family.

Benjamin's Nephew

Since the death of E. H. Harriman it has been remarked by more than one newspaper that the three or four important men in his entourage, upon which he had depended for practical railroad road work, were first brought to the front by Colis P. Huntington by whom they had been "discovered." While this is true it may be doubted whether Huntington really appreciated the ability of all the men referred to, for it is tradition in railroad circles that when death overtook him he was on the point of shelving Julius Kruttschnitt who is now regarded as one of the ablest railroad men in the country. It is not generally known, by the way, that Mr. Kruttschnitt is a nephew of the famous Judah P. Benjamin, once a United States Senator from Louisiana, afterward a member of Jefferson Davis's Cabinet, still later a Queen's counsel in London and for many years easily in the front rank of British barristers. Judah P. Benjamin was a Jew, a man of extraordinary brilliancy and power, noted for his eloquence and for the remarkable scope of his mentality. It is related of him that when he was campaigning for United States Senator in Louisiana a speaker at a big political meeting assailed him on the score of his religion and race. Benjamin

EUGENE KORN
THE HATTER
15 KEARNY ST. AT GEARY
"MILLER" N. Y. AGENCY JOHN B. STETSON AGENCY

TAXICABS
(Genuine RENAULT Cars)
PACIFIC TAXIMETER CAB COMPANY
Solicits your patronage of its equipment of imported Renault Taxicabs and will show its appreciation by prompt and reliable service.
TELEPHONE
FRANKLIN 4848
Private Exchange connecting all Departments
MAIN STATION AND GENERAL OFFICES, 1355-1363 BUSH STREET
FAY C. BEAL, General Manager.

was in the audience. When the speaker finished his remarks Benjamin advanced to the platform and in that resonant, melodious voice for which he became famous, addressed the audience in these words: "The honorable gentleman has denounced me as a Jew. In truth I am one. I am proud of my race. When my ancestors were worshiping the true God and fighting under the banners of the Maccabees, the honorable gentleman's forbears were feeding swine upon the Scandinavian hills, and, history tells us, were little better than the hogs they fed."

THREE IN FLIGHT

Above is shown three machines in the air at once at Rheims—those of Latham, Lefebvre and E. Bunau-Varilla.

A Reticent Aviator

A London correspondent who was in Rheims during aviation week sends me some interesting personal notes regarding two of the great aeroplane pilots. Hubert Latham, he says, is the most interesting of the lot. He strikes one as a mere boy with the head of a Solomon upon his slim shoulders, and as being borne down with the potentiality of his mission in life. He seldom smiles,

PASSING THE POST

From this post the signal cones were hung. The machine in flight is Latham's.

and when he does it is a half-supercilious, half-patronizing smile that has been dragged from him by some remark or other which does not interest him. When talking he has a habit of standing away from you and balancing himself upon his toes, of drooping his head, and staring vacantly at the ground, all the time toying with the inevitable cigarette that burns idly away in its holder. Occasionally he will straighten himself up and look you full in the face with his large, impressive brown eyes, or stare blankly at the sky above. He has a remarkably memory and great powers of concentration, and no statesman ever weighed his words and measured his sentences with greater deliberation or uttered them with a more chilling precision. His many man-of-destiny characteristics made him an interesting study to the newspaper correspondents at Sangatte, some of whom were at a loss to make out whether his ultra-phlegmatic manner was real, exaggerated, or entirely assumed. He objects to anything flippant or humorous. You must be, as he is, solemn and grave, and if your temperament is not this way inclined then there is something in Latham's tragic expression and voice that makes you so unconsciously. He has the great virtue of being always polite and ready to answer questions, which is more than can be said for his great rival Bleriot. Latham has wonderful pluck, but likes to have everything done for him. He is a pilot pure and simple, and as such he is not only successful, but extremely popular.

A HEAVY LOAD

Farman carrying two passengers on his biplane at Rheims.

Farman Different

Qute a different type of man, my correspondent says, is Henry Farman, who, dressed in his inevitable Norfolk jacket and knickers, skips about briskly, not only superintending but doing much of the work himself. Typically English in appearance, he speaks his native tongue with a fearful French accent. With his well-trimmed beard, fresh complexion, large luminous eyes, and fine set of teeth, he is a distinctly handsome man. Practical to a degree, he does not waste a moment. He speaks quickly and to the point. His manners have not altered a bit since he has become a flying-man. He is too much oc-

DR. MATILDA A. FEELEY

Is now located at 1700 Sutter Street. Diseases of women and children. Hours 2 to 4 and 7 to 8 p. m.

VINTINE

MADE BY BROOKS

A tonic for men and women---will cure chronic constipation

Your druggist will get it—price, $1.00

cupied with the business of flying to put on airs, and his ambition is not so much for his own personal achievement as that of his pupils. He has designed a machine that needs no expert handling, with the result that Sommer was able, after very little practice, to break all existing records for endurance. Cockburn, too, who is quite a novice, has made many successful flights on a Farman bi-plane, his longest being of fifty-five minutes' duration.

Tributes to Pardee

One George C. Pardee who, it may be recalled, was, for our sins, one time Governor of the State of California, has at last succeeded in chiseling his name and character indelibly upon the wall of fame. In President Taft's letter disposing of the Ballinger-Pinchot controversy Pardee has achieved the distinction of being mentioned by name and condemned as a liar. This, however, is not the first instance—though the first recorded—in which he has received merited consideration at the hands of our President. It was upon a somewhat similar occasion that Mr. Taft inquired, "Who is this man Pardee, and why is he always so anxious to take off the dirty rag and show his sore toe?"

Police Sergeant—"Can you give me a description of the person who ran over you?"

"Oi can that. He had on a fur coat an' an autymobile cap an' goggles."

"De Profundis" Enlarged

A new edition of "De Profundis," the beautiful work written by Oscar Wilde while he was imprisoned in Reading Gaol, has just been brought out. This new edition contains 80 pages of matter not included in the original edition. The bulk of this new matter is not part of the prison manuscript but consists of four letters addressed by Wilde from Reading Gaol to his faithful friend and literary executor, Robert Ross; and two communications on English prison life sent to the London Daily Chronicle. It is rather hard that admirers of Wilde who bought the first edition of "De Profundis" and still keep it on their shelves, should now be compelled to buy a new edition in order to acquire this additional material, but all book lovers know that publishers frequently make that sort of thing necessary and those who invest in the little modest-priced volume will no doubt console themselves by the thought that they are not nearly as badly off as those who, having just about finished paying for their Encyclopedia Britannica, are confronted with the publisher's announcement of a new and revised edition.

A Startling Comparison

The enlarged "De Profundis" starts with a bit of effrontery which most readers will find more characteristic of the Wilde in "The Green Carnation" than of the Wilde chastened by two years of prison. Here is the opening paragraph: "My place would be between Gilles de Retz and the Marquis de Sade. I dare say it is best so. I have no desire to complain. One of the many lessons that one learns in prison is, that things are what they are and will be what they will be. Nor have I any doubt that the leper of medievalism and the author of Justine will prove better company than Sanford and Merton." To the man who, more than all others, was responsible for Wilde's incarceration, he makes this direct reference: "What seemed to the world and to myself my future I lost when I allowed myself to be taunted into taking action against Queensbury; I daresay I lost it really long before that. What lies before me is my past. I have got to make myself look on that with different eyes, to make God look on it with different eyes."

Wilde's Prison Letters

The most interesting part of the new edition consists of the letters which Wilde wrote to Ross from prison. They show him in various moods, sometimes gay enough for flashes of the old-time wit and sometimes plunged in gloom. "Do not think that I would blame any one for my vices," he says. "My friends had as little to do with them as I had with theirs. Nature was in this matter a step-mother to all of us. I blame them for not appreciating the man they ruined. As long as my table was red with wine and roses, what did they care? My genius, my life as an artist, my work, and the quiet I needed for it, were nothing to them. I admit I lost my head. I was bewildered, incapable of judgment. I made the one fatal step. And now I sit here on a bench in a prison cell. In all tragedies there is a grotesque element. You know the grotesque element in mine. Do not think I do not blame myself. I curse myself night and day for my folly in allowing something to dominate my life. If there was an echo in these walls, it would cry 'Fool' for ever. I am utterly ashamed of my friendships. For by their friendships men can be judged. It is a test of every man."

Guarding a Manuscript

Wilde tried to send the manuscript of "De Profundis" to Ross from prison, but this was against the regulations. Before he learned that it could not be transmitted, he wrote a letter with directions for copying the manuscript. "I think," he wrote, "that the thing to do is to be thoroughly modern and to have it typewritten. Of course the MS. should not pass out of your control, but could you not get Mrs. Marshall to send down one of her typewriting girls—women are the most reliable as they have no memory for the important—to Hornton street or Phillimore Gardens, to do it under your supervision? I assure you that the typewriting machine, when played with expression, is not more annoying than

GIERSBERGER WINES
The wine of merit and quality all around the world. Compare it with the best wines and we are satisfied.
THEO. GIER WINE COMPANY
Phone Oakland 2510 1225-1227 BROADWAY, OAKLAND

THE NEXT TIME YOU NEED MILK
In Cooking, Try
BORDEN'S
PIONEER
BRAND EVAPORATED
MILK
(Unsweetened)

1 part Pioneer Milk to 3 parts water, or any degree of richness you may desire. The result will please you.
Convenience, Economy and Richness
Are good reasons for trying it
BORDEN'S CONDENSED MILK CO.
Est. 1857 "Leaders of Quality" New York

the piano when played by a sister or near relation. Indeed many among those most devoted to domesticity prefer it. If the copy is done at Hornton street the lady typewriter might be fed through a lattice in the door, like the Cardinals when they elect a Pope; till she comes out on the balcony and can say to the world: 'Habet Mundus Epistolam,' for indeed it is an Encyclical letter, and as the Bulls of the Holy Father are named from their opening words, it may be spoken of as the 'Epistola: in Carcere et Vinculis.'"

Criticism of Stevenson

Another letter has considerable book chat of which this about R. L. S. will rouse that novelist's worshipers to protest: "Stevenson's letters are most disappointing. I see that romantic surroundings are the worst surroundings possible for a romantic writer. In Gower street Stevenson could have written a new Trois Mousquetaires. In Samoa he wrote letters to the Times about Germans. I see also the traces of a terrible strain to lead a natural life. To chop wood with any advantage to oneself or profit to others, one should not be able to describe the process. In point of fact the natural life is the unconscious life. Stevenson merely extended the sphere of the artificial by taking to digging. The whole dreary book has given me a lesson. If I spend my future life reading Baudelaire in a cafe I shall be leading a more natural life than if I take to hedger's work or plant cacao in mudswamps."

JOAQUIN MILLER

The poet planting a sequoia at Montara. Photo by Henry J. Reef, editor of the Montara News.

"The man you had playing Hamlet's ghost did not suggest the supernatural."

"No," answered Mr. Stormington Barnes frankly. "He suggested the natural super."

The Alaskan Coal Lands

As a result of the Ballinger-Pinchot controversy public attention has been called to the vast coal fields of Alaska which were discovered a few years ago, but concerning which the public is but scantily informed. The value of these lands is beyond question enormous, for the coal which they contain is of excellent quality, and in time they will prove a great boon to the industrial interests of this coast. In this connection it is interesting to recall that when Secretary Seward began negotiations with Russia for the purchase of Alaska he was severely criticised by statesmen at Washington who regarded Alaska as absolutely worthless territory. It was not until the discovery of gold in Alaska that we began to realize how good a bargain Seward had made when he bought six hundred thousand square miles for $7,200,000. A year ago it was estimated that Alaska had already contributed $12,000,000 to the national treasury and had yielded in gold, fur and fish upward of $300,000,000 to individual enterprise. On the heels of the gold seekers, the hunters and fishermen, came the farmer, and now it is estimated that Alaska will produce crops of more value than all the gold taken from its sands and gorges. Not long ago the Secretary of Agriculture estimated that its land suitable for cultivation exceeds the combined areas of New England, New York and Pennsylvania. Alaska is rich in copper, tin, marble, gypsum, iron and petroleum, but it is the rich coal deposits that are now attracting the most attention. In coal Alaska contains workable deposits extending over 1,238 square miles.

Coal Land Legislation

Alaska is growing with wonderful rapidity. Railroads are being steadily built to connect the chief sea-ports with mineral regions and to open the great river valleys to settlement. The Government is now selling coal land in Alaska at a flat rate of $10 an acre, or $2,560 for a 2,560 acre tract, and it is estimated that a tract carries ten million tons of coal marketable at $3 to $4 a ton in competition with dutiable coal from the Vancouver Island mines. It is the purpose of the Government to encourage the development of the Alaskan coal deposits while prohibiting a monopoly of the industry, and to that end Congress legislated in May, 1908. Prior to that time individual holdings of coal lands in Alaska was limited to 160 acres. Because of repeated assertions that under the conditions existing in Alaska it was impossible to operate successfully areas so small, a bill was passed by the Congress providing for a consolidation of entries. The law of May, 1908, was entitled "An act to encourage the development of coal deposits in the Territory of Alaska." It provided for the consolidation of locations made in good faith prior to November 12, 1906,

TOWNSEND'S
CALIFORNIA GLACÈ FRUITS AND CANDIES
27 Years in Palace Hotel Building
All Orders Given Prompt Attention at
46 MARKET STREET
Phone Douglas 4814
Factory, 117 SAN JOSE AVE. Phone Mission 378
On Sept. 15th we open a new store at 755 Market St.
Also at News Stands of the Fairmont and St. Francis Hotels

ASK FOR
BLACK AND WHITE
SCOTCH WHISKEY
IT IS THE BEST
NONE BOTTLED IN AMERICA

or in accordance with the terms of a circular of instruction issued by the Secretary of the Interior and dated May 16, 1907. Provision was made for the consolidation of claims or locations or purchases into a single holding "not to exceed 2,560 acres of contiguous lands," provided that "no corporation shall be permitted to consolidate its claims under this act unless 75 per cent of its stock shall be held by persons qualified to enter coal lands in Alaska." Assuming the existence of a four foot vein of coal on a 2,560 acre tract, it is estimated that the yield would be 10,000,000 tons, a quantity regarded as sufficient to justify operation.

Forestalling Monopoly

Section III of the law declares:

That if any of the lands or deposits purchased under the provisions of this act shall be owned, leased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever so that they form part of, or in any way effect any combination, or are in any wise controlled by any combination in the form of an unlawful trust, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, or of any holding of such lands by any individual, partnership, association, corporation, mortgage, stock ownership, or control in excess of 2,560 acres in the district of Alaska, the title thereto shall be forfeited to the United States by proceedings instituted by the Attorney-General of the United States in the courts for that purpose.

This appears to be an earnest effort to prevent any monopoly or effective control of the Alaskan coal deposits. The success of the effort remains for determination. The areas of special importance are not yet available for commercial purposes because of the present lack of transportation facilities. Work on railways running into the coal districts has been suspended, and it is fair to assume that the cause of suspension was the uncertainty of titles in the coal districts. Within the last few days this matter has been brought to public attention. The law of 1908 provides for the consolidation of their locations by original entrymen, their heirs or assigns. The charge is made that some and perhaps many of the entries were illegally made, that they were "dummy" entries, or that they were made under some arrangement for subsequent transfer to an association or corporation. Titles are of course defective if the original entries were not made in conformity with the law, and Attorney-General Wickersham has expressed his opinion that entries would be illegal if made under any agreement or contract on the part of entrymen which would have "vested in one association or corporation the title to the lands embraced in several entries."

An Apology for a Review

Once in a great while—which ours is not—open confession is good for a body, especially such a busy body as is your critic. Criticism as it ought to be no joke. As it is, how huge a joke—its hugeness commensurate with the brobdingnagian literary output of the day, the machine-made product of lilliputian men of letters mostly women. Truth is the sine qua non of serious criticism. Of a truth I have not read our queen-elect's kissful romance—I mean, bit of lie-ism. Blissfully ignorant of what she is writing about as, peradventure, her blessed majesty's self, I gladly forego the folly of wisdom. Not having read her maiden effort, I am consequently in a proper state of mind, wherein to give a cool and seriously critical opinion of its merits and demerits, without being necessarily biased against it. Most of those who did read it having swooned away must needs damn it with faint praise. Unread, I can conscientiously damn it with fulsome, and I will. As a matter of fact, I am quite as well equipped to sit in judgment upon it or sit upon it in judgment, as is your average reviewer, who never dreams of viewing a book to the end of reviewing it. Why should he brain-fag himself when the publisher attends to his (the reviewer's) business in good shape, never failing to send along with the work to be reviewed an interest-provoking, a pocket-loosening, encomium thereon writ in impeccable English? Her majesty, I'm told, works Dan, that darling little limb o' Satan, for all he's worth; and if he isn't the busibody, who is, pray? Pen-driven to it, what he won't do isn't worth doing.

> Troth, it's Cupid, the rogue,
> Full o' blarney and brogue,
> That'll vouch for the vogue
> O' Vergilia Bogue!

So, at least, I'm prosaically informed on the very best of authority, namely, that of female human nature, which ever gladly parts with her male-earned money for kissful bits o' lie-ism writ lovely of queen-elects of beauty.

A Particular Store for Particular People

PHONE FRANKLIN 2810

BEECH-NUT BACON

Beech-Nut Bacon appeals to the housewife, because it can be used in such a variety of ways. The "Beech-Nut Brand" Bacon has a distinctive flavor, just the right proportion of fat and lean meat, and is sliced thinner and more uniform than you can do it by hand. When next ordering groceries include a jar.

35c each...$3.75 doz...3 for $1.00.

L. D. McLEAN CO.

IMPORTERS AND GROCERS

1158-1168 Sutter St. San Francisco

Unmatched Transcontinental Comfort

Santa Fe

3 trains a day

Chicago---Kansas City and East

Overland Express

Leave San Francisco 7:15 a. m. Oakland 7:40 a. m.

Eastern Express

Leave San Francisco and Oakland 10:00 p. m.

California Limited

Leave San Francisco and Oakland 8:00 p. m.

The only line under one management San Francisco to Chicago, thus insuring uniformtty of service.
Our employes are courteous.
Our equipment built by Pullman.
Meal service managed by Fred Harvey.
Our scenery not alone interesting but unique.
Stopovers permitted at Grand Canyon and Petrified Forest.
Would be glad to arrange your trip.

JAS. B. DUFFY, 673 Market St., San Francisco

T. LOVE, Market St. Ferry Depot, San Francisco J. J. WARNER, 1112 Broadway, Oakland

When Hawaii Was Surveyed

For the first time correct maps of the Hawaiian Islands have been printed and published. The first surveys of these islands, by the way, were made in 1871 under royal decree. The survey department of the Kingdom was somewhat imperfectly equipped. It consisted of two men, two boys and a few laborers, and the work they did was slipshod and often ludicrous. The head of the department, an old surveyor in the United States, objected to the Hawaiian jungle and never entered it except along well beaten paths if he could help it. He was accustomed to send an assistant ahead out of sight and almost out of hearing and then the fellow who had beaten his way through the vegetation would yell at the top of his voice. The surveyor would forthwith sight his instrument at that yell. The chainmen would then measure the distance in a go as you please fashion; they took the easiest route they could find to the spot where the advance guard still stood emitting supplementary yelps for their guidance. This is one illustration of the pioneer methods of island surveying, and the results of course were very crude and imperfect. The disputes over property lines were endless, and confusion was worse confounded in many of the regions which had been surveyed when our flag was raised over the islands.

THE DEVIL'S SLIDE, NEW CHUTES.

The Absorption of Public Land

As soon as the authority of the United States was established it set about bringing order out of the chaos. The primary purpose was to ascertain the exact areas and location of the Government lands, but the public need was so great that the work was extended to include the making of all maps and all the exact measurements and records needed for public purposes. The general result is now produced on nine fine maps in colors, showing each of the nine counties of the territory and appended to the Governor's annual report recently printed in Washington. To make these maps the islands were covered by a triangulation scheme after the method of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. The coast lines were surveyed and maps were made of all the islands excepting a few rocks and islets that are of no practical importance. The land embraced in the public domain is about 1,700,000 acres, most of which is not adapted for tillage. The cream of the island areas and the easily accessible public lands became private property long ago. A good deal of it went to pay the poker debts of King Kalakan, and according to tradition much of it was absorbed in this way by a very distinguished Californian now deceased.

Good Roads Meeting

There will be a Good Roads conference held at the Montara Inn today (Saturday), between one and three o'clock, to promote a million dollar bond issue for good roads in San Mateo County. This conference is especially called for the purpose of considering the feasibility of constructing a boulevard from the Golden Gate Park to Pescadero along the ocean shore.

Opens Studio

Ruth Childs Carver, the pianist, who was one of Hugo Mansfeldt's most distinguished pupils, has opened a studio at 1657 Mason street for teaching and professional engagements.

The Citizens' Alliance of San Francisco, 920 Merchants Exchange Building, calls the attention of the public to their Free Labor Bureaus located at No. 170 Turk St., San Francisco, and 804 Broadway, Oakland. All classes of male help furnished absolutely free both to employer and employee.

ST. XAVIER APARTMENTS

2325 FILLMORE ST., NEAR PACIFIC AVE.

Most attractive and ideal location. Many new improvements made since the opening of this handsome building. Six and seven rooms furnished or unfurnished for housekeeping. Knickerbocker Grill in same block.

MRS. WAINWRIGHT, Housekeeper, on premises.

TECHAU TAVERN

Cor. Eddy and Powell Sts.

CAFE AND LADIES' GRILL

Rigo and his Gypsy Orchestra

Concerts Daily during Shopping Hours

From 3:30 to 5:00 p. m. and from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m.; 10:30 to 1:00 a. m.

Private Dining Booths and Banquet Rooms on Mezzanine Floor. Entrance—No. 4 Eddy Street

Under the management of A. C. MORRISSON

TAIT-ZINKAND CAFE

168-178 O'FARRELL STREET

(Opposite the Orpheum)

OPEN FOR BUSINESS

We are prepared to cater for outside Parties, Weddings, Breakfasts, Balls, Luncheons, etc., in the city and bay counties. Menus and prices submitted on request.

TEL. DOUGLAS 560 JOHN TAIT, Manager

HOTEL NORMANDIE

SUTTER AND GOUGH STREETS

A comfortable, high order, uptown hotel, now under the management of

THOS. H. SHEDDEN, Formerly Manager of St. Dunstan's.

THE FORUM CAFE

OAKLAND

Now under the management of

MR. GUSTAV MANN

LEVY'S CAFE

Third and Main Streets, Los Angeles, Cal.

Much the Best Place to Get Fine Things to Eat and Listen to Choice Music at Popular Prices.

The Financial Outlook

By R. E. Mulcahy.

Wheat: Under the leadership of the Armour house wheat was given a lift in the past week and the September option held to a level that permitted the bull element in September to step out with a profit. Foreign influences were of a long drawn out character. The Russia estimate with a decrease of 28,000,000 over last year when 75,000,000 was expected served as the base of operations. High prices for cash wheat at all markets helped to sustain prices. Today the market showed good signs of the deferred break. The cash premium at Minneapolis was wiped out on heavy offerings, and the September option sold one-eighth under December. Duluth has been loading for shipment, being short wheat sold on the bulge. Northwest receipts have been running slightly under last year, when prices were four cents higher. The impressive feature of the cash market has been the high price of No. 2 red—ranging from 112 to 115 at Kansas City and from 105 to 107 at Chicago. This grade of wheat has been in demand by millers ever since the pure food law has shut off bleaching of flour. There has been no premium on hard wheat delivered under the Chicago contract. No change in the domestic situation has developed. Threshing returns points to 55,000,000 excess of spring wheat over a year ago. Canada will have around 120,000,000 more rather than less. Winnipeg prices are 5 cents lower than Chicago for export, with preference for the Canadian grade. This will shut off shipments of all bad flour and wheat sold earlier at low prices. The European situation is clearing. Italy's official estimate today is at last year's small crop of 146,000,000; thus this country will require the same amount of wheat from export channels. Germany will require possibly 30,000,000 more. Thus far Europe has received 26,000,000 more than last year, so the gap is practically filled. Exports from the United States officially announced for July and August are 11,300,000 bushels under the same period of a year ago. There is plenty of wheat for Europe, and that country will not be an aggressive bidder unless Argentine falls down more than expected on her crop which will not be known before December. The real problem is when American invisible stocks will be restored. Mills are runnng with less than usual stocks. Winter seeding is still problematic. West of the Mississippi acreage may be decreased. The East is liable to an increase. The immediate outlook is for further decline, but not a drastic one until the visible supply gains rapidly.

Cotton: Speculation in cotton for future delivery has been more active at rising prices. The advance was due largely to very noticeable strength and activity at Liverpool and to continued bad crop reports. Certain outside interests in two days got 55,000 bales. Spot sales at Liverpool have ranged from 10,000 to 15,000 bales a day and Manchester, Calcutta, Bombay and China have sent reports of increasing trade. A wage dispute at Fall River has been settled. A private crop report on Thursday put the condition as low as 61 per cent. A Galveston newspaper asserts that the condition in Texas is 40 per cent worse than a year ago and that in Oklahoma it is 30 per cent worse. The expectation is that the next Government report will be bullish. The exports have latterly increased. On Thursday they exceeded 68,000 bales. The comment is made that efforts to depress prices seriously during the last sixty days have proved futile. The movement of the crop has been liberal even exceeding that of last year, but prices have shown unexpected steadiness. Possibly this is due to the creation of a very large short interest through the very general expectation that prices would sag under the weight of the first rush of receipts. It is surmised that too many people were looking for the same thing and that declines are checked partly by the covering of a widely scattered and somewhat unwieldly short interest. New Orleans and Memphis operators have bought freely at times and rightly or wrongly there is a general prevalent notion that very prominent interests not identified with a certain branch of the grocery business have bought heavily within the last few days through New Orleans representatives. New York houses and the West have purchased from time to time. The pool has bought freely for private account. Europeans generally seem to have been more impressed with the last government putting the condition at 63.7 than many people were on this side of the water. At any rate European spinners have for some weeks past shown more or less nervousness, while American spinners appear to have adhered to the policy of buying but sparingly, as there is a disparity between the price of the raw material and the manufactured product which tends to make the domestic mills cautious. Meantime the trade is slowly improving in cotton goods and thus far the market has taken liberal receipts of raw cotton without yielding much. In fact, at times spot prices have shown noteworthy strength both at home and abroad. Advocates of lower prices, however, insist that September and October receipts are likely to be large and can hardly fail to have at least a temporary effect on prices.

Stocks: Strength in Wall Street securities during the past week was well distributed. Railroads and industrials all had their innings. Steel Common was remarkably strong. Many tips were out that the Morgan crowd would put it to 100 which seem well founded. The railroad list was headed in the advance by Reading and St. Paul. No one knows why Reading, a four per cent stock, should be selling at 172, but it is, and that is sufficient reason. St. Paul was taken hold of and ad-

We Own and Offer
INVESTMENT BONDS
Of Unquestionable Security, Netting 4¼ to 6¼ per cent
Requests for Information Gladly and Promptly Attended to
SUTRO & COMPANY
412 MONTGOMERY ST., SAN FRANCISCO
List on Request

Telephone DOUGLAS 2487
R. E. MULCAHY, Manager
E. F. HUTTON & CO.
THE PIONEER HOUSE
BROKERS
Members
New York Stock Exchange
New York Cotton Exchange
New York Coffee Exchange
Chicago Board of Trade
490 CALIFORNIA STREET, SAN FRANCISCO
ST. FRANCIS HOTEL
Two Private Wires to Chicago and New York
Washington, D. C., 1301 F Street
Los Angeles, 112 W. Third Street
New York, 31-33-35 New Street

vanced sharply without any apparent cause except that William Rockefeller had been elected a director of the Union Pacific. His close relation to the St. Paul property would help that road a great deal. The general market acts healthy and will probably do better, but a good reaction is overdue. The one thing to be closely watched at present is monetary conditions. On any indications of tightness in interest rates it will be a sign to take profits and await a good decline. There is again talk of Southern Pacific Common going on a 7 per cent basis. It is hardly likely unless Mr. Harriman's wishes are not adhered to. The Harriman lines will have to expend millions before they are perfect. Atchison Common is one of the cheapest and safest stocks in the railroad list. On any break buy Hide and Leather Preferred.

Local Securities: One of the best advertisements that California has had in recent years is the figure that her securities have cut during the past few months in the investment centers of this country and Europe. Last week was a particularly active one for local securities. An almost deluge of buying orders from London, Paris, Berlin and New York were rushed into the local market and some enormous advances were the result. The chief interest centered in the stocks of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company and those of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company. The fact that the Gas Company has nearly two and a quarter millions of dollars which is applicable to dividends on its $18,750,000 of common stock or a percentage of 12.31, together with the prospects for increased earnings in time to come, is no doubt the bait that has caused the avalanche of buying orders on this particular stock. A clean rise of $15 per share from $46 to $61 best tells the tale. The preferred stock, which is on a 6 per cent cumulative basis, advanced from $82.50 to 93. The announcement that the capital stock and the 5 per cent gold bonds of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company would be listed on the New York Stock Exchange on or before October 1st, in conjunction with the generally improving conditions and earnings of the telephone company has been responsible for the week's rise in the common stock from $38 to $49.50 and in the preferred from $92 to 95.50. Alaska Packers Association stock has been another favorite among outside investors. The knowledge that the association is at present on a very satisfactory footing with an ultra-conservative management is certainly responsible for the buying movement. This stock has risen from around $70 to $78. The balance of the California security list has been generally firm. I feel that for the ensuing week purchases of Pacific Telephone preferred and Alaska Packers will prove very attractive and, on any setback, I think both the common and preferred stocks of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company can be bought. For the time being I think that telephone common has advanced far enough.

Limelight Notes

Gottlob and Marx will have all of Charles Frohman's stars to offer during the season as tours have been mapped out for them on the Pacific Coast. Maude Adams in "What Every Woman Knows"; John Drew in "Inconstant George"; Ethel Barrymore in Sir A. W. Pinero's, "Mid-Channel"; Wm. H. Crane in "Father and the Boys"; Hattie Williams in "Detective Sparks"; William Collier in "The Patriot"; Otis Skinner in "Your Humble Servant"; Marie Doro in a new play to be announced later; Kyrle Bellew in "The Builder of Bridges"; Francis Wilson in his own comedy, "The Bachelor's Baby"; Sir Charles Wyndham and Mary Moore in "The Mollusc."

"The Third Degree," a dramatic triumph from the pen of the author of "The Lion and The Mouse," will soon be offered at the Van Ness Theatre. The tremendous scene at the beginning of the play, from which it derives its title, is a modernization of the terrifying ordeals and tortures to which innocent victims were subjected during the infamous Spanish Inquisition.

Although Miss Billie Burke was born in America—and is proud of it—she has spent most of her life in Europe and when she came back to New York two years ago to be John Drew's leading woman in "My Wife" she was in the habit of speaking of England as "back home." Now she has bought a house at Yonkers, New York, and says she intends to make her home in this country permanently. Miss Burke opened her second season as a star in "Love Watches" at Des Moines, Iowa, on Labor Day and will be seen at the Van Ness Theatre for the two weeks beginning Monday, October 4.

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY
OF CALIFORNIA
Has removed to its new offices Corner Market, Sutter and Sansome Streets
A General Banking Business Transacted
CHAS. F. LEEGE, President B. G. TOGNAZZI, Manager

The Anglo & London Paris National Bank
Of San Francisco
Successor of The London Paris National Bank of San Francisco, The Anglo-California Bank, Limited.
Northeast Cor. Pine and Sansome Sts., San Francisco
Sig. Greenebaum, Pres.; I. Steinhart, Chairman of Finance Committee; H. Fleishhacker, V.-Pres. and Man.; Jos. Friedlander, V.-Pres.; C. F. Hunt, V.-Pres.; R. Altschul, Cashier; A. Hochstein, Asst. Cashier; F. E. Beck, Asst. Cashier.
Capital $4,000,000.00
Surplus and Undivided Profits..... 1,500,000.00
We offer our customers every facility consistent with good banking and invite new accounts.

WELLS FARGO NEVADA NATIONAL BANK
OF SAN FRANCISCO
No. 4 MONTGOMERY STREET
Capital, Surplus and Undivided Profits.....$10,895,991.18
Deposits 23,345,021.88
Cash and Sight Exchange..... 10,560,579.91
OFFICERS—Isaias W. Hellman, President; I. W. Hellman, Jr., Vice-President; F. L. Lipman, Vice-President; Frank B. King, Cashier; George Grant, Asst. Cashier; W. McGavin, Asst. Cashier; E. L. Jacobs, Asst. Cashier.
DIRECTORS—Isaias W. Hellman, Leon Sloss, C. De Guigne, Percy T. Morgan, Dudley Evans, I. W. Hellman, Jr., Wm. Haas, Wm. F. Herrin, F. W. Van Sicklen, James L. Flood, H. E. Law, J. Henry Meyer, Chas. J. Deering, and F. L. Lipman.
Customers of this Bank are offered every facility consistent with prudent banking. New accounts are invited.

Gas in the Kitchen

A gas company lays no pretension to being a philanthropic institution, and yet in struggling to develop its business, the gas industry has lightened the labor and increased the comfort of millions of women.

THE NEW YORK WORLD in the course of an editorial on "The Golden Age," said: "The kitchen maid of the present day knows more than the fine ladies of Versailles knew when the Louises were kings, and has more comforts and conveniences."

Today the kitchen without a gas range in a community where gas is obtainable is a rarity, and is deemed very antique and primitive by the marriageable generation of young women.

Nearly all women who live in cities will admit, upon reflection, that the gas cook stove is the greatest single domestic blessing that has become theirs in the last quarter of a century.

Women sufficiently fortunate know what it is to be free from the intolerable summer superheat of the coal range, and from the well-founded terror of the gasoline stove. It is also their privilege to enjoy the great economy of the gas-burning stove, its immense labor-saving advantages and its cleanness of operation.

The time was reached some years ago when gas in the kitchen came within the financial reach of every family in the city.

San Francisco Gas and Electric Company

Copyright, 1909.

Social Prattle

By TANTALUS

Mrs. Peter Martin Coming

Burlingame will not have a single opportunity for an ennuied yawn this winter, for the lissome Mrs. Peter Martin is due here about Christmas time to spend the winter with Mrs. Eleanor Martin. Now Mrs. Peter will not tolerate the society of bores at any price. She is too much saturated with the spirit of Parisian society to put up with any woodenness. She has a perfect horror of society automatons and always surrounds herself with worth-while folks. Everybody will be aching to entertain Mrs. Martin, for she is one of the queens of Newport and occasionally—not very often, but once in a

MRS. LILY COIT

From a photograph taken when Mrs. Coit was a local society belle blue moon—New York society leaders remember the hospitality that enlivened their days on this rim of the continent. Mrs. Peter, however, hasn't been any too anxious to provide an entree into Newport for any of her San Francisco friends, although any number of them have visited there. Still, there may be virtue in the adage, "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again."

Divorcon Flees Reporters

When Mrs. Fanny-Work-Burke-Roche-Batonyi-Burke-Roche discovered that she had been discovered, she fled the city at once. She had been in town several days before the newspapers were aware of the fact that the famous Newport divorcon was visiting quietly in town, although there was no attempt at disguising her name on the register of the Hotel St. Francis. She had told some of her friends that she was delighted with San Francisco, and was planning to be here two or three weeks. But the reporters, quite innocently, caused her hasty flight, she giving orders to her retinue of servants that the trunks were to be packed at once the moment she read the little notice in the afternoon papers. Considering the fact that she has thrived so well in the spotlight of front-page newspaper conspicuity all these years, one would have fancied that she was quite immune to any further airing of her very picturesque past. Although quite matronly—her son is of age—Mrs. Batonyi still looks the queenly woman she was when she divorced her English husband to marry her handsome riding teacher. She is very tall, with velvety brown eyes and masses of dark hair that inclines to curl, with a manner of such spontaneous liveliness that it is easily understood why even her tyrannical dad, who ruled others with a rod of iron, failed to make his headstrong daughter bow her pretty head to his will.

MISS ELSIE DE WOLFE
REPRESENTED BY
MRS. EDGAR DE WOLFE
INTERIOR DECORATION AND OBJECTS D' ART
TEMPORARY OFFICE, GRANADA HOTEL TELEPHONE FRANKLIN 422

Buds Disappointed

The pretty little budlets who have been deferring their blossoming until the time of the charming Miss Ethel Crocker's debut, will be disappointed again, for according to the present plans of Mrs. William H. Crocker,

Photo, Habenicht

MISS MARGARET SIMPSON

Daughter of Colonel Simpson, U. S. A. Her marriage will soon take place.

Miss Ethel will in all probability postpone her debut two or possibly three years. At least, that was Mrs. Crocker's plan just before she went East last week, and instead of being taken to a New York finishing school, Miss Ethel will spend the coming winter under the chaperonage of a celebrated grand dame in Paris, who has one of the most exclusive schools on the continent. In fact, she limits her aristocratic school to just six girls, and they are always chosen from among the very wealthiest of the millionaire families, and it is said that the number of applicants desiring to be "finished" under the tutelage of this aristocrat of the ancient regime, greatly surpasses the capacity of the largest finishing school in this country. The lady doing this service for the daughters of her friends, is connected with a number of the great old families of the continent and her proteges naturally have the entree into these homes where they meet and associate on equal terms with the titled darlings of noble families. Incidentally, it is said that all of these girls make great marriages—at least this prestige has distinguished the school thus far. This naturally creates a query: Is Mrs. Crocker concerned about a title for her beautiful daughter? Many of Mrs. Crocker's best friends are among the aristocratic families of the continent. In fact, she spends more time with them than she does with her American friends. She has always expressed a penchant for the European manner of conducting society, and no one shines more brilliantly in the salons of the elite of Paris than Mrs. Crocker. Her diversions have always leaned toward the intellectual rather than the formal ones that society provides. She is herself a woman of uncommon mentality, gifted far above the average, and cares very little for average society. In fact, of late, she has expressed a positive aversion for conventional entertaining. She is fond of her friends and loves nothing better than to surround her dinner table with a coterie of clever folk where the talk is so sparklingly brilliant that no one—least of all the hostess—cares a rap about fashion. Not that Mrs. Crocker lacks the femininity to appreciate that sort of thing, for she herself is too much the fastidious esthete to ignore the conventions. But she has an idea—and a good one, too—that one's gowns, jewels and the like, should be incidental—should form the background, so to speak, of one's personality, rather than the predominant thing.

Salon Material Lacking

Were there more persons in society imbued with Mrs. Crocker's idea, she would have a salon to match anything in Europe, for she knows all the worth-while celebrities and is on terms of familiarity with the men and women whose names stand for the illumination of today. She is an aristocrat in the truest sense, possessing a superior mind attuned to all that is noble and worth while. But where in San Francisco society are there the men and women to align themselves with Mrs. Crocker in such an enterprise? It is extremely difficult to attain a golden mean between being democratic and being snobbishly exclusive. Your ordinary democrat often endangers her position by being freakish and ultra-conspicuous. On the other extreme, there is that hauteur that withers all spontaneity—that gracious flow of soul and spirit without which no one can be at his best. Now a salon never thrives in a chilly atmosphere—which is exactly why the salon has never prospered with us Americans. Riches—one of the incidental requisites for supporting a salon—seem with us to have a decidedly congealing effect. A salon is never exclusive except to snobs, dullards and the mentally blind and halt—in short, it excludes those congenitally excluded. The barriers are those not generally surmounted even by great riches.

What Will the Buds Do?

With Miss Crocker likely to make her debut in Paris under the chaperonage of some of her titled relatives, the prospect of having her in San Francisco to lead the gaieties of the winter of 1910-1911 seems absolutely remote. Any number of the buds who had counted on coming out this winter are returning to school in the hope of making their bow the season following this one, for with Miss Ethel here, a brilliant prospect was anticipated. Now, however, with Miss Crocker going to Paris, all is changed. They had rather hoped that she would come out this winter—and when this was deferred to next winter, all plans were quickly changed. Among the girls who had planned on coming out with Miss Crocker next season were Miss Mauricia Mintzer, the dainty daughter of the William Mintzers; Miss Leigh Girvin, Miss Constance MacLaren, Miss Christine Donohoe, Miss Henriette Blanding, Miss Gertrude Thomas, Miss Amy Bowles, Miss Sophie Beylard, the two daughters of Mrs. James Athearn Folger, Misses Evelyn and Genevieve Cunningham, Miss Amalita Talbot, Miss Helen Garritt, and at least a dozen or so more. Several of these have changed their plans, returning to school for another winter. Mrs. William Thomas, who has done so much this winter toward making the season at San Rafael a gay one, had made all plans for a handsome coming-out ball for her pretty daughter, Gertrude. In fact, they had taken a handsome town house, having in view the gaieties in which their talented daughter was to figure. In place of that, Miss Gertrude will spend the winter in Boston, acquiring a finish to her musical abilities. Mrs. Thomas will spend the winter in Boston sharing her daughter's joy in the symphonies,

Photo, Genthe

MISS MARGARET STOWE

Whose engagement to Edward B. Bruce has just been announced.

the opera and other musical diversions in which that city is so prolific. Among the younger girls music is a fad to which they are more consistently devoted than to anything else. Among the girls who possess talents above the ordinary are Miss Elva De Pue, who comes out this winter; Miss Frances Newhall, Miss Frances Howard, Miss Avis Sherwood, Miss Virginia Newhall, Miss Gertrude Perry, Miss Dorothy Chapman and Miss Enid Cunningham. Another of the belles who is forsaking society to study music is Miss Ethel Dean, who will spend the winter in Boston with her sister, Mrs. Walter E. Dean.

Engagement Rumor Confirmed

For some time past there have been constantly recurring rumors that William H. Talbot and Mrs. Susie Darneal Paxton were to be married, but the gossip has lacked confirmation until very recently, when it was told to a very few intimate friends that the wedding is to take place as soon as Mrs. Paxton is given her final decree of divorce. She is now on her way East with Talbot's eldest daughter, whom she will place in a board-

California Conservatory of Music

Is now located in its new magnificent building

147 PRESIDIO AVENUE

Between Jackson and Washington Streets

ing school. The heart affairs of Mrs. Paxton have interested society for several years. As Miss Susie Darneal, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hervey Darneal of Alameda, she was easily the most beautiful girl in her set both in the Encinal City and San Francisco. Her mother, Mrs. Darneal, is a member of the Colonial Dame Society, also prominent in the Albert Sidney Johnston Chapter, Daughters of Confederacy. When very young Susie Darneal greatly against her mother's wishes married Allan Bowen of Alameda. Mrs. Darneal made every effort to prevent the match but the marriage took place. The young couple went East where after a stormy and unhappy couple of years they were divorced. Mrs. Bowen returned to the home of her parents in Alameda. The next sensation was her marriage to Charles Paxton, the stock broker, a widower and man about town. He was a son of the late John Paxton, the banker. Friends were greatly surprised when this marriage too proved most unhappy and a sensational divorce last year was the result. Since that time William T. Talbot has been in evidence everywhere as the devoted admirer and escort of the beautiful and fascinating Mrs. Paxton. On the first night of every new play at the supper after the theatre Mrs. Paxton, dressed in the latest and most stunning costumes, has been seen continually with William H. Talbot. With William H. Talbot's matrimonial affairs the public is well acquainted. He is the son of the late Mr. Talbot of the lumber firm of Pope & Talbot. His sisters, Mrs. Ira Pierce and Mrs. Walker, are two of the most exclusive ladies of the smart set. Frederick Talbot, a brother, is married and lives in Fruitvale. The old Talbot home is on the corner of Jackson and Franklin streets, one of the land marks of that aristocratic quarter. His divorce two years ago was a sensational affair, charges of cruelty being brought on both sides.

Engaged to Army Man

An engagement of interest to Californians is that of Miss Cornelia Baird, daughter of Captain and Mrs. Baird, U. S. A., and niece of Brigadier-General Carter, U. S. A., to Lieut. J. Hicks, U. S. A. The wedding is set for October 9, in Annapolis, Maryland. The future home for the time being will be Newport, New York, where Lieutenant Hicks is stationed. Mrs. Baird, the mother of the bride, was formerly Miss Minnie Dawley, daughter of Mrs. Olive Dawley, a resident of San Francisco some thirty years ago. Another daughter is the wife of Brigadier-General Carter.

Johnson-Towne Betrothal

An interesting engagement just announced is that of Miss Arline Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Pierce Johnson of Oakland to George Stark Towne of Palo Alto, an Eastern man who has resided in California only a few year. Mr. Johnson is president of the Claremont Country Club. Both Miss Arline and her sister Josephine are members and entertain extensively at the club. At Tahoe where the Johnsons spent the summer Miss Arline who is noted for her devotion to athletic games broke all records in the Casino Alley for ladies' ten pins, much to the admiration of a large gathering of society people. The Johnsons have recently moved into their beautiful new home on Monte Vista avenue, Oakland. The date of the wedding of Miss Johnson and Mr. Towne has been set for sometime in December. It will be a large and brilliant affair.

EVERY WOMAN

Covets a fresh, smooth, satiny complexion, and what satisfaction and peace of mind its possession brings. The lines of age, worry and overwork are rendered well nigh powerless by Mrs. Nettie HARRISON'S LOLA MONTEZ CREME. A wonderful soother, healer and protector to a dry, contracted or chapped skin. It is Complexion Insurance. A Jar (3 months' treatment) 75 cents at all Druggists. To convince you of its remarkable power, I will send a free sample and "Beauty Book" on request. Mrs. NETTIE HARRISON, San Francisco.

Wedding Earlier Than Expected

The wedding of Dr. Benjamin Putman Kurtz of the State University and Miss Florence Ansley of Santa Cruz will take place on October 1, much earlier than was first planned. Dr. Kurtz is one of the cleverest men on the faculty—even though his years are not as numerous as those usually credited to wisdom. He is a member of the Bohemian and several other clubs and is generally well liked. He is the son of B. C. Kurtz of Piedmont, where the young couple will reside. Miss Ansley is a society belle of Santa Cruz, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Langdon Ansley of that city. She graduated from the university, and was a member of one of Dr. Kurtz's classes. She was decidedly a leader in the sorority sets, and a high-spirited, clever girl. Dr. Kurtz has quite a reputation as a lecturer.

Society Mermaids

Last week's summery weather caused a general exodus back to the country, and those who had planned returning to town decided to remain for a time to see just what the whimsical gods of the weather would provide for this capricious month. In consequence there was much more entertaining across the bay than usual, and the country clubs were the rendezvous for all those who had the leisure for the blithe gaieties of the open. The Marin Country Club—perhaps the jolliest about the bay—was the scene of continuous entertaining all week, its verandas being actually crowded with girls and women lunching and having tea, and later on there were many merry little dinner parties. Swimming is the favorite sport at San Rafael this summer, for they have such a capital pool that all the girls on that side have learned to swim and many of them are most expert, doing all kinds of fancy high diving and the like, with as much grace and facility as the traditional mermaid. The pool at San Rafael is uncovered, instead of being indoors as most pools are. It is supplied by the brine from the bay and the place is maintained in tip-top condition. Following the swimming, which is usually early in the afternoon, the girls always meet later on at tea, with the sparkle of the silvery water in their bright eyes, their cheeks rosy with the tint of health and their ebullient spirits effervescing gaiety and light-heartedness. Mrs. Jack Spreckels had a party of pretty girls with her on Saturday at the Marin Country Club, later on entertaining them at tea. The affair was given for Miss Enid Gregg, who spent several days with her. Miss Merritt Reid and Miss Alexandra Hamilton were with them. Miss Hamilton, slender as a sylph, her satiny black hair tucked underneath a jaunty bandana, looked a picture in her bit of a black silk bathing suit and as she made the high dives, everybody simply stopped all proceedings until the pretty slip of a girl had finished her "stunt." Miss Suzanne Kirkpatrick is another girl who swims uncommonly well.

Francesca Club Opening

The fastidious Francesca Club, or "The Millionairess Club" as someone renamed it, will have a housewarming on October 4 when it moves into its elegant new home on Sutter street, just off Powell. The Francesca, to which most of the younger matrons and girls of the Burlingame set belong, had the finest women's club quarters outside of New York, having moved into its home on the top floors of the Shreve Building just a short time before the fire. As many of the members donated the bric-a-brac, pictures and the like, the greatest care was taken in the little knic-knacks, most of them having been selected by the donors during travels in the Orient, in Europe and so on. It was a most picturesque place, but the new home is even prettier, for a great deal of rivalry exists between the Town and Country and the Francesca. The Francesca is really an offspring, so to speak, of the older club, for when bridge grew to be such a fad, the devotees of that fascinating game wanted to turn it into a card club. The Town and Country would not stand for any of the ultra fads, such as smoking and so on—and on—hence the Francesca.

Manuscript neatly typewritten, three cents per folio. Letters 10 cents a page. 299 Monadnock Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Mrs. Coit Returns

Mrs. Lily Coit has returned from Paris, visiting her old home here for the first time since Alexander Garnett shot and killed Major J. W. McClung in her apartments

TENNIS PLAYERS AT DEL MONTE

Mrs. Neimeyer, Miss Ida Mearns, Miss Florence Sutton, Miss Golda Meyer, Mrs. Bruce, Miss Hazel Hotchkiss, who took part in the tennis tournament at Del Monte last week.

at the Palace Hotel six years ago. It was a lamentable tragedy and ended in Garnett going to San Quentin for a term of fifteen years. He began serving his sentence only recently, as six years had been taken up in vain appeals against the decision of the Superior Court. Mrs. Coit has always been very popular here, and in her younger days was a noted belle. She gained much local fame when she was a girl by running to fires with the engines. Major McClung and the man who shot him were old family friends of Mrs. Coit and Garnett who had lost his fortune was somewhat of a pensioner. It is thought that the shooting grew out of his fear that McClung was trying to influence Mrs. Coit against giving him more money.

Divorced Architect Wedded

When Albert Sutton, the well-known architect, left the city on Friday night of last week few of his friends knew he was bound for Tacoma where his marriage to Miss Hewitt of that city was to take place a few days after his arrival. The couple will return to this city and take up their residence here. Mr. Sutton has two children in their early teens—Alberta and Anna. His first wife was Miss Ethel Meeks of San Leandro from whom he obtained a divorce over a year ago. The children were awarded to him. His divorced wife subsequently married.

Club Ladies Unbend

A few years ago it was considered quite an important innovation when some of the men's clubs of this city had a ladies' day now and then, allowing women friends of the members to roam at their own sweet will through the club quarters. Some of the old boys grumbled considerably at such goings on, but the others carried the day. And now the ladies of the Town and Country Club have duplicated this by inviting men to visit them. On Thursday afternoon a tea was given, to which each lady member was allowed to bring two men as guests. It was a very successful affair, although I hear that one or two spinsters and suffragettes complained just as the crusty old fellows of the men's clubs.

To Wed in the East

Miss Margaret (Peggy) Simpson, daughter of Col. A. S. Simpson, U. S. A., left for the East on Monday. Her marriage to Lieut. Harold Naylor, U. S. A., will soon take place in Stampford, Connecticut. Their future residence will be at the Presidio where Lieutenant Naylor is now stationed.

Baker-MacGavin Wedding

The wedding of Miss Helen Baker, eldest daughter of Mrs. L. L. Baker, to Drummond MacGavin will take place the first week in November in Trinity Church. There will be eight bridesmaids, among whom are Misses Alexandra Hamilton, Louise Boyd, Sara Coffin, Claire Nichols, Dolly MacGavin, Bessie Ashton and Louisana Foster. Miss Dorothy Baker will be the maid of honor. Carlton Curtiss will be the best man. The ushers will include Ralston Curtiss, Herbert Baker and Herbert Schmidt. The gowns of the bridal party are to be in soft tones of yellow. The bride's dress will be one of the most exquisite and elaborate seen here in many days. The decorations will be autumn tints, the prevailing color scheme being yellow. Much amusement has been enjoyed over this engagement by the young people. It

J. Magnin & Co.
INCORPORATED
Dainty Babywear
We are showing in a wide range of quality and prices
Infants Long and Short Coats Long Slips Wrappers
Sacques Barrow Coats Caps Bonnets Mittens
Bootees Soft Kid Shoes Carriage Robes Crib Clothes
Toilet Requisites Nursery Baskets Furnishings
GRANT AVENUE AND GEARY STREET

Paul Elder & Co.
OPENING
THE ART ROOMS &
THE CHILDREN'S ROOM
Completing the equipment of a unique enterprise---a modern Book Store combined with a distinctive Art Shop, arranged in a harmonious environment.
IN THE BOOK ROOMS---Current and General Literature, Fiction, Children's Books, Fiction Renting Library, Rare and Antiquarian Editions, Fine Bindings, Social Stationery and Engraving, Paul Elder Publications.
IN THE ART ROOMS---Framing, Pictures, Prints, Jewelry, Pottery, Metal and Leather Work, Calendars and Illuminated Cards, Oriental Art comprising Bronzes, Porcelains, Fabrics and Japanese Prints.
A cordial invitation is extended to visit and enjoy the various rooms occupying three floors in the Paul Elder Building
239 Grant Ave. Between Post & Sutter Streets

seems when Miss Baker made her debut Mrs. Baker always frowned upon any suitor from either the army or navy, as marriage to an officer would very likely necessitate her daughter's leaving San Francisco and taking up her residence elsewhere. But Mrs. Baker did not stipulate that mining engineers were not on the list as candidates for son-in-law. And now Miss Helen is to live far away in the mining country, a fact that Mrs. Baker forgot when giving her consent to the marriage.

Wilson-Greer Wedding

All is in readiness for the wedding of Miss Helen Wilson, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Scott Wilson, to Paymaster Walter Greer, U. S. N. The marriage will take place at 8:30 next Wednesday evening, at Trinity Church. The bridal party will include Mrs. Frederick Stott (Relda Ford), as matron of honor, Miss Rhoda Nicholson as bridesmaid of honor, and Miss Florence Branerman, Miss Catherine Hutchinson (cousin of the bride), and Miss Marian Lally as bridesmaids, little Laura Coffee the flower girl. Lieutenant Arthur Oneus will be the best man. The six ushers will be brother officers. The decorations will be in pink, which color scheme will be carried out at both the church and the Wilson home on Washington street.

Stowe-Bruce Engagement

To the intimate friends of Miss Margaret Stowe her engagement to Edward Bright Bruce was no surprise. It was after leaving Miss Head's school in Berkeley that Miss Stowe went East to attend a boarding school at Pelham Manor, and during her stay there she met Mr. Bruce. A few years later she visited Manila and the friendship was resumed—in fact she became engaged and confided the fact to her intimate friends. Miss Stowe is a grand-daughter of the late W. W. Stowe. Her father, Sherman P. Stowe, and Vanderlyn Stowe are brothers. Mrs. Sherman Stowe was Miss Hollister, daughter of Colonel Hollister of Santa Barbara. Her sisters are Mrs. C. Ealand and Mrs. Barrett Fithian. Mr. Bruce is a son of Rev. James Bruce of New York, and is a graduate of Columbia University. The wedding has been set for some time in November, after which the couple will sail for Manila where Mr. Bruce is practicing law. Miss Stowe has been the guest of Mrs. William Penn Humphreys. She returned to her home in Santa Barbara last week.

Miller at Montara

Joaquin Miller, the poet, was a special guest of Mrs. Percy Johnson of the Montara Inn recently. Among the other guests present were E. F. Charlton, Miss Josephine Saunders, T. W. Spaulding, George D. Gillespie, Miss Bessie Lettles, Harr Wagner, Miss Clara Anderson, Mrs. Anderson, Mrs. Baudry, Miss Erickson, Bert Waters and Miss Helen Waters.

Surprises Friends

Like Everett Bee, Rothwell Hyde has danced with the grandmothers of several of the present debutantes, so his marriage on Saturday to Miss Kate C. de Vida of Honolulu came as a genuine surprise, as the groom has been looked upon for years as a confirmed bachelor. He blushingly acknowledges his age to be 50 years. The wedding took place at the residence of his sister, Mrs. David Bixler, on Pierce street. Only a few intimate friends were present. Upon the return of the couple from their wedding tour they will reside in this city.

For the Blind

The society vaudeville performance which was so successfully given at Menlo on the evening of September 11 will be repeated at the Novelty Theatre in this city on Tuesday evening for the Library for the Blind. Mrs. Frederick McNear and Mrs. Worthington Ames, who were so prominent in the Menlo performance, have taken charge of the promotion of the affair, and have created great interest in it among society people. Mrs. Eleanor Martin was the first to take a box, and the other boxes are being eagerly sought, as are tickets to the affair. At the performance there will be a large orchestra led by Paul Steindorff, and the staging will be done by Willard Barton, who was so successful in that line at the Menlo production. Tickets are on sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s, and can be purchased at the theatre on the day of the performance.

ANNOUNCEMENT
H. KRAMER
LADIES' TAILOR
Formerly 20 Sansome Street and 1795 Sutter Street
Announces the arrival of a most select and varied line of imported models and materials for fall.
Now located at 117 GRANT AVENUE
No Branch Stores PHONE KEARNY 4960

RAY LEVIN
247 POWELL ST., NEAR GEARY ST.
Phone Kearny 1619
SMART MILLINERY
MOURNING HATS A SPECIALTY

Vogel's
MAKERS OF
LADIES' GOWNS AND FANCY COSTUMES
418 SUTTER ST., Near STOCKTON

MRS. J. COUGHLAN CO.
Removed to
101 GEARY ST., Cor. GRANT AVE.
Mezzanine Floor

Dinan
Importer of Fine Millinery
Phone Douglas 1246 160 Geary Street, Opp. City of Paris

S. KRAMER
LADIES' TAILOR
101 GEARY ST., Cor. GRANT AVE.
ABOVE THE PARAGON

THE BONNET SHOP
Importers of REAL PARISIAN MILLINERY
121 GEARY STREET
Our Specialty, Strictly High Class Tailored Hats at Popular Prices
NOBLE

Cook
FINE MILLINERY
1803 FILLMORE STREET AT SUTTER

In the Social Spotlight

Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Joseph and Mrs. Francis McComas are paying a visit to Del Monte.

Frank B. King and Knox Maddox are at Del Monte for a few days' visit.

A party made up of Bishop Hughes, Mrs. E. H. Hughes, Holt Hughes, Mrs. S. Martin, Mrs. L. J. Watt, Mr. and Mrs. Rolla V. Watt, of San Francisco, and Dr. M. S. Hughes of Pasadena, lunched at Del Monte recently

Among the recent arrivals at Del Monte from San Francisco were Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Cutten, Miss Golda Myer, Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Bernheim, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Olmstead, H. C. Hickman, W. B. Webster, L. K. Walsh, Mrs. J. Harvey, Agnes Boillot, Mrs. W. J. Bryan, Mrs. H. F. Booth, Wm. V. Bryan, Bishop and Mrs. E. H. Hughes, Holt Hughes, Mrs. S. Martin, Mrs. L. J. Watt, Mr. and Mrs. Rollo V. Watt, R. G. Steck, J. H. Tuttle, Milton Davis, Mr. and Mrs. A. Cato, L. D. Torrey, Mrs. L. S. Torrey, and Cyrus Pierce.

Senator Francis G. Newlands and Mrs. Newlands arrived from Washington on Monday night and have taken apartments at the Fairmont. Senator Newlands plans to remain on the coast until after the opening of the new Palace in November if possible, although his work on some of the committees of the Government may call him away earlier.

Recent San Francisco arrivals at Hotel del Coronado were James Jenkins, S. M. Spalding, Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Beicke, A. T. Brock, C. Naylor, and John S. Howell.

Among the recent San Francisco arrivals at The Tavern of Tamalpais were Mr Rendel and wife, James Dunn and wife, A. Thompson and wife, Mr. Patterson, Mr. Mosley, Jos. E. O'Connor, W. H. Stinson, Mrs. W. L. Williamson, Miss Margaret H. Gleason, Miss Mary L. Gleason, Miss Molly F. McHenry, Mrs. Mary J. McCabe, Miss Maria Farren, Miss Agnes Farren, Mrs. Margaret McPherson, Dr. M. McPherson, D. E. Hayes, Miss Olive Lindsay, and Miss Julia Sheridan.

Mrs. William Thomas gave a small bridge party in the St. Francis Saturday afternoon, as a farewell courtesy to a few of her most intimate friends. She is leaving for Boston to place her daughter, Gertrude, in school. This charming young girl will be one of next year's debutantes.

Mrs. Rosa Hooper Plotner has closed her home at Mountain View where she has been spending the summer with her family and has taken rooms at 1515 Bush street adjoining her studio. When settled Mrs. Plotner will give an exhibition of her latest miniatures of well-known society people here.

Miss Patricia Cosgrave is at present visiting her brother, J. O'Hara Cosgrave, at his home in New York City.

The Chevron Club of ex-volunteer army officers gave a luncheon at the Manx Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Van Sicklen of Alameda with their two daughters, Misses Dorothy and Hilda, will spend the winter in town having taken the home of Mr. and Mrs. Willis Davis on Schott street for the next six months. Mr. and Mrs. Davis, with their daughter, Miss Sidney, will leave September 27 for a tour abroad for the benefit of Mr. Davis' health. Mrs. Van Sicklen is a sister of Mr. Davis.

Mr. and Mrs. Russell Bogue have moved to their new home on Green street.

The Spinners' Club met on Tuesday at the residence of Miss Eleanor Davenport on Pacific avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Huntington of Los Angeles and New York are at the Manx for a stay of several months.

Misses Gertrude and Ernestine Moller are spending the week at Hotel Vendome. Mrs. Frank Gilbreth of New York, who has been visiting her mother, Mrs. William Moller of Oakland, left on Monday morning for her home in the East.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Powers who have been spending the summer at the Hooper farm, Mountain View, will return to their home in this city on November 1.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Huse, who have been stopping at the Fairmont, will leave today for the East. Their future home will be in Evanston, Ill.

Capt. John McClasky, U. S. Marine Corps Recruiting Officer of San Francisco, has taken apartments at the Manx for the winter.

Mrs. Louis Risdon Mead entertained an animated company of the younger set at tea in the Hotel St. Francis Monday afternoon.

The Misses Harriet and Marian Stone, who will return to Miss Spence's school in New York the end of September, are being extensively entertained previous to their departure.

Mr. and Mrs. James Hemming of Colorado Springs are guests of their daughter, Mrs. Frederick A. Healey, at their attractive new home on Twenty-sixth avenue. A third son was recently born to Mr. and Mrs. Healey.

COOK'S TOURS

Are the Best for Independent or Escorted Travel

AROUND THE WORLD

Parties leave Westward October 5 and 19th; Eastward November 6, December 9 and January 8. Highest class, various routes, best of everything. Seventy Tours to Europe. Tickets everywhere. Traveler's checks, hotel coupons, information. Let us make reservations now for your fall tour. No charge for service.

THOS. COOK & SON

32 POWELL STREET SAN FRANCISCO

Offices at Yokohama, Hongkong, Colombo, Calcutta, Bombay, etc.

Mrs. M. P. Jones has taken apartments at the Hillcrest on California street for the winter. Mrs. Jones spent the summer at the Hotel Rafael. Mr. and Mrs. H. M. A. Miller (formerly Grace Jones) will also occupy apartments at the Hillcrest this winter.

Mrs. A. M. Easton had sufficiently recovered from her illness last week to be taken from the St. Francis to her country place in Menlo. She left in Miss Jennie Crocker's private car.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Carey Friedlander have returned from their summer outing and taken rooms on Pacific avenue for the winter.

PARISIAN FASHIONS

Gown of white-dotted green silk, trimmed with black satin. The hat is of black straw with white plumes.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Taft and the Misses Taft of Oakland, who have been abroad for several months, will return to their home this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stewart left the city on Tuesday for Stockton, where they will visit friends for the next two weeks.

Mr. Samuel Buckbee returned from the East during the week.

Mrs. John O'Neil Reis and her son, Gustav, returned from the East during the week. Mrs. Reis has taken an apartment on Gough street for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. William Cluff, with their daughter, Miss Florence, have taken rooms at the Fairmont for the winter. They spent the summer in Berkeley when they entertained extensively.

Mrs. A. S. Baldwin will leave this week with her daughter, Mildred, for Los Angeles. There they will be joined by the Misses Kairns, who with a governess will leave for the East, where they will attend an Eastern boarding school. Mrs. Baldwin will not accompany them East but will return immediately to San Francisco.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis W. Lucas have purchased a home on Washington street. Mrs. Lucas will entertain extensively during the winter.

Odd Things in the World

A bird of immense wing power is the tiny stormy petrel, the smallest web-footed bird known; it belongs to every sea, and although so seeming frail, it breasts the utmost fury of the storm, skimming with incredible velocity the trough of the waves and gliding rapidly over their snowy crests; petrels have been observed 2,000 miles from nearest land.

A snail's tongue is a ribbon which he keeps in a coil in his mouth. This tongue is in reality a band saw, with the teeth on the surface instead of on the edge. The teeth are so small that as many as 30,000 of them have been found on one snail's tongue. They are exceedingly sharp, and only a few of them are used at a time. Not exactly only a few of them, but a few of them comparatively, for the snail will probably have 4,000 or 5,000 of them in use at once. He does this by means of his coiled tongue. He can uncoil as much of this as he chooses, and the uncoiled part he brings into service. The roof of his mouth is as hard as bone. He grasps the leaf between his tongue and that hard substance and, rasping away with his tongue, saws through the toughest leaf with ease, always leaving the edge smooth and straight.

If a child sneezes, some one should immediately say "God bless it." If the child sneezes a third time without the blessing it falls under the power of the fairies and if it is yet unbaptized it is liable to be pixie-led all its life.

In Madrid Tuesday is considered an unlucky day. For many years no marriages have been celebrated on Tuesday.

It is a mistake to suppose that polar research has cost enormously in human life; despite all the great disasters, 97 out of every 100 explorers have returned alive.

A shipyard at Ominato, Japan, still in operation, was established over 1900 years ago.

DINING ROOM OF THE HOTEL MANX.

The surface of the sea is alive with vast swarms of minute organisms both plants and animals, and showers of these keep dropping day and night like a constant rain toward the ooze of the bottom.

Experiment has proved that if a delicate piece of lace be placed between an iron plate and a disc of gunpowder and the latter be detonated, the lace will be annihilated, but its impression will be clearly stamped on the iron.

VAN NESS THEATRE Cor. Van Ness and Grove Gottlob, Marx & Co., Mgr. Phone Market 500

Tonight, Sunday Night and All Next Week. Matinee Saturday Only
Brady and Grismer Announce
AMERICA'S BIGGEST COMEDY SUCCESS
A GENTLEMAN FROM MISSISSIPPI
"It's a Corker" Colonel Roosevelt
October 4 BILLIE BURKE in "Love Watches"

The Garrick (Former Orpheum) ELLIS at FILLMORE PHONE - WEST 1194
Week Starting Sunday Afternoon, September 26th.
H. H. FRAZEE Presents the Musical Winner
A KNIGHT FOR A DAY
Superior Cast of Principals and Stunning Chorus of Sixty, Including EDWARD HUME and GRACE DEMAR, and the Ten English Dancing Madcaps.
Prices, 25c to $1.00 Next "Fifty Miles from Boston"

NEW ALCAZAR THEATRE Cor. Sutter and Steiner Class "A" Building Phone West 1400
BELASCO & MAYER, Owners and Managers.
Monday Evening, September 27, and Throughout the Week, a Revival, By Popular Request, of the Delightful Heart Comedy
SWEET KITTY BELLAIRS
Founded on Egerton Castle's Book, "The Bath Comedy," by David Belasco.
Prices—Nights, 25c to $1.00. Matinees, 25c to 50c.
Matinee Saturday and Sunday.

NEW CHUTES Fillmore, Eddy, Turk and Webster
Open Morning, Afternoon and Night
SUNDAY AND ALL NEXT WEEK
FREE NICKELODEON, the Latest Motion Pictures and Illustrated Songs, Featuring a Moving Picture of the Opening Day Crowds at the Chutes. IS YOUR FACE THERE? Many Added Attractions, Including the 3—OLIVERS—3, Athletes of Prodigious Strength; PROMENADE CONCERTS, by the California State Band; SPECIAL FEATURES FOR THE CHILDREN

VALENCIA THEATRE Valencia Street, near Thirteenth Phone Market 17
This Saturday Afternoon and Evening—Last Times of "Going Some."
Two Weeks, Starting Sunday Evening, September 26. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday. Sam. S. and Lee Shubert (Inc.), Offer
America's Own Comedienne, CORINNE,
In the Viennese Operetta in Three Acts
MLLE. MISCHIEF
85 People—English Pony Ballet—Bewitching Beauty Chorus—Original Production
Reserved Seats, Night and Saturday Matinee, from $1.50 to 50c. Wednesday Matinee, 50c, 75c and $1.00, on Sale at the Box Office and Emporium.
Next—George Fawcett, in "The Great John Ganton."

NEW ORPHEUM O'Farrell Street, between Stockton and Powell Phone Douglas 70
Safest and Most Magnificent Theatre in America
Week Beginning This Sunday Afternoon—Matinee Every Day
ARTISTIC VAUDEVILLE
EDNA AUG, the Comedienne in "TYPES"; BIG CITY QUARTETTE; LES MYOSOTIS, Premiere Dancers at the Royal Opera Munich; HENRY CLIVE, Assisted by MAI STURGIS WALKER; TOM WATERS; MURRAY and MACK; SPAULDING and RIEGO; NEW ORPHEUM MOTION PICTURES. Last Week—Great Triumph, the Famous Spanish Artiste, ROSARIO GUERRERO, Assisted by Sig. L. Paglieri, in the Musical Pantomime, "THE ROSE AND THE DAGGER."
Evening Prices: 10c, 25c, 50c, 75c. Box Seats, $1.00. Matinee Prices (Except Sundays and Holidays), 10c, 25c, 50c.

YE LIBERTY PLAYHOUSE Oakland, Cal. Direction H. W. Bishop
Week of Monday, September 27th, Every Evening,
Matinees Saturday and Sunday
BISHOP'S PLAYERS PRESENT
THE PRINCE CHAP
For the First Time in Oakland at Popular Prices
Same Popular Prices: 25c and 50c. Entire House. All Performances.

Stage

A Drama of Politics

"A Gentleman from Mississippi," the attraction at the Van Ness Theatre this week, is a good play impaired by the manner of its interpretation. It has a star whose work is entirely adequate, but he is supported by a weak company. There are stars who love thus to scintillate in contrast with weak support, but I do not imagine that James Lackaye, who has the leading part in this play, is of that sort. The authors of this play have used the muck-raker but not offensively. They present a Senator from Mississippi in Washington for his first term. He falls into the hands of scheming statesmen who are trying to put through a naval-base bill which will give them a big profit through speculation, and to make sure of the Senator's support get his son and daughter into the scheme under rather shady circumstances. With the aid of a young newspaperman who acts as his secretary, the Senator defeats them in the last act. There is some lack of logic and coherency in the climax, but satisfaction is contributed by the villains being dropped with disheartening thuds, while the heroes are hoisted to the highest pinnacles of virtue. Besides, two of the heroes win the ladies of their hearts, and one villain curses a returned engagement ring. What more can you ask of a play—especially when the lines are good and the story teaches a wholesome lesson? James Lackaye, who plays the Senator, has a most winning personality, which lends itself admirably to the portrayal of the big, bluff, honest, shrewd and kindly southern statesman. Lackaye's smile is nothing short of an illumination, and his manner shows the thoroughly accomplished and versatile actor. In the scene where he discovers that his son and daughter have been deceiving him, he gives a pathetic picture of the broken man who mourns over shattered idols. This William Langdon looks like one who could most easily be made a catspaw for schemers—but he differs from our district attorney of like name in that his appearance is deceiving, and that beneath an exterior that suggests gullibility he hides shrewdness, honesty and power. "Bud" Haines, the Washington newspaper correspondent who helps rescue the Senator from the bog into which his confiding feet have strayed, is played by Osborne Searle. The authors did their share by giving him a well-conceived and well-written role, and he goes at it very seriously; but he succeeds merely in caricaturing the real newspaperman, who does not stand around hotel lobbies gurgling over down-country statesmen, and who does not carry himself with a pert and flippant air that suggests the self-conscious cub reporter. Searle gets a flash of human intelligence into the part now and then, and really has a pleasing personality; but he gushes and sputters and giggles to a degree that robs his characterization of what little merit it occasionally shows. W. J. W.

Musical Attractions

The opening attraction of Will Greenbaum's musical season will be John Philip Sousa and his incomparable band. Over fifty artists will comprise the organization on this tour and there will be four special soloists in addition to the usual band players. Miss Grace Hoyt, contralto; Miss Frances Hoyt, soprano; Miss Florence Hardemann, violiniste, and Mr. Herbert Clarke, cornet virtuoso, are the solo attractions. There is no other band like Sousa's and the reason is simply that he engages his men from the same class that the Manhattan and Metropolitan Opera House do and that price is no object to the "March King" in securing the best. Four days will be devoted to afternoon and evening concerts in this city at Dreamland Rink, after which the organization has been invited to appear at both the University of California in Berkeley and Stanford University. Mme. Jean Jomelli, a dramatic singer from the Hammerstein forces, will be the first of the vocal artists to visit us this season. She is said to possess a voice of marvelous beauty and culture. Miss Marie Nicholls, an American violiniste with a world-wide reputation, will assist at the Jomelli recitals. Both of these artists will also appear before the St. Francis Musical Art Society. One of the sensational events that Manager Greenbaum hopes to surprise us with is the appearance of Pepito Arriola, a twelve year old prodigy who recently played a Beethoven and Grieg concerto with the London Philharmonic Orchestra under Nickisch. This lad is said to be the most wonderful genius on the piano since the youthful days of Josef Hoffman.

"Sweet Kitty Bellairs" Revived

One of the Alcazar's most successful offerings last season was "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," then presented for the first time in a stock theatre. It ran three consecutive weeks, and since its withdrawal there have been so many requests for its revival that Belasco and Mayer found the pressure irresistible. David Belasco found his inspiration for "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," which he describes as "a comedy of the heart," in Edgerton Castle's famous book, "The Bath Comedy." Its scenes are laid at Bath, the British spa made famous by Beau Brummel, Beau Nash and other foppish celebrities of the Gainsborough period, during the French republican wars. There the heroine, Mistress Kitty Bellairs, a piquant young Irish widow adored by the officers of the Inniskillings, of which regiment her husband was a shining light, meets her fate in the person of an English baronet, and the play is largely made up of scenes in which she is flouted by envious women and championed by the red-coated soldiers, every man of whom is eager to fight for her. There is the usual happy ending, of course, but it is brought about in a way that surprises. In the cast are thirty-five speaking people and many silent auxiliaries. All the characters are attired in the rich, quaint and picturesque garb of the time. Music is a feature of the play, and to give full justice to the score, composed by William Furst, the Alcazar orchestra will be considerably augmented. All the critics agreed that Miss Vaughan never appeared more winsome than as the merry young widow with the sharp tongue and soft heart. As her noble English admirer, Augustus Phillips, will have opportunity for effective acting. All the other Alcazar favorites, long-established and comparatively new, will be suitably cast.

EDNA AUG

The comedienne extraordinary who will appear next week at the Orpheum.

At the Garrick Theatre

Starting with the matinee at the Garrick Theatre tomorrow that temple of Thespis will house a series of musical shows that will have as their strongest feature plenty of girls. Girls in tights, in skirts, in ruffles and in fluffles, girls in terpsichorian novelties, in bright new song hits, and girls in every way and description are the essentials of the shows to come. Of course there are comedians too, and singing numbers galore, also odd scenic contrivances and novel electrical displays, but the main attraction at the Garrick for the next several weeks will be "Girls." The first of the series is "A Knight for a Day," one of the newest and best of the Chicago summer productions. It is only to amuse, to help you to forget troubles and worries and dull care, and with the aid of bright music, lights, fun, twinkling feet, and "Girls" it had a year's successful engagement at the Whitney Theatre in Chicago, and was transferred to Wallacks in New York, for eight months longer. The story, or what little story there is, has to do with the adventures of many persons, beginning at Evanston, Ill., and carrying them to Corsica. The principals and chorus are kept pretty busy in the first act, and as a result Evanston is made a very merry place. The Corsican locale for the second act affords so much dash and color that the real plot of the piece requires some seventy people to re-discover it. The score is equipped with the pretty melodies and prancing marches that the votaries of musical comedy insist upon having. No small feature of this bright pot-pourri of fun and music is the Ten Dancing Madcaps, whose whirlwind dances create no end of comment, and the superb electrical effects specially invented for this year's tour. "Fifty Miles from Boston" by Geo. M. Cohan follows.

Corinne at Valencia

The last performances of that jolly comedy of college men and cowboys, "Going Some," will take place at the Valencia Theatre this Saturday afternoon and evening, and on Sunday night the third of the Shubert attractions to come to this independent house, Corinne, with a company of eighty-five people, in "Mlle. Mischief," will begin a two weeks' engagement. This is Corinne's first venture as an "independent" star and to emphasize the fact she has been given a medium, this Viennese operetta by Carl M. Ziehrer, book Englished by Sydney Rosenfeld, that is said to be better suited to her talents than anything she has ever had. In addition the Shuberts have surrounded her with a company which, if numerically large, has been selected with an eye to individual excellence. "Mlle. Mischief" has been praised not only for its amusing and novel plot but also for the large number of musical hits, among them being the trio "Verily Merrily," "To the Regiment We'll Go," "The Army Corps," "The Song of the Drummer Boy," "Sweethearts," "Every Hour Brings Its Flower," "Ladies Beware" and the dainty chanson, "Le Coeur de Ninon." Corinne takes the part of a model who is the betrothed of an artist, Andre Claire, and in order to win a fortune she accepts a wager that in the guise of a boy she can remain twenty-four hours in the local barracks without detection. As she is at her wits end to accomplish this, she chances upon a discarded suit of one of Andre's pupils, Freddie Meline, and, to add to the good fortune, finds his pocket book and papers. Armed with these she presents herself as a recruit and is immediately put through the rigorous discipline of the garrison, being informed that the special regimen of the Colonel is baths, hot and cold, and that he is especially severe to those who have been accustomed to the over-indulgence of millionaire parents. Andre, coming in search of his reckless sweetheart, is seized upon and actually put through the bathing discipline, but before Rosette can be subjected to the same treatment she confides to the lieutenant that she is disguised as a boy in order to secure a fortune from her father, the elder Meline, who has always insisted that she appear in male attire. Hoping to wed the wealthy girl, the crafty lieutenant sends for her supposed father, who is arrested as a spy. All of these amusing complications are speedily untangled, Rosette wins the wager and all ends merrily. The original production, which was seen for eight months at the Lyric Theatre and three months at the Casino, New York, and the famous English Pony Ballet are assured, and the costumes, scenic and lighting effects will be unusually beautiful. Among the players and singers are Albert S. Howson, Charles W. Meyer, Edward W. Cutler, Alfred Wilder, Harry Linkey, Fred Connell, Frank Farrington, Fred LeDoux, Kittie Baldwin, Anna Mortland, Dorothy Lamar, Loretta Healy, Bonnie Farley and Louise Brunelle. Matinees of "Mlle. Mischief" will be given Wednesdays and Saturdays, with reduced prices on Wednesday. George Fawcett in "The Great John Ganton" will follow Corinne in "Mlle. Mischief" at the Valencia Theatre.

At the Orpheum

Edna Aug, the irresistible comedienne who has just returned from Paris where she created quite a sensation in the "revues" at the Olympic Music Hall, will be the headliner of next week's Orpheum program. She names her offering "Types" and it is a series of characterizations partly serious and partly humorous. It includes her "Stupid Scrubwoman" which first brought her into fame at the New York theatre a few years ago. Miss Aug is the possessor of a good voice and is always artistic in her humor. The Big City Quartette, whom the Eastern critics consider the sweetest singing four in vaudeville, will afford a distinct musical treat, as they only sing the better sort of solos and concerted numbers. They are all excellent vocalists who have individually won recognition. Fred G. Rover is the first tenor, Charles Bates the second tenor, James Emerson the baritone and Gus Reed the basso. The engagement of Les Myosotis, which begins next Sunday matinee, is an extraordinary one. They were selected by Martin Beck from the Royal Opera, Munich, where they were the premiere or solo dancers, to enter vaudeville and make a tour of the Orpheum Circuit, which will be the first visit to this country. The beauty and grace of these girls have made them famous in their own land, where they are considered the most skilled and accomplished dancers of the classic ballet. Henry Clive, the clever entertainer who has won golden opinions in the East, will, with the assistance of Miss Mai Sturgis Walker, present a unique and original offering. Mr. Clive makes no claim to being a great magician but uses sleight of hand for comedy purposes only. He has just returned from England, where he played successful engagements in the leading London music halls. Next week will be the last of Tom Waters in his original Piano Pastime, Spaulding and Diego, Murray and Mack, and of the beautiful dancer, Rosario Guerrero, in her musical pantomime.

Billie Burke in Comedy

Sunday begins the second and last week of "A Gentleman from Mississippi" at the Van Ness. There is not a merrier, wittier, cleverer or more popular play in town. Wonderfully realistic is the stage production, especially the old National Hotel in Washington, D. C., where the action of the first act of "A Gentleman from Mississippi" is developed. This venerable hostelry is unique among American hotels. Webster, Clay, Thad Stevens, and scores of other olden time statesmen lived there. The last performance of this comedy will be given Sunday night, October 3. Miss Billie Burke, one of the newest and most popular of Charles Frohman's many stars, will be the attraction at the Van Ness Theatre for the two weeks beginning Monday evening, October 4. Miss Burke's play this season is "Love Watches," the delightful comedy adapted from the French, in which she scored her first great success as a star at the Lyceum Theatre in New York City last autumn. Local theatregoers have heard so much in its praise that they are looking forward to Miss Burke's engagement here as a genuine treat. According to all accounts, the piece is as wholesome as it is charming and is just the thing to exhibit Miss Burke's own fascinating personality to the very best advantage. Her supporting company, an exceptionally strong one, includes Vernon Steele, Ernest Lawford, W. H. Crompton, Stanley Dark, Maude Odell, Kate Meek, Mildred Barrett and Muriel Ashwynne.

"The Prince Chap" at Ye Liberty

Commencing next Monday evening the Bishop players at Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, will offer "The Prince Chap," Edward Peple's delightful little comedy in which Cyril Scott gained his stellar honors. Although it is less than five years since the piece was first brought out in New York City, it has by this time been played in every English-speaking country on the globe and has been translated into both French and German with success. The play has never before been given a stock presentation across the bay, and Ye Liberty's popular prices should make it especially attractive to Oakland playgoers next week. "The Prince Chap" is a well leveled play about human people, and with a story quite likely to be real. Like "Trilby" it deals with artist life, with scenes laid in Bohemian London. Its story is that of William Peyton, a struggling sculptor, who has forced upon him as ward a little girl of tender years. As the play progresses, so does the girl in years, with the result that three actresses are required to play the character, which is the leading feminine role. In the first act she appears at the age of five, and will be played by Myriam Gleason, the little tot who made such a hit in "The Squaw Man" at both Ye Liberty and the Alcazar in this city. The second act shows her at the age of eight, and the last act on her eighteenth birthday, and little Ethel Tole and Miss Edith Lyle will each in turn show her development. Sydney Ayres should be excellent in the title role, and there are enough other parts to allow of all the favorite members being seen to advantage.

Strong Athletes at the Chutes

Athletes of prodigious strength will go into action at the New Chutes this Sunday when the three Olivers will be presented in what, it is promised, will be little short of marvelous performances. The troupe excels in bar work and feats of balancing which have received flattering criticism wherever the trio has been presented. The Olivers will be seen afternoon and evening. Supplementing them will be several of the acts that have found greatest favor with patrons during the past week. In the free motion picture theatre the three hundred seats have been filled at every performance during the past several days. The program is changed daily with the exception of the film showing the Chutes grounds and crowds during the resort's opening day. This picture has been shown at every performance and will be exhibited again Sunday. Hundreds who were at the Chutes July 14 have sat through the pantomime and scores have had the novel experience of seeing themselves coasting the chutes or laughing at the antics of the "artists" in the flea circus. It is estimated that almost 20,000 faces are shown on the screen. One of the laughable features of the film, done by some trick of the camera, shows the chutes boats, loaded with merrymakers, racing up the incline instead of down it. Popular melodies with a sprinkling of classical numbers will constitute the afternoon and evening concerts played by the California State Band.

A FEW OF THE GIRLS IN "MLLE. MISCHIEF," THE VIENNESE OPERETTA

In which the Shuberts will star Corinne at the Valencia Theatre next week.

The Well-Dressed Man

What to Wear, When and Where

Written exclusively for Town Talk by J. M. JACOBI

For the benefit of those men who have neither the time nor inclination to study the art of Dressing correctly, we will publish a series of weekly Fashion Chats.

The following are the correct styles to be worn at various athletic and out-door pursuits, as determined by the best authorities:

SPORTS

Auto Driving

Overcoat—Fur lined storm ulster, auto ulster, weather-all or mackintosh.
Coat—Sack, Norfolk or double-breasted sack.
Waistcoat—Same as above or fancy cheviot or flannel.
Trousers—Matching coat.
Shirt and Cuffs—Flannel, madras or percale; cuffs, either turned back or plain.
Collar—Fold, soft or stock.
Neckwear—Four-in-hand or bat-wing.
Gloves—Gauntlets, mocha or buck.
Hat—Fur, leather or cloth cap.
Jewelry—Links, scarfpin and watchguard of gold or leather.
Footwear—Black or russet.

EQUESTRIAN

Formal Park

Overcoat—Top coat.
Footwear—High riding boots of black calfskin or patent leather.
Coat—Single-breasted riding frock.
Waistcoat—Fly front Tattersall or light flannel; single-breasted.
Breeches—Matching coat or of fancy material if coat is very dark. Full length, strapped-bottom trousers are fast going out of style except for ring exhibition riding.
Shirt and Cuffs—White, plain or pique.
Collar—Poke or wing.
Cravat—Ascot.
Gloves—Pearl, castor or fawn suede.
Hat—Silk.
Jewelry—Pearl or plain gold scarfpin and links.

Informal Park

Overcoat—Top coat.
Coat—Long, single-breasted riding sack; weather-proofed for storm wear. If warm, the coat and waistcoat may be dispensed with, in which case no headwear is worn.
Waistcoat—Single-breasted, fancy knitted or Tattersall, latter fly-front.
Breeches—Matching coat in light colors or of fancy material where coat is dark.
Shirt—Flannel or cheviot.
Collar and Neckwear—Stock, soft fold with four-in-hand permissible.
Gloves—Chamois or horse hide.
Jewelry—Scarfpin and links of gold or semi-precious stones.
Footwear—High laced shoes and puttee leggings of black calfskin or russet.

Hunt

Coat—Single-breasted pink field frock; gold buttons. Only one club uses green.
Waistcoat—Tattersall or light flannel, single-breasted, fly-front.
Breeches—Generally white.
Shirt and Cuffs—White, plain or pique.
Collar and neckwear—Stock.
Gloves—Suede or chamois.
Hat—Silk.
Jewelry—Plain gold or pearl scarfpin and links.
Footwear—High riding boots of black calfskin or patent leather.

Hunt Dinner

Coat—Pink dress coat. Only one club uses green.
Waistcoat—Regular single-breasted white evening waistcoat, same as for weddings and receptions.
Breeches—Black silk or satin.
Shirt and Cuffs—White, plain or pique.
Collar—Poke or wing.
Neckwear—White tie or pique, linen or fine cambric.
Gloves—White glace kid.
Hat—Silk.
Jewelry—Pearl, mother-of-pearl, moonstone or white stone, studs and links.
Footwear—Black silk stockings; patent leather pumps.

Golfing

Coat—Norfolk or sack, either single or double-breasted.
Waistcoat—Matching coat; knit golf jacket; coat sweater (may be substituted for coat when weather permits); Angora or fancy worsted or wool.
Trousers—Matching coat or flannel, fancy tweed or homespun, either full length or knee length, golf hose with latter.
Shirt and Cuffs—Flannel or cheviot with turned-back cuffs.
Collar—Soft, stock or fold; preferably either of the first two.
Neckwear—Neckerchief with soft, bat-wing or four-in-hand with fold.
Gloves—Buck or chamois.
Hat—Cloth golf hat, crush felt or cap.
Jewelry—Links and scarfpin of gold or stone to match shirt and tie, watchguard.
Footwear—Russet, low cut, waterproofed if weather requires.

A

HUNTER WHISKEY HIGH BALL

IS REFRESHING

HENRY CAMPE & CO., INC.,
Distributors for California and Nevada
San Francisco, Cal.

Milo

Do you know what Quality means in a Turkish Cigarette? If not get a box of "MILO." Then, any other cigarette, and try same, side by side. You'll note the delicate, aromatic mildness of the "MILO." Mildness (yet with the richness in flavor) is what costs in Turkish Tobacco, and its just this that makes the Perfect Cigarette. You'll find it in No Other.

This perfection is obtained only by owning our own plantation in Turkey—the careful watchfulness from the seeding to the finished article.

THE SURBRUG COMPANY, New York City

FRED MAURER

TEACHER OF PIANO AND HARMONY

Accompanist — Coaching Singers and Violinists

1321 SUTTER STREET, SAN FRANCISCO

PHONE FRANKLIN 2143

Berkeley address, 1726 LE ROY AVENUE. Phone Berkeley 539.
Will be at the studio on Mondays

Up Mt. Lowe by Trolley

Towering high among the lofty peaks of the Sierras of Southern California picturesque Mount Lowe stands like a sentinel grim looking down upon the kaleidoscopic panorama of green fields, orchards and flower-flecked land and upon cities and towns between the foothills at its base and the far-reaching ocean to the west. From the apex of this eminence the vista spread out before the eye is one never to be forgotten. Here the view presents the combined charms of mountain, meadow and sea. Faintly in the distance below the eye may catch a glimpse of palatial homes peeping out from among a wealth of green foliage, and farther away the stately spires, domes and massive blocks of city architecture add their beauties to those of nature. Ships, too, are visible upon the ocean, and when the sun hangs low the broad expanse of sky reflects the brilliant colors of its fires, touching also the iridescent waters of the sea, and affords a spectacle of sunset unsurpassed in any land or clime. The ascent of Mount Lowe was accomplished in early days with difficulty and great fatigue. Something more than a decade ago, however, the construction of the incline tramway up its rugged front rendered the trip one of comfort and luxury. On account of the magnificent view obtained from the summit of this mountain and in fact from many points en route, together with the delightful scenic ride on the electric road to the base of the incline, this is reputed one of the most pleasant, profitable and instructive jaunts offered to pleasure seekers anywhere in the world. As a novelty Mount Lowe surpasses any of the strange and beautiful sights to be encountered in America, and is perhaps the most patronized in consequence. It is now becoming generally known that in Southern California may be found a more extensive and diversified series of picturesque scenes than possibly within the same area in any other country upon the face of the globe. Upon the rugged coast or on the sands of the surf-washed beaches of this State, one may enjoy a vista of ocean which in its varying moods is ever prolific of charming spectacles, from the Silvery Foam of the restless surf to the gorgeous sunsets unknown to inland places. The sea is never without interest, and has a peculiar charm, to some more than to others. For those who prefer the grandeur and majesty of the mountains, the Sierra Madre cannot fail to afford inspiration and admiration. There are higher and more rugged mountains elsewhere, but none that rival in sublimity and primeval beauty the cordillera of Semi-Tropic Cali-California. Thus it is that no more pleasurable outing can be conceived than that of the ascent of Mount Lowe over the Pacific Electric Railway and the incline railway.

The Mount Lowe Railway occupies the envious position of being pronounced the most wonderful feat of engineering skill in the construction of railroads, and affords the grandest and most thrilling scenery and views obtainable in the world. In making this trip one ascends from the valley of a tropical climate, with its characteristic fruits and flowers, and enters the higher zone where all trace of these is lost, and in their place we find the stalwart pines of northern countries. Starting from Los Angeles we go through the beautiful San Gabriel Valley with its many attractive homes and scenes, over the Arroyo Seco, where a grand view of Pasadena in the distance is obtained, and still further on are the beautiful Sierra Madre. Passing by the Ostrich Farm, which contains many chicks and full grown birds, and which is always a resort for tourists, we pass through the beautiful City of Pasadena, with its many handsome homes and gardens, on to Altadena, where the Mount Lowe car is in waiting and we are already climbing the foothills. At Rubio Canyon, where we meet the Incline Car, we have ascended 2,100 feet in our ride from Los Angeles. To stand at the foot of the Incline and look up to the next part of our trip is a thrilling experience and not soon forgotten. The grades of this incline are 60, 62, 58 and 48 per cent, and in a distance of 3,000 feet we ascend an altitude of 1,300 feet. It is the most wonderful railway bridge ever built, being 200 feet in length and the upper end being 120 feet higher than the lower end. The road is made absolutely safe by ample safety devices, and affords many thrilling experiences.

As we ascend and seemingly leave the earth, a broader and better view of the valley, the cities and surrounding country is obtained. We step out of the car upon Echo Mountain, 3,500 feet above the sea, and behold a perfect panorama of land and ocean. At this point is situated the Echo Mountain Chalet, commanding such a view of the incline railway as to show all the different grades, the Casino and the famous Observatory, presided over by Prof. Edgar L. Larkin. This observatory contains one of the largest and most powerful telescopes in the world In the evening the great World's Fair Search Light bursts forth casting its rays upon the distant cities, revealing some special object, then changing its course toward the mountains, making as light as day the Great Circular Bridge and other interesting points along the railway, then down into the bottomless pits of the canyons. These features furnish great amusement and pleasure. After we have searched out some of the points of interest, we then visit the observatory. Here, also, is obtained a commanding view of the San Gabriel, La Canada and San Fernando valleys, Altadena, Pasadena, Los Angeles and the Pacific Ocean, Santa Catalina, San Clemente, Santa Barbara and the San Nicholas Islands. Far below, as the darkness of the night approaches, there appears in the distance a multitude of sparkling jewels, which it is difficult to realize are the electric lights of the cities of Los Angeles, Pasadena, Santa Monica and other places forty miles and more away.

From Echo Mountain to Alpine Tavern one travels through the grandest mountain scenery in the world. Los Flores Canyon, Cape of Good Hope, Millard Canyon, Live Oak Grove, Circular Bridge, Sunset Point, Granite Gate, Grand Canyon, Alpine Park and Mount Lowe Springs are beautiful and inviting points of interest which are seen in succession after leaving Echo Mountain en route to Alpine Tavern. We reach Alpine Tavern, 5,000 feet above the sea level, the view of which suddenly breaks upon us as we round the last curve of this winding mountain railway. Alpine Tavern is the starting point of many beautiful and exceedingly interesting trips. From this point ponies may be secured for the ascent to the summit of Mount Lowe, along a trail which affords an experience in mountaineering.

E. B. COURVOISIER

The well known Art Dealer and Frame Maker announces to the public the opening of his new store at 431 Sutter street between Stockton and Powell.

LIQUEUR
PÈRES
CHARTREUX
GREEN AND YELLOW

NECTAR OF THE GODS

QUALITY UNEQUALED
EXCELLENCE UNSURPASSED

At first-class Wine Merchants, Grocers, Hotels, Cafes,
Batjer & Co., 45 Broadway, New York, N. Y.,
Sole Agents for United States.

Jacques and Francine

(Continued from Page 10.)

chapter of confidences—well, you know to what that leads. Sentences after a while become confused, full of reticence; the voice low; words alternate with sighs; hands meet and complete the thought which mounts from the heart to the lips, and —seek the conclusion in your own memory, O young couples!

At last the moon unveiled, and its clear light poured into the room. Mlle. Francine started from her musings with a little cry.

"What ails you?" asked Jacques, putting his arm around her waist.

"Nothing, I thought I heard some one knock." And, without Jacques observing it, she kicked under a piece of furniture the key she had just perceived.

She did not want to find it.

I have promised you a muff; and I will give it to you presently, as my friend Jacques did to his poor friend Francine, who had become his mistress, as I explained to you in the blank lines above. She was fair, was Francine—fair and lively, which is not usual. She met with Jacques, and she loved him. Their union lasted six months. They had met in the spring; they parted in autumn. Francine was consumptive; she knew it, and her friend knew it, too. A fortnight after he became intimate with the young girl he had heard it from one of his friends, who was a doctor. "She will leave you when the leaves are yellow," he had said.

Francine had heard this verdict, and perceived the despair that it caused her friend.

"What matter the yellow leaves?" she said to him, throwing all her love into a smile. "What matters the autumn? We are in summer now, and the leaves are green; let us make use of it, my friend. When you see me ready to leave this life, you will take me in your arms and kiss me, and you will forbid me to go. I am obedient, and I shall stay."

And thus this charming creature encountered, during five months, the troubles of bohemian life, with a song and a smile on her lips. As for Jacques, he let himself be blinded. His friend often said to him: "Francine is getting worse; she needs care." Then Jacques ran about all over Paris, trying to obtain the needful means for carrying out the doctor's directions; but Francine would not have him speak of it, and threw the medicines out of the window. In the night, when her cough seized her, she would leave the room and go out on to the landing, so that Jacques might not hear her.

One day, when they had both gone to the country, Jacques perceived a tree whose foliage was turning yellow. He looked sadly at Francine, who walked slowly and musingly.

Francine saw Jacques turn pale, and she guessed the cause of his pallor.

"Go along with you, you are foolish!" said she, kissing him. "We are only in July; there are three months still to October; and by loving each other night and day, as we do, we shall double the time we have to spend together. And besides, if I feel worse when the leaves turn yellow, we will go and live in a pine-wood; there the leaves are always green."

In the month of October, Francine was obliged to keep her bed. Jacques' friend attended her. The little chamber in which they lodged was situated at the very top of the house, and looked out into a yard, whence uprose a tree which daily lost more and more leaves. Jacques had put a curtain before the window to hide this tree from the invalid; but Francine insisted on his drawing back the curtain.

"O my friend," said she to Jacques, "I will give you a hundred times as many kisses as it has leaves." And she would add: "Besides, I am a great deal better. I shall soon go out; but as it will be cold, and I do not want to have red hands, you shall buy me a muff."

During her whole illness this muff was her only dream.

On All-Saints eve, seeing Jacques more distressed than usual, she wanted to cheer him; and to show him that she was better, she got up. The doctor arrived at that moment, and forced her to go back to bed.

"Jacques," he whispered to the artist, "be brave. All is over; Francine is dying."

Jacques burst into tears.

"You may give her anything she asks for now," added the doctor; "there is no more hope."

Francine heard with her eyes what the doctor had said.

"Do not listen to him!" exclaimed she, stretching out her arms to Jacques; "do not listen to him; he lies! We will go out together tomorrow; it is All-Saints day. It will be cold; go and buy me a muff, I beg of you, for I am afraid of getting chilblains this winter."

Jacques was going out with his friend, but Francine detained the doctor.

"Go and get my muff," said she to Jacques; "get the best, so that it may last a long time." But when she was alone with the doctor, she said: "O sir, I am going to die, and I know it! But before you go, find me something that will give me strength for one night. I beg of you, make me beautiful for one more night; and after that let me die, since the Lord does not wish me to live any longer."

As the doctor was consoling her to the best of his power, a northeasterly blast blew into the room and threw upon the sick-bed a yellow leaf, torn from the tree in the little yard. Francine drew back the curtain, and saw that the tree was now quite bare.

"It is the last—" as she placed the leaf under her pillow.

"You will not die till tomorrow," said the doctor; "you have one night more."

"Oh, what happiness!" cried the young girl. "A winter's night! It shall be long."

Jacques came back; he brought a muff.

"It is very pretty," said Francine; "I shall wear it for going out."

Next day, All-Saints, while the Angelus was ringing, her last agony seized her, and her whole body began to tremble.

"My hands are cold," she murmured; "give me my muff." And she plunged her poor hands into the fur.

"It is over," said the doctor; "go and kiss her."

Jacques pressed his lips on those of his love.

At the last moment they wanted to remove the muff, but she clutched it in her hands.

"No, no," she said; "leave it to me; it is winter, and so cold. Ah, my poor Jacques! ah, my poor Jacques! what will become of you? O my God!"

And the next day Jacques was alone.

YOUR WINTER TRIP

No better or more comfortable way than the

SUNSET ROUTE

Between San Francisco and New Orleans

Through the orange groves of Southern California---the cotton and rice fields of the balmy South

Drawing-room sleepers---berths---sections---drawing-rooms. Dining service unequaled. Observation car---open-air rotunda---ladies' parlor---gentlemen's cafe---library. Personally conducted tourist excursion parties to Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, New Orleans and Washington every week.

Write for WAYSIDE NOTES ALONG THE SUNSET ROUTE---Tells in detail of the attractions of the Southern Route

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Ticket Offices
FLOOD BUILDING
MARKET STREET FERRY DEPOT
13th and FRANKLIN STS., OAKLAND

Auto Notes

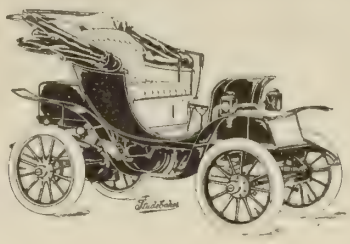
Three automobile loads of Riverside residents in Studebaker cars have just spent a couple of weeks camping out on the northern slopes of "Old Baldy." The party comprised Claude P. Hancock and family, Geo. P. Harsh and family, Theo. Crossley, Dr. Sleeper, C. A. Dundas, R. J. Lutz and Jack Thompson. The route brought the machines within a short distance of the peak on the northern slope of the mountain, the climb being made by way of Cajon Pass, from which a detour was made to the left, the latter part of the route consisting of little more than a trail. A luggage wagon was sent a day ahead of the motorists. The country is heavily timbered and is said to be an ideal spot for sport. In the last two weeks fourteen deer have been reported killed in Swardout Canyon. The attempt at climbing the mountain with four passengers in each car in addition to one thousand pounds of luggage, according to automobile men, shows what remarkable things a motor car is capable of doing. The climb and return, involving a distance of 97 miles, was made in 9 hours, a record by itself.

The Pioneer Automobile Company, through E. P. Brinegar who has just returned from the East, announces that it has decided to enter aggressively into the truck business. After a thorough investigation of all the different factories in the East that are now manufacturing vehicles for public service arrangements were concluded for the Northern half of California and Nevada, with E. Goldman & Co. of Chicago, manufacturers of the Randolph trucks. This company has built within the last year two hundred trucks of the one ton type and is now taking orders for two, three and five ton trucks. E. Goldman & Co. are among the oldest and best known manufacturers of brewery machinery in the United States. They saw the opportunity for trucks and have purchased a large factory in Chicago and will turn out this season at least five hundred trucks. These trucks and delivery wagons, Mr. Brinegar states, are built on different lines than have been followed by manufacturers heretofore and one ton delivery wagons are built with solid angle iron frame, and the cars have plenty of power.

Mr. and Mrs. Dallas of Merced, accompanied by Dr. and Mrs. Larkey of Oakland, have just returned from a two weeks' tour through the interior of the State. Leaving Modesto in Mr. Dallas' sixty horsepower Thomas Flyer, the party spent several days visiting different points in San Joaquin County. The roads here were very sandy and traveling was found to be difficult at times, especially where it was necessary to drive four miles through fields, but no difficulty was experienced. R. S. Luther, who drove the car, reports that the roads for the rest of the trip were splendid until Ukiah was reached, and in that section they are worse than anything else in the State. The party visited all the principal resorts, including Aetna, Whitney Springs, Soda Bay, Oroville and Ukiah. At Calistoga the forest fires were so threatening that the people were very anxious and many were preparing to leave. The smoke and cinders were bad all through that section.

News has been received that the executive officers of the Studebaker automobile company, which for the past several years have been located in Cleveland, Ohio, have been transferred to South Bend, Indiana, the home of the big Studebaker factory. The Cleveland office will be retained at the Ohio branch.

Automobile men who exhibited their machines at the State Fair at Sacramento recently were all pleased with the results. Thousands of persons from all parts of the valley visited the Capital City and many bought machines. The Studebaker exhibit was awarded first prize for general exhibit.



The Pioneer Automobile Company reports the following recent sales: Hudsons: H. A. Butters Jr., J. P. Edwards, P. M. Doyle of Truckee, R. Harper, Steve Neil, Sacramento; J. S. Ritchie, Merced; George P. Robinson, Fair Oaks; D. N. Combs, Sacramento; George Starr, Oakland; A. C. Kemp, Robert Bruning, Jesse Jasen and H. T. Scott. Chalmers-Detroits: C. H. Brown, Mr. White, Ross Valley; V. V. Peters, A. J. Lowell, Grey & Lunze, Dr. W. J. Young, Stockton; W. D. West, Oakland; Robert Worthington, Alameda; Mrs. Lanz, H. Nathan, Sacramento; Charles Stewart, Charles McCarty, Fresno; T. A. Marks, Fresno; Dr. E. E. Thompson, Red Bluff; P. C. Drescher, Sacramento; C. T. Bryner, Oakland, Kelly Brothers. Thomas: J. E. Newman; S. M. Phillips, Sacramento; John Craig, Woodland; R. G. Fowler, Gilroy; A. C. Wheelock, Fresno.

E. L. Whitman, Stockton agent for Chalmers-Detroit and Hudson cars, reports excellent sales.

Taking the three chief events of a three days' race meet was the achievement of a stock model Studebaker E-M-F "30" at Amarillo, Texas, a few days ago. On the first day the fifteen mile free-for-all was the chief feature and the Studebaker E-M-F "30" easily captured the honors, despite the fact that a number of much higher horsepower cars were entered against it. On the second day a fifteen mile race for women drivers was captured by the Studebaker E-M-F "30." On the third and last day in a forty mile race against 40 and 50 horsepower cars the Studebaker E-M-F "30" not only won, but set a pace that was surprising for a stock model car of its size and price. The time, 45:1-8(showing an average of 56 miles an hour or less than 1:08 per mile for the entire distance.

A Domestic Eye Remedy

Compounded by Experienced Physicians. Conforms to Pure Food and Drugs Law. Wins Friends Wherever Used. Ask Druggists for Murine Eye Remedy. Try Murine in Your Eyes. You Will Like Murine. Try it in Baby's Eyes. It Soothes.

The Society Belle

to whom delightful independence appeals and who appreciates refinement with a degree of luxury and unquestioned elegance, cannot resist the new

STUDEBAKER ELECTRIC

Its daintiness of appointment captures her instantly. It is a fitting complement to her cultured tastes. Besides, its simplicity of operation and control makes it safer to drive than a horse. It travels as fast as any woman cares to go; is always clean and inviting and is practically proof against accidents.

Victoria-Phaetons and Coupes for immediate delivery

Fremont at Mission

Studebaker

Phone Douglas 3000

PIONEER

Automobile Co.

Booking orders for early delivery on 1910 Model Hudson Runabouts, Chalmers-Detroit 30's and 40's and all types of Thomas Flyers. Sample Cars will be on exhibition at our salesrooms within three weeks from date.

901 GOLDEN GATE AVE., SAN FRANCISCO

188 Twelfth St., Oakland 1222 I Street, Fresno

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

In the Matter of the Estate of JAMES B. STETSON, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Harry N. Stetson, Executor of the Will of JAMES B. STETSON, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executor at the office of Deamer & Stetson, being said Executor and his attorney, at Room No. 926, Mills Building, at the northeast corner of Bush and Montgomery Streets, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of JAMES B. STETSON, deceased.

HARRY N. STETSON,
Executor of the Will of James B. Stetson, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, September 25, 1909.

WILLIAM W. DEAMER, Attorney for Executor,
926 Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal. 9-25-5

Letters

A Primer in Swindling

"The Confessions of a Con Man" as told to (and by) Will Irwin, adds one more to the list of exposures of the methods and manners of the denizens of the under world. As Mr. Irwin in his preface has disclaimed any other credit than that of the transcriber of the narrative, we may eliminate him from consideration further than to give him credit for the admirable reticence he has displayed. We have not Will Irwin's idea of what a confidence schemer is but what the man reveals himself to be. Taking this story in connection with the investigations of Professor Walter Wickoff, Josiah Flynt, A. K. Friedman and the tales of O. Henry, there seems to be but one way of looking upon this class of adventurers. Instead of being the victims of an iniquitous system, the children of misfortune deprived of education and opportunity and forced into a life of crime, apparently it is just the other way. These swindlers, tramps and professional beggars devote more time and attention to the selection of a career than do the honest artisans, and they become artists in crime because they are satisfied in advance that they will be able to enjoy larger returnes from a smaller outlay and to participate in more excitement with less risk than in any other occupation. They are "converted" if they ever are, not by being convinced of the wickedness or unfairness of their dealings with their fellows but because a comparison of results has shown them the error of their calculations before they have parted with their ability to turn over another leaf. No card sharper, gold brick artist, pea and shell man or professional swindler of any other type has any compunctions about cheating, because it is the first principle of the scheme that if the "victim" did not see what appears to him an excellent opportunity to take advantage of a "greeney" or a fellow mortal in distress, he would not be led into the transaction at all. Moreover, none of these enterprises, whether plain stealing or more elaborate bunkoing, could be carried on without the connivance of the authorities supported and maintained in office by municipalities for the very purpose of suppressing them. In a word, the schemer has two sets of accomplices, the ones who overreach themselves by playing his game and the legal authorities who are willing to grant immunity for a share of the spoils. It is an axiom amongst all who make a living by the exercise of their wits that people in general are more anxious to be "done" than the confidence operators are to "do them," and it is a singular gleam that this particular con-man throws into the dark places of human nature when he admits that though professional gamblers know that all games of chance are crooked, they will yet lose the money they gain by their frauds in trying to win from some other combination of their own sort. As to the genesis of the con-man, this particular one is frank in owning that he began his career in a small way as a no-account boy of seventeen who had a good but over-indulgent father and a mother easy to "get-around," in a word, he did about as he pleased, exempt, like most young Americans from any semblance of discipline. Uneducated, in any but the meagerest sense, and apparently unread in anything save matters pertaining to his own calling, the "con-man" is yet a reflective philosopher and his axiomatic epigrams are as well turned and as practical as those of the literary gentry.

"Human greed is the best booster of the confidence man."

"An honest dollar is the only dollar that don't do stunts around your pillow at night."

"Don't keep a crooked game long in any one place. Your very success makes people shy of it."

"It is the safety of any con game that your sucker is generally your accomplice."

"There's no hunting in the world like hunting men."

A book of this kind ought to be a primer of warning to the foolish, but it will probably fall like the proverbial shower upon the back of a duck because "Human greed is the best booster of the confidence man," and we have Scripture warrant for the certainty that though a fool be brayed in a mortar he will not be separated from his folly. B. W. Huebsch of New York is the publisher.

Unsatisfactory Verses

As Livingston Wright has put forth his thin, small volume under the title "Down the Road with a Tramp Writer," it is evident that he rates his efforts modestly enough to spare him from scathing criticism. It is difficult, at best, for one on the other side of the world to pass judgment, for verses which are dedicated to individuals or composed for special local occasions are apt to be like private jokes, flat, stale and unprofitable to those who lack the key to the allusions. The probabilities are that many of these unpretentious little booklets aspire to nothing more than private circulation among the initiates, and the impression felt by these seventy pages of neatly printed rhymes is that they have been for the most part impromptu, that the author could do much better were he to settle down to the job seriously, and that the comments of the outsider would be as much of an impertinence as those of a stage censor regulating a child's game. The "tramp writer" might have done much worse; he probably will do much better, and also probably he has done just what he meant to do, or pretty near it this time. and we'll let it go at that.

LOW RATES

TO

ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION

FOR ROUND TRIP TICKETS

FROM

San Francisco	$32.50
Sacramento	32.50
Lathrop	32.50
Stockton	32.50
Tracy	32.50
Suisun	32.50
Davis	32.50
Napa	32.75
Santa Rosa	33.60
Calistoga	33.95

Greatly reduced rates from other points in California. Tickets sold daily May 25 to September 30, and cover two months' trip going and coming via the famous

SHASTA ROUTE

OF THE

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Stopovers going and coming. Many other routes at slightly higher rates for you to select from.

Write or call on our nearest agent for full details of service, etc., or address

FLOOD BUILDING FOR INFORMATION

UNION LUMBER COMPANY

Redwood and Pine Lumber

Railroad Ties, Telegraph Poles, Shingles, Split Shakes, etc.

CROCKER BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Yards and Planing Mills—6th and Channel Streets

LARGEST COLLECTION ON THE COAST

DIAMONDS AND GEMS

BALDWIN JEWELRY CO.

1261 VAN NESS AVENUE AT SUTTER

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of LOUIS HIRSCH, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the estate of LOUIS HIRSCH, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator at the office of the Administrator, 912 Humboldt Savings Bank Building, No. 785 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of LOUIS HIRSCH, deceased.

MICHAEL SAVANNAH,
Administrator of the Estate of Louis Hirsch, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, September 25, 1909.

OTTO IRVING WISE, Attorney for Administrator,
Humboldt Savings Bank Bldg., San Francisco, Cal. 9-25-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY REALTY SHOULD NOT BE MORTGAGED

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 5577, New Series, Dept. 10, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of ANASTASIA FEELEY, Deceased.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Executor of the Last Will and Testament of ANASTASIA FEELEY, deceased, having filed herein his verified petition for an order authorizing, empowering and directing him, as such Executor, to mortgage certain real property belonging to the estate of said deceased, which real property is described as follows, to-wit:

An undivided one-half interest and all other right, title or interest which said estate now has or may hereafter acquire in and to that certain lot, piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and described as follows, to-wit:

Commencing at a point on the Southerly line of Twenty-second Street, distant thereon One Hundred and Twenty-five (125) feet Westerly from the corner formed by the intersection of the Westerly line of Bryant Avenue, or Street, with the said Southerly line of Twenty-second Street; running thence Westerly and along the said Southerly line of Twenty-second Street Twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Southerly and parallel with Bryant Avenue, or Street, One Hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly and parallel with Twenty-second Street Twenty-five (25) feet, and thence at right angles Northerly and parallel with Bryant Avenue, or Street, One Hundred (100) feet to the Southerly line of Twenty-second Street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of Mission Block Number One Hundred and Forty-seven (147).

It is hereby ordered that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Superior Court on Tuesday, the 19th day of October, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the courtroom of Department 10 of said Superior Court, in the Grant Building, on the Southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why the real property herein described, or some part thereof, should not be mortgaged for the amount mentioned in said petition, to-wit, the sum of Eight Hundred and Fifty ($850.00) Dollars, or such lesser amount as to the Court or Judge shall seem meet; and reference for further particulars is hereby made to the said petition on file herein.

Dated, September 15, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Sep. 15, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By E. G. Wilson, Deputy Clerk.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Attorney at Law,
Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal. 9-18-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8275, New Series, Dept. No. 9, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of LILLIAN T. SCOTT, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Mary Lamasney and Mrs. C. M. Haley, Executrices of the last will and testament of the above named Lillian T. Scott, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice, (which first publication occurs on the 18th day of September, 1909), to the said Mary Lamasney and Mrs. C. M. Haley, executrices of the last will and testament of said Lillian T. Scott, deceased, at the office of John J. Barrett, room 1255 Flood Building, number 870 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of said Lillian T. Scott, deceased.

MARY LAMASNEY,
MRS. C. M. HALEY,
Executrices of the Last Will and Testament of said Lillian T. Scott. Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, California, September 18, 1909.

MASTICK & PARTRIDGE, and JOHN J. BARRETT,
Attorneys for said Executrices,
Rooms 1255-1257 Flood Building, San Francisco, Cal. 9-18-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY REALTY SHOULD NOT BE MORTGAGED

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 4975, New Series, Dept. 10, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of PIERCE FEELEY, Deceased.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Administrator of the Estate of PIERCE FEELEY, deceased, having filed herein his verified petition for an order authorizing, empowering and directing him, as such Administrator, to mortgage certain real property belonging to the estate of said deceased, which real property is described as follows, to-wit:

An undivided one-half interest in the following described lot, piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to-wit:

Commencing at a point on the Southerly line of Twenty-second Street, distant thereon One Hundred and Twenty-five (125) feet Westerly from the corner formed by the intersection of the Westerly line of Bryant Avenue, or Street, with the said Southerly line of Twenty-second Street; running thence Westerly and along the said Southerly line of Twenty-second Street Twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Southerly and parallel with Bryant Avenue, or Street, One Hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly and parallel with Twenty-second Street Twenty-five (25) feet, and thence at right angles Northerly and parallel with Bryant Avenue, or Street, One Hundred (100) feet to the Southerly line of Twenty-second Street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of Mission Block Number One Hundred and Forty-seven (147).

It is hereby ordered that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Superior Court on Tuesday, the 19th day of October, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the courtroom of Department 10 of said Superior Court, in the Grant Building, on the Southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why the real property herein described, or some part thereof, should not be mortgaged for the amount mentioned in said petition, to-wit, the sum of Three Hundred and Fifty ($350.00) Dollars, or such lesser amount as to the Court or Judge shall seem meet; and reference for further particulars is hereby made to the said petition on file herein.

Dated, September 15, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Sep. 15, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By E. G. Wilson, Deputy Clerk.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Attorney at Law,
Mills Building, San Francisco, Cal. 9-18-5

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8103, Dept. No. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of BERTHA MARKS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Rose Marks, the Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of BERTHA MARKS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executrix, at the office of C. H. Oatman, room 516 Balboa Building, corner Second and Market streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of BERTHA MARKS, deceased.

ROSE MARKS,
Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of Bertha Marks, deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 7th, 1909.

ARTHUR L. LEVINSKY, Attorney for said Executrix,
Stockton, California. 8-7-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 8276, New Series, Dept. No. 9, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of WILLIAM RYAN, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Thomas P. Ryan, executor of the last will and testament of the above named William Ryan, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice (which first publication occurs on the 18th day of September, 1909), to the said Thomas P. Ryan, executor of the last will and testament of said William Ryan, deceased, at the office of John J. Barrett, room 1255 Flood Building, number 870 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of said William Ryan, deceased.

THOMAS P. RYAN,
Executor of the Last Will and Testament of William Ryan, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, California, September 18, 1909.

JOHN J. BARRETT, and FRANK I. BARRETT,
Attorneys for said Executor.
Flood Building, San Francisco, California. 9-18-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of MARIE EMMA LA FAILLE, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the estate of MARIE EMMA LA FAILLE, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator at his office No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of MARIE EMMA LA FAILLE, deceased.

A. COMTE, JR.,
Administrator of the Estate of Marie Emma La Faille, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, September 18, 1909.

A. COMTE, JR., Attorney for Estate,
333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. 9-18-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of ALOISE GLESS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executor of the last will and Testament of ALOISE GLESS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executor at the law office of A. Comte Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of ALOISE GLESS, deceased.

JULES P. GLESS,
Executor of the last Will and Testament of Aloise Gless, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, September 11, 1909.

A. COMTE Jr., Attorney for Executor,
333 Kearny St., San Francisco, Cal. 9-11-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of ELIZABETH MORAN, Deceased—No. 8189, Department 9.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administrator of the estate of ELIZABETH MORAN, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administrator at the office of his attorneys, Messrs. Robinson & Getz, Oscar Luning Building, 45 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as his place of business in all matters connected with said estate of ELIZABETH MORAN, deceased.

RICHARD GEORGE MORAN,
Administrator of the Estate of Elizabeth Moran, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, September 25, 1909.

ROBINSON & GETZ, Attorneys for Administrator,
Oscar Luning Bldg., 45 Kearny St., San Francisco, Cal. 9-25-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE ON SALE OF REAL PROPERTY

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 7926, Department 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of JOHN GEHERTY, Deceased.

CECELIA GEHERTY, the Administratrix of the Will annexed of the Estate of JOHN GEHERTY, deceased, having heretofore presented to the Court and filed with the Clerk thereof her verified petition praying for an Order of this Court authorizing, empowering and directing her to sell certain real property, in said petition particularly described, belonging to the estate of said deceased, and it appearing to the Court that it is necessary to sell the whole of the real property in said petition described, to pay the debts outstanding against the said deceased, and the debts, expenses and charges of administration and the family allowance, and that it is for the advantage, benefit and best interest of the estate and those interested therein that said real estate be sold:

It is hereby ordered that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased be, and they are hereby directed to appear before the above-entitled Court in the Courtroom of Department No. 10 thereof, in the Grant Building, Southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, on Monday, the 25th day of October, A. D. 1909, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, to then and there show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administratrix with the Will annexed, for the sale of all said real property.

It is further ordered that a copy of this Order to Show Cause be published in "Town Talk," a newspaper of general circulation, printed and published in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, once a week for four (4) successive weeks.

Dated, San Francisco, September 16, A. D. 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

FABIUS T. FINCH and PAUL F. FRATESSA, Attorneys for Petitioner,
660 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal. 9-25-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of ELLEN HOGAN, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executors of the last Will of ELLEN HOGAN, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executors at the office of their attorney, R. F. Morgan, No. 773 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of ELLEN HOGAN, deceased.

MARY E. HOGAN and WILLIAM A. HOGAN,
Executors of the Last Will of Ellen Hogan, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, September 25, 1909.

R. F. MORGAN, Attorney for Executors,
773 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal. 9-25-5

THE NATURAL FLAVOR

Of the richest and purest cow's milk is retained in Borden's Pioneer Brand Evaporated Milk (unsweetened). It is especially adapted for use either plain or diluted on breakfast fruits or cereals. In coffee and chocolate it is much better than fresh cream. It enriches all milk dishes.

ORDER OF SALE OF CERTAN REAL ESTATE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

In the Matter of the Estate and Guardianship of JAMES HARRINGTON, Incompetent.

It appearing to this Court from the petition this day presented and filed by Mary Harrington, the guardian of the person and estate of JAMES HARRINGTON, incompetent, praying for an order of sale of certain real estate belonging to said incompetent and that it is for the best interest of said incompetent and necessary that such real estate should be sold;

It is hereby ordered that the next of kin of the said incompetent and all persons interested in the said estate appear before this Court on Monday, the 11th day of October, 1909, at ten o'clock, at the Courtroom of this Court, in the Grant Building, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, then and there to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of such estate.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for at least three successive weeks before the said hearing in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dated, September 2, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

HUGH O'NEILL, Attorney for Guardian,
Foxcroft Building, San Francisco, Cal. 9-11-4

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY MORTGAGE SHOULD NOT BE RENEWED

In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California—No. 7168, Dept. 10.

In the Matter of the Estate of CHARLOTTE F. CLARKE, Deceased.

Upon reading and filing the petition of Charles G. Lyman, executor of the last will and testament of CHARLOTTE F. CLARKE, deceased,

It is ordered that all persons interested in said estate be and appear in this Court in Department 10 thereof, in the Grant Building, on the southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, San Francisco, on Thursday, the 7th day of October, 1909, at the hour of ten o'clock a. m. of said day, then and there to show cause, if any they have why the said Charles G. Lyman as such executor should not join with Edith A. E. Lyman, E. K. Clarke, also known as Edward K. Clarke, also known as Edward Kane Clarke, and Charlotte H. Wright, in making, executing and delivering to Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, a corporation, a promissory note or notes in writing, in the sum of $40,422.27, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum, likewise joining the three said last named persons in making, executing and delivering to the said Hibernia Savings and Loan Society, a corporation, a mortgage as security for said promissory note or notes, upon the following described real estate, situate lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California:

Commencing at a point formed by the intersection of the southerly line of Post Street with the easterly line of Jones Street, running thence southerly and along said easterly line of Jones Street sixty (60) feet; thence at right angles easterly and along the northerly line of Cottage Place seventy (70) feet, six (6) inches; thence at a right angle northerly sixty (60) feet; thence at a right angle westerly along said southerly line of Jones Street seventy (70) feet, six (6) inches to the point of commencement; being a part of Fifty Vara Block No. 223.

Reference is hereby made to the petition on file herein for further particulars.

It is further ordered that this order be published once a week for four successive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper of general circulation in said City and County.

Dated this 30th day of August, 1909. THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

MASTICK & PARTRIDGE, Attorneys for Executor,
Foxcroft Building, 68 Post St., San Francisco, Cal. 9-4-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of Jules E. de ST. DENIS, also Called JULES St. DENIS, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Executor and Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of JULES E. de ST. DENIS, also called JULES ST. DENIS, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within ten (10) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Executor and Executrix at the office of A. Comte Jr., No. 333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned select as their place of business in all matters connected with said estate of JULES E. de ST. DENIS, also called JULES ST. DENIS, deceased.

WILLIAM C. KEWIN, Executor,
JULIE HEILBRON, Executrix,
Of the Last Will and Testament of Jules E. de St. Dennis, also called Jules St. Denis, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 25th, 1909.

A. COMTE, JR., Attorney for Executors,
333 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. 8-28-5

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of WILLIAM H. NOLAN, Deceased—No.8259—Dept. 10.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned Administratrix of the estate of WILLIAM H. NOLAN, deceased, to the creditors of and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers within four (4) months after the first publication of this notice to the said Administratrix at the office of Messrs. Breen & Kelly, Attorneys at Law and Attorneys for said Administratrix, at their office, Rooms 1109-1110 Humboldt Bank Building, No. 785 Market Street, San Francisco, California, which said office the undersigned selects as her place of business in all matters connected with said estate of WILLIAM H. NOLAN, deceased.

MARGARET M. NOLAN,
Administratrix of the Estate of William H. Nolan, Deceased.

Dated, San Francisco, August 31, 1909.

BREEN & KELLY, Attorneys for Administratrix,
Humboldt Bank Building, San Francisco, Cal. 9-4-5

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY SALE OF REAL PROPERTY SHOULD NOT BE MADE

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 3762 N. S., Dept. 10, Probate.

In the Matter of the Estate of MICHAEL DUFFY, Deceased.

JOSEPH A. STULZ, Administrator of the estate of MICHAEL DUFFY, deceased, having presented his petition herein, duly verified, praying for an order of the sale of the whole of the real estate of said deceased, or so much or such parts thereof as said Court shall judge necessary or beneficial for the reasons and purposes in said petition mentioned and set forth.

And such petition having been filed, it is now ordered by said Court that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased be, and they are hereby directed to appear before said Court on Tuesday, the 5th day of October, 1909, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the courtroom of Department 10 of said Superior Court in the Grant Building, on the southeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, to show cause, if any they have, why an order should not be granted to said Administrator to sell the whole or so much of the real estate of said decedent as may be necessary.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in "Town Talk," a newspaper printed and published in the said City and County of San Francisco, State of California

Dated, San Francisco, this 25th day of August, A. D., 1909.

THOS. F. GRAHAM, Judge.

Endorsed: Filed Aug. 25, 1909. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk. By H. G. Benedict, Deputy Clerk.

EDWARD J. LYNCH, Attorney for Administrator,
Mills Buildings, San Francisco, Cal. 9-4-5

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—Action No. 18016.

MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, Plaintiff,
vs.
All Persons Claiming Any Interest in, or Lien Upon, the Real Property Herein Described, or Any Part Thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California, to all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof, defendants, Greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the Complaint of MARGARET J. GILMARTIN, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above entitled Court and County, within three (3) months after the first publication of this Summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property, or any part thereof, situate, lying and being in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, and particularly described as follows:

PARCEL NUMBER ONE

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of Green Street, distant thereon one hundred and seventeen (117) feet and seven and one-fifth (7 1-5) inches Easterly from the Easterly line of Franklin Street; running thence Easterly and along said Northerly line of Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Westerly and parallel to Green Street twenty-seven (27) feet and six (6) inches; thence at right angles Southerly one hundred and thirty-seven (137) feet and six (6) inches to the said Northerly line of Green Street and point of commencement.

Being a part of Western Addition Block No. 96.

PARCEL NUMBER TWO

Commencing at a point on the Northerly line of "C" Street, distant thereon thirty-two (32) feet and six (6) inches Westerly from the Westerly line of Twenty-fifth (25th) Avenue; running thence Westerly along said Northerly line of "C" Street twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Northerly one hundred (100) feet; thence at right angles Easterly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Southerly one hundred (100) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 356.

PARCEL NUMBER THREE

Commencing at a point on the Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue, distant thereon one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet Southerly from the Southerly line of "T" Street; running thence Southerly along said Westerly line of Forty-fourth (44) Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; and thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the point of beginning.

Being a portion of Outside Land Block No. 1153.

PARCEL NUMBER FOUR

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue, distant two hundred and twenty-five (225) feet Southerly from the Southeasterly corner of "A" Street and Twenty-first Avenue; running thence Southerly along the said Easterly line of Twenty-first Avenue twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Easterly one hundred and twenty (120) feet; thence at right angles Northerly twenty-five (25) feet; thence at right angles Westerly one hundred and twenty (120) feet to the place of beginning. The same being a portion of Outside Lands Block Number Three Hundred and Three (303).

PARCEL NUMBER FIVE

Commencing at a point on the Easterly line of Larkin Street, distant thereon seventy-seven (77) feet and six (6) inches Northerly from the corner formed by the intersection of said Easterly line of Larkin Street with the Northerly line of Union Street, running thence Northerly along said Easterly line of Larkin Street, twenty (20) feet; thence at right angles Easterly sixty (60) feet to the Westerly line of Moore Street; thence at right angles Southerly along said line of Moore Street twenty (20) feet; and thence at right angles Westerly sixty (60) feet to the point of commencement.

Being a portion of Fifty Vara Lot No. 1393.

And you are hereby notified that unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint, to-wit:

That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property, and the whole thereof, in fee simple absolute; that her title to all said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, title, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consist of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover her costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Court, this 26th day of July A. D. 1909.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.
By JAS. P. KANE, Deputy Clerk.

MEMORANDUM

The first publication of this Summons was made in Town Talk newspaper on the 31st day of July, A. D. 1909.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff: None.

JOHN J. BARRETT, Attorney for Plaintiff,
Rooms 1255-57 Flood Bldg., San Francisco, Cal. 7-31-10

SUMMONS

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco—No. 24635.

JENNIE OXTOBY, Plaintiff,
vs.
JAMES W. OXTOBY, Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City of and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in the office of the County Clerk of said City and County.

The People of the State of California send greeting to James W. Oxtoby, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this Summons, if served within this City and county; or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment and decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony now existing between plaintiff and defendant on the ground of defendant's extreme cruelty; also for general relief, as will more fully appear in the complaint on file, to which special reference is hereby made.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you appear and answer as above required, the said plaintiff will take judgment for any moneys or damages demanded in the complaint as arising upon contract, or will apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the complaint.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 11th day of August, A. D. 1909. By L. J. Welch, Deputy Clerk.

(Seal) H. I. MULCREVY, Clerk.

WEINMANN, WOOD & CUNHA, Attorneys for Plaintiff. 9-4-10

Louis Crepaux
(Member of Paris Grand Opera)
Has removed to his new studio,
Delbert Block, 943 Van Ness avenue, cor. O'Farrell.
Reception hours: 11:30 to 12, and 3 to 4, except Wednesdays. Wednesdays in Oakland, 1154 Brush street

Emil Steinegger
PIANOFORTE PLAYING
924 Grove St (above Fillmore), San Francisco.
For appointments phone Merritt 2845
Thursdays, 2701 Regent St., Berkeley

Donald Maclean
SINGING—Pupil Seagle and De Rezske
STUDIO, 1613 GREEN ST. Phone, Franklin 3153

Samuel M. Shortridge
ATTORNEY AT LAW
CHRONICLE BUILDING SAN FRANCISCO
Tel. Douglas 2176

Robert B. McMillan
ATTORNEY AT LAW
CHRONICLE BUILDING, Fifth Floor
Phone Kearny 5969 Rooms 517-518

Knight & Heggerty
ATTORNEYS AT LAW and
PROCTORS IN ADMIRALTY
MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BLDG., S. F.
Rooms 626 and 630

HENRY P. TRICOU
NOTARY PUBLIC
508 CALIFORNIA STREET Phone Kearny 711
Residence 852 Grove St. Phone Park 1870

MOVED
Gladding, McBean & Co.
CLAY PRODUCTS
Office
311-317 CROCKER BUILDING
Warehouse
147-151 MINNA STREET
Between New Montgomery and Third
San Francisco, Cal.

W. D. Fennimore J. W. Davis A. R. Fennimore

CALIFORNIA OPTICAL CO. are now in their new store at 181 Post Street, near Grant Avenue.

PATRICK & CO.
RUBBER STAMPS
STENCILS, SEALS, SIGNS & ETC.
126 BUSH ST. SAN FRANCISCO

Queer Customs and Beliefs

Roumanian babies, as soon as they open their eyes, are presented with a knife, a coin and a book. If the child seems attracted to the knife it is assumed that it will be a soldier; if the book is grasped at it will be a scholar, while the coin determines that it will become a merchant.

Meat intended for future consumption should always be killed when the moon is growing else it will shrink when cooked.

Shingles should never be put on while the moon is bright nor should lumber intended for boards be sawed then, for the moon will pull out the nails used in building.

If you pare corns at the time of the new moon they will grow with the increase of the satellite.

Roumanian peasants drop bits of food and spill part of what they drink to feed the spirits and keep their good will.

In Scotland a corner of the field is left unplanted for the devil who having a place of his own, will not interfere with the rest of the crop.

In Ireland when a head of cabbage has been cut the stalk is always slashed with a cross to secure a plentiful crop when the patch is next planted.

German peasant brides sew salt and dill into the hems of their wedding gowns. If they repeat to themselves during the marriage service, "I stand on salt and dill; I can do as I will," they insure themselves against the dominance of their husbands.

A member of the British Parliament cannot hold any office during membership. If he wishes to leave he can vacate his seat by accepting the nominal appointment of Stewart of the Chiltern Hundreds.

Perhaps

A traveler in Tennessee came across an aged negro seated in front of his cabin door basking in the sunshine.

"He could have walked right on the stage for an Uncle Tom part without a line of make-up," says the traveler. "He must have been eighty years of age."

"Good morning, uncle," said the stranger.

"Mornin', sah! Mornin'," said the aged one. Then he added, "Be you the gentleman over yonder from New York?"

Being told that such was the case, the old darky said, "Do you mind telling me something that has been botherin' my old haid? I have got a grandson—he runs on the Pullman cyars—and he done tells me that up thar in New York you all burn up youah folks when they die. He is a powerful liar, and I don't believe him."

"Yes," replied the other, "that is the truth in some cases. We call it cremation."

"Well, you suttenly surprise me," said the negro, and then he paused as if in deep reflection. Finally he said, "You all know I am a Baptist. I believe in the resurrection and the life everlastin' and the comin' of the Angel Gabriel and the blowin' of that great horn, and Lawdy me, how am they evah goin' to find them folks on that great mawnin'?"

It was too great a task for an off-hand answer, and the suggestion was made that the aged one consult his minister. Again the negro fell into a brown study, and then he raised his head and his eyes twinkled merrily, and he said in a soft voice:

"Meanin' no offense, sah, but from what Ah have heard about New York, I kinder calcerlate they is a lot of them New York people that doan' wanter be found on that mawnin'."

Young Wife (plaintively to husband)—Since mama has been here you go out every evening!

Husband—Don't you think I ought to have a chance to enjoy your mother's visit?

"The Lord loveth a cheerful liver—"

"You've quoted that wrong; it's 'cheerful giver.'"

"Oh, well, it amounts to the same thing; the man with a cheerful liver can't help being a cheerful giver."

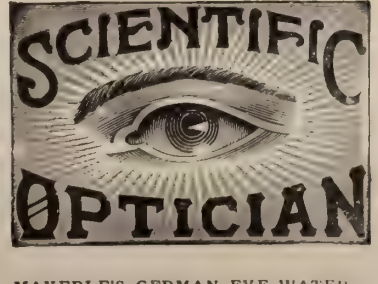
$550.00 Will buy the best 88-note Player on the market
CROWN AND CONCORD PIANOS
10-inch Disc Records, 25 Cents
PETER BACIGALUPI & SONS,
Phonographs and Pianos
941 Market St. Opposite Mason St.
Open Saturday Evenings.

The German Savings and Loan Society
(Member of the Associated Savings Bank of S. F.)
526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Guaranteed Capital	$ 1,200,000.00
Capital actually paid up in cash	$ 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds	$ 1,504,498.68
Deposits June 30, 1908	$36,793,234.04
Total Assets	$39,435,681.38

Remittance may be made by Draft, Post Office, or Wells, Fargo & Co.'s Money Orders, or coin by Express.

Office Hours: 10 o'clock a. m. to 3 o'clock p. m., except Saturdays to 12 o'clock m. and Saturday evenings from 7 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for receipt of deposits only.

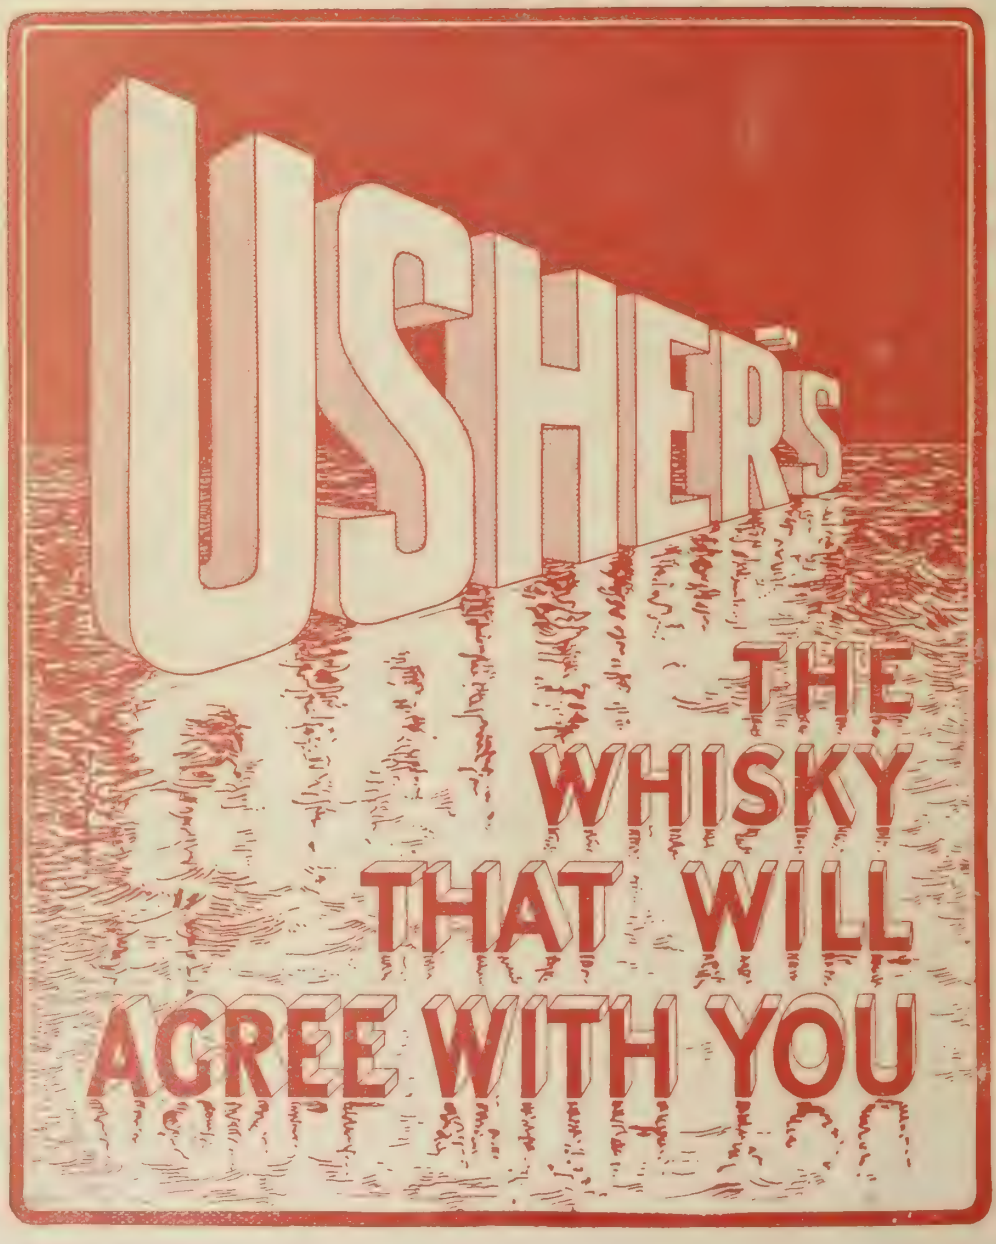


OFFICERS—President, N. Ohlandt; First Vice-President, Daniel Meyer; Second Vice-President, Emil Rohte; Cashier, A. H. R. Schmidt; Assistant Cashier, William Herrmann; Secretary, George Tourny; Assistant Secretary, A. H. Muller; Goodfellow & Eells, General Attorneys.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—N. Ohlandt, Daniel Meyer, Emil Rohte; Ign. Steinhardt, I. N. Walter, J. W. Van Bergen, F. Tillmann, Jr., E. T. Kruse and W. S. Goodfellow.

MISSION BRANCH, 2572 Mission Street, between 21st and 22nd Street. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. C. W. Heyer, Manager.

RICHMOND DISTRICT BRANCH, 432 Clement Street between 5th and 6th Avenues. For receipt and payment of Deposits only. W. C. Heyer, Manager.



60 YEARS' EXPERIENCE
PATENTS
TRADE MARKS
DESIGNS
COPYRIGHTS &C.
Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain our opinion free whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. HANDBOOK on Patents sent free. Oldest agency for securing patents.
Patents taken through Munn & Co. receive special notice, without charge, in the Scientific American.
A handsomely illustrated weekly. Largest circulation of any scientific journal. Terms, $3 a year; four months, $1. Sold by all newsdealers.
MUNN & Co. 361 Broadway, New York
Branch Office, 625 F St., Washington, D. C.

MAYERLE'S GERMAN EYE WATER
By Mail 65c

Mayerle's German Eyewater
Highly Recommended for
Painful, Sore, Red, Inflamed, Burning, Smarting, Itching Scratching, Twitching, and Gluey Eyes, Heavy or Crusty Eyelids, Floating Spots, Cloudiness of Vision, Cross Eyes, Watery or Discharging Eyes, feeling like sand in the Eyes, Heavy and Crusty Eyelids.
NEGLECTED EYESIGHT AFFECTS THE BRAIN
Mayerle's Glasses rest and strengthen the eyes, relieves the strain, and preserve the sight.
GEORGE MAYERLE
Graduate German Expert Optician, charter member American Association of Opticians and Vice-President Optical Specialist Association of America, 960 Market street, opposite Hale's. Phone Franklin 3279.

"The Scotch of Quality"

THE JOHNSON-LOCKE MERCANTILE CO.

SOLE AGENTS FOR PACIFIC COAST

210 CALIFORNIA STREET SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

